There was other money from the consortium which presumably went to Mr. Gillespie for his fees. This is not a matter of paying indirectly. The Hon. Member should not speak of honour when he is making such insinuations. In the same way, when he says that the Minister either lied or misled the House, I just finished indicating in my previous answer that, indeed, I misled the House and it was based on a letter from the Minister of Finance who was misled by his departmental officials.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is wrong.

Mr. Crosbie: Pass the buck.

Mr. Trudeau: They are slow to catch on, but I repeat that I indicated in my first answer on this matter that the letter I would be tabling, the second letter from the Minister of Finance, would be accompanied by a letter from the Deputy Minister of Energy who had cleared the files once, gave a certain assurance and then, having looked at them again, under the undertaking given by the Deputy Prime Minister, found that he omitted to find some documents. They will all be tabled.

Mr. Crosbie: Blame Cohen. What a rotten trick.

Mr. Trudeau: There was obviously a misleading of the House. That is why I have set the record straight. I do not think that it is an honourable thing for the Hon. Member to suggest that there was any lie.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION ANNUAL REPORT—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, it is reprehensible for the Prime Minister to hang the officials out to dry on this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: I want to put a question to the Minister responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation about the state of knowledge of another Minister of the Crown. In view of the fact that the 1980 annual report of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, which was transmitted to the then Minister, indicates that this project was taking place under the category "The Year in Review", will the Minister undertake to table all relevant documents in the House so we can find out at what point the current Minister of Fisheries and Oceans became knowledgeable about this arrangement?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, one of the things that I think has not been said in this whole debate is that, if this project had been successful, it would have created between 1,500 and 2,000 jobs in the Cape Breton area for the supply of coal.

Some Hon. Members: If, if!

Mr. Lumley: That is one reason why the Cape Breton Development Corporation was so interested in seeing this process occur. But I will look into the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Beatty: It was successful for one person. That was Alastair Gillespie.

Madam Speaker: Order. We simply must have order. The Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe will wait until he gets the floor in order to ask his questions. I now give him the floor.

REQUEST THAT DEVCO VOID AGREEMENT WITH ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, will the Minister undertake to table all relevant documents instead of withholding them from Parliament? Second, in view of the fact that there has been a very clear breach of the Prime Minister's guidelines, will the Minister now instruct Devco to void the agreement with Alastair Gillespie?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, again I want to reiterate that we on this side are very concerned about creating jobs in Cape Breton. If this project is successful there will be thousands of jobs created in this area. The Prime Minister has already indicated that documents will be tabled at three o'clock this afternoon.

APPLICATION OF MINISTERIAL CONDUCT GUIDELINES TO ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to get to the bottom of what it is that the Prime Minister believes would constitute a breach of the guidelines. Does he believe that Alastair Gillespie fulfilled all of the terms of the guidelines and, in particular, does he believe that Mr. Gillespie paid particular heed to the guideline which states that former Ministers should not, within a period of two years of leaving office, lobby for or on behalf of any person or commercial corporation before any Department or agency for which they were responsible on an ongoing basis during the last two years of their participation in the Ministry?

Can the Prime Minister stand in his place and say that he does not believe that Alastair Gillespie lobbied or carried on conversations with or attempted to influence, on behalf of a person or commercial corporation, the Ministry that he had left?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member said "lobby or carry on conversations". I do not believe that they are identical. The record will show, and it has been recognized—

Mr. Crosbie: Yes they are; look at the dictionary.

Mr. Trudeau: —that Mr. Gillespie did apply for information to the Deputy Minister. He did it, I believe, in writing, and verbally. Therefore, there has been contact. True, that has been admitted in the House. However, as to whether or not that constituted lobbying, that has been dealt with by the Deputy Prime Minister in the House in the manner that I would have dealt with it. Mr. Gillespie obviously asserts that he did not lobby in the conventional sense of the term.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It was unconventional, all right.

Mr. Trudeau: But more important is the fact that the then Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources testified that he did not feel lobbied. He received Mr. Gillespie as he received members of the public in many, many instances, and he provided them with information.

I guess we would have to reach an understanding of what lobbying is in order to know if there was a breach of the guidelines. I think one characteristic of lobbying is that it is constant and persistant.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Sometimes one call will do.

Mr. Trudeau: Exactly, Madam Speaker. Asking for information, in my view, does not constitute lobbying.

An Hon. Member: You are rewriting your own guidelines.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I do not know whether the people of Canada will accept that as an answer, but I can certainly assure the Prime Minister that it does not meet with much favour here on this side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I might suggest to the Prime Minister that one test of lobbying may well be whether or not the project being pursued was actually ever approved. In this case it is quite clear that Alastair Gillespie was able to convince the Ministry to proceed with approval for the project. If that is not lobbying, God knows what is.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Given the fact that Alastair Gillespie did meet with and discuss the potential project with the Ministry with which he had previously been involved, obviously within the period restricted under the terms of the guidelines, and given the fact that it is now clear that the Minister of Finance was made knowledgeable of that fact prior to the expiry of two years from the time Alastair Gillespie left the Ministry, and given the fact that the—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deans: —the present Deputy Minister sat on a public platform and conceded that Mr. Gillespie was reaping the benefits of his own work in the Ministry, does he not feel that it might be appropriate to have this matter reviewed by a House of Commons committee in all of its details—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: —including the day books of the Ministers involved?

Madam Speaker: Order.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question is whether the former Minister obeyed, or otherwise, the post-employment guidelines which were issued. I issued the post-employment guidelines precisely because it was known, it was probable, it was a fact of life, that people who left public office would go into the private sector, would be engaging in business of one kind or another and would probably come into contact with the Government. There was therefore no prohibition nor any attempt to indicate that people in public life would have to go out and become monks.

Mr. Crosbie: No; they become fat cats.

Mr. Trudeau: They were to be able to operate as free and private citizens. The intent of the guidelines was to ensure that they did not abuse public trust. That is the purpose of the guidelines. Whether or not this was a case of lobbying is, I think, a question of fact.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And worthy of some review.

Mr. Trudeau: The correspondence will be tabled and the Canadian public, not Hon. Members of the Opposition or Hon. Members on the Government benches, will judge whether asking for information, asking that a project be encouraged or pursued, constituted lobbying or not. If such was the case, I would want to tell the House—

Some Hon. Members: Put the question.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, I am prepared to put the question, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: Call an election.

Mr. Crosbie: Let's have a prorogation now.

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE EXAMINE DOCUMENTATION

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, given the amount of doubt that now exists, will the Prime Minister stand in his place and refer the matter to a committee of the House of Commons for a full inquiry and ask that all relevant material, including the day books of the Ministers involved, be made available for scrutiny?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I indicated that at 3 o'clock p.m. we would be tabling the documents. Hon. Members of the Opposition will have a chance to review them. The Hon. Member asked about a committee of the House of Commons. The House of Commons itself has been examining this question for a week. We also say that if Hon. Members of the Opposition want to take a day for it, why do they not use one of their days and have a vote on it? Then they would know.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

KIRBY REPORT—PROJECTS PRESENTED BY QUEBEC PRODUCERS

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The Kirby Report on the Atlantic fishery states that the fish processing industry is in serious trouble, and that the fishing industry will recover only if everyone does his share. The Producteurs Indépendants du Québec and the Quebec United Fishermen have submitted to the Minister a number of plans for the financial recovery and restructuring of the companies concerned and for setting up a marketing board. Could the Minister inform the House whether he has examined the plans submitted by the Quebec producers, whether he intends to make a decision in the near future, and whether he is planning to go to the Gaspé to meet fishermen and producers and discuss the contents of the Kirby Report?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to see that a Member representing fishermen on the Government side is asking questions about fisheries, because since our new policy was announced, involving a funding commitment of $200 million, not a single Opposition Member has shown any interest in the fisheries issue. I would like to thank the Hon. Member for showing his interest.

As far as the United Fishermen are concerned, a few days ago I met with their executive, and I told them that since a few months ago, the Federal Government had taken the first step by granting them $1.2 million, it seemed reasonable to expect the Government of Quebec to act on a commitment it had already made, namely, to contribute $800,000. However, I am always prepared to discuss the matter with them.

Yesterday, I had a meeting with the largest fishermen's association in the Gaspé, which advised me of their recommendations. I let them know that their recommendations would be passed on to the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and that I was, of course, quite willing to listen to any representations our fishermen might wish to make. Obviously, Opposition Members who have yet to ask any questions about this new policy are demonstrating their lack of interest in our Atlantic fishermen.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—DEPARTMENTAL TRANSACTIONS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, who has today said that misconduct must be scandalous before it amounts to misconduct, and that lobbying must be persistent before it is lobbying. May I ask him this question? Has he determined what was in the mind of the Minister of Finance when he signed the original letter saying that the first he heard of this issue was in September, 1981? What I would like to know from the Prime Minister is this: just what did the Minister of Finance know about what was going on in his Department when he signed that letter?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will be able to find out. I will table the letter. As to what was in the Minister's mind, I do know that the Minister signed some 330 submissions to Treasury Board during the period that he was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is conceivable that he would not remember every one of them.

Mr. Bosley: I take it the Prime Minister is saying that this matter is so inconsequential that, when he signed the letter to the Prime Minister, it was just one of his thousands of letters to sign.

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE IN NOVEMBER, 1980

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, will the Prime Minister undertake to investigate the following since he now says he believed that his Minister of Finance knew in January of 1981? Will he undertake to investigate why the Minister of Finance, the then Minister of Energy, said on November 25, 1980, to the Committee on Alternate Energy and Oil Substitution:

I would just like to stress that there are two of them—

Referring to projects on coal liquefaction.

—which involved Petro-Canada—

Will he check and determine for himself, as if Petro-Canada will tell him, that one of those was the project in Cape Breton and, therefore, the Minister of Finance knew even earlier than the letter he now says he knew?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member was presumably giving information that was given to him. I repeat, he does not know of every transaction in detail. He was asserting that the policy brought forward by the Government for petroleum substitution was being effective. He was giving as an example that even the Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, was involved in the application of that policy. That is something of which we are proud.

SPEECH BY MINISTER OF STATE (MINES) IN OCTOBER, 1980

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. The Minister may recall that she made another speech pertaining to this subject of Cape Breton coal liquefaction on October 14, 1980, some nine months earlier than the speech that has previously been referred to, as reported at pages 3662 and 3663 of Hansard. In this speech the Minister referred to projects pertaining to the manufacture of synthetic fuels from coal. She referred to co-operation between Energy, Mines and Resources, DREE, and the Cape Breton Development Corporation. She indicated that the process of coal liquefaction was questionable from an economic viability point of view and referred to pronouncements of her colleague, the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who had said the Government was prepared to assume a large proportion of the technical risk—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do not think it is very useful for the Hon. Member to read the entire speech. He may ask a question about the speech. It is close to the end of Question Period and other Hon. Members want to get the floor.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, the content of this speech is important because it came two weeks before the first memorandum of agreement was signed with Gillespie and Associates. Will the Minister swear to this House that, on the day she made that speech, she knew nothing of Mr. Gillespie's overtures and proposals to the Government of Canada?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Yes, Madam Speaker, and I would like to thank the Hon. Member for the case he has just made for coal liquefaction. I should like to tell him that the history in our Department is a very good one. It goes back to the year 1976. We have approximately 24 contracts here on coal liquefaction, including Algas Resources Ltd. of Calgary; British Columbia Research Council; Raylo Chemicals, Edmonton, Alberta; Kilborn Engineering Limited in Toronto; Sandwell-Beak in Toronto; Saskatchewan Oil and Gas; Westcoast Transmission. I dare say there is a Tory or two in the list.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF PROPOSALS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, from the Minister's attempt to give a glib, initial answer, and then stonewall this House, it is quite evident that she knew more than she is saying. I ask once again did the Minister have knowledge of the proposals from Alastair Gillespie and Associates which were approved two weeks subsequent to the speech she made in this House on October 14, 1980?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I answered that question. No, I did not know of Mr. Gillespie's association with the project.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, today we had an interesting revelation in the tale of two letters. I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. We now know that Alastair Gillespie lobbied the Department of Energy within the two-year period and we now know the Minister was aware of it. We now know that that contract was signed subsequently. Is the Prime Minister now intending to take some honourable course of action and discipline or dismiss that Minister for what appears, in the public eye and the eye of this House, as conduct unbefitting a Member of that Cabinet and the Government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, Hon. Members continue alleging unbecoming conduct. I continue referring to the guidelines, which are something of a guide to indicate what should and should not be considered becoming. I still have to hear from the Opposition any indication, any proof, that there was undue access, that there was privileged treatment. That is surely the whole point.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER DISCIPLINE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, we have a litany before this House and this country, including Buchanan, Macdonald, Pitfield, and Gillespie. It goes on, and on, and on. I would appeal to the Prime Minister to stop this fiction, to give the people some sign that there is a shred of integrity left on that side of the House, and discipline or dismiss that Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member appeals to our integrity. I am quoting guidelines. I am quoting public knowledge of a beneficial transaction. I am quoting the policy of the Government of Canada. I am quoting the reality that former Ministers are not forbidden to deal with the Government, whether they be Tory Ministers—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Wow!

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton shakes his head in despair. I can assure him that former Members of the Cabinet of which he was a member are in the process of getting information from the Government, indeed of their former Departments. This is well known, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Name them.

Mr. Trudeau: They are not pariahs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

DANGER POSED BY EAST COAST ICE CONDITIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It is prompted by a concern arising out of the worst ice conditions off the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador in the last two decades.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Yesterday a former marine co-ordinator with the Canadian Armed Forces Rescue Co-ordination Centre said:

—that rescue authorities do not have enough of the right equipment and some of that which is available is inadequate or improperly deployed.

He went on to say that oil rigs out there are accidents waiting to happen. What steps has the Minister taken in view of the fact that there are communities that are isolated, that there are people working on the offshore and that they lack adequate search and rescue deployment and adequate equipment? Can the Minister give some assurance to me and the people I represent that they are going to receive some protection from these unusual ice conditions?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows very well that everything has been done in so far as search and rescue on the East Coast is concerned. The retired officer to which he referred only mentioned a few facts which are now completely out of date. I can assure the Hon. Member that we are doing everything we can. What is most important in search and rescue is to have the highest level of flexibility possible with all of our facilities and capabilities on the coast. I mentioned a few to the Hon. Member last week, knowing that there was a storm coming, but, thankfully, no incident occurred. Just the same, all of our activities were concentrated on the coast and flexibility was there just in case something happened that required our action. We do that every time it is required.

AVAILABILITY OF HELICOPTERS IN EASTERN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, will the Minister then explain to the House why there was not a rescue helicopter available yesterday in eastern Newfoundland when two men were lost on the ice? It was reported at 7.30 p.m. that there was no rescue helicopter available. In fact it was not until 1.15 a.m. that these two fishermen were rescued from the ice by a private helicopter. Can the Minister explain where the search and rescue helicopters were?

• (1500)

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, we do not seem to have the same information because I was well aware of the incident yesterday and was told that our facilities were there in position, but because of the difficulty in getting to these two people on the ice pack, specifically, difficulties with the weather, we could not use the helicopters which were there in Gander, or our other facilities. However, as soon as we could, we used them. We responded as fast as we could, and it was done at the time which the Hon. Member mentioned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I would like at this time to designate tomorrow, Thursday, as the fifth Opposition day of this current period of Supply.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, did I understand the Minister to say that tomorrow will be the Supply day?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: The Hon. Member is very quick indeed, Madam Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, on that basis, it does not allow us sufficient time to develop and give notice for a vote—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if the scandal is so obvious—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has not finished speaking.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I would like to suggest to the House Leader, since we have not met this week, although last week we were under the impression we were going to meet today, and since there has been no indication prior to this moment that tomorrow was to be an Opposition day, that this move on the part of the Government is yet another attempt to cover up their sleazy actions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, if the scandal is so obvious to the Members of the Opposition, and it has been more than a week since they started bringing up the issue in question period, I wonder why they are not prepared to provide supporting arguments for their accusations and to answer questions from the Government side, within the context of a structured debate. They would have the advantage of consulting documents that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and other Ministers are about to table in the House, and in this way, we can have an intelligent debate on the issue, and the public will be truly in a position to judge and to see for itself how Opposition Members are abusing Parliament, while we should be considering economic issues and matters of far greater importance to Canadian society.

Madam Speaker, if one day's preparation is not enough for New Democratic Party Members, I am willing to designate two consecutive days as opposition days. If they agree, Thursday and Friday of this week will be opposition days, and they will have an additional day to debate the matter. For the time being, however, I am officially designating tomorrow as an Opposition day. However if I am asked to do so, I shall designate Friday as well, if that serves the purpose of the Opposition. What we really want on this side of the House, Madam Speaker, is to get at the truth and to have the Canadian people judge who is guilty here.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Order. It is only conducive to order that a point of order be cleared up before I go on to another one.

Mr. Lewis: I am rising on the same point of order, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I know, but the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain stood up first to ask a question on Government business. I cannot recognize an Hon. Member who is not rising from his seat. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain stood up first and I recognized him. We are on the same point of order. I believe it is conducive to good order that we clear up one point of order and then we can go on to another. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I would like to speak to the point of order. There is one House Leader for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in this House. He is here. I would like to say to the Government House Leader that Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition welcomes Thursday as an Opposition day, and I can assure him that a vote will be put.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, you will remember that I went up to you before Question Period started and indicated I would be rising immediately the Question Period ended because we had had no idea from the Government what the business for tomorrow was to be. Therefore, Madam Speaker, I respectfully suggest that you were pre-warned when I rose that that was what I wanted to ask the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. Yes, indeed, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North had pointed out to me that he would want to raise a point of order after Question Period. I was perfectly aware of that. I looked at him after Question Period but, unfortunately, there was a lapse of a few seconds, I suppose, in his timing, and I just have to recognize those who rise first in these circumstances. I was not demeaning the role of the Official Opposition. I can assure the Hon. Leader of the Opposition of that. It just happens that it is a rule and if Hon. Members want to be recognized, they must rise. Otherwise, I cannot recognize them.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I would just like to say that if there is a motion put on the floor of the House which deals with the matter of Alastair Gillespie and this Cabinet, we will be voting for the motion, if the motion quite clearly says that this Cabinet should be censured.

Let me just ask the House Leader for the Government, given that he knows full well that a parliamentary debate is not an adequate way to deal with an inquiry into the wrongdoing of this Government, will the House Leader stand in his place and order that the matter be referred to a committee in order that a proper inquiry can take place?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I believe my learned colleague spoke without thinking. I know he has a profound respect for Parliament, and I am sure that he will take advantage of tomorrow's debate to expound his views, to answer questions and to listen carefully to what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) will say in the House.

In the circumstances, I shall therefore refrain from criticizing my learned colleague. I forgive him. I know he spoke without thinking in the heat of the debate, and that tomorrow, our parliamentary institutions will give him an excellent opportunity to take part in the debate, to answer questions and to listen to everything Hon. Members will have to say on the matter. Once all aspects have been discussed there will be a vote, and then Canadian people will know, once and for all, what the situation is.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, with respect to the matter before the House, I wonder if the House Leader might reconsider the matter of the integrity of that organization. That will not be developed through an Opposition day tomorrow. That will only be resolved by an active—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, on the same point of order, are we to be assured by the Government House Leader that the present Minister of Finance will indeed take part and speak in that debate tomorrow?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I think I already answered that question after comments by the Hon. Member's colleague.

An Hon. Member: They are getting nervous!

Mr. Pinard: The Minister of Finance has nothing to hide, there is no doubt about that. Furthermore, he will be quite happy to explain the situation and to show how the Members opposite have abused Parliament and indulged in innuendo, without any basis in fact, in an attempt to destroy people of consequence.

• (1510)

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, the matter before us is not as the House Leader has outlined. It is a matter of integrity and that is a matter—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member will have all the time he wants to debate that in the House at the proper time.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, on the same point of order, does this also mean that the Government will be tabling further documents with respect to this matter so that we can debate it fully?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I do not want to encroach any further on the time set aside for Private Members' Business, but I simply wish to repeat to the Hon. Member that in a few moments, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will be tabling documents.

[English]

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, one of the things that concerns us on this whole strategy on the part of the Government for an Opposition day on this subject is that the Opposition has no opportunity to call for documents or witnesses.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Rose: There are no opportunities at all for the Opposition to cross-examine anyone. I wonder if the Minister has considered the possibility of providing a committee situation to enable the Opposition to cross-examine people such as Mr. Gillespie?

Mr. Crosbie: And the Minister of Finance, and the Prime Minister, and Mickey Cohen, and the Minister of Mines.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, without wanting to repeat myself, if the offence is so obvious, as Opposition Members have been implying for more than a week, I wonder what the Hon. Member is complaining about.

If he really wants to have a trial, if he really wants to table supporting documents, and if he really wants to cross-examine witnesses, he should have the moral courage to go outside the House and press formal charges and bring a private suit before the courts and suffer the consequences.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I suppose what the House Leader of the Government is saying is that if we want to hear witnesses we should call them to the Bar of the House, perhaps.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 46(2), I wish to table copies of correspondence exchanged by the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and also of correspondence I received from the Minister of Finance.

[English]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to table documents related to the Scotia coal synfuels project. In accordance with the letter and the spirit of the Access to Information Act, I wish to table the following documents. These documents include, first, all correspondence between Mr. Gillespie and officials of the Government of Canada in the period up to the date of approval by the Governor in Council of the tripartite Agreement between Canada, Nova Scotia and the consortium; second, all internal memoranda relating to the project for this same time period.

The only relevant documents which I am not tabling are those which are in Cabinet confidence, in this case submissions to the Treasury Board.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I did not hear the Minister mention correspondence with the Board or any member thereof, or, indeed, the research branch of Devco and anyone in Government, or the correspondence which may have been exchanged between the Board or any member thereof of PetroCan and the Government of Canada. Will he undertake before tomorrow's debate to table correspondence between Mr. Gillespie and any member of the Board or any official of Devco, if any such correspondence exists; and any correspondence between any member of the Board of Devco or any official thereof and the Government or any Department thereof? Will he also apply that same request to PetroCan?

Mr. Chrétien: I have tabled all the correspondence that is in my Department and in the Government's possession at this time. There is some correspondence that I have not tabled between the Government and some of these corporations. But with regard to all the documents that might have been exchanged between any partners of this consortium and these two Crown Corporations that the Hon. Member referred to, I am not in possession of them. They were not requested of me.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, on the same point of order, the Minister has referred to correspondence within his Department, but what we are asking for is correspondence for those Crown agencies for which he is also responsible, namely PetroCan and Devco.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I shall repeat in French what I said in English, since the Hon. Member did not understand. I said that I tabled all the documents that were in the Government's possession, that some of those documents consisted of correspondence exchanged by Government officials and the Crown corporations concerned, but that I did not have in my possession correspondence exchanged by all parties to the consortium, including that of the Government of Nova Scotia, Crown corporations and private corporations. All the documents in my possession that I could physically table, have been tabled.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, what we are interested in, of course, is the correspondence between Mr. Gillespie and the Board of Directors or members thereof or officials of those Crown Corporations for which the Minister is responsible. I take it from his answer that he is saying that he has tabled any such correspondence between those two Crown Corporations and Mr. Gillespie.

Will he also table, before tomorrow's debate, any correspondence between the Government of Nova Scotia and the Government of Canada relevant to this project, and any correspondence between the Government of Nova Scotia and Mr. Gillespie, if any exists?

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should look at what I have tabled. I have tabled everything I had in my possession. It is quite evident that his fishing expedition is getting a bit ridiculous. We are hiding nothing: everything has been done above the table. I am tabling more documents than have ever been tabled before in this House of Commons. I do think the Hon. Member should look at them before making comments, and not keep on fishing as he has been doing from 1965 on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, with respect to the Minister's comment just now, I might say that we caught a few fish in 1965, and who knows what might happen tomorrow?

Madam Speaker: Would the Members agree now that they have entered into debate? Exactly.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) can answer both the question of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) and my question at the same time when he rises. I wonder if the Minister of Energy would be prepared to table, in addition to the documents he has mentioned, the day book of the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) for the period from February, 1980 to December, 1982.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Not only the day book, but the night book.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, for the sake of completeness in the short time available, I wonder if the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley), who both made reference to the project and its viability in the House, would table any correspondence in their possession pertaining to this matter? I ask this for the sake of completeness of debate and in order to bring full light to bear on this particular matter.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Minister said he was tabling everything he had, all the documents he had, except Cabinet documents. I wonder if the Minister could tell us whether Cabinet documents would include any memorandum that Mr. Marshall (Mickey) Cohen may have made when he met with Mr. Gillespie, and whether, in the interest of exposing the matter, he would table any memoranda that Mr. Cohen may have made with respect to that meeting.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I said that I have tabled the documents that were in the possession of Mr. Cohen and others in relation to this matter, including some internal memos.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, earlier today the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) refused to agree to immediately table all the documents in possession of Devco in relation to this matter. Can the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) assure us that before tomorrow's debate all documents in the possession of Devco that are relevant to this affair will be available to Members of Parliament?

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I will give the same answer that I gave before. All the documents that are relevant or in my possession in this matter are on the table. Hon. Members opposite should look at them if they are serious about what they want to know. It is all there, all in written form. They should read them first instead of going around in a circle about whether I should table all the letters that have been written and all the articles that have been published on the subject. I think that is completely immaterial. They have the file as it was in my Department. I asked my officials to do a thorough review of all the files and they are all on the table. Never before was so much documentation tabled. I think all the facts are known and it will be known that there is no other interest than to try, perhaps, like in 1965, to "kill" people more than to get justice.

PETITIONS

MR. MITGES—HUMAN RIGHTS IN NICARAGUA

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I am happy to present a petition from constituents of Grey-Simcoe voicing their strong concern regarding the distressing situation in which the citizens of Nicaragua find themselves.

It is my sincere hope and the hope of the petitioners that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) will take a closer look at the basic needs and human rights of these deprived and terror-stricken citizens and will support them in every possible way to ensure their needed protection. Immediate attention and strong support from our Canadian Government is a mandatory precedent, required to help resolve the outrageous atrocities which are being inflicted on the people of Nicaragua.

MR. SHIELDS—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents in the riding of Athabasca. The purpose of the petition, signed by 84 residents of Calling Lake and the surrounding area, is to register their request that the federal Government investigate job-creation activities for the residents of this very depressed area.

The nature of this petition is to request that the Government immediately take action to create jobs for these people who are experiencing an unemployment rate greater than 75 per cent. This isolated native community is especially hard hit by the current recession and special measures must be taken to improve their desperate situation.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of this petition you will find the petition is in order, sense the urgency of their plea, and that you might use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion and referral of this petition to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration at the earliest possible moment.

MR. DANTZER—REQUEST FOR CONTINUED SEARCH AND RESCUE ACTIVITY

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I rise to present a petition signed by 652 concerned citizens of Vernon, British Columbia, who are asking that the search and rescue efforts to find Mr. Paul Sargeant and Mr. Jack Scott be extended and continued.

On February 8, 1983 Jack Scott and Paul Sargeant went down in their aircraft during a flight from Castlegar to Vernon, B.C. On February 19, 1983, the Air Force search and rescue team discontinued the search.

This petition shows the very real concern that has arisen in the community. Calls have also come into my office from Hamilton, Ontario where these men were both well known. On behalf of the petitioners, I ask for serious consideration of their request by the Government of Canada.

MR. FRIESEN—CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I want to avail myself of the opportunity and freedom to speak on behalf of my constituents by presenting a petition which is again on the subject of capital punishment. What makes this particular petition unique is not the subject matter, as all of us have represented our constituents that way, but this particular person is a new Canadian. She felt that she wanted to exercise her right as a Canadian citizen to work on behalf of the conviction that she holds very important to her and that she feels is important to the security of society.

Therefore, I take pleasure in exercising this right on behalf of this particular constituent who is a new Canadian.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, we have no objection to the practice but my copy says "pursuant to Standing Orders 62(14) and 63". I did not get that on the translation. If that is what the Government House Leader has, we are in agreement with that.

Mr. Pinard: Agreed.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 4,416 could be made an order for return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 4,416 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Return tabled.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall all notices of motions for the production of papers stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Notices of Motions preceding No. 61 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Under Private Members' Notices of Motions I would ordinarily have looked to the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd), but I see he is not in the House at the moment.

Without seeking unanimous consent or attempting to set up a particularly detailed procedure, I would suggest to Hon. Members that they may be content if we were to proceed to Public Bills, second reading and reference to standing committee, a Bill standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

The House itself may choose to decide or may want to call upon the Chair to decide whether in due course we revert to Private Members' Notices of Motions.

• (1530)

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to have consultations with the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), and that is certainly agreeable to this side of the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, am I given to understand that that motion will stand down and be No. 3 in today's order of proceedings? I think that would be in order.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that is quite agreeable. If the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau arrives—I understand he is having trouble getting to Ottawa—hopefully it will be in time for the motion to be dealt with as the third item.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The understanding of the Chair is that we will now proceed to the consideration of the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), and that the issue respecting the Private Members' Notice of Motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd) would simply rest in abeyance for a while in order to determine whether or not he arrives, and that it might exchange places with this one.

Mr. Smith: If the point my hon. friend is trying to make is that following the Hon. Member for Churchill the next item of business would be that standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), that is agreeable to us.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, that is fine with us. As a matter of fact, I have had an opportunity to discuss the first motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd), and we are prepared to let it go to committee right away.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In that case, I understand that the House is agreeable to moving to the matter of Public Bills, specifically second reading and reference of Bill C-346, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Churchill.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

AMENDMENT TO PERMIT ENGAGING IN POLITICAL ACTIVITY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved that Bill C-346, an Act to amend the Public Service Employment Act and the Public Service Staff Relations Act (political rights), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my Bill is to give political rights to Government workers. Under present legislation hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers are denied rights which other Canadians have. Basically those rights concern the right to participate and work in general elections at the provincial or federal level on their own time. There are also restrictions on whether or not they are able to run in general elections. We in the New Democratic Party believe that those restrictions speak against the fundamental rights of all Canadians.

Since I wrote this Bill and had it introduced in the House of Commons for first reading, we have passed the new Canadian Constitution. I would like to read the relevant sections of the Constitution dealing with fundamental freedoms:

Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms:

(a) freedom of conscience and religion;

(b) freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication;

(c) freedom of peaceful assembly; and

(d) freedom of association.

Then I should like to refer to Section 32, entitled "Application of Charter", wherein it reads:

This Charter applies

(a) to the Parliament and the Government of Canada in respect of all matters within the authority of Parliament—

I hope the Official Opposition and the Government do not talk this Bill out, and that indeed we will refer it to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates for discussion, for study and for presentation by interested groups, so that we can meet the obligations of the new Constitution of Canada. It is essential that we in the House support the Constitution we passed just over a year ago. It is essential that we recognize workers in the public sector should have the same rights as those in the private sector.

This is not a new concept; it is already accepted by the Province of Manitoba. It has been legal there, not only as a result of its introduction by the Schreyer administration, but it was not changed by the Conservative Government of Premier Lyon. It has been accepted and has worked for a number of years in one Province of this land. I urge Members on all sides of the House to give Government workers these democratic rights. Also I urge the Government not to be dragged into the courts, shouting and screaming against giving Government workers these rights.

We do not want a situation where again the Government is afraid to promote rights or to give leadership in granting rights, and is instead in the position of being forced into granting rights to its employees.

I should like to refer to some correspondence which I have in my possession. The first letter was directed to my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), from the former Secretary of State, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan), and was written on May 27, 1982. In part it reads:

It is not the Government's intention at the present time to amend the Public Service Employment Act in such a way that public servants would be allowed to engage in political activities.

The Government is saying that it will not grant these rights even after the passing of the new Canadian Constitution. Following that, on June 25, 1982 the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly), when he was Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board, spoke at a gathering of the National Union of Provincial Government Employees. I will not quote him directly but I will refer to some coverage of that particular meeting wherein it was reported:

Because there are so many public employees and the role of Government has become so pervasive in our society, Kelly suggested, there may be better arguments for maintaining restrictions than easing them.

That was very interesting, because three days later the Government introduced its budget which brought in the six and five legislation. That legislation affected hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers. It restricted their salaries and their pensions. Those workers who were denied their bargaining rights were also denied protection which was available to other workers in the land. Basically they are being told that they have no political right to work for another political Party. They are being told that they cannot write letters on behalf of political Parties which support their position and that they cannot canvass for political candidates who support their position. This present arrangement of the Government of Canada is a real infringement upon the freedom of expression and freedom of association of these employees.

Also I should like to refer to a number of letters on this particular issue which I have received over the years. I have taken the necessary liberty of removing the names and addresses of the people who wrote these letters because it could cost them their jobs. The first letter reads:

I would like to clarify and explain my own situation which should describe more fully my own special interest in this change.

I am currently president of a federal riding association and am also an employee of the federal Government falling under the rules of this ridiculous piece of legislation known as the Public Service Employment Act. I plan on offering as a candidate whenever Pierre chooses to call an election; however, it would be nice to be able to start assuming a public profile before this without fear of losing my job.

I am active in my union and in the party but have so far resisted the urge to publicly criticize the Government on anything other than Public Service issues.

• (1540)

That is one restriction. A government worker who wishes to seek election has to stay in the closet because of the legislation of this land.

I have another letter which commences:

I have worked for the NDP in every election since I joined the Party in 1975.

Mr. Cullen: You just lost me.

An Hon. Member: That is bad?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: The heckling I am getting from my right is rather ridiculous, Mr. Speaker. Certainly in the City of Ottawa there are people who work for all three political parties. We have read in the Ottawa paper that if persons go to any political office during an election, some people would have to be fired under the laws of this land. That means the heckling we are getting from the Conservative Party on this issue at this time is ridiculous.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): From Conservative Members?

Mr. Murphy: I am reading from a letter from a New Democrat. This is someone who admits to being a New Democrat and who wishes to speak out but is afraid to under the laws of this land. I would hope that the Conservative Members would show respect for the very difficult situation in which this person finds herself.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Conservative Members?

Mr. Murphy: If I may continue, the letter goes on:

It also upsets me that in a country like Canada, the Government can limit the political activities of its citizens. I find it difficult to sing the national anthem "The true north strong and free . . . ?" I have not felt very free lately. I feel that I have been made a second class citizen in the country of my birth.

I have a third letter which reads:

I am writing with regard to the recent Montreal convention of the NDP-Quebec where I was elected as one of the Vice Presidents on the Executive. Subsequent events have led me to believe that my election may be the cause of future concerns for you and the Party. These relate specifically to the interpretation of Sec. 32 1(a) of the Public Service Act.

I was informed by my superior of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada that as a federal employee I was in violation of the aforementioned Act and would now be subject to disciplinary action culminating in dismissal.

In a desperate effort to maintain my livelihood I have therefore with a great deal of chagrin submitted my resignation to the NDP-Quebec Executive.

There are people who have genuine political beliefs. I am sure that letters like these could be written to Conservative and Liberal Members of Parliament. These are people who have a genuine interest and like to work in the political process. They are people who have a genuine interest and would like to run as candidates and work during elections, but the present laws of this land prevent that. People deserve better. There are people who feel threatened under the existing legislation of this land.

Let me read from an article that appeared in the Ottawa Journal on Wednesday, February 6, 1980 during the last federal election. It was a charge made against the Public Service Commission. The article referred to Bill Doherty, Vice-President of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, and it reads:

The commission's threat, Doherty charged yesterday, is contained in its note that the lack of "firm precedents" as to what constitutes illegal political activity means "public servants are advised to exercise care so as not to engage in activities which might be construed as contravening the act."

If I were a Government worker and I received a letter similar to the one I have just quoted, I would be afraid to do anything in a federal election. That letter from the Chairman of the Public Service Alliance of Canada says the law is unclear, that you have to be careful and watch out because you do not know what will happen to you if you take part in a federal election.

The Ottawa Citizen in an editorial entitled "Restore a basic right" on February 7, 1980 remarked on the issue. A paragraph from that editorial is quite informative. It reads:

The law is made all the more ridiculous by the patronage system. The Government asks its secretaries to be non-partisan but it appoints former Cabinet Ministers to head up Government agencies. Who is more sensitive to political pressure? Or, men who have served a political party for years are suddenly appointed to the bench and assumed to be independent and unbiased.

Again, we have an example where some people who have been political all their life are deemed to be unbiased. Yet some worker, it may be someone picking up garbage, it may be someone working in an airport or someone performing secretarial duties in one of the offices across this land, is denied political rights in this country. These are not just idle concerns. As we look through the history of this country, we see how this legislation has been enforced.

In 1978, a Mr. Garth Brewer of Woodstock, New Brunswick, received a letter from the Government of Canada. It read:

As you have already been informed, the Public Service Commissioners are unable to grant your request for leave of absence without pay under the terms of the Public Service Employment Act.

The Commission has carefully reviewed the responsibilities which devolve upon you as a Customs Inspector. For reasons listed in the attached record of your meeting with the Commissioners, on October 6, 1978, the Commission regretfully cannot conclude that your duties are such that your usefulness to the Public Service, were you to return to your position after engaging in political activities, would not be impaired.

The Public Service Commission of Canada said that a customs inspector may not run for election that the job is so politically sensitive that the worker may not engage in an election campaign as a candidate. Mr. Brewer did run. He was fired. Later on he was reinstated.

During the 1980 federal election Mr. Brewer wrote a letter to the Woodstock Bugle. One of the phrases in the letter reads:

Keep Petro-Canada, Sell Clark.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Sell who?

Mr. Murphy: Sell Clark, just like the Tories have.

Mr. Brewer received another letter from the Government of the day. It reads:

It has come to Management's attention that you have engaged in certain activities which contravene Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act.

Accordingly, you are hereby advised that you are discharged from Revenue Canada, Customs and Excise effective March 13, 1980, by the Assistant Deputy Minister, Field Operations, under the authority of Section 106 of the Public Service Terms and Conditions of Employment Regulations.

Mr. Brewer could not run as a candidate. He did and he was fired. He wrote a letter which had nothing to do with his work as a customs inspector. He was fired again. He appealed and won but he lost three months' pay. The money was levied as a fine. This just points out the dangerous system we have in Canada.

We all know individuals who participate in elections. Some are being persecuted, some are being prosecuted, and some lose their employment. That is not just.

One of my concerns about the present law is that it creates a hardship for people who wish to become candidates if nominations are called early. I can give an example of a person who faced this situation in Manitoba. I can mention her name now because she no longer works for the Government of Canada. She was a Government employee named Lee Monk who was forced to resign after she received an NDP nomination. This nomination was given about six months prior to the actual election being called and it was 17 months prior to an election having to take place. She lost her income for that period of time. If it was not for the fact that her husband was working she could not have sought election. Therefore, there is discrimination against those without independent income and those with lower income. That is one reason the law should be changed.

I believe the basic reason for changing the law, if we believe in a truly democratic society that all Canadians deserve the same rights and that our elections are an important part of the democratic process, is that we should ensure that this group—500,000 Canadians—are not restricted and prevented from exercising those democratic rights. They should not have to live in fear of persecution and prosecution. I have cited one example of this. They should be able to depend on the Parliament of Canada to give them those rights that are outlined in our Charter. They should expect the Parliament of Canada not to slow down that process and to prevent those workers from taking part in federal or provincial elections.

This is a very important matter. I again urge the Opposition and the Government not to talk the Bill out but to act upon it and refer it to the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee so it can study it and listen to those who are concerned with this legislation.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. friend from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who I know is also interested in this Bill, for letting me speak first. I will not occupy too much time so that he and the House can have an opportunity to decide whether this Bill will go to committee.

The purpose of the Bill is set forth in the explanatory notes. It is to provide public servants with the right to engage in political activity and be candidates in federal, provincial and territorial elections. That is the simple statement of the Bill.

I would be inclined to support the Bill, with some reservations, because I think the time has come for some change. I have some questions that I would like to have dealt with in committee which, if answered, may have some bearing with respect to my view of the Bill. Nevertheless, I want to support the Bill so that it will go to committee.

For some time I have asked in the House of Commons that the President of the Treasury Board allow the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee of the House to look into the whole question of political activity by public servants. There are many theories—thousands perhaps—as to what rules should apply. Those theories go all the way from some Members who believe there should be absolute prohibition of political activity by public servants. Very few Members hold that view. There are some Members who believe that there should be an untrammeled right to political activity. Members holding that view are also few and far between. The extremes of this issue are easy to deal with. It is the views in the middle of that spectrum that are difficult to deal with.

I think it is important that this question be dealt with. The Public Service Commission itself has indicated just what bad shape the law is in at this time.

I am holding a letter dated September 21, 1978, addressed to me from the Chairman of the Public Service Commission. I had written to him on August 25 of that year, asking what constitutes a prescribed political activity for public servants. This is what he said:

> As you are aware, the Public Service Commission feels that Parliament should indeed clarify its wishes in this regard in order to enable effective administration of this important section of the Public Service Employment Act. You will recall that we devoted Chapter One of our 1977 Annual Report to a discussion of our concerns about this critical issue.
> A part of the problem facing public servants confronted with the question of political activity results from the fact that the current legislative provisions stipulate a general principle (that no employee shall engage in work for, on behalf of or against a candidate for election . . . or for, on behalf of or against a political party) and then state that this general principle is not contravened by the simple act of attending a political meeting or contributing money for the funds of a candidate or a political party.

The Chairman of the Public Service Commission goes on to say:

> The situation is further complicated by the fact that the Commission has no power to take action in the absence of an allegation being made by a person 'who is or has been a candidate for election'.

He then says:

> In the circumstances, it seems to me that Parliament must have intended that the provisions of section 32(1) and (2) of the Act serve to guide—

We have heard about guidelines today.

> —individual public servants in the decisions they have to make when confronted with a concrete situation and have therefore narrowly limited the powers of the Public Service Commission to intervene only in the matter of leave of absence and in those cases where an allegation is made by a person who is or has been a candidate. This would suggest that when a public servant is faced with the question as to whether the action he (she) is about to take or has been asked to take is consistent with section 32 of the Act, that public servant must first ask himself (herself) whether this action could be held to constitute work for, on behalf of or against a candidate for election or a political party and whether or not it falls within the ambit of section 32(2).

In other words, there is no concrete guide; the public servant must ask himself. All of us know that from time to time justice varies with the length of the Chancellor's foot. In other words, there is really no guide for the serving public servant who puts those questions to himself.

I asked the Chairman certain specific questions. The Chairman of the Commission said:

> (a) regarding lawn signs and bumper stickers, we have counselled public servants to adhere strictly to section 32(1) of the Act, pointing out that any action not specifically exempted in section 32(2) could be construed as in violation of the Act.
> (b) regarding the position of a spouse of a public servant, we have taken the stance that this is a matter for parliamentarians or the courts to solve;—

That is a question that does arise in a riding such as mine and others. He also said, with respect to holding membership cards in a political party, that:

—we have said that in our opinion contributing funds to a political party includes the right to hold membership in that party.

That was a letter from the Chairman of the Public Service Commission.

Mr. Cullen: Is it dated?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is dated September 21, 1978. The Act has not been changed since that time. The upshot of it is that the cases upon which there could be some question are not delineated at all by Statute. Some form of criteria should be established. The time has long passed since we should look at this.

I believe that the general principle which ought to govern is that we ought to be consistent with the maintenance of public order and permit political activity. I have often wondered why it might be seen to be improper to show one kind of political act, such as displaying a bumper sticker or a lawn sign, for example, but at the same time, in the quiet of one's room, one can write an application for a membership in a potilical party or write a cheque to a political party. I would have thought that in terms of the conflict which the Statute was meant to attack, however inadequately it does, it would have dealt with the state of mind of the public servant, and the state of mind would be the same whether the Act was public or private. I just raise that for consideration.

It is time that Parliament considered whether or not there is any difference among classes of public servants. We are, for instance, developing a management class within the Public Service of Canada which is outside the bargaining units in the Public Service. These public servants have perhaps somewhat particular duties. People who advise on policy have particular duties in terms of advising the Minister from time to time. A question must at least be raised as to the scope of political activity permitted those people.

Mr. Benjamin: They'll police themselves.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We should consider the question. I draw no conclusions. It is worth while investigating. This Statute which has been brought forward by the Hon. Member ought to be studied by a committee of the House for that purpose.

I had the honour to be a member of the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee before the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was rather unceremoniously removed from his post as Chairman. The Chairman of the Public Service Commission of Canada, in response to questions I asked during committee hearings, stated that the time was long overdue for an investigation of that matter. The following witness was the former President of the Treasury Board who is now the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), a super Minister. He, too, said that the time had come and that he was not opposed. However, like so many things which must be considered, no one moved.

The Government has the right to make references. Perhaps the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee will understand the new mandate given to it by the new Standing Orders of our House and consider it worth while. If it does, then this kind of Bill, which has been put forward by the Hon. Member from his own vantage point, is the kind of Bill which could facilitate a review of that very important matter.

This matter has been continuing much longer than the Neil Fraser case, and I only refer to it in that manner because it is now before the Supreme Court of Canada. That case does raise some great problems and issues, no matter how the Supreme Court of Canada may decide, which could affect the place and position of many public servants beyond the person whose name is on that appeal. I hope the House will agree to send the Bill to committee, as it would be worth while to investigate this whole question.

I must tell the House that there is great interest across the country in this matter, both for and against political rights. It is time that the matter was aired because quite often problems with respect to public servants are neglected rather than reviewed by Parliament. If there is any proof of that, it is the fact that the Finkelman report was worked on by a joint committee, and the findings of that joint committee have gathered dust on the shelves. The only pieces of legislation we have had with respect to public servants have been to cut their wages and pensions. There is more to consideration of public service affairs than that.

I see that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lang) is in the House today. It would be good if he were to rise in his place and move a motion, which I would be pleased to second, that at least the subject matter of this Bill go to the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee so that the questions could be resolved.

The Hon. Member who spoke before me inadvertently misled the House with respect to the position of the Ontario Public Service. It is not quite as tough as he said it was. Certainly, Ontario public servants cannot raise money, cannot go door to door and cannot write speeches. They can work in a candidate's office and can have lawn signs on their lawns. I am not arguing that their situation is utopian or perfect by any means, but the problem in the country is that political rights vary from jurisdiction to jurisdiction, and at least in this jurisdiction we should review them to ensure that they are fair and allow people reasonably to exercise their rights as citizens of the country.

Therefore, I commend the Hon. Member for bringing forth the Bill and I hope its subject matter or the Bill itself can go to committee and we can deal with it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to commend the Hon. Member for introducing this Bill this afternoon. Indeed, I believe this is the second time such a Bill has been before the House in this session. In April 1982, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) had introduced a Bill very similar to this one and, having read his remarks, I was impressed by the research which he had done and which may have helped us gain a better understanding of the principle of this piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, my position on this question is fairly well known. I have looked into a rather thick file on this issue which has been of some concern to me every since I was elected to the House ten years ago, and I am always amazed at the efficiency and rapidity with which our staff is able to find the documents we want. I should like to quote from an article published by the Ottawa Citizen on October 23, 1979:

[English]

The article suggested that the Government amend legislation so federal public servants can work in defence of their country during the Quebec independence referendum next spring.

[Translation]

That was at the time of the Quebec referendum. I quote:

[English]

It was suggested that three classes of public servants should be created, with the senior executives being denied all political action, the second group being allowed to campaign only with permission, and the third group having complete freedom.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, those comments of course were made following the report submitted by the Special Committee on Personnel Management and the Merit Principle, the so-called D'Avignon Committee, which considered the matter of political involvement where public servants are concerned. True enough, as the previous speaker has remarked, for at least the past four or five years the Government has been reluctant to refer the issue to a Committee. I do not think I am mistaken when I suggest that the Chairman of the Public Service Commission has often called upon Members of Parliament, whenever he appeared before the Committee, to clarify the scope of Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act. I do not think there is any need to repeat the point made by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), which in my view aptly reflects the remarks made by the Chairman of the Public Service Commission.

I would simply like to add that the unions, Mr. Speaker, also share an interest in that review, and that they would appreciate it if the scope of Section 32 were to be clarified. I would simply like to support the view of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton to the effect that the matter should be referred to a Committee for consideration, to put an end to the uncertainty that arises whenever an election is called.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think I would be making any extraordinary statement if I were to support the comments voiced by the Hon. Member to the effect that here in Ottawa, during election campaigns, public servants do get involved or would like to get involved in the electoral process, either by having a sign or a poster displayed in their lawn, by wearing a badge or contributing to election funds of any party, but there is that uncertainty concerning the role of public servants. Mr. Speaker, I submit that no Member of Parliament wants or would like to see the impartiality of the Public Service questioned during the electoral process. I do not think such is the issue at hand. However it must be recognized that there is a class of civil servants who do not advise the government on matters of policy. Therefore they should be allowed to take part in the election process. However, I would make an exception in the case of high ranking officials and administrators. As the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, I should like the committee to look into the matter of political activity by public servants. I for one feel that there should be absolute prohibition of any political activity, in their case for the sake of maintaining the integrity of Parliament, so that they may not be seen by the general public as being critical of a government they might have advised.

For this reason, therefore, it is clear to me that senior executives should not be allowed to take part in the election process. Which does not mean that our new Charter of Rights and Freedoms should not be challenged when civil servants or unions feel they are being deprived of their basic rights.

Since Parliament has adopted the Charter, it might be necessary to appeal Section 32 to the courts. I, for one, am not absolutely sure that the Charter of Rights does not apply fully and does not give civil servants complete freedom of speech and the right to get involved in politics. On the other hand, there are things to consider.

The present regime of political activities by public servants is subject to increasing criticism, mainly by Public Service unions and a number of Members of Parliament. I had occasion today to attend a social club in my riding. The speaker was the Chairman of the Public Service Commission. At that time I had no idea I would be speaking to this Bill this afternoon. During his remarks to the Richelieu Club of Ottawa, he spoke of political activities by public servants. I understand at this time he is addressing a group of public servants in Touraine on the question.

It is by pure accident that this happens. The main reason is that recently the former Leader of the Official Opposition mentioned that he would like to see some political input into the status of Deputy Ministers. The Ottawa Citizen of January 25, 1983 reported and I quote:

Clark would politicize senior public service posts.

Clark said in an interview he is considering making Ministers' offices more partisan in appointing political Deputy Ministers. Making sure the elected Government gets control of the appointed Government would be his third priority as Prime Minister, the Tory leader said.

Without going into the merits of that argument or the whole question, I hope it will come before the committee and we will be able to discuss it. There are dangerous connotations to the idea of the former Leader of the Opposition. It has prompted certain comments in the Public Service and the Chairman of the Commission felt he had to voice them. He did not say so in his speech, but I read between the lines. I would like to share some of the remarks he made today with regard to this question.

This is what Mr. Gallant said: "In my opinion, the role which our Public Service must play as one of the major institutions of our democratic government requires not only that it be impartial, but also that it be seen to be impartial. This is why, in my opinion, it is normal that, on becoming a public servant, we accept not only the advantages this represents, but also all the special responsibilities it entails, including the need to be impartial. While there are obvious differences in the requirement to remain objective in the case of an assistance deputy minister, a laboratory technician and a machine maintenance worker, for instance, it would be difficult and even risky for the Public Service to provide variations in the restrictions of political activity according to the job category and the occupational group."

I shall interrupt my quotation on this point to note that I disagree with the Chairman of the Commission, Mr. Gallant, in this regard. He does not want any variations or exceptions for the various job categories. I shall now continue to quote Mr. Gallant: "As for the suggestion that public employees might participate in partisan political activities on their own time, I believe that this could erode the concept of Public Service impartiality in the eyes of the public, and in this regard, appearances are just as important as the facts themselves."

Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that the Chairman of the Public Service Commission considered this issue important enough to speak about it twice today, on February 23, once before the Club Richelieu and again this afternoon in Touraine before a group taking part in an orientation program for EX-4's and EX-5's.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to use up all the time at our disposal because I would like this bill to be referred to a committee for study and examination. However, I must point out that this issue has been under consideration for several years. In 1976-1977, a special joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate examined this issue and submitted a report to the House of Commons. Next Friday will mark the seventh anniversary of the tabling of this report in the House of Commons. I believe that the government should resume examination in the House of this very important question, namely section 32 of the PSEA (Public Service Employment Act) and the way it affects public servants, and that it should provide a clear explanation of this provision so that we may all know where public servants stand as far as their political activity is concerned I shall end with these words, Mr. Speaker, and sit down because I would like my colleagues to approve this motion as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I want to rise in support of the comment made by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that if the Government is not prepared to accept the Bill, that it not now be read a second time but that the subject matter be referred to the appropriate standing committee of this House. I do so because I believe the fears of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton and the Hon. Member who just spoke are totally unfounded. Even in the case of senior executive advisers to Government, 99 per cent of the time they will not get involved with politics. If they did and if they could not agree with their Minister, they would invariably resign from their job or be fired. That has always been the case.

The experience of those having to apply for leave of absence, whether it be from a private corporation or Government, to run as a candidate or work in an election at all three levels, municipal, provincial and federal, over the last number of years has been generally good. It is improving. The main anachronisms and nineteenth century state of mind remain only in federal legislation and that of a few Provinces.

In my Province people have run in municipal, provincial and federal elections for all parties—I repeat, all political parties—even though they have been in the employ of the provincial Government, a branch, agency or Crown corporation. Following their leave of absence, they returned to their position. They did not allow their political beliefs to interfere with their duties when they were on duty. They carried on with their duties conscientiously.

That was my experience also, Mr. Speaker, when I was an employee of the Canadian Pacific Railway. When I was there from 8.30 to 5.30 I conducted the business of the Company according to the rules and the policies of the Company. When I was a candidate for public office and criticized the Company's policies after my hours of duty, and when I was on leave of absence without pay, at no time did the Company ever try to penalize me when I returned to work. When my leave of absence expired, I returned to my duties and carried them out conscientiously. My efforts to be elected to public office while I was an employee in no way either impinged upon the Company or harmed my usefulness to them in terms of what I knew about working for a railroad. I believe a lot of these fears are totally unfounded in actual experience and practice. There is little or nothing to fear from providing full political rights to public servants at all levels of Government.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to yield my place to the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party if he wants to speak, and I will follow up.

An Hon. Member: No, I moved the Bill.

Mr. Cullen: Fine. Mr. Speaker, I believe in years to come, looking back, there are going to be a lot of people wondering why this legislation or something similar to it was not in fact passed. I believe they will look back and ask what all the concern was about, all this fear. We recognize now that some people who are public servants are participating in the political process in one way or another. Sometimes, as many of us politicians know, they make a significant contribution to a particular campaign. But we must always wonder if they are not really going counter to the conditions under which they were hired as public servants. I am quite sure that any public servant spoken to by Hon. Members of this House is quite content and satisfied that he or she can perform service as a professional in the Public Service in those circumstances, be it at the federal or the provincial level. These public servants do not feel inhibited in any way in carrying out their responsibilities in a particular Department.

The very careful presentation of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the considered opinions of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) are understandable because they have probably carried out more research in this particular field than many Hon. Members of Parliament, primarily, of course, because they have a large majority of public servants in their ridings. They are endeavouring to establish not only what would be fair for the Public Service, but also how the general public would perceive involvement of a public servant in a political campaign.

I believe the time is almost ideal to make the kind of changes which this Bill envisages, because in effect we are almost between elections. I believe immediately after an election, when you have won an election, you are really not particularly concerned that someone from the Public Service participated in the campaign, and participated against you. By the same token, if there is a very close race, someone who has lost an election may very well want to take revenge, if you will, or make a particular move which would discredit the public servant, and might, in the final analysis, result in discipline or, for that matter, that particular public servant might lose his or her job. For that reason, the Public Service Commission, I would suggest Hon. Members of this House, and the public at large are endeavouring to struggle with two rights.

What is in the public interest? We heard from the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier who quoted Mr. Gallant, President of the Public Service Commission. He wants to see impartiality throughout. I agree with the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier; I believe that is pushing it a little too far. I do not believe we need to be concerned about someone who is doing some filing, clerical work or typing manuscripts or reports, someone who is not, in effect, giving policy advice in a particular Department. I believe you can go a long way up the ladder before that kind of involvement or participation would be of any concern.

I share the hesitation of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, who accepts this Bill with certain reservations, and that is with respect to the management class, because here is an area where people in that particular category have to draft papers on behalf of a Minister or a Department on how to deal with a particular problem or a particular subject matter. These individuals are clearly the jumping-off place, or the foundation, if you will, of maybe a particular piece of legislation, or maybe only a policy, but in either event they are in a position to have an influence. I believe the Department, the Minister involved, and certainly Parliament, would want to have the feeling that this individual was acting in a professional capacity, giving his or her best efforts to that particular project. But they might feel that the general public, knowing that the individual who prepared this document was in fact campaigning of behalf of an Opposition Member in the House of Commons or in the legislature, might wonder how objective that person could be. The individual might be a true professional, of which I feel there is an abundance in the federal Public Service. Certainly that has been my experience over the 15 years I have been here. The individual might be a wonderful professional public servant, but because of his or her participation in an election campaign, helping one of the Opposition Parties, would his or her particular representation or presentation not be suspect in that it might very well have been influenced by the Opposition Party in the House, or by the political philosophy of an Opposition Party? So without appropriate guidelines that public servant is in a very difficult spot.

There are guidelines at the present time, and I believe Section 32 has been quoted, but it does allow a lot of discretion to a public servant in that particular category. I heard a small interjections from across the way. They will have to be the authors of their own decision as to whether or not they are in violation of the guidelines. If we just had an out-and-out right, a civil liberty, if you will, a right of a public servant to participate in the political process, there would not be any difficulty and we might very well not need any legislation. But obviously, what we have here is a situation where you have two rights. There is the freedom of an individual to have a political opinion and to help a particular Party. But there is also the public interest, where the public must have the feeling and the assurance that this individual public servant is acting in a professional capacity and that the opinions expressed are professional opinions and not the opinions of a particular Party which he or she may have supported.

What I am emphasizing here, Mr. Speaker, is that we have the public interest versus a basis democratic right, and it is a legitimate debate. I am not certain that the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates is the appropriate forum. Everyone seems to want to deal with this. Even the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton quoted a letter, which is already five years old, where at that time the President of the Public Service Commission thought it was a good idea to deal with this. Then there was a quote from a former President of the Treasury Board to the effect that he thought it was a good idea that it be dealt with.

Mr. Speaker, it strikes me more and more like heaven. Everyone wants to go, but not necessarily right now. That seems to be the way this particular policy is being handled, and I think that is to the detriment, frankly, of the Public Service. I do not think that the general public needs to feel fearful. I feel that managers and people at that particular level of the Civil Service should not be participating in the political process.

I wonder if we should not try out on an experimental basis the removal of many of these guidelines and say that people can run as candidates—if they run as candidates I think we would require them to get a leave of absence—but if they want to help a particular candidate, let that individual do so. I think that the practical experience that was referred to by the Member from Regina would probably come to the fore. We would find that a large number of them would not participate in any event, but it would allow the people who want to participate to do so. To what extent would they feel inhibited in doing their work? I think they would not feel that way at all, but it would indicate to the more wary public servants that they could participate in this. Otherwise, what we are going to have is that only those who are prepared to take a chance and to stick their necks out will participate and will run the risk of losing their jobs.

Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that the time had moved on so quickly. I thought there was another Member rising to speak, but I understand my time is up. I think it is an interesting subject.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I might indicate to the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) that the time allotted to the discussion of the Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) has now expired. Accordingly, pursuant to Standing Order 24(2) it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

I wonder if I might indicate to the House that the next order of business would be a Bill put by the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), and I understand that he seeks the floor on a point of order to deal with that matter.

When the House has heard the Hon. Member, perhaps the Chair would recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) with respect to the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd).

As the House has heard, the Parliamentary Secretary has indicated that that Member has been unavoidably detained.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to discuss with my Party's House Leader, with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) and with the New Democratic Party the fact that perhaps this Bill should not be dealt with today and, with unanimous consent, could be put over until next Wednesday as some discussions within the Department of Finance might allow this Bill to have a longer life than most Private Members' Bills. I would be quite happy to have this happen, with unanimous consent.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, that request is agreeable to this side of the House.

Mr. Young: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that request is also agreeable to us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am not certain whether I should follow a particular form, and, accordingly, to make sure that the rights of the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) are ensured, I will first put the usual question and after that I will seek unanimous consent to the motion.

Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding Order No. 474 be allowed to stand, by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the House accept by unanimous consent the proposal put forward by the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton, and agreed to by other spokesmen, that the matter be withdrawn today and that it retain its place on the Order Paper for this day next week. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): With respect to the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd), the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) will speak.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, regrettably the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau had trouble getting here today. He has phoned in to say that he had difficulties getting here. I would ask for the consent of the House that his Bill and its rank on the Order Paper be preserved as well, in a similar fashion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is proposed by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd) be withdrawn for the purposes of debate today but that it retain its rank on the Order Paper for one week today or thereafter as may be the case. Is that agreed by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I think under the circumstances we might have agreement that we now see the clock as reading six o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Considering that we do have some one and a half hours before the normal adjournment hour, I wonder whether, by unanimous consent, the House might agree to give further consideration—it seemed to have a great deal of support in terms of its substance—to Bill C-46 which stands in the name of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). Could we seek unanimous consent?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) may be putting a motion under the terms of Standing Order 8(4)(a) which would rearrange the timing schedule of the House. If he were putting a motion under Standing Order 8(4)(a) then, as he is aware, it would require 25 Members standing in their place to deny that.

In the alternative, he may be seeking unanimous consent to extend the debate on the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Churchill. It is my impression that that cannot be done, given the fact that that hour has now expired. I think that a motion made after the time has expired would probably not be in order, but if the Hon. Member for Kootenay West wishes to persist, I will seek consultation as to whether or not that is possible.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think you are referring to rule 8 paragraph 4, if I am not mistaken, and I have not heard the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) within the hour of that debate, the hour in which we debated the Bill, put the motion. I do not know how this ever got into our deliberations this afternoon, but to me this whole question is out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think I could serve the House by indicating that I wanted go give the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) the opportunity to choose under which Standing Order he wanted to proceed. He has made it clear by signalling to the Chair that he wants to seek unanimous consent now to continue the debate on the Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). There is no issue, therefore, of 25 Members standing in their place. There is only the issue of unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent to the motion but by the Hon. Member for Kootenay West to continue the debate?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is no agreement.

I now have before the House the suggestion by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) that we now call it six o'clock. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 4.38 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa), seconded by Mr. Nielsen, moved:

That the entire question of compliance with the Government's Conflict of Interest Guidelines of April 28, 1980, as they concern all matters relating to the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project and the conduct of the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, the present Minister of Finance, the Minister of State (Mines), Mr. Alastair Gillespie, or any other official of the Government of Canada or of its Crown Corporations with respect to the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project, be referred to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, who is responsible for the administration of the Conflict of Interest Guidelines, with the instruction that he examine all of the materials relating to the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project with the power to call for such papers, materials or information as may be required to adequately complete his enquiries and, with the instruction that a report be made to the House within two (2) weeks of this date, failing which this House has lost confidence in this Government because of its lack of moral standards.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the fact that the motion that is before the House today is not only in my name but has been seconded by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) indicates the seriousness with which Members, at least on this side of the House, view this very important matter.

In parliamentary Government, there are two broad principles imposing limits on ministerial behaviour. On the one hand, there is the Criminal Code with its sanctions enforced by the courts of our land. On the other hand, with equal if not greater importance in a democracy, there are the moral rules, ancient and modern, by which a nation's leaders set standards of good conduct in public affairs.

These rules are not enforced by law. They are enforced only by conscientious men or women wielding power who have a sense of propriety. They depend for their continuity on the good character of those in office. They depend ultimately on integrity, respect for the ordinary people of the land and a deep acceptance of the need for a parliamentary moral tradition. They are beyond cynicism.

Today we are dealing not with law but with morality. Today Ministers of the Crown and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself are being judged according to the moral requirements of our parliamentary democracy. The issue is no less serious than that.

In my comments I want to be as precise in my reasoning and as careful in the selection of words as I can be, because the accusations that are going to be made should only be made in a parliamentary democracy after the most careful thought, after the most careful marshalling of evidence. I am going to attempt to do that, and I hope that those who are replying on the Government side will follow this approach themselves. When they hear the arguments, I hope they will meet them head on. I am, of course, convinced, as will be evident in what I have to say, that they will be wrong; but I do hope they will deal with the substance of the matter because that is exactly what I intend to do.

The guidelines established by the Prime Minister on April 28, 1980 established a code of conduct for Ministers and former Ministers. Under the guidelines for former Ministers, it was made clear that for a two-year period after they left office they were forbidden to seek beneficial relations with Departments over which they formerly exercised authority. I want to quote part of that specific guideline at this point. It reads:

Within a period of two years of leaving office, Ministers should not:

c) lobby for or on behalf of any person or commercial corporation before any department or agency for which they were responsible on an ongoing basis during the last two years of their participation in the ministry.

Very clear indeed is that guideline. Under the guidelines for present Ministers, there are no time limits whatsoever. I will quote briefly from that one. It reads as follows:

In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

While these guidelines are not legally binding, they establish a code of conduct which is essential to the functioning of our parliamentary system. While Ministers who violate the guidelines are not, therefore, violating law, they are in violation of the moral code according to which our parliamentary Government must function. It is my contention that in the matters pertaining to the Scotia Coal Synfuels Projects, there was clear and palpable violation of these guidelines.

I want to take them case by case now and I want to discuss the situation involving the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Alastair Gillespie, specifically his involvement in the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project. I want to say to Your Honour and Members of the House that I want to take everyone through this step by step, and I hope Government Members will note the arguments and deal with them if they can.

On March 31, 1977 Mr. Gillespie, as Minister of Energy, signed an agreement with the Hon. J. William Gillis, the then Minister of Mines for Nova Scotia, entitled "Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement on Oil Substitution and Conservation". Under this agreement the federal Government provided $9.2 million for the reduction of Nova Scotia's dependence on imported oil. A number of projects have already been supported under this fund. Funds for it are administered by a federal-provincial management committee.

The next significant date is June 4, 1979 when Mr. Gillespie resigned as a Minister in the Government of Canada.

In October, 1980 Mr. Gillespie initiates co-operation in a joint coal liquefaction venture among the following: Cape Breton Development Corp; Gulf Canada Products Co.; Nova, an Alberta Corporation; Nova Scotia Resources Ltd; and Petro-Canada.

On December 6, 1980 Mr. Gillespie writes to Marshall Cohen, then Deputy Minister of Energy, informing Mr. Cohen of the formation of the consortium and requesting guidance as to the form of application that should be used to obtain financial assistance in such a project.

On December 6, 1980, in his "Dear Mr. Cohen" letter—or "Dear Mickey" letter more correctly—Mr. Gillespie asks for help from Mr. Cohen, his former Deputy Minister. He informs Cohen that he has become chairman of the executive board of the consortium. Mr. Gillespie, writing to his former Deputy Minister, concludes with these words:

—we need your assistance and support, and we need your guidance on how we should formalize our relationship with you.

On December 16, 1980 a letter is sent from Mr. Cohen to Mr. Gillespie advising that a proposal should be submitted to the Management Committee for the Oil Substitution Agreement.

On January 7, 1981, still within the two-year period, a letter from Mr. Gillespie is sent to Mr. P. J. Read, federal co-chairman of the Oil Substitution Agreement, requesting a grant of $1 million for purposes of a feasibility study on coal liquefaction.

About a week later, on January 13, 1981, Dr. Read replies to Mr. Gillespie that the Oil Substitution Management Committee was prepared to enter into negotiations leading to a contribution from the fund of up to $1 million. In March of the same year, at the official level, consideration was given to whether the Gillespie project fitted into the Oil Substitution Agreement. There was some concern expressed that the two did not quite mesh. It was decided that it was not clear whether coal liquefaction was covered by the Oil Substitution Agreement. Therefore, an agreement subsidiary to the Oil Substitution Agreement was found to be advisable as between Canada, Nova Scotia and the consortium. Changes were made to accommodate Mr. Gillespie.

On April 4, 1981, Mr. Gillespie appears at Port Hawkesbury with the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. MacEachen) and Premier Buchanan to announce the formation of the consortium. Gillespie, at this point in his life, is clearly a very happy man.

Now I would like to turn to the involvement of a man who at this point in his life has his career at stake. I do not do this lightly. The present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in my view has been a man all along who has gone into politics to do what he thought ought to be done, not to get personal gain, either in terms of finances or in terms of other personal benefits. I say that and I mean it. The present Minister of Finance is a man with whom I have disagreed profoundly in debate, but he is a man whose capacity to work and to act in what he regarded in the past as the best interests of the country I have never doubted at all. It is for this kind of reason that the argument I will now make is not one that pleases me to make.

On January 15, 1981 a copy of a memorandum respecting the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project is addressed to the Minister of Finance, signed by the Senior Assistant Deputy Minister on behalf of the Deputy Minister. In the memo addressed to him, the Minister of Finance is explicitly informed of Mr. Gillespie's involvement in the project. This memo reads as follows:

There were a number of meetings between Mr. Gillespie and his associates and departmental officials during the past few weeks to help frame the technical and time dimensions of this project.

Mr. Gillespie's participation is made abundantly clear back in January, 1981. It is clear that the present Minister of Finance saw the memo, since it sought his guidance on one issue and was followed up by a handwritten note from a woman, named Maureen to Energy, Mines and Resources, to a person named Mike, which read as follows:

Could you please call John Walsh directly ... or me ... with Minister's comments.

The "Minister" is the present Minister of Finance. As of this date there can be no doubt whatsoever that the Minister of Finance knew about the project and about Mr. Gillespie's involvement in it.

On April 3, 1981 the present Minister of Finance, the then Minister of Energy, signs a Treasury Board submission. It is sent, not that day but on April 13, and then is very quickly withdrawn. Attached to this Treasury Board submission is an annex to a schedule, and it is a document which specifically notes that Alastair Gillespie and Associates is a party to the consortium.

• (1120)

On September 3, 1981 the Minister of Finance, then the Minister of Energy, signed a Treasury Board submission seeking approval of the tripartite agreement involving the Government of Canada, the Government of Nova Scotia and the consortium headed by Mr. Gillespie. This was approved on September 14, 1981 by the Treasury Board.

It is interesting to raise at this time the question as to whom was present at that Treasury Board meeting, and which Ministers were involved in the decision at that time.

On September 25, 1981 signatures to the agreement were attached. The agreement was deemed to be effective retroactively as of June 30, 1981.

On February 17, 1983, following questions in the House, the Minister of Finance wrote to the Prime Minister saying that to the best of his knowledge he was not informed at any time of discussions concerning the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project.

On February 23, 1983, in a further letter to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance retracts what he said in the earlier letter and admits that on April 3, 1981 he had indeed signed a Treasury Board submission in connection with this project.

I want now to say something more specific about the deal itself. On December 6, 1980, in his letter to Mickey Cohen, Deputy Minister, Mr. Gillespie made it clear that the consortium under discussion would not proceed unless there was, and I quote:

—a grant of $1,000,000 from the oil substitution fund—

Some six weeks after, on January 23, 1981, in a letter to Mr. Gillespie, Dr. P. J. Read, federal co-chairman of the Oil Substitution Agreement, urged the advantage to be obtained in having the co-signature of the Minister of Energy himself to the draft. This was because the fund was not set up for the purpose of Mr. Gillespie's project. The Minister's signature, it was argued, would obtain the following benefit:

It would indicate a ministerial directive to the Oil Substitution Agreement Management Committee to interpret the scope of that Agreement as including coal liquefaction studies whereas, up to now, the Management Committee has interpreted the Agreement as being directed exclusively to electricity generation.

The meaning of this is clear. It means the original proposal was changed by the Minister to meet Mr. Gillespie's requirements.

On January 3, 1981, Dr. P. J. Read wrote to Mr. Gillespie stating that the Management Committee had agreed in principle to the project to a maximum of $1 million. A memorandum to the Minister of Energy, looking back on this at a later point, made it clear that this was federal money being passed through the Canada-Nova Scotia Committee.

On April 13, 1981, there is a very interesting piece of correspondence. Dr. J. H. Walsh, Senior Adviser, Coal, Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, wrote a memorandum to Dr. K. Whitham, Assistant Deputy Minister, Conservation and Non-Petroleum. The memo directly raised the issue of Mr. Gillespie's possible violation of the guidelines. I would like to quote at length as follows:

The role of Mr. Gillespie: Concerns were expressed regarding the retaining and daily consultant fee ($600) to be paid to Mr. Gillespie, and about the terms under which the Consortium partners have the right to buy out his interest. There is also a question of whether Mr. Gillespie's participation is in variance with conflict of interest guidelines. I replied regarding the financial arrangements between Mr. Gillespie and the Consortium members——that this matter was wholly transparent and that Ministers could approve or disapprove in their wisdom.

And note this, Mr. Speaker:

• (1125)

The memo continues:

With regard to conflict of interest matters, I noted that Mr. Gillespie's term as Minister ended June 4, 1979, when Mr. Hnatyshyn was appointed.

It is very clear what is being said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Oshawa but I have to advise him that his time has expired. Perhaps he would like to seek unanimous consent of the House to continue.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Waddell: Dictators.

Mr. Broadbent: That is as low as you can get, Lalonde.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like the record to show that the Progressive Conservative Party was in favour of extending the time for the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent).

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to suggest to the House that the particular issue before us is so important today in terms of reflecting on the credibility of all of us—the credibility of the Government, the senior Ministers and the Prime Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order.

Mr. Skelly: I would seek unanimous consent to change the rules to allow—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. I ask the Hon. Member to come to his point of order.

Mr. Skelly: I request the Chair to seek unanimous consent of the House to agree to a question period after the first round of Members' speeches, in the interest of providing adequate information on this very serious matter. It is in the interest of the Government to clarify the issue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. What the Hon. Member is proposing is a ten-minute question and answer period following the speech of each and every Hon. Member in the House. I must tell him that that is the Chair's interpretation of the Standing Orders, so it is not necessary to seek unanimous consent.

I see the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) rising, perhaps on a point of order. When the points of order are complete, I will indicate that the time has come for the ten-minute question and answer period.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I have a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have to recognize points of order first.

Mr. Dingwall: I am rising to ask a question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The best way to proceed at the moment is to dispose of points of order. I see the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) rising. I presume he is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order to ask the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard), recognizing the courtesies that have been extended by this side on frequent occasions to Members who have asked for an extension of time, whether he might not consider that an extension of time for the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) might be an appropriate action to consider now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The President of the Privy Council has twice risen. I do not know whether he seeks the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the microphone light did not come on and I did not know that you had recognized me; I apologize. I think we are all equal in this Chamber. We have many Members who are interested in asking questions of the accusers. I would like us to get to this question period as early as possible.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) if he would indicate to the House what he intended to say in the remainder of his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. May I simply remind the House that during the ten-minute period for questions, comments and exchanges, both questions and answers are to be short and sharp.

Mr. Broadbent: I thank the Right Hon. Gentleman for his question. It shows, at least on one side of the House, that a sense of fair play in this institution still remains.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In answering the question which he put to me, I will conclude with three or four paragraphs and be well within the period. I want to say, in light of the evidence that I have brought forward, that there has been, in my judgment, a clear and deliberate violation of the moral guidelines.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The game that is being played right now is clearly outside the intention of the rules. It is okay for the Hon. Member to get up and talk about a sense of fair play on one side—

• (1130)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Whether during the period in which the Hon. Member was being recorded, or after when he was being called to attention by the Chair, I did not hear anything which constituted a point of order.

Mr. Broadbent: I would conclude my answer by saying that it is very clear to me and to Hon. Members on this side of the House that the guidelines have been violated by the present Minister of Finance and by Mr. Gillespie. In terms of the responsibility of the Prime Minister in all of this matter, the best that can be said is that it has been abominable.

I conclude with this appeal. The Prime Minister must now act to clean house and restore, before it is too late, a sense of morality to public life in our land. It is not just for his personality or his Party that I make this appeal, because with this kind of behaviour all politicians in all Parties are affected. Until the body politic is cleansed by those at the top, we are all affected. It is time to act. It is time to restore some moral purpose to the politics of our country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Oshawa a question. He has made much of the guidelines and has referred to a portion which states:

\n any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

I would like to make two points. The Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement was signed in 1977, providing $9.2 million to a bank account in Halifax.

An Hon. Member: Surprising it was not in Switzerland.

Mr. Dingwall: Second, I want the Hon. Member to specifically state where the preferential treatment was extended to the particular individual in question.

Some Hon. Members: He did!

Mr. Dingwall: Let us have the facts. Where was the preferential treatment? There was no sleaziness. There was a press conference in Port Hawkesbury, with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) in attendance. There was no attempt to avoid the facts. Therefore, will the Hon. Member clearly state in three or four lines where the preferential treatment was evident?

Keep this in mind, Mr. Speaker, that if the Hon. Member had read the agreement of understanding dated June 30, 1981, he would have found that in reference to the eligible costs which the Government of Canada would pay it specifically states at page 2:

"Eligible Costs" means the cost of the Feasibility Study and the working capital requirements of the Consortium, other than the per diem fees and the annual retainer payable to the developer pursuant to the Memorandum of Understanding;

Where is the preferential treatment?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, if I saw correctly during the period in which I was speaking, the Hon. Member was here for the whole of my speech, which was carefully documented. After the documentation which I provided—

Mr. Blais: Give us your conclusion!

Mr. Ouellet: Answer the question!

Mr. Broadbent: After the documentation I provided, I find the question he asked to be not only sad, but also pathetic.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: That is the point. That is exactly the point. Where was the preferential treatment?

Mr. Broadbent: You are out, boy, you are out!

Mr. Ouellet: You are bloody dishonest, that is what you are.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. We have the Hon. Member for Oshawa talking about morality, yet when a specific question is raised about the integrity of another Hon. Member, he has no answer to give to the House concerning the preferential treatment. Where is it?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I again ask the Hon. Member for Oshawa to clearly state in two or three sentences or in two or three paragraphs, where is the preferential treatment? Will he who is so consumed with this particular issue kindly tell the House, where is the preferential treatment?

Some Hon. Members: Come on, tell us!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the questioner could obviously not—

Mr. Chrétien: Where is your—

Mr. Broadbent: Quiet over there. Listen to the answer. The Hon. Member could not understand the speech in the first place. I will try to give him the answer in two or three sentences. The guidelines prepared by his Prime Minister stated that a former Minister could not deal, negotiate or act in any way, in terms of self-benefit, with his former Department.

Mr. Ouellet: That is not true.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Gillespie did that. He ought not to have done it. The same guidelines, this time for existing Ministers—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Ouellet: This is not true! You have misquoted the guidelines.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, they are so overwhelmed by their own propaganda that they do not want to listen to the answers to the questions they pose. If they will shut up, I will answer.

Mr. Ouellet: We want the truth!

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you very much.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to reply to the serious allegations which relate to a joint agreement of the Governments of Nova Scotia and Canada and a consortium to fund a feasibility study for a coal liquefaction project in Cape Breton. This decision was taken during my tenure with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

As Hon. Members know, since questions to Ministers may relate only to their present portfolio, I have been prevented from replying up until now. Hon. Members opposite have put me on trial. Throughout last week I listened to allegations and insinuations about my character and conduct. Therefore, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) returned last Tuesday night, I advised him of my intention to make a reply in my own defence at an early opportunity.

I welcome this occasion and I particularly welcome the opportunity to express my regrets to all my colleagues in the House of Commons that, through lack of recollection and inadequate information provided to me, I inadvertently contributed to misleading statements being made in the House last week and to which the Prime Minister referred yesterday.

All Hon. Members know the respect I have for the House of Commons and the privilege I attach to serving as a Member of it. The public interest is protected by a free Parliament reflecting a diversity of opinions strongly articulated and deeply felt. Candidates for public office surrender the right to privacy and accept the stresses of constant public scrutiny of their performance. Despite these pressures, there is no shortage of candidates eager to assume the responsibilities of public life.

For more than a decade, I have been privileged to serve this country as a Member of Parliament, a member of Cabinet, and a Privy Councillor to Her Majesty. I take pleasure in participating vigorously in parliamentary debates, contesting and challenging opposing views. However, I have never stooped to questioning the personal integrity or smearing the reputation of public men and women.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: A reputation of integrity is a precious asset, earned and accumulated little by little over time. I am not prepared to see my reputation destroyed by unfounded allegations of wrongdoing.

• (1140)

What is at stake is not merely one's personal reputation, but the respect Canadians hold for their public institutions and for the Government of this country which we proudly represent. More particularly, there must be no doubt about the moral integrity of the Minister of Finance. There must be no cause to believe that public decisions are influenced by the desire to win personal gain or to convey special favours.

The current version of the conflict of interest guidelines dates from April 28, 1980. The pertinent section for incumbent Ministers reads as follows:

In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) attaches great importance to whether contact between the former Minister and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources occurred within two years after Mr. Gillespie's departure from the Government. That is not the question. It is irrelevant whether the contact occurred four days, four months or four years after Mr. Gillespie's resignation.

The question is, was a former Minister granted improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment at any time? Clearly these prohibitions apply to my conduct on all occasions. It would be wrong to permit influence, privileged access or preferential treatment at any time.

To this question, the answer is that at no time did I, my colleagues, my officials or indeed provincial officials grant improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment to a former office holder. The consortium's application to the Canada/Nova Scotia Agreement on Oil Substitution and Conservation was considered on its intrinsic merit and was processed through regular channels without my political intervention, much as agreements were reached with 12 other applicants.

The other relevant section of the guidelines provides that former Ministers are—and I quote, contrary to the Leader of the New Democratic Party:

—not to lobby for or on behalf of any person or commercial corporation before any department or agency for which they were responsible on an ongoing basis during the last two years of their participation in the Ministry.

It is obvious that contact between the proponents of the consortium and the Department was initiated within the period when Mr. Gillespie was prohibited from lobbying.

Some Members have given such a wide interpretation to "lobbying" as to encompass all contacts with the Department. Clearly, if the intent was to prohibit all contacts, the guidelines would have done so directly and simply. In any case, neither I, my colleagues nor my officials were lobbied by Mr. Gillespie. At no time did any of my officials, including my Deputy Minister or any of my colleagues, see a need to bring to my attention any possibility that a conflict of interest situation might arise.

Wednesday, February 16, was the first occasion on which it was alleged that I had violated conflict of interest guidelines. I note in passing that if the appearance of wrongdoing is now so obvious and if the agreement was so generally known that my personal involvement can be assumed, it is curious that Hon. Members opposite suffer pangs of conscience only after the passage of some 22 months after the project was publicly announced by the Premier of Nova Scotia, the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada, the members of the consortium and Mr. Gillespie.

Let us review the decision-making process in this case. Under the terms of the Canada/Nova Scotia Agreement, a joint federal-provincial Management Committee has the full authority, independent of Ministers, to approve projects under the Agreement. This Committee evaluates proposals by the criteria established under the Agreement, authorizes funding and monitors subsequent expenditures. The reference to Ministers sought primarily to confirm that Canada and Nova Scotia intended to include coal conversion under the Agreement. The proposal was favoured by the Committee because of their interest in assessing the feasibility of coal liquefaction and not because of the involvement of any particular member of the consortium.

Some have expressed doubts about the feasibility of coal liquefaction. Surely that is exactly what the study is designed to test. In addition it should be emphasized that the public funds in question had been transferred to the Province of Nova Scotia. A section of the federal-provincial agreement reads, and I quote:

The monies so contributed shall be paid into a special account in a chartered bank in the Province of Nova Scotia, upon the designation thereof as a special fund by order of the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Nova Scotia, pursuant to the provisions of the Provincial Finance Act, and shall become public money of the Province of Nova Scotia.

In addition to the leading role taken by provincial authorities, Hon. Members will note that the proposal was submitted by a consortium which included two federal Crown corporations, one provincial Crown corporation and three private corporations. This again demonstrates the broadly-based nature and the legitimacy of the venture.

Moreover, the fact and nature of Mr. Gillespie's involvement in this venture were made known in a manner suggesting not the slightest attempt on the part of anyone to conceal its existence or disguise the consortium's receipt of public funds.

I might add that the public funds are specifically directed to the feasibility study itself. Fees and retainers payable to Gillespie and Associates had been specifically excluded, and he is not entitled to receive one penny from that fund for fees and retainers.

The very fact of the openness surrounding the project was evidently an important consideration for those Government officials who, as I have subsequently learned, assessed and rejected the possibility of the Agreement violating conflict of interest guidelines. Hon. Members are aware that the conflict of interest guidelines emphasize the importance of disclosure in the process of avoiding conflict or the appearance of conflict of interest. When there is an element of doubt, the fact of an involvement being willingly made public is evidence of good faith and bears directly on the question of whether reasonable persons might perceive a conflict of interest.

Furthermore, despite the public nature of this project and Mr. Gillespie's involvement, no one spoke out at the time. No one cried preference or advantage, or appearance of preference or appearance of advantage; not after the press conference in Nova Scotia in April, 1981, five months before the project was formally approved; not after the television and the newspaper coverage of that event; not after a press release by the consortium; not after a press release by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen); and not after a press release by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy. I find it strange, Mr. Speaker, that Ministers would flaunt their wrongdoings by issuing press releases.

• (1150)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: To my knowledge, no one, not one journalist, not one Member of Parliament, not one Member of a legislative assembly, not one citizen, either orally or in writing, expressed reservations about any possible impropriety during the 22 months after the project was formally announced. I submit that no such accusations were made because no preference or advantage was given. No reasonable grounds existed to believe otherwise, and that reflects the fact that the project was considered and approved on its intrinsic merit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: This remains valid, as valid today as it was when the project was announced almost two years ago.

I submit that this project was conceived, considered and consented to by honourable men dealing in good faith. I have satisfied my conscience and my sense of honour on which I have premised my life in public office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I submit that I was not lobbied, I was not asked, nor did I offer to intervene. I, therefore, suggest I have not by any act, or failure to act, provided grounds, or the appearance of grounds, for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment. I appeal to that sense of honour and decency which enables human beings to appreciate the same qualities in others. No individual can win public trust; ultimately it must be conferred by others. In return, that trust must be honoured.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if I ever thought that I had contributed in any way, either by action or omission, to contravening the guidelines, I would have tendered my resignation immediately, without waiting to hear the slanderous accusations being made from the opposite side of the House. Politics is not my whole life, and I can make a living without it. There are a host of other challenges that are just as interesting, and I would love to spend more time with my wife and children.

By resigning, however, I would merely confirm the vicious insinuations and slanderous innuendo to which I have been subjected this past week. I intend to fight them with all my might, mindful of the fact that in the past we have too often seen virulent attacks against political figures, people who were honest, sincere and loyal being subjected to slander and libel. In any case, I do not intend to give in to that kind of political strategem. I take the integrity of our democratic institutions and my responsibility as a guardian of the public trust and as Minister of Finance too seriously to remain silent before such allegations. My public accountability is to this House, and I intend to act accordingly.

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) some specific questions about his knowledge and recollection of this transaction.

The Minister rightly pointed out in his speech that from the floor of the House of Commons, because of the rules of ministerial responsibility, we are precluded from asking the Minister direct and specific questions with respect to his knowledge and involvement. I preface my question to the Minister of Finance on the basis that he will understand that this Parliament will survive as a viable and proper democratic forum only if there is no question about the veracity of statements made by Ministers of the Crown.

The Minister of Finance has now corrected the record once with respect to his recollection of the involvement of Mr. Alastair Gillespie as far as the Scotia Synfuels Project is concerned. I ask the Minister, in light of his letter to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) which the Prime Minister disclosed yesterday, indicating the first knowledge he had of Mr. Gillespie's involvement in this consortium, as the main person for negotiation with the federal Government, was on January 15, 1981, upon receipt of the memorandum from his Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Cohen, whether the Minister has had an opportunity of canvassing all his records and his memory with respect to this transaction. Does he maintain that that was the first time that he was aware of Mr. Gillespie's involvement in this project?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the record, the documents tabled yesterday, are clear, and I thank the Hon. Member for referring to them. I can say that on the basis of the files which have been made public and to which I had access, and on the basis of checking my personal records, I have provided all the information that I had. Not only did I do that personally, but I asked the current Deputy Minister of Energy to go through all the files, or get his officials to do it for me. But I cannot guarantee that there may not have been somebody who may have said at a particular time in December or November that this project existed. I cannot guarantee that. I had been a Minister for two years during that period. As the Prime Minister said yesterday, I have sent about 320 submissions to the Treasury Board. I had 66 Cabinet memorandums during that time. I introduced Bills in Parliament. I corresponded with thousands of Canadian citizens. I met with thousands of them during that period. I made hundreds of speeches across the country. What happened on a particular day more than two years ago? I am sure my hon. friend himself does not remember what he was doing on December 12, 1980, or on January 13.

I cannot give total assurance that I was not made aware of it before January, 1981, but that point, as I indicated in my statement today, is totally irrelevant. The point is that I must not as a Minister give any preferred access or preferential treatment to a former office holder at any time—two years, two months or 20 years after he departed. I can only tell the Hon. Member that to the best of my knowledge, after having myself examined and having had officials examine all of the papers and facts, that is the best information we have. Maybe my friend has information to the effect that I was informed in December. I will willingly admit it. It is irrelevant, but there it is.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Finance that the Prime Minister has based his defence of the Minister's lack of involvement in supervising the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources at a time when there were negotiations by a former colleague, Mr. Alastair Gillespie, and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. He has based his defence on the fact that the Minister has written to the Prime Minister indicating clearly in the first instance that there was absolutely no knowledge of the involvement of Mr. Gillespie—a former colleague, a former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources—as the instigator of this project until September, 1981. He has now changed the record by a letter to the Prime Minister which cuts out the foundation of the Prime Minister's defence of the Minister of Finance by saying that he had knowledge some time in advance of September, indeed in January.

I now put this to the Minister of Finance. In light of the clear guidelines, the clear prohibition set forth by the Prime Minister, prohibiting former office holders from having dealings on behalf of any person or commercial corporation, whether it be Alastair Gillespie or Gillespie and Associates Ltd., with any Department or agency for which they were responsible on an ongoing basis during the last two years of their participation in the ministry, the Minister knew this transaction was within the two-year time period, indeed well in advance of the inception of this matter, and yet he condoned an activity by his former colleague which is prohibited by the Prime Minister's guidelines. I ask the Minister how he could condone that activity.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will give me a few minutes to reply to all the wrong assertions made by the Hon. Member. First, the guidelines do not prohibit, as the Hon. Member has said, contacts or communications within a period of two years. The guidelines are quite clear. I hope that in the debate today people will refer themselves to the guidelines and limit themselves to what the guidelines actually say. What the guidelines say with regard to former office holders is very clear. They must not engage in lobbying. Let us keep in mind the guidelines as they are and not twist and change the wording of them.

Second, the Prime Minister did not base his defence of me on the fact that I was aware of the situation more than two years after the event. The question that arose from the Leader of the Opposition was, when did I know about them and whether I knew within two years. The Prime Minister asked me. What did I do? I wrote to him within 24 hours after the question being put, after having checked my records and asking the Department to provide me with all the information they had. That information is contained in a letter that was tabled yesterday. I wrote the following to the Prime Minister:

> I can add that, to the best of my knowledge, between my appointment and the signing of a memorandum to Treasury Board in this regard on September 3, 1981, I was not informed at any time of discussions concerning the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project between officials of my department or Crown agencies and representatives of the firm Gillespie and Associates Ltd., their agents or commercial partners.

That was what I wrote to the Prime Minister last week. Pursuant to that letter I talked to the Minister of Energy, and said "Please, will you have a full check made of all records having anything to do with this in order to ensure that this is exactly what happened". Almost one week later a new letter came from the Deputy Minister indicating that indeed more documents had been found. Immediately I wrote to the Prime Minister, and that letter is public, together with the letter of the Deputy Minister.

The record is clear. The question is, was there any lobbying within the two-year period? The view of my officials and myself, having reviewed the situation, is that there was no lobbying. I state that categorically as a Member of this House. The question is not whether I knew about this within the two-year period. The question is, did I grant privileged access or preferential treatment, or the appearance of it? To that question my answer is categorically no, that is not the case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Debate.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the reason we are in the position that we are in today is, first, that this Government, through its House Leader, brought on a debate in an attempt to end the Government's embarrassment; and, second, they felt that such a debate could be used either to stifle or to intimidate the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that neither of those objectives will be met. Indeed, after listening to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), I can see every reason for believing that the motion that is before the House and which will be voted on later today will be supported totally by the Government side.

The embarrassment in which they find themselves will continue until such time as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) takes the only steps a Prime Minister can take to clear his Cabinet of the clear and present suspicion of trafficking in friendships and indulging the "old boy network" of past and present Ministers. As for the Opposition, there is no way we stand to be intimidated or frightened off from the present issue by the threats of the other side.

Mr. Cosgrove: You didn't have the guts to move the motion.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) says that we did not have the guts to move the motion.

Mr. Fisher: He is right.

Mr. Nielsen: We hear another interjection of "He's right". I am the seconder of the motion, long overdue, of the New Democratic Party.

Those threats were made yesterday. They are being made now. They were clearly implicit in the Prime Minister's remarks. They show the fear and desperation of the Government and confirm in the minds of Canadians that this is a Government with something to hide.

I would point out that even if the Opposition were subject to cold feet at the Prime Minister's huffing and puffing, certainly universally the media of this country is not, notwithstanding even threats against one of the most respected journalists in the electronic media that she is a slanderer.

The lead of that story was self-explanatory. I quote from the original Canadian Press story:

> A former Liberal Cabinet Minister, now the Chairman of Carling O'Keefe Ltd., has masterminded a Cape Breton coal project that could pay him off handsomely with the help of Government money.

That indicates the tenor of the story which appears to be an example of clear, restrained, factual and accurate reporting. At least, not one of the major premises has been denied by the Government. They have contented themselves by saying: "We did it, but it's all right because we're Liberals". The Prime Minister's answers amount to this: "Liberals look after Liberals with public money. So what?"

• (1210)

It remains to be seen whether the majority of Canadians, who may not possess the Prime Minister's grasp of subtleties, will take the same view. I think not. Most Canadians will believe, as we do, that there is an exercise of favouritism here, that there is preferential treatment here, that there is privileged access here, and that there is improper influence here. That was borne out by a former Cabinet Minister, the first of a long line of them to leave under this Prime Minister, Mr. Eric Kierans, on this morning's CBC radio program.

This is clearly shown on the official record of events and I intend to turn to that in a moment. The question is, who is responsible?

An Hon. Member: Turn to yourself.

Mr. Nielsen: I hear an interjection by someone over there who does not have the courage to stand and identify himself, saying that I should turn to myself.

An Hon. Member: Just wait.

Mr. Nielsen: I invite him to make any accusation or charge that he wishes and I will deal with it.

Mr. Bujold: Go outside the House.

Mr. Nielsen: If the Hon. Member wants to go outside the House, I will do that with him too.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The question is, sir, who is responsible? The Prime Minister—

Mr. Ouellet: That would be new for you; you never did it outside the House. That would be a new thing for you.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I hear the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). I have never been convicted of contempt of court.

Mr. Crosbie: Dial a judge!

Mr. Nielsen: The Prime Minister, in a series of cases, such as the appointment of a former minister to the top position in Air Canada, the preferential treatment extended to the former Clerk of the Privy Council, Mr. Pitfield, has exhibited a tolerance and a sympathy for the practice of favouring friends of the Liberal Party. The Prime Minister has, in fact, acted as though the perquisites of office were his own private fief, to hand out as he pleases, to be used in the rewarding of favourites and advancing the cause of his Party. Most Canadians will regard this as an improper and perverted use of a position of trust.

One feels a certain sympathy for the Minister of Finance who, when he was minister of Energy, was slowly and insidiously dragged into a compromising position, perhaps even against his will, but who listened to the insidious arguments of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) and subjected himself to the persuasions of the master of manipulation.

What, in effect, there is, sir, is a saying in Grit circles that "What Al wants, Al gets". The Deputy Prime Minister wanted this project so badly to bolster his fading fortunes in Nova Scotia that he, in turn, listened to the blandishments of Gillespie, who had gone to work setting up the consortium and securing agreement in principle from his former Department for a grant of $1 million for the extremely dubious project of extracting gasoline from coal.

I might say here, sir, that the Minister does not understand one of the fundamental factors in the principle of accountability—that he is fixed with the knowledge of his Deputy and all of the officials in the Department, whether he is informed by them or not.

The Deputy Prime Minister has placed himself in an invidious position. His defence of the current Minister of Finance has resulted in an indictment of himself. According to his statements, he knew what was going on and he gave enthusiastic approval. At the same time as he shrugged and stammered his way through an explanation as substantial as elf's wings, the Deputy Prime Minister, in desperation, conceived a new and further out reply. The guidelines, he said, are, after all, just rules of conduct. Simply a sort of golden rule that all those in official positions must follow. We must be guided by our own individual consciences, he said. This is not a safe maxim to entrust to this Government, sir.

These, then, are the bare bones. The records supplied by official sources show clearly that there was improper influence, that there was preferential treatment and that there was privileged access to information, to the goodwill of officials and to the help and assistance of the Minister's former Department. That has all been placed on the record by the mover of the motion.

All of this was enthusiastically acquiesced in by the Deputy Prime Minister, who involved himself in the project, called a press conference to publicize it on the day after the submission was prepared for Treasury Board, and publicly praised Mr. Gillespie who was sitting beside him at the press conference. Again, I say it is unfortunate that the former Minister of Energy should have been caught up in the toils of the overweaning ambitions of the Deputy Prime Minister. I am sure that no one at this moment regrets this more than he does himself.

Yesterday the Prime Minister advanced the theory that we on this side should not put forward criticism of the type of thing we are dealing with today because they would get back at us and we will be made somehow to suffer. "Character assassination" are words that are heckled across the floor. If we are to follow that through to its ultimate logic, the suggestion is that we must adopt the standards which prevail opposite. We must see no evil at all where Grits are concerned. We must not dare to inquire into practices which are detrimental to Parliament, even when they have been adverted to in the media and are being discussed in the public area.

Let me say to the Prime Minister—I am sorry that he and the Deputy Prime Minister are absent from a debate as important as this, and the Minister of Finance must be behind the curtain somewhere—there will be no gag law in this House of Commons as long as I am responsible for the conduct of parliamentary business on this side.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fisher: We are waiting for the facts.

Mr. Nielsen: The mover of the motion put the facts on the record. Those are the facts.

Mr. Fisher: You do not have any so you do not want to give them.

Mr. Nielsen: The record in this case, from the Government's own files, clearly shows—

Mr. Fisher: It does not even have the merit of being intelligent.

Mr. Nielsen: —first, a breach of the Prime Minister's guidelines by a former minister within the two-year period established by the Prime Minister. That is fact one.

Fact two is a breach of the guidelines by the current Minister of Finance, then the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Ouellet: False. This is untrue.

Mr. Nielsen: Fact three is a breach by the current Secretary of State of External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), then Minister of Finance and, as now, Deputy Prime Minister of this Government, who used his enormous influence in the Government to favour a project about which the officials in the Department had strong doubts.

Mr. Ouellet: You know damn well that you are lying.

An Hon. Member: Smear!

Mr. Nielsen: They say "smear", Mr. Speaker. Someone said "lie" over there.

Mr. Clark: Ouellet accused you of lying.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said "lie"? I ask him to withdraw it.

That gentleman over there is the Registrar General, the Minister to whom the ADRG reports; and it is to the ADRG that the motion of the Hon. Member for Oshawa asks the House to refer this matter. We can see his clear, unbiased and unprejudiced approach to this whole mess.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw, withdraw!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, do you just simply sit there and accept an unparliamentary expression, or do you ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to withdraw the charge of lying?

Mr. Fisher: Talk about appearances! There is the appearance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) has taken that step which necessitates action by the Chair. Until such time as the Leader of the Opposition had appealed to the Chair I was unable to take any steps whatsoever.

An Hon. Member: Oh, come on!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Leader of the Opposition has indicated that he heard the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs say the word "lie", or call him a liar.

• (1220)

Mr. Clark: As did I.

Mr. Crosbie: And I.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am not clear as to precisely what were the words. In either event, such language is unparliamentary and accordingly it is the responsibility of the Chair to ask the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to withdraw the expression.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I used unparliamentary language in my response to the entirely insidious and malicious comments of the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Nielsen). I am prepared to withdraw the words I used.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the way that came over on the translation was that the Minister said—these are not my words; they are the translator's—that he does not wish to withdraw.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Miss MacDonald: That is what it said.

Mr. Nielsen: That is what the translation said.

An Hon. Member: That is not what the Minister said.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I was not using the translation device, but I am informed and thought I heard in French that the Hon. Minister had withdrawn the expression.

Mr. Nielsen: Fact four: Gillespie dealt directly or indirectly with two Ministers, the then Minister of Finance and Deputy Prime Minister and now Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the then Minister of Energy, now the Minister of Finance. The extent of those dealings is documented in material tabled by the Prime Minister and the current Minister of Energy and in replies in the House yesterday.

On the question of whether those dealings between two Ministers and a former Minister, involving the former Minister's Department and resulting in a very large Government subsidy to a project about which the departmental officials had expressed strong doubts, provided grounds—and I quote from the guidelines:

—or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment—

There can be little doubt about that. We have been hearing little else but those allegations in the House for the past eight days.

Were grounds provided? The Prime Minister says not; the Minister says not. The record says something quite different. The Deputy Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who appears to have been the prime mover in getting the project off the ground, holding regular consultations with the Deputy Minister of Energy and sitting on the platform with Mr. Gillespie, says that it does not really matter whether the guidelines were breached because, after all, they are just guidelines.

We have the Prime Minister's statement that the Minister knew nothing of the deal until September, 1981, and his additional statement yesterday admitting that his earlier statement was an error and that he had now rectified the record based on new information supplied by the Minister of Energy. That conduct of his alone, misinforming his Prime Minister and placing the Prime Minister in the position of misleading the House, is sufficient to call for his resignation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: It should be pointed out that, according to the Hansard record, the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) outlined the project in some detail in the House in June, 1981, while the then Minister of Energy was in his seat, presumably in his own inimitable fashion, smiling his approval at that speech.

The summation of the record is that the Minister of Energy knew of the situation as far back as January, 1981 and received several reminders after that date, including a reminder of Alastair Gillespie's attachment to the program. That is a fact.

Gillespie was in clear breach of the guidelines, since he was in communication with officials of his former Department on the question of obtaining a large subsidy for a program initiated in that Department while he was still the Minister. At this point, only a year and seven months had elapsed since he was in office.

The Minister of Finance in a press conference last night said:

Subsequently, the Treasury Board submission in question was withdrawn—

Why we would want a Treasury Board submission in this connection, when all the funds were managed in a Nova Scotia bank account, I do not know. He continued:

—because there were questions as to intellectual property rights and also there was a discussion at the official level about the possibility of—ah—the allegations about potential conflict of interest.

And it is at that time that the Treasury Board submission was amended to provide a specific provision prohibiting Mr. Gillespie from receiving any money out of the contribution that would come from the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement. And that is the submission that finally I signed in September, 1981.

How in the world, with all those moneys—the $1 million from the federal coffers, the $300,000 each from two Crown corporations responsible to this Parliament and $300,000 in contributions from other Crown corporations—going into a common fund, could they mark those dollar bills so that Mr. Gillespie would not get any of the $1 million and would not get any of the $300,000 from the Crown corporations, is beyond me. It is interesting to note—

An Hon. Member: It is beyond you, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, perhaps someone over there would explain how they can mark the bills that are going into an account like that so that Mr. Gillespie would get none of them. I would be interested in hearing the accounting mechanisms they would employ to achieve that result.

It is interesting to note that the Treasury Board submission which was withdrawn was dated April 3, 1981 and was signed April 13, 1981. Had it been entered as signed, it would have been within the two-year prohibition in the guidelines preventing a former Minister from having dealings with his own subordinates. Attached to the submission was a note saying that Gillespie was involved. Because of the Minister's qualms about conflict of interest, this was held back until September.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) but his time has expired. He may wish to seek unanimous consent of the House to continue—

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Let me be clear. I intimated that there might be unanimous consent, and it is clear that there is not. Questions. Answers. Comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Leader of the Opposition, who said earlier that he had never been convicted of contempt of court, whether he remembers that in 1966, he copied, word for word, a confidential report drafted by a public servant and passed it off as his own. I also would like to ask him whether he remembers that Justice Dorion, in his report published in 1965, said on page 131 that if Tremblay had suffered as a result of certain statements, it was to be hoped that those who made the statements would recognize his decency and integrity. I therefore wish to ask the present interim Leader of the Opposition and hatchet man of the former Leader of the Opposition, whether when he said in the House yesterday—

[English]

"We caught a few fish in '65".

—whether that is not a reflection of the narrow and vicious mind of a politician who has made a career of destroying or attempting to destroy reputations.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, what the Minister has again said is that we should not, when we see evil, say anything about it; as Parliamentarians we should shut up, close our eyes and close our ears to any wrongdoing whatsoever.

Mr. Ouellet: Answer the question, answer the question.

Mr. Nielsen: I had the courtesy to listen to the Minister's question, a courtesy which I am not being accorded in answering the question.

Miss Campbell: Answer it.

Mr. Nielsen: I will answer it. There is a lady over there from Nova Scotia who asks me to answer the question. The reason the Minister is asking these questions is to cast an aspersion personally on me—

• (1230)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: —that somehow—

Mr. Lalonde: Who are the fish?

Mr. Nielsen: —I am anti-French, anti-Quebec.

Mr. Ouellet: Who are the fish?

Mr. Clark: It is Ouellet's racism.

Mr. Nielsen: The last time I looked, sir, I do not believe the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) was from Quebec. His name is MacEachen.

Mr. Ouellet: You are trembling.

Mr. Nielsen: The last time I looked, neither was the Minister of State for Mines from the Province of Quebec. She is an Anglophone. The last time I looked, wrongdoing is wrongdoing, and a Member of Parliament has an obligation to raise that in this House and call it as he sees it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Nielsen). What I would like is a quick summation of the Official Opposition's position on this particular matter. The very short attempt to muck-rake on the other side seems to be off track.

Is the Leader of the Official Opposition and his Party taking the tack that this matter is not a matter on the specific detail of attempting to prove it here in Parliament, but a matter of the behaviour of the Minister? It is his behaviour that casts into question his competence and integrity to continue as a Minister. Therefore, the integrity of the Government is in question in the eyes of the Canadian people, ultimately which question falls on every Member of the House of Commons, this democratic institution. Is that the position that he is putting forward?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, that is precisely correct. The matter goes to the heart of the theory of ministerial accountability, a theory which the Minister has breached with or without any guidelines by virtue of the fact that he is seized with the knowledge. What we are asking for, as I understand the motion of the Leader of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Chénier: Go kiss him, Erik.

Mr. Nielsen: —is that this matter be referred to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, who would have the power to examine all of the facts in an impartial way and report back to Parliament. Unless the Government agrees to that impartial, independent examination by the official—and the Government itself is charged with that responsibility—then the Government has failed to keep its confidence in so far as this House is concerned by reason of its lack of moral standards.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member noted yesterday that the benefits of the project were irrelevant. I just want to say to him that, notwithstanding the moral question of integrity, the real substance of this is the possible creation of 2,000 jobs in Cape Breton.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald: We have heard that before.

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Member made much of the Deputy Prime Minister's role in this particular contract. I would like to clarify for him that the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia has played a major and important part in getting this project to where it is today.

The Hon. Member made reference to a press conference in Port Hawkesbury. I want to quote for the Hon. Member what took place in the Nova Scotia House of Assembly a week after that press conference. I shall read what the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia said:

—Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, has not as yet been signed and therefore federal participation in the project has not been forthcoming. But I will repeat again what I said a few weeks ago, that if the federal Government does not come through with cost-sharing on that project, then this Government has enough confidence in this province and in coal production that we will go the limit and look after it ourselves.

The Premier of Nova Scotia was very much involved, but to carry the logic of the Leader of the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Yukon, much further, you would think that the money provided under the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement to this consortium was bad money.

Mr. Clark: Question.

Some Hon. Members: That is a speech.

Mr. Dingwall: Money was provided to a friend, a cohort and a supporter of the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia, Mr. Medjuck—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Smith: He is entitled to make comments. Read the rules.

Mr. Dingwall: —in 1980 whereby $300,000 was provided to his company. Is that wrong money? Should that money be spent on that project? Is there something wrong with that? That is total irrelevance on the part of the Opposition. The Hon. Member realizes that he has not made a case for preferential treatment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I will be considerably more brief in my answer to that non-question.

Mr. Ouellet: Why don't you answer mine at the same time?

Mr. Clark: Go to a judge, André.

Mr. Ouellet: You have never been a lawyer, my friend. You do not know anything about that. For a student to flunk law, you should reserve your remarks.

Mr. Nielsen: I would simply quote from the Hawkesbury Sun which quoted the Deputy Prime Minister, remarks he has not denied at all. Indeed, the Deputy Prime Minister has reaffirmed what he said in answer to questions from me yesterday. He is quoted as having said this:

Things always come out right in the end. Gillespie is now one of the beneficiaries of his own foresighted policies.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Are there any more questions? The Hon. Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro).

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, unlike my hon. friend the Minister responsible for the Post Office, whom the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) indicated was endeavouring to label him anti-French, anti-Quebec, when I direct some remarks to the Leader of the Opposition, I will not be charged on the ground—

An Hon. Member: What about dredging?

Miss Bégin: Listen.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —that the Leader of the Opposition is anti-French or is anti-Québec. But I certainly will endeavour to point out to my colleagues in this House that his tactics over the years—and I have been a Member of Parliament in this House for some time—are abhorrent to any politically responsible Member of the House of Commons.

I think the challenge that faces us in this House today is to endeavour to separate the gossip that is so prevalent and about which we have heard so much from demonstrable evidence. I do not think many of us in this House have heard much demonstrable evidence.

Mr. Waddell: We have seen it. Look at the documents.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): If the Leader of the Opposition wishes to look at the so-called list of facts and one wishes to read his comments in the "blues", I suggest not one scintilla of demonstrable evidence to back up one of those facts will be found. Just because somebody says a fact is a fact, of course, does not make it so, least of all the Leader of the Opposition with his track record.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): What is so strange is that the previous Leader of the Opposition probably was in rather constant contact, I would assume, if there is any communication within the Conservative Party of Canada, with Premier Buchanan. The Premier publicly announced this project on a platform as far back as April, 1981. The present Leader of the Opposition protests with outraged indignation that it is his duty to ferret out, and the minute he does, to declare any wrongdoing. Is that not then a direct indictment of his own previous leader who was aware of this since April, 1981, and did not make one reference to it? Why? Perhaps he cannot ask his previous leader to resign since he has already done so, but surely it would be grounds for his repudiating publicly his continued support for the past leader.

I am sure that most Canadians sometimes feel that this place, in some of the conduct that we render ourselves to as Parliamentarians, is almost laughable when we have disputes like this subject of derision. This subject of derision that we are all—all the people of Canada—subjected to now is authored again by the present Leader of the Opposition.

We all know that there is not a major scandal or any scandal at all that attacks the credibility of any Government, when its actions were displayed in such open fashion back in April, 1981, when people of political persuasions other than the Government benefited by it, and when there is a demonstrable lack of outrage months following that from the gentlemen opposite. Who are they trying to kid? What an insult to the people of Canada that his Party would try to manufacture an attack like this. Unfortunately, one of its harmful effects is the deluge after in terms of impaired reputations.

I would like us to compare this scenario now with the so-called winter of scandals of 1964 and 1965. Let us compare the state of the Conservative Party then and now and ask ourselves: Is history repeating itself? When the Rivard affairs broke and allegations were made against the then Minister of Justice, Guy Favreau, let us look at the state of the Conservative Party at that time. The late Mr. Diefenbaker was, as usual, under severe attack from his own backers. It was during that time that Dalton Camp was the President of the Conservative Party. That leader, the late Mr. Diefenbaker, did not even have the support of his own national president. He had talked about sensitivity to Quebec.

Mr. Balcer in the Conservative Party during December, January and February—I am talking about late 1963 and early 1964—indicated absolutely no confidence in the then leader of the Conservative Party and that if the then leader did not submit himself to a leadership contest, he would have to declare himself an independent. So did another Conservative Member by the name of Rémi Paul. Of course, that is what prompted Dalton Camp at that time to say that the Conservative Party was an organization in ashes in the Province of Quebec.

So vulnerable and shocking was their display of disorganization and disloyalty within their own ranks that who was to emerge to divert public attention from that type of disgraceful disarray? The Hon. Member for Yukon charged again. He then diverted the Canadian public from this spectacle and made charges in the House against the then Minister of Justice concerning the Rivard affair.

What happened then? There was a Dorion inquiry. Did the fact that Dorion inquiry to look into any alleged wrongdoing by the then Minister of Justice at all dissuade the Member for Yukon from making charges and innuendoes in allegations while the inquiry was taking place? Not one bit. One has only to check Hansard. How do you like that for this moral character with his righteous indignation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): After his smears against the then Minister of Justice of all kinds of wrongdoings, what was the then Minister finally indicted with by Mr. Justice Dorion? It was the fact that he did not seek independent legal advice. That is hardly justification for the type of deplorable character assassination by the Hon. Member for Yukon.

If that were not enough, there was then what was said about the then Minister of Immigration, Mr. Tremblay. Just look through Hansard, if you want to feel shame. Read Hansard and see what the then Leader of the Conservative Party and the Member for Yukon said about Mr. Tremblay, or what the then Leader of the Conservative Party said in Guelph about the Minister's underworld connections. One of his assistants had been named in the Rivard affair, and his list showed him as having bought furniture from a company that then went bankrupt. What did the facts later disclose? They showed total and complete exoneration by Mr. Justice Dorion with reference to the Rivard affair. Of course, when it came out in the press that he had paid as promptly as anyone could be expected to pay for his furniture, the whole case against Mr. Tremblay disintegrated. Were there any apologies offered for a character then ruined by the authors over there of character assassination?

Mr. Ouellet: No.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It destroyed this man in public life, but it may have bought temporary peace within the Conservative Party.

Now, do we see any parallel in terms of rewriting history? Tell me, if this is not to be parallel to the disgraceful conduct of the Member for Yukon, let him offer one scintilla of evidence of wrongdoing of the nature alleged here.

Just read the guidelines, which state that in any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds, or the appearance of grounds, for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

If there is anything that the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has been charged with, it is that back in January, 1981, I believe, there was a memorandum that one columnist referred to as preferred or favoured treatment that he did not first identify. I do not even know whether the Hon. Member for Yukon, who says that he based all his facts on a detailed review of the documents, even looked at that most pertinent document. If the Hon. Member has read it, tell me what clauses or phrases would constitute preferred or favoured treatment? Again, he has made his charges without the slightest accuracy or devotion to detail. It is another outstanding example of character assassination on the part of the Member for Yukon.

I just want to warn Hon. Members that if we carry on in this way I can predict what may very well be the mood of this House. I say that because those types of smears were protracted by the Hon. Member for Yukon over a period of seven or eight months, until he hoped that his Party would get its internal affairs in order. Are we then again to suffer this type of degradation in the House for months while the Hon. Member for Yukon does his hatchet job on personalities in public life in order to buy time for the Party? I hope not. That is too much of a disfavour to us all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Let me just remind some of the Members, in case they think this is humorous, of what it was like in this House back in 1963 and 1964 as the Hon. Member for Yukon rode roughshod over every decent principle in public life. It is on record that many Members at that time were sick of the unhealthy activity of their fellow Members. They were all scurrying around Ottawa trying to get somebody on to the other. It was predicted at that time by Richard Gwyn, who wrote a book called "Shape of Scandal" in March of 1964, that the House was near collapse from the charges that were emanating from the other side without substantiation.

Mr. Epp: Quote him today.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Premier Manning of Alberta was saying that so deplorable was the conduct of Members here that a new political force was urgently required. A Gallup poll came out indicating that he was not far off the mark. That is how far this House had fallen, and all its Members.

• (1250)

When I see the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) lending his name to a motion obviously designed by the Leader of the Opposition, that honourable Party, in terms of civil liberties, has fallen a long way. It may be indicative of the destitution of its present policies.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): In those days there was no gossip which was too vile for Members of Parliament to repeat against each other. The whole environment was one of total decay. Members of Parliament were predicted openly in the press to be heading toward a collective death-wish during those months.

Most people, even many thinking Members of all Parties, viewed the conduct of their fellow colleagues with total revulsion. That is how unhealthy the environment was at that particular time. In fact, there was no period in the last 30 years comparable to the darkness of that particular period. Its only comparison was something in the United States called the "nightmare decade", under Senator Joe McCarthy. That is how obnoxious the whole situation was.

I have witnessed the moral outrage of the Hon. Member for Yukon. However, let me just repeat some of the track record of the Hon. Member when he has tried to indict the morality of any person in public life, let alone the Minister of Finance, who has exemplified morality of the highest public order in his whole time in public office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): In 1966, Geoffrey Stevens of The Globe and Mail referred to the Hon. Member for Yukon as being "irresponsible and reprehensible". He was referring to his performance in the Throne Speech debate.

The Hon. Member accused Prime Minister Lester Pearson of posturing as a defender of central Government and Parliament while collaborating with Quebec Premier Jean Lesage for purposes of political expediency. He implied that the Pearson cabinet was deliberately soft on organized crime. He even blamed the Government for the fact that Georges LeMay, wanted in Canada, was at liberty, without even bothering to check out whether Georges LeMay had escaped from a jail in Miami.

Stevens wrote:

> Unfortunately, Nielsen's tactics are all too often successful. He receives wide publicity each time he puts the screws to the Government—

He also wrote:

> The Government has not found any way to cope with The Terror from the Yukon. If it takes issue with him, it is playing into his hands, giving him an opportunity to renew the attack. If the government ignores him, it runs the risk of appearing to give the stamp of truth to his allegations.

Does not that sound a bit like McCarthyism?

In March of 1966, the Hon. Member for Yukon charged that the murder of François Payette was linked to fraudulent bankruptcies. He was criticized in the press for not providing any details whatsoever of the accusation.

In June of 1966, still on the bankruptcies binge, the Hon. Member was taken to task by several editorial writers. On June 7, 1966, the Ottawa Citizen chided him for his long list of allegations trotted out before the House without a shred of evidence.

Dealing with my own portfolio, it is a little ironic, but the Hon. Member for Yukon was caught in another form of duplicity. Again in 1966 he was caught giving a report on economic development for the Yukon to the Yukon Territorial Government's committee of the whole. As it turned out, it was a slightly reworded version of a restricted document prepared by my own Department. He publicly defended himself and said that he authored the document. He later acknowledged that it was a document from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Ouellet: That is his level of morality.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That is just part of the long list of character assasinations and duplicity of this Member of Parliament from the Yukon. That he should be so outraged at the immorality of someone in public life, let alone the Minister of Finance is literally, almost more than I can bear.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Don't slip.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Hon. Members should look at the track record of this Hon. Member and his behavioural pattern over the years. I might say that even in my own trial against The Toronto Sun, even after the charge was erroneously made by the Sun, reference was unfortunately and unceremoniously made to it by certain Members of the Opposition. The Hon. Member for Yukon will recall that in a debate in the House of Commons he again made reference to some type of smear conduct linking me to that story in The Toronto Sun. He was to find later that the Toronto Sun story was totally false, as reported in the transcript of evidence, and I won a judgment of $75,000.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That might indicate that not only is there a disturbing similarity of conduct and behaviour on the part of the Hon. Member for Yukon with reference to his previous deplorable conduct back in the sixties, into the seventies and now, but that there is also a deplorable and distasteful pattern of consistency with that of the Toronto Sun. Is there any greater insult I can pay to any Member of Parliament?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I have some questions. First, let me express our bewilderment that the Minister has stored up that speech for so long. We are glad that he finally got some of it off his chest.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Second, let me congratulate him on his success with the Toronto Sun.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): They were not very kind to you either, Joe.

Mr. Clark: The Minister made reference, in his single allusion to the question under debate here today, I believe, to the memorandum from Mr. Cohen, the Deputy Minister to the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I presume that since he referred to it, he is familiar with all its aspects. He will know that that memorandum from Mr. Cohen to Mr. Lalonde began with the words, "You will recall that Mr. Gillespie has organized", etc. In other words, there was a very clear reference in the memorandum to an earlier occasion when this involvement by a former Minister, Mr. Gillespie, had been brought to the attention of the present Minister of Finance.

Would the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development tell us, what were those earlier occasions? Will he elaborate upon the words in that memorandum "You will recall"? How long in advance did the Minister of Finance know?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead—

Mr. Nielsen: "Right Hon."

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —must have heard the Minister of Finance when he gave that very explanation in his opening ramarks. Let me just tell the Hon. Member that the Minister of Finance clearly stated to the House that he obviously must have been familiar with the situation to the degree it was brought to his attention, but he forgot, and he has explained all the dealings he had. Why, it would be totally impossible for any Minister to recall all those events in a portfolio as busy as that. However, that is not the point.

What I really said about the memorandum was "Show me". Of course, this is where the fundamental weakness rests with the Official Opposition. Nowhere in that dissertation of the Leader of the Opposition, including his utilization of the document, did he back up his so-called or alleged facts with any evidence. I challenge him, turning his challenge back to him. I assume that the previous Leader of the Conservative Party also read the document. Would he show me where there is any basis for coming to the conclusion that there has been any breach of the guidelines in the memorandum? That is the point at issue.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I will have—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have a problem. The House will realize that it is one o'clock, and accordingly I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—ATTEMPTS TO UNDERMINE GOVERNMENT CREDIBILITY

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, the House of Commons is under the attack of head hunters, and their designated target is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). In view of the fact that the Progressive Conservative Party has been falling apart at the seams since the recent convention, an orchestrated campaign is being launched by the remnants of that party in exile in an attempt to undermine the credibility of the Government. They have been slinging mud every which way, hoping that somebody, anybody, will be the victim of their tactics. Those Members have spent and will remain a long time on the Opposition benches, and they have become experts at muckraking.

In my opinion, Madam Speaker, their attitude flies in the face of basic parliamentary principles. It will be necessary to call Canadians as witnesses to put an end once and for all to those remarks. Anyone spitting into the wind may well get it in the eye, and that is something the big names of the Opposition ought to know by now.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

SUPPORT EXPRESSED BY ROYAL CANADIAN LEGION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, the Royal Canadian Legion and its membership across Canada have expressed deep concern regarding our country's ability to discharge our military obligations adequately, should the occasion arise.

Reports have indicated that our Armed Forces at this point in time are extremely undermanned and lacking in sufficient modern arms and equipment.

Although the purposes and objectives of the Royal Canadian Legion are to strive for peace, good will, and friendship among all nations, the Legion also advocates the maintenance by Canada of adequate and sufficient forces on land, sea and air for our defence, and to discharge faithfully our obligations regarding our commitment to NATO and to our partners in the Commonwealth. Therefore it is the hope of the Royal Canadian Legion and its members, and I believe of all concerned Canadians, that the government and the Department of National Defence will give serious consideration to this concern and give it the highest priority in their deliberations.

EMPLOYMENT

PROPOSAL BY UNEMPLOYED VICTIMS OF CIP CLOSING IN HAWKESBURY

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Madam Speaker, since the Hawkesbury CIP mill closed down last December 1st, 450 people have been out of work. Those people are honest and eager to work, they do not think that unemployment insurance benefits are a solution, and they have not lost their willingness and their eagerness to get back to work. Quite the contrary. A group of unemployment CIP workers recently appeared before their municipal council with the following message, and I quote:

> Mr. Mayor and members of the council:
> We have been without work for nearly two months and we wish to make a proposal which, we hope, will interest you. We, the undersigned, agree to work without pay on any project we would deem worthwhile in the interest of the people of Hawkesbury and the surrounding area.
> Fully aware of our limited skills, we humbly offer our services in the firm belief that, thanks to your ample resources, we will be able to do some good for the community.

This message was signed by 15 people whom I commend for their initiative, namely: Yvon Laliberté, Lucille Dubois, Robert Sauvé, Robert Hughes, Alvarez Laliberté, Jacques Parent, Roch Parent, Jean-Paul Marinier, Denis Leclair, Daniel Gauthier, Mario Lafrance, Guy Lauzon, Lucien Sabourin, Roger Laframboise and Abbey Massia.

I urge unemployed workers in the various communities of Canada to do the same.

CALL FOR INCREASED DOMESTIC PRICE OF WHEAT

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise to make a statement to the House on an important matter as it relates to the economy of the farming community but which, if endorsed, would have an important, positive impact on the whole country.

Canadian farmers face in the next year a critical decrease in the price of wheat in the international marketplace. Given the serious increase in the cost of production which is approximately 25 per cent, and the world wheat price falling approximately one dollar a bushel, bringing farm net income down approximately 25 per cent in this current year, it is most important at this time that the floor price of domestically consumed wheat be increased. I therefore call upon the Government of Canada, through the responsible Minister, to set the floor price of domestic red spring wheat and Durum at seven dollars a bushel for the crop year beginning August 1, 1982.

CLOSURE OF MacMILLAN-BLOEDEL LUMBER MILL AT CHEMAINUS, B.C.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, yesterday MacMillan-Bloedel Limited announced the permanent closure of its mill at Chemainus, British Columbia, with the loss of more than 600 jobs. In the past two decades MacMillan-Bloedel has taken money made in British Columbia to finance expansion into Europe, Malaysia, Brazil, and Alabama. Now it tells 600 workers that they are no longer of any use. It deprives the town of Chemainus of an economic base, but it continues to hold 309,000 prime acres of forest in Tree Farm 19 on the east coast of Vancouver Island. It continues to control a total of 2.8 million acres of B.C. forests.

MacMillan-Bloedel must be called to account for its exploitation of human labour and natural resources and its callous disregard for the human and social consequences of its policies. The people of Chemainus demand action from both the federal and provincial Governments. I call on the federal Government to require corporations making profits from Canadian resources to reinvest substantial funds in Canadian plant and technology. I further call on the Province of British Columbia to take all steps necessary, including expropriation of Tree Farm 19, to ensure that a sawmill will continue to operate at Chemainus.

SEAL HUNT

ÎLES-DE-LA-MADELEINE—EFFORTS TO DISCOVER NEW MARKETS

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Madam Speaker, I should like to bring to the attention of the Government and the House a ticklish situation which is developing in the Magdalen Islands which are part of my riding. As you know, the European Parliament and a number of EEC ministers have banned the sale of all goods containing seal pelts from their respective countries, which is resulting in very serious hardship for the people in the Magdalen Islands, especially in view of the fact that some 700 residents will be forced to give up hunting altogether this year and face a loss of income of approximately $500,000. With this money, Madam Speaker, they would have been able to prepare for the opening of the new fishing season scheduled for early May and get the additional income they need to support their families.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I urge the government to see to it that the seal hunt takes place this year as usual by, first of all, disregarding the essentially groundless arguments which ecology conscious people have put forward in Europe, and also by seeking other markets for seal pelt goods.

THE CONSTITUTION

RECOGNITION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, we in the P.C. Party believe that one of the cornerstones of our free and democratic society is the right to own and enjoy property in this great land, Canada.

During the committee discussions on Canada's Constitution, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), on behalf of our Party introduced an amendment on January 23, 1981, covering property rights. It read:

> Everyone has the right to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property and the right not to be deprived thereof except in accordance with principles of natural justice.

This amendment was accepted by the present Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) on behalf of the Government on a Friday, and then rejected by the now Minister of Energy (Mr. Chrétien) on the following Monday. Why? Because the Liberals succumbed to blackmail by the socialist hordes on my left who threatened to withdraw their support if this amendment was included in the Charter. So, true to form, the Liberals withdrew the amendment. Now the Government has a golden opportunity to rectify the situation because it does not need the support of the New Democratic Party.

• (1410)

I am urging the Government to support this addition to the Constitution and include property rights on its formal agenda of March 15 and 16, when next it gets together with the Provinces to discuss amendments to the Constitution. It is a basic right in Canada to own and enjoy property and must be included in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

SALE OF MONARCH LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I rise to protest the actions of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) in approving the sale of the Winnipeg based Monarch Life Assurance Company to the Toronto based North American Life Assurance Co. This action threatens the job prospects of over 300 employees in Manitoba and transfers the control of investments of over $447 million from western Canada to Toronto. Monarch Life Assurance Company is 100 per cent owned by Canwest Capital Corporation in western Canada, which is headed by former the Liberal Leader in Manitoba, Izzy Asper, and is financed with the help of the taxpayers of Canada through a 46 per cent ownership by CDC.

I call upon the Ministers responsible to explain why taxpayers are paying for 46 per cent of Canwest Corporation when it portrays itself as being a western investment corporation, and at the same time is selling off western assets, western jobs and western investment prospects to eastern Canada?

EDUCATION

INCREASE IN FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, toward the end of 1981, and again about this time last year, we heard a great deal about how much the federal Government was "cutting back" on its transfers to the provincial Governments for health and post-secondary education. The Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) rejected those charges at the time as totally unfounded, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that our transfers for the coming fiscal year would increase more rapidly than the rate of over-all federal expenditures.

There is proof of these statements in the Main Estimates tabled on Tuesday, which show a 20.9 per cent increase in our transfers to the Provinces for these purposes. We are providing them with $6.32 billion, an increase of $1.15 billion over current cash outlays. This is $160 million more than originally anticipated, because we are protecting the Provinces against the decline of tax revenues. So let there be no more talk about how badly the Provinces have been treated in these very difficult times.

ENERGY

FREEZING OF DOMESTIC OIL PRICE URGED

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, it is becoming increasingly evident that world oil prices will be subjected to severe buffeting and wild fluctuations in the near future. Such price gyrations, mainly in a downward direction, will give rise to accentuated world economic instability, both internationally and domestically, in many countries.

In Canada the formula for establishing domestic oil prices contained in the September, 1981, Canada-Alberta oil agreement is redundant. It is imperative that domestic oil price stability be maintained for the next several years to assist in the economic recovery of the nation. Therefore, Madam Speaker, may I suggest that an agreement be reached immediately to fix or freeze the Canadian domestic oil price at its current level of $29.75 per barrel for the lifetime of the Ottawa-Alberta agreement which expires in 1986. Such an agreement should be pursued and finalized during the meeting between the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Premier Lougheed on Monday.

HUMAN RIGHTS

QUEBEC BILL 111

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to Bill 111 which was passed in Quebec not long ago. A number of editorial writers and commentators have pointed out this was the first time that human rights and freedoms were legislated away. However, I would like to inform the House that it is actually the second time the Province of Quebec has ignored the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In fact, it has happened before, when Bill 37 amalgamated Baie-Comeau and Hauterive. At the time, the people of Baie-Comeau were prevented from holding meetings, thus limiting their right of assembly. The citizens of Baie-Comeau then asked the Minister of Justice to be particularly vigilant with respect to the rights of Quebecers.

Madam Speaker, I therefore wish to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) who is in the House today, to be particularly attentive to the rights of Quebecers, because in this country of ours, all Canadians should be equal before the law and have the same privileges and legal recognition.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—FIRST AWARENESS OF FINANCE MINISTER

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On February 17 the Prime Minister informed the House that the first time the Minister of Finance became aware of the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project was, and I quote from Hansard at page 22933:

—the first knowledge he had to this arrangement was on September 3, 1981.

Yesterday the Prime Minister came into the House and informed us that that information had been misleading and that in fact the Minister of Finance had known of the transaction as early as January, 1981. Would the Prime Minister inform the House if he is standing by that information which he gave us yesterday? Is that the date the Minister first was aware of it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I heard the Minister answer that question this morning, and my answer is in the affirmative.

DEPUTY MINISTER'S MEMORANDUM OF JANUARY, 1981

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister says that the Minister first was aware of this transaction in January, 1981. He will have looked at the memorandum from the Deputy Minister to the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, now the Minister of Finance. The memorandum addressed to the Minister, dated January 15, 1981, states:

> You will recall that Mr. Gillespie has organized the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project whose object is to study the possibilities for the liquefaction of coal in Cape Breton—

I would like to know what the Prime Minister makes of that statement which says that his Minister of Finance would have recalled that transaction before January 15, and whether or not, over night or today, he has questioned the Minister of Finance to see what date it was that he knew, before January 15.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have not questioned the Minister. I repeat, I heard him answer questions very clearly this morning that that was the earliest recollection he had of any knowledge as acquired from the documents themselves of the transaction. The House heard the Minister go on to say that he was not swearing that there had not been any previous knowledge, he just had no recollection of it. The Minister went on to make the point, which I make, that in this sense dates are irrelevant from the point of view of that Minister, since he is bound, regardless of dates, by the guidelines which say there should be no privileged access.

Miss MacDonald: I find the Prime Minister's answer incredible when in the first instance his defence of the Minister was made on the basis of dates which he provided to the House.

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE IN NOVEMBER, 1980

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I would like to ask the Prime Minister, since he cannot have it both ways, since he cannot argue that the dates matter one way one day and they do not matter another day, has he followed up the question which was put to him yesterday, by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Don Valley West, with respect to the Minister's statement before the Committee on Alternative Energy and Oil Substitution on November 25, 1980, when the Minister indicated that he was aware of projects being undertaken by Petro-Canada with regard to coal liquefaction? Has he followed up on that particular request to find out if the Minister was aware that one of those coal liquefaction projects was indeed the one in Cape Breton?

• (1420)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, I have not. I took note that we were having a debate today on this whole subject and that the Minister was subject to questioning. I would have thought that the Hon. Member could have inquired directly from the Minister.

Miss MacDonald: The Prime Minister shirks his responsibility.

Mr. Trudeau: If the question was not asked by one of the Opposition or not asked by the hon. lady from Kingston, maybe she is shirking her responsibility.

As to the question of dates, I want to clear up that matter. It is true that on the first day that this was raised, February 16, without any prior notice, and certainly without any occasion for me to refer to the guidelines which had been issued some few years before, I was listening to questions and attempting to answer them in terms of the questions asked.

I note that in the second round of questions on the first day the subject was raised, February 16, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre feeds into his question the problem of two years as being a critical date. Then there is an exchange between myself and the Hon. Member for Yukon as to what the dates are. Then the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre comes back with dates again.

I just want to say that not having had notice of the subject, being told that in some way two years was a critical period, not having the guidelines before me, I said well, if two years is critical, it appears from the facts that are being alleged that it has been more than two years, so I was answering with the defence in terms of the accusations made.

Since then the accusations have become more precise. They have referred not to the post-employment guidelines but to the role of the Minister himself. The Minister this morning, and certainly the Deputy Prime Minister and myself have all conceded that the dates are irrelevant, that a Minister is bound in his dealings with former office holders whether it is a period of six months or two years.

REASON FOR PRIME MINISTER CORRECTING STATEMENT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, if the dates are irrelevant, why did the Prime Minister consider it necessary to come into the House yesterday to correct what he said previously?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, quite obviously, because I had—

Miss MacDonald: Misled the House.

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member says "misled the House". I used the words myself yesterday. I had given a date to the House based on some information which appeared to be wrong. I can hardly see how the Hon. Member can seriously fault me for having set that information right and, at the same time, reproach me with talking of dates. Dates are the area in which there was wrong information. Therefore it was surely my duty to set it right at the first opportunity.

STATEMENT IN DEPUTY MINISTER'S MEMORANDUM

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in the memo from the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of January 15, 1981, the following statement is made:

> In anticipation of this development, provision was made during the planning stage of the National Energy Program for a maximum of $1 million to be available for federal participation in this project.

In view of the fact it is directly relevant to the debate here today at what point the Minister of Finance became knowledgeable about this project and about Mr. Gillespie's involvement, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether he has any reason to believe that, if specific reference was made in the NEP in the early planning stages of it, in the summer or fall of 1980, the Minister of Energy at the time would not have understood that Mr. Gillespie was involved and should have asked questions about conflict of interest?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I did not realize the question was addressed to me. I believe that was only mentioned at the end. Would the Hon. Member repeat the whole question, please?

Mr. Beatty: Gladly, Madam Speaker, because it is an important one. I know the Prime Minister would want to give a straight answer to the House. The memorandum from Mr. Cohen to the present Minister of Finance said explicitly that, in the early planning stages of the NEP, the Minister of Finance and the Department had written in provision for this specific project to the tune of $1 million. Does the Prime Minister think there is any reason to believe that that is the case, that the present Minister of Finance would not have known about this deal and about Mr. Gillespie's involvement in the summer or fall of 1980, and that he should have been asking questions about conflict of interest?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot say, Madam Speaker. I do not have the documents in front of me to which the Hon. Member refers, and I will not fall into the error I made on the first day, of answering questions on the basis of the questions asked. I would like to know what the million dollars refers to. Maybe it refers to this, maybe it does not. Maybe Mr. Gillespie was kept in somebody's mind, maybe he was not. I do not know.

ROLE OF ALASTAIR GILLESPIE IN DEALING WITH DEPARTMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Yesterday in this House the Prime Minister was reluctant to agree that Mr. Gillespie was indulging in what many, I think, have appropriately called lobbying. Since then, following the tabling of documents in the House, new information has emerged. I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question based on that.

In March of 1981 the Department of Energy officials expressed concern that the oil substitution agreement was not intended to cover the coal liquefaction proposal made by Mr. Gillespie. As a result, following representations made by Mr. Gillespie, an entirely new agreement was entered into in order to qualify Mr. Gillespie's proposal. Would the Prime Minister not agree that this action is as clear as possible an illustration of lobbying, and also agree that this is proof positive that special favour indeed was given to Mr. Gillespie?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the first point about lobbying, it seems to me that there is nothing in the documents referred to by the Hon. Member which indicates there was lobbying or that Mr. Gillespie came back in March, 1981. It is the officials themselves, looking at a submission to Treasury Board, redesigning it, and having the Minister sign a document again. It seems to me that this indicates that the officials were on their toes, that they were making sure that the submission was correct and in conformity with government policy, that they were alert to any possibility of conflict of interest guidelines. That is the reason why they specified in the amended contract that Mr. Gillespie would have no access to the funds which were allocated for the substitution program by the Government of Canada to the Government of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Broadbent: I would say to the Prime Minister the officials certainly were on their toes. They took the action that they thought was appropriate and necessary in order to qualify Mr. Gillespie for the proposal. It was the clearest possible case that Mr. Gillespie got from the Government of Canada what no other citizen got. That is what they did. Anyone who believes the contrary is just kidding himself.

FORMER ENERGY MINISTER'S SUBMISSIONS TO TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question flowing from the same information which was tabled in the House yesterday. On April 13, 1981, the then Minister of Energy sent a submission on this project to Treasury Board. The same submission was suddenly withdrawn when questions were raised about Mr. Gillespie's participation in it. In September, safely three months past Mr. Gillespie's two-year time limit, a new revised submission over the present Minister of Finance's signature was submitted to Treasury Board. Can the Prime Minister deny that this this was anything but a cynical attempt to avoid his own guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, now the Hon. Member is, I think, making an accusation about privileged access having taken place by officials. That is a serious accusation. If he is seriously making it, I will ask the Minister to inquire into that aspect of it. It is significant that the Hon. Member is talking of officials. They are the ones who prepared a submission for the then Minister. They are the ones who had him sign it. They are the ones who withdrew it when they thought that there might be some privilege given to Mr. Gillespie. My reading of the document is that they acted in a laudatory fashion by withdrawing it and making sure that the submission was written in a way that Mr. Gillespie could not have access to public funds.

• (1430)

QUERY RESPECTING PURPOSE OF MINISTERIAL CONDUCT GUIDELINES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister is confusing two facts. First, it is true that officials rewrote the document so that the money could be laundered in a certain way to get to Mr. Gillespie, leaving the appearance that the guidelines were enforced. It is also true that the proposal was changed in substance, technically, so that, quite apart from the financing, Mr. Gillespie's proposal would qualify.

Does the Prime Minister prepare guidelines for moral behaviour for his Ministers with the intent that they be enforced, or is it all part of a cynical exercise by the Prime Minister himself?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks a rhetorical question and I will not deal with it, but I will certainly deal with the preamble.

He says that the agreement, the submission, was rewritten so that the money would get to Mr. Gillespie. If he is making an accusation there, I suggest he is dead wrong. The agreement was rewritten, the submission was rewritten so that the money would not get to Mr. Gillespie. If he has some information—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I see the Leader of the New Democratic Party is shaking his head. If he has some shred of evidence that Mr. Gillespie has touched this money, got one single cent of it, then he should make that accusation. So far we only have head-shaking.

Mr. Broadbent: Nonsense.

Mr. Trudeau: What I see, Madam Speaker, is a group of officials acting in advice to their Minister, who want to make sure that the Oil Substitution Program is effective and that a program, judged to be beneficial for Nova Scotia by the Premier of Nova Scotia, can be brought into effect.

I think the officials, once again, were acting in a laudatory fashion when they made sure there should be no phoney accusations or conflict of interest and yet that the program proceed as it did.

DATE OF FORMER ENERGY MINISTER'S AWARENESS OF PROJECT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister who has been informed today in the House that his then Minister of Energy appeared before the Alternate Energy Committee on November 25, 1980, and that recommendations were made in the planning stages of the National Energy Program to provide funds for this project which, I would assume, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy at the time would have to know about.

Since the document on which the Prime Minister relied from the Minister of Finance yesterday said that rather than knowing for the first time later, he knew in fact for the first time in January, 1981, and since the evidence is clear that the Minister of Finance, if he was performing his duties, knew before that date, will the Prime Minister tell the House of Commons today whether he still maintains that he and the Minister of Finance are telling the truth to this House when they say that the then Minister of Energy knew nothing about this project before January, 1981?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member was following the debate closely he would have heard my answer to a previous question along those lines from the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe, I believe, and the statements of the Minister of Finance in answer to a question from a Member of the Opposition Party this morning on that same subject. The Minister said that, as far as he could recollect, there was no information conveyed to him before. He admitted—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No, no! He did not say that.

Mr. Trudeau: He admitted that he might be wrong in his recollection—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Get another letter from him.

Mr. Trudeau: —but he went on to concede that even if he had had information before, or if he had had it only months later, he would not use that as a defence. The guidelines themselves do not talk of a defence in terms of any elapse of time. The guidelines make it imperative upon a present office holder dealing with a former office holder that there be no privileged access. That is what the debate should rest on, not on the elapse of time.

Mr. Bosley: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister, sooner or later, is going to have to deal with the fact that there is every reason to believe that the certifications that have been made to the House have been part of a cover-up and have misled the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bosley: And that the question of whether the House has been misled is quite a different breach of parliamentary privilege.

An Hon. Member: Oh, come on!

PROVISION OF FUNDS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Since the Deputy Minister says that funds were provided in the planning stage for this project—I quote, "for this project"—and since the national energy plan when it came out on October 28 did provide funds for this project, why should any thinking Canadian believe that a consortium that was formed the day after, on October 29, did not, in fact, have advance knowledge of what was in the budget itself?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member makes something of the fact that the House has been misled and seems to have some accusation in the back of his mind. I conceded this morning that the information given to the House in the first instance—I conceded that yesterday—was wrong. If the Hon. Member wants to say that the House has been misled, he can. He should also add that the House was given the information to make sure that that error was corrected, which I did.

SIGNING OF CONSORTIUM AGREEMENT IN OCTOBER, 1980

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister brought up the issue of privileged access. On October 28 at 8 p.m. the Finance Minister stood in this House and announced at page 84 of the National Energy Program and at page 9 of his speech that there would be special funds to utilize Cape Breton coal. Part of that would be to turn coal into liquid fuels.

The very next day the former Minister of Energy signed the consortium agreement, with one of the partners being Petro-Canada.

Does the Prime Minister expect the House to believe that they had no advance knowledge of what would be in that budget? Is there a budget leak? Was there a budget leak, or was there not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is talking about October 20 but he has not mentioned the year. I imagine he is talking about 1980.

Mr. Hawkes: 1980.

Mr. Trudeau: If he is now complaining about a budget leak which took place in 1980 and asking me about it, I would say I have no recollection. But they would be pretty dumb ninnies over there if they had not noticed that there was a budget leak until three years after.

BUDGET ANNOUNCEMENT IN OCTOBER, 1980

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister will know that in the month of October, 1980, seven of the nine members of the Board of Directors of Petro-Canada were appointed by Mr. Gillespie and were still serving. They included Mickey Cohen and Ian Stewart.

I ask the Prime Minister again, is it reasonable to assume that on October 29, 1980 a consortium could reach an agreement to take advantage of a $1 million fund which the then Minister of Finance announced to this House the preceding evening after eight o'clock saying that the money would be available? Does that not stretch the concept of privileged access just a little bit?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it obviously has not struck any Member of the Opposition or any member in the media or anybody in the country for some years. There is probably some explanation that I do not know, but it cannot be only the dumbness of the people over there. It must be that in some way the funds were available under a pre-established program. As a matter of fact we know that this program goes back to 1977. The funds were there since 1977. I do not see what inference can be made as to a leak when the project was discussed or talked about some three—some years after the fund had been established.

EMPLOYMENT

AMOUNT OF FEDERAL AND QUEBEC BUDGETS FOR JOB CREATION

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, I would like to change the subject and talk about job creation, which might be more interesting for Canadians, especially for students. My question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns the student job creation program called Young Canada Works. First of all, could the Minister inform the House today how much has been set aside in this year's budget for student job creation, and second, how much will be spent by the Province of Quebec?

Furthermore, we have heard that March 4 was to be the cut off date. Could the Minsiter inform the House whether there will be an extension for submitting Young Canada Works projects?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to inform the House that the Minister of Finance, who has a keen interest in the well-being of Canada's youth, has announced that he has earmarked $170 million for the Summer Canada program.

[English]

I just want to add that that major new allocation of funds for students in this country will allow us to employ upwards of 70,000 young people, divided between 10,000 going to special internship programs in the federal Government, the private sector and the non-profit sector, another 13,000 to go into work in internships with the Department of National Defence and the RCMP, and 41,000 to be working in community-sponsored projects.

• (1440)

We will be sending out letters to Members of Parliament at the beginning of the week to give their constituency allocations. I can indicate that the minimum for those constituencies will be doubled over last year, all in recognition of the importance the Government places on getting back to the nation's business, which is putting people back to work.

Mr. Waddell: Students want jobs, but they also want an ethical Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—PAYMENTS MADE TO ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my next question is directed to the Prime Minister. I would ask him to follow the money in this situation. I wonder if he would note that in October, 1980, Mr. Gillespie was paid $30,000 as a retainer, and $600 per day. According to the documents which were released yesterday, that we did not have three years ago, Mr. A. W. Gillespie collected $4,237.50 for work on the project, the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project, in January, 1981.

In view of the fact that he dealt with a former Deputy Minister, in view of the fact that he clearly received personal benefits—this was just the beginning and he will get some later—and in view of the fact that the program was changed for his benefit, would the Prime Minister please indicate to me and to other ordinary Canadians what is in these guidelines? Is this not a violation of the guidelines on Mr. Gillespie's part?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has a document. Could he indicate by whom the money was paid to Mr. Gillespie?

Mr. Waddell: Well, yes, it was paid to the project and from the project which indirectly—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Who paid? Who paid?

Mr. Waddell: They are in the documents; read the documents.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I am quoting from the documents the Prime Minister tabled yesterday. What I am saying is that there were benefits paid to Mr. Gillespie—

Mr. Lalonde: By whom?

Mr. Waddell: —and there seems to be a change in the program when it was put to the Treasury Board after the officials noted that there was an obvious problem with Mr. Gillespie being a former Minister.

REQUEST THAT TREASURY BOARD MINUTES BE TABLED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Prime Minister can read the documents that he tabled; the documents are very helpful but they are not complete. Is he prepared to table before the House the real documents which will tell the real story, that is, the Treasury Board minutes of April, 1981, wherein the officials' objections were noted and the project was substantially changed so that they could launder the money to Gillespie?

ROLE OF ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I would like to pursue with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources an answer which he gave me on Tuesday with respect to the role of Alastair Gillespie. He responded to me by saying:

—Mr. Gillespie's contribution was to persuade the various partners in this project—

And he mentioned the Government of Nova Scotia. However, he did not mention Petro-Canada or Devco. I want to ask him if he is familiar with the definition of lobby in the Oxford Dictionary, which is synonymous with "seek to persuade". With the benefit of that, persuade/lobby being synonymous, I would like to ask the Minister whether, on the basis of the memorandum which has already been referred to, he would not agree that the Province of Nova Scotia, whose desire to create jobs and to develop coal was evident, was used to wash the money through or shelter this project in a clumsy subterfuge to keep the guidelines from applying to Alastair Gillespie.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, unfortunately, I did not wade through the Oxford dictionary to find synonyms and definitions of "dog food". I shall, however, answer the Hon. Member's question regarding Mr. Gillespie's role, and I shall also be dealing with this a little later this afternoon. Mr. Gillespie initially had talks with the Nova Scotia Minister of Energy whom he met in April 1980. Subsequently there were several meetings with the Premier of Nova Scotia, which means that Mr. Gillespie started working with the people who would be initially funding the project, namely, the Government of Nova Scotia, and it was not until later on that he got in touch with the Federal Government and made representations for the implementation of a program that is open to everyone, and Mr. Gillespie did not receive any special privileges. He represented a group that was interested in developing a project that had been considered in Nova Scotia for many years. When the present Minister of State (International Trade) was Premier, Mr. Buchanan, the then Leader of the Opposition, asked him about the feasibility of carrying out this project. Thus, the project that Mr. Gillespie, together with other people, decided to promote in the best interests of the people of Nova Scotia was not a new project.

[English]

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, I did not quite get the last of the Minister's answer, but I think he said in the best interests of presumably everyone.

USE OF FUNDS ALLOCATED TO NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Minister is aware of a comment by his former Cabinet colleague, Eric Kierans, who said that what he put together was a minimal investment at a minimal risk and was really at the expense of the Canadian people, whether they were Nova Scotians or whether they were Canadians under the federal Government. I wonder whether Mr. Kierans' sentiments are now, with the benefit of mature reflection, shared by the present Minister of Energy, and if he intends, even at this late stage, to do anything about it to take away some of the ironies, whereby this money that was supposed to be spent to develop jobs for Cape Bretoners has been siphoned back to Toronto for the benefit of Alastair Gillespie.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think it is a very bad reflection on the Premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. Buchanan—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: —who has all along been supporting this project. I was talking yesterday with Mr. Buchanan about it, and I asked him if he was in favour of trying to be less dependent on imported fuel and if he was in favour of this project.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: What did he say?

Mr. Chrétien: Fine, you can laugh if you want, but I talked with Mr. Buchanan yesterday. He said that it is a vital project for the future of Nova Scotia. I am glad that at least one Member from Nova Scotia is getting up, because for weeks and months they were all silent about it. He is the first one to get up, but he is well known for what he does. He called his Leader, the former Leader, dog food. I am not surprised that he tried to throw dirt on somebody else.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE PREMIER OF NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since it has been suggested that the Government used the Government of Nova Scotia as a shield to make a profit for Mr. Gillespie, does the Minister share the view of the Hon. Member for Central Nova that the Premier and Government of Nova Scotia are that stupid?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, even if I have politically disagreed with Mr. Buchanan many times since he has been Premier, I have to tell you that I consider Mr. Buchanan a gentleman and a very honourable public servant.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I think I have to add to my answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I know that the Hon. Minister's afterthoughts are terrific, but he had resumed his seat.

QUERY RESPECTING APPEARANCE OF FAVOURS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On Tuesday of this week when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was asked what was Mr. Gillespie's involvement, he said, as reported at page 23093 of Hansard:

> I think Mr. Gillespie's contribution was to persuade the various partners in this project—

After reading the documents in which there is a lot of reference to Treasury Board minutes, that changes had to be made and that new Treasury Board submissions had to be ordered, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is still convinced, now that he in his own mind has put the time frame out of this issue as being non-important, that at this stage as well, through all those documents, there was not the appearance that special favours were being granted.

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member, as have others, made much of the fact that the submission was changed. Indeed it was, but in a way that would discriminate against Mr. Gillespie. This indicates, indeed, that the officials were conscious of the guidelines, and this, indeed, indicates that with regard to former office holders the two-year period or the one-year period, depending on the particular action, is a relevant one. But that is with regard to former office holders.

I can only express, I repeat, admiration that the officials would have had the presence of mind to dig up the guidelines as they related to former office holders and to make sure, in order to protect the Minister, that there would be no suspicion of advantage given to Mr. Gillespie. That is why there was a change. It was not a change made to accommodate Mr. Gillespie; it was a change made to discriminate against him to make sure that he could not receive funds from the $1 million which is in the control of the Government of Nova Scotia.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEEK RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, what we are dealing with here is not the narrow view of legality but the question of whether the Government has the ability to continue governing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: In view of the example of Lord Carrington when he resigned from the British Cabinet, because he failed to foresee the Argentine invasion of the Falklands, and who wrote:

> In my view much of the criticism is unfounded but I have been responsible for the conduct of that policy and I think it right that I should resign.

Does the Prime Minister not feel at this stage that his Government is so weakened and its credibility in the eyes of the Canadian people is so tarnished that he must call for the resignation of his Minister of Finance?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in so far as the Canadian public are concerned, I hope that they will listen in full to the debate in this House. I particularly hope they will listen to the speech made this morning by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —so they can judge as to the moral right to govern. As to the ability to govern, Madam Speaker, I suggest that question will be put at 5.45 p.m. tonight and we will see the answer.

ACCOUNTING MECHANISM USED IN MAKING PAYMENTS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. He has stressed on more than one occasion that all of the moneys of the partners to the consortium went into the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Province of Nova Scotia, that is, the federal contribution as well as the contributions of the two federal Crown Corporations responsible to Parliament and the Contributions of the other members of the consortium. The Prime Minister is also familiar with Clause 4 of the agreement requiring invoices to be submitted from time to time by the consortium and paid out of that fund.

Can the Prime Minister explain to the House the accounting mechanics by which a cheque written on that fund in payment of the invoices of the consortium would exclude any federal contributions of the federal treasury or the two Crown Corporations involved? By what mechanics could they sort out the individual hundred dollar bills, thousand dollar bills, or whatever, that went to pay the invoices, by cheque, of the consortium?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, of course I said nothing of the kind that was attributed to me by the Hon. Member for the Yukon. I merely said that federal funds under the agreement, some, I believe, $9.3 million at the outset, were transferred to the Government of Nova Scotia to be held by it in a bank in that Province and to be disbursed only with its authority. Those are funds that come from the taxpayers of Canada, the Government of Canada. As to funds which might come from the consortium itself, of course, we have no control over that. It is obviously from those funds that Mr. Gillespie was paid, not from the slush fund of the former Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

POLICY ON ALTERNATE FORMS OF ENERGY

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have one further question for the Prime Minister. It concerns the policy defined in 1977 which was for the purpose of seeking alternate forms of energy in order to diminish reliance on imported oil for the purpose of generating electricity. That is the definition of the policy applicable in 1977. By what authority can a preamble to an agreement, the agreement of June, take that policy, narrowly defined for the purpose of generating electricity, and enlarge it for the purpose of liquefying coal to produce petroleum products for other purposes?

While answering that question, could the Prime Minister also explain, in his opinion, whether he feels that the Appropriation Act passed by Parliament to allot the funds for that purpose has also been amended by a preamble to that agreement which I described?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Hon. Member asks me if I feel that. The answer is no, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: What about the first part?

POSITION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question today for the Minister of Finance is sort of prefaced by the statement that no code of conduct and no criminal code can compel activities that are honourable or have integrity. Does the Minister of Finance recognize that the issue before us today is an issue of crisis of confidence in the Government and in this institution? Does the Minister recognize further that his resignation would not besmirch his character or the Government but it would simply clarify the crisis of confidence and allow this Parliament to stop tearing itself to pieces and proceed with the business of the people?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when someone has a pang of conscience usually it strikes you immediately when you see something happening not 23 months after the event as the Opposition is doing at the present time.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEEK RESIGNATION OF FINANCE MINISTER

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my second question is for the Prime Minister. It is a problem of awareness. It has to do with the necessity of preserving the honour and integrity of this House as well as the necessity of preserving the confidence people have in democratic institutions. The reason for obtaining that resignation is a thousand year old tradition and it would allow this House to get on with the business of the people. Would the Prime Minister, in response to the need of this House to resolve this issue—because he has certainly gone a bridge too far—be prepared in the interests of the preservation of confidence and integrity of the House to ask the Minister for his resignation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as to the technical aspects of this debate, I hope it will indeed be resolved in one way or the other, and that is the purpose, I understand, of the non-confidence motion put by the Opposition.

As to the substance of the matter, as to whether there has been a scandal or not, or whether there has been some unbecoming or wrong character by any Minister of this Government, I think that is the issue.

• (1500)

I think in the conscience and mind of an impartial observer, if he or she will look at the circumstances surrounding this—the transparency of it—the fact that the whole project was put together in the first instance by a provincial Government, the fact that the funds were controlled by the provincial Government, and the fact that the guidelines foresee the reality that former Ministers will be able to deal with Governments of which they previously had been Members and prescribe the limits to that conduct—once again, this whole thing is so open—and the fact that it comes now some 22 or 23 months later, as the Minister of Finance has said, can only make me feel that the Official Opposition is looking for a diversion and that the NDP is looking for a diversion, one from their leadership contest, and the other from their dismal showing in the Gallup polls.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, yesterday, I asked the Opposition parties to let me know whether they wanted this Friday to be an Opposition day as well, so they could have a thorough debate on the matter now before the House. They did not, however, indicate any interest in this arrangement, so that tomorrow and next week, we shall resume debate on Bill C-143 which authorizes the Government to borrow certain sums of money.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COLLENETTE—USE OF QUESTION PERIOD TO ANTICIPATE ORDER OF THE DAY

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, I gave you notice of a point of order that I wished to raise at three o'clock.

In Question Period today, the line of questioning was similar to the Orders of the Day. I understand that this deviates from the normal practice that is accepted in the House, as outlined in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 357, which quotes Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, Citation 171, which states:

> The traditional restrictions on questions are those listed in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition at Citation 171, which is as follows . . .
> A question oral or written must not:
> (v) anticipate an Order of the Day—

I was in the House in 1975. I remember your predecessor, Speaker Jerome, raising this matter in an independent judgment one afternoon. This can be found in the Journals, pages 439 to 441, on April 14, 1975. Speaker Jerome was referring to a practice which had started to develop whereby questions were addressed to a matter that was before the House on that very day. He also went on to talk about special debates.

I submit that today we do have an Order of the Day which deals specifically with the various matters relating to the former Minister, Mr. Alastair Gillespie, and therefore it is inappropriate, improper and counter to normal practice to permit such questions in Question Period. I hope that today's experience does not constitute a precedent.

Madam Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for raising this question. Before entering Question Period I was aware that a point of order to this effect might be raised.

In fact, Beauchesne does say that one should not anticipate the Orders of the Day, I suppose meaning that during Question Period questions may not be asked on the subject of the Order of the Day.

The Hon. Member has quoted a ruling by my predecessor which was made in 1975. I attempted to find other precedents, some of which I have before me. I note that Speakers before me have made several admonitions to the House about this particular question. It is hard to understand the reason behind this kind of citation from Beauchesne, except to say that enough debate is enough. That is to say, if we are debating the question on one day, that is sufficient and questions on that particular topic should not be asked during the Question Period.

I have difficulty in interpreting that and seeing the meaning behind such a citation. Since I could not interpret it in itself without referring to precedents and to what previous Speakers had said, I went through those precedents and found that there had been several admonitions by Speakers and that subsequently, after making those admonitions, the Speakers had allowed questions anticipating an Order of the Day or questions very close to anticipating an Order of the Day.

I find that there are opinions expressed by Speakers, not necessarily rulings, that go both ways. I personally have allowed questions to be asked anticipating the Orders of the Day in matters of motions of non-confidence, feeling that answers to those questions might be helpful in subsequent debate.

Since there were opinions expressed on both sides, I thought there was no point in restricting the debate today on this particular question and I decided to allow the questions to take place, following in this respect practices which have been accepted by the House.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, considering the problem we are facing now, namely, that we cannot raise points of order during oral question period, if the same situation ever arises again, we shall have to wait until after question period, that is, until the damage is done, to seek a ruling that will be useful in future.

From your decision, I understand that today's occurrence does not constitute a precedent, and that you will be assessing the facts as you go along, in light of the circumstances, depending on the subject and on what is happening. Is the House to understand from your ruling that you have decided to go against the ruling of your predecessor, Mr. Jerome, or that you reserve the right to change your mind the next time the situation comes up?

Madam Speaker: That is a matter of judgment, is it not? The Hon. Minister mentioned precedent. There are precedents to support both sides of this matter, and I could indicate them to the Hon. Minister to let him judge for himself.

There are other factors that should be considered when there is some uncertainty as to the kind of ruling that is desirable and when precedents are practically as numerous on both sides—factors that are of primary importance in conducting the proceedings of the House, namely, that Hon. Members must be allowed to express their views as completely as possible on certain matters. However, the subject before the House today is so important to Hon. Members that they discussed it during question period for a whole week, so important that today, the Government has decided to allow the Opposition to use an Opposition day to discuss a subject, and that happens to be the subject the Opposition has selected for debate.

I am not saying that in future, I would not intervene to cut short questions that concern a subject on the Order Paper, but I think that generally speaking, the practice of the House has been to accept such questions. Thus, in the interests of the House and of all concerned, I decided today to allow them. As far as the future is concerned, we shall see.

As for the point raised by the Hon. Minister, namely, that points of order may not be raised during question period and that Hon. Members must wait until question period is over and the damage is done to raise a point of order, I would remind the Hon. Minister that this rule applies to all points of order, and that he is not being penalized any more than he would be otherwise. The rule would apply just as well to someone on the other side of the House who might feel there were grounds for raising a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, far be it from us to criticize your ruling. However, the Hon. Member who made the point of order did so on two grounds—first, a very clear citation from Beauchesne which does not consider the importance of the subject but says that no question may be put on a subject that is on the Order Paper, and second, on a ruling made by your predecessor, Mr. Jerome. I am not criticizing today's ruling but, considering the manner in which you clarified your ruling, I would appreciate it if you would indicate to the House whether today's approach is to be considered a precedent or whether you reserve the right, even if points of order may not be raised during question period, to use your discretionary powers in a future situation to prohibit questions about a subject on the Order Paper.

Madam Speaker: I want to say to the Hon. Minister that I did not make today's ruling on the basis of the importance of the matter. As the Hon. Minister is aware, it is not up to the Chair to determine whether or not a matter is important. I said that Hon. Members found this matter was sufficiently important to make it the subject of their questions during a number of oral question periods and also of today's debate on an Opposition day.

The Chair does not rule on the importance of debates. I said the House found—I believe I said that, and in any case, if I did not, that is what I meant—the question was sufficiently important to bring it up during oral question periods. What I said today does indeed constitute a precedent. There are quite a few similar rulings. There are precedents that support the raising of such questions and other precedents that do not, and today's precedent is one more to add to the list of those that do favour allowing such questions.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,628 and 4,670.

[Text]

COMMERCIAL VEHICLE DRIVER PERFORMANCE IMPROVEMENT STUDY

Question No. 4,628—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Was the second phase of a study conducted on behalf of the Department of Transport regarding commercial vehicle driver performance improvement and, if so (a) how will this phase differ from Phase I (b) what were the conclusions and recommendations of Phase I and how were the recommendations implemented?

2. Was a role played by the Provinces in the development and implementation of the studies and, if so, what was that role?

3. Will Phase II be the final phase?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Phase II of the Commercial Vehicle Driver Improvement Project was initiated in November, 1982 and is expected to be completed in July, 1983.

(a) Phase I examined current practices and research. Phase II builds on this knowledge to define criteria and develop tests to measure safe and efficient driving.

(b) A number of recommendations concerning further study were made in the Phase I report. The main recoummendations concerned the improvement of commercial vehicle driver training and the use of incentives to promote safe, fuel efficient driving. Before these recommendations can be implemented systematically, it is necessary to have the measurement criteria and tests being developed in Phase II.

2. Yes. Several provincial representatives from Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario are currently on the Advisory Committee for this project.

3. A final phase will be required to identify and/or develop effective training and incentive programs and evaluate them using the tests developed in Phase II.

SURVEY OF TRANSPORTATION ENERGY RESEARCH

Question No. 4,670—Mr. Mazankowski:

Was a survey of transportation energy research, development and demonstration activity in Canada conducted on behalf of the Department of Transport and, if so (a) what was the purpose (b) what were the findings (c) to what use will the results be put (d) who performed the study?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Yes.

(a) The purpose is to compile a comprehensive public and private sector inventory of current and planned activity in transportation research, development and demonstration in Canada, thus ensuring a meaningful exchange of information and a co-ordination of research on transportation energy related subjects in all sectors.

(b) Full documentation of such activities will be available at the conclusion of the study, scheduled for March 31, 1983.

(c) The results will be the basis for the establishment of a transportation energy clearing house, which will be monitored and updated on a regular basis by the Technical Committee on Transportation and Energy of the Roads and Transportation Association of Canada.

(d) Canadian Resourcecon Ltd. of Vancouver.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Broadbent, seconded by Mr. Nielsen:

That the entire question of compliance with the Government's Conflict of Interest Guidelines of April 28, 1980, as they concern all matters relating to the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project and the conduct of the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, the present Minister of Finance, the Minister of State (Mines), Mr. Alastair Gillespie, or any other official of the Government of Canada or of its Crown Corporations with respect to the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project, be referred to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, who is responsible for the administration of the Conflict of Interest Guidelines, with the instruction that he examine all of the materials relating to the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project with the power to call for such papers, materials or information as may be required to adequately complete his enquiries and, with the instruction that a report be made to the House within two (2) weeks of this date, failing which which this House has lost confidence in this Government because of its lack of moral standards.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose for lunch at one o'clock, the ten-minute question and answer period related to the remarks of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) was in process, and there are eight minutes remaining for that period.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have one very short question to ask the Minister who spoke before lunch. I do not want to put words into his mouth, but he made much of what could be generally called a character assassination. I first want to say to the Minister that I think he placed a rather unfair—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: —interpretation on the motion. The motion deals strictly with the request that the appropriate person review the various documents involved.

As a Member of Parliament, if it came to the Minister's attention that there might be reason to believe that a former or present Minister was in violation of the guidelines governing conduct, what would he do about it other than to raise the matter in the House of Commons? What other way is there to get to the bottom of an issue?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, that is a unique thesis. I could, in a hypothetical way, put certain positions forward which would be anything but flattering to the Hon. Member who has just spoken in terms of his own character. However, they would be hypothetical. If I could answer his question, just as his question is, my assertions with respect to the Hon. Member's character would be hypothetical. They would be damaging but would have no foundation in fact.

So that is my way of answering the Hon. Member. He might care to put forward a specific proposition, speaking against the conduct of a particular Minister, and back it up with demonstrable evidence other than innuendo of a deplorable kind which has already been expressed by some of the Hon. Member's own colleagues. I am not referring to the motion but, rather, to some of the comments which, if the Hon. Member wishes to read the blues, he would find to have been totally objectionable. They quite clearly inferred, if they did not overtly state it, that there has been a deviation from morality on the part of the Minister of Finance and others, yet in the same breath they refused to offer any evidence, which is hardly something that the Hon. Member himself or I would ever condone.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro). I do not want this debate to reach a low level; I simply want to reaffirm the fact that as far as I am concerned, there are more men and women of conviction in the present Cabinet than in any other in the history of the country, and I have checked with historians. I want to ask the Minister whether or not he thinks this is a clear case involving conflict of interest guidelines, which state:

Within a period of two years after leaving office, Ministers should not:

(c) lobby for or on behalf of any person or commercial corporation before any department or agency for which they were responsible on an ongoing basis during the last two years of their participation in the Ministry.

The Minister will understand that. I would also ask him whether he will consider the letter from Alastair Gillespie to Marshall A. Cohen, dated December 6, 1980, which the Minister will understand was written within two years of Mr. Gillespie's leaving the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. In the letter, Mr. Gillespie sets out some of the details of this particular project and says, in the last sentence:

As you can see, we are now well launched; we need your assistance and support, and we need your guidance on how we should formalize our relationship with you.

Will the Minister, on a fair reading of the correspondence which has been tabled and of the guidelines, not at least admit that Mr. Gillespie was in clear breach of those conflict of interest guidelines that I recited?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member is basing this whole debate, in attacking the character of the Minister of Finance, on a paragraph which he has taken out of context in the entire letter. He said that someone has written and asked, "Would you please explain the process which I should follow in order to obtain a certain result?"

Mr. Epp: No, it was in Gillespie's writing.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): If he lays that before the House in all seriousness as the basis for the type of assault he is founding now, I think the Hon. Member is being absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. Fraser: I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) a question arising out of what has gone on here the last several days and in relation to his own remarks here today. It seems to me that there are two issues involved. I am wondering if the Minister would agree with me. One concerns what, in fact, Ministers do or do not do, or what they should not have done. The narrow issue concerns whether they acted improperly or illegally. It seems to me that the Government is asking the House to prove that something illegal was done.

However, the other issue which has been before us since the beginning of the debate concerns whether or not the guidelines were broken. In view of the fact that several days ago the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) said that it is for Ministers to judge whether the guidelines are broken, how can the Canadian public and how can we as Members of the Opposition subscribe to such a system of guidelines when the decision whether or not they have been broken is left with individual Ministers who have an interest in the very issue which is raised?

The Minister has spent many years in the House. He will know, despite his complaints this morning about character assassination, that I as an Hon. Member have never entered into anything of that sort. I am concerned to know what the Minister thinks about what we and the public should think as to who is the judge of whether the guidelines have been broken. The guidelines in this case can be broken without any crime being committed.

An Hon. Member: Parliament is the judge.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Exactly, Mr. Speaker. That is why the Hon. Member and the rest of us got elected. Parliament is the judge. The conduct of all Hon. Members will be judged in this House. This House has to be satisfied, not on the basis of gossip or because of allegations that are highly politically motivated that fall within the pattern of conduct, as I explained this morning, on the part of the Leader of the Opposition, which is quite clearly discernible over a twenty year pattern, but on the basis of something that is demonstrable evidence, something other than gossip.

I have the highest respect for the Hon. Member, a lawyer from the West Coast. I know he knows the difference between gossip and demonstrable evidence. Would he please supply some demonstrable evidence? I am not saying in a court of law, but would he show us where the Minister indeed has been guilty of any of these smear allegations that have been made up to now? They have been totally unsubstantiated, that is all.

An Hon. Member: What is the use of guidelines if you do not respect them?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to inform the Hon. Member that the ten-minute question period has expired, but I think I did hear an Hon. Member rise on a point of order. If not, debate.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, in beginning my remarks I want to echo two sentiments that were expressed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) this morning. The first is that the issue here is not a question of personal reputation, not at all. The issue here is a question of the integrity of the Parliament of Canada and the integrity of the Government of Canada. That is the issue in this debate.

The second, and I am pleased that the Minister of Finance himself chose to underline the importance of this matter, is that if it is important for all of us to be judged as men and women of integrity, then it is particularly important for some Ministers of the Crown to be so judged. That obligation rests with particular weight on the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and as the Minister of Finance said today, its rests with particular weight upon the Minister of Finance.

There can be no question about the probity or honesty or integrity of the Minister of Finance. It is precisely because that question of the integrity of the Minister of Finance is so important that we are raising and pursuing this matter here and asking that it be judged by the impartial authority established by the law to judge exactly these questions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: If I may express a personal view, I regret that Parliament has to raise the matter. In my judgment, the Minister should have acted himself, as Ministers in the parliamentary tradition have acted before, and he should have resigned. That would have been the proper course of action. I need not remind the House of the practice that has been long established in the parliamentary tradition. We were reminded the other day, those of us who still read Richard Gwyn, of a case that is precisely on point which occurred in Great Britain, and I quote Mr. Gwyn:

> In 1953, Agriculture Minister Thomas Dugdale resigned after discovering that junior officials, without telling him, had improperly failed to compensate farmers for expropriated lands.

He quotes the Minister:

> "I take full responsibility for any mistakes done by my department," Dugdale said in his resignation speech, "just as when any officials bring off successes on my behalf, I take full credit for them".

That is the tradition, the practice and the standard that is followed in Parliaments that have a degree of self-respect and by Ministers who have a degree of self-respect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Closer to home, just to establish the Canadian tradition, I remind this House of the most regrettable resignation of the Hon. D'Arcy McKeough from the cabinet of the Government of Ontario. Why did Mr. McKeough resign from a central senior ministry? He said that it was because he felt he was guilty of no more than a mistake in judgment. On that basis, a man of honour in the Canadian parliamentary system set down his office. On that basis he resigned, as he should have, and as this Minister should have resigned.

We have had read into the record earlier today a most recent case, a compelling case, the case of a Minister who was probably the most important, next to the Prime Minister, in the Government of Great Britain, the case of Lord Carrington. Lord Carrington resigned from his position as the Foreign Secretary of the United Kingdom, not because he made a mistake but simply because he failed to foresee an eventuality, and on that basis alone, because he failed to foresee what was going to happen in the Falkland Islands dispute, Lord Carrington had the honour and the courage and the respect for the traditions the respect for the public place of public people, that he stepped down.

Some Hon. Members may have read the excerpts in the recent issue of New Yorker. Let me quote for the House:

> Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher didn't want to accept Carrington's resignation, but he gave her no choice, saying in their private conversations what he later said publicly, which was this: "I was wrong in the assessment of what they (the Argentines) were doing and therefore I am responsible." He declined to share the responsibility with the Ministry of Defence or with the intelligence services, which may have miscalculated Argentina's intentions. Mrs. Thatcher told reporters that she had "spent a lot of time Saturday and Sunday trying to persuade him not to put in his resignation." But, she continued, "when he put this to me as a point of honor and said there had to be honor in politics, I was not at liberty to refuse." Nothing more was involved than the "point of honor"—no concealed disagreements over policy, only Carrington's determination to take full responsibility for what he described as "a humiliating affront to this country."

That was a Minister who acted within the traditions of this Parliament. He resigned on a point of honour because he was a man of honour, and that is the course that should have been followed by the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I should make a distinction and underline a point. There has been talk about the unusual importance of the Minister of Finance to this Government. No one who knows the state of affairs in the world would deny the unusual importance of Lord Carrington to the Thatcher government in Great Britain. The difference is not in their importance; the difference is in their standards, and it is an unhappy day for this Parliament when we have to admit that the standards of the Parliament in Westminster appear to be higher than the standards of the Parliament of Canada.

What we have here, to aid Ministers and to aid the public, is a system of guidelines established so Ministers will not be operating in the dark and the public will have some basis on which to judge the performance of those who sit on the Treasury benches. We have those guidelines. They are designed precisely to create confidence in the system. Let me quote from the guidelines outlined in the Prime Minister's letter to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), the man who was sitting silently at Port Hawkesbury before the expiry of the date. The letter dated April 28, 1980 reads:

> The precept of fulfilling one's official responsibilities in an objective and disinterested manner lies at the very heart of our system of government. Ministers, therefore, have an obligation to meet the highest standards of conduct and to arrange and conduct their personal affairs in a manner which does not conflict or appear to conflict with their public duties and responsibilities.

That is the relevant excerpt from the letter of the Prime Minister to all of his Ministers. That is the standard which should guide them. I underline the point. Not only is there the question of avoiding conflict, but there is the question of avoiding the appearance of conflict as spelled out in the guidelines that were presented to that Minister and to every Minister on the Treasury benches.

The guidelines deal with two cases. They deal with serving Ministers, people who are now serving in the Cabinet, and the guideline there that is relevant to this debate is, and I quote:

> In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

That is the guideline as it applies to serving Ministers.

As it relates to former Ministers, first of all, the guidelines concerning former Ministers are restricted to two years. There is one that is of particular relevance here, and I quote:

• (1530)

> Within a period of two years of leaving office, Ministers should not:
> lobby for or on behalf of any person or commercial corporation before any department or agency for which they were responsible on an ongoing basis during the last two years of their participation in the Ministry.

Those are the guidelines which apply to former Ministers. Those are the guidelines which apply specifically to the act of lobbying, which we believe was carried on by the former Minister, Alastair Gillespie, within the period prohibited by these guidelines, of which he was aware.

There are two cases, but there are times when those two cases come together, because, Mr. Speaker, if a serving Minister knows a former Minister is breaking the guidelines, and helps him break those guidelines, then that serving Minister is guilty also. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) is guilty. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is guilty. The Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) is guilty.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: That, Sir, we allege is the case here. We believe that the guidelines applying to serving Ministers were broken. We believe that the guidelines applying to former Ministers were broken. But that is not for us to decide. We have established a place and a procedure which allows precisely these questions to be judged. What has been proposed by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and what is supported by this Party, is precisely that. This question of allegations that guidelines have been broken should go to the officer whom Parliament appointed to judge these allegations so that a fair and impartial judgment can occur. That is what we are asking. We are asking that the Liberals stops the cover up, that they allow a fair judgment to be made by the very officer whom they have appointed precisely to judge cases of this kind. That is what we are talking about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Let us look at the facts of this case as we know them. Let us review what has happened here.

[Translation]

Someone on the other side said that it is about time. I agree. I am taking part in this debate because I want to say exactly what has been going on this morning.

Mr. Pelletier: This was done neither by the Leader of the NPD nor by the Hon. Member's party.

Mr. Clark: It was done earlier by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. If the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) wants to take part in this debate, he may. He kept silent during the constitutional debate and perhaps he will keep silent once more.

Mr. Pelletier: I did not keep silent. It is not the same in Eastern Canada.

Mr. Clark: Never!

Mr. Pelletier: This is what you are doing!

[English]

Mr. Clark: Let me speak, Sir, about the facts in this case. Let me deal with Mr. Gillespie. Let us first of all identify Mr. Gillespie. Alastair Gillespie is the former Minister responsible for the program which is in question here. He went out of Government in June, 1979. June 4, 1979, was the date when the two-year clock started to run. On December 6, 1980, that former Minister, Alastair Gillespie, wrote a letter, a "Dear Micky" letter to his former Deputy Minister. I will quote from the "Dear Micky" letter as follows:

Dear Micky:

As you know, I have been working on this project for some time. Indeed, it has taken rather longer than I expected, but I am now satisfied that we have a solid base from which to move forward. I have been encouraged by your support for the concept and your view that it would be regarded as a candidate for assistance under the "oil substitution fund", provided it had the support of the Nova Scotia government.

That is the relevant portion of the "Dear Micky" letter from the former Minister to his former Deputy Minister.

An Hon. Member: Signed "Alastair".

Mr. Clark: That is right, signed "Alastair". I remind you, Sir, of the guidelines regarding lobbying, prohibiting lobbying. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has suggested from time to time that lobbying cannot occur with just one call, that lobbying has to occur over a period of time. That is his peculiar definition. Without arguing that for a moment—I believe it is an incomplete definition—let us accept the Prime Minister's own definition of lobbying and say that it has to occur over a period of time. Let me then quote again from Alastair Gillespie's "Dear Micky" letter, "As you know ... ", dear Micky " ... I have been working on this project for some time." There is no question. It is there in the records, which the Government itself placed on the Table of the House of Commons, that lobbying had been going on for some time. The actions of Alastair Gillespie were in clear violation of the prohibition against lobbying within the two-year period.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Another reference which is interesting to me is the specific reference to the Oil Substitution Fund. In my judgment, that specific reference to the Oil Substitution Fund in this letter is open to the interpretation that Mr. Gillespie knew there was going to be a problem with the eligibility of his program for the oil substitution fund. The letter also refers, I remind the House, to earlier discussions. We do not know whether those earlier discussions dealt with the fact that the project which Alastair Gillespie was putting forward did not meet the criteria strictly, or there was doubt about it meeting strictly the criteria of the Oil Substitution Fund. His letter makes specific reference to that. It is open to the interpretation that that was designed to establish a case and to carry on the lobbying. That interpretation, unhappily, Mr. Speaker, has been confirmed because the agreement was later specifically changed to permit the Gillespie proposal. The Government's own document, among the documents which were released yesterday by the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance, says this:

Canada-Nova Scotia-Scotia Coal Synfuels Project Agreement executed 25 September 1981 and effective retroactively to 30 June 1981. Since the 1977 Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement did not clearly state that coal liquefaction was included, the Oil Substitution Fund could not automatically be used. Hence Canada entered into this tripartite Agreement in part for the purpose of agreeing further with Nova Scotia that coal liquefaction was a valid use of the Oil Substitution Fund.

That was the result of the lobbying which occurred in the "Dear Micky" letter and other conversations of which there is no record in the House of Commons, but there is clear prima facie evidence of lobbying by Mr. Gillespie in a way which violated the conflict of interest guidelines which apply to former Ministers of the Crown.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Again, what we are dealing with here is evidence of, and I quote, "improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment". Those are the words of the guidelines. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the other day in this House of Commons I raised, and later made available outside, a Cabinet document which indicates that the Government's own official—

Mr. Chrétien: It is not a Cabinet document.

Mr. Clark: Then tell us what it is.

Mr. Chrétien: It is an internal memo, not a Cabinet document. Do you know what a Cabinet is?

Mr. Clark: I know what a Cabinet is. A Cabinet is a group of men and women with honour, and we do not have one in this country now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: It was, Mr. Speaker, an internal memorandum, but it came from the officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and it said that this particular project was not viable from an energy point of view, was not viable from an economic point of view. Also, it indicated very, very strongly the heavy weight of expert evidence against proceeding with this proposal. Yet, they proceeded with it. The Alastair Gillespie factor prevailed. That at least has to be the prima facie case which we refer to the judge appointed by this Government to judge precisely these kinds of questions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: The Members opposite are trying to shout me down. That is exactly the case we had, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Watch out, you will wake up the Speaker.

Mr. Clark: I believe, Mr. Speaker, it is doubtful that this project, if it had other sponsors, would ever have been approved, but that is a matter which we are prepared to allow to be judged by the judge whom Parliament appointed, to whom the Liberals want to keep the case from going. They do not want the case to go to the judge. They want to hide the evidence and stifle debate here in the House of Commons.

Let me raise this very important question: what in the world was Alastair Gillespie doing there? What is his expertise in energy matters? Was he there because he is an expert? No, because he is not. Was he there because he had a whole passel of money? No, because he does not. He was there for one reason. He has one asset, and his asset is the "Dear Micky" connection. "Dear Micky, dear Marc, dear Allan, dear Pierre, cher Jean." That is the reason why Alastair Gillespie is involved in this case. That is prima facie evidence, Mr. Speaker, that the guidelines have been violated. That is all that the Associate Deputy Registrar General needs. That prima facie evidence should go before the judge whom this Parliament appointed so that he can see whether the guidelines by which we are supposed to live and Ministers are supposed to live have in fact been honoured. That deals with Alastair Gillespie.

Let me deal now with the Minister of Finance. First the Minister of Finance denied knowing anything about it. He denied knowledge. Then he admitted knowledge. He said he had misled the House but he did not really mean to. As I pointed our earlier, when honourable Ministers in Ontario, Britain and throughout our system, mislead the House, they resign. That is what honourable Ministers do. This Minister did not do that.

Let us review the facts that are known so far, and I emphasize so far because it may well be that not all the facts are yet in the public domain. We have a memorandum dated January 15, 1981, well within the period of prohibition for Alastair Gillespie to be involved in matters with his former Department. I will quote from that memorandum. It is from Mickey again. This is the Mickey to Marc document. It is from the Deputy Minister to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it reads:

> You will recall that Mr. Gillespie has organized the Scotia Coal Synfuels project whose object is to study the possibilities for the liquefaction of coal in Cape Breton, possibly using the now-dormant refining facilities of the Gulf Company at Point Tupper. Mr. Gillespie now has commitments of $300,000 from each of four participants: Gulf, Nova, Petro-Canada and Devco. In anticipation of this development, provision was made during the planning stage of the National Energy Program for a maximum of $1 million to be available for federal participation in this project.

The Minister was told that on January 15, 1981. The memo began with the words. "You will recall", which suggests that the matter was brought to his attention before that time. The Minister says it does not matter when he knew. Well, it matters very, very much.

That was accompanied by a memorandum asking for the Minister's comments. The Minister's comments were sought. We do not know what the Minister's comments were. They were not in the package.

I note that I am coming near the end of my time. I am citing the evidence that the Hon. Member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) wanted. The comments were not in the package presented to the House of Commons. The Minister's comments were asked for. We do not know what they were, but we do know what happened. Nothing happened. For nearly three months after the Minister was advised, nothing happened. Nothing happened until a Treasury Board meeting on April 3, 1981.

Mr. Lalonde: There was no Treasury Board meeting.

Mr. Clark: I will make reference to the Minister's own words outside the House in a media interview when he said that the matter did not then go to Treasury Board on April 3, 1981, it did not go to that meeting because "there was a discussion at the official level about the possibility of—ah—the allegations about potential conflict of interest". He said "at the official level". The officials raised the objection two and a half months, nearly three months, after the Minister knew about the conflict of interest problem. Officials had to raise the objection. He did not do it himself. He did not carry out his duty. That is very clear from the evidence that is available to us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Minister is trying two escapes. He says that Alastair Gillespie received no benefit. Let me review it quickly. The guidelines for the program were changed. That is a benefit. Second, the program continues to be studied despite the overwhelming opposition of officials who are expert in the matter. That clearly is a benefit.

Then there is the question of money. The Minister claims he did not make a direct payment of Government money to Alastair Gillespie. As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) has made clear, it is going to be very hard to persuade anybody of that because, how do you trace the payments? He cannot argue that there were no benefits to Alastair Gillespie from the consortium. The consortium is paying him $30,000, some $600 per day. He is getting benefits. Do you think he would be getting benefits if he were not involved in this consortium? Do you think he is there out of charity? Of course he is getting benefits as the result of his "Dear Mickey" "Dear Marc" relations with the Government of Canada. There can be no doubt about that.

I see, Mr. Speaker, from your posture that I am near the end of my time. There are a few things I would like to say. If I have the opportunity to continue, I will do that. If not, I will naturally respond to questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I thank the Right Hon. Member for noticing the time. I am not sure whether he wants to seek unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question before the House is that the Right Hon. Member seeks unanimous consent to continue.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not unanimous consent.

Questions, answers and comments.

The Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) has the floor.

Mr. Pinard: Earlier, the Leader of the Opposition mentioned that the purpose of his motion was to refer the matter to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General for investigation. Can he tell the House very specifically what leads him to believe that the Assistant Deputy Registrar General should be responsible for investigating such a matter?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, first, the regulations concerning conflicts of interest designate the Assistant Deputy Registrar General as the authority responsible for examining such matters. If the Government wants to introduce an amendment to give this responsibility to a judge, for instance, or to have a parliamentary investigation, we would be willing to consider it, but this is what the law provides and we want to obey the law. This is the first part of my answer.

The second part concerns the second way in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is trying to elude his responsibility to resign in this situation.

[English]

He said that this is all the fault of his officials. That is what the Minister of Finance said. That is a flagrant breach of all the traditions of parliamentary democracy. Let me just remind him of the readings on this matter by J. E. Mallory on "The Structure of Canadian Government". I am sure the House would like to hear about this. It reads:

> All official acts of government officials are done on the authority and in the name of the minister. Accordingly any act by an official of the public service, within the scope of his duties, is one for which the minister must assume responsibility.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I never said what the Hon. Member says I said. I would hope that he would at least be honest.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I regret that the Leader of the Opposition has tried to kill time to avoid answering questions. My question was simple and to the point. First, under what act can he claim that the Assistant Deputy Registrar General has the authority to carry out the type of enquiries mentioned in his motion? Second, is it not true that his former House Leader, the man who has taken his place as Party Leader in the House, wrote to the Assistant Deputy Registrar General to ask him to launch an enquiry? And third, does he have the courage to tell the House whether he has received a reply from the Assistant Deputy Registrar General stating that he has no authority to make that kind of enquiry, that he answers to the Prime Minister, and that he has definitely no jurisdiction to analyze the guidelines applicable to former Ministers? Does the Leader of the Opposition, the former Leader of the Opposition, have enough courage, to sustain his argument, to substantiate his allegation, to tell us what act he is invoking and whether his Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party did indeed ask the Assistant Deputy Registrar General to make an enquiry? Finally, can he tell us whether he got a reply? Three very simple questions!

[English]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, this Government is really beyond belief. They are now trying to say "Yes, you have caught us, yes our finger is in the cookie jar, but there isn't a judge who can look at it." That is what they are trying to say. Let me answer them. They have admitted guilt. They just say there is nowhere that guilt can be judged. Sooner or later they will have to go before the court of public opinion and have their guilt judged. When that happens they will be thrown off the Treasury benches.

Let me respond precisely to the question put to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). I quote from a document of his own Government, which reads:

> On behalf of the Prime Minister, the Assistant Deputy Registrar General is responsible for implementing the federal Government's policy on conflict of interest, in particular the conflict of interest organization, applies conflict of interest guidelines to Ministers of the Crown, designated Members of their exempt staff and full-time Governor in Council appointees.

• (1550)

That clearly establishes the authority of that official to judge the application and the adherence to the conflict of guidelines. It is the Government's own document. It did not pass an Order in Council in this case as it did regarding the uranium cartel. In the case of the uranium cartel where it did not want the facts to be know, it made it illegal to discuss them. It did not do that in this case. It is here, in its own document, that the Assistant Deputy Registrar General is responsible for policing the guidelines. We are saying, let the policemen police; let the judge judge. Stop hiding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the former Leader of the Opposition deliberately refused to answer my questions. I have asked him very clearly, first, is it true that the new Leader of his Party has written a letter to the Deputy Registrar General seeking for a formal inquiry in this matter?

Second, did he receive an answer, and if so, what is it? It is as simple as that.

If he does not have the courage to answer those two questions, that proves the phoney aspect of the motion and it proves that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) is not able to substantiate his own speech and his own attitude in the House.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the Leader of the Opposition has indeed sent a letter of that kind. I do not know if there has been a response. The Leader of the Opposition has not seen a response to a letter of that kind.

We would be concerned, naturally, if, before an official of the Parliament of Canada had an opportunity to reply to the Leader of the Opposition, regarding his competence to judge a matter of this kind, there would have been an intervention by the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We know that this is a Government which telephones judges. We hope that this is not a Government which tries in advance to silence the Assistant Deputy Registrar General.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I still want the Leader of the Opposition to answer the second part of my question. On what grounds does he insinuate that anybody on this side would have phoned or talked to the Deputy Registrar General on this subject? If so, I dare him, I challenge him, to state that outside the House of Commons and I challenge the former Leader of the Opposition to make a formal accusation that any Member on this side would have done that.

What I am asking the Leader of the Opposition is, how is it that the motion moved by the Leader of the NDP is in the same wording, or almost the same wording, as the letter that would have been sent—

An Hon. Member: How did you get the letter?

Mr. Pinard: —or the request that would have been made by the existing Leader of the Opposition—to an inquiry in that case by the Deputy Registrar General? Is that true? Is that a fact?

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, what I have said is that I hope there has not been that kind of interference.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I will check the record. But we know the record of this Government, which is, after all, a Government that phones judges.

Let me ask the President of the Privy Council a question. How does he know the language of the letter of the Leader of the Opposition to the Deputy Assistant Registrar General?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will recognize the Hon. President of the Privy Council, followed by the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), and that will complete the ten-minute period.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, the question was very straight. The answer is that I do not know about the wording of the letter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pinard: What I know about is that the answer of the Deputy Registrar General has been made public. I know that the Press Gallery had this answer before I raised my question to the Leader of the Opposition. It is strange that the Press Gallery knew about this answer in which the Deputy Registrar General says that he has absolutely no authority to make that inquiry, when the Leader of the Opposition tell that he does not know about this answer and that his Leader does not know about it.

I ask him again, how is it he is asking for an inquiry when he knows, when his Leader knows, that the Deputy Registrar General has no authority to carry out such an inquiry, and that that has been made known to the Press Gallery even before I asked my question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail).

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: What about the question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think I can rely on the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) to understand when I say that the Chair has permitted a particularly sharp and excellent exchange of debate. But the Chair is concerned that other Members ought to be able to enter the debate. I know that the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead will find it quite acceptable and that it will be quite simple for him to handle any remarks that he may wish to make in terms of the President of the Privy Council.

I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Restigouche.

Is the Hon. Leader of the Opposition rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: No, Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. The President of the Privy Council has become confused, as the record will show. He has been referring to the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead as the Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Former.

Mr. Nielsen: I know who he is, but the President of the Privy Council obviously does not. I suggest that he correct the record and allow me to inform him that late yesterday afternoon I did write such a letter. The Government having failed to do so, I took it upon myself to ask the ADRG to undertake the investigation, in no way near the terms of the motion of the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Nielsen: So let us clear that up. I made the letter public. I have not seen any reply.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: If the Press Gallery has seen a reply, I certainly have not. I am waiting anxiously for the reply.

An Hon. Member: Tell your Leader.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not tell my Leader anything about it. I am the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, we are witnessing a very interesting conflict between the former Leader and the now acting Leader of the Opposition, leading into my question to the former Leader of the Opposition. He said it was not his intention and he disliked very much besmirching or attacking anyone's reputation on the floor of this House, especially someone who would not be here to defend himself. He has always said that.

He commenced his remarks today by making the statement that it was not his intention to attack anyone's reputation. That is in direct conflict and shows a split in attitude between himself and his present Leader, the man who just identified himself as Leader.

My question has to do with the Right Hon. Member's position when he was heading the Clark administration. Did he establish financial guidelines for Ministers during his term of office as Prime Minister?

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, let me first of all indicate that we were told by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) that guidelines have no effect now, they are only for guidance. We are now told by the President of the Privy Council that there is no one who can judge these Ministers when they violate their guidelines—when they state that the level of their conscience is not strong enough to meet the standards of centuries of parliamentary practice.

Regarding the question put by the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), first of all I should tell him that in my opening remarks I was only quoting the Minister of Finance. I admit that is dangerous. I was quoting the Minister of Finance, so if he has a quarrel with my remarks let him speak to the Minister of Finance—let him write him a letter. If he cannot get him directly he can write "Dear Micky" and it will be passed on in a memorandum later on.

As regards the guidelines, yes, there were guidelines established by my administration. If he needs further information on them I would refer him to the spouse of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

• (1600)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Harquail: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will expect the Hon. Member to come within a matter of seconds, not minutes, to his point of order, which is an appeal to the rules of the House.

Mr. Harquail: I only want to make one point, Mr. Speaker. With respect to the new rules regarding the ten minutes, I think there must be an opportunity for debate and an opportunity for exchange. Also I think that we have to apply the word "fair", and, in fairness, give opportunities to Hon. Members on both sides, when they are posing questions, as has been admonished by the Speaker, to put a pointed question and to get a pointed answer. We have not seen that this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member refers to the Standing Orders of the House and, accordingly, at first blush he may have a point of order. I will not spend more than a couple of seconds to indicate that all Hon. Members should be aware that the ten-minute exchange of comments and questions are new rules of the House. If there are people who think that I am not doing the best I can in that regard, I wish they would let me know directly.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I only want to make one remark about the guidelines which the Leader of the Opposition established at that time. They were so badly screwed up that the wife of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) said, "Your guidelines, Mr. Clark, I will not abide by them", and the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) had to go back to the drawing board.

Mr. Clark: That is not true.

Mr. Chrétien: He could not even meet the request or the requirements of the wife of one Member.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Minister would not want to mislead the House. In fact, the spouse of the then Minister of Finance was concerned about the guidelines, but she adhered to them because in my Government, I am proud to say, not only did the Ministers adhere to the guidelines, so did their spouses. We were a Government that respected guidelines, in distinction from this Government.

Mr. Chrétien: Anyway, Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in this debate, I want first to situate the context of the issue before the House. It is very evident from long experience in the House that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) enjoys fishing for non-existent scandals but knows nothing about the substance of problems facing Canadians.

For years Nova Scotia has been more dependent upon imported oil than any other Province, and for years Nova Scotians have puzzled over how to use their abundant coal resources to reduce their dependence on imported oil. It is known that gasoline can be made from coal. The Germans did so during World War II, the South Africans do so today, and millions of dollars are being spent in the United States in research on coal liquefaction.

Even at the time that Premier Buchanan was Leader of the Opposition, he was asking then Premier Regan about the prospects for coal liquefaction. The idea was supported by the former NDP Leader, in Nova Scotia, Jeremy Ackerman and by Mr. Walsh who was President of the Coal Council of Canada.

In 1977, the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement on oil substitution and conservation was signed to create a fund to provide money for projects that promised to reduce the use of imported oil for electrical energy, in particular, and generally to reduce consumption of oil. Thus there is nothing sinister or scandalous about giving money to research and development which might lead to lessening dependence on imported oil in Nova Scotia and would also create, if successful, thousands of jobs in Cape Breton.

Indeed, almost every day in the House of Commons, the Tories and the NDP complain that the Government does not do enough to encourage research and development and, by its very definition, one is never sure if one is going to be successful with research projects. This does not mean that they should not be undertaken or encouraged, any more than should one stop drilling for oil because one does not find something in every hole. A lot of money has to be risked on research and development, pre-feasibility studies and feasibility studies before one can think of starting a project costing potentially billions of dollars.

I come now to the issue of Mr. Gillespie's involvement and whether he sought to use improper influence, gain preferential treatment or receive privileged access—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)): Order, please. The Hon. Member rises on a point of order.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to point out to the Hon. Minister that Canada has one of the most wretched records—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River)): Order, please, that is not a point of order.

Mr. Chrétien: —from the Government of Canada. On March 12, 1980, Mr. Gillespie met in Toronto with the Minister of Energy of Nova Scotia, Mr. Barkhouse, to talk about coal liquefaction and its prospects in Nova Scotia. No one can complain about this. One week later, on March 19, 1980, he met with officials of Petro-Canada to ask them what they thought of coal liquefaction.

On May 15, 1980, Mr. Gillespie had privileged access to Premier Buchanan and must have sought preferential treatment from the Tory Government of Nova Scotia. Mr. Buchanan invited Steve Rankin, President of Devco, to the meeting. Mr. Gillespie gave Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Rankin a copy of a paper he had written entitled, "Coal Liquefaction, A National Priority for Atlantic Canada". Mr. Buchanan expressed his support for the idea. Mr. Gillespie wrote letters to Mr. Rankin and Mr. Buchanan on May 22, 1980. Again, this is hardly a contravention of the guidelines.

On May 27, 1980, Mr. Gillespie met with Mr. Cohen, then Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to speak about coal liquefaction in Nova Scotia and to inform him of Premier Buchanan's support of the idea. In June 1980, Mr. Gillespie began to speak to corporations to put together a consortium. This was completed in October 1980.

On November 12, 1980, Mr. Gillespie met with Mr. Cohen for a second time to tell him of the formation of the consortium. On November 16, 1980, Mr. Gillespie spoke to Premier Buchanan again, and again obtained his support. On December 6, 1980, Mr. Gillespie wrote to Mr. Cohen to tell him that he wanted to apply for funding from the Canada-Nova Scotia Oil Substitution Fund. On December 11, 1980, Mr. Gillespie wrote a similar letter to Buchanan.

On January 5, 1981, Premier Buchanan wrote to Mr. Gillespie expressing his support, but conditional upon a Nova Scotia Crown corporation becoming a full partner in the consortium. If ever there has been preferential treatment, here is where it can be found, and it is preferential treatment accorded to Nova Scotia.

On January 22, 1981, Mr. Gillespie wrote back to Mr. Buchanan accepting his conditions.

Here I want to pause and tell the Leader of the Opposition that Mr. Gillespie would be agreeable to tabling all his correspondence with the Government of Nova Scotia. I made that request last night of Premier Buchanan, and he said that he does not want to become embroiled in a controversy in the House of Commons, but that he is on record as supporting the project and continues to support it as good for Nova Scotia. But as of last night he was unwilling to agree to table the correspondence. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition could ask him again.

Also I want to set out that the consortium is formed of Gulf Canada Products, Petro-Canada, Devco, Nova Corporation and the Nova Scotia Resources Corporation, all of which together own 97.5 per cent of it. Alastair Gillespie and Associates own 2.5 per cent. Would they get together simply for the benefit of Alastair Gillespie?

To return to my chronology, on April 4, 1981, Premier Buchanan, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) and Mr. Gillespie appeared together on a public platform in Port Hawkesbury on Cape Breton Island. If there was a conspiracy by the federal Cabinet to give preferential treatment to Mr. Gillespie, then the Tory Government of Nova Scotia was a motivating force and principal party to the conspiracy.

Later in April 1981, federal officials decided that action had to be taken to prevent even the appearance of favouritism toward Mr. Gillespie. Therefore, the draft agreement between Canada, Nova Scotia and the consortium was changed so that eligible costs are defined as, "the cost of the feasibility study and the working capital requirements of the consortium, other than the per diem fees and the annual retainer payable to the developer". In other words, Mr. Gillespie's fees are wholly paid by the consortium completely outside of the costs of the study. There is no direct or indirect payment to Mr. Gillespie of Government money.

What about the gain to Mr. Gillespie if he sells out or is bought out? First, if the project does not go ahead, there is no possibility of financial gain. Indeed, he would lose his whole investment, as would all the other partners to the consortium. Second, if the project goes ahead, then Mr. Gillespie may sell out or be bought out by the other members of the consortium. As the developer and promoter, he negotiated with Gulf Canada on behalf of the consortium. The contract is between Mr. Gillespie and the consortium and not the Governments of Canada or Nova Scotia. It is totally irrelevant to the debate in the House of Commons.

What about the accusations of privileged treatment by the Government of Canada? I can assure the House that Mr. Gillespie has no more privileged access to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources than do any of the other partners in the consortium. If any of the other partners had approached the Government on behalf of the consortium, they would have received exactly the same treatment.

Finally, what about the results of my Department's study of the project? There has been no Cabinet document, as the former Leader of the Opposition has suggested. A draft document was prepared by officials which concluded that a project based on the technology then being considered by the consortium would not be commercially viable.

This economic analysis was valuable. It led the consortium to search for and to investigate alternative processes which aimed for minimum capital cost and maximum yield of liquid fuel. Thus the possibility of considerable savings in capital cost became evident, with a small decrease in operating costs and with correspondingly lower sensitivity to the cost of coal.

The new process data led the consortium's financial committee to conclude that the nominal return on investment would not be 4 per cent, which was the original finding, but up to 18 per cent. Shortly thereafter, in its continued search for better processes, the consortium discovered that technical advances in two-stage processes had achieved significantly better yields than the processes evaluated in the pre-feasibility study.

The promise of lower capital costs, the promise of higher yields of fuel, and the fact that new versions of the process would use substantial quantities of natural gas, possibly derived from the Sable Island field, prompted the consortium to initiate further studies.

The new process approach may require some time to commercialize as it is unlikely to be in production before 1990. This delay, which would have been a marked drawback when the project was initiated under circumstances of rapidly increasing oil prices, is no disadvantage in the present circumstance. In fact, there is every possibility that the new technology will be ready for the next excalation in oil prices. The Province of Nova Scotia, represented through its Crown Corporation, Nova Scotia Resources Limited, concurs in this new approach.

I shall be asking the Government of Nova Scotia if it wishes to proceed. If Premier Buchanan wants more work to continue on this project, the federal Government will certainly not object to the continued use of funds from the Canada-Nova Scotia Oil Substitution Fund. On the contrary, the federal Government remains convinced that the project will be good for Nova Scotia by creating thousands of jobs and good for Canada by contributing to energy self-sufficiency. Where is the scandal in all that? It would be a great tragedy if the Opposition were to block this project. Therein lies the scandal.

Yesterday I tabled in the House all the documents I had in my possession. I did this in the spirit and by the letter of the Access to Information Act. Today I gave more facts that I obtained from Mr. Gillespie which have absolutely nothing to do with me. This is a project, and the guidelines as debated in this House of Commons are in relation to the then Minister of Energy. I asked the officials if at any time they felt they had been lobbied or pressured. They told me that at no time had that been the case. I think they are honourable.

Today, I can proudly say in the House that I believe the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at the time, acted in the best interests of the Canadian Government and the people of Nova Scotia. As a Minister, he acted responsibly in every way.

There has long been a tendency to try to lessen the role of Quebec Members in the House. I am very pleased to see that today, the Minister of Finance, who has served his province and his country with great integrity, both as adviser to a Government, although not on the same side as I was, and I was already in politics ... Later, as Minister, he always put the public good before private or partisan interests. His record speaks for itself. Mr. Speaker, it would have been a tragedy if today, the House had been obliged to accept the resignation of the Minister of Finance, because there are few people serving this country who have worked so intelligently and so hard to make Government projects a success.

What is at stake today? The future of a province which has probably suffered more than any other because of its dependance on imported oil. When 80 per cent of the energy generated in Nova Scotia came from oil imported at the kind of prices we had before the Energy Program was established, when there was no Federal compensation, all clear-thinking

Nova Scotians were anxious to ensure that consumers of electric power in their province would have access to alternative sources of supply, and that coal miners in Cape Breton, which has a great deal of trouble selling its coal because it has a high sulphur content, could go on producing the coal that would be beneficial, eventually, to Nova Scotians. Last night, the Premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. Buchanan, asked me during a telephone conversation to forget this partisan quarrel and to make sure that in future the people of Cape Breton and Nova Scotian consumers would be able to benefit from their own natural resources.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Mr. Chrétien: I think it is a scandal that these people again, for a matter of diversion, love to make accusations or try, as they often do.

[Translation]

There was a gentleman in my riding by the name of Fernand D. Lavergne, and the Right Hon. Prime Minister has met him—who gave me the following advice: Jean, in politics, when the mudslinging starts, do not worry. The mud will dry out and fall to the ground. In English, they say:

[English]

He who throws dirt, loses ground.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Those are two proverbs. I have been a Minister for a long time. I have my own rules, and I will tell you one of my rules. The instructions that I have given to my staff are that whenever a Member of Parliament calls, he or she should have priority for my attention, whatever their Party affiliation may be. People who have served in this House and have had the guts at one time in their life to run for Parliament will always receive a phone call from me and I will always accept their calls.

• (1620)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Clark: Potential delegates—

[English]

Mr. Chrétien: Come on! You need that. You have a Member of your Party who calls you dog food that nobody wants to buy. We are not that dirty with you. You are looking for delegates, and I wish you the best luck possible. We love you too. You have a great career as Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: This is what disgusts me the most. I have been the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Minister of National Revenue, the President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Justice, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, because I spent 20 years of my life in this House serving the people. When I leave, should I go on Sparks Street with a tin can and ask the people to help a poor guy who worked for the Government of Canada?

As the rules apply, it is not forbidden for former Ministers to call Governments. They can do that. The problem is to make sure that they do not get privileged access. It is exactly what happened with this file. The officials bent over backwards to make sure that not only did he not have any privilege but that there was no appearance of privilege. They told me privately, when I asked them if they felt at any time they had been lobbied, that they had not. They said they had been dealing in this case exactly the way they could have dealt with any citizen of Canada.

With respect to those who try to destroy people by character assassination, there is a proverb which I learned today in the English language, and I think it is still true, which says "He who throws dirt, loses ground".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) could draw that aphorism to the attention of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), particularly following his speech today.

I want to ask the Minister a question with respect to a statement that he made today. He indicated that the document entitled "Scotia Coal Synfuels" dated September 13, 1982, was not a Cabinet document and was, in fact, an internal memorandum. Why is it that yesterday he said that first, he was tabling all relevant documents, particularly all letters between Mr. Gillespie and the Government and, second, "all internal memoranda relating to the project for the same time period". He continued to say, as reported at page 23142 of yesterday's Hansard:

> The only relevant documents which I am not tabling are those which are in Cabinet confidence, in this case submissions to the Treasury Board.

If that is the case, why has this document never been tabled in the House by him?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, he already has it. If he wants me to give him another copy I will get a copy made and send him one. It was available. It was quoted from by the former Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nielsen: Give us a copy.

Mr. Chrétien: I do not mind. I do not have it but I will check it out. I asked what that document was and they said it was an internal memorandum. The former Leader of the Opposition, who we hope will be back in his job soon—

Mr. Nielsen: Me too.

Mr. Chrétien: —quoted it as a Cabinet document, and I say that it was not one.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, we know something about the worth of statements made by these Ministers in this case. With regard to the memorandum which he does have and did table yesterday, the one from Mickey Cohen to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), dated January 15, 1981, it states:

In anticipation of this development—

In other words, the consortium being formed.

—provision was made during the planning stage of the National Energy Program for a maximum of $1 million to be available for federal participation in this project.

Meaning that particular project.

Can the Minister indicate whether in fact it was the case that when his predecessor drew up the National Energy Program it was fully his intention to set aside $1 million for the Gillespie project? Can he tell the House at the same time if he is aware of the statement by his predecessor to the Committee on Alternative Energy and Oil Substitution, which was, "Yes, I can tell you that on this program there is not a word in this program that I did not approve personally. The officials worked but it is a Government program. The decisions and options that were retained were those retained by the federal Government, not by officials as such"? Can the Minister tell us that and confirm that in fact, at the time the NEP was being drawn up, his predecessor set aside $1 million to go to the Gillespie consortium?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think that there was a fund that was created in 1977 in which $9.3 million was available. There was some money remaining. I discussed this problem at length this morning with some of my officials. The Nova Scotia Government did not want to use that fund. It wanted to have it paid by the federal Government through another fund. It eventually came to the conclusion that it was to come from the oil substitution program. To this day it would like us to pay directly without using that fund, so they might keep it for something else.

I do not blame the Nova Scotia Government for trying to get more money from the federal Government. It is absolutely legitimate. But I understand that the discussions with the Nova Scotia Government over this program began long before the budget was brought down. It was always intended that the money was to come from the oil substitution program which was under the control of the Nova Scotia Government's treasury. I am certain, from the research that I have done, that there is not any link at all between that and the budget, because the funds were already under the control of the Nova Scotia Government.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just stated some alleged facts about the origin of the money that was used by the Province of Nova Scotia for very laudable reasons, and to the admitted benefit of the Province of Nova Scotia. That is not the issue. As a matter of fact, let me quote to the Minister from the bottom of page 2 of this memorandum with which he should be familiar. It says:

In the event that the Province of Nova Scotia insists on Novaco being admitted to the industrial group solely on the strength of the funding from the Oil Substitution Agreement and if this is not acceptable to you—

Being the Minister of Energy at the time:

—it will still be possible to arrange federal participation in the project by applying NEP funds directly.

That is directly, not through any washing arrangement to which the Province of Nova Scotia was finally prevailed upon to agree.

I want to refer briefly to the interjection made about my referring to my friend, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), as dog food. That was not the context. At least I did not refer to another substance that dogs sometimes make, which sticks to people's shoes, which his Leader did when he referred to the unemployed truckdrivers of LaPalme. Maybe he forgot that.

I want to say to the Minister that I am a little surprised that he knows so little about his portfolio that he did not realize, for example, that my colleague's Province of Prince Edward Island is much worse off for energy than Nova Scotia. While everyone concedes that this is a very laudable project, we come back to the point that the Province of Nova Scotia was used by the federal Government for its own purposes, taking advantage of the Nova Scotia Government's understandable desire to develop coal. It is interesting that the coal in my area was never developed like this, and I am glad that it was not if it required the methodology that was used in Cape Breton.

Mr. Chrétien: What was referred to was that they explored many avenues, and the avenue that the Hon. Member refers to was not acceptable. That is why we used the other avenue. That is well known. Can you blame the people for looking at all the possible avenues in searching for what can be done? They discussed all the aspects, but they have to look at what the results of those discussions are. The result of the discussion was that the first financing had been carried out through the substitution program, which is under the control of the Nova Scotia Government. We cannot have the same type of project in P.E.I. There are other kinds of agreements with P.E.I. on the problem. They do not have coal in P.E.I., so we cannot liquefy potatoes. We are talking about the liquefaction of coal.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated earlier today and on other days that the funds for this project are paid—the Minister should listen because he has misled the House—from the Nova Scotia Consolidated Revenue Fund and they are part of the 1977 agreement. I would like to quote from a memorandum to the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources from Marjory Loveys, which is found at page 250 in the pile of documents that he tabled yesterday, and which states:

• (1630)

The $1 million slated for the coal liquefaction consortium is in addition to the money in the fund—

This is the relevant section:

—it has been passed through the fund for administrative reasons:

So it is being passed through the fund for administrative purposes. This is federal money. The Minister has misled the House. Will he now have the decency to stand up and say that perhaps he has forgotten about this document which he tabled yesterday?

Mr. Chrétien: The Hon. Member said I misled the House. It is very terrible. There was another memorandum sent the day after, I understand, containing instruction that the money must come from the Oil Substitution Fund. The Hon. Member should read the whole file. Perhaps I am learning a terrible lesson in that I may have given too many documents to the Hon. Member and he has become confused.

Mr. Clark: We know the truth.

Mr. Lewis: Did you give them all?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Fraser: I wonder if I could ask—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry but I am not certain whether the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is rising for the question and answer period or to seek the floor on debate. I thought it was the latter, so I excluded him.

Mr. Deans: Debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is rising on a point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, come on!

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I have just one comment. The Hon. Member for—

Mr. Lewis: One question!

Mr. Dingwall: —for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), who just spoke—I just wanted to make one comment.

Mr. Lewis: Point of order!

Mr. Dingwall: I would like to—

Mr. Andre: That is not a point of order!

Mr. Beatty: You are the Parliamentary Secretary. Ask him in his office!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): If the Hon. Member wants to raise a point of order, he should refer to the Standing Orders of the House. If he wants to ask a question, he must wait because I have already recognized the Hon. Member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Beatty: The Parliamentary Secretary is asking his Minister a question.

Mr. Pinard: So what is wrong with that? You do not like the truth?

Miss MacDonald: That shows how much they ever get together.

Mr. Fraser: I would like to ask the Minister a question. Several days ago the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) said that those guidelines are self-enforcing, there is no monitoring agency, they are left up to the conscience of the individual to follow, and Ministers are to follow the guidelines "according to our judgment", in other words, they will judge themselves. At the same time, the Deputy Prime Minister was critical of the Opposition and said that, in its dealings with this matter, it was not acting according to the principles of natural justice.

One of the principles of natural justice is that no man shall sit in judgment of his own cause. That goes back to the seventeenth century. Can I ask the Minister, on behalf of the Government, whether it is the position of Ministers, the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that there is no judgment to be exercised by anyone else except the particular Ministers as to whether or not there could be the appearance of a breach of the guidelines? Is this to be something that—

Mr. Lalonde: The Prime Minister and Parliament.

Mr. Fraser: —is to be completely decided by the Minister who is involved in seeing or hearing something?

Mr. Lalonde: That is what we are debating today.

Mr. Fraser: Is it that Minister who is to decide, or is there no one else who can make a judgment?

Mr. Lalonde: We are passing a judgment today.

Mr. Chrétien: There are two aspects to the question. As far as the Minister is concerned, he is responsible to the Prime Minister. If the Prime Minister concludes that his Minister has acted improperly, he will ask him to resign.

In this case, the Prime Minister has accepted the word of his Minister of Finance. I am glad to be sitting next to the Minister of Finance and saying that I also think that the Minister acted in an entirely proper fashion. This is the court for Ministers. Their responsibility is in relation to the Prime Minister and the Prime Minister takes the necessary action. In this case, he has kept his confidence, rightly so, in my judgment, in the Minister of Justice.

In relation to the public, there is another court, which is this House of Commons. At 5.45 o'clock p.m., everyone will have a chance to express their views.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in an attempt to return to what I consider to be the question before the House of Commons, I want to start by saying to Government Members that no one is questioning the character of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

Mr. Gourd: Look at the questions you asked this week.

Mr. Deans: I want to suggest that perhaps Hon. Members opposite should be kind enough to listen. I have listened all day to every Hon. Member who spoke. What I am personally doing is questioning the Minister's judgment. That happens to be my job, to come to Parliament and to elicit from the Cabinet the information I believe is necessary in order to make proper judgments about matters of public importance. I am not likely to ever suggest that the character of the Minister is to be questioned. However, I see some important questions which should be answered. We should not become drawn into a discussion of the value of the project because it is not a matter which is before the House at the moment. It is entirely possible that an accurate assessment of the project would prove it to be of little value. However, another assessment may well prove it to be of considerable value. However, that is not the question.

The question before us centers on two questions. First, it centers on whether a former Minister of the Crown, or Ministers who have left office, violated the guidelines as set out by the Prime Minister. Second, it centers on whether the present Minister of Finance who, at the time this deal was entered into, was the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, has fulfilled all of the requirements of the guidelines for Ministers in office. I would like to deal with those two questions and to state my reason for asking the questions that I raised earlier in the week, and my reason for rising in the debate today.

The first question is, did Mr. Gillespie adhere to the guidelines as set out by the Prime Minister? First, let us consider what the guidelines state so that there is no doubt as to what we are discussing. The guidelines state that a former office holder must not, within the relevant time period, lobby for or on behalf of any person or commercial corporation before any Department or agency by which he was employed or with which he had a direct and substantial official relationship during the period of two years prior to the termination of his employment. That was the guideline in place when Mr. Gillespie was a Minister. Mr. Gillespie, in accepting his appointment to the Cabinet, accepted the fact that he must abide by that guideline if he left office.

I suggest that there is quite clear evidence which would show to anyone reviewing the documents tabled by either the Prime Minister or by the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) that Mr. Gillespie most certainly did carry on a continued relationship with the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on behalf not only of himself but also on behalf of other corporate citizens, and that in so doing he was clearly in violation of the guidelines.

No matter how often Hon. Members say, "Not so", the record is clear. Mr. Gillespie telephoned, there are records to show that he carried on correspondence, and even went as far as seeking the assistance of Mr. Cohen, the Deputy Minister, in getting his project "off the ground", in exactly those words. He was therefore using his former position as a Minister in a way which was in clear violation of the guidelines.

Further, at the time Mr. Gillespie was a Minister, there was a guideline stating that a former office holder must not, within the relevant time period, give counsel for commercial purposes concerning the programs or policies of the Department or agency by which he was employed or with which he had a direct or substantial official relationship during the period of one year prior to the termination of his employment.

I want to suggest that there is even on this count clear evidence on the record to show that in the year immediately after Mr. Gillespie left the Ministry he did in fact give counsel and therefore was in violation of that guideline also. If we accept—and quite clearly the Cabinet members and others who are carrying on private conversations frankly do not give a damn about it because they have already decided to whitewash the thing—however, if one accepts that there was at least sufficient evidence that one could draw that conclusion, that there was sufficient evidence that Mr. Gillespie might have been in violation of the guidelines to the extent of having other than Members of Parliament wonder about it, then you have to wonder why the Minister of Energy did not himself recognize that that may well pose a problem for him at some future date.

Let me suggest to you that it is not only the Members of the Opposition who are concerned about whether Mr. Gillespie violated the guidelines. In the letter contained in the voluminous documents that were tabled yesterday, there is a memorandum from Dr. J. H. Walsh to Dr. K. Whitham, dated April 14, 1981, and in that memorandum he says:

> 3. (ii) The role of Mr. Gillespie: Concerns were expressed regarding the retaining and daily consultant fee ($600) to be paid to Mr. Gillespie, and about the terms under which the Consortium partners have the right to buy out his interest. There is also a question of whether Mr. Gillespie's participation is in variance with conflict of interest guidelines.

Mr. Lalonde: Read on.

Mr. Deans: Do not worry, I am going to read on. It goes on:

> I replied regarding the financial arrangements between Mr. Gillespie and the Consortium members that this matter was wholly transparent and that Ministers could approve or disapprove in their wisdom.

We are now questioning the wisdom of the Minister, and I think quite rightly so.

Beyond that it goes on to say:

> With regard to conflict of interest matters, I noted that Mr. Gillespie's term as Minister ended June 4, 1979, when Mr. Hnatyshyn was appointed. In any case, I could not see that there was any direct benefit to Mr. Gillespie arising out of the negotiations with the two Governments.

Mr. Lalonde: Ha!

Mr. Deans: Wait a minute. It goes on:

> Mr. Shulte replied that he would refer this question to the Privy Council Office which I believe is the correct agency to consider this matter.

Mr. Lalonde: Right.

Mr. Deans: So, quite clearly, although the opinion was given by the writer of the document, Dr. Walsh, that he himself did not see the conflict, Mr. Shulte, who was there as the counsel, said that he thought the matter should be referred to the Privy Council Office for a decision.

An Hon. Member: Then what happened?

Mr. Andre: They amended the agreement, that is what happened.

Mr. Deans: There is no further memorandum to show that the Privy Council Office was either approached, considered the matter, or replied. However, there are the amendments to the agreement, as the Prime Minister said today—

Mr. Lalonde: They are not amendments to the agreement; they are amendments to the Treasury Board submission.

Mr. Deans: Thank you the amendments to the Treasury Board submission, in which the situation surrounding Mr. Gillespie was altered. Let me say to the Minister of Finance, I want him to think about this for a moment. It was quite clear that under the situation that had prevailed during the period leading up to April 14, 1981 that there was serious doubt as to whether Mr. Gillespie was indeed not violating the conflict of interest guidelines. In order to correct that, the Treasury Board submission was changed to rechannel the funds. I put to the Minister, if you ever needed more evidence that in fact an agreement was entered into from which Mr. Gillespie benefited, which he otherwise would not have been entitled to, what more proof do you need? Mr. Gillespie, quite clearly, was not entitled to participate as he had been participating. The decision of the Government was then to change the Treasury Board order to allow him to be able to participate. I put to the Minister that that is quite clearly preferential treatment. Who else but Mr. Gillespie could be in that situation? So right off the bat we have a prima facie case of preferential treatment accorded to Mr. Gillespie. He got what he otherwise would not have been entitled to by virtue of a change that was made to a Treasury Board order.

An Hon. Member: Or he was in conflict before.

Mr. Deans: He was in conflict, that is what I am saying. He was in conflict right up until April, 1981. Otherwise, why change it? The only reason they changed it for him was because he had been in conflict and they were not willing to run the risk of having him maintain himself in conflict, and so he was given preferential treatment. I do not think that is an unreasonable conclusion to draw. It may be arguable, I concede, but I do not think it is unreasonable to draw that conclusion.

I want then to suggest that if one draws that conclusion, it is therefore equally valid to draw the conclusion that the information contained in the memorandum that I just quoted was brought not only to the Assistant Deputy Minister's attention but would, undoubtedly, because of the conflict of interest question, be brought to the Deputy Minister's attention, and should have been brought to the Minister's attention.

I say to the Minister that under no condition should the Minister have agreed to sign any document that conveyed benefit to Mr. Gillespie that he had not been entitled to receive as a result of the guidelines that were in place. That is the basis for the argument that I make. The Minister then has to assume his responsibility. His Ministry altered the rules of the game. They did this because they knew that Alastair Gillespie was clearly in conflict. The Minister signed the approving orders to alter the rules of the game. The Minister in so doing assumed the responsibility for conveying on Alastair Gillespie a benefit that he would not otherwise have been entitled to. It is for that reason, I say to the Minister, that I seriously question his judgment. I do not question his honesty; I do not question his character; I question his judgment, damn it, and that is why I am here.

I put to the Minister that he, at the time that this matter was brought to his attention, should have taken a look at the guidelines that pertain to Ministers of the Crown. It says quite clearly in the guidelines:

> In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

I say to the Minister, in all fairness, based on the argument that I have put, an argument that I believe if it was put in a court of law, if it were a law that we were dealing with, would be sustained; an argument that I believe if put before an impartial tribunal—which have asked for, incidentally, and have been refused—would be sustained.

I put to the Minister that there is no doubt in my mind, and I raise it for no other reason, that Mr. Gillespie violated the guidelines; that the Ministry altered the terms to accommodate the violation; and that the Minister signed the document to accommodate the alteration of the terms which enabled them to circumvent the guidelines. There is quite clearly the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence. More important, there is certainly the appearance of grounds for allegations of privileged access, and there is most certainly the appearance of grounds for preferential treatment.

I say to the Minister that although he made an eloquent speech defending what in fact was not in question, he has not addressed himself to the matters that I have put before him. He has not addressed himself to the question of whether, in signing the document which altered the terms and conditions, he in fact aided and abetted Alastair Gillespie in getting benefit, potential and immediate, to which he would otherwise not have been entitled. And I say this to the Minister, although no doubt he does not care. He does not even listen, which is unfortunate. It is unfortunate there is a majority on that side of the House, it truly is, because if there was not, they would have to listen to the arguments being put, as opposed to chatting with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) who obviously does not give a damn about this, either.

• (1650)

Mr. Lalonde: I can listen to you while I am listening to someone else.

Mr. Deans: You can, can you? Is that the same way you dealt with the documents which you did not know existed, doing two or three things at a time?

Mr. Lalonde: Why will you not cool off?

Mr. Deans: Why don't I cool off? Do you know why I don't cool off? You are drawing this institution down to a level the likes of which it has not been in years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: The reason I do not cool off is that this institution is the only thing that stands between the country as it now is and total anarchy. And I say to the Minister that if he can stand up and satisfactorily refute the points which I have made, then I suspect that I would withdraw my argument. But I say to the Minister, frankly, that I do not see how he can do that. I do not see how he or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), or the current Minister of Energy or, for that matter, the Attorney General (Mr. MacGuigan), could claim for one minute that Alastair Gillespie was not lobbying. I do not see how any one of them could claim that in the process of lobbying, he was not violating the guidelines. I do not see how anyone can claim that when that violation of the guidelines was brought to the attention of the Ministry, a new submission was drafted in order to circumvent the violation which existed. And I do not see how anyone could claim that if the Minister signed that amended proposal, he is not an accomplice in Mr. Gillespie's violations. I therefore cannot see how the Minister can claim that he is entitled to remain in office.

Mr. Lalonde: I have listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's speech and to the attempt he has made to present his case, I think reasonably. Let me put the case to him another way and ask him whether or not he could see the other side of the point which he tried to make, in all fairness and in all reasonableness. He said that Mr. Gillespie had been given preferential treatment because the Treasury Board submission was modified.

Mr. Deans: Yes.

Mr. Lalonde: He says, yes. Well, that is a strange leg to put his argument on, I would submit, for the very simple reason that Mr. Gillespie has been treated in this case in a way which is indeed different from that accorded to any other average citizen who would have applied. Why has he been treated differently? Because, as he is a former office holder, the Government and the officials have taken exceptional care to prevent him from having access to public funds under the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement. Far from being an occasion of damning the Minister or of damning the officials, the fact that they have taken that extra care to get the Treasury Board submission changed to eliminate the possibility for Mr. Gillespie to have access to any of these funds, surely should demonstrate to any reasonable being, and I assume my friend is a reasonable being, and approaches this situation reasonably, that all due care was taken to ensure that the conflict of interest guidelines were respected. Surely my hon. friend has quoted from documents and memos where officials have said, "Hey, there is that conflict of interest guideline. We must ensure it is taken care of. The official of the Treasury Board said, 'I will check with the Privy Council Office' ", and in the end, the Treasury Board submission and the agreement had a special provision inserted into it to take into account that particular situation.

Does my friend, as a reasonable man, not see that there is another side of his argument and it provides a completely different conclusion from the one he reached using the same facts? It is a completely different conclusion and it shows that the officials and the Government acted responsibly.

Mr. Deans: I thank the Minister for making my case for me. I want to suggest to the Minister—

Miss Bégin: Listen to the Minister.

Mr. Deans: I listened. Believe me I listened. I have sat up every night for the last week puzzling over what has been going on.

An Hon. Member: You were talking to Mark Rose.

Mr. Deans: I was not talking to Mark Rose. Do you want to hear my answer or do you want to talk? The Minister made the case extremely well. He said that the Ministry officials recognized the potential for a conflict of interest. They recognized the potential because in fact Mr. Gillespie had been in that conflict of interest position for almost two full years. They recognized that. They then decided that if they continued with what they were proposing, he would not be able to participate.

Mr. Lalonde: No way.

Mr. Deans: No. Hang on. They decided they had to alter the Treasury Board order—

Mr. Lalonde: To take extra care.

Mr. Deans: In order to allow Mr. Gillespie to not violate the guidelines. I put to the Minister, if Mr. Gillespie had been in violation of the guidelines, and if the Treasury Board orders had to be altered so that he was not in violation—

Mr. Lalonde: Even appearing to be in violation.

Mr. Deans: —are you not giving him something which he would otherwise not be entitled to? You had to change the guidelines to entitle him to participate. You had to change the Treasury Board orders.

Mr. Lalonde: We can't change the guidelines. We respect the guidelines.

Mr. Deans: I can only suggest to the Minister that I believe what has happened is that, having been in power for such a long time, the Liberals sense, perhaps, that whatever they do is right, regardless of whether it is right or not. And I resent it because it is quite clear that Alastair Gillespie violated the guidelines, and it is clearly stated that that was a concern of the Ministry officials. So they then altered the Treasury Board orders to allow him to do what he was doing, with impunity.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). He talked about fairness in his speech and, being a fair-minded person, perhaps he would agree with me that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), as well as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), are not stupid individuals. And if they were to try to give a benefit to, or confer a benefit on Alastair Gillespie, which would hopefully not be noticed by Members of this Chamber or other Chambers, can he explain to me why then would the Deputy Prime Minister and the Premier of the Province issue press releases, go to a press conference, be televised on CBC, be spoken about in the Nova Scotia House of Assembly with Mr. Gillespie, the Deputy Prime Minister and the Premier of the Province? Can he explain that?

While he is on his feet, Mr. Speaker, would he explain why it has taken his Party 23 months to raise the issue, only raising this issue after the Conservative Party raised it? They sit for two days in waiting and then raise the question. Would he answer those two particular matters?

Mr. Deans: Thank you. I will answer the last one first. The time involved is totally irrelevant. The question surely is that if there was a violation, then whenever one finds the violation, one must raise it publicly. If it took 22 years to find the violation, it is still a violation. It does not alter the fact.

• (1700)

With regard to why the Deputy Prime Minister sat on the platform and why the Minister of Finance did what he did, the answer to that is very difficult to find. That is why this whole debate is taking place. We frankly question their judgment on the matter.

Miss Bégin: We question yours.

Mr. Deans: We think that, along with the loud-mouth Minister of Health, they probably made a mistake and were given bad advice. Perhaps, with the benefit of hindsight, they might see that what they did, in light of the circumstances that are now clear to everyone and with all of the documentation that is now available, was an error. In making that error, they put their own particular positions in jeopardy.

That is what ministerial responsibility is all about. When you become a Minister—if you do—you will find that everything that happens in that Ministry is your responsibility. As was said by a forced to retire British Member of the House of Commons who was in the Cabinet, he accepts the credit when his department does something right, and he accepts the blame when they do something wrong. In this instance they did something wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The time provided for questions has expired. Debate.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, in 45 minutes we will be asked to vote on a non-confidence motion for the supply period ending March 26, 1983. It is significant that the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), in putting his reference to a lack of moral standards and the need to refer the issue before us to the Deputy Registrar General, attached it to a vote of non-confidence, knowing full well that it would be defeated. Nobody in their right mind would expect the Government to bring on its own defeat simply to refer to the Deputy Registrar General an issue that the House thinks should be referred there.

Immediately we have the hypocrisy of the Opposition in attaching that to a vote of non-confidence. It shows that deep down they do not want it to go there. That was obvious from the questions today. It is obvious that we will win this vote of confidence. As usual, they wanted the best of all worlds, an opportunity, a day if you like, to belabour the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) once more. That is fine. I understand the role of the Opposition.

Mr. Speyer: How do you?

Mr. Mackasey: You are new here and a little stupid, and that does not help.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I would request the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) to address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to my hon. friend. I really mean that sincerely. I do not really appreciate heckling, and it is one of the things that I have not done in my 20 years here, any more than I have had to attack anybody in this House personally. There is something about the House of Commons that is rather important to me. I do not for a moment pretend that it is not important to me or to others. Truthfully, I can point out 10, 12 or 15 Members, including the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who understand the House of Commons. They understand that sooner or later in our whole parliamentary process the House of Commons becomes the arena, the centre of the whole parliamentary system. It is not the committees, not the newspapers, but the House of Commons. I see the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) wants to get closer to the action and the excitement. As a Member of the House of Commons he has mastered, as I have, the ability to use the same speech on all occasions.

It is rather ridiculous, and would be almost amusing if it were not sad, that at a time when the country is concerned about unemployment, the future, the need to get on with a new budget, and concerned with cleaning up the business of the House so that we can do things to generate the economy and bring down unemployment, Members of both Parties opposite have placed priority on the question of whether Mr. Alastair Gillespie did or did not breach the spirit of the guidelines. For that matter, they think they see an opportunity to bring down the Minister of Finance.

I have had my differences with the Minister of Finance over the last 20 years. He is rather hard-headed, even if he smiles a lot, but he is a man of integrity. He has devoted the best years of his life to the service of his country. I understand why the Minister of Finance, despite the opportunity waiting for him out of here as a top notch legal expert in this country, wants to be here to defend his reputation, because his reputation is important to him. It is, as he says, probably the most precious asset any of us have in life. I have been worried and concerned in my 20 years about the immunity which each and every one of us in this House has. Every time this debate arises, whether it is brought to a head, as this one will be, or whether it is continued in Question Period, sooner or later you find reasonable Members, who individually are friends of mine, acting collectively, dropping their own standards, acting like a pack, braying at the nipped feet of the Minister of Finance, much like a pack of wolves trying to bring down a grizzly. For what purpose? What is there about this House that changes reasonable people into that kind of people without any moral standards of their own?

As the Leader of the New Democratic Party attempted to spell out this morning, the issue before the House is one of morality. He is absolutely right. It is a more important issue than legality, because the people of Canada judge the House of Commons by the collective morals of the Members of this House. That implies that not only must the Cabinet have morals and not only should the backbenchers of the Government have a moral code, but so should Members opposite practice what they preach.

My good friend, the Minister of Energy quoted an old English proverb. I suppose I could have suggested one to him which applies to Members opposite: "People in glass houses shouldn't throw stones".

This Government has been charged with corruption day in and day out in Question Period. There have been inferences of slander and innuendoes. What are we guilty of? The defender of the morals of the House of Commons for 20 years, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), told us what those standards are today. This Government is corrupt because it pays Mr. Macdonald $800 a day.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mackasey: It is corrupt because it appointed Mr. Pitfield to the Senate and the Member for Lincoln to Air Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mackasey: That's fine. Also because the Minister of Finance, in their opinion, is not a man of integrity.

Let us look at the record of the Tories in 1979. What was the going rate in 1979 for Tory lawyers hired by the Tory Minister of Transport? Was it $100 a day? Was it $150 a day?

Some Hon. Members: Higher.

Mr. Mackasey: Was it $200 a day? I will read it.

An Hon. Member: Name them.

• (1710)

Mr. Mackasey: I do not get down to personalities.

In the famous Mississauga railway accident inquiry, set in motion on December 4, 1979 by Order in Council, legal counsel was hired by the then Minister of Transport. I want to say that I have great respect for him. I do not question his integrity. Nor do I question the fact that one of the firms he hired goes by the beautiful name of Tory, Tory, Deslauriers and Binnington of Royal Park Plaza, and then there were Keyser, Mason, Coleman, McTavish and Lewis. With good Scotsmen in there it means the job will be done. What was their fee? Was it $50 or $60 per day? No, it was $100 per hour.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: And no allowance for inflation, Mr. Speaker. It was not limited to $800 per day—it was limited to $6,000 per week.

Mr. Chrétien: Expensive lawyers!

Mr. Mackasey: There was nobody on a per diem, and we do not have to worry about overhead. None of the $800 has to go for office expenses—that is a separate issue. The cheques are not paid to the representative of Tory, Tory, Deslauriers and Binnington, they are paid directly to the company. Were any additional fees charged for expenses? Not too many. Oh, there were some fees paid to various legal assistants. An extra $6,000 in the case of Tory, Tory; telephone, travel, office supplies, courier services, searches, photocopies, are all meticulously charged over and above.

Mr. Trudeau: Above?

Mr. Mackasey: Another $14,363.92.

I am not going to embarrass the other firm which was not thought of with quite the same respect and perhaps was not of quite the same quality. It was not entitled to the same fee, and only got $95 per hour.

Mr. Chrétien: A cheap firm.

Mr. Mackasey: All I know, Mr. Speaker, is that I am sure we got value for our dollar. That was a very important investigation and a very serious accident. I am not appalled by the fact that Tory, Tory, Deslauriers and Binnington were paid a total of $167,074.97 for their services. It shows how important it is to get $95 per hour rather than $100, because they managed to earn no less than $205,257.00. I am not questioning the integrity of those lawyers, whether they were Liberals or Tories. As far as I am concerned they were qualified Canadians, and I mean that sincerely. Nor am I questioning the judgment of the then Minister of Transport. All I am asking is that the same sense of integrity and judgment be applied to this side of the House.

Mr. Trudeau: Hypocrites!

Mr. Mackasey: There were dozens and dozens of similar experiences in the short time the Tories were in charge, that I could dig out every day I wanted to then dig out, all of which were perfectly proper, all of which reflected the fact that the Government in power was doing its job, all of which, if brought into the House with the tactics used by the Opposition, could smear the reputation of each and every one of those Ministers and each and every one of those recipients.

That is one of the problems and worries that plague ex-Ministers—and I have been "ex" more often than most people in this House. I, too, have my sense of integrity, and I am not afraid to express it and utilize it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is all ears.

Mr. Mackasey: Oh, the Hon. Member is interrupting me. I have seen a slight change in his standards in recent weeks and I want to talk about that.

There is something about this House which I respect—I will go as far as to say I love it. It brought me back, and I keep coming back here.

An Hon. Member: Like a song.

Mr. Mackasey: You will never be back—oh, I am sorry, Steve. I meant your seatmate.

Unless we maintain a certain standard of morals in this House, all of us, including the Government, including Cabinet Ministers, including myself—this House will not continue to serve the country and the people of this democratic country, properly.

It behooves all of us to meet a level of morality which the Leader of the New Democratic Party attempted to spell out earlier today.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that people at home—and many are, those who are unemployed—watching this House day in and day out—frustrated with the unemployment insurance cheques running out, frustrated after looking for jobs all morning—I suppose their priorities are different from ours. They turn on the radio to listen to Question Period or the television to watch it, hoping that something will be said to give them some hope of recovery, some sense of what is going on and whether certain projects are about to take place.

What do they see, day in and day out? Grown men playing Perry Mason, attempting to discredit one of the best Ministers of Finance—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, it almost escapes reality at times, and I mean that. I do not get angry, because I have seen these changes in friend of mine. I am sure there are times when I lose my temper and say things that I regret. I was not too upset today when the Hon. Member for Yukon referred to the corruption of the Government, or to the appointment of the Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) as Chairman of Air Canada. Nor was I particularly upset when that bounced, although I could not quite understand the morality of the Conservatives, since in that same week they named Jean Wadds, the former Party President, to be High Commissioner in Great Britain. I could not understand what she had that I did not. Mind you, she was a Tory and I was a Liberal. But a Party with their moral standards would not take that into consideration.

When he mentioned that another symbol of our decadence was the appointment of Michael Pitfield to the Senate, I asked myself, who would make the best addition to the Senate—Michael Pitfield or Lowell Murray? I suspect, after the fiasco in Winnipeg, that if appointments still had to be made he would never make the Senate.

Is it not time we all took a long weekend, or just a weekend, and did a little soul searching about what has gone on in the House in the last few weeks?

Mr. Trudeau: Hypocrisy!

Mr. Mackasey: I do not pretend that this is a Sunday school. It never was and never will be, nor should it be. I believe in strong debate. I envy those people who speak easily, as I do not. I envy the great Parliamentarians, particularly those in Great Britain where debate has been a way of life and where the people have a sense of history, a sense of integrity and a love of democracy. They understand that the written word, but more particularly the spoken word, is sometimes the difference between the democratic process and dictatorship or some other less favourable system.

I have to say—and I wish the Hon. Member for Yukon were in the House—that his tactics were more suited to the sixties than to the eighties. I must confess that I listened to him this morning attempting to convert or amend his speeches that brought down people in the sixties, to today. I doubt if a single backbencher in the House will ever again fear the mighty Member for Yukon, who made an almost pathetic contribution; it was merely a pathetic contribution. It was almost like Mohammed Ali going into the ring once too often. There was nothing there. There was nothing there for one reason—there is no substance to the argument that the Minister of Finance acted immorally or without a sense of integrity or conferred special treatment on one Alastair Gillespie. No amount of articulateness on the part of the Hon. Member for Yukon could create something that was not there.

There is another change from the 1960s and 1970s, that is the fact that everything we say now goes directly into the homes of Canadians through the media of television and radio; members are judged a little differently than just by the written word. People in those days had to depend on the objectivity or lack of objectivity of the newspapers to determine what was really going on. Smear and insinuation work well when they are confined to newspapers, but they work less well when heard on television and radio. I suspect Canadians do not particularly appreciate Members of Parliament resorting to tactics to which they would not dare resort 50 feet away from the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The time provided for the Hon. Member's speech has expired. Is there unanimous consent to allow him to continue?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent. Questions. Comments.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) who has performed so well. I was bothered by the question of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) about this matter having been carried on openly and not in a sneaky fashion. This seems to indicate that there was no bad intent on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) or the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) who participated in a press conference and television statements. It seems to me that if they had thought there was anything wrong being done for Mr. Gillespie, they would have had him as a silent partner in that consortium with the other businessmen, not up front and centre.

I want to ask a question arising out of that. Is the Hon. Member aware that the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) is from the next seat, the adjacent seat to where this press conference was held, and that he has had a reputation over the years of digging into everything and trying to bring up any muck that he could? Having in mind the fact that he was the only Minister in the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) who did not submit his conflict guidelines report to the Deputy Registrar General within the time limit provided—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Regan: —is it what one calls a question of a conscience of convenient time that means that back in 1981, when this matter was announced in his newspapers and in the constituency next door to him, he did not see anything wrong? He would dig around and charge that he was being bugged by the Government, when it turned out that he was bugged by the people he hired himself to search his office. Does it not strike the Hon. Member as strange that that Hon. Member did not at that time bring up the question of any impropriety? He had a calendar—he has a calendar, I know, in his office—and he knew who Mr. Gillespie was, but he did not suggest that there was anything wrong. Why do they bring it up now and not two years ago?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, it may surprise the Minister if I were to tell him that I was not particularly amused by his question because I am not particularly interested in whether the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) submitted his expense account or whatever he was supposed to submit. It does not bother me. When I talk about a moral conscience in the House, it applies to this side of the House as well as to the opposite. It seems to me that if we have a good case at any time, in debate we can make it without being concerned about the private weaknesses of Members opposite. I know it is difficult to keep the border line, but those who master the technique understand the House better.

I am interested in some of the facts involved and I understand that is good, old-fashioned politics. But to be consistent—and I am—I do not think it has anything to do with the issue. The issue we are debating here—and I direct this to the gentleman who asked the question—is the integrity of the Minister of Finance and whether there is sufficient evidence from the Question Period and today to suggest, insist or prove that there has been any lack of integrity on his part or any wrongdoing.

Surely the Members opposite without conviction with their love for democracy, their concern for justice, would have long ago made a case here, gone the traditional route and challenged the Minister to go before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and put his seat in jeopardy. I am sure they have that integrity, the Members opposite who have participate in Question Period every day. Thus, I can only come to the conclusion that they have not been satisfied that there is sufficient evidence or any evidence of any lack of integrity on the part of the Minister of Finance. Hence, maybe that is why they are falling back on the issue moral standards.

I might say in my reply that some of the questions in recent pays but by Members of the New Democratic Party reflect a healthy hypocrisy on their part. The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) was not too kind and charitable in his reference to Ministers, I think yesterday. I think he almost chocked to death in his demand that Members resign. Resign for what? There are some Members of the New Democratic Party, not all, who have obviously demonstrated that sanctimoniousness which has always been one of their characteristics as far back as the thirties, that they are purer than anyone else. I suppose that is the hallmark of a true socialist. If the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River feels so strongly about the Minister of Finance resigning, then he has the time today or on Monday or Tuesday to go the honourable way and make a charge in the House of Commons. Then we would deal with it in the appropriate forum, which is the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I doubt if he has that courage.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is not designed to amuse the previous speaker, but in view of his long experience here, both as a backbencher and as a Minister, I want to ask him if he is as concerned as I am. I heard him speak about his concern about this kind of debate and, even more important, the kinds of questions which have been asked for more than a week now, going into the homes of the nation. Is he concerned, not only about the reputation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), but whether he believes that indeed the reputation of any Minister or any Member of the House is safe if other Members can get up and, through innuendo and smear, attack an individual in the House, without making a charge, without repeating those charges outside the House, without putting their reputations on the line too?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I do not think too many Members resort to those tactics, although some on this side have not been above adopting such tactics at one time or another. I have thought of this many times because I was here in the sixties. I was here, but I was not too concerned about the Ministers who were under attack. I was concerned about those who were not part of the House of Commons, concerned about those who did not have access to the House of Commons to defend themselves. Mr. Gillespie does not have that access, but at least he is a political figure and he can defend himself outside this place. I remember a young law student named Guy Lord whose name was dragged into debate by the Hon. Member for Yukon. He had to leave here because of the stigma, and went to Paris to complete his studies. When the reports were tabled a month later by the judiciary he was totally exonerated of any wrongdoing. I am not suggesting that he was brought into the debate on purpose. I mean that. Because of our immunity there are innocent victims, and just like others who suffered from those difficult times, there is very little we can say by way of consolation. That should not be interpreted as meaning any limitations should be placed on the role of the Opposition. The Opposition has an obligation to probe, demand and ask the type of questions, which I thought the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) did today in very appropriate parliamentary style. That is the job of the Opposition. It is not the job of the Opposition to drag in red herrings and to smear people, or to use the type of tactics that could not be used by learned counsel in court. Perhaps it is time to review the whole concept of immunity. Maybe we could set up some rules.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

[Translation]

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order to get the floor. I would like to draw your attention to Standing Order 35(1), which I quote:

> Unless otherwise provided in these Standing Orders, when the Speaker is in the Chair, no Member, except the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, or a Minister moving a government order and the Member speaking in reply immediately after such Minister, or a Member making a motion of "no-confidence" in the government and a Minister replying thereto, shall speak for more than twenty minutes at a time in any debate. Following the speech of each Member a period not exceeding ten minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses thereto.

However, Mr. Speaker, keeping in mind the first few words of that Standing Order 35(1) which read "Unless otherwise provided in these Standing Orders", I will now quote Standing Order 62(13) to which I draw your attention because it is contradictory:

> During proceedings on any item of business under the provisions of this Standing Order——and this Standing Order refers to an Opposition day such as we now have—> —no Member may speak more than once or longer than twenty minutes. Following the speech of each Member, a period not exceeding ten minutes shall be made available, if required, to allow Members to ask questions and to comment briefly on matters relevant to the speech and to allow responses thereto.

Here is the point I want to raise, Mr. Speaker: the Hon. Member who is about to speak belongs to the Progressive Conservative Party. Of all speakers today, he is the only one who will not have had the opportunity of facing questions and answers once he has completed his remarks, because of the hour at which he will begin his speech. Under the circumstances, if he has the least bit of courage, I am asking him to agree in advance to shorten his remarks by five minutes so as to enable Hon. Members to ask him a few questions at the end of his intervention.

[English]

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am not rising on a point of order. If the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) wants to ask me questions, I am quite prepared not to see the clock for five minutes so Hon. Members on the other side can ask questions. I am asking only for ten minutes in which to give my speech. Certainly we will give unanimous consent not to see the clock for five minutes so that Hon. Members can ask their questions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Let me make it abundantly clear, and I am being repetitive in terms of what has been said here earlier today by Members from this side of the House, both by Conservatives and by New Democrats, but the question at issue is not the character of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). There is no accusation nor has there been a hint of an accusation that the Minister of Finance has pocketed some money or has gained illicitly from this deal. There is no suggestion that the Minister of Finance acted in a way contrary to the Criminal Code or contrary to any other law. What is at issue here is whether he fulfilled his responsibilities as a Minister of the Crown in terms of the guidelines for minimum acceptable behaviour as laid down by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). That is what is at issue, Mr. Speaker. That, and nothing more.

It was interesting to listen to speakers from the Government benches today. They stood up and said that they deplored muckraking; there has not been any; and then they resorted to 20 minutes of muckraking.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: I shall not go up that blind alley. I will not be attracted by that red herring or that straw man which the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) whipped the blazes out of. I will not be attracted by the straw man which the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) destroyed or the straw man that was taken on by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). We are not impressed with these battles with straw men. What we are concerned about, as has been so eloquently stated today by many, many speakers, is the integrity of Parliament—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: —and the authority of the Minister of Finance, of all positions, probably next to the Prime Minister, second most important to the nation. The unscuruplous integrity which must be associated with that office clearly has been thrown into question. Overwhelmingly it has been thrown into question by any measure of objective analysis that, the Minister is in violation of the guidelines, as is the previous Minister, not just in the eyes of the Conservative Party, or in the eyes of the New Democratic Party, but in the eyes of every single correspondent working for newspapers, radio and television. They have all reached the same conclusion. If we are wrong, so is everybody else who, in a public way, has commented on this matter. Everybody is wrong except for the Liberal Party. Everybody is wrong except for the Treasury benches and the sheep who follow. That is an absurd situation.

What we have is a clear violation of the conflict of interest guidelines by the Minister of Finance, the former Minister of Energy, Mr. Gillespie and, quite probably, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) and perhaps the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané), who in his previous incarnation was responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I will not go over all the evidence that clearly establishes beyond and shadow of a doubt that Mr. Gillespie was in violation of the guidelines. The guidelines have been read several times. I want to read them once more because an important part was left out. These guidelines read:

> (c) lobby for or on behalf of any person or commercial corporation before any department or agency for which they were responsible on an ongoing basis during the last two years of their participation in the Ministry.

On the next page we find:

> For these purposes "department or agency" includes Crown corporations—

We have Crown corporations called Petro-Canada and Devco. The former Minister of Energy, Mr. Gillespie, was the Minister responsible for Petro-Canada. He was clearly responsible for Petro-Canada. That means that he should not have had any dealings with Petro-Canada for two years.

● (1740)

The current Minister of Energy said that Gillespie's job was to persuade the other participants. He admits that Gillespie lobbied Petro-Canada. He persuaded them, if you prefer that language. Clearly, it is overwhelmingly established that Mr. Gillespie is in violation of the guidelines.

I will not go over the memos that have been mentioned in terms of the information tabled yesterday which clearly established Mr. Gillespie's culpability. There is the "Dear Micky" letter. They say they treat everyone commonly. I have about 20,000 constituents who would love to be on the terms of "Dear Micky, I have a deal. Do you think you could get your boys to help me with this deal?" Is that not seen as preferential treatment to any reasonable person on the outside? Of course it is preferential treatment.

The Prime Minister says that lobbying is persistent contact. He says that there is no evidence of that. Then they table three inches of documents showing the kind of contact that was occurring. Does it take a file of documents three feet thick before persistence is established?

Of course, there is the quote from the Deputy Prime Minister in Port Hawkesbury that Gillespie is not the beneficiary of his own foresighted policies. From the words of the Deputy Prime Minister, Gillespie is in violation of the guidelines. Automatically, any responsible Minister is also in violation of the guidelines as the current Minister of Finance, the then Minister of Energy, clearly is.

If our system of responsible Government has any meaning whatsoever, Ministers must be responsible for what their deputies do. They are fixed with the knowledge of their deputies. Ignorance cannot possibly be an acceptable defence if we are to try to retain some semblance of parliamentary democracy.

Cohen knew what was going on. Therefore, the Minister of Finance knew too. Cohen and Stewart were directors of Petro-Canada, which was a part of the deal. Therefore, the Minister of Finance was responsible. Finally, the Minister of Finance, as the Minister responsible for Petro-Canada while this deal was going on, has a third level of responsibility in terms of honouring the guidelines, which he most certainly did not honour.

What has happened here during the last week was a bungled attempt to cover up. That is exactly what we have seen. We saw the Prime Minister, on the first day this was raised, saying that it was outside the two-year period, as if that applied to sitting Ministers, which it does not. The next day he stated to the House that he had talked to the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of Finance assured him that he knew nothing about it until September, 1981. The next day he comes in and says that actually it had nothing to do with the federal Government; it was handled by Nova Scotia. We have brought to the attention of the House already once today a memorandum to the Minister from one Maureen Lovies which indicates that in fact the million dollars from the federal Government was laundered through Nova Scotia. Then we have the indication that the Minister had forgotten somehow, but he knew on January 15. After looking at the documents, we find, from the document of January 15, in the words "You will recall", a clear indication that the Minister of Finance knew well before January 15. He has been misleading the House. There has been an attempt to cover up, but as more information became public, that cover-up, has been prevented.

In my final minute let me just say to those Members opposite who have said that the reputation of the House is at stake, that they are right. That is what is at stake here. What is at stake is parliamentary democracy. If that kind of behaviour, a clear violation of these guidelines, is to be permitted and sanctioned by the vote of a bunch of sheep on the backbenches of the Liberal Party, then this House has lost its right to sit. We have no purpose in being here if that kind of behaviour is to be sanctioned.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 62(9), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply.

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Broadbent) which was negatived on the following division:

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY OF FINKELMAN REPORT

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, on February 26, 1976, seven years ago, I tabled in this House the report of the Special Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service. This report was the result of 18 months of hard work by a Committee which listened to witnesses from unions, management groups, and other interested parties from all parts of the country.

The Special Committee had a mandate to study a report produced by Mr. Jacob Finkelman who was the chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board since the legislation was enacted in 1967, and had presided over employer-employee relations in the Canadian Public Service. Thus, our Special Committee report became popularly known as the Finkelman Report. It contained 72 recommendations, of which recommendation No. 4 reads:

> Certain revisions to the Public Service Employment Act be made immediately to allow the Public Service Commission to operate efficiently.

I underline the words "be made immediately".

Recommendation 5 reads:

> That Parliament consider the proposed changes to the Public Service Employment Act as soon as possible, bearing in mind their relationship to changes recommended in the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

No action whatsoever has been taken on any of the 72 recommendations in the report.

Since then there have been two further studies, one on personnel management and one on accountability in the Public Service, the D'Avignon Report and the Report of the Lambert Commission.

In my over ten years as a Member of Parliament—

Madam Speaker: Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PEACE OFFICERS' MEMORIAL PROPOSAL

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, it has been said that the wheels of bureaucracy turn exceedingly slowly. Nowhere is this saying more true than in the case of the peace officers' memorial proposal, which I initiated on December 14, 1981, as a result of a motion put forward by the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police.

Madam Speaker, this is not a complex proposition. It does not involve the expenditure of great quantities of the taxpayers' dollars. Surely it is a project worthy of consideration. Yet, all I have been getting on this is consideration, no action.

I have written many times on behalf of the Association of Chiefs of Police in the hope of receiving a simple answer such as, "Yes, we are placing the memorial book in such and such a room in the Centre Block today." Instead, I have been getting pat answers, indeed the same pat answers two and three times in succession, such as, "The matter is being brought to the attention of the Executive Committee." I would rather not receive letters indicating that the matter will be dealt with shortly, but a letter indicating action will be taken now.

Last week, I again sent a memo to check on the status of this issue which could have been resolved months ago. It was brought to my attention that a room in the West Block would be considered. Surely this is inadequate. The West Block is not a public area. Therefore, how many people will be viewing the guest book in that obscure location?

I believe that our nation's police forces are among the best in the world. The gallant men who died protecting our society's best interests from those who would—

NEWSPAPER EDITORIAL ON PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Mississauga North): Madam Speaker, it is time for us to get back to work on positive economic issues. Over the past week we have detoured into false issues by demanding the retirement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). That does nothing to help Canadians find greater prosperity or to restore the country's economy.

In today's editorial The Toronto Star has written an important reminder to us about scandalmongering. I want to quote parts of it for our consideration:

Lalonde's forced resignation would be more than a personal tragedy. It would deprive Canada of a dynamic, progressive-minded politician at a time when they're in short supply. The budget would be delayed many months—a budget crucial to spurring the economy toward recovery and creating jobs—

The Opposition has made much, throughout this debate, and non-confidence vote, of the need for honor and accountability in government . . . Marc Lalonde abused no fundamental public trust, in breaching the guidelines; there is no compelling public interest in seeing him driven from office.

The Government has brought vital economic issues into the House over the past month for debate. We must continue the debate on the Income Tax Act if we are to get refunds out to low-income people who need the money. We must debate the—

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ENFORCEMENT OF CHILD MAINTENANCE ORDERS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, nearly half of all single parent families headed by women in Canada live below the poverty line. An important reason for this economic distress is the lack of enforcement of court ordered maintenance payments for child support. In Ontario, for example, 75 per cent of orders for child maintenance are not paid after two years.

The problem, Madam Speaker, is that the responsibility for collecting the money owed them is left to the mothers who have been abandoned by the fathers of the children. If the father does not pay, the mother must incur legal costs and return to court to request enforcement. If the father has left town, the mother must try to trace him. In many cases the cost of enforcement exceeds the value of the order.

As a solution I urge the federal Government to introduce two amendments to the Divorce Act. The first amendment would empower the courts to enforce and collect child maintenance payments through the issuance of continuing orders. If a parent defaulted, a Crown attorney would be appointed to trace the parent and compel him to pay.

The second amendment would permit the court to use Revenue Canada records and social insurance numbers to trace spouses who default on their child maintenance payments. Appropriate safeguards could be applied to ensure that only the courts had access to this information. This system already operates successfully in the United States.

The economic situation of single parent families today is so desperate that immediate Government action is imperative.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES REACTION TO LOWER CANADIAN AIR FARES AND OTHER MEASURES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, yesterday the administration of the United States cancelled seat sale air fares offered by Air Canada, affecting 56,000 Canadians who planned to travel to the United States. Obviously that administration wants to collapse the convention on air travel arrangements with our country, because Canada had given approval to United States airlines to charge similar fares on travel to Canada. What the U.S. administration really wants to do is put Canadian airlines out of business hauling Canadians to Pacific Rim destinations, by allowing U.S. carriers to funnel our travel around the Pacific via California. Canada must take immediate action to counter this blatant interference in our affairs.

This is nothing more than another action in a series where the United States has broken faith with Canada: obstruction to the showing of National Film Board films, one of which is nominated for an Oscar award; stonewalling solutions to acid rain problems; refusal to ratify a fisheries treaty; failure to meet commitments on the Northern Alaska pipeline; attempts to emasculate FIRA; blackmail to force us to test U.S weapons systems.

Canada must be firm and forthright in its dealings with the United States and stop its supine acquiesence. We must stop acting like mendicants on our hands and knees in our dealings with that country.

CORRECTION OF MISLEADING STATEMENTS

Mr. David Smith (Don Valley East): Madam Speaker, yesterday both the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) and the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), as reported at page 23188 of Hansard, called for the resignation of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on the grounds he had misled the House. Clearly these Hon. Members are demonstrating rank hypocrisy by failing to distinguish between an honest mistake and a deliberate misleading of the House. No one on the opposite side suggested that the Minister of Finance intentionally misled the House. They know his reputation, and they know that such a suggestion would be unthinkable.

On October 15, 1979, the Minister of State for International Trade in the Tory Government, the current Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), rose to correct an answer given by him in the House three days earlier. He said:

Since making that statement, my officials have made me aware of three contracts which have been cancelled, one in the amount of $4.2 million and two other smaller ones, one contract for approximately $350,000 and the other one for approximately $60,000.

Obviously that Tory Minister clearly misled the House in regard to deals worth over $4 million. If we are to apply the logic of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead, he should have demanded the resignation of his Minister for misleading the House. Did he? Of course not. Why? Because it was unintentional. Did Liberal Members demand the Minister's resignation? No, because we know the basic and fundamental difference between an honest mistake and a deception.

I would suggest that Members opposite should stop this hypocrisy, stop applying double standards, and show some consistent application of parliamentary principles for a change.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

UNITED STATES RULING ON CANADIAN DOCUMENTARY FILMS

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, Canadians are proud of the independence and international reputation of the National Film Board. Its documentaries have won acclaim in film festivals around the world.

The decision of the United States Justice Department to declare three recent documentaries offensive and brand them as political propaganda, is unacceptable. Those in the United States who show National Film Board films "Acid From Heaven", "Acid Rain: Requiem or Recovery", and "If You Love This Planet", must record their names with the Justice Department as if they were taking part in a subversive activity. Incidentally, the latter film which warns of dangers in the nuclear arms build-up, has been nominated for an Oscar.

It is not enough for officials to make statements across the border about this unfortunate incident. It is imperative that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) make a clear statement to the American administration that the treatment of these films is unacceptable to the people of Canada and the Government of Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

AMAX CORPORATION'S DUMPING OF TOXIC WASTE—MEETING WITH MINISTERS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, Canadians from coast to coast have been following the Gillespie-Lalonde affair with jaundiced eyes. There are too many deals, patronage, and appearances of pay-offs by Liberals to their friends.

For three years now, on behalf of all Canadians I have attempted to reveal the truth about the Amax affair. These same frontbench Liberals have fought every move, have sought to hide material from the public view. Documents delivered in an unmarked envelope this week add one more chapter to the book on why Liberals are unfit to govern.

The documents reveal that two Liberal Cabinet Ministers met together with Amax officials and their respective lawyers before the Government's own environmental review was complete. The results of the meeting are now clear—Amax's own lawyers participated in the drafting of marine disposal regulations, which were ultimately signed by the then Minister of Fisheries, the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc), in the middle of the 1979 federal election. The two Cabinet Ministers, Len Marchand and Iona Campagnola, can take credit for circumventing the Government's own review process, for saving Amax $23 million, for allowing dumping 8,000 times above the Government's own regulations, and for lowering the level of trust the average Canadian can put in the political and legislative process in Canada.

Can we forget, Madam Speaker, that four out of five on the Government's scientific review panel opposed the marine dumping proposal by Amax? The Gillespie affair is shameful. The Amax affair is political corruption at its apex.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—SIGNING OF CONSORTIUM AGREEMENT IN OCTOBER, 1980

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance with regard to what would seem to be a leak of the October 28, 1980, budget. The Minister will know that the documents tabled in this House this week indicate a million dollars was set aside in the planning stages of that budget for the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project. The Minister will also know that, one day after the budget was announced in this House, the consortium agreement was signed, that agreement obviously having been negotiated and prepared weeks in advance, indicating that the consortium was aware and intended to apply for that $1 million. How was it that the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project consortium knew that money was in the budget?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the infusion of the funds for research on coal liquefaction was and is part of the National Energy Program which was tabled in the House at the same time as the budget on October 28. Second, I am advised the agreement between the consortium was actually signed at a later date than the one mentioned by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Broadbent: A day after the budget.

Mr. Lalonde: Third, I am advised that the project is one that was considered for a long time by the Nova Scotia Government under the 1977 agreement. It had nothing to do with the budget.

Fourth, I am advised that no one in the consortium knew that there was to be anything in the budget about this or even in the National Energy Program specifically. That is the advice I got. Certainly Mr. Gillespie was not aware that there would be any specific sums allocated for that purpose in the National Energy Program itself.

CONSORTIUM'S CONTEMPLATION OF FUNDING

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, the memorandum of understanding was signed October 29, 1980. How could that memorandum include the following words:

It is contemplated that the Consortium will be able to obtain, directly or indirectly, a contribution or grant of 40 per cent of the Study Project Costs, up to $1 million, from the Oil Substitution Fund—

And then comes the key word "or", and it continues:

—or from other sources of Government funding—

Unless there was reason to believe, as the then Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has indicated that a million dollars was, in fact, being provided, as the Deputy Minister said in the memorandum to the Minister dated January 15, how can the Minister explain that a document could be prepared for signature on October 29 that clearly refers to moneys included in the October 28 budget?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, again I have to repeat what I have said before. Obviously there must have been discussions between officials and members of the consortium in which this issue was considered. Again, the sum of $1 million must have been anticipated under the Oil Substitution Program that existed since 1977. The mention of it in the National Energy Program that was tabled at the time of the budget should be no surprise.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER QUESTION OFFICIALS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. He seems not to be aware that there is at least the potential or the appearance of a budget leak here. Will the Minister undertake to question directly the officials involved and, if appropriate, bring them before a parliamentary committee? It is imperative the House know—that the House know, Madam Speaker—the consortium did not have what it appears to have had, and that is advance knowledge of what was in the budget.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will be very happy to check if my hon. friend makes this request. It is obvious by virtue of what I have already said that there could not have been a budget leak. It is part of the National Energy Program that was tabled at the time of the budget. Discussions obviously must have taken place and there must have been consideration of this particular project. But there was no budget leak here.

ROLE OF PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister knows that this project is mentioned on page 84 of the National Energy Program which is a part of the 1980 budget. He will also make himself aware that on November 25, 1980, before the Alternate Energy Committee, the Minister of Finance, then in the position of Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, said that there is not one word in this program that he did not approve personally. Therefore, the references on page 84 were personally approved.

We knew at the time of the budget that Mr. Joel Bell, senior Vice-President of Petro-Canada, had a hand in drafting the budget. That was confirmed here in the House. The very next day Petro-Canada signed a deal, a memorandum of understanding with Gillespie and Associates, that mentions the $1 million.

If in fact there was not prior knowledge by Mr. Bell, other officials of Petro-Canada and Mr. Gillespie, if we are asked to believe this Minister whose word I find difficult to believe in view of his conflicting letters, what possible explanation can he provide to the House for that overwhelming circumstantial evidence that Mr. Gillespie, Mr. Bell, other officials of Petro-Canada, Devco, and perhaps others in the private sector, were aware of what was in that budget before it was presented to the House at 8 p.m. on October 28?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend should read the budget of October 28. He will find that there is no reference to this project in the budget of October 28. At the time of the budget the Minister of Finance tabled the National Energy Program which contained a large number of measures and a large number of allocations of funds, including funds for Atlantic energy development. That was all made public at the time.

I am advised, if I remember well, that Mr. Bell worked on the Canadianization aspect of the National Energy Program. I have never heard that Mr. Bell worked on any part of the budget.

Mr. Andre: The Minister is asking us and other Canadians to believe something that is totally unbelievable. He should examine his own conscience in view of his responsibility as a Minister of the Crown and Minister responsible for bringing down a new budget.

STATEMENT IN UNDATED MEMORANDUM

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister has just repeated in the House something that the Prime Minister has said in the House with regard to where this money is coming from. It is, namely, from the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Government of Nova Scotia, the $9.2 million that was set aside as a result of the 1977 agreement which Mr. Gillespie drafted.

Would the Minister tell the House how this explanation coincides with an undated memo to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources from Marjory Loveys which says that the $9 million has already been completely committed and, "the $1 million slated for coal liquefaction consortium is in addition to the money in the fund; it is being passed through the fund for administrative reasons." What is the explanation for the conflict between this memorandum to the Minister and what in fact the Prime Minister and the Minister have been telling the House this morning?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member were really as honest as he pretends he would like to be, he would read the full file. He will find a memorandum written by Mr. Walsh, I believe, that is in the file that has been tabled, and which states quite clearly and categorically that, having seen the Treasury Board submission, the Minister gave a directive that the $1 million should come from the Oil Substitution Agreement with Nova Scotia without reimbursement. If the Hon. Member wishes to address this question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I am sure he will be able to refer him specifically to this memo.

So, the money was to be taken out completely and fully from those moneys that were under the control of Nova Scotia and part of the consolidated revenue of Nova Scotia, not from the other funds that were provided for under the National Energy Program. It was for a very simple reason; that fund had been setup and was under the control of Nova Scotia. There was money there and that is where the money should come from. I invite my hon. friend to have the honesty to look at the file, read the documents, and see what indeed transpired. At this point it was made quite clear that, under the Minister's instructions, it had to be taken out of the Nova Scotia-Canada fund for oil substitution.

Mr. Andre: Supplementary, short supplementary!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Andre: How come Treasury Board is needed for the Halifax Consolidated Revenue Fund? Continue to lie.

DEPUTY MINISTER'S MEMORANDUM OF JANUARY, 1981—TIME-FRAME FOR PLANNING PROJECT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows, or at least everyone on this side of the House knows, that that change was made so that the very appearance of conflict of interest involving Mr. Gillespie would be evaded. Everyone knows that.

I would like to ask a question concerning the likelihood, it seems to many of us, of foreknowledge of the contents of the budget on Mr. Gillespie's part. According to documents which were tabled in the House the other day, he met with the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Cohen, six months before the budget, specifically to discuss the project. Now I want to refer to another document and ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance to listen with care, and then give me a straight answer in relation to it.

Among the documents tabled the other day was a memorandum dated January 15, 1981, sent by the Deputy Minister, Mr. Cohen, to the present Minister of Finance. The following specific reference to Mr. Gillespie was made:

> You will recall that Mr. Gillespie has organized the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project whose object is to study the possibilities for the liquefaction of coal in Cape Breton—

Further down are what seem to be the key words:

> In anticipation of this development, provision was made during the planning stage of the National Energy Program for a maximum of $1 million to be available for federal participation in this project.

It is stating that in the planning stage of the National Energy Program, which was announced in the budget, Mr. Gillespie's proposal, including dollar amounts, were taken into account. Will the Minister please comment on that? Does that not give us the clearest possible reason for believing that Mr. Gillespie had foreknowledge?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I reviewed the file, and the way I understand the problem is that the program in relation to coal liquefaction had been under way for many months with the Government of Nova Scotia.

If the Hon. Member had listened yesterday, he would have heard me state all the chronology of the work done by Mr. Gillespie. He started first with Mr. Barkhouse, the Minister of Nova Scotia, and they discussed the matter for months. Of course the money was to come from the funds under the control of the Treasury of Nova Scotia. At one time they might have considered another possibility, because I am informed that Nova Scotia wanted the federal Government to pay for it. We decided that the money was to come from the funds which were established before, and this is probably where this kind of confusion has arisen.

However, the reality is that Mr. Gillespie started with Nova Scotia, the money was available in Nova Scotia, and at one time Nova Scotia had indicated that it preferred to keep its money for something else. At that time the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources decided that, if the program was to go ahead, it would go ahead with money which had been allocated to the Treasury of Nova Scotia in 1977.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, that does not deal with the question at all. I am not referring to the cute rearrangements which were made by the federal Government in terms of paying Mr. Gillespie.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Cute, cute.

Mr. Ouellet: Not paying him.

Mr. Broadbent: I am referring to the foreknowledge as to what would be in the budget. If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is now going to answer the question instead of the Minister of Finance, that is fine, but I would like an answer.

Oral Questions

KNOWLEDGE OF ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in the memorandum sent to the present Minister of Finance, who was then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, there is reference to the National Energy Program which was announced on budget day. We now know that the consortium brought about by Mr. Gillespie was announced the very day after the budget—right? That is the sequence of those events. No one disputes them. The memorandum dated January 15, 1981, states:

In anticipation of this development, provision was made during the planning stage of the National Energy Program for a maximum of $1 million to be available for federal participation in this project.

Could the Minister tell us how anyone could possibly believe that Mr. Gillespie did not know that that would be in the budget?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have great respect for Mr. Gillespie—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You sure do!

Mr. Chrétien: —but I find it a bit surprising that he would be so proficient that from one day to the next he would be able to find five partners to form a consortium. The fact of the matter is what I said in the House, that he tried to put these associates together in the summer of 1980, after he had met with Premier Buchanan.

• (1130)

An Hon. Member: Why did he do it?

Mr. Chrétien: Because he knew that there was a fund set aside in 1977 for that very purpose, and it was after he got the agreement and the enthusiastic support of Premier Buchanan that, in the summer of 1980, long before the budget, Mr. Gillespie met with Petro-Canada, met with the Gulf Company and so on, to try to persuade them to have a consortium.

Mr. Clark: They all knew about it then.

Mr. Chrétien: They knew that there was money available for that sort of project.

Mr. Broadbent: It was put in after it was put in the budget.

Madam Speaker: Order. I will allow the Minister to finish his answer, but I am addressing myself to the Hon. Member for Oshawa. He will have an occasion to ask further questions, but please let the Minister answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I repeat that throughout the summer of 1980, there were negotiations between Mr. Gillespie and the various companies that formed this consortium. Therefore, Mr. Gillespie could hardly have formed the consortium on the very day or the day after the budget was announced. That is impossible, because it took him weeks and months to persuade his partners and convince them that it was a good project. That could not be done after the budget was brought down. In fact, Mr. Gillespie and Premier Buchanan had known for some time that there were funds available to the Government of Nova Scotia for oil substitution research projects. I feel that has no connection with the budget that was announced the day before. It was a program that Mr. Gillespie suggested, first of all to the Government of Nova Scotia as early as the spring of 1980.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Minister is absolutely right. Mr. Gillespie was organizing months ahead, meeting with Deputy Ministers, meeting with all kinds of people, and he made sure, along with the Ministers co-operating, that what he wanted to achieve would be included in the budget. I think everyone who looks at the evidence, on this side of the House at least, knows that he knew that it was going to be in the budget and was able to announce the consortium the next day.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S AWARENESS OF PROJECT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the smiling Deputy Prime Minister a question. Since he was in Cape Breton in his riding as Deputy Prime Minister, along with Mr. Gillespie, proudly announcing this project, could he tell the House, as Deputy Prime Minister, when he first became aware of Mr. Gillespie's involvement in this consortium?

Madam Speaker: I would think that a question to the Deputy Prime Minister of this nature would be allowed if the Prime Minister were not present, but since the Prime Minister is present I suppose the question should be addressed to the Minister responsible, but not to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I suspected that the Deputy Prime Minister would use his former role not to answer, so I will ask the present Minister of Finance to check with his colleague four seats down, the Deputy Prime Minister, and find out when he first became aware of this project, and report at some early date to the House.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): I will be very happy to, Madam Speaker.

DISBURSEMENT OF FUNDS—ROLE OF TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I want to come back to the question asked by the Member for Calgary South, and direct my question to the Minister of Finance, or to the Minister of Energy, who makes such a point of using Nova Scotia to clear any possible ambiguities here. I want to direct this question to either one of those Ministers. If Nova Scotia was in total control of the funds, why did the agreement have to go to Treasury Board for approval? Secondly, if Nova Scotia was in total control of these funds, why did the project require approval from the Joint Federal-Provincial Management Committee, which Nova Scotia did not control. Would you tell us that?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, it was because it was part of the agreement of 1977 that the money was to be used for projects in Nova Scotia in that field, not to put asphalt in the riding of the Hon. Member.

Mr. MacKay: There has been no federal asphalt in my riding lately, Madam Speaker, as those Ministers know very well, and they should know that that is a provincial matter.

APPLICATION BY ALASTAIR GILLESPIE FOR FUNDS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): On January 7, 1981, Madam Speaker, Mr. Gillespie wrote a letter to Phil Read, the Co-Chairman of the Management Committee, in which he said, "I wish to make application for a matching grant of $1 million". On January 13, 1981, Read replied and said, "The Management Committee agreed in principle to the project to a maximum of forty per cent of the project cost and to an amount not to exceed $1 million." It just took him six days to get $1 million. That is a pretty good performance. Can the Minister of Energy elucidate that a little bit and explain why the great haste?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Madam Speaker. It was because both Governments had discussed that before the Management Committee. The Member from Nova Scotia evidently was quite aware of the problem because the first discussion in the spring of 1980, for many weeks, was only with the Nova Scotia Government. At that time Nova Scotia was ready, and according to the agreement, they came to the federal Government to get approval, but all the programs were always initiated in Nova Scotia, and one that was approved was from the riding of the Hon. Member. Nova Scotia felt that it was its program, but in the agreement of 1977 there was a provision that the money was to be approved by a joint board because we wanted to make sure that the money was to be used for oil substitution and not for other provincial purposes.

CONFIDENCE OF FINANCIAL COMMUNITY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I was wondering if the Minister of Finance, who is now asking this House to approve going to the country for $19 billion, would not agree with me that the financial community must have a great deal of confidence in the Government if it is expected to lend to the Government $19 billion by summertime. I would like to know how he felt that the financial community would have that confidence in the Government in view of the Minister's lack of memory as to detail as shown in the Gillespie matter, or his lack of attention to how his Crown corporations are operated, as shown in the way he supervised Petro-Canada's involvement with lobbying by a former Minister.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would deplore the allegations made by the Hon. Member at the end of his statement, which are quite wrong.

Mr. Clark: Except the record proves them correct.

Mr. Lalonde: Secondly, I would like to ask my friend whether he can tell me what he was doing on June 3, 1980, or September 12, 1980, or August 15, 1980. If he can answer that question today in the House, right away, by standing up and by telling me what he did that day—

Mr. Crosbie: He was not helping Gillespie that day.

Mr. Lalonde: —I am sure the business community will have great confidence, but to reassure my hon. friend I can tell him that in the last week I have received dozens of phone calls from people in the business community supporting me and supporting the stand I have taken—

Mr. Crosbie: Alastair Gillespie called; Judd Buchanan called.

Mr. Lalonde: —and asking me to carry on.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I would tell the Minister that it would not be difficult to keep a diary and know where he is going.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF FINANCE RESIGN

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance is this. Does he not agree that it is most important to a country in serious financial difficulty that the financial community and the business community have total confidence in his ability to manage, and does he not feel that, for the good of the country, he would be better off to resign?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I stated yesterday in this House that politics for me was not the end all and be all, and that I have a lot of other things that are attractive to me.

Some Hon. Members: Go, go.

Mr. Lalonde: If I felt that any good was going to be served, I would have resigned immediately.

Mr. Nielsen: For God's sake, go.

Mr. Lalonde: If I felt that there had been any wrongdoing or any cause for believing that anything wrong had been done, I would not have needed the admonition of my hon. friend. I would have assumed my own responsibilities, without delay, and immediately.

However, at the same time I believe I would not be rendering a service to the political life of this country, to our system of governing in this country, or to the country—

Mr. Clark: To honour standards.

Mr. Lalonde: —if I were to allow the kind of smears we have heard from the other side to prevail and to lead to decisions by Ministers in the future—

Mr. Clark: To honour your own guidelines. What a contemptible response.

Mr. Lalonde: I think that would be a very, very wrong precedent to establish.

1980 BUDGET—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER UNDERTAKE INVESTIGATION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the statement made earlier today by the Minister of Finance when he said it is obvious there was no budget leak, referring to the 1980 budget. That is the same Minister who, on February 17, informed the Prime Minister that he had no knowledge of anything to do with the Scotia Synfuels Project prior to September, 1981. We found we could not accept his word in that case. We certainly may not be able to accept his word today when he says it is obvious there was no budget leak.

Because of the sensitivity of this issue and because of the importance of the budget at any time to Parliament and to the economy, will the Prime Minister undertake a full investigation to assure this House and the people of Canada that there was no budget leak in October, 1980?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member goes back to the fact that there had been a correction of dates resulting from the Minister of Finance's letter to me. If the Hon. Member arrived late, I would suggest that she read the statement made by the Hon. Member for Don Valley East before Question Period today. I know that Members opposite usually do not listen to statements from this side, but he cited a specific case where the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre, while a Minister in the previous Government, had done the same thing. He had given some wrong information to the House, information amounting to some $4 million, I think the Hon. Member said, and some days later he came back and corrected it. He said that he had misled the House. There were no howls on this side and no cries on that side for his resignation.

Mr. Clark: There was no violation of the conflict of interest guidelines.

Mr. Trudeau: The Member had merely misled the House. The former Leader of the Opposition seems to think that is not important. I wish he would get together with the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands on that, because she seems to think it is. And stop smiling a silly smile and look at the reality.

RELEVANCE OF DATES IN OCTOBER, 1980

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister who said that his Minister of Finance had merely misled the House previously. This morning he may "merely have misled the House" when he talked about no budget leak in 1980.

Yesterday in response to a question the Prime Minister replied:

> The Minister this morning, and certainly the Deputy Prime Minister and myself have all conceded that the dates are irrelevant—

I would suggest to the Prime Minister that two dates are very relevant. One is the date of October 28, 1980, when the budget was brought down. The other is the date of October 29 when the memorandum of understanding between Mr. Gillespie and the consortium was signed. I would ask the Prime Minister once again whether he has the courage and the sense of responsibility to undertake a full investigation to ensure that there was no budget leak or previous information passed with regard to the budget of October, 1980.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that the Minister of Energy answered that yesterday when he put all the dates before the House, all the transactions, all the moments in history when Mr. Gillespie and the four other eventual members of the consortium were trying to put this together on the basis of funds which were available since 1977. Once again, Premier Buchanan was the one whom the corsortium members saw first. They did not even come to the federal Government. They went to Nova Scotia because they knew he had control of the funds. They put the thing together with him.

Does anyone suspect that there was a budget leak which was brought to the attention of the Premier of Nova Scotia? Does someone suggest that Premier Buchanan was suddenly enthusiastic about this consortium and said to go ahead and sign it, because somebody had given him a budget leak? That is preposterous. We had funds available since 1977. They were applied for in the years that followed. They came to fruition after long negotiation sometime in the Fall of 1980 on the basis, once again, of funds available since 1977. Why is the Hon. Member trying to contrive some suspicion here when there is none at all?

REQUEST THAT TREASURY BOARD MINUTES BE TABLED

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. One thing journalists in other countries have found out in similar instances is to follow the money. These documents which the Prime Minister gave us are incomplete to do that. I would like to repeat my question to the Prime Minister of yesterday, which he refused or failed to answer. The question was whether he was prepared to table before the House the documents surrounding Treasury Board and the Treasury Board minutes of April 13, 1981, where Mr. D. Johnston and Mr. A. MacEachen were there in Treasury Board. Would he table the minutes of that Treasury Board meeting, because that would clear up the situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, would it really clear up the situation? Would the Hon. Member stop worrying if those minutes were tabled? Would that settle the matter? If I knew this, I might even be prepared to consider his question.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF PETRO-CANADA DOCUMENTS, AND TELEPHONE BILLS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, the question to the Prime Minister is how can we know? It appears that the Prime Minister is withholding or hiding information. This is the 18-minute gap in the tapes, if you like.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: I direct this supplementary to the Prime Minister. If the Prime Minister wants to come clean, will he table those minutes, and will he table the minutes of the Petro-Canada documents from May 27, 1980, to October 29, 1980, and, third, the telephone bills that are referred to in these documents that are not appended? Those are the missing documents in this case. If the Prime Minister wants to clear this matter up, as he said, is he prepared to table those particular documents?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member talks of telephone bills. If there are telephone bills which are available and they are relevant, I will make sure they are tabled. However, if he is asking that I table a minute of Cabinet, a minute of Treasury Board or a minute of the Committee of Cabinet, the answer is no. There has never been any precedent for tabling minutes of Cabinet, and I do not intend to create it. There was one exception when access was given to a non-member of Cabinet to Cabinet minutes. That was the McDonald Commission. There was an allegation of criminal action there, and none was found, of course. If the Hon. Member wants to allege criminal action, if he wants to go outside the House and make that allegation—

Mr. Broadbent: Come on.

Mr. Trudeau: I understand. The Leader of the NDP never was and never will be in Government, so he can't—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I wouldn't sell out and join the Liberals like you.

Mr. Trudeau: He would have liked to in the Spring of 1980, but that did not come to pass.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: That trick has been tried before, to ask Government to table minutes of Cabinet, and it won't succeed.

LABOUR RELATIONS

EASTERN PROVINCIAL AIRWAYS DISPUTE—REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, I would like to return to the question of the economy in the Atlantic area, having to do with a very serious transportation problem which affects millions of Canadians in that part of the country. I would like to ask for the support of the Minister of Transport on this very serious matter. It has gone on for some weeks, far too long. What is his disposition and that of his officials as to what can be done to bring some early resolution to the conflicts that appear to be going on between the machinists and the pilots and Eastern Provincial Airways?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have sworn to the Minister of Labour that I will not answer this sort of question any more. Ladies and gentlemen, the Minister of Labour.

• (1150)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, this matter has been followed by Labour Canada over the weeks with great concern and, very closely, as we always do, with labour disputes. The dispute began on January 6 and it is my understanding that it is continuing despite our efforts and despite the fact that we are available for mediation services.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—SUPPORT FOR PROJECT SOUGHT BY ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister's guidelines to his Ministers state that they should not lobby their former Departments within two years after they leave Government service. To "lobby" is defined in the Oxford Dictionary as "to solicit the support of". Would the Prime Minister tell me what he thought Mr. Gillespie was doing, with the knowledge of Ministers in December of 1980, when he wrote "Dear Mickey", to Mr. Cohen, a person of influence in the Government, "We need your assistance and support for the project", which afterwards was to realize him many, many tens of thousands of dollars in fees and payments, as we have seen last night? Does he consider that to be lobbying, or is that not lobbying, or is it discussions with Mr. Read of the Department—would that be lobbying, or discussions with Ministers? Are these activities lobbying, or are they not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I did attempt to deal with that question and I did indicate that lobbying was a question of fact, and the persons who lobbied or who were lobbied, are the best witnesses of whether it was lobbying or not. If there are some objective standards, Madam Speaker, I am prepared to apply them. And I put to the former Leader of the Opposition, the Member from Yellowhead North—Yellowhead—that Members of his Government are dealing with their former Departments. Are they lobbying or are they asking for information? I assume they are asking for information.

Lobbying I see as something that does happen in Ottawa, and it is a form of constant and insistent pressure. What is the margin, Madam Speaker, between asking for information about some government program, asking the Government to support that program, and actually seeing former Ministers, putting pressure on them, and calling on party loyalties and so on? That would be lobbying, but I repeat—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister who is the Member from Mount Misery.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUBMISSION MADE TO TREASURY BOARD

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister, of course, has looked at the correspondence he has tabled, I feel sure, and he may find in it a memorandum which went first to the Treasury Board and the project came back again because of concerns about conflict of interest, which shows that those in the Treasury Board have more sensibility than the Prime Minister. Then some finagling was done to get around the problem that Mr. Gillespie was to get $600 a day, or $30,000 a year, and so on, from this project. Does that not indicate to the Prime Minister that there is something in this whole transaction which is wrong, if the Treasury Board had to refuse the project when it first came, and go back to the Minister of Finance who had to have knowledge of that?

Would the Prime Minister also say if his guidelines are now only to be left to the consciences of Liberal Ministers to decide whether they are broken or not, when those consciences have already acquired a great deal of scar—

Madam Speaker: Order, order!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that in the instance he talks about the document did not go to the Treasury Board. It was changed by officials. What he calls "finagling", I think a more respectable person would have said that the officials wanted to make sure there would be no appearance of wrongdoing. And that is why they made sure that in the case of a former Minister he would not have any access to public funds. That is what they did. That is what they did without consulting me and without consulting the former Minister of Energy.

Mr. Crosbie: Permit wrongdoing, but not the appearance of wrongdoing, is that it?

Mr. Trudeau: Certainly it is to get rid of the appearance of wrongdoing that they did that. If they had thought there was wrongdoing, they obviously would have reported to the Minister and the transaction would have stopped. Once again, when the Hon. Member insists on the appearance of wrongdoing, I repeat what has been said by several Ministers on this side. There was a public announcement with the former Minister, Mr. Gillespie, there, in the presence of the Deputy Prime Minister, made with the Premier of Nova Scotia. If someone wants to do something wrong, they would not have gone on a platform, Madam Speaker. If it had been wrong, or even had the appearance of being wrong—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order.

ACTIONS OF ALASTAIR GILLESPIE—REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I also would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister with regard to lobbying. The Prime Minister indicates that if there had been the appearance of lobbying, the officials would have brought that matter to the attention of the appropriate Minister. Quite clearly in a document dated April 14, 1981, it is stated there is also a question of Mr. Gillespie's participation, whether Mr. Gillespie's participation is in variance with the conflict of interest guidelines, and it goes on to say that Mr. Schulte, the counsel, " . . . replied that he would refer this question to the Privy Council Office". This memorandum was sent to the Deputy Minister in the Ministry of Energy, which is tantamount to sending it to the Minister, as the Deputy Minister has an obligation to bring such matters of political importance to the Minister's attention. I ask the Prime Minister, given what is now known about the documentation which has been tabled, the series of meetings between—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member realizes, I am sure, that it is a few minutes only to twelve o'clock and he must more brief in his question.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I hope it is only a few minutes to 12 o'clock. With the benefit of all of the information now available, does the Prime Minister not agree that Mr. Gillespie did in fact lobby? Does he not agree that, given what we now have, there ought to be a further inquiry into this matter in order that Mr. Gillespie can be called as a witness so that the people most involved can be questioned, in order that we can get to the bottom of this for the sake of the parliamentary system?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member goes back to the premise which was stated by the previous questioner. He talks about a document of April, 1981, which was changed because the officials said, "Well, this is a former Minister. We must be careful that he does not get any special treatment. We must make sure there is no breach of guidelines". In order to ensure that, Madam Speaker, they changed the form of the submission. But why did they change it? Not to privilege Mr. Gillespie, not to give him any special access. They changed it to be sure he would have no access to public funds. That is the point. That is why it was changed, and that is appearing in the documents.

QUERY RESPECTING ACCESS GRANTED TO ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, is it not reasonable to conclude from all of the evidence that we now have, including the change to the submission, that the reason for the change was to give Mr. Gillespie access to what he otherwise would not have been entitled to?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, I ask the Hon. Member—

Mr. Deans: I cannot answer, so do not ask me.

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member said that Mr. Gillespie had access to something to which otherwise he would not have been entitled. Under what section of the guidelines or of the law would Mr. Gillespie not have been entitled to put a project together which was based on government policy, which was asked for by the Premier of Saskatchewan—the Premier of Nova Scotia—and which was beneficial to the people of his Province? Why would that have been refused to him?

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—SCOTIA COAL SYNFUELS PROJECT—ALLEGED TABLING OF INCORRECT DOCUMENTATION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege with respect to the documents tabled by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) this week, specifically the last letter dated February 23 from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), the former Minister of Energy. The point at issue is whether Parliament was given the true facts, not as a matter of debate but as a matter of documents tabled by the Prime Minister.

I have five items to refer to in making my argument. As part of the National Energy Program, on page 85 there was direct reference to "A utility boiler fueled by Cape Breton coal; prefeasibility study recommended site at Port Hawkesbury, N.S., commissioning expected in 1987".

In the budget of October 30, 1980, on page 10, there appears the following statement:

New funds will also be available to find ways in which the large reserves of Cape Breton coal can be used to enhance energy security—

When the Minister of Finance, formerly the Minister of Energy, appeared before the Committee on Alternative Energy and Oil Substitution on Tuesday, November 25, 1980, at page 52 of the report he commented as follows:

Yes, I can tell you that on this program—

That is the National Energy Program.

—there is not one word in this program that I did not approve personally. The officials worked, but it is a government program. The decisions and options that were retained were those retained by the federal government—not by officials as such.

On February 17, the Prime Minister tabled in this House a letter from the Minister of Energy which contained the following statement:

—I can state that between my appointment as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on March 3, 1980, and the signing of an agreement between the Government of Canada, the Government of Nova Scotia and Scotia Coal Synfuels Project on September 25, 1981, I did not have discussions, at any time, with Mr. Alastair Gillespie concerning that project.

As we all know, that letter was superceded by another letter dated February 23, 1983 from the Minister of Finance, the former Minister of Energy. He referred to the previous letter and then stated:

Pursuant to that review, I was informed yesterday, that on January 1981, a memo on this project was sent to me on behalf of my Deputy Minister and that on April 3, 1981, I had signed a Treasury Board Submission in connection with this project.

Madam Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member because I gather that he is making a case about some information which he thinks is not exactly adequate. That might be a grievance, but unless he tells me more about exactly what he is seeking to argue concerning his briefer question of privilege, it will be difficult for me to continue to hear him.

I am willing to hear him if he tells me straightforwardly what his question of privilege is about. If it is about some information which, in his view, is inadequate, I think he knows that that is not the basis for a question of privilege and unfortunately I will not be able to continue to hear him.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you, Madam Speaker, I appreciate your comments. You have allowed me to put on the record the linkage we need to get to this point.

It is not a question of information being inadequate and it is not a question of debate; what it is, Madam Speaker, I respectfully submit, is a contempt of Parliament for documents to be tabled in this House by the Prime Minister, given the force and authority of his office, and to have another Minister of the Crown know that when that letter was tabled the facts contained in it were not correct.

I submit that is a leaving on the record of incorrect facts which I have pointed out are there. It is the leaving on the record by the Minister of Finance of that incorrect fact which is the comtempt of Parliament. It is not specifically that the Prime Minister knew, although I would suggest to you that the authorities state he is taken to have known that the facts were incorrect; what I am suggesting to you is that the contempt of Parliament lies in the Minister of Finance sitting in his place while those incorrect facts remain on the record. That is where our privileges are being abused.

I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that the Minister of Finance should do the honourable thing and correct the record now and state that there is no question, based on his own statement, that he knew when the budget came down, when he bragged that he had personally been in charge of the entire national energy project, when he personally approved everything—that is the point when the Minister of Finance, then the Minister of Energy, really knew of the involvement of Gillespie in the consortium.

We have spent a week and a half on that matter, Madam Speaker I suggest to you that the very fact that both Opposition Parties have concentrated on this matter in Question Period has to be evidence enough for you, through the fact that we represent the entire country, that despite the suggestions that we should be debating the economy, this goes to the very essence of what this place is about. If incorrect facts are tabled and if a Minister knows they are incorrect, surely that Minister must come clean and admit that they are incorrect.

Madam Speaker: About this development which the Hon. Member has just given to the House, what is he suggesting? That I should determine whether those facts are correct or not? The Hon. Member knows that the Chair is not in the position to determine whether documents placed before the House are correct or not or whether some of those documents, if the Hon. Member feels there is some contempt because of the fact that a document states a falsehood—if that is what I understand from the Hon. Member—could have been taken out of the record. I do not know if the Hon. Member would have thought of that, but the Chair is not in a position to determine if the facts tabled by the Hon. Minister or the Prime Minister are adequate. The Chair would be in a very, very difficult position having to determine a question of privilege on that basis.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I would agree with the comments you have made, but the Chair is in a position to find that there is a prima facie case which should be sent to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for review.

If you find from my remarks and my submission that there is sufficient evidence for a prima facie case, which I suggest to you does not mean enough to convict at this point but is just enough to substantiate what we have been arguing for a week and half—not all of the evidence that is in front of you right now but that we have brought forward enough evidence in this submission in the last two weeks for you to be sufficiently concerned—then as Speaker, as our equal among equals, you could find that there is a prima facie case to send to that Committee. We would be prepared to make that motion if you find there is prima facie evidence.

I have not had many opportunities to argue these questions of privilege but I suggest that we take a hard look at the words "prima facie". In a court of law they mean that a judge feels there is enough evidence to warrant a full judicial review—enough evidence, not for conviction, but to make it sufficiently important in the eyes of that judge to review the matter. Similarly, I suggest to you it is sufficiently important in the eyes of Members of the House to send this question to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for review, so that we can get at the truth of this matter.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, my learned colleague does not seem to understand the nature of a question of privilege. For his information I would like to point out that to determine whether the question may be raised and whether there is a prima facie case for privilege, the Chair must have a minimum of facts on the basis of which it can conclude that the freedom of speech of Hon. Members and their ability to discharge their duties as Parliamentarians have been restricted. However, that is not the point my learned colleague is trying to make. He is trying to claim that the documents that were tabled are not complete and that they do not correspond, according to his interpretation, to statements that may have been made, in answer to questions, by the Right Hon. Prime Minister or by other Ministers of the Crown. That has no connection with preventing a Member from exercising his freedom of speech or from discharging his duties as a Parliamentarian. He may not be satisfied with the contents of the documents or with the number of documents tabled, and he may not be very pleased with the interpretation given these documents by some Ministers or Hon. Members or the Prime Minister, but that is a matter of opinion, a matter for debate and interpretation. It is not up to the House of Commons to bring people to trial for any wrong doing.

To have a question of privilege, we must determine whether circumstances, or facts indicate that a Member has been prevented from exercising his right of free speech. That is the very essence of privilege. However, there is absolutely nothing in the facts submitted to the Chair by my hon. colleague that would justify the Chair examining whether or not there is a prima facie case of privilege.

In the circumstances, I feel that we have here a flagrant example of abuse of a procedure that should be used sparingly, according to Beauchesne and according to parliamentary practice relating to questions of privilege that are recognized as valid. In the circumstances, Madam Speaker, I submit, with due respect, that my learned colleague has absolutely no grounds for seeking a ruling from the Chair as to whether or not there is a prima facie case for privilege, because nothing the Hon. Member said indicates that Hon. Members have been restricted in their ability to discharge their duties as Parliamentarians in this House.

Madam Speaker: Considering the persistence with which the Hon. Member for Simcoe North is defending his position, the importance of the question he is raising and his emphasis on that point, and considering the number of times it has been raised in the House, Hon. Members will understand that I intend to take this matter into consideration.

MR. SIMMONS—ALLEGED FAILURE BY CHAIR TO RECOGNIZE

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of privilege. I submit that today, during the first hour of proceedings, my privileges as a Member of this House were tampered with. I submit further that this is just the latest incident in a consistent pattern of such tampering with my privileges as a Member of this House. I want you to know, Madam Speaker, that today's incident is the straw that breaks the camel's back for me.

An Hon. Member: Let's have it.

Mr. Simmons: Allow me now to document briefly my matter of privilege, and I inform you, Madam Speaker, that should the Chair—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I would be delighted to hear the Hon. Member's plea for privilege, but at this point I do not know what it is all about and I did not get any notice of his question of privilege. If it has to do with the deliberations today, then I can hear him; but he must tell me in the first sentences what it is all about, otherwise I cannot follow the argumentation.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I am not surprised; there was no argumentation. I had begun the sentence "Allow me now to document". I said in my opening statement that this question was based on something which happened during the first hour of proceedings. For that reason I understand no prior notice was required.

Madam Speaker: No prior notice was required, but the Hon. Member knows that in the first sentences he has to tell the Speaker what it is all about. I have been listening now to the Hon. Member for three minutes and I still do not know what his question of privilege is all about.

Mr. Simmons: As I was saying, Madam Speaker, please allow me to document it ever so briefly, and I inform the Chair—

An Hon. Member: What is the question?

Madam Speaker: I think the Hon. Member is playing with words. I do not want the Hon. Member to document the question now. I want the Hon. Member to state what the question of privilege is all about, and then he could document it.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, allow me to state the matter of privilege. My affirmation is that my privileges have been breached, and that affirmation arises from the failure of Madam Speaker to allow me the floor during Standing Order 21 proceedings.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Simmons: It is based on two related but distinct issues. The first the Chair may find debatable, but I invite the Chair to hear both. First—

Madam Speaker: Order. The fact that the Speaker did not recognize the Hon. Member surely does not constitute a question of privilege. It might be a point of order, and I would welcome the Hon. Member raising it. However, if he is raising it now under a point of order, I must tell him that I recognized most of the Members who rose today, namely the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith) and two others. At any rate, there were three on this side, three on the other side, and two from the NDP. If Hon. Members had been in the House at eleven o'clock sharp, there would have been an extra one on both sides. But they were not, and at 11.15 I started the Question Period, as I am bound to do by the Standing Orders.

Mr. Simmons: Allow me, Madam Speaker, on a matter of privilege to state my matter of privilege—

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Mr. Simmons: First, I have said that the privilege is based on the failure of the Chair. It is not the failure itself of the Chair that constitutes the matter of privilege; it is based on that failure. Allow me very briefly to state the two issues which—

Madam Speaker: No, no. I have just ruled that that is not a question of privilege. I have ruled on a point of order in case the Hon. Member transforms this into a point of order. Furthermore, I must remind the Hon. Member that it is the privilege of the Speaker to recognize Members in the order—and I usually use that order—in which they rise. Now, I cannot always say; sometimes two or three rise at the same time. The Hon. Member was unlucky today. I hope that he is luckier another day. I will certainly, as I do in all cases, put his name on a list which I bring back into the House every day and I watch whether that Hon. Member is rising. If the Hon. Member is here on Monday, I am sure that I will be more than happy to recognize him.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, on a matter of privilege—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's is rising on a matter of privilege?

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, on a matter of privilege. I submit, with respect, that the Chair has not yet heard what my matter of privilege is. It is not the failure of the Chair to recognize me. I have said that very distinctly. I said that it was based on that failure, but that is not the matter of privilege. The matter of privilege is first—and I believe most important—that I rose in my place from the very beginning of the proceedings today, yet the Chair recognized other Members from both sides of the House who had risen subsequently to me. What happened today is part of a consistent—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, please. The Chair is the sole judge of who will be recognized at any time. How can the Hon. Member—and can he prove it to me—say that several Members did not rise at the same time? At any rate, it is still the privilege of the Chair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, on a matter of privilege—

Madam Speaker: Presenting reports from Standing and Special Committees.

Mr. Simmons: On a matter of privilege—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's on a new matter of privilege?

Mr. Simmons: I said "On a matter of privilege", Madam Speaker. I have not been allowed to state my matter of privilege. That in itself is an abuse of the rules—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. I think the Hon. Member knows that he is presently abusing the rules—

Mr. Simmons: As is the Chair.

Mr. Nielsen: Withdraw!

Madam Speaker: He has stated his case, the Chair has ruled on his case, and I have suggested that he might transform it into a point of order but he refused to do so. The Hon. Member does not have a question of privilege. He should read the definition of privilege very carefully, and he will realize that he does not have a question of privilege.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, I wish to draw to your attention and to the attention of the House that during your recent remarks, when you suggested that the Member was abusing the rules of the House, the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) said "And so is the Chair", or something similar. I would ask him to withdraw those remarks.

Madam Speaker: Well, I did not hear the Hon. Member say those words.

Mr. Nielsen: Hansard did.

Madam Speaker: I will ask him if he did say those words, and if he did say them, of course he will have to withdraw them. I did not hear them, but I will ask the Hon. Member to tell me on his honour whether or not he said them.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I believe very deeply that in this matter the Chair abused the rules, and I said so. However, if the Chair finds that statement of my belief to be in unparliamentary terms, then I withdraw without equivocation. But you cannot hang me for what I am thinking.

• (1220)

Mr. Wilson: Shame.

Madam Speaker: Of course, in the strict sense that is acceptable. I do feel the words of the Hon. Member were unparliamentary. In a strict sense he has withdrawn them. I cannot help but say the way in which he has withdrawn them with regard to the Chair is really with a great lack of courtesy.

Mr. Nielsen: It is disgraceful.

PETITIONS

MR. MITGES—PAYMENTS TO MACDONALD COMMISSION OFFICERS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I am happy to present a petition today on behalf of constituents of Grey-Simcoe concerning their strong opposition to the gross overpayment of officers of the Macdonald Commission during this time of economic restraint.

The petitioners state that when this Government asked all Canadians to tighten their belts and to define their priorities, the Government should have been the first one to set a good example. The petitioners are very concerned, as I believe all Canadians are concerned, by this Government granting astronomical salaries to those individuals who are earning far more than perhaps 99 per cent of all Canadians.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,429 and 4,511.

[Text]

OIL AND GAS FOREIGN AID PROGRAMS

Question No. 4,429—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Under the oil and gas exploration and development foreign aid programs financed by CIDA or Petro-Canada International, what criteria are used for selecting recipient countries and what conditions are attached to the aid provided?

2. Have the funds been used by foreign countries to hire oil companies other than Petro-Canada International and, if so, which companies were hired, by whom were they hired and at what cost?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canadian International Development Agency and the Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation as follows:

1. The criteria used for selecting recipient countries are as follows: (a) the recipient must be a developing country eligible to receive Canadian bilateral development assistance; (b) the recipient must be dependent on imported oil; (c) assistance must be consistent with the Government's international development assistance objectives and programs. The condition attached to the aid provided is that a maximum use of Canadian goods and services be assured.

2. No.

COST OF REFIT OF "CSS PARIZEAU"

Question No. 4,511—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Was a $219,531 design contract for the midlife refit of the C.S.S. Parizeau recently awarded to Eyretechnics Ltd. without tender and, if so, for what reason?

2. Were any West Coast firms given the opportunity to bid for the refit contract of this West Coast ship?

3. For the 12 months prior to August 31, 1982, what was the total value of government contracts awarded to Eyretechnics Ltd.?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. A design contract was issued to Eyretechnics Ltd., without tender on March 9, 1982 for $219,531.25. This firm was involved in the preparation of the statement of requirements and the correction of the drawings of the ship under a separate local contract for $24,574.29. The contract for the final design was issued on a sole source basis as it was considered to be the most cost effective and time saving procedure in view of the fact that this firm was fully acquainted with the ship as a result of the initial contract.

2. Requests for proposals were restricted to the three West Coast ship repair firms which had the facilities to carry out the required work. (1) Burrard Yarrows Corporation (which later submitted the lowest bid and won this $1.7M refit contract.) (2) Rivtow Industries Ltd. (3) Vancouver Shipyards Co. Ltd.

3. The total value of the contracts awarded to Eyretechnics during the 12-month period from August 31, 1981 to August 30, 1982 was $4,786,367.

Note: Question 1 above refers to the design contract and question 2 refers to the refit contract.

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 22, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Skelly (p. 22957).

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, on Tuesday last, I spoke on Bill C-143 and pointed out the impressive decline we have seen in recent weeks in the inflation rate in Canada. We know that inflation was a very serious problem in 1982 and that it had some disastrous effects on our economy. I am pleased, and I am sure most Canadians are, that as I speak today the inflation rate in Canada is down to 6 per cent.

Mr. Nickerson: No, it is not.

Mr. Harquail: I want to take this opportunity to bring additional good news to Canadians, particularly to consumers. The Bank of Canada rate as of this week is at 9.43 per cent. The prime rate for borrowing at the banks is 11.25 per cent. In my view, this is excellent news for the turnaround in the economy that we are all hoping for.

On Tuesday I also mentioned the increased housing starts. I mentioned that my friend, the Minister responsible for housing, the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc), had laid out some very impressive statistics to prove this point. That has to be another aspect of encouragement. We know that these increased housing starts will create many, many jobs which we are all interested to see come into the work force in Canada.

Having laid that groundwork, I want to talk about confidence in the country. We know that the Conference Board has indicated in its recent analysis that there will be a continuation of the upturn in our economy. Senior business executives have been more optimistic about this turnaround in the Canadian economy. For instance, in The Globe and Mail recently, Mr. Ron Lawless, President of CN Rail, was quoted as saying that he sensed an uptrend and is optimistic about increased business that CN Rail will be able to enjoy in terms of the operation for which he is responsible within the group of CN companies.

In addition to Mr. Lawless's statement from CN headquarters in Montreal, there was a statement made by the President of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, Mr. George Urquhart. He is a fellow New Brunswicker. He expressed confidence and has praised, according to the article I have here dated February 15, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for his sincere and honest work in bringing back that confidence we have all been working so hard for in recent months.

When we read statements put out by the Conference Board of Canada, by the President of the Chamber of Commerce and the President of CN Rail, to name just a few of the business leaders in the country who have confirmed and are prepared to state publicly their conviction that the good work of this Government is resulting in lower interest rates and a lower inflation rate, it has to be very good news for Canadians.

I want to put some additional facts on the record. Sales of passenger cars have increased, to which I alluded the other day. But something has been lost in our discussions in recent months. I am speaking of Canada's trade surplus. It jumped to $21.6 billion in December, 1982. That is a 157 per cent increase from the previous record surplus of $8.4 billion in 1980. These figures and facts are not only significant but they are very impressive. Yet from time to time, because of heated debate on other topics, this news gets brushed aside, so I am highlighting it today.

In addition, corporate profits increased in the third quarter of 1982 after having declined for five consecutive quarters. This is another indication of an upturn.

The last time I spoke I referred to the CPI. The Consumer Price Index declined 0.3 per cent in January, 1983 after registering no increase in December, 1982. This marks the first decline in CPI since September 1978. As a result of the monthly decline, the year-over-year increase between January, 1982 and January, 1983 fell significantly, to 8.3 per cent from the 9.3 per cent increase recorded in December, 1982.

All of these pertinent facts support our position in bringing forward this important Bill now. The $5 billion is required to cover spending commitments in the current fiscal year. The additional $14 billion of interim borrowing is needed to meet the heavy seasonal cash requirements in the first fiscal quarter and to ensure the Government has flexibility in its debt management program.

The 1983-1984 Main Estimates tabled by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) this week detail all the planned Government expenditures and spending for the upcoming fiscal years. As I said on Tuesday, the fact that the President of the Treasury Board brought forward those Estimates last Tuesday gives all Members of Parliament and all Canadians an equal opportunity to assess the plans and the indicators of the Government as to what its spending will be.

We all have very many serious and important projects that we want to see proceed in the various sectors and regions of the country. Obviously, I speak of the Atlantic region and particularly of my own Province of New Brunswick. I discussed this subject the other day and have had occasion to bring it to the attention of the various Ministers concerned with economic development in Canada. I was talking about the very important megaproject in northern New Brunswick. It is not only important because it will create an estimated 1,500 person-years of employment during its construction stage, but it will result in over 500 permanent jobs which tie in very nicely to the mining sector developments in the northern part of New Brunswick. This project is estimated to cost $360 million. Those jobs will complement the 1,800 in the mines plus the 600 people who are presently employed in the zinc plant that is in operation in that area now.

When we think of projects, we think of such things as upgrading and continuing expenditures on highways which need to see improvement. I am sure everyone feels that we have spent enough time talking about highway route 11 and 17. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you will be familiar with this topic that I am identifying. We have encouraged and tried to insist that the Government responsible for the construction of highways in New Brunswick will have its planners, engineers and its Minister finally agree to put the highest priority on the completion of the network of highways leading from Moncton and Campbellton over to St. Leonard and Edmundston and down to the borders of the United States. These projects have been put on the backburner for far too long.

I submit that a reason for stressing and emphasizing the importance of proceeding with this project is that there are very substantial sums of money that we transfer to the Provinces. We know that the Canadian Government has every reason to implement this measure at this time, when one considers such questions as transfer payments to other levels of Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I must inform him that the time provided for his speech has now expired.

Questions, comments and answers.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) has suggested that since the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) has tabled the Estimates, Members should be able to judge and determine how the $14 billion requested for the first quarter of the next fiscal year is to be spent, could he point out to me where in the Estimates that information is available? As well, could he point out where the annual calendar of cash flow would be able to tell me and other Members just what the need is for the programs presented in the Estimates for the first quarter of the coming year?

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I first want to say that when one continues a speech from a previous day, ten minutes certainly does not give one adequate opportunity to cover all the aspects that I, at least, would have liked to cover.

In response to the question, I have great respect for the experience and the knowledge which the Hon. Member has. He knows that the Estimates have been tabled. He will also know that there have been discussions about an upcoming budget. I would submit that the specific answers to his question will be contained in that budget once we receive it.

With respect to his question concerning any indication of the expenditures, we all realize the importance of continuing the social programs that, in fact, we on this side brought to Canadians. The Hon. Member will know that one of the areas where we will have increased expenditures is in the transfer of federal moneys to other levels of Government. That increase in cost is estimated to have risen by $2.5 billion, an increase of 17.5 per cent.

That was a point I was getting to in my speech. Now that I have an opportunity to put it on the record, let me say that this is an area where there will be a significant increase in costs. These funds will help pay for necessary programs such as health care, university education and others. We also know that there is an increasing number of elderly people in Canada. The pay-outs alone in old age pension, supplements and spousal allowance are forecast to increase by almost 10 per cent, or over $1 billion. We also know that there has been a heavy increase in cost as a result of our attempt to deal with the unemployment question in Canada. Those costs have jumped by 133 per cent to approximately $3 billion, as compared to the $1.25 billion last year.

In response to the question dealing with the budget, I am sure that Ministers concerned with the Treasury will be able to respond to the Hon. Member's question with more specific details. However, I have attempted to respond in some manner to his question.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's answer obviously is that there is no cash flow projection within the Estimates whereby a Member of the House, no matter how diligent, can recognize just what the first quarter cash flow needs of the Government are.

In reply to my first question he did say that the budget would be coming down. Would the Hon. Member not then agree that Members would be far more informed and knowledgeable about a $19 billion borrowing requirement, requiring $14 billion for the first quarter, if the budget came down before this Bill was presented to us?

Mr. Harquail: Again, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the Hon. Member will agree that we need some consistency in order to have an orderly and consistent flow in fiscal management. This gives me the opportunity again to point out the declining interest rates and the lesser cost of money recently. All Members and that Hon. Member in particular would have to agree that lower interest rates will afford the Canadian Government the opportunity to obtain money at less cost. That is a point which must be emphasized. That fact will obviously put us in a much better position in the coming weeks and months than we were in at the beginning of 1983.

As far as the cash flow is concerned, there must be some built-in flexibility, as I am sure the Hon. Member realizes. I have tried to highlight some of the spending programs that we will have to spend the money on as a Government. I have tried to present some of the projects that are of concern to me in the Atlantic area which certainly pertain to the continued economic and industrial development in northern New Brunswick which we would all want to see.

I repeat that this just proves the remarks I made when I commenced my speech—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. There are other Hon. Members seeking the floor. I must interrupt the Hon. Member.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I too would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail). I must say that I was encouraged by the over-all tone of his presentation; I appreciate hearing that kind of optimism.

I would like to pursue a point that he raised in his speech on Tuesday of this week. I was not in the House at that time but I have had the opportunity to read Hansard. He made reference to the fact that we have seen a turn-around as well with respect to the economy. This was after he had indicated that there had been an increase in housing starts, as modest as they are. At least it is a positive direction. He went on to say that we have seen a turn-around as well. Could he elaborate on this turn-around that has occurred?

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to make the observation that I also think it is encouraging to see the Hon. Member has returned to the question of the economy and to his responsibility to deal with economic questions in the House. I congratulate him on that.

I did not have the opportunity to complete my remarks about the good news. I was talking on Tuesday of this week about the decline in interest rates for borrowing money at the banks and the decline in the inflation rate. The good news was also about the housing starts at $1.5 billion. Any properly informed person would agree that this is good news.

I laid on the Table and on the record all the other aspects of the increase in sales of passenger cars. There was an increase of 37 per cent from July, 1982, to 66,800 units in December, 1982. That is something else which has been put forward by your own Party, and has been a very important indicator.

Concerning housing and the construction of cars, your very Leader, the Leader from Oshawa—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member should address his remarks to the Chair, please.

Mr. Huntington: Yes, and they should be short.

Mr. Cosgrove: There is so much good news. You should hear it.

Mr. Harquail: Yes.

Mr. Cosgrove: Listen and learn. Clean out your ears.

Mr. Harquail: I think Your Honour will agree with me that the important items involving billions of dollars, as Hon. Members opposite have pointed out, and which I consider very serious and important, cannot be dealt with in 30 seconds. I am only following the lead given in the past week or so, when people have gone on to speak for five or ten minutes into the Question Period and other times—

Mr. Huntington: Practise answering questions!

Mr. Harquail: Now that we have dealt with the intrusions and interruptions which are unfair, and which—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Restigouche should know that the Chair is charged with establishing order in the House. I would invite him to complete his answer, please.

Mr. Harquail: Yes, I would be delighted to complete my answer, and I thank Your Honour. I would only tell the Hon. Member that I think the evidence is very clear as to why I made that statement about the upturn in the economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: I would like to ask the Hon. Member a supplementary question. If he studied the record, he would find that I have not asked a single question in this House in the last six months which did not relate directly to the economy. Therefore, I am a little bit confused by the reference he made in his response. Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, I regret to interrupt Hon. Members again, but the time provided for questions and comments has expired. Debate?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In light of the importance of this matter, I am wondering if the House would give unanimous consent to allowing a couple more questions to be asked of the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Cosgrove: We want to hear from others.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent to allow the question period to continue?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the speech by the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), we now know where some of the $19 billion will go. It will go to Liberal pork barrel schemes in New Brunswick.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: That is intelligent.

Mr. Nickerson: Perhaps the Liberals are considering a coal liquefaction plant there to complement the one which will be put in the sister Province of Nova Scotia.

However, that is not what I want to discuss today. I want to discuss the principles behind the huge borrowing authority Bill requesting $19 billion. This Bill really amounts to two Bills in one, two Bills which have been combined for the purposes of debate which should not have been combined. The first one is to allow an additional $5 billon to be borrowed during the course of this fiscal year. That would bring the borrowing authority for this year up to a total of $26.2 billion.

If one reviews the history of the accumulation of this borrowing authority, one finds a serious indictment of the Government in that it does not know what it is doing and is incapable of producing a reasonable financial plan. In addition to the $3.5 billion or so of previous unexpired borrowing authority, the Government had to come back to this House with Bill C-111, requesting another $6.5 billion, and then it came back with Bill C-125, requesting another $7 billion. Then it came back a few months later with Bill C-128, requesting another $4 billion, and here it is today with Bill C-143, requesting an additional $5 billion for this one year. If this does not prove that the Government cannot get its financial act together, I do not know what does.

As I said before, the Bill is two Bills in one. What we should be doing is dealing with this $5 billion requirement for this fiscal year now, and if the Government is in such poor shape that it really cannot get by without borrowing those additional funds, then the House might be prepared to deal with that matter expeditiously. However, the other $14 billion—and I strongly suspect that there will be much more to come later—is not required until the next fiscal year.

There is absolutely no reason whatsoever why we cannot vote in favour of the amendment put forward during this debate by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), deal with the $5 billion, and then examine the request for the additional $14 billion for the next fiscal year in the Standing Committee on Finance.

It is unheard of in the history of Parliament that a Government would come to Parliament to seek authority to borrow those sums of money without presenting the necessary projections telling us why it needs the money and how it intends to spend it. These are the types of issues which should be studied in detail in the Standing Committee.

The Government is mishandling its financial affairs, as we have seen from the Bill. Further, the way in which it puts House business together is so bad that it is forced into smuggling in important Bills, combining them, bringing in omnibus Bills, because it does not know what it is doing. It is wasting so much parliamentary time that it is not taking care of the necessary business of Canada. We have seen numerous illustrations of this. I suggest that all Hon. Members of the House consider voting in favour of the very reasonable amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River.

I listened with great interest to one of the better presentations during the course of the debate made by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). He condemned the Government for seeking this borrowing authority—

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nickerson: —and quite rightly so. He pointed out some of the things I have pointed out as well. In fact, he used the 20 minutes or so available to him almost exclusively for that purpose. It was a very good speech, but it missed one of the fundamental questions: Why does the Government need all this money?

I suggest that it needs it because it has been following the lead of the New Democratic Party. It has been introducing all these new spending programs. We have a little game going on here. We hear the NDP suggesting more ways to spend Government money, necessitating increases either in taxes or in borrowing. Gradually, after a time, these suggestions are picked up by their friends over in the Liberal Party.

Mr. Cosgrove: They voted with you last night.

Mr. Nickerson: Then the time comes to count the cost, and that is what we are having to do today. The cost in this Bill is $19 billion on account of those socialist policies put forward by the NDP and followed by the Liberals.

Mr. Blenkarn: Absolutely right.

Mr. Nickerson: On the very few occasions when measures have been put forward in the House to reduce Government expenditures, what has happened concerning the NDP? Its Members have voted against them.

Mr. Cosgrove: They voted with you last night.

Mr. Nickerson: Not too long ago a Bill was presented for the purpose of reducing expenditures by cutting the salaries of MPs. It called for Parliamentarians to show the way, and with the support of this Party it eventually passed. However, the NDP voted against it.

Mr. Cosgrove: But they voted with you last night.

Mr. Nickerson: On a more philosophical level, I now want to challenge some basic assumptions which have become part of the conventional wisdom of this country. I initiated this matter in the House on February 15, and I do not think I was the first one. I recall in a series of presentations by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) that he also broached such matters, although perhaps indirectly.

• (1250)

On February 15, under S.O. 21, I brought to the attention of the House that in 1968 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first took office the federal deficit was some half a billion dollars and at that time there were 350,000 unemployed Canadians. In 1975 the deficit had increased to some $5.5 billion and unemployment then stood at 700,000. In 1981 the deficit was $13.5 billion and unemployment at that time was 900,000.

If you study the figures for the last 20 years or so and plot them on a graph, Mr. Speaker, you will find that there is almost a linear relationship between the number of unemployed and the federal deficit. The conventional wisdom is that if you are faced with the problem of unemployment you go into a deficit spending position, and this is supposed to take care of your unemployment, the so-called Keynesian theory, although the way I read what that hon. gentleman said, he never did suggest that one could get anything for nothing.

If you were faced with the undeniable fact that there is an inversely proportionate ratio between the number of unemployed and the federal deficit and were unfamiliar with the so-called conventional wisdom, you would obviously come to the conclusion that it is the deficit that is causing the unemployment, rather than the deficit being the cure for unemployment, as is the position of the Government. If you look at the figures in other countries you quite often find that countries which over the years have had a smaller annual deficit in comparison to Canada, or have broken even, have experienced much less unemployment than countries which have indiscriminately increased their deficit. So there is not only a Canadian example to go by, but international examples.

Given that, it would be my suggestion that the cure for unemployment is not a continual expansion of the federal deficit. Indeed, it is the very opposite. It is a contraction of that deficit that will lead to reduced unemployment in Canada. If we can work towards a balanced budget, such as proposed by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) in 1979, that will bring about a reduction in unemployment and eventually will bring about full employment in Canada.

If this is examined in another way, the reason that is the case will be apparent. If we have a well-run system of finance in Canada, that will lead to stability. It will lead to confidence, something that is sadly lacking at the present time. With stability and confidence in place, that will lead to investment. Canada will be a safe place for Canadians and other people to invest in. Investment will bring about employment. That is the relationship, and that is why we should get away from what we are doing at present.

What we are on now is a treadmill approach to things. The deficit gets bigger and bigger. It is supposed to reduce unemployment, but it does not; it increases it. We do not want to give up the theory so we increase the deficit some more, which leads to more unemployment. "Try some more spending" is what the Government has been saying for years and years, and we now know that this does not work. In the past we have borrowed up to our necks. Canadians are taxed up to the hilt. They can hardly bear any more taxation. There appears to be practically no capacity left to tax more or to borrow more.

Let us look at what that is doing to our nation. I have read several ancient authors and they have said: "How do you judge the strength of a nation? How do you judge its capacity and capability to fight back?" If you see a country that has low taxes, that does not owe very much, that has its affairs in order, in the case of a military situation they know that if that country were invaded it would be able to fight back, because it would have the capability of raising taxes, of getting more money, of borrowing money elsewhere, either internally or externally. That would not be a country that you would choose to invade because they would be capable of fighting back. They would have the capacity to do so.

I suggest that the same thing happens economically. When a country is faced with an economic crisis, as many countries are in the world today, if over the preceding years they have taxed themselves to death, have borrowed until they are unable to borrow any more, then they are easy victims and do not have the capability to fight back. That is precisely what is happening in Canada today. We are now paying for the mistakes and the faults of Government going back to 1968, and even before that. Canada is an easy victim of the recession because of past Liberal policies.

I would strongly suggest that the institution of Parliament and all of its Members, not just those on this side but also a good number of those on the other side, have some real doubts about the request the Government has put forward to us today for some $19 billion of borrowing authority. Many Parliamentarians here are scared to say no, because they do not know what would happen if Parliament said no and there was no more money to be made available to the Government, or the amount of money was severely reduced. But if this Parliament does not say no, there is no stopping these fellows on the other side. There is no stopping the Government. We have seen what has happened in the past, and it is the same old treadmill. They will continue in their reckless and abandoned way.

If Parliament says no, then we will force the Government to put its house in order. We know it will be difficult to do that and we know that there will be political repercussions, but some day we are going to be faced with that and it might as well be now as some time in the future when the problem will be even worse.

Just look at what has been happening of late in the Province of Quebec, the fiscal calamity of that Government—that is a familiar term; I heard it used by somebody on the other side some time ago, before he was a member of the Privy Council. However, the situation in which the Government of Quebec has got itself into is proportionately worse than that of the federal Government of Canada. Unlike the federal Government of Canada, the Government of Quebec cannot print money. It does not have the same recourse to the printing press as the federal Government has. So it has been forced into the crunch, forced to take actions that undoubtedly it wishes it did not have to take. And look at the result. There is almost rioting in the streets.

I suggest the same situation is going to catch up with us federally unless we take action now to anticipate those things to come.

I wonder if I might call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) had three minutes remaining in the 20 minutes allotted to him.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, in the three minutes that remain to me, I will briefly put an end to what I was saying before lunch. I was describing the treadmill upon which we have got ourselves, the treadmill of unemployment, deficits, borrowing, more unemployment and yet more deficits. I was suggesting that Parliament has it within its power now to put a stop to that. I do not suggest it would be easy to do that. I do not suggest there would not be a period of difficulty, but I can assure the House that people would readjust and that Canada would come out of this period of readjustment lean, strong and fit and without the accumulation of Liberal baggage which has grown up over many years.

Members of Parliament now have it within their power to put a stop to this. We can vote no to this Bill. We can put an end to the Liberal financial ineptitude and stupidity and we can put Canada back in shape. It has to be done some time, and I suggest we do it now.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, my question for the Hon. Member has to do with comments he made earlier today. He indicated that the reason we have a deficit in this nation is that the NDP have been advocating the expenditure of public moneys and the Liberals have been following our advice.

I want to point out that the Hon. Member has at least conceded the fact that the NDP is an effective Party in this House and that we can affect public policy. I want to point out the kind of things that we have fought for in this House. We have fought for Unemployment Insurance so that people do not suffer in times of economic depression such as we have now. We have fought for pensions for old people in this country so that they can lead a decent life in their old age. We have fought for Family Allowances, a fight in which the Tory Party has not joined hands, the six and five debate. We also fought for the development of medicare. Which of those items—Unemployment Insurance, pensions, Family Allowances medicare—does the Hon. Member decry the NDP for having fought for in this House?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do agree with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) that the New Democratic Party, in conjunction with the Liberal Party, has been effective. It has certainly been effective in putting Canada on the brink of bankruptcy.

Where do we start cutting down the costs of Government? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James is quite right in pointing out that some of the social programs we have in this country are very expensive. If you examine the budget, you find that we spend much more on these items, which are really within the provincial domain, than we do on national defence, for example.

Let us take medicare. Not long ago I talked to a group of doctors. They pointed out that 50 per cent of medicare payments are in respect of families with medical expenses of less than $250 per year. There is one obvious item where we can cut down our expenditures. If a family in Canada was obliged to pay the first $250 of any medical bill, we could cut by 50 per cent the amount of money paid to doctors under the medicare scheme. That is a very good example of how we could at least commence this process.

ed3112;-1 Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to address a question to the Hon. Member. Is he enunciating official Conservative policy when he makes that kind of statement?

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party has always been known for its responsibility in the field of Government finance. What I said today was said in the very same way by the Hon. Member for St. John's West when as Minister of Finance he brought in the Conservative budget. If the Members of the New Democratic Party want to know where we stand on financial affairs and financial responsibilities, I suggest they pull out the 1979 budget and have a look. They will see how, without causing undue difficulties to Canadians, the expenditure of revenues of the Government of Canada can in a period of years be brought into line.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a short question to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic regarding PIP grants. The Government has set aside $1.5 billion in the last year to assist in frontier oil development and exploration which goes primarily to the foreign multinational oil companies, not Canadian oil companies. Does he agree with the principle of that kind of support to these kinds of companies?

Mr. Nickerson: No, sir, I do not support the way in which the Government of Canada has gone about the idea of PIP grants. The Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party have said many times that the solution to the oil and gas supply problems in Canada would be the nationalization of the companies engaged in that business. I certainly do not agree with that approach, as I do not agree with the approach taken by the Liberal Party.

The approach which I would like to see would not be PIP grants. I would like to see a simplified system of taxation in Canada whereby Canadians could gather themselves together to form oil and gas companies and explore for and produce oil and gas. If they were successful in a very risky undertaking, as the oil and gas business is, then they would derive profits from that venture and would be able to keep a fair amount of those profits. It would not be a confiscatory taxation system like we have today. If the taxation system was amended, then there would be no need for PIP grants. I do not like PIP grants any more than my colleagues to my left.

Mr. Keeper: I have a supplementary question for the Member for Western Arctic. I asked the Hon. Member whether he applauded or decried the fight of the New Democratic Party for Unemployment Insurance, pensions, Family Allowances and medicare. He indicated those are provincial responsibilities, and that we really needed to spend more on national defence at this level of Government. Does the Hon. Member not realize that those are precisely the priorities and policies of Ronald Reagan, the President of the United States, the gentleman who has dragged us all into this depression today?

Mr. Nickerson: That, Mr. Speaker, is a misrepresentation of what I said. I was comparing the amount of money contained in the federal budget for national defence, for social programs and other areas. I did not advocate an increase in the national defence budget.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I still did not get an answer to the question I asked the Hon. Member for Western Arctic a few moments ago. In fact, he has been giving answers which are nearly as good as the slippery ones we get from his bed partners across the way. Is it official Tory policy that individuals in Canada would be required to pay $250 in medical fees first before they would become eligible for medicare payments?

Mr. Nickerson: No, Mr. Speaker, that has not been adopted as the official policy of the Conservative Party of Canada, but it will be as soon as I am made Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap on the last supplementary question.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, a quick question to my hon. friend for Western Arctic. The Hon. Member referred to his concern about unemployment which we in this Party share wholeheartedly. He also referred to the solutions of the Progressive Conservative Party back in 1979. I wonder if the Hon. Member would support the application today of the programs which the Conservative Party brought in when they were in power, and that was to terminate all of the direct job-creation projects in Canada? In other words, every single job-creation project which had been restored to this country was terminated. Is that the kind of approach to job creation he would suggest?

Mr. Nickerson: That, Mr. Speaker, is absolute nonsense. That never was the policy of this Party. It was not advocated by our Minister of Finance when he was in office. The approach which we would like to see taken is to get the economy healthy in all areas, and once you do that and once you have the citizens of Canada productively engaged, you do not need all those make-work schemes. That is the policy which we advocate in this Party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher). The time is running out.

Mr. Fisher: Very good, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to compliment the people on the other side and tell them how good they are when they get off scandals and back on to the economy.

Mr. Keeper: I wonder if the Hon. Member for Western Arctic does not realize that when his Party was in office it eliminated direct job-creation programs, and in fact a fellow Member of his Party, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), has admitted in a press conference that his Party eliminated the direct job-creation program when in office.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Western Arctic. A very brief comment.

Mr. Nickerson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it might have eliminated them in the riding of Winnipeg-St. James, and I can well understand that, but it certainly did not eliminate them in the federal constituency of Western Arctic.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and answers has expired. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae).

Mr. Harquail: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and answers has expired.

Mr. Harquail: That is what my point of order is about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail).

Mr. Harquail: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, because the Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not raising a point of order; he is entering into debate.

Mr. Harquail: You cannot rule on it before I state it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member is engaging in debate, he cannot make the excuse of a point of order. If he has a legitimate point of order, he may state it.

Mr. Harquail: I would be delighted to state it. Thank you Mr. Speaker for your courtesy. My point of order is with respect to the fact that three Members of the New Democratic Party consecutively had the floor. We did not—

Mr. Deans: You did not rise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not making a point of order. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is, perhaps, the fifteenth or sixteenth borrowing Bill which I have participated in over the last ten years. I feel there are some features of this borrowing Bill and of the Government's demands which are very common to all of those years. When we are looking for $5 billion for this fiscal year, 1982-83, and then another $14 billion for the next fiscal year, as a portion of what the estimated requirements may be, we are doing what we were doing for many, many years. We are borrowing because we require to transfer large amounts of money to Canadians in one form or another, basically, and this keeps the economy at least going at some rate.

I believe we should really try and understand what the Government's Estimates mean. Of the total $85 billion or $86 billion required, 72 per cent is in the form of a transfer to Provinces or municipalities and to the Canadian people. Twenty-eight per cent, in round figures, is to be used by the Government itself. In other words, it is what economists sometimes call "money spent on goods and services". That includes Defence as well as the whole operations of the Government. I have included transfers in that 28 per cent to Crown corporations because I think they legitimately are part of the Government's operations. However, the other 78 per cent is a transfer to Canadians in one form or another, either through another level of Government or directly.

The large increases this year, 17 per cent or 18 per cent in those particular expenditures, are in the areas of transfers to people and transfers to the Provinces. Basically, these are caused by the world recession. The big additional costs are not caused by inflation but by the fact that we have much larger expenditures because of Unemployment Insurance, the need for welfare and so on.

There is no one in this House who would not say that unemployment was one of the major problems of our time. Perhaps, next to the danger of a nuclear holocaust, it is the most pressing problem that faces Canadians.

We have to find ways of creating more jobs. In all our communities people are despairing because they cannot find work. In Thunder Bay, 17 or 18 per cent of the population is unemployed and the situation is becoming desperate for a lot of families. It is not simply a matter of being unemployed for a short while and drawing Unemployment Insurance; some people are running out of benefits and are not able to make housing payments and so on. This can be a disaster for them. It seems to me that the Government has to spend more money and increase the deficit if we are to solve the problem.

We should look at the deficit itself, which is what the borrowing authority Bill deals with, and see if it is a short-term deficit that we are concerned about. In other words, whether, if we had a period of growth free from pressure, the deficit would go away or it is a long-term deficit that would continue no matter what happens to growth.

A group at the University of Toronto headed by Professors Bossons and Dungan has conducted a fairly extensive study of the problem and I received a draft of their report in December. It was also given a good deal of prominence last weekend on the first page of the business section of The Globe and Mail. The study indicated that with the tax regime that we put into place in 1978-79, and if the economy had continued with the growth expected for 1979-80, we would have had a small surplus this year. This is very different from what we find to be the case in the United States, where the congressional office of the budget indicated that the American deficit, with no recession, would be in the area of $90 billion. A Wall Street estimate puts it at $60 billion. It would be a long-term, structural deficit. The University of Toronto study indicates that our deficit would not be a long-term, structural deficit.

It would be interesting to look at the statistics for 1979-80 when the deficit was 4.8 per cent of the Gross National Product; by 1981-82 it had gone down to 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product. Then the recession came along.

One of the interesting things about the recession is that the real reason for the growing deficit is not major Government spending—although it is perhaps a factor in 30 or 40 per cent of it—but declining revenues as a result of so many people being unemployed.

If the study is correct—I think it is, and certainly the size of the deficit as a percentage of GNP between 1978 and 1982 would indicate that the study is correct and that we would have a surplus today if we had not had a recession—then we are talking about a relatively short-term type of deficit and not a structural one. That being the case, the economists are saying that it is not a dangerous thing for us to increase the deficit if we do so in order to create work.

This is the fact that I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) ought to consider very carefully. The deficit, as a function of the Gross National Product at this point, would be somewhere in the area of 8 per cent. During World War II it ran as high as 25 per cent in one year, so 8 per cent is not an undue amount, given the strains on the economy. If the deficit were allowed to rise to 10 or 11 per cent of GNP, in the short term only, it would not be a very dangerous thing. I think a lot of economists might say that it is necessary at this time.

There is another factor that is related to unemployment and the deficit and that is the rate of personal savings. Personal savings as a function of gross personal earnings are something in the order of 13 per cent, about double that of the United States where it is about 6.9 per cent. If is of some consolation to those concerned about inflation and higher interest rates that this figure is so high and that gross personal earnings are about three-quarters of the GNP.

With this large amount of saving, there is some room for manoeuvre in terms of putting pressure on the economy as far as inflation or interest rates are concerned. The very high level of savings is a significant factor in slowing the economy down. So much money is going into savings and not into consumption at this time that I think most economists would say that the problem is that not enough of the GNP is going into consumption. People are not buying. We will not get increased growth in the economy until there is growth in consumer spending.

I think there are two basic reasons why the personal savings ratio is so high. In the sixties it was about 3 or 4 per cent; now it is 13 per cent. One reason is that real interest rates are very high. If you subtract the inflation rate of 8.3 per cent from the prime rate of 11.5 per cent, you get a real interest rate of 3.2 per cent. That is not very realistic, of course, because inflation is much lower than that. For the last six months it has been running around 6 per cent, so you have real interest rates in the order of 5 and 6 per cent which are inordinately high. They would normally be below the 3 per cent level. Because real interest rates are high, people tend to put money into savings rather than spend it.

The other reason for the savings ratio being so high is that people are afraid of losing their jobs, so they are paying off their bills or reducing their mortgage at a faster rate. All these things point to personal insecurity.

It seems to me that the Government has to demonstrate to people who are afraid of losing their jobs that it will create more jobs. I suggest that we could do so by increasing the deficit. If people had the feeling that their job was not going to disappear or that there would be another one for them, then I think some of that insecurity would be dispelled. People would tend to feel they could consume more durables, such as cars, refrigerators or housing.

Again, lower interest rates would stimulate the housing market. What are the options open to the Minister? I know there is a reluctance among many Canadians to expand the deficit, but more and more members of the business community are saying that this may be necessary. I think we should keep in mind the situation which I mentioned, that the deficit is a relatively short-term one, not a structural deficit. Therefore, it can be expanded without creating some structural problems if we do it on a short-term basis. I am suggesting a fairly massive amount of spending to create fairly short-term jobs.

There are some factors which should be taken into consideration in the area of spending to create employment. The projects on which we spend should be fairly large in labour content. This is pretty obvious. Perhaps many of them could be in the public sector, but they should trigger a great deal of activity in the private sector. Again I am thinking of things such as the construction of homes. The projects should be valuable. I am not talking about make-work projects; I am talking about infrastructure in terms of sewage and what communities need; valuable things which must be done. As a matter of fact, if we think about this over a long period of time, we should have a good inventory in the country of the kind of things which could be done when unemployment rises.

A few days ago when I asked the Minister a question, he replied by indicating that these should be very short-term projects. We are not talking about long-term megaprojects because we do not want to create long-term structural increases in the deficit. We want to ensure that these are fairly short-term. Assuming that the world picks up—and things appear to be doing so both in Canada and in the United States; our foreign trade picture is very good at this point, indicating that this is happening—in the long term all of us must share a great deal of concern about the whole unemployment problem. If we had a growth picture of 4 per cent to 6 per cent in the next year or so, I think it would have a good effect upon the economy but might not do very much for the labour market or create jobs. The idea of giving people meaningful work to allow them to be part of the Canadian economy is tremendously important.

What will we do about this in the long term? If it becomes impossible to create a lot more meaningful work, perhaps we should take a look at the total labour force, the amount of available work, and do some adjusting. Over the last hundred years, the adjustment has been done by shorter hours. It seems to me that this stopped at a certain point. Perhaps a 40-hour week is reasonable; perhaps it should be reduced; perhaps there are other ways of doing it. It does not seem to be a reasonable proposition, in terms of equity to Canadians, that one segment of the population would work eight hours per day for 40 years and another smaller segment would never get plugged in at all. Working and being part of the nation are synonymous; they are very closely related. We must talk about some form of work-sharing over the long term.

This does not necessarily mean that Canadians will take home less. Perhaps some of the productivity gained might be distributed differently from taking home more money. Perhaps it could be in terms of doing less work. This is the kind of thing about which we have to think over a long period of time. There is no question that technology is moving at a very fast rate and that we are getting into a situation where it is becoming more and more difficult, no matter what the growth situation, to create necessary jobs.

In conclusion, certainly the studies I have seen indicate that we are talking about a short-term, non-structural deficit. It is very, very large; it is 8 per cent or 9 per cent of our Gross National Product but certainly nothing like the 25 per cent of the GNP which was used during the war. It can be expanded to create jobs in a meaningful way over a short period of time. Over the long period of time, we must look at different approaches toward ensuring that Canadians in Thunder Bay and in all cities throughout the country are part of the entire national wealth-making process. They should share in part of it and become part of the work force. There is some equity in that area.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions for the Hon. Member?

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. In his introductory remarks—and I believe it was in the first sentence—he mentioned that this was his fifteenth or sixteenth borrowing Bill. I have shared those 15, 16 or whatever the number is with him.

Mr. Cosgrove: And your constituents too.

Mr. Jarvis: I do not need any help from the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove)—

Mr. Cosgrove: I think you do.

Mr. Jarvis: —nor does the country. During that period one thing which we shared in common was that those borrowing Bills either followed a financial statement or followed within a reasonable time a budget. I think the Hon. Member will agree.

Also he will be familiar with the statement of the previous Minister of Finance. He was a Minister with whom I had occasion to disagree on almost every item, but I think he enunciated what the Hon. Member and I experienced during those 15 or 16 borrowing Bills. In committee he said:

> I would not expect the House to act upon an additional request for borrowing authority without providing it with detailed information on the economic situation and the implications of that situation on the Government's fiscal situation.

Then he went on to elaborate. He enunciated what I thought was completely familiar, if not a convention or principle. Is the Hon. Member comfortable with what I consider to be a very dramatic departure from what he and I experienced during those 15 or 16 Bills?

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I find this period of our economic history to be one of great discomfort. I am not comfortable at all about the situation, and I am sure the Government is not comfortable as well. We are in a period which is sort of without precedent. We are not quite in a recession and we are not out of a recession; we do not know whether it is a depression or what it is. Most of the normal Keynesian and other approaches to monetary policy are working as they should.

I am not sure but it seems to me there were several times when we asked for certain amounts of borrowing which did not immediately follow budgets. I sympathize with the Hon. Member's problem, but one must put oneself in the shoes of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) at this particular point. He is not sure—and I think correctly so—just what is the situation at the moment. One would assume from the United States figures and from some of the figures for the last quarter which we received this week that things are on the mend and that we may not have to do that much stimulating.

On the other hand, we have had indications of this kind before. The United States went into the recession about two quarters before Canada. The U.S. seems to be out of it. However, Wall Street and analysts in the U.S. do not seem to be quite sure about that. Canada is about six months behind the U.S. in coming out of the recession. This is a natural phenomenon given the relationship between our two economies.

I believe the Minister is showing some wisdom by not bringing in a budget when we are not quite sure what the direction is. I defy Hon. Members opposite to tell me whether Canada is coming out of the recession, going back into recession or staying level. It is not a clear situation. The next budget will have to be a major effort. I do not see how the Minister can really do the job he should do in what I call a transition period.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) in the early part of his address mentioned that the major reason for the need of $19 billion in borrowing was declining revenues. Could the Hon. Member substantiate that statement with figures, particularly those given in the address of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when he introduced the Bill?

Mr. McRae: As I recall reading the address, I did not see a figure. However, when we had an increase in the deficit in the June 28 budget, it showed that the deficit would rise to $19.1 billion from $9.6 billion, I believe. The difference between the two figures is approximately $9.8 billion. I have forgotten what it is exactly, but it is something in that order.

The difference between the numbers, the projected November number and the number projected in June, is $9.6 billion. By breaking down that number you would find that $4 out of every $5 was caused by decreased revenue. I do not have a later figure. I am saying now that the figure is probably $3 out of every $4. I could put some time into the calculations and produce a figure. It startled me at the time in June. I went over the numbers very carefully and found that $4 out of every $5 of the increase—not of the deficit but the increase—was caused by declining revenues.

Mr. Gamble: I have a question for the Hon. Member. He has been in this House since 1972. Does he view the current deficit as not being long term and structural, having regard to the fact that since the Hon. Member has been in this House the deficit has steadily increased? Today we are shocked by the prediction of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) himself that next year the deficit will be even greater than this year. The Minister suggests it could be $29 billion. We could, of course, anticipate that figure to be lower than what it will be.

We now have a national debt of something in the order of $120 billion to $125 billion. We know the Auditor General has advised us that added to those figures must necessarily be the realistic appraisal of letters of comfort and guarantees which have been given to Crown corporations. If they were properly valued, it would show that there is in the neighbourhood of another $40 billion to be added. We know from the Minister of Finance himself that next year we will have a potential minimum deficit of $29 billion.

Having regard to the Hon. Members' service in this House since 1972 until today, and even anticipating next year, have we not seen a long term, persistent structural deficit manipulated by the Government that he has served?

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, I will have to call upon my memory for the earlier years, but it seems to me that from 1972 to 1975 we ran small surpluses or very small deficits, something in the order of half a billion dollars one way or the other.

The deficit took off when we indexed exemptions. This was done at the strong suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition Party at that time. We also indexed old age pensions and so on. We created a decline in revenue and an increase in expenditures. That caused a fairly large deficit increase which grew from 1975 to 1979.

Earlier when I spoke I said that in 1979-1980 the deficit was 4.8 per cent of the Gross National Product. That deficit, however, as a function of the Gross National Product—and unless we talk about the Gross National Product, there is no point dealing with this—declined by 1981-1982 to 2.5 per cent of the Gross National Product. We put a tax regime in place in a period which caused some decline. For instance, one of the nice borrowing bills I have had to talk about was one where we actually had to borrow less than we anticipated in the previous budget.

I refer also to the paper produced by the Institute for Policy Analysis at the University of Toronto. The group that put out that paper took 1979 figures and projected them. They show a small surplus. The amount of that surplus will vary, depending upon how you take the study. I saw a figure of about $1.3 billion, but it would be a figure in that order, a very small surplus.

Compare that with the American situation. The Americans have two components which we do not have. The Americans have a very large tax decrease and a very large increase in defence spending. Those two factors have created a structural component to the deficit which is very dangerous. From all the figures I have, I do not think we have that kind of structural component in our deficit.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period of questions and answers has expired. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). I see the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate that my colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party wish to ask questions of Members on the Government side.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is reflecting on the Chair's decision with regard to this period of ten minutes, or he appears to be. I call the attention of the House to the very difficult position of the Chair. The Chair has attempted as fairly as possible to apportion questions. The Hon. Member's Party had three questions. The Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) complained, although he had not risen himself, and again reflected on the Chair in so doing.

I am appealing to Hon. Members to recognize that the Chair is trying hard to be fair and will continue to do so, but it is difficult.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not questioning your decision at all. I simply want to draw to your attention and to the attention of Members of the House that, in the interests of fair play, I believe that if the present policy were followed Members of the New Democratic Party or backbenchers of the Government would never have an opportunity to ask questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is reflecting on the Chair. The Hon. Member should know better than to do that. With all due respect, the proportions that are normally respected are three questions for the Official Opposition to one question for the Hon. Member's Party. Had there been a fourth Member recognized, the Hon. Member's Party would have been recognized. Every opportunity is offered to Members on the Government side. In a previous exchange the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher), the only Member who rose on that side who caught the eye of the Chair, was recognized. The Chair appeals to Hon. Members to recognize the difficult position of the Chair and the attempt to be impartial.

Mr. Keeper: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) has a legitimate point of order, he will be heard. The Chair appeals to Hon. Members not to raise false points of order.

Mr. Keeper: To put my point of order very briefly, Mr. Speaker, without reflecting on the Chair whatever, could we seek unanimous consent of the House to allow one question by this Party?

• (1450)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At this stage, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I just want to clarify the matter of the exchange. Perhaps you could help us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member raising a point of order or entering into debate?

Mr. Harquail: I want to make it clear. My point of order is no reflection on the Chair. That is my first point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member has reflected on the Chair. The Chair now recognizes the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, now that I have the floor, and it being Friday afternoon, I hope that at the end of my speech all Members can be treated alike and perhaps we should have no questions.

I am pleased to speak on this Bill. In my remarks I wish to deal a little with the recession that was mentioned by the previous speaker. I want to say something about the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I would also like to talk about Government spending priorities and its economic policy, or lack of it. As well, I want to say something about Government waste and the jobs it gives to its boys like the Pitfields and the Gillespies. I will also deal with the job-creation program and, if time permits, I will point out the contradiction of the Conservative alternative. Finally, I would like to make some suggestions about what should be done in both the long and short term in order to get the Canadian economy back on track. Time permitting, I will deal with some of the remarks made by the Bishops which I consider important and thoughtful.

We have before us another borrowing authority Bill. I have not had a chance to talk about 16 borrowing authority bills as the Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) said he has. I think this one is enough. It is the fourth Bill of its kind in eight months. Other borrowing authority Bills were introduced in June, 1982 for $6.6 billion, in July, 1982 for $7 billion and in November, 1982 for $4 billion. This Bill is asking for $19 billion, $5 billion of which is to be used to get through the fiscal year. The remaining $14 billion is to be used as interim funds for the period ending October, 1983.

In effect, the Government is asking for this money without producing a financial statement. That is tantamount to writing the Government a blank cheque. That is hardly a policy that our Party could endorse.

While this amount is relatively high when compared to other borrowing requests, it is not unprecedented. However, the manner in which the Government is proceeding with this Bill is noteworthy. Thomas Walkom wrote in The Globe and Mail:

> While it is not unheard of for a Government to ask for some interim borrowing authority, a $14 billion request without a budget is unprecedented.

This is why our Party has proposed an amendment to this Bill. The amendment asks that the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for further study before we give the Government a blank cheque. I believe that is the only reasonable and proper thing to do. I urge Hon. Members to support the amendment.

I said that I would talk about the recession since it was referred to by the previous speaker. If I had been able to ask him a question, I would have asked how many were unemployed in his area of Thunder Bay. I do not know how many are unemployed there but I know how many are unemployed in my Province of British Columbia. In that Province, 16 per cent of the work force is unemployed. That is a shameful figure.

We must remember that it is the Government that created this recession. It just did not happen; it is a Government-created recession. While it is partly true when the Government says that there is a world recession, it is not completely true. When one reviews the statistics, one sees that Canada had the worst rate of growth last year of all the OECD countries, that is the industrialized countries in the western world. Our rate of growth was minus 5 per cent, which is last in the list of those countries. We should be near the top when we consider our natural resources and our skilled labour force, but we are last.

We are last because the Government zapped the economy. As a result of the action of the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Gerald Bouey, and successive Ministers of Finance, interest rates were raised so high in order to squeeze inflation out in the economy that the economy was zapped. That policy is called monetarism. We have monetarist policies in Canada as well as in the United States and the United Kingdom. As a result of this policy there have been 600,000 jobs lost in the last year and a half. That is a real tragedy.

Mr. Harquail: Privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Waddell: I wish the Hon. Member would sit down and let me finish my speech. He can ask me questions afterwards.

Mr. Harquail: I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway has the floor. I suggest that the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) seek the floor at the end of the speech or at some other appropriate moment if he has a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Harquail: Those are the rules, Mr. Speaker. A question of privilege has to be heard if a question of privilege is requested. I request that you hear it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Restigouche.

Mr. Harquail: That is the rule. Mr. Speaker, I would refer you to the Standing Orders and Procedure Committee, specifically Issue No. 7 which clearly states that the Chair should give priority during the ten-minute question period to Members representing Parties other than that of the Member who has just spoken. It states: "Your committee recommends and emphasizes that it sees these ten-minute periods as being used for questions and answers and critical exchanges."

I regret very much to have been drawn into this, except for the fact that you just stated, Mr. Speaker, with great respect, that three Members of the NDP had held the floor for those ten minutes and we were on this side of the House. The previous speaker was the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). This is the very point we are having difficulty with.

I would only conclude, in begging your indulgence for a favourable decision on this, that you should not assume when a Member is going to stand up. You cannot know if a Member is going to stand. I submit that you will never be able to anticipate whether I am going to stand up or not. However, when I do stand, I do request that I be given the same fair consideration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the Hon. Member resume his seat. If the Hon. Member had a question of privilege, it should have been raised at that moment. He should not wait and then interrupt another Hon. Member's speech at a later point in the proceedings.

If there is a question about the order, the Chair has scrupulously attempted to observe a fair distribution of questions in the ten-minute period. The Chair noted at one particular point that only Members of one Party in the Opposition were rising. The Chair looked and did not see any Members on the Government side. The Chair did see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) and recognized him at the appropriate time. When the Parliamentary Secretary rose, the Member for Restigouche may or may not have attempted to rise. He had not risen previously.

It was the discretion of the Chair to recognize the Member who caught the Speaker's eye. With all due respect to the Hon. Member, there is no question of privilege and there is no point of order. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway has the floor.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Waddell: I wish the Member would settle down. I say in good faith that I know there is a lot of tension in the House. I am trying to make—

Mr. Harquail: I do not need the Hon. Member's help. You are one of the smart guys around here. You have the reputation of having the mouth and being the smart guy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask the Hon. Member for Restigouche to resume his seat. The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Harquail: You are just a smart guy. Don't try to tell me.

Mr. Waddell: That is disgraceful.

Mr. Harquail: You talk about the eight-minute tape.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member observe the decorum of the House of Commons.

Mr. Harquail: I always do.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to analyze what I thought were some of the problems with respect to the Government's present approach to this terrible recession we are in. I was making the point that I thought that the Government's spending priorities were wrong. The Government has, in fact, cut back on social programs through its six and five program. This six and five program is making those people who can least afford it fight the battle. It is the wrong battle. In other words, pensioners, women, children and retired civil servants, retired RCMP and so on, are forced to receive less money than they would normally receive from the Government. This is happening at a time when the Government should be putting more money into their pockets, which would cause them to spend more and would stimulate our economy. The main fight is not against inflation, and I think anyone would recognize that if they looked around. The main fight now is against unemployment.

• (1500)

Let us not have a Government policy, namely the six and five policy, which is mainly meant to fight inflation, because it is using the wrong people to fight it. The Government has also abdicated its responsibility. The Hon. Member for Restigouche might want to listen a little bit and he might learn something.

Mr. Harquail: You have nothing to tell us. You have never had anything to say.

Mr. Waddell: I wonder why there are so many unemployed in New Brunswick.

Mr. Harquail: I would not want to listen to you or hear anything you have to say.

Mr. Waddell: I think one of the problems is that the Government has an economic policy which has allowed the Bank of Canada to focus on inflation in a single-minded attack on inflation which has, in fact, brought down the economy. In the last year, there have been 11,000 business bankruptcies. The economy is running at 70 per cent capacity and approximately two million Canadians are out of work. I am saying that the Government should focus on job creation and no longer on inflation-fighting matters.

Concerning job creation, the Government is in real trouble. It gives the appearance to the people that there are jobs for the boys, like Mr. Gillespie and Mr. Macdonald. There are all sorts of other examples—

Mr. Sargeant: Mr. Pitfield.

Mr. Waddell: —like Mr. Pitfield, and so on. These people are paid really inflated salaries when the average Canadian, such as people in Vancouver-Kingsway and other people in ridings of other Hon. Members, are suffering. We do not like to see this. In the long run, it will be absolutely fatal to the Government. This Government is finished, morally and politically, if it continues operating in that manner.

I want to say something about what should be done. We should make jobs the first priority. Second, I do not think we should be asking people to lower their expectations, as the Government has been doing. We must ask the people to raise their expectations, to think about working in decent jobs and spending some money. We are working at about 70 per cent capacity in our manufacturing industry. We must put some money in the hands of the consumer fairly quickly. The budget which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) will introduce should have short-term stimulative measures.

Believe it or not, I met with people from the Chamber of Commerce, the Labour Congress, and people in Toronto, Winnipeg, Sudbury, Edmonton and Vancouver. I am sorry I did not get to New Brunswick, but I hope I will. Those people will probably reflect the same feelings. Across the country, the people said that the budget should provide some stimulation. I think the Hon. Member would agree that we should stimulate the people, put some money in people's pockets and get them working again. That concerns the short term. What kind of stimulation should there be? It should not be in the Government's present job creation program. I do not have the time to go into detail, but I have an analysis of these programs, and let me just say that they have scarcely made a dent in unemployment. The Government spends about $1 million on 13 separate programs. It costs about $14,000 to create a full-time job. For Mr. Gillespie it costs $1.4 million, but for everyone else it costs $14,000 to create one full-time job. When one really considers it, the Government has created about 72,000 jobs. I just said that we have lost 500,000 jobs in the last year. Those programs, such as the Canadian Development Program, the Outreach project, the LEDA project and the summer works project, are short-term. Surely, students want the summer works project. People want anything that they can get. Some people are desperate and will take anything. However, these are not good jobs.

By "good short-term jobs" we mean and we are considering direct stimulation to the housing industry which puts plumbers and carpenters to work. In my riding, the carpenters told me that they are itching to get to work. Inter-rail transit is a good investment. If the Government has indicated that, and if it could just change its view on the Crow rate and keep it on rail investment, it would be doing the right thing. Concerning the forest industry, reforestration, machinery producing, and so on, should be taken into consideration. In the energy sector, there is room for short-term jobs in energy audits, in fixing up and making energy secure for all our housing in Canada. There is room for major public investment programs in short-term projects, which is better than the Government's present short-term job creation programs. I put that forward both to the Hon. Member for Restigouche, now that he has calmed down, and to the Minister of Finance, to consider as a real and positive alternative.

I do not know if any Hon. Members have read a new book by John Naisbitt entitled "Megatrends". The book says that there are only three count ries in the industrialized world, the United Kingdom, the United States, and Canada, which have not accepted the notion of long-term planning. This is where I depart from my friends to the right, because we in the NDP say that it is about time we considered the notion of long-term planning in Canada. It can be done. We must do it or we will fall as a nation. We will have the worst growth record. It can be done and we must build our strengths. We must build on the fact that we have resources. However, we should not just export our resources to the United States or to Japan. We should start manufacturing some of our resources, making use of our resources in Canada, and this should be part of our industrial strategy. It must be regionalized. There must be a strategy for New Brunswick, for example. It may involve shipbuilding. There must be a strategy for Newfoundland on oil and offshore exploration. There must be a strategy in my part of the country involving the forestry industry and the great opportunities for trade in the Pacific Rim. It can be done, but we must do it in all seriousness and plan it.

I attended a committee meeting yesterday at which Senator Jack Austin testified. While we are considering these important matters in the House, we must not forget that a guy like Senator Austin is taking care of $2 billion or $3 billion of investment in the CDIC, the Canadian Development Investment Corporation, which is involved with many of these Government companies, like Teleglobe, de Havilland, Canadair, El Dorado and some of the other companies. That corporation could become an element of Government planning in Canada. That is what other countries have done and that is what we will eventually do. It is no use to turn to the right wing rhetoric of the Reaganites or the Thatcherites. The future belongs to a more planned economy. I do not know how much more time I will have left in which to speak. I was interrupted.

Mr. Lapointe: One minute. And it is too much.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair intends to allow another three minutes to the Hon. Member, making allowance for the interruptions.

Mr. Lapointe: It is plenty.

Mr. Waddell: I would like to conclude by suggesting to Hon. Members that they consider what the Catholic Bishops said in their recent statement. They said that economic decisions involve moral choices and that without a vision of what kind of society one is intending to create, the people in this society tend to be treated as "an impersonal force having little or no significance beyond their economic purpose in the system". That is a challenge for all Hon. Members in the House. I heard the Hon. Member who spoke previously mention the words "meaningful work". What is that in a high tech society? I do not have the solution. I am worried about the high tech society. How are we to retain our existing steel, rubber, coal and other industries without selling them out completely to a high tech and robotized industrial system? We should consider what the Bishops say concerning principles. We adopt the principles. We can figure out the technical details later.

Mr. Cosgrove: Keep the people working.

Mr. Waddell: They say that people have been deprived of the right to work by creating mass unemployment, that the industrial base for the heartland of the country has been destroyed by looking to mega resource retraction as the surest way to prosperity. That policy has fallen, a spin-off from megaprojects, being an industrial strategy. That has gone. Thirdly, the Bishops said that we have asked those least able to keep up with inflation, such as pensioners, to bear the burden of the fight against inflation, while providing people who have money to invest with greater ways of ensuring the highest return. This was referring to the loans to Dome Petroleum and some of these companies; and some of these grants to Alastair Gillespie, and so on. Finally, they said we have cut back on the essential needs of people through health care cutbacks and cutbacks in the funding of education, and also cutting off the legitimate voice of the working people in this country by excluding the concerns of labour from the policy-making bodies of Government. These are all the things they have said that we are doing wrong. I will sum up with a quote. I notice that my friend is heckling me there. He is a very strongly religious person, I think, occasionally. The Biblical quote is that old men shall dream dreams and young men shall see visions and where there are no visions, the people doth perish. The vision we have to have is, first, full employment. Second, we have to have an effective industrial strategy based on protecting existing jobs and creating new jobs and fitting them into this new high tech society. Third, we have to continue to lower our interest rates to stimulate the economy and start short-term job stimulation as well in the areas I have suggested. Finally, we have to bring labour into the whole process by finding a new means of having unions, management and Government co-operate with each other.

These are general ideas, but I think it is appropriate to express them when I am speaking to a Bill that asks for a borrowing of some $19 billion.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member who has just spoken has given a lot of attention to the remarks of the ethical political philosophy of six Catholic Bishops of Canada. I would like to ask the Hon. Member, in the context of political morality, what was the political morality of his Party when, in this House in the last 18 months, his Party voted against $500 million addressed toward the Canada Home Ownership Plan, $300 million addressed toward the Canada Rental Supply Plan; $100 million addressed toward the rehabilitation of Canadian homes, and $50 million addressed toward the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan? All of these plans were addressed either to give jobs to people, to provide affordable accommodation, or to assist them in retaining their homes. What was the ethical principle that motivated his Party to vote against these plans, to delay their implementation for six months, thereby depriving people of employment and affordable homes?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the answer is fairly simple. The fact is that most of those particular programs have passed, as I understand it, and these were programs that were to put all the people back to work in the housing industry. I think that was the idea. We said that would not be done with those programs. In my riding there is 24 per cent unemployment amongst the carpenters in the area. Why? Because they are not working in housing, because the housing programs are not working. What we suggested was that these programs were not very workable, they were inequitable programs, and there were better programs. I think the proof of the pudding is in the eating. The programs have passed. Is the housing industry booming in Canada right now? You can bet your bottom dollar that it is not.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, how can the Hon. Member who just answered the question possibly say that the programs are not working when he well full knows that the $500 million addressed to the Canada Home Ownership Plan has been described as the most positive and successful and costly plan of housing that Canada has known, and has been responsible for 150,000 new housing starts in this country in the last eight months?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I do not know who has described it as such. Perhaps the Minister's Department did, or one of his very well paid public relations people in one of their brochures or one of their advertisements. All I can tell you is that in my riding there is need for homes and there are carpenters not working and homes are not being constructed. We have a co-operative group in the riding, called Columbia Housing. They have line-ups of people who want to build co-operatives. I did not say that the Minister has not done anything. He has tried things, but they have been a drop in the bucket, like the Government's job creation program. It is, if I might say, a typical Liberal response. It is, sort of, go this way, go back, go forward, drop a little here and drop a little there. There is no co-ordinated long-term program. That is the problem with modern day Liberalism, which is why, like the dinosaurs, it will soon be extinct.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). If I understood his presentation correctly, on behalf of the New Democratic Party he was advocating an even greater stimulative deficit. He wanted to spend even more Government money in order to create employment.

If that were to take place, there are two alternatives. Either the Government can borrow or print more money, and if that is the way that he would like to get these revenues, I would like him to tell us how much, in addition to the already high deficit, he is prepared to go, or, secondly, the Government must increase taxation. So is his policy similar to that of the new New Democratic Party Government in Manitoba, which has just recently increased sales taxes, put taxes on employment, increased tobacco and liquor taxes and all other kinds of taxes on the people of Manitoba?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of questions there. First of all, I did not use the words "stimulative deficit". I think it was the Hon. Member from Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) in a previous incarnation who used the words "stimulative deficit" when he advocated that.

The deficit, as I see it, is the product of shrinking revenues plus all the UIC and welfare payments. It seems to me that we should not focus on the immediate short-term deficit so as to be able to say that we cannot do anything because the deficit may go up. I agree with what the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) said about the deficit during World War II when we had a huge deficit and when we were priming the economy. We eventually got that money back, and I think that will happen again. We will get it back if we can put people to work. So it is proper not to focus on the deficit. We should talk instead about job creation.

With respect to Manitoba I understand that Manitoba still has the second lowest sales tax in the country, but what I think some of the Provinces need, frankly, is to take a look at the budget where one alternative would be—and I am not adopting this, it is only my own suggestion, but it is something that I think the Minister of Finance might look at—the idea of rebating some of the money to the Provinces so that they could reduce their sales tax.

If a Province like Manitoba or British Columbia or some of the other Provinces that are strapped for cash could rebate some of that money, then they might be able to reduce their sales taxes or stimulate the economy in other ways, or they might be able to stop cutbacks. For example, in my own Province there are needless and stupid cutbacks in education.

So what I am saying, to sum up, and it is not an easy answer, is: do not lose sleep over the deficit. I think it is the wrong focus.

I have only a minute in which to answer this, so I would like to send over to the Hon. Member the Australian Labour Party Program with respect to the deficit because I think it is excellent on this. I would ask him to have a look at it and I would be prepared to answer some questions and discuss the fiscal and monetary policy that is in there with him in private.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, as I put a question to the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), he spoke about my settling down. If the Hon. Member would not make inflammatory statements and talk about religious question—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the Hon. Member put his question and discuss the point.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the changes in the rules allow Members to make brief comments. They are not obliged to put questions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is relevance. The comments must be relevant to the matter under discussion.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I started out by talking about the relationship of a remark that was made earlier by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway. In the debate on Bill C-143 today, the Hon. Member was talking about the economy. Does he agree that in recent weeks the bank rate has dropped to 9.43 per cent and the prime rate to 11.25 per cent? The inflation rate, as confirmed by a statement by the Minister for Commerce and Development in the Ontario Legislature, is 6 per cent. Housing starts are up. The manufacture of cars is up, as is our export surplus.

• (1520)

In the television program "Question Period" the other day the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) stated, on behalf of the Conservative Party, that things are looking better, that there is a turnaround and an upswing in the economy. In light of statements by the Conference Board of Canada and the statement by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre, plus the fact that interest rates and inflation are down, does the Hon. Member admit that, because of the policies and efforts of this Government and what it has done to deal with these problems, there have been significant improvements? Does he admit that?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, let me first say that I did not make an inflammatory statement on religion. The statement was made by the Catholic Bishops. Second, the economic policies of this Liberal Government are an unmitigated disaster. They have zigged and they have zagged. They do not know in which direction they are going. If interest rates go up they blame it on the United States; if they go down, they take the credit.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but the period for questions and answers has expired. The Chair will recognize the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am wondering if you have the sequence correct. There was a Liberal who spoke and then an NDP Member. Does it not come after—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The sequence is correct. The next speaker will come from the Government side. This is the normal procedure of the House which is being followed. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) will be recognized following this speech.

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in the Bill before the House today, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is asking Parliament to give the Government a supplementary borrowing authority of $19 billion, namely, $5 billion for the year ending on March 31 and $14 billion for the coming year. Why do we have to borrow? Because Government expenditures exceed Government revenue. Those who would like further details regarding expenditures—

[English]

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With great respect to the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) is it not within the spirit of the new rules that Members should not read speeches prepared for them elsewhere?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Berger) has barely begun his speech. With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), I suggest that the Parliamentary Secretary should be allowed to proceed.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In the course of my speech Hon. Members will realize that I prepared it myself, whatever the Hon. Member may think.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, those who wanted further details on expenditures had a chance this week when the Main Estimates were tabled. That day, the spokesmen for the Progressive Conservative Party said that the expenditures were unconscionable.

[English]

Unconscionable is what the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) said.

He neglected to mention, Mr. Speaker, that expenditures cannot be cut drastically without hurting the unemployed, senior citizens and other Canadians who are in need. I would also point out to the Hon. Member that the Canadian system is somewhat different from what they have in the United States or Great Britain. In Canada we have health insurance and assistance plans, to name only two. A cursory glance at the Estimates reveals that the Federal Government's Social Affairs envelope represents 40.6 per cent of Government expenditures. In the coming year, there will be an increase of $6.1 billion or 20.7 per cent in this envelope. It includes the following items: first of all, for the Department of National Health and Welfare, increases totalling $2.5 billion will be applied to programs such as Old Age Security, Health Insurance and the Canada Assistance Plan.

There are also transfer payments to provincial governments, for instance, to finance established programs such as health insurance, medical and extended health care and post-secondary education. This year has also brought substantial increases in the expenditures of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, totalling $2.2 billion. This includes an additional $1.7 billion for unemployment insurance, $366 million for job creation and $237 million for training. The increases are in addition to the already substantial budget for the past year and, of course, before the budget the Minister of Finance is expected to bring down in a few weeks.

The Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Cosgrove), the former Minister of Public Works, spoke of increases that took place during the past year with respect to housing programs. These programs include the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan, which was mentioned by the Hon. Minister, the Canada Mortgage Renewal Plan, the Home Renovation Plan, the Canada Rental Supply Plan and co-operative housing measures.

I remember that last year, as many as 27,500 co-operative housing units were financed. There has been an increase of $483 million in funding for the coming year, and if we refer to 1982-83, we see an increase of $1.2 billion for housing or housing related assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the public is aware of the hypocrisy of the Progressive Conservative Members. In every debate in the House, they want the Government to do more and, at the same time, to cut spending. I would like to mention two examples which are fairly well-known to Canadians. First of all, in the debate on established programs financing, they demanded that the Government increase payments to the provinces, and second, when interest rates were high, they wanted the Government to help Canadians who were in danger of losing their homes. So whenever there is an issue that is important to Canadians, they want the Government to spend more, but on the other hand, they want the Government to cut spending. As I said before, Mr. Speaker, the public is aware of the hypocrisy in this attitude.

This week, we heard the former Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), who is once again campaigning for the leadership of his party, make some truly incredible remarks. He proposed massive Government spending on housing, roads, harbour facilities, airports and other public works, without giving any indication how much it would cost. At the same time, he suggested cutting spending in a number of areas. Representation costs would be cut by $10.4 million. Mr. Speaker, all companies spend money on what they refer to as travel and entertainment, and the Hon. Member wanted to cut $10 million. He wanted to cut the expenditures of the Canadian Unity Information Office by $25.5 million, while ignoring the fact that the CUIC's budget has already been cut this year. The Hon. Member also suggested a $50 million cut in the Government's expenditures on photocopying. I did not check whether the figures were accurate. I will let the Hon. Member for Yellowhead count the paper clips and sheets of paper used in Government offices.

[English]

I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) is in the House at this time. This morning, in one of his questions to the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail), he asked whether there were certain figures available, related to cash flow, or he was suggesting that they were not available. In reading the speech of the Hon. Member of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in opening this debate, I noticed he referred to the financial requirements of the Government being some $26 billion. At page 22920 of Hansard for February 17, the Minister observed that there would be an increase in the outstanding debt of the Government on an average of $2 billion every month. He also noted that the previously issued debt is coming due and must be refinanced every week; $1.25 billion in Treasury bills must be refinanced each week. The Minister indicated the importance of securing the borrowing authority which he is seeking at the present time, and he stated again, at page 22920 of Hansard:

—given the size of the financial operations . . . even a savings, of a small fraction of 1 per cent can imply significant dollar amounts. Since the major objective of debt management is to minimize public debt charges it is important that the borrowing program can be planned and operated in an orderly and efficient manner and that the Government have the flexibility to respond to attractive financial opportunities. Clearly, adequate borrowing authority is necessary for this to be achieved.

It is quite clear that if the Hon. Member for Capilano was asking for the cash flow figures, he had his answer in the speech of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) seeks to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Berger).

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my question can be answered with just a short statement. I thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for his help in replying to my question on cash flow put to the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail). It is very obvious from the answer and the explanations given by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that he, like the Government, does not have the slightest idea of what the cash flow is on a month-by-month basis, otherwise the Government would not be in so much trouble and its projections would not be so erroneous.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that I have not had the opportunity to make any inquiries of the Minister of Finance. I recognize that the $2 billion increase in the outstanding debt of the Government every month is only one component of the cash flow requirements of the Government. I would suggest that the answers could be very readily obtained, and that is not an adequate reason for holding up the study of this Bill and its quick passage, which the Minister of Finance is seeking.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is correct, and it is entirely possible that he is, I am wondering why the Comptrollers and Auditors General of Canada have been so concerned about this issue since 1976.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I respect the thorough study which the Hon. Member has given to the reports of the Comptrollers General and the Auditors General. I know they have made certain references to shortcomings in the financial management system of the Government, which the Government has taken steps to correct. I would like the Hon. Member to refer me to the relevant portion of their reports which refers to this particular problem, and perhaps we could engage in further discussion of this at some other time. I know that there is a Bill before this House, for example, which proposes to correct some of the problems regarding the accountability of Crown Corporations, about which I know the Hon. Member is concerned. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that it is important to give quick passage to some of the measures which are before the House so we can put some of them behind us and perhaps use them as a building block to resolve some of the other concerns which we all have.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the present federal borrowing as of now, beginning this fiscal year, is $163 billion more or less. Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary believe that that leads to higher or lower interest rates, and what effect does he think that higher interest rates are having upon the economy in terms of creating new jobs? Would the Parliamentary Secretary also tell us, given all the circumstances, what he feels the range of the deficit this year should be? For instance, a professor at McGill University, Sidney Ingerman, recently said he thought it should be in the $35 billion range. What range does the Parliamentary Secretary feel it should be, given the circumstances of the economy?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, I believe, referred to a figure of $163 billion—I cannot recall his exact words—as the total borrowing requirement of the Government. I believe we are all aware of the very high savings rate of Canadians. We also know that most of the debt of the Government of Canada is financed in this country. Therefore, it does not lead to the kinds of problems which other countries have been experiencing with their large foreign debts.

As far as the effect on interest rates is concerned, I believe it is fair to say that there seems to be a consensus developing on the part of the economists that the economy can withstand the kind of deficit which the Government is forecasting for the coming year. Again, I would like to ask the Hon. Members, as I did in my speech, where do they suggest that substantial savings could be effected? We are not talking here about $20 million or $10 million in food, booze or entertainment, as was suggested by the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). With all due respect, $10 million would not make much of a dent in this deficit. Therefore, I would ask the Hon. Member to suggest, for example, in what areas savings can be effected. When you look at the social affairs envelope, which I mentioned, which accounts for some 40 per cent of Government spending, where in that envelope would the Hon. Member suggest that cuts be made? Would it be in the Unemployment Insurance programs? Would it be in the old age pensions? Would it be in job creation programs? Even Mr. Reagan, President of the United States, said in his State of the Union address that he is coming around to seeing that the United States should spend more money on education and job training. That is something that this Government has been doing over a long period of time.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could get the Parliamentary Secretary's interpretation of the statement made by the former Minister of Finance who, on May 31, 1982, at the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, stated as follows:

> I do not think it would be appropriate to ask the House for additional borrowing authority until I have laid out in some detail an update of both the economic situation and the fiscal situation.

Could the Parliamentary Secretary give his interpretation of that statement and tell us why on this side of the House we are expected to give the Government a blank cheque for $19 billion borrowing authority, without knowing in some detail where the money is to be spent?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's statement is ludicrous.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): It is not my statement.

Mr. Berger: He is saying that the Opposition or Parliament should not be expected to give the Government a blank cheque without knowing where the money is going.

Just a few days ago the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) tabled in the House one of the most detailed studies of Government spending ever, the Blue Book, and all the other departmental studies which go into massive detail about the spending of individual Departments, their plans and their projections for the future. How can he say, without shame, that we are asking for a blank cheque?

He previously referred to the statement of the former Minister of Finance who said that he felt it would not be appropriate to ask for more borrowing authority without an update of the economic and fiscal situation. The current Minister of Finance presented such an update last October and is planning another one as soon as the House can deal with some of the items now before it, such as the income tax measures that we have been waiting to study for the past two years and the current borrowing authority.

I suggest that if we were to deal with these items expeditiously and with the other diversions and smokescreens they intend to bring up within the next two weeks, we may get another update of the economic situation from the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to bring the present Minister of Finance into this after what happened in the past week or ten days and to lump him with the former Minister of Finance. We have heard enough about those two gentlemen in the last few days.

How would the Parliamentary Secretary square the promise made last October by the present Minister of Finance that a new budget would be brought in before more borrowing authority was sought?

On October 27, 1982, as reported in Hansard, he told the House:

> In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-84 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

I should like the Parliamentary Secretary to explain that statement. Now you are asking for the money before—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would call to the attention of the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) that the time for questions and answers has expired. The Chair is in a most difficult position when we are pressed for time and a number of Members are seeking to speak. I suspect it is not easy to answer that question.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): It is impossible, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary—

Mr. Berger: Just briefly, Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent for the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to speak. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington).

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I think my remarks will be a contrast to those of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who suggested that we should not focus on the deficit. He suggested that that is not the way out of the present dilemma.

Everywhere one goes in the country, one is asked what people can do, how they can help. There is a general sense of helplessness across the land that is serious.

At the outset of my remarks on Bill C-143, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that I am frustrated with the decay that is setting into the process of parliamentary Government. I am frustrated at the obvious loss of the fundamental principle of ministerial responsibility, and frustrated with the art of stonewalling, not only in the House but throughout the committee system. I am frustrated at the political process the Liberals have adopted in governing the country.

My speech on Bill C-143, the borrowing authority for $19 billion, will attempt to outline the basis of this frustration.

Bill C-143 appears to be an afterthought, as if not part of a plan but simply a debt on a risk—a risk that we could not calculate with any accuracy. The annual deficit proves this. When we started the budgetary process in this Parliament under the former Minister of Finance, we heard it was going to be $19 billion, then it moved up to $23 billion or $24 billion, and now it is $29 billion. It is interesting that when the original $19 billion was announced to the House I was told by a person in the Department of Finance it would actually be well over $25 billion.

I am one who believes that this $19 billion borrowing authority is the result of a plan. So far as Bill C-143 links us to that plan, we are really debating a part of that plan today. As I see it, this borrowing authority is a link and there are three aspects to this link—the past, the future through the present.

The common thread through these aspects is leadership. Through the recent past we have seen a dramatic change in expectations throughout the country—expectations of our responsibilities toward ourselves and toward the state. By this I mean expectations of the rewards for duty. Expectation of what the Government has to offer.

Let us just slip down the west coast of North America and look at the State of California. It has a population about equal to that of all Canada. It is a State that has wealth, people, climate and everything going for it, yet it is bankrupt. It is now paying its civil servants and contractual obligations in IOUs as a result of the rising of the people for Proposition 13.

We are talking about expectations from and of employers throughout the land; we are talking about expectations from and of unions throughout the country. Out of this change in expectations came the displacement of individual self-reliance with the notion of the collective.

Collectives that bring people together in a common purpose as a means of improving the quality of life, are instinctive to Canadians and are a part of our heritage. Collectives have been positive forces throughout our history and in our society. The authority of the state as a collective has been with us all along. But when this authority becomes arbitrary to serve one man's view of the collective at the expense of others, at the expense of our heritage, our traditions and conventions, then the collective breaks down.

The plan was deliberate in 1968. It was made possible by our prosperity. The plan was to use the notion of collectives to serve the ends, the objectives, the purist thinking of a group of political figures. Leadership was the key. The philosopher king became the Messiah.

From that point in 1968 to the mid-seventies, we were given a mindset across our land. Government would do our thinking. The Government would take care of it. Throughout this period too many people gave up a sense of self-reliance. The seeds of socialism were sown. Cradle-to-grave mentality was accomplished by the politics of expectation. This was accompanied by the politics of confrontation. The confrontation which evolved in federal-provincial relationships, the confrontation which was encouraged in business-union relationships and the regional confrontations were all a part of the plan. Confrontation by definition delivers a winner-loser society; the winners impose their way on the losers. This is why the plan is anti-collective. Loto Canada did not happen by accident but rather by design—the winner-loser syndrome.

The deception I have described up to this point links Bill C-143, this $19 billion borrowing authority, to the past. I will now discuss the link of this plan to the future. The deficit of today translates into an inheritance of neglect which will deliver hardship and burden on our children and grandchildren tomorrow. This is where I differ with the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Bill C-143 exemplifies the serious lack of leadership today. Real statesmen never address the problems of the day at the exense of those that follow tomorrow. Real leaders would deal with the circumstances of today, now and today, so that tomorrow will be more hopeful and the emerging generations will be allowed a dream or two. It is no wonder that the youth of today are disillusioned and hold this institution in such low regard and contempt. They have very good reason to be concerned. The extravagant and spendthrift recklessness of this Liberal Government has already placed an unbearable burden on their backs.

I draw to the attention of the House the Canada Pension Plan crisis which will be with us at the turn of the century. The demographics of today and tomorrow indicate that there will be a larger number of people in the country retired and drawing upon social plans than workers able to sustain them. The big-Government, out-of-control spending exemplified in Bill C-143 serves only the power needs of an elite at the expense of the people who can contribute most to the prosperity of the country, and this plan is also at the expense of those entering the work force tomorrow. The tragedy is that with Bill C-143 and its predecessor borrowing Bills about which we have heard today, we are removing the freedom to decide or the freedom to choose from those who follow tomorrow. There will be a decade and a half of very serious, hard work ahead of the next Government which takes charge of the federal institution in Canada.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) introduced Bill C-143, he said:

—the deficit reflects the Government's commitment to ease the impact of the recession on individual Canadians and the economy as a whole.

What does this statement mean at face value? Bill C-143 is a Government borrowing to serve the expectation levels created in society. The pressure of these expectation levels comes from the new status called citizenry. Those who govern have the people right where the plan by design has delivered them, without a consensus from business, labour or the people. Indeed, the ship of state changed its course in the middle of the night and without a mandate. Again the Minister of Finance in his "don't-blame-me" attitude when he introduced the Bill pointed to "the unexpected harshness of cyclical forces" for our economic troubles. Surely the Government knows that cyclical forces in economics are a fact of economic life.

This is why many of us have been so concerned with the Liberal Government's extravagance over the last decade and a half; why the budget of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) in 1979 led an attempt to curtail this extravagance, but our expectations interrupted that attempt. It is why we have been calling for conservation in good times so that we have something in the bank for the harshness of cyclical downside forces. We cannot conduct our own personal lives the way the Government conducts the national life. Why should the Government think that it is any different? As part of its plan, the Liberal Government's intervention in the delicate interplay of supply and demand market forces has led to a magnification of the harshness of cyclical forces. It has abused the authority of the state in its actions. Thus the need for Bill C-143.

Bill C-143 further proves that Canadians have lost the bet that Liberals, with all their promises, could be responsible fiscal managers. The Canadian people are the losers. The Liberals have replaced a simple taxation system with one so complicated that chartered accountants and lawyers throughout the land cannot cope with the confusion and the burden. The results of Liberal spending policies and deliberate political policies are: confiscation of property, retroactive taxation, and budgets not brought into law, which means illegal collection of taxes. We have complexity beyond the minds of those who create and deliver wealth and tax revenues to the country.

In my opinion Bill C-143 is an admission that promises were broken as quickly and as recklessly as they were made. The Liberal Government, as a collective, turned its back on the very principle of the collective it espoused to be. It was to wrestle inflation to the ground as far back as 1974. We heard about no wage and price controls, and then we got wage and price controls. We heard that 18 cents per gallon for gasoline and fuel was an absolute national disaster. What do we have today? It is 67 cents, 77 cents or $1. I know that for each $15 we pay to fill a tank, $5 of it is for fuel and $10 is taxes, yet it attacked 18 cents per gallon.

Do we continue to allow this type of borrowing to sink the roots of arbitrary state power further into the Canadian soil? It is this kind of dirt that causes the country to lose ground, the precious ground upon which our freedoms were nurtured. Bill C-143, this $19 billion borrowing authority, signals more structure, more imposition, more frustration and more hopelessness by a Government that will not even tell us how it will spend what it wants to borrow.

When the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary who preceded me today told me that all the figures were in the Blue Book, it showed the condition with which we as Members of Parliament were faced. Bill C-143 delivers no promises or hope for the next decade, neither do its predecessors.

I spoke in the beginning about my frustration. For the reasons outlined, I call upon the Government to hold this borrowing Bill until it gives us a budget, so that we know what it will do with it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Berger) rises to ask a question.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just talked about such things as developments from 1968 on. He said that the Government has stated a position that it would do everything, that it would take care of us, that self-reliance has been given up and that the seeds of socialism have been cast. Does he realize that expenditures by the Government as a share of the Gross National Product have actually decreased continually since the Second World War and have decreased during the time of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) Government?

The Hon. Member also referred to gasoline and the taxes we pay. Does he not recognize that the largest part of the taxes goes to the Provinces? Further, there are industries in Canada today suffering from international competition. Should these industries be helped? If the industries are not helped, should the workers be helped? Because of dropping metal prices in the international markets, certain one-industry towns lose their industry. Should any help be provided by the Government for those towns? Do Members of his own Party not ask for help when such disasters occur?

Mr. Huntington: It is very interesting that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Berger) has this misapprehension about exactly what is going on in this country. In 1968 federal expenditures were 15 per cent of Gross National Product. This year they will be 23 per cent of Gross National Product. Any aberration of which he might think that will prevent the Government from taking more and more of the Gross National Product of the nation is wrong. There are local cyclical aberrations, but the Government is going to take more and more of the Gross National Product.

In terms of the Hon. Member's statement on taxes, the federal Government takes more from a litre of gas you put in your tank than the combined total of the Provinces of Alberta and Ontario. Federal taxation, I think, is around 14 cents to 15 cents a litre. Provincial taxation of Ontario and Alberta is around 7 cents a litre. How the Hon. Member finds the basis for his question, I do not know.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and answers having expired, I now recognize the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell).

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to speak in this House, but I cannot say it is much of a pleasure when I review the Bills. It is always difficult to follow my colleague, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) because he puts his point across in such succinct language.

The first question I have is, how many times will this Government come back to the trough this year? I am talking about 1983. This Government comes up with Estimates. We get the Estimates one day after this Bill is presented in the House. We look at the Estimates from last year, and there is no comparison between the Estimates and the amount of money this Government is spending. Taking the same percentage last year, this year the Government will spend $94.5 billion. This is an estimate. We went through the exercise last year and it meant nothing. This Government is totally out of control. We hear during debates about band-aid solutions, such as the NEED Program and the summer work for students program. That is wonderful political dialogue. They increase the budget and the spending of the Government, but they do not create one permanent job in this country.

I heard just the other day that California is making payments to its employees with IOUs.

Mr. Fisher: You heard it 20 minutes ago from Huntington.

Mr. Fennell: I did not hear, it. I apologize, I was not here at the time. California is broke.

Mr. Ouellet: You just congratulated the Hon. Member on his fine speech.

Mr. Fennell: If California were the federal Government, it would not have the same problem because the federal Government can print money. That is the part that really worries me. This Government will get itself in such a hole that it will have to put money through in specie and never bring it to the House of Commons for approval. This year I request that that be done. We have a serious situation.

The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) said that we are on the road to recovery. We are not. With unemployment up again this month, that is not recovery. With more people going broke than six months ago, that is not recovery. We are a long way from a recovery, and we are in an impossible situation.

I would like to split this Bill in two. The first part I can understand. We have had Estimates, statements, Miscellaneous Estimates and Supplementary Estimates. We understand the Government is in trouble and needs $5 billion. I can accept that part of the Bill. But it is wrong for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), a former Minister of Energy, to request $14 billion of this House when we have not had an opportunity to study the Estimates and we have no idea what kind of a budget he will present to us next. I say next because 1980 was his first budget with his National Energy Program. We are not in a position to deal with this Bill at this time. I would plead with that arrogant group of incompetents to split this Bill, get the money they require now, bring down a budget and then request the additional funding, and we will deal with it at that time. It is almost as though the Government knows it is out of control. Hon. Members on the other side laugh, joke, scream and yell.

Mr. Waddell: That is Chrétien.

Mr. Fennell: But the people in this country are frightened. My children are frightened. Who is going to pay the piper, Mr. Speaker? We have run out of credit with the people. This Government has no sense of reality. Its own Members do not worry about the money that is spent.

Let me review what has happened. In 1968-1969, the first term of the great Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) we have right now, the Government spent $12 billion. This year the Government said it will spend $88.9 billion. I will be surprised if this Government does not break the magic $100 billion figure. The smile on the face of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) proves that I am probably correct. He has a problem. I must say that I respect the Minister of Energy. He will deal with the problem, but it is a problem.

Mr. Cosgrove: Just have confidence in him and respect him. You are speaking from both sides of your mouth.

Mr. Fennell: I am speaking about one Minister. He will know what I am saying. He inherited a great money fund which has, all of a sudden, dried up. So he does have a problem. I will tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker, I would rather have that gentleman as Minister of Energy, than his predecessor.

• (1610)

I wonder how we can trust the integrity of the Minister of Finance when he has stood up in the House in the last day and a half and made statements that the Canadian public does not believe.

Mr. Cosgrove: You are going to challenge his integrity too. Do not step off.

Mr. Fennell: The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) is a prime example of the sham that exists in the Government of this country. This Parliament has become a sham. We have had legislation pushed down our throats without any opportunity to debate it logically.

Mr. Ouellet: No. You are debating it now.

Mr. Fennell: I would like to point out a fact that I had asked my researcher to find out about the worth of the 1968 dollar today. The answer that I got from the Library is that it is worth 33 cents. Incidentally, our population today is 20 per cent larger, having risen from 20 million to 24 million. If we took a 20 per cent increase from $12 million, there would be approximately $14 million. If that figure is multiplied by three, there would be approximately $42 billion. That $42 billion, which would be a logical and historical budgetary figure, shows that the Government has gone out of control because its budget is 2.5 times that amount, almost $100 billion.

If any of the Government proposals showed a way out of our dilemma, I would accept them. Unfortunately, it follows Keynes through good times instead of bad times. Keynes' philosophy is to spend money during the bad times to get the economy going and to save the money during the good times in order to be protected against these cycles. However, during the good times the Government introduced all kinds of political programs for the people which we cannot afford now. Once the people have those programs, it is impossible to take them away.

We have seen many requests for funds after the budget of October 28, 1980, although I call it the National Energy Program. The Minister now hides behind the fact that he did not know anything about what was going on even though he was writing the budget. Since the National Energy Program was in reality the budget, it was the Minister of Energy's budget. It involved the people in his Department. Although he is Minister of Finance now, when he was Minister of Energy he wrote the budget anyway.

I would ask the Government to consider the GNP. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) mentioned spending at 15 per cent of GNP in 1968-69. My statistics may be wrong but they show 17 per cent. I have noticed that it has slowly eased up over several years. Ten years ago it was 19.8 per cent. Five years ago it was 22 per cent. According to my calculations, it is now 26 per cent of GNP. The spending program is 26 per cent of the GNP.

Let us assume that this year there will be a Gross National Product of $400 billion, which there will not. If we took 20 per cent of that $400 billion, we would at least be back at a manageable amount of an $80 billion spending program. However, we will end up with a $100 billion spending program. The Government tells us not to worry, that spending will not be that high, but every year since I have been in the House, the Government has brought down budgets, the mini budget and then the National Energy Program. It does not know what it is doing from day to day.

Unfortunately, this city is in a rarified atmosphere and the Government and its bureaucrats feel that they know everything, but they do not go out to talk to people in the rest of the country. The people in my constituency are more aware of what is happening to them economically than many Members on that side.

I recently visited Newfoundland for the first time and enjoyed it immensely. I talked to Newfoundlanders and they told me that they are seriously hurting. I am fully aware that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources realizes that those people are hurting. They expected to get more than we have given them when they joined Confederation in 1949. They have been given Unemployment Insurance, or pogey as they call it. They have been given welfare transfer payments. But the one thing they have not been given since they joined the country in 1949 is an economy which can be built on the strong base that we have in the country.

Part of our problem as Canadians is that we are spoiled. We are blessed with riches, resources and energy. As a result, we have become too dependent on robbing the land without creating any secondary and tertiary manufacturing facilities.

A gentleman from the West Coast recently said that we have to put more effort into our primary industry. I understand that, but if we cannot sell it there is no sense in putting more effort into it. I did not totally agree with him because I think we have to have more import replacement in this country. We have to be less dependent on products that we can effectively produce in this country. There are many products that we produce in this country that are not effectively protected.

I do not know what the Minister of Finance, whom we have been challenging over the last few days, is attempting to do by trying to force this Bill through before the budget comes forward. I, personally, cannot trust him. Right now he is in what I call a near-miss position. The House may recall that he also had a near miss in 1970. He was not in the House, but was an employee of the Prime Minister. I say it was a near miss because he was named but escaped.

I would like to ask the Government, with respect to this total of $88.9 billion and $14 billion, how much of it is going toward patronage. Let me give a prime example of patronage. One of the Government's former colleagues was appointed to the Board of Directors of McDonnell Douglas at the time the Government was negotiating for fighter aircraft. The only reason McDonnell Douglas wanted that gentleman on their board was so they could have some influence on the Government to get their aircraft sold.

The patronage I see throughout the Liberal Party makes me sick. Another example is Mirabel in Quebec. The Government allows employees of the Canada Lands Company to come in and buy homes when they have had the advantage of knowing what those homes were worth on the books. After checking with the Department of Public Works in Ontario I found that this is not permitted to occur in that Province. We have two sets of rules. I believe these sets of rules are very unfair to the people on the land in Mirabel. I think their sets of rules are very fair to the majority of Canadians from coast to coast.

I reviewed the estimates very carefully. I saw a very large advertising budget. What does that do to create jobs? It would be acceptable if that money were invested in industry and assisted industry to sell products. However, for the Government to sell its message of misconceptions to the country is unacceptable to me.

Let me cite another example of patronage which arises from the Estimates. We must come up with $200 million for de Havilland, $200 million for Canadair. I checked to see who happens to be the Chairman of de Havilland. He is also a former Cabinet Minister. I also had an opportunity to speak to the prior President of de Havilland who was brought in for a short period of time. He said it was out of control and that the company would never survive. So, he left and went back to his own airplane brokerage business. He had been President before he left and he was brought back by the Government. He was faithful to the Liberal Party, but he felt he could not work and make de Havilland an effective company and he was afraid it would be destroyed. The Government has done a very good job of it, because what qualifications does the former Minister, who is the Chairman of that organization, have to run an aircraft company in these times?

I would just like to make a comment with regard to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). He stated last week that guidelines are only guidelines. I recall that a few years ago, prior to my time, a paper was released by C. D. Howe, saying, "It is only a million". The Government's attitude is that it is only a billion here and a billion there. The Government has no effective program to get our economy on track to solve the problem of borrowing funds. We could accept it if the Government were borrowing funds amounting to $14 billion to create employment, but there has been no formal policy established to assist the country. I notice that the latest one is SBIGs. That is a great idea, but it only goes part of the way. It keeps the interest rate down to 12 per cent. What happens to new developing industries which cannot pay 12 per cent? They are starting during a period of expansion. When the money markets are being tied up because the Government is borrowing money it puts the country in a very difficult situation.

I am worried about Canada. I am frightened about its future. I see $8,000 per taxpayer right now. How far do we go? This Party is trying to say, "Stop, halt. You have gone for enough". The Government tries to make fools of us, but I am sincerely and intensely worried about the future of Canada. Perhaps the only solution which will satisfy the Prime Minister of this country is if we became a totally socialist state. Perhaps that was his original plan and perhaps he will succeed. However, Canadians have seen what socialism has done to this country and they cannot accept it. They want to get rid of the Liberals and also of their red rump.

Mr. Waddell: During World War II, when else?

Mr. Fennell: Referring to the red rump for a minute, I would like to point out the fact that it was in the period from 1972 to 1974 that the balance of power was held by that group, which caused the increase in the deficit spending of the Government and gave it an excuse to proceed with it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) is rising to ask questions?

Mr. Fisher: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am reminded of a quotation from the House that we heard yesterday. I would like to recite it now, as follows: "As far as I am concerned, they were qualified Canadians, and I mean that sincerely". That quote came from the speech of the Hon. Member from Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) who was referring to a number of lawyers appointed by the Tory Government who earned very large fees as a result of their appointments.

Mr. Nowlan: He made quite a salary himself.

Mr. Fisher: One made over $200,000, and the other made over $165,000.

Mr. Nowlan: And he did quite well, too, from Air Canada. It is the pot calling the kettle black.

Mr. Fisher: As far as I am concerned, there is a great contrast between the important message in the simple statement of the Hon. Member for Lincoln and the bilious vile which we have heard from the mouth of the Hon. Member from Ontario (Mr. Fennell), and it is to his discredit that he let himself act in that fashion. I would like to ask him a couple of questions.

Does he believe that the F-18 contract was given to McDonnell Douglas because a Liberal sat on the board of directors? That is the first question. Second, does he believe that we should not have supported the de Havilland Aircraft base because a Liberal sits on the board of directors? I would ask him to tell us what connection politics has with those projects, and whether he is accusing those people of blatant patronage and the Government of corruption.

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that some lawyers are more qualified than others. I think our Party did pretty well. The person to whom he is referring, in particular, is the gentleman who took care of the Mississauga derailment, which was a serious emergency situation. We had no choice at the time and had to act in order to protect the Government of Canada. As far as McDonnell Douglas is concerned, that contract was being negotiated at the time. We all know what has happened concerning the problem with the F-18. The United States is contemplating not ordering any. We may be the only buyers of this great airplane.

Mr. Ouellet: No, no.

Mr. Fennell: I did not say that they were cancelling contracts. I said that they were considering it. When we formed the Government, we raised the point called the F-18 A, and the "A" stands for "aircraft". That is part of the problem. It does not have the range. Do not tell me there is no involvement with an ex-Minister of Defense who is on the board of a company that is bidding—

Mr. Fisher: He is not.

Mr. Fennell: —to get the fighter aircraft contract in this country.

Mr. Fennell: He may not be now, but he was then.

Mr. Fisher: He is not.

Mr. Peterson: Do not let the facts confuse you.

Mr. Fennell: Do not confuse the facts. I happen to know that that is correct. I was quoting the ex-President of de Havilland.

Mr. Peterson: You're throwing mud.

Mr. Fennell: He said that under the Government, de Havilland had nowhere to go. Hon. Members opposite are getting worked up, and I am delighted because I am getting my message across. Canadians are upset, and they should be, with some of the things that their Members of Parliament have done.

Mr. Waddell: I think my friend had a short supplementary.

Mr. Fisher: Let me just remind the Hon. Member for Ontario that when the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) was talking about this process, he set a pretty good standard. He said, "As far as I am concerned, they were qualified Canadians, and I mean that sincerely."

I would also like to remind the Hon. Member for Ontario that the former Hon. Member for Mississauga North, a Tory—and his name is Alex Jupp, in case the Hon. Member needs a little reminding—stood in this House and in my riding and said that the F-18 was his choice of aircraft. Does that mean that Mr. Jupp is corrupt because he has endorsed the Government's aircraft? What will he do? How will he tie together his charge that the projects are corrupted and twisted by the presence of Liberals who happen to be concerned and qualified Canadians? Is it not time that we challenged this kind of nonsense and asked people to produce some evidence and not just the kind of cheap slander we hear? The cheap slander has cheapened the Hon. Member.

Mr. Fennell: Alex Jupp was a colleague of mine for one term. He was on the committee when we discussed the airplane, and Your Honour must keep in mind the fact that his entire constituency surrounded the plant of McDonnell Douglas.

Mr. Fisher: Are you accusing him of being corrupt?

Mr. Fennell: He is supporting his own constituents.

Mr. Fisher: Get your act together.

Mr. Fennell: He is not corrupt. He is supporting his constituents. He was one person in the group, so do not tell me that.

• (1630)

You mentioned the Member for Lincoln. I hate to say it, but I do not believe the Member for Lincoln was qualified to be the Chief Executive Officer of the largest air transportation company in this country.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, we have heard the Conservative Member rail on about the red rump, and so on, and about the disastrous policies of the Liberal Government. We know about the disastrous policies of the Liberal Government. My question has to do with what the Conservatives would do. They criticize, but what would they do? I suggested some of the things that we would do.

I want to ask the Hon. Member specifically whether he would agree with the statement made by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) in May, 1982, when he said, this:

> We have looked for a solution other than the Government's but we couldn't come up with an alternative . . . I don't have a better solution.

I want to quote two other Members to the Hon. Member. The Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the finance critic of his Party, said this to the Canadian Club in Montreal on February 15, 1982:

> That is why I am so fearful of a Government policy which would simply allow interest rates and the Canadian dollar to drop.

The point was that he was worried about interest rates dropping.

In the House of Commons, just following that, the Member for Vegreville, (Mr. Mazankowski) criticized the Government for creating crippling high interest rates and advocated that interest rates come down immediately.

Now, what is it? Does the Conservative Party have any policy at all or does he agree with what the Member from Yellowhead said, that is: "We have looked at it. We could not come up with an alternative. I do not have a better solution." Is that what the Conservative Party really has, in other words, nothing?

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, I want to state, first of all, with respect to the Right Hon. Member from Yellowhead, (Mr. Clark) that he told me very clearly that his statement was taken out of context and that it had nothing to do with that. As far as the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) is concerned, referring to interest rates, it was in the context of "We cannot allow the dollar to drop through the floor to get lower interest rates because our cost of living index would go up so severely."

One has to put those two things together. As far as the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) is concerned, he said the interest rates must come down. Yes, we believe that interest rates must come down but I would like to explain why we do not come up with a policy at this time and the NDP Party can. It is because their Party will never form the Government, and we are planning to form the Government. We are making policy, and if anyone thinks we are going to tell those scoundrels what we are doing, they are crazy, because we want to get rid of them once and for all. We want to do to the Liberals what Lloyd George did to the Liberals in Britain, and that is our plan.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking the Hon. Member to tell the Liberals opposite what his policies are. I am asking him to tell the Canadian people what his policies are. My question is this, does the Member agree with the statement of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) in the House of Commons on April 15, 1980 in which he was against Government spending, or does he agree with the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) on January 21, 1983 in which he was for increased Government spending. Which one is it?

Mr. Fennell: Firstly, Mr. Speaker, in this Party we have many different views, and it is a consensus of view that will make us a very effective Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Members' views may vary, but the time period does not. I should call the attention of the House to the fact that speeches from now on are limited to ten minutes, without a question period.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-143 calls upon this House to approve the borrowing by the Government of Canada of $19 billion, and represents a culmination of circumstances which have led us to a consideration of an instrument of this nature requiring an added burden being placed upon the taxpayers of Canada, not only those who sit in the House and those elsewhere, but their children and grandchildren and great grandchildren, so long as we can see a line of Canadians who can survive. It is that unfortunate circumstance to which we, I submit, must direct our attention.

It is absolutely true that as we sit here today the nation is in dire need of assistance. We have at least 1.6 million Canadians who are unemployed, and we are told by the Government that under these circumstances it is absolutely essential that we have the tools with which to ease the burden placed upon these unemployed Canadians. They do not of course at the same time say, "And we assume the entire responsibility for the position in which those Canadians find themselves," although, were they honest, they would indeed make that assertion.

What bothers me is that if one casts one's mind back to as recent a date as June of 1981 this House will recall an address by the then Minister of Finance who began his comments by referring to fairness and equity as being the touchstones of the budget which he introduced. Fairness and equity indeed! The entire process was designed to raise $1.3 billion in additional revenues, and it had as its by-product the disillusionment, distaste and disfavour that flowed through the business community in Canada, coupled with, at that time and still surviving today, an air of complete uncertainty within the Canadian business circle.

One of the things that surely Government should have realized at the very outset was that this uncertainty would breed less production, less development and considerably less employment in our nation, and yet that entire recognizable and anticipated consequence was ignored by Government.

We now are faced, as I have indicated, with a debt burden load which gives rise directly to the payment of interest on the national debt anticipated, having regard to the Estimates which have been tabled this week, to be $18.6 billion, a full 20 per cent of all the money spent by Government, not all the money raised by Government through tax revenues but all the money spent by Government. In terms of money actually raised by Government, it is in excess of 25 cents on every dollar, and that surely must shock this House.

This Bill is part of the revenue raising through the borrowing process which will increase the amount that has to be paid for interest on the national debt, as I say, not by this Government and its members, not by Members of the House alone, but by future generations of Canadians yet unborn.

If we can go back to the alleged principles of the budget of June, 1981 and ask ourselves, is it indeed appropriate, is it just and equitable, that this Parliament place a burden on future Canadians of the magnitude that faces us today and that will grow with the days ahead, under this administration?

I fully recognize the need for additional funds to be spent to help offset the terrible social and economic burdens created by unemployment, but I have asked this Government time and time again when it proposes to do something of a concrete nature to solve the problem, and the problem very clearly is a failure to recognize that they have been over-spending.

Let any Member on the Government side stand in his place and say this is what we have done in order to pare our excesses. Let him say that this is what we have done in order to show the people of Canada that there is some hope and expectation for the future that we will come to grips with our lavish expenditures which have characterized our administration from the beginning of time.

I raised this issue in the House on two separate occasions, on July 5, 1982 and again on November 10, 1982. I specifically asked that the estimates be referred to a special committee of the House which would have the specific task of going through them with a fine tooth comb to eliminate those expenditures which ought not to be incurred.

Let me give an illustration of the kind of frivolous expenditures with which we are faced. The cost of the recent advertisements placed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in various newspapers across Canada to convince Canadians, "that complete energy security in Canada is this close", cost the taxpayers of this nation almost a whole million dollars. One ad run in the newspapers in Canada cost the taxpayers a million dollars. For what useful purpose? There is no useful purpose for that expenditure other than to endeavour to convince the public that its Government is doing a good job. Let the public be convinced by the actual results of the administration, not by a paid campaign to convince the public that it has performed its tasks usefully.

I have examined the Estimates. We have a number of interesting items which should attract the attention of any serious-minded Member of this House concerned with fiscal responsibility.

It is absolutely incredible that we should be taking from the public purse the amount of $820 million to shore up the CBC for the current year, $820 million for a corporation that raises $175 million from ads and other revenues for its entire year's operation.

I recognize that there are times when it is absolutely essential that the public corporation in broadcasting communicate with those regions in the northern part of our country which would otherwise not be serviced by a public communication system. That does not mean that $820 million, an increase over last year of some $82.6 million, is the way in which this can be achieved, having regard to the fact that in so much of our nation the services provided by the CBC are provided by an independent network operated under the free enterprise system. Not only the capital needed to acquire the capital asset has been paid for by privately-raised revenues but the operating costs are paid for out of privately-raised revenues, and a profit is generated on its operations.

Having regard to the nature of the economy today, I submit it is appropriate to examine these Estimates, as I have done so often, with a view to determining whether it is appropriate to go to some Crown corporations and tell them that they are at the end of their leash and, within a limited period of time, those subsidies will be finally terminated.

The time available does not permit me to deal, to the extent that I would prefer, with other items of a similar nature in the Estimates. I regret that the time for questions after speeches has expired.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, my constituency is much like many other areas in this country. We have our share of unemployment, we have our share of plant closures, we have our share of small business bankruptcies, and we have our share of farm bankruptcies. We have plants operating below capacity, with the resulting lay-offs. As well, there are in my constituency 11 Indian reserves. In the best of times, reserve Indians live under economic conditions that are nothing short of a disgrace in a country as wealthy as Canada. In the best of times, reserves have unemployment rates that run between 50 and 90 per cent. In times of severe recession, as we are now experiencing, those figures grow.

For some strange reason known only to God and the Liberal hierarchy, reserve unemployment figures are not included in the national figure. I suppose if they were, the resultant high figures would be far too frightening.

For some other strange reason the Government decided in the past year to cut funding for the very programs that might improve the economic situation of these reserve Indians, namely post-secondary education and economic development. The Government chooses instead to increase their dependence on welfare. It is no surprise that my constitutents are rather skeptical, even cynical of this Government, when it comes before Parliament to ask for authority to borrow another $19 billion.

I believe it is fair, and I am sure my constituents would agree, indeed we consider it imperative, that Members of Parliament demand to know how those billions will be spent.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) told us that $5 billion is needed for the last few weeks of this fiscal year, that it needs to borrow that amount because the recession has taken its toll on Government revenues and at the same time that recession has increased pressure on Government expenditures. Of course, the Government's conservative and fiscal monetary policies have had a lot to do with bringing this recession on and with the depth to which the economy has sunk in the past few months.

Setting that fundamental issue aside for now, the Government has not told us how it plans to spend the $5 billion it is asking permission to borrow. On top of that, it has the gall to ask this House for authority to borrow another $14 billion for the next fiscal year, before it brings down a budget. Why, when this borrowing authority Bill was introduced, the Government has not even tabled the Estimates for 1983-84!

Bill C-143 is the third borrowing authority Bill brought before this House in the last eight months. In June 1982 the Government asked for $6.6 billion, in July for $7 billion and in November for another $4 billion. Now we are being asked to give the nod for yet another $19 billion.

What the ballooning deficit shows is that the Government cannot possibly claim to be in control of the economy. The deficit for the 1982-83 fiscal year has increased by 16 per cent in the last four months alone. It must be a bit of irony for the Government. While it has pursued with single-minded purpose the reduction of the federal deficit, it has really created the economic conditions that are forcing the deficit to keep on rising.

In the last three budgets, this Government has set its sights on cutting Government spending and reducing the deficit. The November, 1981 budget tried to step up the pace of deficit reduction, striving to bring it down from $13 billion to $10 billion, but that is not what happened. By the time the June, 1982 budget was unveiled, the Government was forecasting a deficit of $19.6 billion. Now we are talking about a deficit of $27 billion. That is a 170 per cent increase over the size of the deficit planned slightly more than a year ago.

How can that be? The Minister of Finance told us last week that this deficit increase is due in large part to the recession. Is it possible that the Government did not know that the Canadian economy was deteriorating, that a recession was upon us? How could it have missed the signals? We in this Party have warned the Government time and time again that with its tight fiscal monetary policies, it would bring on the recession Canada is now enduring. By permitting the Bank of Canada to drive up interest rates the Government has played no small part in throwing almost two million people out of work, in driving 11,000 businesses into bankruptcy, and in grinding the economy down until it is running at less than 70 per cent capacity. By leading the attack with its six and five program on the incomes of pensioners and mothers, on Armed Forces personnel, public servants, and now on the private sector workers, the Government is undermining domestic consumption in Canada and putting off economic recovery. By knuckling under to right-wing attacks on controls on foreign investment, and by putting all its eggs in the megaproject basket, which promised at best to make Canada even more reliant on resource exports in the international market, this Government has weakened the ability of any Canadian Government to direct the economy towards recovery. The Minister of Finance is right when he tells us that the Government's increasing deficit is due in no small part to this recession which is causing tax revenues to fall and welfare and unemployment insurance payments to increase. But what does he plan to do to rectify that? He will not tell us.

Dazzled by the simplistic logic of Conservative economics, the Government has forgotten everything it should have learned from the economic disaster of the 1930s. The six and five program has now replaced monetarism as the main plank of the Government's economic program. The six and five program is the activist element of last June's budget. It is supposed to show that the Government is dealing decisively with the nation's economic crisis by attacking the wages and salaries of working Canadians.

At the same time as the Government has struck this activist pose with six and five, it refuses to abandon its tight money policy or to use its deficit wisely to stimulate the economy. Under this Government, the deficit is the result of our sliding economic fortunes, not a tool to stimulate the economy and fuel the engines of recovery. Just as in the 1930s, Canadians are being told that wages must come down if more jobs are going to be created. Then, as now, the Government is unable to understand that the nature and size of its deficit is an instrument of economic policy, that by gearing the Government's economic activity to bringing the deficit down, especially in hard times, the end result will very likely be much larger, though unplanned, deficit increases.

If the Government had decided to stimulate the economy, Mr. Speaker, instead of squeezing the life out of it, if unemployment had been brought down to 7.5 per cent instead of being permitted to rise to 13.5 per cent, we would have a surplus in excess of $1 billion now, rather than the $27 billion deficit, or is it $29 billion, who knows, it grows daily. A Government's deficit should be an investment in economic growth. A planned deficit which increases spending and production in the whole of the economy is an investment which limits unemployment and ultimately, as economic recovery takes hold, the Government's own debt.

The Conservative Party, of course, will wail that it is irresponsible to even think of increasing the deficit. Well, as was asked earlier by my friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), what about Joe Clark's stimulative deficit of 1979? The Conservative Members will argue that increasing Government borrowing crowds out private investment by bidding up interest rates in financial markets. I am afraid that argument does not hold much water today. The private sector is already debt-ridden. It sees few prospects for profitable investment, and it now finds itself dealing in unstable financial markets. The private sector is not exactly screaming for more financing to invest in more jobs.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Government has been forced to borrow more money because it has to react to the recession which its own wrongheaded economic policies have brought upon the Canadian people. We in this Party do not favor an increase in the deficit for its own sake. What needs to happen is for this Government to show some real economic leadership and start to use its deficit in investment in economic recovery, an economic recovery which will put two million Canadians back to work, will bring the Government more tax revenue, and will reduce welfare and unemployment insurance costs. If the Government had used its deficit in that way in the past, we would not be dealing with this large deficit today, and we would not be dealing with a $19 billion borrowing authority.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I feel it would be a dereliction of duty were I to refrain from taking part in this discussion in which we are engaging today. Bill C-143 is a Bill to authorize the Government to proceed to borrow another $19 billion for the financing of Government expenditures, $5 billion for the balance of this year and another $14 billion for the year 1983-84. Before us as well is an amendment by the New Democratic Party that Bill C-143 be not now read the second time, but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn, and the subject matter thereof, particularly the clause pertaining to borrowing for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss in my duty were I to remain silent when the Government proposes to raid the pockets and purses of the taxpayers of this country to the tune of an additional $19 billion. Reference has already been made to the record of borrowing Bills which have been before this House since the session opened just after the last election. And as we add it all up, we find it is a horrendous amount which the Government has been forced to borrow. When we realize that the expenditures are continuing to grow at a phenomenal rate, we must wonder where the end will be. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that confidence is essential if the taxpayers of the nation can be expected to fork up such horrendous amounts. As we look at the economic conditions in the country today, I do not believe that the Government has any right whatsoever to expect the people of this country voluntarily and willingly to give further of their diminishing returns in order that this Government can carry on with its vast expenditures which have been condemned by the Comptroller General, stating that the Government's expenditures are out of control.

The Government's economic mismanagement is driving an ever-increasing number of farms and businesses into bankruptcies. In 1982 a record 10,765 businesses were forced to close their doors. Business bankruptcies in 1982 were 33 per cent higher than in 1981, 63 per cent higher than in 1980 and 91 per cent higher than in 1979. According to the September 1982 issue of Euromoney, the over-all performance of the Canadian economy since 1974 ranks us fortieth in the world, downturned from thirty-fifth place last year. In that time period Canada ranked fifty-seventh in terms of economic growth, twenty-fourth in terms of inflation, thirty-third in terms of currency strength, twenty-ninth in terms of export growth, and twenty-fifth in terms of growth in balance-of-payments. According to the organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, Canada's economic decline in 1982 was the worst of any of the 24 members of the OECD.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, in light of these figures, that the Government has no right to come before this House and ask us to agree to the borrowing of another $19 billion in order to finance these fantastic expenditures. The Canadian misery rate, the sum of the inflation and unemployment rates, is the second highest of the major industrialized nations. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the statements which have been made today that we are on the road to recovery are very difficult to believe, because I feel the figures indicate quite clearly that we are still down with the lowest record and the most difficult situation of practically any of the industrialized nations of the world. I will continue my comments at a future date, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

The House resumed from Friday, February 25, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Skelly (p. 22957).

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on Friday I placed on the record a few of the facts which call into question the Government's right to expect the taxpayers of Canada to grant borrowing authority in the amount of another $19 billion. I should like to add several more items to the sorry list that underscores the reasons the Government does not deserve the confidence of Canadians at this time and why, as spokespersons for these Canadians, we voice their frustrations and resentments.

In 1968, Canada's standard of living was the third highest in the western world, second only to Sweden and the United States. By 1980 we had fallen to eleventh place. Over the past few years our industrial productivity has been rising at the slowest rate of any major industrial nation. Borrowing costs in Canada are higher than those in most other industrialized nations. Our unemployment rate is the second highest of any industrialized nation, and the inflation rate is the third highest in the same category of nations.

Spending in 1982-83 alone increased by 20 per cent on a national accounts basis or by 19.6 per cent on a public accounts basis. Spending on the national accounts basis is now equal to 26 per cent of the Gross National Product. The net debt last year was $94 billion, and this year it is expected to be $122 billion. The Auditor General indicated that in his estimation the expenditures are understated by about $14.5 billion.

This Bill calls for an additional $19 billion of borrowing authority—$5 billion for the remainder of 1982-83 and $14 billion for the year 1983-84. Of course, we all expect that there will be additional borrowings. The amendment says that the $14 billion be not granted at this time but that the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Surely this is a reasonable request and I think the Government should agree to it.

This Party has proposed an all-Party committee to study the Estimates and advise on reductions, but of course one could hardly expect the Government to accede to this request because it has already outlined its programs and very seldom do the discussions on Estimates have anything to do with changes that may be made. I think, however, there are two factors that should be carefully considered. First is the impact of this borrowing on our taxpayers. I am sure we would all agree that we have about reached the point where any further borrowings, any further deficit or any increase in taxation will have a most detrimental effect on our whole economy. Many Canadians are staggering under the load of taxation already and this will add further to that burden. Second is the immorality of mortgaging the future of our children, our children's children and generations yet unborn. I suggest that the Government has not established any credible reason why it should be asking the taxpayers for authority to borrow this amount now.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-143, which seeks $5 billion in supplementary borrowing authority for the current fiscal year ending March 31, 1983 and $14 billion in interim borrowing authority for the 1983-1984 fiscal year.

This is the largest borrowing bill in Canadian history ever to be introduced in the House of Commons. It was introduced without a formal forecast. What we had given to us by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) were a few figures thrown out to justify his increased requirements, which in effect is treating Parliament in a shameful and degrading manner.

On February 17, 1983 the Minister stated that the projected budgetary deficit for the current fiscal year will rise to $27.2 billion, up from $23.6 billion since the October statement. However, since no figures were given to back up these numbers two questions arise. What will interest costs be and how much revenue will be collected from personal income taxes? Nobody seems to know, not even the Minister of Finance. He has refused to provide us with a forecast outlining the Government's financial requirements for fiscal 1983. All he seems to be saying is "Trust us. We need $14 billion for the beginning of next year just to get started. Do not ask us how much more we will need before next year ends."

How can there be any trust when one looks at the track record of this Government? For example, just two days after the Estimates were tabled, at least two Government spending estimates were dashed by reality. Public Service growth, predicted in Tuesday's tabled Estimates at 1 per cent in the next fiscal year, will probably triple. The communications Telidon project, which was supposed to be phased out next year with funding of about $1.2 million, will now be extended for two more years at a cost of $23 million.

There is more. This same Finance Minister who seeks our blind trust announced on Wednesday, February 23 that this year's record federal deficit of $27.2 billion will rise to approximately $29 billion next year if the Government sticks to current plans. What plans? We on this side would be glad to see something realistic. The Minister said that the deficit will go even higher if budget measures expected in the next few months contain provisions to stimulate the economy.

The Minister is actually saying that the Estimates for 1983-1984 are not to be trusted, that they are not really estimates. In fact, they are not even good guesstimates. They are totally unrealistic and give no guidance whatsoever to Parliament and to the Canadian people.

I submit that our poor economic performance will continue to have a negative impact on the finances of the Government as the costs of social assistance rise and revenues stagnate or fall. Any recovery that does occur is likely to be very weak and, as such, will have only a very moderate impact on our economy.

In situations such as this, we are often asked on this side of the House what we would do, what we have to offer to improve our economy, and what we would do to bring about more employment opportunities. I have a suggestion that would be beneficial not only to Atlantic Canada but helpful to the entire nation.

On December 10, 1982 I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) whether he would consider electrification of the Maritimes railway system in order to halt the dangerous erosion of our present service. He immediately replied that, in his opinion, this was not a very worth-while project. In his words, the investment would be too great for the benefit to be harvested at this particular moment. In plain language, what he was trying to say and did not was that either the cost-to-benefit ratio is not adequate or the return on investment is not sufficient.

These are classic investment terms that can be manipulated to suit one's own purposes. It all depends on the ground rules, such as projected traffic increases and inclusion or not of spin-off benefits. I wonder if the Minister would tell the House what the return on investment is for the recently announced capital outlay for western railway improvements, for example, arising out of the Crowsnest Pass deal?

Why should all the railway improvements be made in the West and to a lesser degree here in central Canada? We are all Canadians. We will all be paying for western upgrading. Why should there not be a better apportionment of railway capital expenditures between the West and Atlantic Canada? The Minister of Transport and his bureaucrats are saying that the traffic, or its projected growth, does not warrant the expenditure. This, of course, gets us into the old cliché of the chicken and the egg argument. New traffic growth cannot be built and attract new shipping unless there is something to encourage it like a fast freight system from Halifax to Montreal and through to Chicago.

I ask the Government in all seriousness: Why should all these essential capital projections which are in the national interest be subjected to a banker's cold, hard, calculating return on investment analysis? If this is the yardstick that is to be followed, we shall have abolish the CBC, the National Art Gallery, the National Arts Centre, the National Film Board and the National Research Council, to name but a few.

We do not have a viable rail transportation system in Atlantic Canada. This was a Confederation commitment. I say to the House that we need one now. It is my understanding that Canadian Pacific is ready to go with its rail electrification plan, starting with the Rogers Pass Tunnel. The follow-up sector will be Thunder Bay west. Canadian National's plans are to electrify the golden corridor, which is Quebec to Windsor, and this would include VIA's light, rapid and comfortable passenger service.

If this happens we are all dead in Atlantic Canada. We would be left holding the transportation bag. We will be stuck with the crumbling railway system, and one only needs to think of the recent derailments in Atlantic Canada if there is doubt about that. We will be using diesels on an antiquated roadbed. The diesels will wear out or become obsolete or too costly to repair. The only alternative left will be to abandon the rail system and depend on truck transportation.

Such an eventuality poses some interesting questions. What happens to our two great ice-free, all-season ports of Halifax and Saint John, New Brunswick? Will the federal Government totally subsidize the increased shipping costs of all commodities to and from the Maritimes? For example, what will replace the locomotive repair and maintenance facility in Moncton? Assuming that we in Nova Scotia developed a petrochemical industry with our Sable Island gas feedstock, how will we transport the by-products of such an industry? We need a safe and efficient rail system to transport benzine, styrene, polyethylene, ammonia, urea and methanol if we are to take full advantage of our offshore possibilities.

If we do not have the proper infrastructure in place we will have to defer to Quebec once the Arctic pilot project comes onstream. I fear that Quebec, and Montreal in particular, is against any of these developments. We will be lucky if the PQ and M pipe line ever gets beyond Quebec City. It is not in Quebec's own best interest. This is all part of the transportation grand scheme to restrict Atlantic Canada. At the heart of it all is the railway and the ports of Halifax and Saint John. We must make a move now to electrify CN in the Atlantic. It will be too late once electrification starts in the West or along the golden corridor. CN should be immediately required to upgrade its rail system in Atlantic Canada, and electrification should start in the East where traffic is lighter so as not to interfere with the heavy grain traffic in the west. The ports of Halifax and Saint John should be recognized by the Wheat Board as western grain export ports and be given substantial increases in grain export shipments.

CN should be starting now to build a spur line to handle the shipment of by-products from the Sable Island natural gas and petrochemical industries. More than any other part of Canada, Atlantic Canada needs the job opportunities that could result from a rail electrification program in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The economic betterment of our area should not be disappearing into the western sunset. We need and in fact demand a fair share of the opportunities that are provided in new advancements and technology such as railway electrification. Atlantic Canada must not be forgotten. Let us make an investment now in Atlantic Canada's economic future. To wait until there is an upturn in the economy would be the worst kind of business planning.

In closing, I say let us get on with the job. Let us put our unemployed to work on a make-work program which will really be helpful and bring long-term benefits to our nation. If we follow this course, we have nothing to lose and all across Canada have everything to gain.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is very notable that during the last number of days, and indeed one might even say weeks and months, the Government has failed to provide clear answers to any questions which have been raised in the House. As if that were not bad enough, most of the time the Government provides no answers at all.

Mr. Blenkarn: Or false answers.

Miss MacDonald: That is one of the very real problems evident in the operation of our parliamentary system. We either hear Government Ministers making obtuse remarks which do not come to the heart of the issue, or Ministers refuse to provide specific information. As well, we hear Ministers drawing red herrings across every issue raised, trying to diffuse the issues and duck what is being presented to them. We saw that in spades here in the last couple of weeks.

The present piece of legislation, Bill C-143, the Supplementary Borrowing Authority, is in exactly the same category. The Government refuses to provide the answers for the most fundamental of parliamentary procedures, the most basic issue with which we are ever asked to deal, concerning what the Government will do with the money which it is requesting authority from Parliament to borrow.

Just a few months ago the former Minister of Finance made it very clear that he would not ask for any further borrowing authority from the House until a budget had been provided to the House, until the means of raising and spending moneys had been spelled out to us in detail. That is what he said just a few months ago. Once again, the Liberal Government has gone back on its word. Not that that should be surprising; it happens all the time. However, here we have it in spades. We have it in extravagance. The Government, void of any honour, any integrity, any courage, has passed up another opportunity to introduce a budget which would at least try to address the financial mess in which Canada finds itself today, in which the economy has been plunged.

Therefore, we are faced with Bill C-143, a borrowing authority Bill which asks the House for authority to give the Government a staggering $19 billion in additional money to spend. However, there is no budget as was promised. Yes, the Estimates were tabled the other day, but they did not give us a detailed account for the $5 billion requested specifically for this fiscal year nor for the $14 billion which will be requested in the 1983-84 fiscal year. There are not even any forecasts as to the need for such increased expenditures.

It is almost impossible to believe, but nevertheless it happens that each time the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has risen in the House to speak of the fiscal situation in this country, he has told us that the deficit is larger than it was the last time he spoke, and the financial requirements of the Government continue to grow. Now, that amount projected takes us to the edge of a precipice. There is absolutely no control, no management, no restriction coming from the Government benches.

Only as recently as last October the Minister of Finance announced, as the House will remember, and indeed announced with the reaction horror and staggering surprise from the country at large, that the federal deficit had risen to $23.6 billion. Last week he came back to tell us that the deficit was now $27.2 billion for the fiscal year ending in March, 1983. In less than four months the deficit had risen $3.6 billion, almost $4 billion; or, put another way, $1 billion for every month since October that the Minister of Finance has delayed bringing in a budget. His waffling and procrastination have resulted, in both financial and human terms, in unparalleled costs, reflected in one-and-one-half million Canadians out of work. The Gross National Product has fallen by 5 per cent during this past year. Bankruptcies among small businesses, among farmers and personal bankruptcies, are up 33 per cent in this past year. High interest rates have economically crippled businesses and individual Canadians. The waffling and procrastination which are hallmarks of this Liberal Government are no prescription for businesses and industries that are crying out to the Government to provide a climate of confidence and stability in the country.

What is needed by the business community is positive, factual information that would lessen the burden of their struggles. With some, those struggles are to expand their businesses. With others, it is merely to survive. Instead, the economic instability and the uncertainty remain; in fact, they grow worse. It confronts us with that uncertainty, that instability, right here today.

Bill C-143 is the largest borrowing Bill, the largest request for money ever to come before the Parliament of Canada. The Government wants authority to borrow $19 billion but it will not tell us what it wants it for. The Estimates for the next fiscal year were tabled last week and they show the largest expenditure ever to be undertaken by a federal Government, an expenditure of $88.9 billion; but that will probably increase when all the Supplementary Estimates are in to $100 billion.

Just think of those figures. We are talking about a borrowing authority of $19 billion and projected expenditures that could go as high as $100 billion. In all of this, the Government refuses to explain to the people of Canada, through their elected representatives, how they are going to raise and spend those moneys. At the beginning of parliamentary history, the nobles held King John accountable to tell them how he was going to spend the moneys of the realm. If he had not done so they would probably have said "Off with his head," and perhaps that is the only way we can bring this Government to be accountable for the moneys that they control now and about which they refuse to explain to the Canadian people, defying parliamentary tradition and denying Parliament the most basic information for which Parliament exists. What that is doing is downgrading, humiliating and demeaning this institution.

It also creates another very worrisome situation, one which I am sure all Hon. Members are running into. The business community hears the news that the Government is after another $19 billion is spending authority and that its estimated expenditures for the year ahead will probably amount to $100 billion; and the signals that go out are inflationary signals. The business community is asking where the Government is going to go for this borrowing and whether it will create a logjam in the capital market.

The concern they express to me and I am sure to most Members on this side, whether they do to Liberal Members or not, is that they are afraid that the battle for scarce capital is going to be reactivated, that that battle will once again be fought unfairly, with priority being given to the public sector requirement while the private sector is left to scramble for what is left.

What that means is that that scarcity of capital will have the inevitable result of pushing rates higher. That is the fear of the business community, whether small business or large business. That is what is being experienced in every part of the country. The instability and uncertainty that has been generated by this borrowing authority is that once again on the horizon we see high interest rates looming because of the way the Government is trying to enact fiscal policies in this country, trying to transact them in a way that is deceptive to this House and to the business community at large.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-143 which is before us at this time is the fourth borrowing authority that this Government has introduced in the last eight months. On June 8, 1982 Bill C-111 granted the Government $6.6 billion. In June, 1982 Bill C-125 gave the Government an additional $7 billion; and in November, 1982 Bill C-128 gave it an extra $4 billion. The legislation before us today will grant the Government another $19 billion. For what? Of that amount, $14 billion is completely unaccounted for; $14 billion for a budget which we have not yet seen in this House of Commons.

Like previous speakers on this legislation, I deplore the fact that we are being asked to authorize great sums of money without any direction from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) or the Cabinet as a whole as to where the money is going. The main reason for having a Parliament throughout the history of England and of this country is that the taxpayers, the citizens of the country, have a right to say what taxes are levied, what expenditures it is allowed to make. For us to pass this Bill without that rationalization and without any explanation by the Government would be defeating the very purpose for which a Parliament is set up.

We have had three budgets in the last 14 months. The November, 1981 budget, although labelled as a soak-the-rich budget, did anything but that. It was only a mechanism for shuffling the loopholes; close one loophole and open others.

The taxes of those earning the most in Canada were actually reduced as a result of the measures in the November, 1981 budget, and significantly so. Those in the top tax brackets of this country were told that their federal taxes would be reduced from 43 to 34 per cent. The decrease in their federal tax affects what happens provincially and this becomes important in terms of what they actually pay. Therefore, they pay significantly less to the coffers both of the federal and provincial Governments.

In June, 1982 the then Minister of Finance introduced a second budget. That budget can basically be called the six and five budget. The main purpose of that budget was to impose six and five increases on salaries of federal workers, old age pensions, Family Allowances and the pensions of retired public servants. As is so often the case, the Government failed to follow through on its six and five legislation when it came to its friends. This Government has one set of priorities, rules and laws for the average Canadian, but the political appointees, their friends, will get more than six and five per cent increases.

I wish to quote from an article in the Saturday, February 26, Globe and Mail entitled "Some federal agencies manipulate 6 and 5":

> Members of the board of the National Energy Board will make an average of $72,668 in the year ended March 31, 1984, up 10.8 per cent from the fiscal 1983 level. In fiscal 1983, they received an average 18.6 per cent raise, bumping up their income over two years by about $17,400.

That is not six and five. We have six and five for janitors in the Government service and for old age pensions, but not for Liberal appointees to the National Energy Board. Referring to the Atomic Energy Control Board the article states:

> Part of this budget increase will go to fund a 10.7 per cent rise in average fiscal 1984 management salaries, to $59,340. In the current year, salaries rose 13.8 per cent.

It states that the Northern Pipeline Agency will give its managers an 11.6 per cent raise, to $71,915. The article also refers to other Government agencies.

My point is that we authorized Government funds based on a budget in June, 1982 which said that six and five would be the law of the land. That law is not for all Canadians. Some Canadians who are being paid by the Liberal Government are receiving increases much in excess of the six and five program, and for that this Government must be accountable.

The third budget, presented by the Minister of Finance in October, 1982, can basically be called the NEED budget. The only significant program in that budget was the establishment of the NEED program, presumably for those who have exhausted their UIC benefits. Those people were to be provided with employment. By the Government's own figures, 3,000 to 5,000 jobs were created. That is so insignificant in the face of our present unemployment that it is a laugh. The budget has created almost no jobs. The only jobs created are for the ads and brochures put out across this country by the Government. The jobs for those who lost their UIC benefits or have never received them because they have not had a job are not there. This program is not creating jobs at a very fast pace for these Canadians.

And so, Mr. Speaker, we come to the next budget, the budget which we have been told will be introduced in April of this year. We are told that that particular budget will deal with the problem of job creation. These are the hints, the leaks and the indications which we are given. But where is that money going? To what use would that money be put and who would receive that money? I endorse the motion of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) who said that this Bill should not be passed, that the subject matter of this Bill should be sent to committee for study. Surely to God, Mr. Speaker, we should not pass a Bill which gives the Government $19 billion more without any indication that the Government knows where the money is going. This Government has no economic plan and no knowledge of where it is going.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this Liberal Government is like the chicken which had its head chopped off and still jumps around the coop. This Government is dead but has not the decency to die.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I echo the thoughts of other Hon. Members who have participated in this debate on Bill C-143, a massive Government borrowing Bill which asks the Parliament of Canada, without any plan, design or financial statement, let alone budget, to give to it $19 billion. This Bill, presented without any plan as to what is going to happen to that money, is in my humble opinion a direct insult to this institution and an affront to the Canadian people, an affront to the Canadian taxpayer who will eventually have to pay back this money through whatever taxes the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) imposes whenever he brings in another budget. You do not borrow $19 billion without interest. There is no more free lunch. Canadian taxpayers of the future are going to have to pay this money back. It is completely unacceptable to give the blank cheque which is asked for here by the present Government.

Other Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, have tried to analyse the implications of both the Estimates and spending plans as well as the $19 billion asked for in this Bill. I share the view of most Hon. Members that, frankly, most Canadians, even Hon. Members of this Parliament, just cannot comprehend what $1 billion is. Many years ago C. D. Howe said "What's a million?" Now the question is, "What's a billion?"

I read with interest an article in Saturday Night of February, 1983, where Dian Cohen was quoted as she tried to reduce "billions" to a comprehensible figure. She said, and I quote:

"The big race has begun. The object of the exercise is for the government of Canada ... to spend its way through $76-billion before midnight March 31, 1983. That means spending $200-million a day every day."

That is a tremendous amount of money in terms of the mismanagement of this Government in the last period of 15 years, really since the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been in charge. Government spending has been out of control. Spending has gone from $1,837 to $8,000 plus per taxpayer in that 15-year period. Per capita spending has gone from $595 per Canadian to $3,281 per Canadians; interest on the debt to the taxpayer from $215 to $1,600 plus in 1982-83; per capita, from $70 to $682. And it goes on and on.

In a most interesting column, Mr. Don McGillivray in The Gazette on February 22, 1983 tried to define "What's a billion?" He prefaced his remarks by saying that if you had to spend $100 an hour, and you spent that sum for a 16-hour day, taking, I believe, Sundays off, you were into the situation that even at that pace, with two weeks' annual vacation, you would be spending only $480,000 a year. On that basis, how long would it take to spend a billion? The answer is, and I quote from the article:

The answer is that it would take about 2,083 years to spend $1 billion. In other words, you would have had to start before the birth of Christ, when the Roman Empire was just beginning under Augustus.

You would have spent about half your billion dollars by the time William the Conqueror invaded England in 1066. When Christopher Columbus discovered America in 1492 you would be about three-quarters done. By the time the United States declared independence from Britain in 1776, you would have only about one sixth of the billion left to spend.

Canada's Confederation in 1867 would find you with less than 10 per cent of the money still on hand.

That is just for one billion, Mr. Speaker. He has some other interesting cogitations as to spending an $80 billion or $90 billion budget which, in effect, is close to our estimated budget, but I have no time in this ten-minute abbreviated form of debate to delve into that. We are talking in Bill C-143 of $19 billion. As the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), among others, has said, this is the largest borrowing Bill ever asked by any Government and is just another reflection of the Government's arrogance toward the Canadian people. If it takes that length of time to spend $1 billion, a little over 2,000 years, you are almost back in the days of the caveman, 38,000 years ago, with the $19 billion.

I have tried quickly to give some human dimension to the spending of this Government. All too quickly, with this ten-minute rule, I have tried to put this Government's massive spending into some comprehensible perspective, even though this borrowing Bill for $19 billion is completely without precedent for unknown expenditures in programs still not defined. Sadly, however, there is more than economic bankruptcy in the Government's spending plans, and if this were private industry we would be bankrupt. We never could get the loan from a bank unless we could project what the revenues were and what we were going to do with the money. There is not only economic bankruptcy here, there is a moral bankruptcy in the conduct of this Government. I say sadly, Mr. Speaker, that when a man of principle perverts principle to protect his person, he flies in the face of biblical admonition and is as blind as the emperor who had no clothes. The mightier the man, the more profound the insult. When men of personal honour are blind to public wrong, that does not remove the mote of morality which must govern public affairs. It just again shows that our temporal leaders have feet of clay and do harm to the system if they stay. Who cares if the Minister can balance the books if he cannot be believed? Public trust and the parliamentary system are more important than any one person, and it is indeed sad to see the perverted defence of one diminish the other. A resignation does not confirm the self-inflicted insinuation of personal wrongdoing, but it does admit a public duty higher than self. Why else do we have guidelines?

Ego and purity of spirit can be no substitute for a sense of public responsibility in our form of democratic Government. Lord Carrington did not fire a shot, Sharon did not personally open the gates of the refugees, but both had a public duty to be responsible for their ministerial acts or omissions. And it should be so here. There is no smear about a conflict of interest, no innuendo about wrong, but a very definite statement that through ignorance, inadvertence, or by design, the Government's own conflict of interest guidelines were broken.

If the guidelines have any meaning at all, and the Government has any credibility, something has to give. By the very nature of conflict of interest guidelines and maintaining public trust in Government, there is not only damage done, but there is an insult to that public trust if nothing happens. If a Government is going to ignore its own guidelines and thus has no credibility with its own defined standard of morality, how can the public believe it on more mundane matters of Government like tax policy, budgets and job creation? That is why the Gillespie matter is so acute. It strikes at the very foundation of Government and no number of billions, borrowed or otherwise, will change that fact.

To restore confidence to the parliamentary system, which is far more important than transitory parliamentary kudos in debate, the Minister has to resign, thereby admitting the public wrong and removing the present private doubt about the Minister's integrity and character. Ironically, and for some sadly, it has been the Government's reaction to the issue which has created doubts in the minds of many where before no doubt existed. The Opposition did not create the "Mickey" connection and only the Government can correct it. A public move may restore personal respect but no move at all creates a cancer of disbelief which will continue to sicken the system and stigmatize the Minister. If the Government fails to move, even more Canadians will believe that the only pervading guideline of this Government is not what you can do for your country but what your country can do for you.

• (1150)

That sad standard, Mr. Speaker, makes the Minister's resignation imperative and makes the issue even more important than the billions asked for in a blank cheque through Bill C-143.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of the amendment to Bill C-143, the borrowing Bill in the amount of $19 billion.

Ten minutes is a short time to speak. To start, I should like to give a different perspective on how much $19 billion really is to most Canadians. I have worked it out this way, Mr. Speaker, and this may make things a little more clear. If you, sir, gave your wife $1 million and told her to spend $1,000 every day and come back when it was all gone, she would return in approximately three years.

Mr. Blackburn: She would never come back!

Mr. Kilgour: If you gave her $1 billion and told her to spend $1,000 a day she would return a good deal older and broke in about 2,740 years. So by my arithmetic, spending $19 billion at $1,000 a day would take her 52,060 years.

An Hon. Member: You don't know my wife!

Mr. Kilgour: That represents a lot of shopping and a lot of years to finance part of one year's federal deficit. In that sense, the $163 billion now in total federal Government debts is an invisible mortgage on our future, on our children and, as someone said, on our grandchildren.

At the moment it is especially important because it vastly reduces the Government's ability to deal with the acute problem of unemployment. As the economist Richard Lipsey pointed out, "you can expect a deficit in a recession and to balance a budget every year is a recipe for disaster." He went on to point out, however, that it is not the existence of the deficit but the fear that the Government has lost control of spending that is the issue. He added that the goal should be to balance the budget over the course of the business cycle, not to balance it every year.

I see that there are seven Liberals present, Mr. Speaker, so through you may I speak to the approximately two million unemployed Canadians about why we have gone so wrong and how we can get things back on track.

The City of Edmonton is supposed to be a mecca of good employment prospects, but I learned last week that 52,000 people are drawing Unemployment Insurance benefits while there are only 1,000 jobs available at the four Manpower offices. I do not know what it is like in Toronto, Montreal, Halifax or Ottawa. I can only shudder when I think of that. Most people think that Edmonton is doing well economically.

Why is it that Canada is doing so much worse than other countries? When I last checked the unemployment rate in West Germany it was 8 per cent, in Japan it was 2 per cent and in Switzerland it was .4 per cent. According to Euromoney, last year we were in 55th place out of 81 countries in terms of economic performance and 24th out of 24 OECD countries.

One of the reasons for this, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government has soured the entrepreneurial atmosphere in the country. More investment money flowed out of Canada in 1981 than ever before in our history. Some $10.3 billion of direct investment left Canada, about half of it due to Canadians taking their money out of the country and the other half due to foreigners taking their money out. Those billions of dollars represent how many lost jobs?

As the billions fled the country, the Bank of Canada resolved to try to keep interest rates above those in the United States on the theory that this would attract foreign money to this country. They tried to keep the dollar at about 80 cents U.S. How many bankruptcies were caused by sky-high interest rates in this country in the last 18 months? How many houses and apartment buildings were not built because of the interest rate policy? In my view, Mr. Speaker, the interest rates we have experienced have killed thousands and thousands of jobs and businesses in the country.

Tax levels are now a major drag on our economic growth. In British Columbia the average family earned $29,201 in 1982 and paid 41 per cent of $12,114 in taxes, made up of $4,055 for income tax, $1,755 for social security, pension, medical and hospital taxes, $1,683 for sales taxes and $1,218 for property taxes and so on. The average Canadian now spends more on taxes than on food, clothing and shelter combined. The 1981 budget did not help the situation by increasing taxes by about $1.6 billion. That is not the way to lift the economy out of the pits.

The national energy policy, which was primarily designed to serve political and not economic objectives, helped push Canada into a recession. Megaprojects such as the Alsands and countless smaller projects died. The program brought in new taxes. As an example, the petrochemical industry in Alberta had ten or eleven natural gas based projects planned, but now all have been postponed, retarded or cancelled because of the new natural gas taxes imposed in the National Energy Program. Today one of the existing plants is building an expansion facility in New Zealand while Alberta is practically bursting with natural gas.

The Government is perceived by many foreigners to be hostile to overseas investment because of FIRA. Just the other day I was on a plane with a person active in the office equipment business. He told me that he wanted to start doing business in Canada and would create 125 new jobs. It cost him $15,000 in legal fees and took three months to get through FIRA. It took only two weeks, however, to get started in West Germany and about the same in Australia and the United Kingdom. He persevered, but how many investors have not persevered to create new jobs because of the obstacles put up by FIRA?

One of the recent budgets reduced the first-year capital cost allowance at a time when all companies are short of cash flow, especially small businesses. Who knows how many small businesses did not expand or laid people off. It is like garroting a golden goose, small business being the goose that creates most of our new jobs.

The Government has soured our relationships with our closest trading partner through the NEP and FIRA. Last year 50 bills before the U.S. Congress directly or indirectly involved trade retaliation against this country. The problem is how to get out of this situation. It is obvious that the Government has cut the economy with a thousand cuts and is not going to get us out of it.

In closing, I should like to refer to Professor Lipsey again, Mr. Speaker. Last summer he said that Canada should rejoin the international business community, restore confidence both domestically and internationally, and that economic nationalism is something that we cannot afford. I heartily agree with him, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, let me enter this debate by asking you a hypothetical question. Let us suppose that I could be instantaneously transported from my place here in the House of Commons to Ryckman's Corners at No. 53 Highway on the Mountain, or along Wilson Street in Ancaster, or to market Square in Dundas, or to the Village Fish'N'Chips Coffee Shop in Waterdown, or to the Carlysle General Store, or to the Freelton Post Office, or to the main streets and intersections of Binbrook or Sheffield or Rockton or Mount Hope, or any one of the 50 communities I represent in Hamilton-Wentworth. Let us suppose I could speak right now to anyone in my riding, or I could talk to my parents out in Vancouver, and say: "I am at this very moment representing you in the House of Commons on a Bill which authorizes the Government of Canada to borrow 19 billion more dollars to meet its spending requirements".

I do not have to imagine what responses my constituents would give to that statement. At the very least they would be exceedingly unparliamentary. Let us suppose that their answers would run along the lines of: "What? In Heaven's name, why do they need another $19 billion? Has this Government not spent enough of our money? Why do they need another $19 billion for this"—expletive deleted—"Government? Don't let them get away with it!"

I am speaking today to denounce in the strongest possible terms the granting of an unprecedented amount of money to pay unspecified bills for programs which are not yet clearly identified. The $19 billion which the Government seeks to borrow is an astonishing admission that this Liberal administration is bankrupt. It is bankrupt in terms of revenue. It is bankrupt in terms of ideas and policies. It is bankrupt in terms of moral authority to impose this kind of burden on the Canadian taxpayer.

This Government can only borrow and borrow and borrow, to spend and spend and spend even more. Ottawa's big spenders have determined that it will take $89 billion—that is "b" as in "boondoggle"— to run this country.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is just a preliminary estimate.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): As my colleague points out, that is just a preliminary estimate. Have you any idea, Mr. Speaker, what $89 billion means in terms that we laymen can understand? Breaking it down into $1 bills, let me cite a fascinating analysis which appeared in the Toronto Star by Jim Emmerson on how far $89 billion really can go. Given that folks have troubles with Air Canada's seat sales these days, why not own your own Boeing 747 jumbo jet? Boeing in Seattle says that it will fit you out with a sporty model that Air Canada flies for around $94 billion. That means Canada's $89 billion budget could buy an armada of 950 Boeing jumbo jets, sporty configuration.

An Hon. Member: That is not enough for the Cabinet.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): No, they do not have that many Cabinet Ministers yet. One of my colleagues says that that is not enough for the Cabinet. They only have 40 or 50 Ministers over there, so they would only need 40 or 50 Boeing jumbo jets. If you are a white-knuckle flyer, how about ground transportation by Rolls-Royce? How about a cozy little Rolls-Royce Corniche at a measly $230,000 a copy? The $89 billion spending plan of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) would get you roughly 356,000 Rolls-Royces. The list goes on. Mr. Speaker, you can make up your own examples of how far an $89 billion spending budget might go.

Borrow, spend; borrow, spend; borrow, spend: that is the B-S principle, and we Canadians have had enough B-S from this Government without having to approve this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Right Hon. Member for Mount Royal, has a lot in common with Christopher Columbus. When Columbus left, he did not know where he was going. On his way he faced mutiny in the ranks. When he got to his destination, he thought that he was somewhere else. When he returned, he did not know where he had been. The entire voyage was financed through borrowed money. The similarity ends there, for that voyage was a commercial success. The Canadian ship of state is a vessel which resembles the Titanic far more closely than it resembles the Santa Maria.

This $19 billion represents a 9.6 per cent increase for Government spending, proving that the Government cannot obey its own six and five guidelines. This Government of six and five is coming before us with a borrowing request for $19 billion—$5 billion this year, $2 billion to carry over to next year, plus another $14 billion,—that is $16 billion for next year. This is absolutely the largest borrowing request in the history of this Parliament. The Government will probably require another $19 billion after the $16 billion is used up to carry it through the balance of the year. It has asked for a total of $26 billion to date, which clearly shows that this is a Government out of control.

If we are talking about the morality of obeying its own six and five guidelines, I think the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) said it for me and for the rest of Canadians when he said, as reported on page 22963 of Hansard:

> There is certainly no leadership over there and certainly no morality, judging by the performance of the front bench opposite today and on previous occasions.

He was referring to the last week or ten days of distinct immorality which has been going on in the Liberal Government. He continued:

> People expect moral and honest leadership from a Government, not the kind of sleazy leadership we are getting from that Minister—

He meant the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray).

> —and other Ministers. They ask the old age pensioners and families with small children to exercise restraint while they spend money as if it were going out of style.

There is another aspect of this continuing problem of morality with which Parliament is seized these days that I would like to address briefly. At present there are no up-to-date forecasts to show that the Government needs $5 billion for this year in new borrowing authority. This is in spite of the promises made last October by the present Minister of Finance that there would be a new budget before more authority was sought. He said:

> In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-84 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

That speaks for itself. I realize that my ten minutes are coming to a close; I will wrap it up in 30 seconds. I simply want to say that anyone on a fixed income, anyone who is unemployed, or anyone who runs a family budget, will understand why my colleagues and I on this side of the House in the Progressive Conservative Party will oppose with all our might this outrageous borrowing Bill for an extra $19 billion boondoggle.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are continuing today consideration of the amendment to the borrowing authority Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), which essentially was designed to refer the question of an extended borrowing authority to committee. We think that this is a very rational approach and consistent with parliamentary practice, since it is not very often that the House gets asked for the right to borrow some $19 billion without the presentation of any estimates, a budget or a statement concerning for what the extended borrowing authority will be used.

When I was doing my constituency tour, as I do several times during the year in order to visit the 90-some communities in my riding, the topic last October before this session resumed was that of the deficit. I tried to deal with Government expenditures and our unemployment problem. Through discussion we concluded that the extra expenditures the Government would have to put out by way of Unemployment Insurance and social security measures in picking up living expenses of those people whose Unemployment Insurance benefits had run out, would likely result in a deficit of around $28 billion to $30 billion at the end of the fiscal year on March 31.

In the Finance Minister's statement made two weeks after Parliament resumed, he estimated the deficit would be somewhat less than $28 billion. But with the Estimates we now have we find the deficit will be in that ball park.

The principle generally conceded to be in effect when it comes to managing money in the parliamentary system has always been that, first, the Government will lay down a Speech from the Throne, followed by a budget containing the economic forecast for the country as well as the expenditures and methods by which the Government will raise the required funds, either through taxation or other means. Then as the parliamentary session proceeds we get to the estimates of each department. Committees examine them. However, that procedure is being by-passed with the kind of borrowing authority that is being asked for today. Something like $5 billion is being asked for today to complete this fiscal year. But a new precedent is being set by the Government in asking for an additional $14 billion for the fiscal year to start April 1. This is almost as much as the accumulated borrowing authority requested for last year in the first six months. We were asked in June, 1982 for $6.6 billion, in July, 1982 for $7 billion, and in November, 1982 for an additional $4 billion for a total of $17.6 billion. Today we are being asked for an additional $5 billion to finish out the year.

What the Government appears to be doing is arranging to borrow for one whole year's expenditures prior to the beginning of a year. We are not guaranteed $17 billion will carry the Government through the year. This is simply an interim payment, so to speak. The Government may, in fact, be back before Parliament three or four times for additional borrowing as it did during this fiscal year.

It is right for this Parliament to stand on its ancient traditions so as to find out on what these moneys will be expended. We are right to hold up passage of this Bill until it is referred to a committee, as is the intent of this amendment with which we are dealing at the moment. Questions can be asked in committee and hopefully explanations will be given. Without that kind of question and answer session we get into a great many expenditures that are unplanned, are not monitored by the Parliament of the country, and do not have the sanction of this Parliament.

I have one example I wish to outline. It is a very small amount of money in comparison to $17 billion, $28 billion or even the cumulative budget of somewhere between $150 billion to $160 billion. Nevertheless, this example of mine outlines a principle which is being ignored. The matter came up in the House last week. I questioned the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) about the advertising he was doing in Quebec concerning the Crow proposal. I attempted to point out that the expenditures of those full-page ads had not received any authority from this House. The suggestion that advertising would be done to explain the Goverment's position on the Crow rate has never been presented in any of the Estimates. It was not mentioned in the budget nor directly in the Speech from the Throne. What is the Minister doing spending money on advertising the Crow rate proposal? Through his own admission, we found that he was prepared to spend $350,000. As reported in Hansard for February 22, 1983, he said:

> —and we are estimating that the total ad program will probably cost around $350,000.

When I asked him where he was getting the money, he replied:

> Madam Speaker, the funds we are using are funds from my Department and several other departments that are available for communications.

The Minister's reasoning for this advertising was that some of the provinces, specifically the Province of Quebec, were doing so.

I decided to check to see whether the parliamentary process in the Provinces had completely fallen down also. I phoned the Ministry of Agriculture for the Province of Quebec and I found out that indeed the Province of Quebec had allocated some funds to explain the Gilson proposal. Both the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Transport in the Province in Quebec had each allocated $5,000 for advertising. Some of those funds had been made available to a coalition set up by the various farm groups that will be affected by the Crow proposal. They had used some of that money for advertising. As far as they knew the total advertising expenditure was $6,103. It was to advertise meetings on the subject.

Mr. Miller: A pittance compared to the federal Government's amount.

Mr. Althouse: The federal Government needs $350,000 to counteract provincial advertising. The Minister of Agriculture told me that movies, slide shows and all kinds of media hype were being produced by the Provinces. I checked that out as well and found that the Province of Quebec has a slide tape show to explain the Gilson proposal, copies of which are distributed to agricultural experts in various regions of the Province. The Province spent $1,000 on those. These slide tape shows are now being updated, and the Province may spend as much as an additional $5,000 from the authorization fund of the Department of Transport. Thirteen copies are to be produced. If any Hon. Member is interested, a copy will be available at the Buckingham office, which is the closest one to Ottawa.

Parliamentary principles were adhered to in the Province of Quebec. The expenditure was put forward in that Province's Estimates and the funds were expended under the Estimates as passed.

However, in contrast to that, $350,000 is being expended by the federal Government to explain a policy which has never been formally introduced in this House nor has it ever been presented in the form of a Bill. It is a policy which has no authority to have money expended on it to explain it to the people of Canada. There is the difference. My example is only a small one but in the ten minutes allocated to me today I wanted to explain that point to the House and to the people of Canada.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in the debate this morning. However, the remarks made by the last two speakers from the Official Opposition have prompted me to rise and offer my reflections on what they said and what has been said on this subject in the House to date. I do not recall their constituencies but the two Members who participated and motivated me to speak this morning are Mr. Nowlan from Annapolis Valley—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is not the usual practice in the House to refer to Hon. Members by their surnames.

Mr. Kelly: I realize that, Mr. Speaker. I am mentioning their surnames so that I may get the correct constituency from you and use it in my remarks. The second Member who spoke and attracted my attention this morning is the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott).

I believe that the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) is approaching this debate from the proper perspective when he says that we should look at it in its human dimension. I think he is quite right. While we are concerned with money in this debate, we are in the final analysis really talking about people, and I was delighted to hear him approach this debate from that perspective.

Following those remarks, the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth rose to make a speech. In his remarks he suggested that, if one were to visit his riding or any riding in Canada to talk to the average Canadians in restaurants, senior citizen homes or anywhere else and ask them, on the basis of this human perspective, how they felt about the Government spending $19 billion, their reaction would be one of almost total outrage. I would suggest that the first speaker had the right attitude but that the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth asked the wrong question based on that attitude.

I believe that if we want to get a human perspective on this issue, people should not be asked whether they would like to spend that amount of money. I think the answer to that question would obviously be no, people would not like to have to spend $19 billion, $19,000 or $1,900. Nobody likes to have to spend money. I suggest that the question the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth should have asked in this hypothetical situation is "do you like to receive services." He could have asked the senior citizen if he wants his pension and to live comfortably in the senior citizen building. He could have asked the person who is sick if he wants to receive medicare. He could have asked those who are unemployed if they want to receive Unemployment Insurance benefits or welfare. He could have asked the students if they want to continue to enjoy the university and college courses they are taking now and the ones they will take in the future. He should have asked the businessmen if they want to continue to have their business grants and tax write-offs. Those on the right wing of the spectrum could have been asked if they want the defence forces built up and those on the left wing could have been asked if they want their social services maintained and enriched.

I submit that those questions reflect the human perspective of the issue. Those are the questions that the Member for Hamilton-Wentworth should have been asking the average Canadian in restaurants, senior citizen homes and factories. If they were asked about receiving $19 billion in terms of those questions, instead of asking them if they want to spend the money, I think their response would have been yes, they want those services.

The Official Opposition does not want us to spend $19 billion; obviously, those Members want us to spend less. However, I believe that none of them has suggested how much less they would spend. If they are interested in making a noticeable dent in this borrowing Bill, they would want to spend $2 billion to $5 billion less. If they find out borrowing Bill morally, intellectually and economically offensive and believe less should be spent, where would they cut costs? If they wanted to save up to $5 billion, where would they cut spending?

Some Members opposite, such as the Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), enjoy rising to criticize Government spending. When they are asked where they would make these spending cuts, they invariably say we should cut advertising expenditures because that is a waste of money. I tend to agree that advertising may be a waste of money, but its reduction does not constitute a very significant cut in the budget. If they are really concerned about cutting money, it is necessary to cut billions of dollars from the budget. When they move beyond the small amounts in Government advertising and other areas, where will the large expenditures be reduced?

We suggested that these reductions could be made by changing the character of the post office, which costs taxpayers $500 million a year. We thought we could save the taxpayers that money but the Opposition's response was no. We said that we could save money by reducing the increase in civil servants' salaries. The Opposition opposed that. We tried to save hundreds of millions of dollars by restructuring and realigning the railway system, but the Opposition vehemently opposed that.

I would listen more attentively to their arguments in this debate if they would tell me with some insight and honesty—the same honesty they asked of us—where they would make their spending cuts. I am afraid to wait for those answers for it would be like waiting for Godot, because they would never come. That is the unfortunate character of this debate. The Opposition can criticize us while posing no alternatives. They have nothing substantial or of real value to suggest.

I agree with Members opposite that there should be morality in the debates of the House. There should be honesty in arguments presented to the House that are designed to influence public opinion. I do not believe that that morality and honesty is present in the arguments made by the Opposition, certainly not from what I have heard today. If the Opposition is honest and moral in its belief that we should not spend $19 billion on the people of this country, I would ask them where they would make cuts. Let them be honest and moral with the people and tell us where they stand, if they know.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, in a few moments I will deal with a couple of areas where we might seriously consider making spending cuts.

First, I would like to say that we are dealing with Bill C-143, which is asking permission of the House to borrow $5 billion in addition to the $14 billion of which we have been notified. The Minister has no right to expect Members of the House to support legislation which asks for $5 billion and $14 billion until such time as the Government has given us a complete financial statement. Actually, this Bill grants a total of $19 billion in borrowing authority which has previously accumulated from Bill C-111, C-125 and C-128.

This is the largest borrowing Bill in Canadian history. The Government has passed Bills limiting Family Allowances, pensions and Old Age Security and today is attempting to pass legislation which would allow it to borrow $5 billion. The Government has restricted the least obvious sectors of the economy while allowing the major culprits to go literally untouched through advertising budgets and the like, through Crown corporations, directly or indirectly, and through direct patronage. Those are the areas where the Government would do well to make some serious cuts.

I should like to state a few facts dealing with the runaway deficit, unacceptable Government waste, and its dangerous implications concerning Canadian taxpayers. I would like to review the lack of Government priorities in the Nova Scotia Coalgate affair. On September 26 of 1975, Alastair Gillespie was appointed Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. While Minister, Gillespie learned about the success of coal liquefaction. He learned about these projects in South Africa and, as he told Canadian Press, "I knew about this, of course, because of my previous responsibilities as Energy Minister, and when I was down there"—referring to a visit in 1979—"I spoke to them. I flew over the plants and I became intrigued". On March 30, 1977 the Canada-Nova Scotia Oil Substitution and Conservation Agreement was authorized by Order in Council 1977-7/913.

On June 4, 1979 Gillespie resigned as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and later in the same year he again visited South Africa to study the coal liquefaction project so as to examine, now that he had entered the private sector, how he might use his power and influence in the Government of Canada to turn a small amount of money into a literal fortune.

On October 29, 1980 a memorandum of understanding was signed between Alastair Gillespie and Associates and five corporate partners, including two Crown corporations, Petro-Canada Explorations Incorporated, which would report to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the Cape Breton Development Corporation, which would report to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Continuing on, the corporate partners each committed $300,000; Gillespie, the developer, committed only $25,000. The memo also provided:

> The developer will, commencing on October 29, 1980, be remunerated by an annual retainer, initially fixed at $30,000 and on a per diem basis, initially fixed at $600, for Gillespie's time plus out-of-pocket expenses.

The memo stipulated that if Gillespie chose to sell his interest, he was to be paid $25,000 by the corporate partners for his investment of $25,000; and if the corporate partners chose to buy Gillespie out, he was to be paid up to $750,000. This is where the Government could save some money, through better control of Crown corporations as they disburse taxpayers' dollars.

Then on December 16, 1980 Alastair Gillespie and Associates was incorporated in the Province of Ontario, and on April 4, 1981, in Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), who is from Nova Scotia, announced the formation of a consortium and "a study project that will investigate the feasibility of producing liquid fuels from Nova Scotia coal". The press release identified Alastair Gillespie as the head of the consortium's executive board. Then to put the icing on the cake, on April 8, 1981, in a news story following the April 4 announcement, the Port Hawkesbury Scotia Sun quoted the Deputy Prime Minister as saying:

> Things always come out right in the end. Gillespie is now one of the beneficiaries of his own foresighted policies.

The story has a happy ending for Mr. Gillespie. He could make as much as $750,000 from his $25,000 investment if the project goes ahead and the partners buy his share.

I should like to once again quote the Deputy Prime Minister. He said:

> Things always come out right in the end.

However, the Deputy Prime Minister seems to be ignoring a number of facts. First, Alastair Gillespie as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources originally sponsored the initiative to investigate the prospect of coal liquefaction. He researched the project in South Africa as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and returned shortly after his retirement.

Second, the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), approved funding of the feasibility study into Gillespie's plan to turn Cape Breton coal into liquid fuels for transportation.

Third, Mr. Cohen, the Deputy Minister to the Minister of Finance, also took part in the discussions before June of 1981.

The fourth point is again in relation to the Deputy Prime Minister himself, who was involved with the project six months before then. He announced the plans with Nova Scotia Premier John Buchanan and Gillespie in April of 1981.

These actions were obviously breaches of conduct and any such deal providing a former Minister with benefits of up to $750,000 would certainly create the appearance of wrongdoing. This House and the Canadian people demand some honest answers from the Government, and if they are not forthcoming the Ministers involved must resign.

By way of conclusion I should like to add that this latest example of Government favouritism comes on the wake of yet another former Minister currently reaping the rewards from his past association with the Government. Donald Macdonald will be receiving $800 a day to research and analyze the problems in our economic structure.

Mr. Chénier: What does this have to do with the Bill?

Miss MacDonald: We are talking about borrowing.

Mr. Domm: After what we have seen in this House in the last three weeks, we do not have to look far to realize who must accept the ultimate responsibility for economic ineptitude. It is not the fault of the pensioners, the elderly or the unemployed; today's economic difficulties are the result of Liberal mismanagement. This conclusion may be reached without paying $800 a day.

Obviously, while the Minister of Finance and the Deputy Prime Minister are resigning, we might ask the current Government to do the people of Canada a favour and oblige the majority by also resigning in order that we might restore confidence to our system of Government here in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today, the Government is asking Parliament for the authority to borrow up to $19 billion, the largest amount ever requested in Canadian history. The Government says, "No questions asked, just give us the money".

In the year 1968 B.P., which translates as, "Before Pierre", it cost the Government $500 per Canadian to run the country; but it now costs $3,750, and each Canadian's share of that debt is $8,000. Perhaps I could point that out to the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly). That is a legacy of debt which will be perpetrated even unto our grandchildren.

However, the Government must surely realize by now that almost everyone in Canada is asking a lot of questions. Of course, the most important is the question, "Why?" Is this borrowing in any way stimulative to our stagnant economy? Of course, the answer is an emphatic "no". Why has the Government put this nation some $27 billion into debt? Does the Government need an extra $19 billion? Again, the answer is, "no". Why, when we were promised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in October that he would look into all the financial repercussions and give us a full accounting, was that accounting not forthcoming? Why did the Minister promise, with his coalgate smile, "We will give you the answers"? Everyone now knows about Coalgate and Canadians are not smiling.

The Government's arrogant reply to all of our questions has been, "It is none of your business". However, it is our business. Where did the $27 billion go? Donald McGillivray of the Southam Press has pointed out that it would take a dedicated consumer more than 2,000 years to get rid of that sum, spending at the rate of $100 an hour, 16 hours a day and six days a week. Even my wife could not keep up to that record. It is a legacy of debt to our children. However, the converse is also true, and that is that if one owes $1 billion, it would take just as long to repay it on the same schedule. That is the legacy that the Government has left to our children, yet the Government says that it is none of our business, just like Bill C-139 was none of our business.

The Government says, "Let us hurriedly pass the Bill". It wants to vote tomorrow. Let us consider Bill C-139 which Hon. Members had the pleasure, or not, to hear me address, depending on whether or not the manner in which I was speaking a week or so ago was appreciated. Government staff required 389 days to write the document, which embraces changes in the income tax law introduced in the budget and financial statements issued in November and December of 1981 and June and October of 1982. It goes back as far as 15 months. No wonder we have to borrow $19 billion, we have no idea where we are going, no planning. It represents the work of two Finance Ministers. One has been kicked back to try to do a job in foreign affairs, having been relegated downwards after making such a mess of our financial affairs. His successor, the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), sat for seven days on that front bench and allowed the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to stand up and admit to this House that it had been misled, before himself coming out of the woodwork. And this is the man we are to entrust with $19 billion? This is the man Canadians are supposed to trust to come up with an honest budget? Ludicrous, Mr. Speaker, totally ludicrous!

It is not our business, the Government says, to question this $19 billion. Well, it is my business, it is the business of my colleagues and it is the business of all Canadians. Business is the key word here. Because of the utterly disastrous economic policies of this Government, hundreds of Canadian firms, large and small, have either gone out of business or are on the verge of bankruptcy. This situation is in itself a national tragedy and has spawned yet another, the unemployment of a staggering proportion of our people. If we allow this Government the funds to continue its economic mismanagement, if we approve the borrowing—and we would have to be crazy to do so—of an additional $19 billion with no questions asked because it is none of our business, the results will be no business, no employment, no future. We on this side say no deal, Mr. Speaker; no deal whatsoever to a socialist Prime Minister who has absolutely infiltrated a fine, old, stable, political party and taken it to the brink of bankruptcy and total state control.

An Hon. Member: Morally bankrupt.

Mr. Stewart: Canada is bankrupt. It is bankrupt of morals—thank you—and bankrupt of leadership. In the world of private business, such bankruptcy at all levels would never be condoned and certainly would never be prolonged.

If private business were to be restored to a competitive position in the marketplace, the shareholders would demand an exhaustive and detailed accounting, which we of course are not getting, of all the company's activities to determine what were the problem areas and where corrections could be made. Unfortunately, this is not within the realm of the thinking of the Liberal Members. If additional funds were required to achieve such restoration, the shareholders would certainly demand a detailed presentation of exactly how the money would be spent and to what end. If the executive officers refused to comply on both counts and did not then have the decency or honour to resign, they would, of course, be fired. But that does not apply to the Members opposite. The Finance Minister said that he was a man of honour, that he has a wife and children and will not resign. If he really is that man of honour and wants to spend more time with his family, be our guest and put the honour back into this House by resigning.

The Auditor General in his recent report to Parliament underscored this rejection when he spoke of Crown-owned corporations, terming them "sub-governments". He said that the accountability of such corporations is a matter of consequence both for Members of Parliament and for taxpayers. His words were, and I quote:

> The citizens of Canada have a right to consider themselves the principal shareholders of these organizations; Parliamentarians speak for them. Crown-owned corporations must be held accountable through Parliament.

Where is this accountability, I ask the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly), for this sub-government which in the last fiscal year was given $6.5 billion in tax dollars, 9 per cent of the total budget? I ask the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre to listen and I will give him some ideas where Government spending can be cut. Take a little heed.

Who is accountable for the process whereby Petro-Canada invested $1.7 billion to purchase Petrofina? Why was $50 million spent on photocopying, $25.5 million on the Unity Office and somewhere between $50 million and $100 million on advertising, $26 million on metric, $441 million on the bilingual program, totally non-productive? Where was the accountability for the $540 million VIA Rail cost Canadians last year? Who was held accountable for the fact that CN Marine has gone through $535 million since 1979? Who provided $25 million up front for the purchase of a ferry whose total cost and delivery date is unknown? Does that answer any of his questions?

Will there be any accountability for the operations of the new Canada Investment Corporation which is pork-barreled by some more Liberals? It took no fewer than 17 Orders in Council to oversee and administer this profligate spending of untold billions—mismanagement. That is why $19 billion more is needed.

This distinct avoidance of Government accountability is not confined to Crown corporations alone. Has anyone been fired or has anyone resigned, is there any honour over there, over the incentive payment from DREE of $2.7 million to a company just days before it went bankrupt? Has anyone been fired or has anyone resigned over the loss of $22 million spent on a rural development in Haiti, including a fraudulent payment of more than $100,000? Yet foreign aid, through caustic, cancerous, callous and totally calamitous CIDA, is being raised to over $1 billion, an increase of $150 million. No one has been fired.

Has anyone been fired in connection with the purchase and then sale of Consolidated Computer, Inc.? Of course not. What about letters of comfort to Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson, Maislin, de Havilland, and Canadair with its debt of $1.5 billion? What about former Finance Minister Macdonald, or Judd Buchanan, or permission to build housing in Alberta or CMHC over the six and five guidelines, an untold litany of horror?

I can see that my time is just about up, but what a beautiful subject. Would that I had another 20 minutes. This Government wants the authority to borrow $19 billion. Why? Where is the trust? Where is the accountability? Where is the responsibility? I know that the Government does not have to come to this Parliament for authority to borrow $19 billion. It has the money; it could save $19 billion or ten times that if it would cut out the waste that I have partially described. Those who operate a business, whether in the private or public sectors, must be responsible and accountable. Until this Government acts accordingly I would urge every Member with any gumption not to give permission to borrow that amount. Deny it.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I enter this debate on the borrowing Bill not from a totally negative point of view, even though the figure of $19 billion in added borrowing boggles the imagination and the projected current account debt of $30 billion seems to be almost insurmountable. However, most economists agree that if this country ever does get back to the productivity levels of 1975 to 1979, a $30 billion current account debt could be liquidated over a period of about four years. I, in that case, am not so terribly horrified at the size of the debt; what disturbs me are the purposes for which the Government is asking for the money.

As we all know, we are in the depths of a very, very severe recession, and with Government revenues obviously down any Government, whether it is a Conservative Government, an NDP Government or a Liberal Government, is going to have to borrow money if it is to maintain a certain basic minimum standard of living in the country, particularly for those hardest hit by that recession.

As we all know, revenues are way down in the corporate sector, as far as corporate taxation and personal income tax are concerned, and there is a real crisis looming on the horizon concerning revenues from energy, particularly petroleum and its by-products. This, of course, will not only adversely affect Canada, but may very well exacerbate the recession worldwide.

As we all know, for the past two or three years most Governments have geared revenues to increased taxes from petroleum and petroleum by-products. Now we see they are going to have to sharpen their pencils and begin to renegotiate downward those levels of revenue. We are really just talking about the tip of the iceberg when we talk about $19 billion through this borrowing Bill and a $30 billion current account debt. With respect to the way the Government is spending the money, and this is the crux of my argument, I fear that a large proportion of that money is being thrown away at sunset industries and sunset economies within our larger national community.

The recession is serious, the problem of sufficient revenue is serious, but what is even more serious—and this is something which the Government is not addressing—is the tremendous high-technology change through which the industrialized world has been going for the past 15 years. The recession has brought this high-tech revolution into focus. Let me give a few examples.

If one compares and contrasts the City of Detroit with the City of Houston, Texas, one will get a very clear idea of just where the hell we are going or not going in this part of the world. Detroit has massive unemployment, decay in the inner core, business failures, old industries drying up and going bankrupt, and Government infusing massive amounts of capital to keep sunset industries, such as the auto industry, going.

If you look at Houston, Texas, you find high technology booming. Houston has not experienced the recession. There are different kinds of city planning, a multitude of institutions teaching high technology and the computer, the microchip industry, is part of the planning process.

Japan saw the writing on the wall in 1975. This may come as a surprise to Members on both sides of this House, but in 1975, through long-term economic planning, which this Government and the Conservatives are opposed to, Japan realized that the auto-making industry was a sunset industry, that the steel-processing industry was a sunset industry and shipbuilding was a sunset industry. They have gradually been disengaging themselves from those three second-wave sunset industries. As we know, they are going to the new "Japans". Auto-making is going to Taiwan and South Korea, shipbuilding is going to Spain and steel processing is going to Brazil.

What are we doing? Because of pressure from our constituents, particularly in industrial ridings, we are throwing hundreds of millions, indeed a couple of billion dollars into make-work and stopgap make-work programs. This is motivated basically from a humane attitude on the part of the Government, but it is a total waste of money.

All we are doing through ILAP, for example, is trying to assist workers whose Unemployment Insurance benefits have run out until they can requalify for benefits which would carry them through another 50 or 52 weeks. On one hand the Government is proposing $5.2 billion in assistance for research and development. We should be talking of the total amount, or at least $2 billion, to train and retrain the unemployed and those who will be unemployed as a result of high technology, robotronics, microprocessing, whatever you want to call it, so that they will at least have a chance to find meaningful work when the recession is over.

I am absolutely disgusted at big business and the private sector of this country which refuse to plan ahead. They go from one quarter to the second quarter to the third quarter and then contrast performance with the first, second and third quarters of the previous year. They are myopic. They do not plan ahead in co-operation with Government or vice versa, as they do in Japan and Sweden, as they are now beginning to do in France and have been doing in West Germany.

There are only three countries left in the industrialized world which refuse to plan; the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada. All three are going down the tube. It apparently does not matter what Party is in power. We have the Conservatives raving about Reagonomics and what a great benefit it is, the supply side approach, yet the United States actually is not entering the third-wave sunrise industrialism of the eighties. They will not plan or look ahead. They throw billions of dollars into food stamps and into Unemployment Insurance, as we are, just to maintain sunset industries and sunset jobs.

We need an incomes policy in this country to do away with Unemployment Insurance and welfare and all the bloody red tape that goes with it. We need a decent, basic minimum income for everyone, and then a full-fledged, widespread high-tech training program for those who are capable of taking advantage of it.

If we are going to be stuck with 10 per cent unemployable people in this country, as I fear we are, we have to accept that in a humane and open way and learn to live with it. However, for the other 90 per cent who have a chance of getting employment, we must make every effort to spend money. If we have to borrow it, let us put it up front in a positive, creative way, not throw it into dying industries and jobs. That is really the nub of the problem.

My time is almost up. I impress upon the Government, for heaven's sake think ahead; think in terms of modern high technology. Think in terms of what Alvin Toffler calls "The Third Wave", what John Naisbitt in his book "Megatrends" calls the informational society. Those who have the information are the people who will have the jobs. Those who can run the computers and the robots will also have the jobs. The remainder, I am afraid, will be in dire straits unless the Government and the private sector get together with their act.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise shortly before the luncheon break to take part in the debate on Bill C-143. Many Canadians do not understand and certainly those on this side have a great deal of difficulty understanding why a Government would have to borrow $19 billion when the end of the fiscal year is fast approaching. It needs an additional $5 billion to get through this year, and $14 billion to carry us through until the summer, maybe July.

My colleagues in this Party have mentioned the total disregard which this Government has had and is continuing to have for accountability to the public of Canada. We have a request for $19 billion without any back-up, numbers, explanation, or plan which tells the people of Canada that we are going to do better. The Government has become so callous, so unconcerned about what Canadians think about how it controls money which really belongs to individual Canadians, that it does not believe it is necessary to put forward a plan.

This Government is continuing to create Crown corporations. When you see that Crown corporations now employ more people than Government Departments, you begin to wonder about accountability. Crown corporations are now involved in just about every facet of the lives of individual Canadians. In the eyes of Canadians, some Crown corporations perform admirably, others abysmally.

One Crown corporation which is of great interest to the people in my area is the CNR. Everyone considers it to be independent when it comes to financing.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

AIR CANADA

REBATES PROGRAM—AMERICAN CIVIL AERONAUTICS COMMISSION

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, the U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board has put on hold the discount program offered by Air Canada. This decision, which came in reaction to other administrative decisions, is very disappointing. Our neighbours to the South have demonstrated how nonchalant they are about Canadian-American relations, as they did earlier on the acid rain issue. We must protest this decision to demonstrate the importance of our relations to our friends in the South and to show that we want to put an end to outdated paternalistic attitudes. I therefore suggest that first of all, Canadians change their plans for 1983-84 and avoid the Southern United States as a winter holiday destination. Second, Canadians planning to visit the beaches in the Eastern United States next summer could visit Canada instead. Third, all Canadians concerned about or by this decision should demonstrate their disapproval by writing to the United States Embassy, 100 Wellington Street in Ottawa, and finally, people should call the U.S. Embassy today or tomorrow (613) 238-5335 to voice their complaints.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DANGERS TO CHILDREN OF EXPOSURE TO LEAD POLLUTION

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, Canada's laws with respect to the lead tolerance levels in our environment are detrimental to the mental health and well-being of young children who will be our leaders of tomorrow. The available evidence indicates that even low levels of lead exposure can cause irreversible damage to children, since their under-developed brains are particularly vulnerable to these effects. A wide variety of neurological and psychological abnormalities have been reported in recent studies of children exposed to lead. They have included hyperactivity, disturbance of attentional and language functions, and a significantly decreased I.Q. performance.

Leaded gasoline mostly accounts for lead pollution. More than 90 per cent of air-borne lead comes from that source. Yet the regulations brought in by the Liberal Government allow three times more lead in motor gasoline than is allowable in the U.S. In view of the total inaction, and complacency with the status quo on the part of the Liberal Government, let me ask the Liberal policymakers if they have ever considered, in their short-term policies, the future cost of hospitalization, special education for brain-impaired children, lost productivity of adult wage earners and, more significantly, the loss of human potential. It is imperative, Madam Speaker, that we stop the Government's destructive measures which harm our young people, our greatest asset, before they are turned into our greatest liability.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DENIAL OF COMPENSATION TO POLISH PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, in 1946 the Government of Canada arranged for the admission of a group of 4,527 Polish war veterans into Canada. These are men who fought side by side with Canadians to keep freedom alive. In 1961 the War Veterans Allowance Act of 1952 was amended and these same Polish veterans were granted the right to be recipients of a War Veterans Allowance.

In 1976 Bill C-92 was introduced, that is, the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, to provide compensation to former prisoners of war and escapees. Despite Paragraph 3, which stated that "A prisoner of another power is entitled, on application to the Commission, to compensation", the Polish veterans who qualified as prisoners of war and escapees were eliminated from the benefit because the Act stipulated that domicile in Canada at the time of enlistment was the determining factor in order to receive benefits under the Act.

Since these Poles form a special group of veterans, diverse from others in that they have only one allegiance, Canada, I respectfully suggest that we amend the relevant sections of the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act in order to allow a small number, less than 170 qualifying members from this group of 4,527 Polish war veterans, to be eligible for compensation as former prisoners of war and escapees.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR TRANSPORT

EFFECT OF PROPOSED TAX MEASURE

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, I wish to take the few moments allowed to me under Standing Order 21 to bring again to the attention of the Cabinet a very complex and damaging proposal which is contained in the tax measure which is before the House. The details of the amendments in Bill C-139, specifically Clauses 38, 123 and 125, which work in conjunction with the National Energy Board Act and the Petroleum Administration Act will cause serious harm to the Canadian air transport industry. The Government tried before to assess basically the same inequitable levies on this industry in 1981 and found that they were in breach of Canada's bilateral air agreements. At that time it had to retreat and refund the levies already collected.

This new version of that tax will also, in my opinion, breach those same agreements, and putting it in place will subject the Government to the same charges. It seems to me that the various Ministers and their Departments, for indeed there are more than one involved, would be well advised to withdraw these clauses and not hold up the balance of the legislation. This is a move which I have advocated previously, and will again, until I obtain some assurance that action will be taken.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

CALL FOR RECOGNITION BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, the aboriginal peoples of Canada are very concerned about the outcome of the March First Ministers' conference and the further definition of their rights.

Indian leaders worry that the future of their people lies in the hands of provincial Governments, most of which are either indifferent or hostile to those rights. At the same time the federal Government has maintained a distressing silence on the subject. It has not yet indicated its constitutional position, and Indian leaders are left with the question, "Is the Government for us or against us?" How can Indian people believe that the conference is an open process when the federal Government refuses to state its intentions? The people of Canada will not be served by a constitutional process run like a crooked poker game with a marked deck, hidden aces, pre-arranged signals among some of the players, and the aboriginal peoples as the intended marks.

Let the process be open. The Indians people have laid their cards on the table. Let the federal Government declare its position. To begin with, the federal Government should recognize the fundamental nature of aboriginal rights and should support a clause which would require the aboriginal peoples' consent before any change is made to those rights. It should support the removal of the word "existing", which at present limits and qualifies those rights, and it should commit itself to an ongoing—

Madam Speaker: Order.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DISMISSAL OF DRUG POSSESSION CHARGE

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (London-Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I have a situation I would like to bring to your attention where I believe a serious misjudgment has been made. Judge Glen Marshman recently dismissed a drug possession charge in the City of London, Ontario, ruling that the police violated the suspect's constitutional rights when they searched him and found 100 grams of marijuana. The narcotics were discovered when the accused was stopped for a traffic violation. The officer concerned should be congratulated for his alertness, his efficiency, and his on-the-job attentiveness. I believe a decision such as this demoralizes our police force and demeans our courts.

MARINE TRANSPORT

FUEL COMPENSATION RECOVERY CHARGE—DEMAND FOR ELIMINATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I would like to join with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis), in protesting a matter which is currently before us. Both the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) have recently given some constructive attention to the problems and potential of Canada's marine industry. Perhaps now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) might be persuaded to do likewise by finally eliminating the palpably counterproductive Transportation Fuel Compensation Recovery Charge.

As its rather cumbersome name implies, this 1980 budgetary measure permitted the Government to collect from Canadian shipowners the difference between the domestic price of oil and the world price. In particular, bunkers purchased west of the Ottawa Valley line are treated not as a factor of production but rather as a petroleum export, while east of the Ottawa valley, domestic carriers must remit the equivalent of the subsidy under the Oil Import Compensation Program.

No other Canadian industry is required to pay such a surcharge on energy used as a factor in the production of goods and services. Moreover, Canadian shipowners and the federal Government itself have incurred significant extra overhead in, respectively paying and administering this charge. The revenue arising from the charge since its introduction, $6.1 million in 1981 and a mere $2.5 million in 1982, can hardly justify these costs or the demonstrable erosion of the domestic carriers' competitive position.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE GOVERNMENT AND PATRONAGE

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, those ever loving Tories have spent the past week or two attacking the Government for patronage. They should know all about patronage. For starters, listen to the immortal words of the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), the entire Quebec wing of the Tory Party. In 1979 the Montreal Gazette reported him as saying that Quebec Conservative lawyers, engineers, consultants, contractors, architects and accountants would even get preferential treatment under the administration of which he was a part.

In the same period when he was Minister of Supply and Services, The Globe and Mail quoted him as saying that loyal Party backers in Quebec could look forward to being on the receiving end of Government work and service contracts.

How about the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) the old kneecapper, old knielcapsen himself? Toward the end of August The Globe and Mail reported that Senator Flynn, in his capacity as Justice Minister, sought the Hon. Member's recommendation on the appointment of a special prosecutor in a legal case. The Hon. Member for Yukon said that he was being consulted in his role as Minister responsible for patronage in the Yukon.

What standards of morality, what ethical guidelines—

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

METRIC CONVERSION

USE IN SPECIFICATIONS FOR TENDERS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, the metric program will go down in history as one of the most expensive, least loved, most confusing and least consistent ever put together. Time and time again I have received letters from constituents pointing out the inconsistencies in the enforcement of metric rules.

S.O. 21

One of my constituents was recently in receipt of an invitation to quote from the Department of Supply and Services. On this document there were several interesting examples of metric confusion.

In the specifications for a boat required by the Department of Supply and Services it was mentioned that the cruising speed for the vessel should be a minimum of 24 miles per hour. In the same paragraph it was stated that the boat would be used within a 48 kilometre range of Parry Sound. Fuel consumption was stated in imperial measurement, as was weight, beam, and size of the cabin. Yet the length of the boat was to be 5.6 metres.

When the Government turns out tenders like this, how can it be that it is considering prosecuting merchants selling floor coverings in imperial units? What gives it the right to prosecute people who sell gasoline by the gallon? Perhaps the Minister should check out the situation in his own backyard before intervening in the affairs of ordinary Canadians who are, after all, only giving their customers a freedom of choice and the freedom to measure.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—PROVISION OF MILITARY AID BY UNITED STATES

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, it is almost three years since the Archbishop of San Salvador, His Grace, Oscar Romero, was murdered in a church in that city. Since that time that little country has suffered a great deal more violence from both sides, in a war that continues. In March a group of the subcommittee on Latin America protested against the elections that were taking place at that time. In the month of December several other Members of Parliament and myself visited the present Archbishop who again asked for negotiations to seek dialogue.

Yesterday it was announced that Caspar Weinberger, the Secretary of Defence in the United States, is attempting to find $60 million more to put into the war in El Salvador. I believe that this is a horrendous thing and I would ask the Government of Canada to protest it in every way possible. The U.S. Secretary of Defence has said that if he cannot get it through the ordinary means of Congress he will go to a special fund to provide military assistance to foreign countries. Some of the countries that have received that special assistance are Vietnam, Cambodia, and El Salvador in 1981.

The Holy Father, Pope John Paul II, will visit that country this coming week. I can only hope that the situation will be such that peace can be found, that negotiations will take place, and that war will not continue.

Oral Questions

HOUSING

ACHIEVEMENTS OF CANADIAN HOME OWNERSHIP STIMULATION PLAN

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Plan, which was announced in the June, 1982, budget to provide stimulus to the recession-damaged housing industry, is now beginning to wind down. Monday, February 28, is the deadline for some grant applications. This program, which has paid out almost $500,000 in grants of $3,000 each to 166,000 first-time home buyers, has proved extraordinarily useful to Canadians.

Now that Government policies have resulted in reduced inflation and, therefore, have reduced interest rates, this kind of direct simulus can be phased out. In view of the importance of the housing industry to our economy, we should continue to monitor the situation.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—REQUEST THAT TREASURY BOARD MINUTES BE TABLED

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, of the Deputy Prime Minister and of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I will put my question to the Minister of Finance.

After a weekend of consultation and observation, the Minister of Finance will know that the majority of Canadians believe that he and Mr. Gillespie are in violation of the conflict of interest guidelines and, quite possibly, the Deputy Prime Minister is as well.

Given that there is also evidence pointing to a budget leak in October, 1980, it is crucially important to our system of government that the Government either admit wrong doing through obtaining the resignation of the appropriate Minister or Ministers, or table and make available all relevant records to give confidence that the total picture is known and that a cover-up is not in place.

Will the Minister of Finance commit to the House that he or the appropriate Minister will table the missing information, not so far provided, such as the Treasury Board minutes of the relevant April, 1981, meeting, as well as the September, 1981, meeting, or at least the submission regarding the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project to the Treasury Board?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure that that question should be answered by the Minister of Finance. I know there was a reference to a budget leak, but the question did not concern the budget leak.

Ministers are usually the best judges of what is within the realm of their responsibility, however, but I just give this caution.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, last week the Prime Minister made it clear that it is not the practice in our constitutional system for records of Cabinet meetings to be tabled. I think this point should be reiterated.

I reject completely the assertion of the Hon. Member that there is a consensus on the part of the Canadian people that the guidelines were broken. With respect to the evidence before us, I think it makes it clear that there has not been any budget leak.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, this question of keeping Cabinet documents secret protects Ministers and bureaucrats. The parliamentary responsibility of Ministers, and agreement to observe conflict of interest guidelines, protect parliamentary democracy, which is far more important.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the violation of these minimal conflict of interest guidelines, a possible budget leak—and indeed the circumstantial evidence points to a budget leak—the clear intent to avoid responsibility and to cover up the situation, have severely damaged our parliamentary system. A complete and thorough airing of the situation is absolutely fundamental to commence repairing that damage.

Will the appropriate Minister—and I do not know who that might be—commit here and now to the House that the Government will permit, and indeed encourage, an inquiry by a committee of this House? Refusal of a request to allow a committee of this House, in fact, to encourage a committee of this House to investigate the situation, will simply be confirmation of an interest in trying to cover up this clear breach of ministerial responsibility and these very simple and unonerous conflict of interest guidelines.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, this matter has been the subject of questions and answers in Question Period for close to two weeks. It was the subject of a special day long debate created at the initiative of the Government, a debate which not only allowed speeches to be made on the subject but also questions and answers, as provided under our new rules.

We have had a very full opportunity to go into this matter in a body more important than a committee, and that is the House of Commons itself. This is especially so since the Government tabled a full range of documents pertaining to this matter.

If we do not agree to the Hon. Member's suggestion, it is confirmation of nothing more than that we do not want to agree with him that the whole House should be tied up, diverting attention from the Tory leadership crisis, rather than dealing with essential issues of economic recovery.

REQUEST THAT PROJECT FILES BE TABLED

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, this final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance in his capacity as Minister of Finance. I hope he will answer and not let the "Gray" Minister run interference for him.

• (1420)

The extend and timing of this knowledge and the contents of the 1980 budget are clear indication that there was prior knowledge, or at least very substantial clues, hints or suggestions that in fact the contents of the budget were known by perhaps many people—Mr. Gillespie, Devco and Petro-Canada, two Crown corporations in particular. Would the Minister of Finance, in order to clear up this important situation—and he must recognize the absolute vital necessity that the secrecy of a budget be beyond reproach—commit now to have tabled before the House by the appropriate Minister the complete files from the Cape Beton Development Corporation and Petro-Canada dealing with the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project, that is, the files going back to May 27, 1980 and thereon? Would he commit to the House to making that disclosure, or will he continue to cover up?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think the tone of questioning of the Hon. Member clearly indicates that his mind is really made up, whatever the facts are. I would like to point out to him that there is not a shred of evidence of a budget leak in this case.

As far as his question is concerned, I would like to tell him that I will refer the matter to the Minister of Energy and ask him to assess whether there are any further files or documents which could be made available. The Minister stood up in the House and said that he was making available every single sheet of paper which could be made available, in the spirit of the Information Act. I will transmit the request of the Hon. Member to the Minister of Energy.

As far as the budget is concerned, and the talk of a budget leak, I remind the Hon. Member what the budget actually stated in October of 1980. The only reference to anything having to do, by far or closely, with this issue read as follows:

> New funds will also be made available to find ways in which the large reserves of Cape Breton coal can be used to enhance energy security in the Maritimes.

Mr. Andre: What about Walsh's memo?

Mr. Lalonde: That is the extent of any reference to coal in the whole budget—big leak! As far as the NEP is concerned, which was another document tabled at the same time as the budget, there is one sentence in the NEP.

This is what it had to say about coal liquefaction:

> "Alternative means to use coal in the production of liquid fuels will also be actively pursued".

How can my friend seriously stand up in the House and make the kind of allegation and the kind of charges that he is making, unless he is indulging in his usual character assassination?

Mr. Andre: The next day the deal was signed.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. All of us know, of course, that the strength of this parliamentary institution rests upon nothing else than the integrity and honesty of every person who serves in it. There can be no question as to the public perception of the Minister's conduct in the Synfuels affair. People think that he is guilty; guilty or not, the Minister cannot be trusted.

May I ask the Minister a question in connection with his responsibility as Minister of Finance? Does he not feel that his reputation is tarnished and that it will be very difficult for him to come before the House and before the country with a buget designed to do nothing else but restore confidence in the Canadian economy and in Canada, confidence in the Government and in Canadians themselves? Does he not feel that, as a result of this affair, his reputation is so seriously tarnished that he is no longer in a position to do the job which he was appointed to do by the Prime Minister?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would have to say yes, anybody's reputation would be tarnished by the type of disgusting allegations, like the one just made by my hon. friend, and the ones which have been made by some people across the aisle. That indeed creates a problem, but it would be very wrong on my part to accept that kind of allegation and the argument raised by the Hon. Member. I can tell him that, as far as my functions are concerned, I have received many, many messages of support from people at large and from people in the business community in particular, saying, "Don't let those guys get you down because they are wrong".

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): The Minister in his defence speaks of his personal sacrifices in terms of finances and his family, sacrifices which most of us make when we come to this institution. Does the Minister not now feel that one more sacrifice is required of him by his country, and indeed by his Party—to put the interests of Canada ahead of the interests of Marc Lalonde, that sacrifice being to resign—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: —and by resigning to repair the damage which has been done to this institution, and as a happy coincidence maybe he could restore his own financial health which he said he sacrificed to his Party?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not think this kind of question even deserves an answer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S AWARENESS OF ALASTAIR GILLESPIE'S INVOLVEMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On Friday the Minister of Finance said that he would inquire of the Deputy Prime Minister the exact time at which the Deputy Prime Minister first became aware of Mr. Gillespie's involvement in the Cape Breton coal project. Also the Prime Minister, in reply to my question, said that he would table documents on the telephone bills, although he hid behind executive privilege with respect to Cabinet minutes.

Is the Minister of Finance now in a position to tell the House when the Deputy Prime Minister first became aware of Mr. Gillespie's involvement in the Cape Breton Synfuels Project and when the telephone bills will be tabled in the House?

Madam Speaker: I do not believe the Minister of Finance should answer that question.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I do not have with me the information sought by my hon. friend. With respect to the second part of his question, certainly that will be responded to in the terms the Prime Minister used in his answer last week.

ALLEGATION OF 1980 BUDGET LEAK

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I wish to put my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance with respect to the budget leak in a similar manner as did my Leader on Friday. Can the Minister help the House on this allegation of a budget leak by telling us whether he has inquired of the Deputy Prime Minister with respect to the Deputy Prime Minister's involvement in the Cape Breton coal project, as promised, and would the Minister of Finance not agree that there is in fact a little more than what he said about no shred of evidence, since there is circumstantial evidence with respect to this matter and the Deputy Prime Minister's involvement as a friend of his riding announcing the project, putting it in the budget and so on? Would the Minister of Finance not agree that in fact there is a case of circumstantial evidence at the very minimum, enough that it should go to an independent investigation for inquiry?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I reject completely the unsubstantiated inferences and innuendoes in my hon. friend's question, but to the extent that it has any substance I will bring that substance to the attention of the Prime Minister.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE CODFISH TREATY—OBSERVANCE IN GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Under a treaty with France which terminates on May 15, 1986, Canada agreed to let the fleet from continental France catch 21,000 metric tonnes of codfish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, while at the same time restricting the operations of Newfoundland and Nova Scotian trawlers in this area, a problem which has not been covered or even referred to in any way by the Kirby Report.

Since the French reported landing in 1981 a total of 21,000 metric tonnes of finished product, which would require them to catch something like 50,000 metric tonnes of fish in the round, or 2.5 times their quota, what steps has the Minister taken to inform the French that this type of wanton destruction of our fisheries' resources and breach of faith with regard to the treaty regulations are unacceptable to Canada?

• (1430)

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I will not, of course, confirm the allegations of the Hon. Member. What I can say, though, is that early in the decade we signed an agreement with France that will terminate in 1986. The policy of the Department is to insist that every angle of the agreement be respected. We are negotiating with France at this moment to make sure that the implementation of the agreement is to our satisfaction.

REQUEST THAT COMMISSION INVESTIGATE ALLEGED OVER FISHING BY FRENCH FLEET

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Since it is alleged by Canadian fishing interests that the French fishing fleet continued its over fishing as late as 1982 in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, while Canadians are being denied such simple things as fishing licences as a conservation measure is the Government giving any thought to reducing the French fishing quota for 1983 by the amount the French have over fished during the past two years? If not, will the Government establish a commission to consider all disputes concerning the application of this treaty as called for in Article 10 of the agreement, which agreement I have here in my possession?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I would like to say very emphatically to the Hon. Member that, as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, my loyalty and duty are to Canadian fishermen, not to foreign fishermen. Two weeks ago, for instance, our own inspectors brought to my attention that a foreign fleet was over-fishing. We immediately ordered that fleet to go to St. John's for inspection. One of the boats left the 200-mile zone and did not go to St. John's Harbour as requested.

The allegations that foreign fleets are over-fishing and are not fishing according to signed agreements are something that we monitor very closely. I will not start commenting publicly on every allegation made because allegations have to be verified and checked before a public statement is made. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that our fishing inspectors go on board vessels to make sure they are fishing in our waters according to the Department's regulations.

EFFECT OF VANCOUVER ISLAND COAL DEVELOPMENT—NECESSITY FOR PUBLIC HEARING

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. My first question relates to the Quinsam coal development on Vancouver Island. As the Minister will know, there has been considerable discussion on whether or not there should be a public hearing before that project goes ahead. In the original discussions between the Minister's own officials and the officials of the Province of British Columbia, was there an indication given by Fisheries Department officials that the proposal was satisfactory enough not to require a public hearing?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I stated on the occasion of my first visit to British Columbia several months ago that I think it essential for all major projects that a public hearing be held so that promoters and all groups, like other interested parties, are able to put forward their points of view. In that regard I was very happy that the Minister of the Environment for British Columbia said publicly that he is in agreement with a public hearing, particularly on the Quinsam project, and I fully support his stand.

PEARSE REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my second question concerns the Pearse Report. News reports of the Minister's recent visit to British Columbia indicate that a significant number of the Pearse Report recommendations and suggestions will, in fact, be accepted by the Minister and his Department. Could the Minister tell us how soon the exact list of those recommendations will be made available to this House and to the public?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, this is a very reasonable suggestion. I will certainly discuss with the Hon. Member the proper forum through which a full report will be made concerning all the decisions relating to the Pearse Report.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

PRICE OF DOMESTIC OIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question today is for the Minister of Finance. It deals with the subject of economic recovery. I would like to point out that the only thing remaining of the national energy policy, which is in wreckage right now, is a promise by the Government to maintain Canadian oil prices lower than the world rate. If that Government promise is lived up to then farmers, fishermen, manufacturers and small businesses will all get a shot in the arm and we will see a more rapid recovery in Canada. Is the Minister prepared to stand up in the House and indicate that he and the Government are prepared to live up to this promise and that it will be a major factor in economic recovery?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to send a copy of the National Energy Program to my friend. It might be helfpful. He might read it.

Mr. Waddell: Don't get arrogant, Marc.

Mr. Lalonde: He will find out that the Canadianization program, for instance, under the National Energy Program has been a tremendous success. He will find that Canadian ownership has increased quite significantly in the last two years.

Mr. Broadbent: What about pricing?

Mr. Lalonde: He will find also that the program of conservation has been extremely successful, that people are now conserving energy much more than before, thanks to the National Energy Program—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —and a number of other initiatives under that Program are indeed working very well.

Mr. Broadbent: He is asking about price.

Mr. Lalonde: Sure, he asks about price, but the Hon. Member prefaced his question with a number of wrong assertions. Surely I am entitled to state the facts and correct the record, notwithstanding the interventions of the Leader of the New Democratic Party. If he wants us to answer questions, the Leader of the NDP should please tell his colleagues to ask questions and to stop giving preambles that are completely wrong, otherwise we will be forced to use Question Period to correct preambles before addressing questions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the question raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, there are agreements in operation with the Government of Alberta, the Government of Saskatchewan, and the Government of British Columbia. Under these agreements Canadians are benefiting from lower oil prices than if we were governed by international prices. That regime has been in operation and I expect it will continue in operation until the end of the agreement in 1986.

QUERY RESPECTING IMPACT OF OIL PRICE ON ECONOMY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, for approximately a year I have been trying to deal with the document put forward by the Minister. I certainly think it is relevant at this point in time to explain to the House—

Mr. Ouellet: Question.

Mr. Skelly: —how that national energy policy may provide some economic recovery based on the governments promise. Is the Minister prepared to stand up and make a statement on the subject of how projections of economic recovery will be enhanced by keeping the promise which the Government made to keep the Canadian price of oil below the level of the world price instead of, as I think the answer indicates, breaking it and pushing it up toward world levels?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Canadian oil price is below international prices. I do not know what my hon. friend is referring to—

Mr. Waddell: He said going up toward world price.

Mr. Lalonde: He should look at the facts. The fact is that the oil price in Canada is below the international price. That has been the case since 1980; in fact, well before that, since 1974. This has been the policy of this Government.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—TIME LAPSE IN CLARIFYING INFORMATION

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance has just taken the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River to task for alleged non-representation of facts during his preamble. I want to refer the Minister to February 16 when the "Coalgate" affair was first raised in the House by myself by way of questions to him, two of them with respect to his capacity to continue as a Minister of the Crown. Those questions were referred to the Minister of Energy.

The following day the Prime Minister informed the House, based on information from the Minister of Finance, that the Minister of Finance had examined his diaries, his papers and his files, and knew nothing of the affair until September, 1981. He later changed that in a subsequent letter to the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister informed us on Wednesday, February 23.

Can the Minister explain to the House why, from February 16 through to February 23, knowing that the House had been fed false information, he sat there day in and day out without clarifying the misleading of the House? Can he explain why he sat there and allowed to House to believe the misinformation?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I believe that this question does not refer to the Hon. Minister of Finance's responsibility as Minister of Finance. The Hon. Minister is a better judge than I of what falls within his range, but it seems to me that this question concerns a record of the Hon. Minister when he was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Therefore he is not able to answer a question dealing with that period in the House at this time. I would ask another Minister to answer.

Mr. Lalonde: If I may, Madam Speaker, this deals with a letter that I wrote to the Prime Minister. It refers to my behaviour. I think that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is right to ask the question, and I would beg to have the privilege to answer the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: It is difficult for me to judge if the Hon. Minister is answering in his capacity now as Minister of Finance or for something that happened in the course of his mandate as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If it is as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, I am sorry—I would like the Hon. Minister to have a chance to correct any record that he would like to correct—but he cannot answer a question regarding something that took place at the time he was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Nielsen: The whole House is interested in the response of the Minister. Surely he can be heard.

Madam Speaker: I know that the whole House is interested. But Hon. Members know that the rules we have should be very strictly followed. That is the only way to have this place function properly.

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, I again beg you to give me permission to answer this question. I am sure the House would give me permission to answer this question because it does relate to my action of last week or ten days ago of writing a letter to the Prime Minister. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition is asking me what happened in the interval between the time that I sent the first letter and the time I sent the second letter. Surely this happened while I was Minister of Finance. Surely I am entitled to provide the answer to the Hon. Member. I would urge you to let me give that answer. I am sure that the Opposition is quite willing to let me give it.

Madam Speaker: I find that very difficult to decide. Of course it is something that happened last week or the week before when the Hon. Miniter was Minister of Finance, but it concerns something that happened when he was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. There are other places where the Hon. Minister can put statements on the record. Therefore, he might do that outside the House, or on another occasion.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, let me ask this question of the Minister, to see if we cannot get around this impasse. I presume that he answered the Prime Minister's queries on February 16 as Minister of Finance, with respect to the keeping of his records in connection with this affair. He gave information to the Prime Minister which subsequently turned out to be false. That was later corrected by the Prime Minister some seven days later.

My question to the Minister in his capacity as Minister of Finance is why did he sit there day after day, for a week, and not correct that misinformation through the Deputy Prime Minister, or even himself?

Madam Speaker: I am sorry. That is the same question. The fact that it is prefaced by saying "as Minister of Finance" does not change anything as to the reality of the fact. I cannot allow the Hon. Minister to answer that question. I am sorry.

ENERGY

OIL RIGS DRILLING OFF NEWFOUNDLAND—DANGER OF ICE CONDITIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a very urgent question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. This afternoon in the area of the Hibernia oil fields on the Grand Banks they are anticipating 70 knot winds and seas in the range of 45 feet to 50 feet. Those are precisely the seas that prevailed when the Ocean Ranger went down. The ice conditions are still unclear because of the closing down of the tracking station at Shoe Cove by this Government a week ago. They are unable to get accurate information as to the movement of ice. We do know that there are substantial icebergs in the area of the rigs.

Can the Minister satisfy the House why he countermanded an order of the Newfoundland Government—two orders issued to Mobil last week—to cease drilling and have the rigs return to port because of weather conditions, unusual ice conditions, and its concern over the adequacy of search and rescue in the area? Why is the Minister playing fast and loose with the lives of offshore workers?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is exaggerating. For years we have had a system whereby there was a meeting of provincial and federal public servants to monitor the situation whenever there was a problem. Last week my senior official was in Newfoundland in the afternoon discussing these problems with the officials of the Newfoundland Government. There was no mention of any problem at that time. A few hours later there was an order issued unilaterally—without even discussing it with our officials—by the Government of Newfoundland, without any consultation with the federal Government. It was evident that this was a great departure from the procedures which were followed in the past.

I have asked my officials to advise me. I have asked the Department of National Defence which is involved in search and rescue, Environment Canada, and any other agency involved, to tell me what the situation was. The report I received last week was that there were no such special conditions last week that necessitated calling them back to shore.

There was a meeting yesterday afternoon in St. John's between the company and people of my Department. The company had also invited provincial civil servants to be there. They refused to come.

As I say, we are very much concerned about the security and safety of the people who work there. We are monitoring the situation at this time. I am afraid that the action by Mr. Marshall last week was just an attempt to score some points, and he did it contrary to the procedure that has been established for a long time. Even yesterday, when in good faith my officials were there and the company people were there, the Government of Newfoundland did not want to have anyone there to ascertain the facts and not try to score political points.

Mr. McGrath: It is the Minister who is trying to score points because, until this matter is finally resolved by the Supreme Court of Canada, he has to be responsible for decisions he has taken. The decision he has taken is to overrule the Newfoundland Government which exercised its authority on the moment—because we cannot tell when the wind is going to come up—to order the rigs back in.

REQUEST THAT RIGS BE ORDERED BACK TO PORT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I want to say to the Minister that it is a very hostile environment and lives are at stake there. He can play fast and loose with the facts on "Coalgate" but he is not going to play fast and loose with the lives of Canadians in that hostile environment. In light of the latest forecasts showing 70 knot winds and 50-foot seas, and in light of the inadequate search and rescue support because the aircraft are not there, will he now agree to order Mobil to bring those rigs in right away?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, this morning I had a chance to review the situation with my Deputy and other officials. There is a group in St. John's which is monitoring the situation. The figures used by the Hon. Member are not the same as those of the various Department officials who have responsibility for that area and who are as preoccupied as anyone in the House concerning the lives of the people who work there.

Safety and security are my main concern. However, this morning the experts informed me that, in their view, the condition is no worse today than it was two weeks or a month ago. It is still winter and conditions are still difficult, but we are operating under the guidelines which have been in place for a long time. The people who have tried to deal with the situation, to ascertain some jurisdiction, were from the Newfoundland Government. For the first time in years, concerning the question of safety, the Government of Newfoundland has acted unilaterally, without consultation with either the companies involved or the federal Government.

AVAILABILITY OF SEARCH AND RESCUE FACILITIES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, maybe I could direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence, who shares my concern. One of the reasons given by the Newfoundland Government for ordering the rigs in, apart from the weather conditions, last week and today, was the lack of adequate search and rescue support. Last week it took six hours for aircraft to reach the area from Summerside and points on the mainland. In light of the fact that we now have 70 knot winds today, 50 foot seas, and three rigs out there with Canadians on board, what assurance can the Minister of National Defence give me that he has taken the correct course in ordering those rigs to stay there? By doing so he is jeopardizing the lives of those people, and the Minister has a responsibility in that area.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I do not think there is any question of jeopardizing the lives of anyone in this area off Newfoundland. I believe the search and rescue capabilities in that vicinity to be in the best state of readiness possible. I can assure the Hon. Member that even as late as this morning I was given a map indicating the position of all the ships, all the aircraft, and even all the icebergs—

An Hon. Member: They are not there now.

Mr. Lamontagne: —as well as all the drilling rigs. We are continually monitoring the situation as far as search and rescue and the movement of the icebergs are concerned. At the moment, in St. John's there is one Buffalo fixed wing aircraft and one Labrador helicopter on standby. We have taken all precautions necessary and appropriate and this proves that the security and safety of the people in the region are our main concern.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA-UNITED STATES TEST AND EVALUATION PROGRAM

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF U.S. SURVEILLANCE BASES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs I would like to address my question to the Minister of National Defence. This past weekend Mr. George Ignatieff, Canada's former ambassador to the United Nations and our former representative to NATO, stated that our participation in the development of the Cruise missile will make us less secure and more susceptible to an attack. He maintained that the testing and the development of the Cruise missile would result in the United States wanting to set up surveillance systems in Canada to intercept Soviet air-launched Cruise missiles.

Can the Minister tell the Canadian people if there has been any discussion with the American Government to go beyond the commitments under the weapons testing agreement, to include the establishment of American surveillance bases and facilities in Canada?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, at the moment there are no commitments of which I am aware, other than the agreement which the Department of External Affairs has signed with regard to the testing of weapons systems.

An Hon. Member: Who would know if you don't?

Mr. Lamontagne: I have not received a request from the United States Government. I have not even signed the memorandum of understanding that will determine how the testing could be carried out. At the moment I think Hon. Members must wait and see what will happen. However, one thing is certain. The objective of our Government's policy is to prevent war and preserve peace, which is what we believe to be the best policy to follow. All this public discussion of the Cruise missile testing makes up but one element of the global issues of disarmament, of peace against war, and clearly much discussion is necessary before we can say anything more on the matter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC SERVICE

DILEMMA OF PREGNANT WOMAN WORKING ON VIDEO DISPLAY TERMINAL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Last Friday evening the CBC television news covered the situation involving a woman living in Kenora, Ontario, who is seven months pregnant and must work on a video display terminal. She fears for the health of her child, yet because of federal Government rules she has no choice but to return to work on a video display terminal. Can the President of the Treasury Board tell the House what regulations will be put in place and what steps the Government will take to protect the health of this woman and her unborn child?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I will be very happy to review the case and see if the present rules adequately respond to her needs and those of others in similar situations. We are certainly very concerned about maintaining very high health and safety standards with regard to federal employees.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF REPORTS TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister has wisely rejected many of the recommendations in the Pearse Report on the Pacific fishing industry. In view of the Minister's response to overwhelming opposition to the Report and in view of the Report on the East Coast fisheries, the Kirby Report, the Fleet Rationalization Report in British Columbia, and the U.S.-Canada Salmon Agreement, would the Minister—rather than having these documents identified as basically Government documents—be prepared to table those documents in the House of Commons so that the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, with its new-found powers, would finally have an opportunity to deal with those situations in the fishing industry under the prerogative of Parliament rather than the Liberal Government?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to hear the Hon. Member saying that I have made a wise decision. I will certainly discuss his representations with the Government House Leader to see what can possibly be done to satisfy the Hon. Member.

BEEF STABILIZATION PLAN—MEETING OF PROVINCIAL MINISTERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The provincial Ministers of Agriculture are planning to meet later this week to consider the need for a national stabilization program for the beef industry and are thus really responding to the challenge of the Minister to the Provinces several years ago. If these provincial Ministers do reach an agreement to work with the federal Government to assist hard-pressed beef producers, is the federal Government planning to move ahead with the stabilization program to assist this vital industry?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks a very interesting question at this time, because I was invited about a week ago to meet in Toronto tomorrow with my provincial colleagues. I will not be able to attend the meeting tomorrow. However, it will be the first time in history, if they do come up with an agreement, that they will make equity available for the beef and pork producers of this nation, that is, if they will stop top-loading programs in one Province compared to another.

I proposed a similar plan in 1978, but they would not accept it. I have waited five years. If they reach an agreement of that kind, which is necessary to put producers of these products on an equitable basis across the nation, Your Honour can be sure that we will consider it very closely. We will probably accept it. However, I know that there are other programs which are not tripartite. For instance, in some programs some might pay 50 per cent of the premium on crop insurance, and there are others. If they want to become involved in spending that kind of money, I can find all kinds of programs for them.

FISHERIES

COMPILATION OF PROSECUTION STATISTICS BY RACE

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and concerns an answer he gave to the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands on February 10 which set out the percentage of Caucasians versus Indians arrested for fishing violations in British Columbia. In his answer the Minister stated that, "Over the last three years in British Columbia, 80 per cent of the charges laid by my officers were against white people".

In response to my Order Paper question No. 2,049 as reported at page 8668 of Hansard for March 26, 1981, the Minister stated:

> The Department of Fisheries and Oceans does not keep separate statistics concerning the prosecution of native Indians as this could be interpreted to be discriminatory.

How does the Minister know that 80 per cent of charges laid in B.C. were against white people, if his Department does not keep these statistics?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, when the allegation was recently made by the Indian leadership of the Province of British Columbia that my Department bias against Indians because in one operation more Indians were charged than non-Indian people, I asked my Department to make a thorough analysis with regard to that allegation. The information that I have made public is essentially that the allegation of the Indian leadership is without any basis, any foundation. That was the reaction to the statement that my Department had a bias concerning any group. As for the substance of the question of the Hon. Member, I will certainly check and will report to him in due course to what degree the details of statistics are kept.

• (1500)

Mr. Greenaway: Madam Speaker, obviously the Minister is privy to one set of figures, and Members who ask the questions just do not get those figures.

METHOD USED IN COMPILING STATISTICS

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, in response to the same Order Paper question it was stated that, even if a search of five years of Fisheries' prosecution files could be done, it would take up to eight person-months to complete it at a cost of $15,000 to $25,000 and regional staff stated that they did not have the time to do it, that they would have to contract the job out.

Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act

Could the Minister explain to the House how he got three years' figures in less than a month, and, assuming that the research was contracted, could he inform the House who received the contract and how much the contractor was paid for the job?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I would be very much surprised if we had to hire any personnel to collect the data because it was given to me by my officials at a special briefing session and there was no suggestion whatsoever that they had to hire any staff to gather that data, but I will check that allegation, too.

PETITION

MR. MITGES—PAYMENTS TO MACDONALD COMMISSION OFFICERS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the four hundred and second report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges) on Friday, February 25, 1983, and finds that the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR NEW BRUNSWICK

Madam Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Members for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett), Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), Burlington (Mr. Kempling), Perth (Mr. Jarvis), Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet), Halton (Mr. Jelinek), Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) and Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) has been filed with me pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C., 1970, to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of New Brunswick.

If the House agrees, I would suggest we follow past practice and affix a text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—SCOTIA COAL SYNFUELS PROJECT—ALLEGED TABLING OF INCORRECT DOCUMENTATION—RULING OF MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I am prepared to rule on the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) on February 25, 1983.

The essence of that submission was his allegation that the documents tabled in the House contained errors of fact and that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) knew this and allowed the documents to remain uncorrected. The Hon. Member suggested that the Chair should find, on the basis of his submission, that a prima facie case of contempt of Parliament had been established.

A prima facie case, as the Hon. Member himself pointed out, means that sufficient evidence is presented to warrant the matter proceeding to trial or investigation. In order to arrive at this finding the Chair would have to be involved in the determination of what is or is not correct in the documents concerned, and whether or not the Minister of Finance was aware of any errors of fact in the documents.

Clearly, the Chair cannot make such a determination even on a prima facie basis. It is not the function of the Chair, furthermore, to determine whether or not the contents of documents tabled in the House are accurate. Neither is it the function of the Chair to assess the likelihood of an Hon. Member knowing or not knowing whether the facts contained in a document are correct. Reflections may not be cast upon the conduct of Members of Parliament except by way of a substantive motion, of which notice is required, of course.

This is clearly stated on page 428 of the Nineteenth Edition of Erskine May. It is also supported by precedents of this House. I would refer, for example, to the following words contained in a ruling given on June 19, 1959:

> —simple justice requires that no Honourable Member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the House or a committee until he has been charged with an offence.

Subsequent rulings in accordance with this principle were given by my immediate predecessor on February 28, 1978, and by myself on May 19, 1982.

I must therefore rule that this matter does not fall within the ambit of privilege and that if the Hon. Member wishes to pursue the matter he must do so by way of a substantive motion in which the accusation against the Minister is clearly stated.

MR. LALONDE—ASSERTION OF MR. NIELSEN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, during the course of the Question Period the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) did raise a question which I think deals with my privilege as a Member of Parliament, and I would like to raise this question in a very limited way, considering the way the Leader of the Opposition raised it. His specific allegation was that I sat here for a week knowing that the information I had provided to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was not correct and did nothing about it.

Surely, if I had done anything of the sort I would be at fault and I would recognize that immediately. However, I suggest to the Hon. Member that his assertion is totally without foundation. Obviously we say many things in this House. There are lots of debates and arguments, and in the course of debate we use all kinds of arguments, pro and con, with different points of view. But when I stand up in this House and speak about matters of fact, I consider myself bound not only by my oath of office as a Minister but by my oath of office as a Member of Parliament.

When I wrote to the Prime Minister on February 17, I based that information on a check of my records, on a conversation with my staff and my Deputy Minister, the former Deputy Minister of Energy, and I also requested the Department and the current Minister of Energy to provide me with all the relevant data from the files of the Department of Energy. That information has been provided to the House and it has been tabled in this House as a memorandum to the Minister dated February 16, 1983, from Mr. Tellier, the Deputy Minister of Energy.

Following this I asked the Minister of Energy to make a thorough review of all the files so that all the information would be made available. He did so, and as well the documents that were tabled by the Prime Minister on February 23 included a letter from myself and a letter from Mr. Tellier to the Minister of Energy, in which the Deputy Minister of Energy indicated quite specifically and quite categorically that he had been made aware only the night before—that is, on February 22—of the fact that further documents existed in other files which related to this particular subject, and that he was therefore writing to me, to the Prime Minister and to his Minister to inform us of this development.

Immediately upon receipt of that information I transmitted a new letter to the Prime Minister indicating to him that those new facts had been brought to my attention and that they therefore should be brought to the attention of the House, which was done.

So far from hiding anything from the House, Madam Speaker, within 24 hours, I gathered all the information I could get about this particular file and made it available to the Prime Minister, and that information served as a basis for answers by the Prime Minister. I indicated that to the best of my knowledge on February 17 I was not aware of any other discussion between parties to the Synfuels Coal Project and officials of my Department before September 3, 1981, since this was the only piece of information that was available to me either from the search of my records or the information provided by my former Department.

During the interval no further information was made available to me in spite of the fact that I had requested a thorough review of the files to be made. As soon as further information became available I so informed the Prime Minister, and the House was also informed.

These are the facts, Madam Speaker. I stand by those facts under my oath of office as a Minister and as a Member of Parliament, and I hope that the Leader of the Opposition will accept my explanation in that regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, may I have a question?

Madam Speaker: Of course, the Minister knows that he did not really have a question of privilege and that surely he was using up the time to answer a question which he could not have otherwise answered during the course of the Question Period.

• (1510)

It is very difficult for the Chair not to allow a Member to reply to something, but I am afraid I have to remind the Minister, as I would any other Member, that I was right in not allowing him then to answer that question. I quote Beauchesne, Citation 359(6):

> A question must be within the administrative competence of the Government. The Minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his present Ministry and not for any decisions taken in a previous portfolio.

It is quite clear and I hope Members will remind themselves of this quotation, which only leads to orderly debate in the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same question. I would have hoped the Chair would cite Citation 359 of Beauchesne at the outset of the Minister's remarks. Having cited it when he has completed his remarks, I hope it is not now going to preclude me from presenting observations with respect to those remarks.

Madam Speaker: I was quite conscious that there was some amount of leniency being exercised at this particular time. Because of that I will allow the Hon. Member approximately the same time to reply.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Madam Speaker: Absolutely. That is a necessity because the rule has to be applied equally to everyone. I will allow the Hon. Member to reply, but not for any longer than the Minister took. I was quite conscious that this would start a debate. However, the Minister pleaded with the House and the House seemed to have no objection, even on the other side. They were insisting that he should answer that question, so I let it go. However, it must be limited. The Hon. Member of the Opposition.

Mr. Collenette: On a point of order—

Mr. Nielsen: We are on a question of privilege.

Mr. Collenette: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not dispute your ruling of a moment ago, but I do take great umbrage at your allowing the Leader of the Opposition

(Mr. Nielsen) to continue on this question of privilege for the simple reason that we are engaging in debate. In Question Period, Madam Speaker, you allowed the Leader of the Opposition to ask his two questions in toto and then, properly, you refused the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) his reply. You were correct within your interpretation of the rules. However, I submit that you allowed the Leader of the Opposition to ask his question in full. There has now been redress by way of a question of privilege by the Minister of Finance. That should end the matter. To allow the Leader of the Opposition to continue this scrurrilous debate outside of Question Period is reprehensible.

Mr. Lewis: Did you hear what he said, Madam Speaker?

Madam Speaker: The point of the Hon. Member is certainly well taken, but he is talking of two different circumstances. What I did during the Question Period was totally within the rules, of course. I think the Hon. Member for recognizing that. I did say that I exercised a bit of leniency in the raising of this question of privilege. My decision is that I will allow the Leader of the Opposition to reply briefly.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, to clarify the situation, I would like to ask whether the House is to conclude that you did not make a ruling on the question of privilege raised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), in that you allowed proceedings to continue, or whether you did not make a ruling on the question of privilege raised by the Minister of Finance by saying that there was no privilege; furthermore, I should like to know under what Standing Order the Chair may make a ruling on a question of privilege and then allow someone to speak to a ruling it has already made.

Madam Speaker: I was commenting on the question raised by the Hon. Minister of Finance. It was not a formal ruling. I was pointing out to the Hon. Minister a citation in Beauchesne. I did not have the impression I was making a formal ruling. I would now like to give the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) a chance to make a few comments, as I have often done when questions of privilege have been raised. I repeat, I had not yet made a ruling and was only pointing out a citation in Beauchesne to the Hon. Minister of Finance.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, it is my submission that when questions are asked during Question Period that have the effect of reflecting on the conduct of a Member or a Minister, they are deserving of a response in the House and Members or Ministers should be allowed to respond, particularly when it affects their personal conduct.

What we have is a question being raised in the House of Commons on Wednesday, February 16 where the Minister was twice given the opportunity to rise and state his position with respect to his capacity to continue as a Minister by reason of allegations made at that time of a breach of the guidelines. On February 17, the day on which there is usually a morning meeting of Cabinet, Thursday morning—

Mr. Lalonde: Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Nielsen: Fair enough. After Question Period. Nonetheless, there was that intervening Cabinet meeting. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) rose in the House on Thursday, February 17, and, as he himself stated, misled the House with respect to the response of the Minister. That is what he said. That in itself is highly questionable with respect to the conduct of the Minister in providing the Prime Minister with information, and he innocently misled the House on the basis of information supplied by the Minister.

Friday the 18th, the weekend of the 19th and 20th, Monday the 21st, Tuesday the 22nd all passed. On the Wednesday, by letter the Minister informs the Prime Minister that his letter of February 17 was wrong and there indeed was prior knowledge.

He sits four seats away from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). The Prime Minister was away in the Caribbean. He sits a hand's length away from his telephone on which he could have called the Deputy Prime Minister. He had a Cabinet meeting at which the Deputy Prime Minister was likely present. He goes back and forth in the lobby. Undoubtedly there was all sorts of opportunity to tell the Deputy Prime Minister that he had misled the Prime Minister on the 17th.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nielsen: He says no, but he had all this time, and he is asking us to believe that his departmental officials in six days, going through these files, could not until the end of those six days have come up with the information. I suggest to the Minister that that is not worthy of belief.

I point out to the Minister that a public statement was made by P. J. Read, the official responsible for the oil conservation fund. In between the 17th and the 23rd Mr. Read made the public statement that the Minister knew of the circumstances of this arrangement. How can he then explain that he sat in his seat for that entire week and did not call upon the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Prime Minister, to terminate the situation where the Prime Minister had allowed the House to conduct its business for a whole week on the basis of false information supplied to him by the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Chrétien: I rise on a question of Privilege.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am ruling that there is no question of privilege. We have been engaged in debate. I have given equal opportunity to both sides.

Mr. Chrétien: Not to me.

Madam Speaker: I must remind Hon. Members that if the Minister of Finance was not able to answer that question, another Minister might have answered for him. That opportunity may be taken by any Member on this side, whoever is able to answer when a Minister may not be questioned on matters pertaining to his previous administrative responsibility. For fear this will turn into another major debate, I must end it. I am sorry, I apologize, but I must end the discussion here.

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I realize that the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) wishes to raise a question of privilege, but the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) notified me well before the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that he intended to raise one. Therefore, the Minister may raise his question later on, but I must first recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: If the Government thinks it has put this to bed, why is it so touchy over there?

MR. WADDELL—PROCEDURE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I want to raise a question of privilege with respect to my right to ask a question. I believe the specific issue is a difficult one. Where a question is put but it is borderline as to whether the Minister has responsibility and therefore should be allowed to answer, and when he is allowed to answer, the question then is: Can I follow up his answer?

I draw your attention to Hansard at page 23214, Friday, February 25, when the Hon. Member—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. That is not a question of privilege. The question was intercepted by me during the course of the Question Period. My decision stands. The Hon. Member was addressing a question to a Minister who was not able to answer because the question dealt with responsibilities which he had formerly. There is no question of privilege there. I am very sorry. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway does have a hard time understanding when I determine that is not a question of privilege. He never accepts it the first time; I do not know why.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am raising a question of privilege because my Department was mentioned during question period, and in my opinion, the question put by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) should have been put to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and not to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). In fact, I was a little late in getting to the House because of a meeting with the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Premier of Alberta. Nevertheless, since the question involves my Department, I think it is my duty to rise at this point and to report the facts to the House as they are, because the allegations made by the Leader of the Opposition—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I will not fault the Minister on the fact that he was not in the House. I agree that the Minister has a duty to answer questions concerning his Department, but if he was not in the House when the question was put, I can hardly allow him to rise now after the oral question period has ended. He can and should answer the questions on another occasion.

Mr. Chrétien: Madam Speaker, when the question was raised, the Hon. Member did not even want to ask his question—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Even if the question is directed to another Minister, if the person asking the question does not direct it to the incumbent of the appropriate department, the Minister concerned may answer for another Minister. It is up to the Ministers to decide whether the question does or does not involve their department.

Mr. Chrétien: I am raising a question of privilege. I think that if they want to know the truth . . . They do not want to know the truth—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister sets great store by the Rules, but he should also be mindful of the rule that when the Speaker rises and asks for order, all Members must act accordingly. Otherwise, there can be no order in the proceedings of the House, and it is certainly in the interest of all Members that order and decorum be maintained.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DEANS—REQUEST FOR INTERPRETATION OF CITATION 359(6) OF BEAUCHESNE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I wonder if you would be kind enough to take under advisement and inform the House at some subsequent time the answer to a question I have with regard to the interpretation of the rules. You quoted Beauchesne, Citation 359(6), today which provides, and I quote:

> The Minister to whom the question is directed is responsible to the House for his present Ministry and not for any decisions taken in a previous portfolio.

On Friday last, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) asked a question of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) which related directly to a period of time when, in addition to being the Deputy Prime Minister, he was also the Minister of Finance. I submit to you that a question was asked today of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) which relates directly to the Deputy Prime Minister in his responsibility as the Minister of Finance. Therefore, a question put to the Minister of Finance today about a decision, or knowledge of a decision which should have been available to his predecessor, is an appropriate question.

I am not questioning the ruling, but I believe there was a misunderstanding of the question. I would just like to know whether it would be appropriate under Citation 359(6) of Beauchesne to ask the present Minister of Finance to tell the House when, after having perused the records of the Ministry, the previous Minister of Finance was aware of an action being contemplated or taken by the Government.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is asking me to interpret the rules in the face of a question which has not been put in a precise manner. I cannot do that. If the Hon. Member has a question, he may ask it. At the time it is asked I will try to do my best to judge whether it is appropriate to address it to one Minister or the other. I just remind the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) that the Minister to whom he is referring cumulates two functions, and I am not quite sure whether on Friday he was answering in his capacity as Deputy Prime Minister. Certainly it was not as the ex-Minister of Finance; I would not have allowed that. I do not think I have, but I will look at Hansard. However, I cannot give an interpretation in advance of the question. If the Hon. Member has questions he may ask them, and when they are asked I will try to determine whether it should be asked or not of the proper Minister.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, would you be kind enough to look at the question put on Friday by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, which appears on page 23214 of Hansard? Would you then also look at the question put today by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell)? Would you then review both of those in light of Citation 359(6), and perhaps we could then discuss the matter further?

Madam Speaker: Yes, I will do that.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I wish to inform the House that tomorrow, we shall consider Bill C-139 instead of Bill C-143. This I discussed this morning with the Parliamentary House Leader for the Progressive Conservative Party, while I mentioned the fact last week to the Parliamentary House Leader for the New Democratic Party, so that I think we all expect to finish the second reading stage, even if there is no formal agreement on this Bill.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, that will be fine with this Party. We have wondered for some time why the Government has not brought on Bill C-139 for debate.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, we were prepared to vote against that measure some time ago.

MR. OGLE—SELF-DETERMINATION OF NICARAGUANS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, to the honourable House of Commons I have a petition from citizens of the City of Saskatoon. It relates to the situation surrounding Nicaragua. The petition reads:

Wherefore the undersigned, your Petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to call on the United States Government to desist from any actions which violate the principles of self-determination of peoples and the non-intervention of states, as defined by the United Nations;

And further to call on the Canadian Government to pursue seriously a policy which promotes peace and non-intervention in Nicaragua, a policy which condemns American intervention in Nicaragua, and which is committed not to force, but to negotiation.

In addition, complete manufacturing data, including quality control, sterility testing, etc. must be submitted.

(b) Total other payments	$14,363.92	$18,201.06

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That was a terrific dissertation that we just heard. I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary could tell us the date of that question.

Mr. Flis: Madam Speaker, this question was tabled on February 21, 1983.

Mr. Lewis: I find that amusing, Madam Speaker, and I am sure we all do on this side of the House. There are some 4,700 questions, some going back to March, 1980, but the Government popped this question in last week and got an answer back quickly. It shows that the Government is not interested in answering questions unless it can put a political connotation on them. We have seen a disgraceful example of how questions should be answered in the House. I am ashamed of the Government.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am delighted that we were able to give such a prompt answer to that important question. It should be pointed out that during this session the Government has answered 3,953 questions on the Order Paper, that is, 83.7 per cent. For the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) to say that we are not interested in answering questions on the Order Paper is obviously rubbish. We answer them promptly.

Mr. Flis: Madam Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member raised this point. With his long experience I think he should know that there are certain questions the answer to which is at our fingertips and we try to supply that answer immediately. There are other questions that involve more than one Department, that involve a lot of research and expense to the Government. They take longer.

I know that I speak on behalf of the Department of Transport in saying that when we have the information we are willing to give the response as quickly as possible.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) if the Government has ever answered a question that quickly before, and if the Government feels it should play politics with something as important to the people as the Mississauga disaster.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, obviously we answer questions as soon as we get the information. I hardly think that an answer that is succinct and to the point and which sets out the facts can be regarded as playing politics, particularly when the Hon. Member who asked the question is from Mississauga and when the incident occurred in his riding.

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, I should like to tell the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council that I have had on the Order Paper a question regarding the distribution of calendars by VIA Rail. It is a very simple question. It was placed on the Order Paper well before the question that he just answered for his colleague on the Government side. It was placed on the Order Paper on January 19. I asked for the cost of the calendar, how many copies were printed and who authorized the calendars.

I do not think that is a very difficult question to answer. I am sorry that I do not sit on the Government benches so that I could have my questions answered rapidly. I am sorry that I am not the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) who called for the inquiry—who demanded the inquiry.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, obviously I will be delighted to look into that matter on behalf of the Hon. Member. I will do my best to ensure that he gets a speedy reply. We always want to co-operate with Members.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council is not going to give me the same answer—that he is delighted to look into this. My question was asked on April 2, 1981. The lists were all prepared at that time. I asked for the names of the people who had been invited to President Reagan's dinner. I happened to see some defeated Liberal candidates there. Is the fact that patronage was shown to defeated Liberal candidates the reason that this question is still not answered, or has it just become habit that the Liberals take every Liberal to the through and nobody else has a chance to get at it?

I should like an answer to that question. The lists were prepared two years ago. Why is the answer being help up? That is what I would like to know.

● (1540)

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am shocked at the Hon. Member who has cast aspersions on the respectable Canadian citizens who were invited to that dinner. I will be delighted to look into the matter on his behalf. He says that he does not want to hear that; I do not think he would want to hear that I would not be delighted to do so. I assure him that I would be delighted to look into it on his behalf.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, the defeated NDP candidates and the defeated Tory candidates are also respectable citizens. They should get the same consideration as the defeated Liberal candidates, so do not give me that baloney.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) may make queries about his questions, but not debate the matter.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I would not want that comment to pass. The defeated NDP candidates do not want a place at the trough beside the Liberals and the Tories.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, question No. 1,653 in the name of the Hon. Member for High Park concerns the way the Government has been handling refugees from the Ukraine, the Soviet Union, Poland, Lithuania, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and East Germany. I am surprised that that question has not been answered, and that the Hon. Member has not made sure that the Government gave the kind of answer it should, particularly when he himself is so interested in people who are badly treated in Communist countries.

Mr. Flis: First, Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member should get his facts straight. There is no such Member in this House as the Hon. Member for High Park.

Mr. Blenkarn: He does not represent High Park; he only represents Parkdale.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Skelly (p. 22957).

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, just prior to the luncheon adjournment I was discussing this Bill along the lines of the lack of accountability in Government in terms of its methods of spending. I had mentioned one corporation about which the people in my area of Saskatchewan—and as a matter of fact all people in western Canada—are very concerned, that is, Canadian National Railways.

I wish to put on the record that in addition to the funds CNR is presently seeking, in 1977 it was given a recapitalization and a debt forgiveness of $808 million. Members of the House and the people of Canada were told at that time that it would allow CN to carry on in a very orderly manner, the same as any other corporation, and not to continue to come to the Government for assistance.

While we are speaking of expenditures of money, I was interested in the reply given today to a question asked by the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) in which a considerable sum of money was mentioned. I am sure that if we check Hansard, we would see that the Hon. Member for Mississauga North requested that judicial inquiry. My understanding as an ordinary member of the Canadian society is that a judicial inquiry in the courts of Canada should be more difficult than one where a member of the bar travels around the country, visits and makes up his own ideas three years after the fact, as Mr. Macdonald will do to report on the economy as it is today, three years after the fact. There is not much consistency in the answer given about the expenditure of Government funds. I am not familiar with all the gentlemen and law firms named in the answer regarding the Mississauga rail disaster inquiry, but I do not think I heard one ex-Cabinet Minister's name mentioned. This is the difference between the Government allowing $850 per day to an ex-Liberal Cabinet Minister such as Mr. Macdonald, and a reputable law firm acting in a court of law of Canada. I just draw that to the attention of the House.

As we look at our deficit and the request of the Government for an additional $19 billion in borrowing authority, there is no reason that Canadians should have much faith in anything the Government puts out, especially regarding projections as to cash flow and cash requirements. I should like to turn to November 1981 when the then Minister of Finance said that the budget deficit would be $10.5 billion for 1982-83. Just seven months after that, in June 1982, the same Minister had to go back on his previous forecast. At that time he said the deficit would be $19.6 billion, and then just four months thereafter, in October 1982, the same Minister of Finance showed Canadians just how out of whack his forecast was. At that time he told us that the budget deficit would be $23.6 billion. Then, four months thereafter, in February 1983, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) indicated that the current forecast of debt would be $27 billion. We started out at $10.5 billion in 1982-83; then we went to $19.6 billion; then to $23.6 billion; now we come to $27 billion.

An Hon. Member: That is more than six and five.

Mr. McKnight: As one of my colleagues says, that is considerably more than "six and five". If we are really to believe that the increase the Government is forecasting for expenditures in the coming year is only 9 per cent, we must start with the premise that its numbers are correct this time. But if we go with the premise that the first numbers we were given for 1982-83 were correct, we see an increase of 17 per cent in Government spending this year. The people of Canada cannot understand why the Government would come to the House of Commons and ask for approval of basically a loan or a garnishee on the people of Canada for an additional $19 billion when it has not even put forward a spending plan. I could not go to my banker and say, "Hi, Gary, how about $100,000?" He would say, "What do you want it for?" If I said, "I will spend it this year or maybe even in two months", he would not give me a loan. I do not think the people of Canada should give it to the Government without its putting forward a spending plan.

On February 14, 1983, the present Minister of Finance said:

> I never said in my October 27 statement, or since, that there would be a budget before asking for additional financial funds.

The statement he made on February 14 was in complete contradiction to what he said on October 27, which reads:

> In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out Estimates for 1983-84 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

The former Minister of Finance repeated the same promise before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. In May 1982 he said:

> I would not expect the House to act upon an additional request for borrowing authority without providing it with detailed information on the economic situation and the implications of that situation on the Government's fiscal situation. I do not think it would be appropriate to ask the House for additional borrowing authority until I have laid out in some detail an update of both the economic situation and the fiscal situation, and I certainly will be doing that before I would come back to the House for additional borrowing authority.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are asking me to come to a close. I do not think the people of Canada would respect us if we allowed the Government to borrow an additional $19 billion.

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, before addressing the main topic of this debate, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), asked me to indicate to the House that the Grange Commission was constituted of qualified Canadians who did an excellent job in their investigation of the happenings at Mississauga. Even though they were Progressive Conservatives, they did an excellent job.

I would like to address the remarks of Hon. Members opposite, particularly those in the Loyal Opposition who tried to make the point that—

• (1550)

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope I am not correct, but I thought I heard the Hon. Member suggest that the Grange Commission was made up of Progressive Conservatives. The Chairman was Mr. Justice Grange of the Supreme Court of Ontario. To suggest that the Commission was made up of people who were in a political Party, I believe would impugn a judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario. I think that I should not have heard those words from the Hon. Leader.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has made his point and I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary has listened attentively.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the very qualified staff. However, I want to come to the main topic, that of the borrowing authority and the assertion by the Conservative Party that this Government somehow has not in any way indicated what the spending is for or the economic plan for it. Obviously, the Hon. Member was not paying attention to the Main Estimates tabled in the House this past week. But the Opposition is saying continually, in rhetorical speeches that the Government is refusing to show restraint in its spending. Yet when you take a look at the breakdown of Government expenditures and the Government's restraint program you will find in every area the Opposition is opposed to restraint while at the same time its Members call out for a reduction in the deficit.

I want to go through this area in detail giving the facts. Basically, Government expenditures can be broken down into four major areas. The first is transfer payments. The second is public debt. The third is payments to Crown Corporations, and the fourth is the operating and capital expenditures of the Government. I will take each of these areas separately and indicate specifically what is involved. I will start with transfer payments.

In this area we have payments to people, including Old Age Security, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, the Spouses Allowance and Unemployment Insurance. I have not heard Members of the Conservative Party indicate that we should make cuts in these payments. In fact, during the debates on Bills C-131, C-132 and C-133, I heard them say exactly the opposite, that we should not even put a limit of six and five on the increases in areas such as the OAS. The second area of transfer payments is in the area of payments to Provinces. This includes payments to maintain the medicare system, the post-secondary education system, the hospital insurance plan and the Canada Assistance Plan. Again, in this area of transfer payments to the Provinces the Conservative Opposition has stated time and again that there should be no cuts. The third area under the general area of transfer payments is subsidies to transfers. The Main Estimate here is the Petroleum Incentive Plan which applies $1.1 billion to the increase of exploration for oil and gas and to make sure that we are self-sufficient in oil and gas. The fourth area includes another category of miscellaneous other transfer payments. This includes small business investment grants. We have heard the Opposition calling for more money and more aid to small business. This area includes the Enterprise Development Program and the DIP Program to increase productivity. We have heard calls from the Opposition to increase productivity measures, which include funds put forward toward job creation. We have heard time and time again from the Opposition that funds should be provided for job creation. I have just outlined the basic structure of transfer payments in the expenditures. These have accounted for 63.7 per cent of the increase in Government spending. In all these areas the Opposition has told us not to make cuts. At the same time the Opposition has told us to cut the deficit.

The second major area of expenditure is expenditures on the public debt. Not even the Opposition has been so preposterous as to say that we should not honour our obligations in paying interest on public debt. That is not possible for a fiscally responsible Government to do.

The third area is that of payments to Crown Corporations, which account for about 6.9 per cent of the increase in government spending. The majority of this spending was used in increased financing for the CMHC programs to increase new and existing housing projects, to create jobs and to give a stimulus to the housing industry.

Another major portion of it was put forward as part of the Canadianization program. I am not sure where the Opposition stands on this. It depends upon which Conservative is speaking. Some are in favour of Canadianization and others are not.

Another major area is transfer payments to VIA Rail. We have heard time and again the Opposition opposing the reorganization of VIA Rail routes in order to save money.

Mr. Blenkarn: They reduced it by 20 per cent and increased it by 48 per cent.

Mr. Lang: Again, in this area of Crown Corporations, the Opposition has expressed a desire for the Government not to decrease expenditures. The only time the Opposition talks about restraint is when it is general, when it is easy, and you do not have to touch any program, such as assistance to business, assistance in creating jobs, health or any other program. The Opposition will not get down to specifics.

The fourth major area—and I am going to go through this rapidly because I have only ten minutes—is government operating and capital expenditures. This area is broken down into defence and non-defence related expenditures, which account for 15.2 per cent of the increase in government spending. The Conservatives have made it clear that they think more should be spent on defence. The Opposition is not asking for the Government to make cuts in defence, which account for almost half of the increase in this envelope of government operating and capital expenditures.

In the other area of non-defence related expenditures, the vast majority of expenditures are in the form of wages and salaries for public servants. The Opposition, in many speeches on Bill C-124 and on the six and five measures that followed, indicated that it does not feel salaries and wages for public servants should be held to six and five increases. Clearly, the Opposition is not asking for significant cuts in expenditures in this fourth area of government expenditure.

Very briefly, I have gone over the four major areas of government expenditures. Transfers account for 63.7 per cent of the increase; the public debt accounts for 14.2 per cent of the increase, payments to Crown Corporations account for 6.9 per cent of the increase, and the operating and capital expenditures account for 15.2 per cent of the increase.

I have to ask Hon. Members opposite, as many Canadians are asking when they say they want to hold the deficit in time of recession and when they say they want to hold down government expenditures, will Hon. Members opposite at the same time be honest with the Canadian people and tell them that this means reduced health care, reduced education, reduced payments to support the unemployed, reduced Old Age Security and reduced defence?

Mr. Blenkarn: Reduce the swill in the trough.

Mr. Lang: It will mean reductions in the major social programs that have maintained not only the quality of life in Canada but the consumer demand that we have at the present time which has prevented us from slipping even deeper into the recession out of which we are now coming.

I see you are asking me to wind up my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and I will. I have a final plea to the Opposition. When they say, "Hold or cut the deficit, reduce government expenditures", why do they not put some substance behind their remarks instead of only rhetoric?

• (1600)

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the last Liberal Member to speak in this debate asked some questions. He asked questions about reducing Government expenditure. If the Government would instead create a climate in our economy that would encourage the growth of enterprise, that growth would result in the creation of real jobs that would take people off of unemployment and put them to work. It is that simple.

Mr. Lang: Stop giving us those cliches. Give us some proposals.

Mr. Wenman: It is good that we have a question period after the speech. I can hardly wait to hear the questions.

Mr. Lang: There are no questions.

Mr. Wenman: That is right. We are cut from 20 minutes down to 10 minutes. As usual, Members of Parliament are being cut back in speaking on important issues like the economy. I am not surprised.

Mr. Lang: Your own committee agreed.

Mr. Wenman: This Government's concept of restoring the economy is to create new wealth by borrowing and increasing taxes on the very productive machine that we should be encouraging to create jobs. Its policy is to borrow and borrow billions upon billions of dollars year after year. This is not a new policy or experience; it is a policy we have seen through Bills such as this which have come before the House time and time again without our first seeing a budget or any fiscal planning. The Government simply borrows more and more money.

My constituents do not understand this concept. When they go to the bank to borrow thousands of dollars, they cannot just go back to borrow more money. At one point, the bank manager tells them they cannot borrow any more. At that point, creative employment is turned into bankruptcy, receivership and unemployment. The people in my constituency and others do not understand the injustice when they see the Government continue to borrow.

I wish that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could come to my constituency and spend a week in my constituency office. I wish they could listen to the story of the owner of a moving company in my constituency who has been in business for 25 years, successfully employing 35 people. He would double the number of employees during the summer by hiring students. He never asked for any handouts from any Government to get started. He did not ask for a million dollars to float his business. He floated his business on its assets, on his courage and hard work.

What has happened to that business? He borrowed some extra money at 10 per cent or 12 per cent in order to expand his business. A year later, that 12 per cent was 22 per cent or 24 per cent. The 10 per cent profit margin disappeared. With that 10 per cent loss in the profit margin, there came another 2 per cent debt load every month. As the company's deficits began to pile up, its cash flow began to dry up. But could he simply go to the bank and ask for more money? Not at all. The business fell into receivership and then into bankruptcy.

Two years ago, our local papers carried headlines which said that the local businesses were rolling along. The policies of this Government began to take effect. Suddenly, the banks began to tighten money that was available to small business. This gentleman was unable to get short term financing to meet his cash flow problems. He hung on by, first, signing over his assets from other property. Finally, he signed over his home and his car, until the bank walked in one day, took all of it, and closed the door to 35 employees. It is only 35 employees, not 1.6 million unemployed, but those 35 people were unemployed because of the inability of this one person to continute. This situation happens repeatedly.

The banks used to lend money on the basis of assets and inventory. Cash flow was only one factor. But it is now the only factor. The policy now is to get rid of inventory at 10 cents on the dollar. There is no more cash flow for employees even to put the inventory to work. This happens over and over again.

The spirit of that entrepreneur is destroyed. That job producer will no longer create jobs. The Government, instead of continually borrowing and bailing out the big companies, should consider these small businesses with their assets and inventories and, realizing that the market has turned around and interests rates have dropped, help them to continue during the next six months. However, the Government is letting the banks and other financial institutions close these small businesses down. These businesses have been allowed to hang on until the economy recovers, but now that there is a recovery, the banks are going to take their assets, wipe them out and sell them off at 10 cents on the dollar so that someone else can give it a try. The businessman to whom I have been referring did not have a Minister in the Government or a Minister of Finance to call to say "Look, my friend, I need an extra million dollars." He could not call the former Minister of Finance to say that he needed an $850 a day salary to tell him what is wrong with the economy.

It makes me heartsick to see not only businessmen but others who have been successful and owned a home and car fall all the way down to having to rely on unemployment insurance and then on welfare just to survive financially. They have no way back up because they have been bled dry.

I am holding a letter which I am sure is typical of the letters that every Member in the House of Commons is receiving. Surely there must be some feeling and a response to pleas such as are made in this letter. This constituent says:

> Jobs are needed badly. I have not worked since 1980. I have no UIC benefits. I have paid in for 35 years and did not draw. I do not receive welfare. I do not receive sick benefits. I have been an honest, hardworking man and have not caused Canada any problems. There seems to be no way for me to provide for my home. Recommendations of past employers can be obtained if necessary. My honesty can be checked.

I wonder who will check the honesty of the Government, the Government that keeps pretending that it can borrow billions upon billions of dollars and throw them away out of the other door. Instead, it should be supporting the productive engine, that is, our small business community in Canada.

The Government is asking for borrowing authority because it has spent over $1 billion more than it had projected just a few months ago.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is $3.5 billion.

Mr. Wenman: It depends on which prejection you consider. It could be the projection from last week, last month or the one next month. In addition, the Government wants to borrow an additional $5 billion for this year and $14 billion for next year. What is this money for? We do not even have a budget to know what the Government plans to spend it on. This borrowing Bill for $19 billion is the largest amount asked for in Canadian history.

I will conclude by saying that this country is hurting. The businessmen in the country are hurting. I hope the Government will find it in its heart to use some of the money that it gets from this Bill to help those businesses which have existed for the last 25 years over the next six months. If they can be helped over the next six months they will make it. The Government should not keep destroying the small business generator that creates the real jobs in this country. They can survive if the Government creates the proper economy and climate.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Skelly (p. 22957).

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it must be regarded as an honour to speak in the debate on the largest borrowing Bill in Canadian history, Bill C-143. In fact, this Bill embodies a number of firsts. First, as I have just noted, it is the largest borrowing Bill which the House has ever been condemned to face. Second, it is the first time that the House has ever been asked to provide a blank cheque for no less than 15.75 per cent of the year's projected budget, before the fiscal year has even begun. Furthermore, it is being asked to do so in the form of borrowing authority which is certainly, considering the present situation, an outright admission of overlapping fiscal failure. Third, this is the first time in parliamentary history that a borrowing Bill has been for an amount greater than the total Government spending only a dozen years or so ago.

It must surely be a first for any Government maintaining the pretense of following a parliamentary system to submit a Bill such as this without tendering its resignation at the same time. This must be so, at least in what we would like to consider as the politically advanced world.

Just what do these figures mean? Your Honour may remember that when the present Government was in Opposition, in 1979, it raised a good deal of concern because, in its eyes, the then Government was slow in bringing down a budget. However, for the first time in nearly a generation, there was a Government in power which recognized that it held power in trust, rather than by right. The then Minister took the requisite amount of time and in due course brought down the first honest budget which had been seen in the lifetime of some of the young 18 year olds who voted for the first time in the ensuing national election. The rest is history.

When viewed in retrospect, the promises of cheap gas, lower interest rates, less inflation, reduced Government and myriad other promises reveal the moral calibre of the Party and the Government opposite which swept back into power. Nine months later it brought down its budget, which has not yet been passed. It has been modified in many forms and must soon be authorized by the House despite the fact that, in one guise or another, it has ruled the economic lives of Canadians since November 12, 1981. That budget called for a deficit of $10.5 billion and financial requirements of $6.6 billion. Step by step, month by month, mini budget by mini budget, these figures mounted until the deficit stood at $27.2 billion and financial requirements at $26.1 billion.

What then is the value of the figures which have been presented to us? We all know that this will not be the last time the bankrupt Treasury will, like Oliver of Charles Dickens' fame, be back for more. The figures have been drafted to reflect an ideal situation, if everything goes right. It is like a fairy story. If all the projections work out exactly as the Government has said they would, this is the amount of money which will be needed. However, the Government's figures never work out, so it must keep returning for more because its figures lie. There is an old saying that figures lie and liars figure.

Let us consider what effect there has been on the financial and economic life of the country. Today the deficit is equal to 34 per cent of all Government expenditures. In my opinion, that means that the Government must borrow half as much money as it brings in by taxation. Can anyone even conceive of a business operating in that manner? Can anyone imagine a family, a household, operating in that manner? However, this is not a business and not a family. This is a once prosperous nation whose Government has forgotten that it is not to rule by right but, rather, is to govern in trust. This is a bankrupt Government, and as the events of last week have shown, it is a bankrupt Government in more ways than one.

In the calendar year 1982, federal Government borrowing accounted for 51 per cent of the net new security issues placed in Canada. That is incredible. I cannot understand why the press has not spread this news across the front pages of the land, unless there is a feeling that even more news of the financial, moral and other types of bankruptcy shown by the Party in power would be too demoralizing for the public to take.

I will tell Your Honour some of the differences these fiscal and monetary non-policies of the Party in power make. First, there is the ever-mounting burden of interest which must be paid just to carry the debt. That interest amounts to some $1,700 per taxpayer, at the present time; that is, before the passage of this Bill seeking authority to borrow further. The gross accumulated debt amounts to $5,500 per capita. That interest, just for the record, amounted to 4.8 per cent of the country's Gross National Product in the year now drawing to a close. That compares to 2 per cent when the Government first came to power 15 years ago.

Just as important is the loss of fiscal manoeuvring room. In 1968 and 1969, one tax dollar in nine was needed to service the federal debt. Today it takes one dollar in three. That means there is simply no room to undertake expensive fiscal measures to encourage recovery.

I believe the celebrated John Turner said something during his spell as Minister of Finance about spending our way out of recession. That is just the sort of thinking that has brought us into the present situation and depression. When the Government has spent its way out of a recession and then spent its way through a period of recovery, and all the time borrowed to do it—because, after all, the voters would not like to be taxed, would they?—then there simply is no more room to move around when it is necessary to do so. That amounts to nothing more than simple thinking, always looking for the easy way out, not caring for the country in its charge, looking no farther than the next election. Every person who has held a finance portfolio in a Liberal Government over the past decade and a half stands condemned of that fact. So do the willing sheep who, as they did last week, will stand on demand and bleat their approval for anything done by a member of the Government so long as he is a Liberal.

The third effect is that those in the private sector, the people and organizations actually creating real and permanent jobs in our society, are squeezed out of the money markets. Last year, 51 per cent of the net public borrowings in Canada were undertaken by the federal Government. That does not leave very much for the people who are to create jobs, lower inflation, pay salaries and bring prosperity back to our society. Of course, by cornering half of the available loan money, the Government has effectively bid up the price of money, the interest rate, out of all conscience, both for itself and for borrowers from the productive private sector.

Fourth, and perhaps most important, is the matter of confidence. Neither the decision maker in the private sector nor even the private citizen, whose only experience with finance may involve the family budget, can have any level of confidence in a Government which, for two decades, has shown less competence in trying to run the country than does any housewife in trying to run her household successfully. There is a rule in poker that one should never throw good money after bad. But what choice have we? This is like buying buckets for a sinking boat. There is little alternative.

I see that Your Honour is starting to signal that my allotted time has expired. Again, let me emphasize the fact that we on this side of the House feel that the Government should be more accountable to the House before demanding outright the astronomical sum of $19 billion.

• (1620)

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, during this debate on Bill C-143 relating to the Government's supplementary borrowing authority we will hear a lot of figures being bandied about, and I certainly intend to do a little bandying myself to emphasize the seriousness of our country's most serious financial situation.

Many Canadians may find themselves having trouble understanding exactly where Canada stands financially. Even officials in the Department of Finance, including the Minister himself, are having problems.

However, one does not have to be a high-powered statistician or an economist to know that Canada is seriously in debt. Mr. Speaker, the simple fact of the matter is that the federal Government has not balanced its cheque-book since the 1969-70 fiscal year, one year after the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office.

It is interesting to note that if this Liberal Government had been responsible and worked within a balanced budget each year, Canada's national debt now would be something under $3 billion. As it is, we have a staggering debt that even our grandchildren will never be able to pay off.

It would be interesting to have a peek at the personal chequing account of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I wonder whether his own system of dealing with his personal finances is anything like the system that he uses in his role of Finance Minister in looking after the affairs of the nation. Somehow, I very much doubt it. However, it is a fact that the Minister of Finance is charged with the duty and the responsibility of managing Canada's financial affairs in a sane and reasonable manner. I regret to say, Mr. Speaker, that this is not being done.

As a consequence, we find that people have lost faith. They know that the Government has absolutely no interest in working within a balanced budget and, as a result, it goes to the money markets, it reduces the availability of money, it shoots the interest rate up, and that makes it harder for the independent businessman, the farmer or the householder to obtain money at a reasonable rate. More important, through certain external forces, the interest rate in Canada has been thrust down to a point where it is now almost manageable, and at this particular time in the life of a Canadian it is imperative that he have confidence. How is he going to have confidence when the Government presents a $5 billion supplementary borrowing authority Bill and, right on the heels of that, without explaining its way out of it, without telling Canadians what it is going to use the money for, it is asking for a further $14 billion to $15 billion?

There is a building contractor in my riding of Prince George-Bulkley Valley who considered himself fortunate when he was awarded a contract for $2.4 million to build a school, through the Department of Indian Affairs. He considered himself fortunate. He is now really wondering whether he has his sanity. The contract, of course, was with the Department of Public Works, and on his third draw he submitted documentation to prove his eligibility for a progress draw of $290,000. He was told by the officials of the Department of Public Works, with whom he had contracted, that they had miscalculated the worth of this particular firm, the ability of the firm to perform, and they felt that he could only put $90,000 worth of goods and services into that building, and they had budgeted for that. So all he was going to get was $90,000. Where was the other $200,000 to come from? There was a solution to that. What he was told to do was to lay his men off and they would go on UIC, or they could have some grandiose project where they could go out and rake leaves in the forest until some time after April 1 when there was a new budget and new buckets of money and he could be paid the balance. Over and above that, the Department officials said that they would pay him the interest on that $200,000 because they were incapable of paying the full amount at that time.

When situations like that are allowed to occur, how on earth can any Government balance its budget? How on earth can any Canadian expect to have any confidence in what its Government is doing? Situations like that are occurring every day. To save a few bucks, why do we not turn the heat down in this place? Everybody is cooking. I think it is mostly from the alternate sources of energy from the front benches opposite, but the fact remains that wherever we look, we see waste.

A few years ago the then Auditor General, J. J. Macdonell, provided concrete evidence to support his claim that Government spending and fiscal accountability were out of control. Over the years, the Liberal Government has been speeding down the road toward ever-increasing Government spending and waste. It did not, however, realize how fast it was going, and ever since it hit that deadly curve, "the recession curve", it has been spinning out of control.

As the Official Opposition, we do not take objection to the fact that the Government needs money. Of course it does. What we do take exception to is the fact that the Government cannot tell us exactly how much it needs and what it needs the money for. That, Mr. Speaker, is the reason we stand here in such frustration and try to impress on the Members opposite that they have a responsibility to their own constituents and they have a responsibility to Canada. Those good men and women across there have the same responsibility to the people in Prince George as I, the elected Member, does. They do not accept that responsibility. Regardless of how rotten this Bill is, every one of those sheep over there, when the vote on this dreadful Bill is taken, will stand up and be counted as supporting it. I think that is a rotten shame.

Mr. Fisher: Baa!

Mr. McCuish: The last time I saw a mouth like that it had a hook in it.

The point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that this Government is asking Parliament for money which it cannot prove to us that it needs. Despite its public relations program of restraint called six and five, what is in fact the case is that this Government may talk about restraint but it shows as much restraint as a bunch of sailors on shore leave.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be able to speak this afternoon on the amendment to Bill C-143, the amendment that has been moved by my colleague, basically proposing that this Bill be amended so that the borrowing authority be not now read a second time but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof, particularly the subject matter of the clause pertaining to the borrowing authority for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, be referred to the Standing Committe on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

I think an awful lot has already been said, even today, with regard to what we are being asked to do as Members of Parliament here, in writing out a $19 billion cheque for the Government to do with the money as they please.

I know that there have been statements made in this House, such as on Friday when the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Berger) said that all I would have to do would be to look in the Blue Book, look into the Estimates, and I would have answers to my questions there. Similarly, this afternoon the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) seemed to imply the same thing, that it was very clear in terms of where the money would be spent. I have not had an opportunity to look at all the Estimates. The little bit I have had a chance to look at troubles me. I certainly do have my concerns and worries as to where this Government intends to spend its money, in what manner it will be spending it, and what approaches it will be undertaking.

One of the areas highlighted in the Speech from the Throne and in other speeches over the past three years of this session has been the area of multiculturalism and the whole Government thrust in that area. In accepting the invitation of the Parliamentary Secretary to look into the Estimates, I note that for 1981-82 the projected Estimate for multiculturalism was $14 million. I notice in the Estimates for 1983-84 that the amount is $13,720,000. I have difficulty comprehending why there is this kind of a reduction in a program such as multiculturalism. I am sure if I looked through the Blue Book I could find similar sorts of cutbacks or rollbacks, yet the Government has a greatly increased deficit.

The answers being provided are not adequate. This is all the more reason for a budget to explain exactly what type of philosophy the Government is now following, what its plans and goals are and what its programs will be. It is very important that we have some direction.

There have been several mini budgets but only one major budget recently. This indicates that the Government is a house divided. Enough proverbs have been cited to show that a house divided cannot stand. We have good illustrations of this. In the Income Tax Act legislation, we were asked to pass a hodgepodge of band-aid solutions. This is done from one year to the next on policies and programs the Government intends to follow. We have this kind of turmoil. That is why we have these unreasonable demands on Members of Parliament, asking us to pass Bills such as this $19 billion blank cheque.

I want to be constructive. I will give a case history in Canada that should be followed. The recent example I would point to is my Province of Manitoba. We have a Government that has been moving ahead, giving explanations, consulting people, telling them what it intends to do. If it requires money, it tells the people what is going to be done with it. There have been decreased federal transfer payments to Manitoba which, of course, has hit the Manitoba economy very heavily. Consequently, there is more of a deficit than was anticipated.

I wish to draw to the attention of Hon. Members some of the philosophy being used in Manitoba that could be incorporated into coping with the needs of the whole country. I have great admiration for the fact that creativity and innovation have been evident in the Province of Manitoba regarding the number one problem, namely, unemployment. I am amazed that the Province, which is often considered to be a have-not Province, places such emphasis on job-creation and meeting the basic needs. It does not just have make-work projects, but works with the municipalities and non-profit organizations in an attempt to deal with the unemployment problem, making sure that the job-creation measures deal with the existing needs.

In addition to recognizing the high rate of unemployment and shrinking revenues, which is common for Provinces such as Manitoba, it has had a re-priorization of some of its expenditures. In citing this case history, as an example, I am impressed with the fact that the Government of Manitoba has shown compassion and care.

If there was evidence of caring on the part of the federal Liberal Government, I could maybe try to understand why it is asking for $19 billion. Several weeks ago the Government asked us to place the pensioners of Canada under the six and five regime at a time when the cost of living and inflation has been much higher. We have not seen the care and compassion we would expect the Government to exercise for the needy people of this country.

The six and five legislation also applied to the Family Allowance. Here again we have not seen any compassion or caring such as is evident in my Province of Manitoba. I would urge the federal Government to think about this more seriously.

Perhaps one of the greatest examples I can cite regarding the Manitoba Government is that it has demonstrated co-operation and consultation. One area where it has demonstrated this most clearly has been in its consultation and co-operation with the unions. One of the major unions in Manitoba is the Manitoba Government Employees' Association. Through consultation and co-operation, the Government has reopened the contract which had been agreed on by both parties. We do not have the type of legislation that we have seen in Quebec. There has been a voluntary reopening of the contract, a voluntary cutback in the increase for the next period of time. This money is being channelled into a job-creation fund.

These people are participating. Other unions, associations and groups will be invited to participate in this. They are already participating in terms of discussion with the Government as to urgent priorities and needs and ways in which, together with the Province of Manitoba, they can deal with the problem of unemployment. These unions will be looking at ways in which this job-creation fund will be allocated.

Looking at this whole consultation process, I am amazed when we see that the new summer youth program will not have the local advisory board reactivated. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) has decided to not cultivate this co-operation. These are things that are necessary.

I see you rising, Mr. Speaker, to indicate that my time has finished. I urge the Government to look at these approaches of being creative, innovative, caring and co-operative. I leave that with the House to consider.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on Bill C-143, the supplementary borrowing authority Bill. As previous speakers have already stated, this Bill, if passed, will provide authority for the Government to borrow up to an additional $5 billion in new money for this current 1982-83 fiscal year and up to $14 billion in new money for fiscal year 1983-84. Without question, the total borrowing authority of $19 billion granted in this Bill is the largest borrowing Bill in our country's 116-year history.

To add fuel to the fire, this is the second time this year that this Government has sought to increase authority by more than the requirements that had been projected in its most recent financial forecast. The deficit today is 28 per cent of all expenditures. In other words, for every $4 the Government spends, it must borrow $1.

The Government keeps telling us that the federal debt is $134 billion. However, when one adds the total debt of the Crown corporations of $55 billion and the $49 billion in pension funds that the Government has appropriated, the real debt is closer to $240 billion. The June and October budgets of 1982 failed to provide economic and fiscal projections for the current fiscal year. Common sense should tell us that this is dangerous because it creates uncertainty and leads to unwarranted and destructive speculation in the financial markets as to the state of the federal Government's finances. No banker, Mr. Speaker, would grant a line of credit to a financially crippled business which refused to provide cash flow projections. Indeed, a private enterprise with revenue which only equalled 70 per cent of expenditures and a gross debt which was more than triple the value of its assets, would be forced into bankruptcy.

There is no question that the poor economic performance will continue to have a negative impact on the finances of the Government as the cost of social assistance rises and revenues stagnate or fall. Any recovery which may occur is likely to be a weak recovery and, as such, will only have a moderate impact on the current fiscal dilemma. Even if we have a moderate recovery, it may not be enough to bring the federal books into balance. Unless measures are taken to control wasteful spending and to create economic growth, it can be expected that the present situation will not readily improve.

I realize that the Government is committed to carry out its obligations in financing our important social programs such as Old Age Security, spouses' allowances, medicare, and many other worth-while programs. These are obligations and duties which must not be reneged upon, but there are many, many other areas of spending which should be seriously looked at and should either be curtailed or eliminated entirely. One only has to go to the Auditor General's annual Report to see for himself areas of unproductive spending, areas of mismanagement and areas of unaccountability and cost over-runs which, when totalled up, amount to millions and billions of taxpayers' dollars wasted and gone down the drain.

I am not here to castigate and chastise individuals or Department officials, Mr. Speaker. I believe most of them are dedicated people who are trying their best to do the best job possible. However, because the money they handle, which it is their responsibility to spend wisely, is not really their own, I do not believe there is the same judicial care exercised in spending the taxpayers' money as when they are spending their own.

I have in my possession, Mr. Speaker, a document which spells out this problem in detail, but because of the brief time at my disposal in this debate it will not be possible for me to read this document into the record because of its length. However, I can draw the attention of the Chair and of Hon. Members to a couple of examples. The first example has to do with over-runs, over spending the budget. Environment Canada experienced cost over-runs on 153 out of a total 223 projects to the amount of $283 million. This is a glaring example of poor budget planning which would have resulted in wholesale firings if it had happened in private industry. But we all know that public servants rarely get fired. If something goes wrong, the punishment is usually a promotion to get him or her out of the Department. At the other extreme, Mr. Speaker, on July 1, 1982, two days after announcing the need for more restraint, the Government paid $430,000 to provide 16 cities with fireworks. Really, Mr. Speaker, where is the common sense? Common sense should tell us that we are heading for rocky shoals if this trend in spending continues. But it is a case of this Government's continuing to flounder around, pulling the wrong levers and greasing the wrong skids.

The Government must readjust its priorities to get our economy rolling again. Money must be spent wisely to get our economy back on track. We must regain our strong economic base. Our industry must modernize in order to grow and expand. The Government should be encouraging such undertakings, not penalizing them with disincentives, by drowning inventiveness with myriads of discouraging regulations which private enterprise is forced to contend with. There must be dovetailing, equitableness and partnership between business and Government. That harmony will result in better economic results. on the other hand, working at loggerheads with each other results only in chaos and bankruptcy.

Over the years, Mr. Speaker, we have heard common arguments used by the Liberals to defend the Government's record on spending, debt and the deficit. One argument is, "Deficit spending is good for economic growth". Common sense should tell them that deficits do not necessarily occur as a consequence of measures to promote economic growth. The truth is that most of the existing deficit is the result of the failure to achieve economic growth. For example, in November, 1981, economic growth was projected by the then Minister of Finance to be 2.2 per cent. The projected deficit was $10.5 billion. In June, 1982 the Government predicted a negative growth of 2 per cent, and the projected deficit was forecast to be $19.6 billion. For fiscal year 1982-83 the Government is forecasting a decline of 4.4 per cent, and the expected deficit is $23.6 billion. It can be readily seen, Mr. Speaker, that as the deficit has grown from year to year, Canadians have become more and more aware of the damage which continuous deficits inflict upon the economy. We must be aware as well, Mr. Speaker, that our excessive borrowing is one of the reasons for the weak dollar and for the recent very high interest rates which have been necessary to support the dollar.

Another fallacy which we hear from the Government is, "There is a deficit because of the positive initiatives the Liberals have taken over the years to assist Canadians." The truth is, Mr. Speaker, the many examples of unnecessary spending by the Liberals have presented an unnecessary drain on the Treasury. That red herring, Mirabel Airport, has cost the taxpayers of Canada some $700 million. As I mentioned earlier, the Government has consistently failed to exercise adequate cost control on projects and on programs. It was discovered in October, 1979, that cost over-runs on ongoing projects initiated by the Liberals totalled $1.1 billion. In 1978 the Unemployment Insurance Commission paid $290 million to people not legally entitled to receive benefits.

Another fallacy projected by this Government is, "There is nothing wrong with having a large national debt. We only owe the money to ourselves, and there are assets to offset the debt." The major problem with the Government's debt is that it must be serviced. One tax dollar in four is used to pay interest on the debt. Interest on the public debt will cost the taxpayers of Canada $16.7 billion in the fiscal year 1982-83. That is $700 per capita or $1,800 per taxpayer. The assets of the Government are dwarfed by its debt. In March, 1982, the Government had $40 billion in assets compared to a total official gross national debt of $134 billion.

Another fallacy enunciated by this Government is, "There is nothing wrong with a short-term deficit." The federal Government has not balanced its books since 1970 and will not do so in the next five years. The Liberals have maintained since 1970 that the deficit is only a short-term problem. There is nothing short-term about 17 years. Since this Government took office in February, 1980, Government spending has increased by 66 per cent, compared to an increase in the Consumer Price Index of 38 per cent and compared to a nominal GNP growth of 30 per cent.

In my remarks today, Mr. Speaker, I have cited many reasons and examples for the pitiful state in which Canadians find themselves today. Unemployment has never been worse. Our economy is in despair. Our productivity is at an all-time low. This Government, the present manager of the affairs of our country, is bankrupt of new ideas and new initiatives for the recovery and betterment of Canada. I honestly believe that the time has arrived for a new sign to appear on Parliament Hill, a sign which will bring relief and rekindle hope and confidence in all Canadians. This sign will read, "Under new management".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection signed by the Hon. Members for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne), Saint John (Mr. Landers), Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin), Gloucester (Mr. Breau), York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie), Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), Moncton (Mr. McCauley), Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), Dollard (Mr. Desmarais) and Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), has been filed with me pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C., 1970, to the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of New Brunswick.

If the House agrees, I would suggest that we follow past practice and print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Skelly (p. 22957).

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the amendment to Bill C-143 whereby it is proposed that the Bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Certainly this Committee's input would be an appropriate crutch for a crippled Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) whose own position vis-à-vis this type of legislation has been seriously weakened during the past few days.

Members of Parliament cannot have things both ways, Mr. Speaker, assailing the Government for borrowing too much and, at the same time, urging greater levels of expenditures. What we can do, however, is to point out some of the more gross and wasteful priorities that the Government has used, and urge it to get more value for money in future. This would certainly meet the approval of the Auditor General. It should also accomplish a more useful purpose in its expenditures in future and look into the wasteful activities of Crown corporations, such as CN Marine and CN Railways, which do not even co-operate with the Auditor General's attempt to bring a little cost effectiveness to their management.

There is a perception in the country that the major economic initiatives, even if they are of doubtful value, are used in such away that they are characterized by the benefits they bring to prominent Liberals. This, to many Canadians, is adding insult to injury. A former Member of this place and a distinguished columnist, Doug Fisher, recently underlined this in a very pointed way.

Furthermore, when one reads on the frong page of our national newspaper that Liberals such as Gordon Gibson and Liberal Party President, Iona Campagnolo, are now concerned about the corruption in their own Party, It comes as welcome news to those of us who have been saying this for years. The old adage, "physician heal thyself", must be taken into account by the liberal Party if it has any real motivation to restore some trust during the time that it will, of necessity, have to spend in Opposition because of its miserable performance since taking office in 1980.

While Canadians have shown a tendency to be charitable in the past and to ignore patronage, what they cannot ignore is the terrible cost in financing Government borrowing, as has just been pointed out by the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges). In the coming year, $18.6 billion will be spent on interest on our debt. The most insidious parts of these costs are those that are paid to foreign lenders. The Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe made the argument that is sometimes used by economists to justify not being too concerned about the national debt as part of it is owed by Canadians to Canadians. But very few economists use this same argument to try to justify the drag or the inhibiting effect upon an economy, caused by paying money to foreign money lenders. This, of course, is the position in which our country has found itself more and more.

Our revenues are also in jeopardy. When the Minister of Finance as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources brought in the National Energy Program for a five-year period from 1981 to 1986, there was a confident expectation that all levels of Government would receive about $214 billion in revenues. Unfortunately, because of recent developments in the OPEC countries and in the international oil market, it is becoming clear that the most optimistic figure we now can hope for in terms of revenue would be $133 billion. That leaves us a $81 billion shortfall from the first optimistic projection that the Minister made in the House and which was going to form the basis for a lot of programs the Government had hoped to fund.

Our major chartered banks are part of this major problem. They allocate a lot of funds, including petrodollars, on the basis of very poor feasibility studies, to many Third World countries which are now unable to repay. This has caused a lot of instability on world financial markets, including our own. In many cases, the banks made no attempt to make sure that the moneys were going to be used productively or to benefit in any major fashion the people of the countries which borrowed them. They only wanted the convenience of lending large chunks of money in the sure and certain belief that no country would ever go bankrupt. Now they are depending on governments—read "taxpayers"—to rescue them.

This is not just true internationally, but it is true in this country. One of our major banks, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, I suppose pursuant to Government policy and the theory that a nod is as good as a wink to a blind horse, allocated to Canadair, to Massey-Ferguson and to Dome, tremendous chunks of money. Now, on the East Coast, bailing out the crippled fishing industry, it looks as if one of the main beneficiaries will be the Bank of Nova Scotia. We must take a very hard look at banks, Mr. Speaker.

On February 9, the Wall Street Journal reported that a United States Congressman, Mr. Jerry Lewis, when he was looking at the real costs of world debt in the context of the United States purview, said:

> A strong case can be made that whatever the banks' past sins of neglect, greed or recklessness, an overriding public interest requires that they be prevented from going broke. But why does this mean that the banks' managers should be able to impose the burden of resolution of the debt problem on the public?

They benefit from any gains they make on international or domestic transactions, but when they run into trouble, in order to save the jobs, in affected industries the first prerequisite is to pay them. I would say that we ought to take a good at a modification of this attitude. The banks ought to be told by governments, which have only been too happy to use their resources in the past to accomplish political objectives, that if loans are made and the recipients go bankrupt and as a result thousands of workers need jobs, the first priority would be to put the workers back to work without necessarily repaying the banks. In other words, tell the banks that they are on their own for a change.

The Minister of Finance asks us to trust him with $19 billion in the form of a blank cheque. In a few weeks, he will ask the House to approve his long-awaited budget which, needless to say, will have yet another gargantuan deficit. Speaking for myself, Mr. Speaker, I cannot find any reason why I should feel confident that the Minister is going to spend those billions of taxpayers' money wisely. Given my origins, going back through Nova Scotia to the highlands of Scotland, I happen to believe in the old saying that if you look after the pennies, the dollars will take care of themselves.

The Minister, it would appear, although taking good care of his political friends, is taking care very loosely of the taxpayers' pennies entrusted to him. For example, he likes to fly to Europe by the Concorde aircraft at about $3,000 U.S. per trip, as he did on June 14, 1982, from Kennedy Airport to Heathrow, then on to Zurich, Geneva and Paris. His press secretary has flown to Europe first class at a cost of more than $3,000 for the return luxury trip, not to mention his bureaucratic advisers. It would be beneath their dignity to use the cramped quarters of the economy compartments of Air Canada's planes.

A man is known not just by the big things that he does, but by the small things. This king of largesse at the expense of the taxpayers of this country does not engender any great feelings of admiration in my breast for a frugality that could be transmitted into the kind of concern for taxpayers' money that I think most Canadians would like to see in this time of austerity.

I should like to come back to a column of the veteran columnist Doug Fisher, but I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are indicating that my time has elapsed, so I will continue at a later time.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I want to spend a few moments discussing the borrowing Bill and the amendment. I have a small problem with the arithmetic, however. The Bill deals with $14 billion and $5 billion. With my elementary arithmetic, that adds up to $19 billion. Beyond that I have some real difficulty.

I would commend to those Members of the House who have not read it, a column by Don McGillivray last week in which he dealt with $1 billion in realistic terms. He pointed out that to spend $1 billion at $100 an hour, 15 hours a day, six days a week and 50 weeks a year, would take well over 2,000 years. That is very difficult for me to comprehend and I am not apt to have a chance to try it.

I thought I would break down some of the numbers the Minister was putting before us into realistic figures and relate them to the dollars which would apply to my constituency of about 75,000 people. I took the spending of the Government and broke it down in that manner. I found that those numbers are almost too difficult to handle since in the small riding of Prince Edward-Hastings in Eastern Ontario we would be looking at a spending in this fiscal year of something like $250 million and at a proposed deficit of some $80 million. I guess what bothers me most, beyond the tremendous impact of those dollars, is the attitude of the Government. Frankly, it is very obvious to my constituents and me that the Government does not care. In any case, it is not interested in the people of this area.

Why should the people of Prince Edward-Hastings want me to support this Bill? For example, why would the people who work at Stephens-Adamson in Belleville want me to support this Bill when the federal Government had a contract of some $20 million which could have gone to them? They were the lowest bidder and the only company in the world capable of building the equipment. I am sure Mr. Speaker remembers the contract because we spent a lot of time on it in the House. It was for the major coal project in British Columbia. The Government, in its wisdom, gave the contract to the Japanese. Why would these people want me to vote for this piece of legislation?

Why would farmers in the largely rural area of Prince Edward-Hastings want me to support this Bill? Over the past two to three years there has been a major winterkill of fruit trees. For example, one farmer lost 8,000 cherry trees at one crack, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has done absolutely nothing to help him get back on his feet. Producers of tomatoes, a major cash crop in the area, are being beset by Government-subsidized tomatoes imported from Italy. They are coming in at $2 to $2.50 per case under the cost of producing them in Canada, and the Government does nothing about it. Many farmers in the area are having difficulty meeting their payments. The Farm Credit Corporation tells us that they are underfunded and that it is not able to help. Why would the farmers in my area want me to vote for this particular piece of legislation?

Why would young people who have to work during the summer to obtain enough money for their education want me to vote for this Bill? The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission has put into place what it calls Regulation 16, which means that every small piece of work young people are able to obtain has to be accounted for, that they have to have Social Insurance Numbers, and that deductions have to be made. In past years young people who worked for less than $250 for less than 25 days did not have those deductions. Now employers, such as the people who grow strawberries and other soft fruits, will find that they have to double and triple their paperwork in order to have young people helping them with their crops this summer. Why would young people want me to support this Bill?

Why would the shoe factories and the needle trades in the area which have received absolutely no support or protection from the Government want me to support this particular Bill? Why would children, the aged or retired public servants, all of whom are forced to abide by the 6 per cent and 5 per cent regime, want me to support this Bill? We know that the federal Government has something like a 9 per cent to 13 per cent increase in its expenditures. Why would any of these people want to support this particular Bill?

At this point I want to make a suggestion, one of which Mr. Speaker will be particularly aware. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) made a comment just the other day that in the budget the House of Commons is holding its increase in expenditures down to 5 per cent. The point he made was well-taken. If we really took a hard run at it, we could keep our increases to less than 5 per cent, yet we find that the federal Government in total is not capable of keeping its expenditures below 9 per cent to 12 per cent.

Mr. Blenkarn: And even 17 per cent.

Mr. Ellis: Indeed, even 17 per cent, as the Hon. Member for Mississauga South just said. Why would the students at Loyalist College in the Belleville area support this Bill? These students are attending the only course in North America—not just in Hastings County, not just in Ontario, not just in Canada, but in North America—where they can learn to handle the new Government technology on Telidon. We saw in the newspapers the other day that the federal Government will now spend $24 million in advertising the new Telidon technology, yet when those yound people graduate from that course, well-trained in this technology, there is not a job to be found. Out of the first course about half of the students found employment; out of the second, none; and the third course is now going in and there are no jobs to handle this technology.

Why would marina operators advocate my support of this Bill? In my area there is a tremendous tourist industry, yet there is a marina operator on the north shore of Prince Edward County who asked for a small business investment grant, a program of this Government, but was told he could not have it because he, very wisely as a businessman, wanted to buy only good used equipment. No, he could not have it for that; he would have to buy new equipment. Why would he want me to support this Bill? Another businessman who was interested in a small craft harbours grant to open the entrance to his harbour was told in 1980 that he would have it in 1982. In 1982 he was told that he may have it in 1985-86. Why would tourist operators or marina operators in my constituency want me to support this Bill?

Why would the truckers in this area want me to support this Bill? After all, Maislin Transport received a shot in the arm of some $34 million a short while ago. None of the trucking companies in my constituency, no matter how hardpressed they are for work or how many employees they have laid off, are receiving any support from the federal Government.

I could go on and on and on, but my time is running out. I just named a few people in my area who might benefit by the largesse of the federal Government, which will spend on behalf of those people $250 million in ordinary spending and some $80 million in deficit spending. It seems to me that there is little or no justification for this when the people of Prince Edward-Hastings cannot benefit from it. I will tell the House who benefits from it. It is the friends of the federal Government. If this Party digs in its heels and asks for some real accounting on this Bill, it will be true justice.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in the House of Commons today to speak to the amendment to Bill C-143, a Bill to borrow $19 billion. In particular I am speaking to the amendment which requests that the Bill go to committee so that the Members of the House, the people of Canada and I will know what is going on at this historic moment. As many speakers have pointed out today, not since Confederation has the Government of Canada sought to borrow so much money at one time.

Some of my colleagues on this side of the House who have spoken today attempted, and reasonably so, to show to the people of Canada and to Members of Parliament what $19 billion means. The Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis) just attempted to do that. In all honesty I must say that I just do not understand the magnitude of $19 billion. We have come to a time in our history in which our debt has grown to such a degree that at present we cannot possibly imagine what is happening. This to me has become totally unreasonable. In taking the unreasonable amount of $19 billion the Government does not show what it is going to do with that money, which makes the situation completely unreasonable.

• (1710)

I come to the basic problem. It is happening to us here in the House of Commons and it is affecting the people of Canada. People have lost credibility in the process of Parliament. This past week, while I was knocking on doors in my own constituency, a remark was made very frequently to me. I am sure if other Hon. Members were doing the same thing, they would hear the same remark. I was asked, "What are your gooks doing in the House of Commons?" That is a very serious question. The very phrasing of it means that people have lost credibility about what is going on here. It is important that this borrowing Bill go to committee and be made public so that people will know what the $19 billion is all about.

Some reasonableness must be attached to this. If there is no reasonableness, and with the power of television looking in on us, it is no wonder people ask, "What are you gooks doing?" We moved this amendment because I think it is a reasonable and an honest thing for Canadians and for people in this House to know more about what is happening. Canada is falling into what is known as the debt trap in the international world. This trap is one which countries fall into and from which they can no longer get out. Then they collapse.

Mr. Thacker: It is socialism. That is what it is.

Mr. Ogle: The situation happens very rapidly. There are countries which had strong economies five and six years ago—or at least were giving the appearance of being strong—but as a result of international events that have taken place during that time they have collapsed or are collapsing. Basically, the situation is called a debt trap. Countries falling into this debt trap have debts that get higher and higher. Finally, the debt controls their life, their economy and their history.

I repeat again that this House has to become credible. This Government has to be responsible. This House must show that what is taking place here is not taking this country into the debt trap.

Mr. Thacker: We are already in it.

Mr. Ogle: In the last several months in Canada events have taken place which point to the lack of credibility about which I am speaking. The Social Action Committee of the Canadian Catholic Bishops issued a statement at the beginning of January which, as far as I know, probably had as much effect in the media and in discussions in Canada about our economy than any other statement ever issued by the Catholic or any other church group in Canada. The statement issued by the Bishops discussed the same theme that I am discussing now. It is the ethical reflection on what is taking place, what is taking place morally when the country is moving in such a direction. That is a valid question for church officials to ask. I believe it is a valid question that church people should ask the legislators of the country. When the Bishops produced their statement and made it public, they started with two principles. As far as I know these two principles have not been accepted by many Members of the House as yet. First, the church, in directing how morality should be applied in an economy, should make sure that the particular group looking after the people should give a preferential option to the poor. Labour, labourers and workers should be above profit and capital. Those are two profound statements and two principles that will affect judgments surrounding anything that is done in our House as it relates to the economy of this nation.

Naturally I will not go into the Bishop's statement at this time. But I think it is important to realize that what I am saying about the credibility of what is taking place here has come specifically to the attention of church people. They are asking moral questions about what is taking place.

I believe it is very important that this Bill to borrow $19 billion—an amount that I can in no way fathom in my mind, and I am sure many people in this House cannot either—is immoral. To be asked to provide that kind of borrowing power without telling us what it is for is, to me, basically immoral. It is basically wrong morally. We have to make the Government responsible for that immorality. The Government must speak morally to that question and tell us what it is going to do and why it is keeping silent.

Not knowing what the $19 billion is for or where it is to be spent is very important to me. I am the critic on international development. I would like to know, in this $19 billion projection of debt, what is to happen to the international aid process that we have. Where is the international aid? Is it going to be cut? Is it going to be cut even though the amount in the borrowing Bill is up, or is it going to follow the direction of the North-South Task Force, which was set up by the House of Commons, which raised our aid to 0.7 per cent of the Gross National Product? We know nothing about that. That is the kind of thing I believe I should know as a Member of Parliament. I believe everybody who has a portfolio or is a critic should know what is happening in his area within that $19 billion. Until we know that, how can we possibly make a moral judgment and vote about something that is so tremendously big? I say we cannot.

In the same area being faced today, that is, the doubt present in the minds of all Canadians concerning the validity of the process going on in the House right now, I would ask the Government not only to be honest—which I think is imperative—but that it appear to be honest. I ask the Government to be honest and at the same time to appear to be honest.

This Government has been accused of being dishonest. I do not want to make that kind of an accusation because I have nothing to go on. I have no facts. Therefore, I will not say the Government is dishonest. I am asking the Government to be honest and at the same time to appear to be honest, because the Government does not appear to be honest by what it is doing.

What we are facing now is the highest borrowing limit we have ever been asked to authorize. In Canadian history this borrowing Bill is the highest the people of Canada, the Government of Canada, the Parliament of Canada, have ever been asked to authorize. We should know more about it. We must make a moral judgment that is as complete as humanly possible and that is not made in the dark.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to enter into debate on Bill C-143. It is a Bill whereby the Government is asking Parliament to authorize the borrowing of $5 billion to March 31, 1983 and a further borrowing of $14 billion to take the Government into the 1983-1984 year.

The House will know that we took the unusual step on this side, when the Minister made a motion for leave to introduce the Bill, of forcing a vote on that motion. We did that because we had received absolutely no information from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), even though we had asked for it, as to what the projected income and expenditures of the Government were and why it needed the money. The details were still not forthcoming.

When the Minister moved for first reading of the Bill, we took the unusual step once again of forcing a vote on the first reading of the Bill for the same reason. We feel that the House is entitled to have the details. We have had promises and more promises from the Government to give us the details.

On May 31, 1982, the former Minister of Finance, the minister of the debacle called the October, 1981, budget, stated in committee: "I would not expect the House to act upon an additional request for borrowing authority without providing it with detailed information in the economic situation and the implications of that situation on the Government's fiscal situation." On June 15, 1982, the then Minister of State for Finance stated, "We would not expect the House to act on a request for additional borrowing authority without providing it with an update on the economic situation and the implication of these new developments for the Government's financial requirements." On October 27, 1982, the current Minister of Finance stated, "In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-84 and future fiscal years, and then . . . " I underline the word "then", " . . . seek additional borrowing authority required."

We were told to wait for the Estimates. We waited for the Estimates and finally received them. Those Estimates stated that this Government plans on spending $88.9 billion in 1983-84. I should point out that we have had no indication of the revenues. I should also point out that the Government has abandoned its six and five program. You will know that the Government, in its desperate attempt to fool the Canadian public, launched a big program to persuade the people that the Liberal Party was responsible for a downturn in inflation. They did this not by sending out those little stickers, but by creating a depression.

An Hon. Member: Very effective, too.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, very effective. It created a depression that it cannot get out of.

Our concern is that we are hearing all of the six and five lingo. Incidentally, some Cabinet Ministers have even gone to the horrendous step of putting those six and five stickers on their letterhead. I have written to the Minister of National Revenue, for example, to suggest that I did not think this was quite in keeping with what is proper conduct for a Minister of the Crown. We are now concerned that these little stickers will have to be reprinted. Instead of the six and five logo, they will have to read 17.8 and 9.6. This is serious because they now have a song about it. I am not sure whether the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) wrote it in his spare time or whether it is all that he has done based on the state of the economy. However, it is probably all that he has done. Those words will now have to be changed because six and five has become 17.8 and 9.6.

I want to point out some things that have been said in the House during the debate when we asked for the revenue figures to accompany the expenditure figures. The Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) made an astounding statement. He stated that we should have been pleased when we received the Estimates. He suggested that the Estimates should be sufficient information for us to let them proceed with the borrowing Bill. Government Members are somewhat proud of the fact that they will spend $88.9 billion. But we do not know where the money is coming from.

My academic friend, an economist by profession, made much of the fact that the Government was laying out its expenditures. I would point out to the Government that when my constituents of Simcoe North go to the bank for a loan, the bankers have a habit of saying, for example, "That is fine. I realize your client will spend $88.9 billion. But where is the money coming from? How will you pay it back? Where will you get the money that you will spend?" The attitude the Government has taken is to ask us to trust them. We have seen a great example of why we should trust the Liberal Party and the Government. After all, Mr. Gillespie does. He has trusted the Liberal Party and has done very well by them. He seems to get a million dollars whenever he needs it in order to finance Government schemes which are not provided for in any Act or previous information.

We are asked to trust the same Minister of Finance who wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on February 17 to say that he has reviewed the matter with his staff and they say that he has not heard of this liquefaction project until September, 1981. The same Minister of Finance, the former Minister of Energy, came back a week later to tell the Prime Minister that he has checked with his staff who went through all the records and found out that he did know about it in January. I would caution the House that this is an unfolding drama. There may be another letter forthcoming shortly in which the Minister of Finance has had another chat with his staff. We might find that he will say that when he constructed the National Energy Program in 1980, when it was introduced in the budget of 1980, in fact he knew about the liquefaction project.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hardly think that the comments of the Hon. Member are relevant. We are supposed to be talking about the borrowing authority. I would like to know exactly what the events of the so-called Gillespie affair have to do with this, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Berger: Furthermore, I wonder if the Hon. Member knows what the hell he was doing in January, 1981.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I share your confusion as to what my hon. friend does. I think that confusion is shared by all Members of the House. I think what my friend has missed is the fact that we are talking about trust.

Mr. Berger: What day is it today? Do you know how to add two and two? Have you ever read the goddamned Estimates?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour), on a point of order.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I clearly heard blasphemous language being used by the Member for Laurier, and I think you heard it as well. I stand corrected if it was not the case, but if he did use blasphemous language, I think it is against the Rules of the House.

• (1730)

[English]

Mr. Fisher: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): One at a time, please.

[Translation]

I can inform the Hon. Member who just raised a point of order that the Chair did not hear any offensive language. However, the Chair has a duty to allow the comments of the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and if an unparliamentary expression was uttered in this House, it would be appropriate for the Hon. Member who did so to withdraw what he said.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, it was a slip of the tongue in the heat of the debate. I insist that the Hon. Member does not know what he is talking about, but I withdraw the word I used.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): At this point I should inform the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) that taking—

Mr. Blenkarn: He did not get a chance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): —into account the interruptions, which will not be taxed against him, he has about 45 seconds left in which to speak.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would need much longer than that to explain trust to the Hon. Member across the way. However, I am really pointing out to the House that the Minister of Finance is asking the House to trust him because he wants to borrow $14 billion for the next year. This is the same gentleman who has had such difficulty with trust in the past week and a half, and he will have more difficulty in the future.

In completing my remarks I would say that we are vigorously fighting the Bill because we feel that the Canadian people, through their representatives in the House, are entitled to a budget and to financial information sufficient to allow them to make an intelligent decision on the Bill and not simply to hear, "We want money". We must also know how the Government will spend it and how it will pay it back.

Mr. Fisher: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My colleague and friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Berger), is an impulsive man who apologized too quickly. I do not know what is unparliamentary about asking the Hon. Member for Simcoe North if he knows how to add two and two.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Hon. Members should really not abuse the provisions of the Standing Orders to rise on fictitious points of order, if I may say so.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I intend to address my remarks to the amendment before us, particularly to suggest some reasons the Government might be well advised to support the amendment. In other words, we must ask what the committee will discuss.

Here are some ideas which might be of use to Hon. Members opposite. First, I think the whole world would accept the fact that many countries are in serious trouble, including Canada, because we have been spending more than we can afford. It is a simple fact and there is no question about it. However, what will we do about it? We have come to a point now at which the Government is suddenly asking the people of Canada to agree to increased borrowing of $19 billion so that it can look after expenses it foresees in the next three or four months. The danger is obvious. Interest rates have barely started moving downward in the past six or seven months. If a $19 billion load is suddenly thrown on the people of Canada, it would cause interest rates to rise again, which is the basic cause of inflation. In the interest of the people of Canada, and the whole world for that matter, I hope that the Government allows time so that ordinary laymen may put forward a few common sense suggestions which might alleviate our concerns.

Just as a teaser, I will put forward one or two suggestions. First, three years ago, in the Standing Committee on Finance, which was dealing with interest rates, an idea was presented that if the Government were to continue borrowing, then the high interest rates which the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance were requesting should not be allowed, and that there should be new and innovative ideas with regard to borrowing which might appeal to a large section of the Canadian public. I will just state these as thoughts to be considered on their merits by the ordinary layman speaking quietly in committee. I would like to hear reactions from the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada.

The Committee of which I spoke, having been set up three years ago, was cut off after the election in the spring of 1980, and the Government has refused to set up any similar committee since then. We will face the awful decision of destroying our little chance of survival if we do not consider this simple idea: if a Government bond is to be issued, why should it not be issued at a rate according to the value of money, or about 3 per cent? A rider could be attached to ensure an indexing of the rate and to ensure that the principal would be indexed at the end of each year based on inflation. Then purchasers would be guaranteed true returns on their investments. Several hundred thousand Canadians who buy bonds primarily for security might realize that this is a technique to stop inflation from rising too fast and also to reduce the demand on people for taxes now and in the future. It might also keep interest rates down, which is our biggest worry across the country as we try to get on our feet again. That is a simple suggestion and it should be considered. I do not expect that $19 billion would be coming forward in this particular offer. As I mentioned, such a proposal was accepted.

Why should we not consider another proposal? We should compare our charts with what the Americans have been doing since last July. The Americans are not making any big fuss about borrowing money. They are quietly doing what the Bank of Canada Act allows us to do here, but we are not doing it. If we compare the figures of a year ago with those of today, we find that the money supply is the same. However, the American money supply has been rising steadily since last July. Of course, there is the odd dip in the weekly accounts, but, generally speaking, the Americans have decided to use the money supply approach instead of borrowing. It will work to reduce inflation as long as there is an unused labour supply, unused plant capacity and slow circulation of money. Those are the three elements. I think that in the quietness of committee, we might be able to persuade the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance officials to consider this alternative, rather than frightening the daylights out of the entire country with a $19 billion request for money in the next four or five months.

The two ideas I just mentioned are based on ideas put forward in the Standing Committee in 1979. For evidence of the effect of a standing committee of the House, one should consider the interest rate charts of the Bank of Canada. One would find that the minute such a committee was appointed and began to ask questions of the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance, the interest rate stopped rising, and that was true throughout a four-month period. The minute a new Government was formed which refused to let the Committee continue sitting, the interest rates fell, and then rose to a record high. I am suggesting that if a such committee were sitting, it would have a much more salutory effect on the Bank of Canada and Department of Finance officials than anything we could do.

I want to conclude by simply pointing out that now is the time to reconsider. We faced the same problem 25 years ago in Parliament. The difficulties were not nearly as immense as today. We set up a Royal Commission under the chairmanship of Dana Porter, which reported in 1964. This Royal Commission's Report has sat idle on the shelves of the Government ever since. I have asked several questions about this Report over the years and have had no response. Our starting place in that committee would be to read this Report which is sensible, common sense and has many ideas that could slowly speed up our exit from the deep recession in which we find ourselves.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, a few years ago the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated that he had "wrestled inflation to the ground." Unfortunately, I guess he has never made a statement that was more misleading than that, because since that period of time we have seen one of the most inflationary periods in Canadian history. I guess a decision has to be made which comes first, inflation or high interest rates. Inflation causes high interest rates; interest rates cause inflation. And just like the chicken and the egg, which comes first? Actually, we have to realize that the Government is really the only body in Canada that can do anything about either one. Businesses and Canadian citizens can all work away at it, but unless the Government establishes the climate, there is no way that we can keep either one down or keep either one in place.

I well remember, before I came into the House of Commons, that I was told then that if ever the period arrived when the inflation factor was over 4 per cent, the country was going to be in serious difficulty. Here we are a number of years later, and the inflation rate is well over 4 per cent. If we could get the inflation factor down to 4 per cent, we would be doing well.

There is absolutely no way that we are ever going to get inflation down with the present Government policies. We should realize that the last number of years have been really good years in the Canadian economy, better than perhaps we have ever experienced, and yet our national debt has increased more during that period of time than it ever has before in Canadian history. The debt cost today is considerably greater, one and one half times greater, than the budget was when the present Prime Minister took office. So this should really tell Canadians what is happening.

Governor Bouey of the Bank of Canada made a statement that I agree with, that those people who invest money have a right to have a return on it, and if the interest rate is not over the inflationary factor then they are not getting any return on their investment. Therefore it is of paramount importance that inflation be held down as well as interest rates because of the fact that interest rates will kill us. The person who is investing money would be just as well off if we had an inflation factor of, say, 1 or 2 per cent, and he was getting 5 per cent on his money. He would probably make a greater return on his money in that kind of situation than he is at the present time.

I believe that at the present time the number one villain in Canada is high interest rates. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) has just told the House what effect high interest rates have on our Canadian way of life. For instance, when we have a Government that is exceeding its expenditures this year and will have to borrow money, probably $30 billion, $35 billion or $40 billion next year just to operate, and if it makes the same mistake next year that it made this year, then certainly we will have a deficit in the $40 billion bracket.

Mr. Speaker, you will remember that this year when we started out we were going to have a $10.6 billion deficit, then it got to $17 billion, then up to $23 billion, then to $26 or $27 billion, and it could well be up to $30 billion before we are through. So if we miss it by $20 billion next year, it means that we are at $50 billion, because the Government now says that it will need to have a $30 billion deficit next year.

This is why we are in such serious times. The role that the Bank of Canada plays in establishing the weekly Thursday prime rate is not the only influence that the Government has on interest rates. As I said, its deficit spending and its massive borrowing is creating a situation whereby too many Governments, corporations and individuals are chasing the too few dollars that are up for borrowing. The end result is that this competition in the borrowing market forces interest rates to spiral upwards. The results of high interest rates have been devastating for Canadians, for small businesses, for farmers, for consumers and for home owners.

There are farmers who do not know how they are going to be able to finance putting their crops in the ground this spring. That is a very, very serious situation that the Government has done nothing whatsoever to face. Countless thousands of Canadians have lost their homes or have forestalled the purchasing of a new or older home because of the unpredictability of interest rates. Thousands of small businesses and individuals have been forced into bankruptcy; and unknown thousands of others have simply closed the door and walked away. These victims are not reported in the bankruptcy statistics but, if they were, the totals would be considerably higher.

This present Government has no idea of exactly how much money it owes. The gross debt is estimated at about $140 billion. Crown corporation debt is another $55 billion. In addition, the Government is using, to meet current spending obligations, the almost $50 billion that public servants, RCMP and Armed Forces have contributed to their pension plans. Simple arithmetic tells us that these three areas total almost $250 billion in liabilities.

I have said on other occasions that the Government should not be administering the pension funds of civil servants, RCMP and Armed Forces personel. These funds should be removed entirely from the general revenues of the Government and placed in the hands of trustees who will ensure that the funds are administrated wisely and well. I cite as examples of good trusteeship some of the pension plans in the private sector where these funds are invested in blue chip investments which bring handsome returns, and at the same time generate some economic activity in the community and in the nation. This is not a new solution to a problem. This is just the practical application of common sense. For years the Government paid a pitance in interest to these pension contributions, 4 per cent per annum. It is considerably higher now but still far less than these massive pools of capital could earn in the marketplace, invested wisely by trustees.

I said earlier that the Government really does not know how much it owes. Can any Member on the Treasury benches tell me what the Government's obligations are in contingent liabilities? Can any Member on the Treasury benches tell me what long-term low-interest loans to other nations, some of them hostile to our way of life, are costing Canadians? Can any Government Minister tell me the Government's response to the Auditor General's charge that about $4 billion of these loans ought to be written off and considered as gifts or outright grants? Our spending is out of control. The Auditor General has told us that, and we have no reason to believe that the Government has been able to bring it under control.

We have a foreign aid bill in the ballpark of $2 billion. One million dollars is dispersed in multilateral aid through the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the United Nations and so on. The other $1 billion is parcelled out in bilateral aid by CIDA, which has almost 1,100 employees in red brick skyscrapers in Hull, and about 55 people out in the field. I ask you, how can one administer a foreign aid program effectively sitting on you-know-what over in Hull? Better that we should funnel these funds through the churches, the Unitarian Services, the Red Cross, rather than just letting them trickle down through CIDA programs.

I would like to go on, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps I will do so at a later stage in the debate.

Borrowing Authority

• (1750)

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a group of people in my riding who are unemployed. This group includes 4,600 people in Port Alberni who are on active unemployment insurance claims. This Bill will give the Government the power to borrow an additional $19 billion without giving any firm indication of whether that money will protect the jobs of Canadians or whether there is something in that $19 billion which will put the 4,600 in Port Alberni and 6,200 in Nanaimo who are on active unemployment insurance claims back to work.

There is nothing in the borrowing authority Bill to give any indication that present jobs will be protected or that meaningful new ones will be created. That is why this Party is moving that the borrowing authority Bill go to a committee so that we can deal with it in a concrete way to find out where the money is going. Will it be thrown away, as many Canadians suspect, or will there be something for the NDP to support in terms of protecting the incomes of Canadians?

The Organization of Unemployed Workers in Port Alberni forwarded a brief to the Leader of our Party when I was in Port Alberni last Friday. I would like to outline some of the complaints of this organization. This group speaks from a great deal of experience about job-creation programs and their effect in that Valley.

They call job-creation programs alphabet soup. Those who have actively tried to follow job-creation programs will understand the significance of that term. We have had the CCDP for some time, basically a program of summer employment for young people, women and native people. That is the Canada Community Development Project.

There is a large trade union movement in the Alberni Valley, including the IWA, and the Canadian paper workers' union. The per capita income in that city was in the top ten throughout the seventies. We now have the CCDP program which pays $175 per week.

We have an EBAP Program, the Employment Bridging Assistance Program, which was sloppily introduced by the federal and provincial Governments. They neglected to discuss that program with the trade union movement which was involved in the forest industry and which was used to working in that industry with productive employment, producing a product which was sold around the world.

The EBAP Program was to pay $300 a week to workers. That did not work very well. Most of the work to be done was in the forest industry, working alongside union members earning considerably more. The companies felt no obligation to supplement what the federal and provincial Governments were doing under the program to create employment in the forest industry. It hopes to create additional employment in the future by improving our forest base through reforestation, silviculture, thinning and better forest management in general. Well, that is not happening yet.

The latest scheme is NEED, the New Economic Expansion Development Program. I would like to outline the result of the first application under the program in Port Alberni. I remind Hon. Members that there are 4,600 active claimants of unemployment insurance and 1,000 families on welfare in Port Alberni. The NEED Program is supposed to allow people to gain some unemployment insurance benefit weeks so that they can go back on UIC. The first application from the Alberni-Clayoquot regional district, calling for eight jobs, was turned down. There are 5,600 people in that Valley seeking jobs, and eight jobs were turned down because they did not meet the criteria of the NEED Program.

An Hon. Member: The nerd program.

Mr. Miller: I don't know what those initials would stand for.

Mr. Epp: They stand for Liberal.

Mr. Miller: That is certainly the reputation that all of these job-creation programs are gaining in my riding, and other ridings I suspect. They were turned down because they did not meet the criteria of the program.

This would have provided six jobs in ski development to improve the facility for tourism, bringing economic wealth and health to that ski area and the community, drawing more tourists during the winter season. Those jobs would have lasted into the summer months, providing six people with the opportunity to get off welfare and into employment, albeit poorly paid employment. You do not go very far on $200 a week. Most people would be better off on welfare. However, they are prepared to go back to work because they do not want to be on welfare or on unemployment insurance. They want to be productive workers in their communities, providing for their families. As I said, it was turned down.

Another job was to help initiate and co-ordinate the Industrial Labour Adjustment Program which Port Alberni was fortunate enough to get. It is the only city in Western Canada to have that project. The NEED Program would not hire one more person to co-ordinate that program and help the committee develop some economic plans and jobs.

Third, the regional district wanted one person to help co-ordinate their activities to try to create jobs in the Valley. We have none of those jobs. The bureaucracy and the criteria will not allow meaningful jobs.

The unemployed workers have published a scathing attack on job-creating programs, an attack I would like to go into in some detail. It reflects many of the problems that I have had as a Member of Parliament in trying to deal with those programs to see that the people are paid on time and have access to the program.

The union is frustrated by its inability to get help and protection from the job-creation programs, with the kind of job-creation approach this Liberal Government is taking. We do not see that this $19 billion will improve that situation in Canada.

The Organization of Unemployed Workers asked certain things in this brief. They are asking to continue being represented by the union from which they are laid off so that they can have some protection under the job-creation programs and can find jobs which they are prepared and willing to take. They are asking for some expansion of public sector employment opportunities through meaningful work projects within the community which will give well-paid, meaningful, long-term employment opportunities.

They are asking for the industry to participate in funding some projects that they are responsible for, particularly in the forest industry. Why should Government come along with job-creation programs to support the corporate sector, which is quite willing to lay off more and more people each year with the excuse in its rationalization that it is making us competitive? Basically what it is doing is making them competitive and throwing Canadians out of work.

I have a petition from the Organization of Unemployed Workers which I will table in the House tomorrow when petitions are called. Because of the frustration that this organization is feeling, representing as it does the work force in Port Alberni, it is calling for unemployment insurance benefits to be extended, not because these people are particularly interested in staying on unemployment, but they have seen the failure of job-creation and the failure of the federal Government to deal with unemployment in a meaningful way. They want unemployment insurance benefits to be increased to 90 per cent of their insurable level so that they can maintain their homes and families. The job-creation program is becoming more and more of an obvious failure. The budget we are expecting to be brought down and the $19 billion we are being asked to approve had better deal with the problems of the workers in this country.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

THE ADMINISTRATION—ROLE OF ALASTAIR GILLESPIE. (B) USE OF FUNDS ALLOCATED TO NOVA SCOTIA

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue on the theme of the questions which I asked the Minister of Energy (Mr. Chrétien) last Thursday, and to elaborate a little concerning the overt attempts, in my view, by officials to circumvent the Parliamentary guidelines of good behaviour in order to provide an artificial legitimacy for the payments to be made to Alastair Gillespie and Associates in this project.

The Minister, upon reflection, Mr. Speaker, should realize that these efforts only serve to implicate the Government more deeply in the special treatment, access and favouritism, or whatever you want to call it, towards a former Cabinet colleague in relation to this Nova Scotia energy project. Indeed, the oil substitution agreement itself, as part of the National Energy Program, was stretched in order to accommodate that kind of project which Alastair Gillespie espoused. When efforts were made to alter the submission to Treasury Board, the guidelines were not being followed, they were being circumvented in advance. Anyone looking at this situation, without extreme prejudice, can see this very clearly.

The people of Cape Breton and of Nova Scotia are sick and tired, Mr. Speaker, of being the victims of rhetoric and job proposals by a series of Liberal Cabinet Ministers and the former defeated Premier. A quick review of Liberal promises to Cape Breton reveals that the defeated Premier of Nova Scotia, now Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) traded for years on the promises that they were going to build a new steel mill at Gabarouse, or to use the argot of the industry, a Greenfields project. After milking this for all the political capital it was worth, they forgot about it.

They also raised people's hopes in Cape Breton with another energy-related project, the celebrated Shaheen oil refinery. Land was expropriated at enormous cost but nothing happened here, either.

The most recent piece of "puffery" from the Deputy Prime Minister was his announcement that a large steel fabricating facility was being considered for the port Hawkesbury area, which would supply 1,000 jobs. When questioned by reporters for more details, and after it was pointed out to him that such a plant was already available in nearby Pictou County in my constituency, where over 1,000 people also needed work in an existing plant, the Deputy Prime Minister, said in his usual obfuscatory manner, "Well, it is only a concept". Some concept, Mr. Speaker. Some track record.

The persistent raising of the hopes and aspirations of the people of Cape Breton by the Liberals, while shirking their responsibility to produce something practical, is costing them their political credibility there. I am sure that recent private polls have driven that home to them very, very forcibly.

Recent international pricing developments, as well, regarding petroleum products, are now showing the people of Nova Scotia and, indeed, of Canada, how bankrupt and ill advised the federal Government's National Energy Program really is. The revelations about the liquefaction of coal and the details of this project are just other examples of the latest Liberal blunder. The Province of Nova Scotia, naturally, was anxious to participate in this pilot project, but, as usual, the primary funding, the concept, the impetus, and much of the gain, was designed by the Liberals to benefit themselves. Surely, the Cabinet documents indicate that knowledgeable officials in the Department of Energy knew from the start that this project had little chance of bringing any practical benefits to the people of Cape Breton.

The former defeated Premier of Nova Scotia, incidentally, living up to his nickname of "Gabby", intervened the other day in the House and asked a question designed to provoke me. He asked the question of his colleague, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey). I would like to say at this time by way of a riposte that I could remind him of the details involving a "page" from his past, and a well-known trip he made to Toronto to secure legal advice when he was Premier of Nova Scotia from a prominent Toronto lawyer in order to discourage a reporter who was interested in the incident. And later on, if I recall, a similar intervention was made with the CBC to forestall another fascinating piece of research. However, I am always willing to elaborate on any detail or questions involving my conduct, both public and private. If the former Premier wishes to elaborate on this, I am sure that people would be interested.

However, as the late John Diefenbaker used to say, when you are after big game, you should not be diverted by rabbits. I want to go back to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and point out that he and his predecessors, both of whom have had legal training, must realize upon mature reflection what a clumsy subterfuge this attempt was to avoid the very proper intent of Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) guidelines to regulate the conduct of this Parliament. He must be given credit for that. Both of them would gain in stature if they would simply admit this.

Speaking in the House last Thursday, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made a point of referring to the sacrifices that a former Cabinet minister makes in public life. As he put it so colloquially, they should not have to go to the Sparks Street Mall with a cup in order to earn a living. I think it is a fair comment that neither the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources nor his predecessor could have gained any more out of life in the private sector than they did by coming into public service. I venture to say that instead of making sacrifices, they are the net beneficiaries, as many of us are, of entering public life. To cry poor mouth after having served the country under these circumstances is a pretty artificial way of gaining sympathy.

While on the subject of the private sector, I must say that it is strange indeed that Mr. Gillespie, apparently a knowledgeable businessman with a lot of versatility, chose his own department and his own deputy minister to pursue his business initiatives. One would have thought he would have pursued some of the other myriad and imaginative ways there are of making money.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) has taken issue with some of the answers provided him. I certainly wish to take issue with some of the comments he has made today. In particular, he made reference to things the officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources had done in terms of circumventing guidelines established by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

I wish to refute all the arguments made by the Hon. Member for Central Nova and point out to him that the money contained in the Canada-Nova Scotia agreement of 1977, $9.2 million, was provided to a bank account in Halifax, and was to be administered independently by two individuals representing the Government of Canada and two individuals representing the Province of Nova Scotia. An independent joint management committee was administering the money.

It is sad that the Hon. Member for Central Nova dismisses, as the interim Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) has, the benefits of such a project to industrial Cape Breton. Aside from the 2,000 or 2,500 jobs that might be created in the coal mines, there is the economic multiplier of three or four which brings it up to 7,000 or 8,000 jobs. As he ought to know that that is very important in industrial Cape Breton.

Notwithstanding the jobs, there is the issue of self-sufficiency. That 40,000 to 60,000 barrels of oil per day is being displaced is not a serious thing in the Canadian context, but when you look at it from a Nova Scotia perspective it is great indeed.

It ought to be noted that when the Hon. Member for Central Nova was minister of Regional and Economic Expansion in the former Government, he did not provide any money to help the Donkin mine proceed. When Sysco came looking for financial assistance from the federal Government, what money did he provide for the people of Cape Breton? Not one cent. He was a Conservative minister, dealing with a Conservative Government in Nova Scotia. What deal did he get for the coal miners of Cape Breton on the price of coal sold to the Nova Scotia Power Corporation? He got nothing. He has got nothing for them for a good many years, not only while he was a minister, but while he has been a Member of Parliament. Where has he been for 22 months while this issue has been going on? Where has the Hon. Member for Nova Scotia been—asleep?

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE—IMPORTATION OF PORNOGRAPHIC VIDEO CASSETTES. (B) APPLICATION OF TAX WRITE-OFFS—REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE AMENDED

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, on February 14, I rose in the House to ask a question concerning the importation of pornographic material into Canada, and I was not satisfied with the answer I obtained from the Minister.

I should like to point out that the advent of mass access to video cassette players has opened the floodgates for pornography in Canada. Since the introduction of the home video cassette recorder in 1975, the video equipment market has expanded by at least 300 per cent. One can only guess the effects this has had on the pornography industry in Canada.

Recent estimates of the dollar value of the industry in North America range from a low of $1 billion, according to The Globe and Mail of last July 6, to a high of $50 billion per annum, as given by a spokesman of the special anti-pornography squad of the Ontario Provincial Police. This is one of the few police forces in Canada which has a special squad to handle pornography. I think it is very commendable.

It has been estimated that 65 per cent of the American film industry is now engaged in the production of pornography. Public outrage at the exploitive nature of pornographic material being distributed has risen at a comparable rate. The demonstrations against the Red Hot Video outlets in Vancouver indicate the depth of this public anger. While the illegality of the fire-bombing of some of these outlets must be condemned, we must not ignore the frustration felt by the public with the inactivity of various levels of Government and their paralytic inability to control the growth of this industry.

Many people question why we should in fact control the growth of pornography in Canada. The answer to this is very simple. Films, magazines and other media have a powerful effect on the formation of public attitudes and morals. If people regularly see the depiction of immoral behaviour on television, or in other forms, they will soon take this to be the norm and, therefore, acceptable.

According to the present obscenity section of the Criminal Code, obscenity is judged "according to contemporary community standards". This leads to a Catch 22 situation where community standards are continually dropping as more pornographic material is introduced. It all amounts to a gradual but relentless erosion of public morals.

While it does not appear to be the duty of Government to set down a strict moral code which all citizens must follow, as in present day Iran, it is the responsibility of Government to protect the potential victims of such exploitive material. In this sense I am concerned in particular about women and children who are portrayed in material which is not only sexually exploitive but also contains acts of violence in conjunction with gratuitous sex. Obviously "kiddy porn" and violent pornography involving such acts as rape are clearly unacceptable to society at large and, equally clear, it is the duty of Government to control the malignant spread of such destructive material.

At this stage the Government is failing dismally in controlling the growth of the pornography industry in Canada; 95 per cent of all pornography is imported from the United States. Only about 5 per cent of these imports are intercepted at the border. Most commonly, once one video cassette is smuggled into the country, copies are made at either licit or elicit dubbing houses, and the resulting cassettes are distributed to retailers and/or consumers.

Because of the slight possibility of actually being caught and prosecuted, the distribution of these cassettes is a low-risk, high-profit investment. There can be little doubt that organized crime has entered into this lucrative business.

In reply to my question in the House on February 14, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) acknowledged that his Department had been less than effective in stemming this growing flood of pornographic material into the country, and indicated that the "Customs and Excise division, took action in this area and banned the entry of cassettes considered by a large majority of Canadians to be immoral". This is simply not good enough. When only one cassette in 20 is intercepted at the border, and when each cassette that gets through customs can be so easily copied, then the Department, and more specifically the Minister, must do more than simply ban the entry of offensive material. He must take action to enforce that ban.

In fact, not only are the efforts of the Department of National Revenue inadequate and ineffective, but the current income tax structure could actually encourage the establishment of a domestic pornography industry, up until now something we have been able to avoid. Because the generous tax write-off provision for films produced in Canada does not differentiate between pornographic and non-pornographic material, some domestic producers could enter the field and could in fact use the resulting films as part of their Canadian content quota in order to satisfy CRTC regulations. Instead of inadvertently encouraging the establishment of a domestic pornography industry by incentives such as these, we should be ensuring that there is no domestic production at all, as well as addressing the difficult task of eliminating the importation of pornographic material.

I realize that it may be well nigh impossible to prevent the importation of "hard core" pornography. However, I think that the Government should at least make a highly visible effort to control its importation to stem the tide. In the area of smuggling of illegal drugs, we commonly use undercover agents and are able to make large drug "busts" that are a very visible disincentive to drug traffickers. We should be able to mount similar operations to discourage those who import pornography, and set an example by our treatment of those who are caught. Good long prison sentences and heavy fines for those convicted of smuggling pornography would be a clear deterrent to importers, and would thereby make this trade much less attractive. We must demonstrate the resolve of the Government to stop, or at least curtail this immoral and exploitive trade. That is what the Government has so far failed to demonstrate.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as noted in the Minister of National Revenue's (Mr. Bussières) response in the House on February 14 concerning this issue, the Department is taking all necessary measures to enforce the laws of the country as strictly as possible. I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that, in the case of articles such as video cassettes where the contents are not immediately apparent to a cursory examination, the costs involved in making a detailed examination of every importation would be prohibitive. The Department is aware that some importers are attempting to import material by clandestine means to escape detection, and it is taking all possible action to apprehend this material at a reasonable cost to the taxpayer and with a minimum of disruption to legitimate importers.

In this respect, the Department conducts spot checks on a sample basis of importations of this type of material, as well as examination of any material of a suspicious nature. The Department also conducts examinations on the basis of information provided by law enforcement agencies or other sources.

If the Department were to attempt to conduct detailed examinations of all importations of video cassettes, video tapes, films, video games or similar articles, several hundred additional customs officers would be required across the country.

With respect to the taxation side of the matter, I must advise that where a film is acquired by a taxpayer for the purpose of gaining income therefrom, the Income Tax Act and regulations provide for a claim of capital cost allowance at the rate of 100 per cent of the cost, if the film is a certified feature production or a certified short production, and 30 per cent of the cost of other films.

Certification is mainly to the effect that a film has the required Canadian economic content, and this determination is the responsibility of the Department of Communications. At this stage the subject matter would become evident, and if it appeared to be pornographic the advice of the Department of Justice could be sought. Revenue Canada's responsibility is to apply the Income Tax Act and regulations as enacted. The Department of Finance is responsible for proposing amendments to the Income Tax Act and regulations.

BANKS AND BANKING—RESCHEDULING OF LOANS TO SMALL BUSINESSES AND FARMERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, any Member of Parliament who is fortunate enough to represent an agricultural constituency of Canada, or has an agricultural component in his or her constituency will be well aware of the incredible pressures that food producers are under these days. Whether one is talking about a cattle, hog or sheep operation, or poultry farms, market gardening or wheat farming—no matter what the situation—by and large, the agricultural sector in this country is experiencing pressure unprecedented since the 1930s.

• (1820)

Back in the 1930s, various provincial Governments, using the legislation available to them, passed legislation to provide the much needed relief to this sector. While it was a pittance, it was accepted by those in receipt as at least a gesture of good faith. It eventually became necessary for the federal Government to change it. In 1934, the Government of Canada introduced the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934. That Act enabled pressure to be brought to bear on various lending institutions to assist the farmers of Canada to stay on their land.

I want to take a few moments to read from Bill C-653, which is before the House. It is an Act to revive the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. It reads as follows:

> The purpose of this bill is to revive the moribund provisions of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, which provide a simple and inexpensive procedure for farmers to rearrange their affairs when cash flow becomes insufficient to meet current obligations as they come due.
> The Act as framed is only applicable where two-thirds of a farmer's indebtedness was incurred before May 1935. In addition, the Act, originally general in its application, was subsequently narrowed to cover only the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The Bill would remove both of these limitations.

In my estimation, the Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson), at a time when the issue of farm bankruptcies was being raised day after day in the House, is a gesture, at least on behalf of the former Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, that there are actions and steps that could be taken by the Government in an effort to bring some semblance of security to the hardpressed farming community. It is well known right now, for example, what the banks are doing to many farmers, ranchers and food producers generally in our country.

In western Canada it is not now uncommon for the banks to go to the food producers and tell them that they will not have their traditional working capital advance unless they sell off portions of their property or operation. This means there is a flood of property, equipment and land on the market especially, in western Canada and, I suspect, in other parts of Canada as well. I speak of western Canada since I am a representative from that area and am more familiar with it.

As a result, land and property values, along with equipment values are being depressed. This brings hardship to bear on all food producers of that region. It also causes hardship to equipment dealers who are now faced with the dumping of equipment on the market. The result is a downward migration of property values and the validity of farming operations, simply because the banks are bringing this undue pressure to bear in an attempt to maintain their own cash flows.

I believe we now have a situation in which the long term viability and profits of the banks must be considered in relation to the long term credibility of Canada's food producers. I would be the first to admit that both are important, but it is not an issue of one or the other. We have just received annual reports of various banks in Canada which indicate healthy profit returns which, while not excessive, are up to $300 million.

As Members of Parliament we are all aware of the number of bankruptcies being faced by food producers in this country, let alone those myriads of food producers who are simply forced to walk away from their hopes, dreams, and the ability to create a fundamental aspect of Canadian life.

Normally one would go on and simply identify the critical nature of the situation, and those areas where the Government has refused to act. I am not able to do that today, because the Government has taken the first step toward solving this very critical problem. It has introduced, through the personage of Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex Bill C-653, which would essentially resolve the situation, in the short term. It would allow food producers to stay on the land and continue producing food. It would adjust their financial affairs through a quasi-judicial process, enabling this most critical sector of our economy to continue.

I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) during a recent Question Period, why not bring this Bill forward? I am certain that Members of the Opposition would allow passage of the Bill without debate, because of the important role it would play. It would be a simple matter for the Government to bring the Bill from first reading to second reading. We will put it through all stages of the House with perhaps no debate at all. We could deal with it in an afternoon, because I do not think a single Member of the House does not appreciate the seriousness of this matter. I encourage the Government to take this necessary step, and introduce this critical legislation as quickly as possible.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, all of us are very deeply concerned about the effects of high interest rates, and the practice being followed, not only by the banks, but also by lending institutions, in scheduling debt, or in asking businessmen and farmers to repay their debts. I myself raised the issue with the Canadian Banker's Association during the pre-budget consultation held with them in December. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) also raised this matter with them at that time, as well as on previous occasions.

The banks have shown considerable concern about keeping businessmen and farmers afloat during this difficult period. I think the real, overall cure to this huge problem is to ensure that interest rates in general come down. We have heard some good news along that line recently, as I am sure the Hon. Member would agree. This week prime rates were at 11.25 per cent; one year mortgage rates were at 11.75 per cent; and our official Bank of Canada rate was at 9.48 per cent. This is possibly because our inflation rate is coming down. Prices actually fell instead of rising in December and January. That was the first time, in a long time, we had seen that phenomenon. Our annualized 12 month rate, from January to January, is 8.3 per cent, and our six month rate, from June to January, is 6 per cent.

American rates are also dropping. This week, six major American banks announced primes of 10.5 per cent. These are the key indicators to our people that relief is coming.

We have our own house in order. We are beginning to bring under control the forces which push interest rates up. We are allowing ourselves room, within our own economy, to benefit from foreign improvements, such as the drop in the United States prime rate. However, we are still concerned about specific individuals while this is taking place.

The previous Minister of Finance set up a special system to review complaints about interest rates from businessmen and farmers. In answer to the Hon. Member the other day, the current Minister of Finance made a pledge that he would take specific cases to the banks, as well as to the Inspector General for Banks, asking them to review these harsh circumstances once again. The Minister raised the question of the Private Members' Bill of the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson). We have taken note of it, and have started to act on this side to give both personal and general attention to the whole question of interest rates. We have a system in place to take care of individuals, and we have a general attack on the underlying causes of high interest rates.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed from Monday, February 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, a recent poll indicated that the general public is becoming more and more convinced that the present Government has neither the ability nor the will to address effectively the basic problems threatening our economy. The several attempts made by the Government to produce a budget that would deal with our problems have proved to be abject disasters. Rather than bringing new hope and confidence to Canadians, what the Government has done has resulted in ever-deepening frustration and fear.

In November, 1981 the Government introduced one of the most complex and controversial budgets in Canadian history. Even the Government itself was disgusted with it. No less than 162 income tax changes and 56 changes in other tax related statutes were proposed. Subsequent budgets in June and October, 1982 altered parts of the November budget and proposed new measures.

Bill C-139 was not introduced until December 7, 1982, more than a full year after the November, 1981 budget. In December, 1982 it received a one-day debate. In January, 1983 Bill C-139 was debated for one-half day. In spite of the proclaimed importance of the measures contained in Bill C-139, the Government decided to debate Bills to reduce the indexing of Public Service pensions, Family Allowance benefits and Old Age Security pensions. Then to make things even worse the Government brought in the Canagrex Bill for debate.

The Government now insists that Bill C-139 be passed with dispatch because it claims that no income tax refunds can be paid until it has been passed. If this is true, why has the Government insisted on dealing with the other measures to which I have alluded instead of dealing with Bill C-139? Perhaps the Ministry and officials have been as confused and uncertain of the ramifications of the measures proposed as has the general public. Perhaps the Government and the Minister were not prepared to explain those ramifications. Could it be that the Government delayed it, as it did, so the Government could use the guillotine once again to silence the Opposition? If this Bill must be passed before refunds are paid, how could the Government reduce Family Allowances before the legislation was passed?

There is another question. Why has the Government used other means to delay the issuing of refunds? Interest on refunds is not paid until after April 30, nor is it paid between the date that the refund is processed and the date that it is received and cashed by the taxpayer. Yet another question is, why were tax forms mailed out a month later than usual? Many taxpayers were forced to have special forms not hitherto required, further delaying their file.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stated that early passage of the legislation will help Revenue Canada get on with the job of processing the 1982 returns. He concluded; "I therefore look forward to a speedy debate".

Bill C-139 is 300 pages thick. This House is urged to give it speedy passage after long months of hesitation, delay and confusion on the part of the Government. Bill C-139 will increase the tax burden on many Canadians through its increased taxation of employee benefits, its measures with respect to the income averaging, accrued interest income, the abolition of general averaging provisions and others. Many other taxpayers will be seriously affected by provisions that remove incentives under the guise of closing loopholes. In other words, the Government is so determined to extract every penny possible from the taxpayer that anything goes.

The former Minister of Finance pronounced that the budget was based on equity, justice and renewal. In actual fact, it fails all three tests and many of the tax measures in Bill C-139 are inequitable, unjust and oppressive.

I believe that action is required in several different areas. First, tax laws should be made understandable for the ordinary Canadian, including myself. Presently, no one seems to know, understand or be able to determine the jargon of the Income Tax Act. Second, there is the need to recognize the rights of Canadians to manage their own affairs rather than having the state confiscate the bulk of their income, leaving them only a little pocket money. Third, a review of the tax structure is essential to ensure equity and justice for all. I think back through the years to the many times that we were told there would be a review of the tax structure. Unfortunately, that review always seems to result in higher taxes. I suggest that is not good enough for the people at this time.

Time is needed to examine this Bill carefully in order to approve what is good, acceptable and equitable and to delete what is contrary to the best interests of Canada and Canadians. Therefore, I suggest there should be ample time made available to give thorough study to this entire tax Bill and, due to its complexity, it will take a considerable length of time to complete the review and to bring in the changes that will be necessary in order to give justice to the Canadian people.

I appreciate the opportunity to take part in this debate today. Certainly, as the day progresses, I am sure that many other proposals will be made that will further delete the unacceptable portions of the Bill and make it more acceptable to the Canadian people.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself wholeheartedly with the remarks of the distinguished Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson), who is one of the more senior Members of the House.

I cannot think of any Bill, nor do I believe the Hon. Member, considering his long history in the House, could think of a Bill other than the one presently under discussion, Bill C-139, which more graphically represents the mess created by the Government in this country. This is evident in the provisions contained in this massive and almost incomprehensible tax Bill. Never has the Parliament of Canada been so insulted by having to attend to consider, in a comprehensible way, a tax measure which, in effect, amounts to two budgets with three amending financial statements.

I will not refer to all of the budgets because there have been so many. The former Minister of Finance presented a budget in November of 1981, an amendment in December of 1981, and his second real budget in June of 1982. Then the financial statements of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) were announced in October of 1982 and his latest statement was heard just the other day. However, all of their predictions as to estimates of revenues and expenditures have been wrong.

As the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East mentioned, this legislation comes down to a Bill comprising 297 pages, introduced in the House as late as December 7, 1982, taking approximately 380 days for the officials even to write the Bill. Then just before the Christmas recess and after we came back, the Minister of Finance had the temerity and the gall to suggest that Members of Parliament should sweep all these problems aside, without proper understanding of what is involved.

I will point out the many provisions in the Bill in general because there is not enough time in the ten minutes allotted to me under our present rules to go into them in detail. Because Hon. Members are restricted to ten minutes, it is impossible to discuss the Bill meaningfully, even in general. However, to return to the subject, the Government, in its fifteenth year, having come to power in 1968 with a budget of some $10 billion, is now estimating a budget of $90 billion, with a deficit projected by the Minister of Finance of almost $30 billion before the fiscal year is over. This sum is more than the total budgets—not deficits—of all the Provinces except Ontario and Quebec. In fact, half of their budgets could be added and it would still not amount to $30 billion.

Hon. Members are confronted with this Bill, which is to produce revenue, in the face of the billions of dollars which have been wrongly estimated. It is no wonder that many people in and out of this House are saying that the situation is incomprehensible and must be changed.

In a speech last week in Ottawa, J. Lyman MacInnis, the senior partner of Touche, Ross and Company, President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario, said: "The Canadian Income Tax Act is an unmitigated mess". Then he said: "I started out by saying that income tax is an unmitigated mess. The reason I say that is because it is incomprehensible".

I am prepared to agree with him and would venture a guess that only the minority of a minority in the House, not the majority but, rather, those who are really involved in the study of tax law, can even begin to understand the smorgasbord of legislation contained in the Bill which will smother Canadians in increased taxes, not to mention the red tape involved in figuring them out.

There are 24 items covered in the Bill as follows: auto standby charges; life insurance and annuities; Small Business Bonds; soft costs; RRSP interest deductibility; IAACs; work-in-progress; capital gain reserves; metric measures; principal residence provisions; retiring allowance provisions; housing loans; six and five re. tax indexation; forward averaging; small business lower tax limit and loss of cumulative dividend account; corporate surtax; iron ore processing; DPSPs; 12.5 per cent small business distributions tax; 5 per cent reduction on withholding tax rescinded; director's liability; confidentiality; charitable foundations; capital cost allowance reduction.

Another item which is not specifically listed is the fuel compensation tax which would put Canadian shippers and the aviation industry at a disadvantage when competing with our American brothers or neighbours. This tax has to be removed before this Bill can proceed.

• (1120)

Many years ago the then Minister of Transport said one of the most profound things ever said in this House when talking about transportation. He said: "Transport is in a mess". That was not said by the present Minister but by one of his illustrious predecessors. That Minister of Transport was right because transportation was in a mess. Unfortunately, it is still in a mess.

What is in even more of a mess is the income tax provisions which are assaulting and insulting Canadians from coast to coast. We have very little time, Mr. Speaker, to really discuss some of the provisions of this Bill which I have mentioned. I should mention one basic and fundamental thing about these provisions. They provide no incentive to Canadians. They provide no incentive for individual Canadians to participate in the development of the fundamental resources of this land.

At this stage of our parliamentary life I suggest that Members cannot really understand or comprehend the provisions this income tax Bill comprising 297 pages and incorporating two budgets and three financial statements by two Ministers of Finance. I do not think anyone really knows what the implications of this Bill are, not even the tax people, I suggest. Incidentally, it took some 300 days to write this Bill.

I was trying to think of something even more profound to say about this Bill than the fact that it is completely incomprehensible even to the chartered accountants across this land, those chartered accountants who are very careful people. The President of the Chartered Accountants Association was defining what he meant by the Bill being incomprehensible when he said that it runs completely contrary to three fundamental tax legislation measures, the first being that it has to be clear so that taxpayers can understand it.

Taxpayers are the people who assess their own taxes, and if they do not understand the wording—and the average taxpayer cannot understand the wording of this Bill—they cannot intelligently file tax returns. When the individual taxpayer does not understand the wording of tax legislation, or even the income tax return, he does not have a reasonable chance of filing an accurate return. The average Canadian is not in a position to hire a professional for assistance because the cost of hiring that professional is not deductible. The wording of this Bill falls completely short of that fundamental principle.

The President of the Association of Chartered Accountants has suggested that there should be holding legislation while we digest the tax laws which now exist. Quite frankly, I would like to discuss some of the tax laws we now have, but I do not have the time to do so at this stage.

In conclusion, I want to leave the House with this one basic thought which illustrates the mess the Government of Canada has made of the economy of this land. If the Government cannot look after its own business, let alone its tax laws, no wonder there is such a mess and such confusion in Canada. How many Members of this House can tell me today when this session of Parliament started? I would bet not too many Members can tell me. I would bet that the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) could not tell me the date on which this Parliament started. We are in our 465th day of this Parliament which started on April 14, 1980. The Hon. Member got some help from someone behind the curtains there, and I suggest this is the first time there has been an intelligent comment from behind the curtains over on that side. The length of this Parliament is an insult to Members of Parliament and Canadian taxpayers. This Parliament has been meandering along for 465 days, starting three years ago on April 14, 1980.

I want to read a little bit of the history of another long Parliament, a long session of the Parliament in England which took place many years ago. Let me quote from "An Encyclopaedia of Parliament", written by co-authors, one of whom is presently one of our distinguished Table officers, Philip Laundy, who collaborated with Norman Wilding in the writing of this most interesting encyclopaedia of the British Parliament. At page 438 the following is stated:

> The fifth and last Parliament to be summoned by Charles I. It met on 3 November 1640, and in 1642 it took up arms against the King.

I could make a speech about what we should do in that vein around here. The paragraph continues as follows:

> It is possibly the most historic assembly ever to have sat at Westminster, and it was said of it that many thought it would never have a beginning, and afterwards that it would never have an end.

• (1125)

> During its long life, which extended over twenty years, it underwent many changes. In 1648 it was purged of those members who were too favourable to the King;—

Listen to this, Mr. Speaker. I am almost through.

> —in 1649 it abolished both the Monarchy and the House of Lords;—

We are not sure what will happen in this country.

> —it was expelled by Cromwell in 1653; recalled and expelled again in 1659; restored for the last time, with its excluded members later recalled at the end of that year; and finally dissolved on 16 March 1660.

These are the closing two sentences:

> It commenced its long existence as a formidable and enthusiastic assembly, bent upon drastic reform, the champion of the liberties of the people against the tyranny of the King. It sank eventually into corruption, ignominy, and discredit, having subverted the Constitution it had set out to uphold, and having lost many of its greatest members through death or exclusion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate my time is finished, but I think Members should take heed of the epitaph of that long term Parliament so that we do not fall into the same disfavour.

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to Bill C-139 I hope you will give me the latitude to dwell on certain aspects of the fiscal regime of the Government because they are all interrelated.

In addressing myself to this Bill, I am reminded of the words of an unknown author who said:

> Tell me today what the philosopher thinks, the university professor expounds, the schoolmaster teaches, the scholar publishes in his treatises and textbooks and I shall prophesy the conduct of individuals, the ethics of businessmen, the schemes of political leaders, the plans of economists, the pleading of lawyers, the decisions of judges, the legislation of lawmakers, the treaties of diplomats and the decisions of state a generation hence.

The author of this wisdom is unknown but history bears him out. The foundations of the present Canadian economic crisis were well laid in the sixties and the seventies. What we do economically and politically today will lay the foundations for the latter half of the eighties and the nineties and, indeed, well into the next century.

Like so many other Canadians, I am concerned about three characteristics of the foundations we are now laying in our nation. They are as follows: First, the growth and awesome complexity of the system of laws that govern our Canadian society; second, the growth of governments at all levels in this nation; third, the accumulation of public debt.

In Canada the economic distemper of the sixties and seventies has created the instability of the eighties. Our problem is a lack of productivity. We have in the past traded the pride of doing for the enjoyment of loafing. We have bound ourselves with a system of laws so complex and pervasive that initiative, entrepreneurship and collective productivity is stifled.

A very good friend of mine who is the president of a very large Canadian corporation recently told me that we as a society support a system of complex laws in every area of endeavour and particularly in the financial, business and property exchange areas of taxation. Why, he said, there are approximately 40,000 lawyers in Canada and only approximately 15,000 research scientists. I looked up the actual figures. There are 40,043 lawyers in Canada and 15,270 research scientists. In the United States there are 320,000 lawyers and 828,000 research scientists. Lawyers produce no goods and little real wealth but lots of paper. They often retard the production of wealth and establish massive, complex and intricate systems for wealth redistribution. He said we need three times as many research scientists and only half as many lawyers.

This Income Tax Act, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-139 now before this House, is an example of the complexity of the legal system under which we have to perform. This Bill is an abomination. Its 295 pages of incomprehensible gobbledygook are designed to throttle and subdue industrial and personal initiative. What greater example is there of an overly complex law than Bill C-139, the Income Tax Act, literally 295 pages of legal shackling? The Government would be very wise to lay before the Law Reform Commission of Canada a new mandate to simplify the network of laws governing the entire business sector of this country.

The capital gains tax structure must surely be dismantled immediately before it further legally imprisons all who dare to do business or own property in this land. The capital gains taxation scheme will lay upon this nation a system requiring bookkeeping and interpretation of enormous complexity and will stifle business at every opportunity.

Canada and the free world have so concentrated on the public process of wealth redistribution in the last several decades that we have lost sight of the process of wealth production. Even though scientific discoveries have given us enormous capability to produce wealth, the process of public redistribution of this wealth has indeed laid upon the production systems of the free world some terrible "disincentives". My very first speech in this House in 1979, Mr. Speaker, was concerned with the abnormal growth of governments in the free world, including Canada. Taxation to take away the productivity of the people and recycle it through the public process of distribution has gotten out of hand. Governments at all levels grew like mushrooms regardless of their political persuasions.

Canada is a prime example of this growth on all three levels. I do not mind admitting that I was a Member of the Progressive Conservative Government in a Province in which the budget increased by nine times in less than a decade. Indeed, the Saturday edition of The Globe and Mail of February 19 has a chart showing the growth of governments in Canada as a percentage of the GNP. Since 1964, a mere 18 years ago, provincial and municipal governments have grown from about 16 per cent of the GNP to approximately 28.5 per cent of the GNP. So it is not only the federal Government which has grown like a mushroom. The federal Government has jumped from about 13 per cent of the GNP to 21 per cent in 18 years.

In 1983 the growth of Government is explosive and scary. Indeed, during the current fiscal year, the total expenditures of all three levels of Government are expected to reach almost 50 per cent of the GNP. Part of it, of course, is in connection with Bill C-139. In other words, Mr. Speaker, in Canada this current year the Government will take for redistribution $1 of every $2 earned in the private sector. I believe this will give rise to an unstable situation and a continuing and deepening recession coupled with increasing inflation.

It is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that I have so little time left because I wanted to get into the increasing debt in the provincial and municipal areas as well as in the federal Government, and the awesome load which this increase in debt would lay upon the entrepreneurs in the business sector of Canada in the short term as well as in the long term. Obviously, I do not have time so I thank you for the ten minutes you have given me.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, the legislation now being debated by the House of Commons is a mammoth 297-page document designed to implement the far-reaching tax changes brought forward by the federal Government in its infamous budget of November, 1981. From the time that budget was announced in the House by the now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), there have been so many revisions that one would need to be a computer to keep track of them all, let alone fully understand the implications of the changes involved. But what is clear is this: the November, 1981 budget sought to revamp the entire tax system without a thorough study of what specific reforms were needed, without an understanding of the impact of such fundamental tax changes on the average citizen, and without prior consultation with those affected.

In a nutshell, sir, the then Minister of Finance sought to close so-called tax loopholes in order to make the tax system more equitable and to raise much needed revenue for the federal Treasury. In the process, however, the Minister's tax changes ended up hurting most severely the very Canadians he had naively intended to assist, namely, the low- and middle-income earners. Clearly, the Minister of Finance of the day did not know what he was doing. As a result, both he and his successor had to devote most of their energies in the following months to trying to undo the damage caused by the budget.

To this very day, Mr. Speaker, the Government continues to patch and fill its tax program to the point where even experts are in the dark as to where matters now stand. Indeed, when asked to provide a list of tax changes since November, 1981, the Department of Finance was forced to admit that no such list exists. Unfortunately, despite the countless flip-flops by the Government, some of the most damaging provisions in the Government's program remain. The net effect will be that the average individual taxpayer and the average small business will be hit with substantially higher taxes if Bill C-139 is passed.

While waiting for Parliament to dispose of the legislation, the Government is delaying the processing of tax returns for the past income tax year because many of the provisions in the Bill apply retroactively to 1982 and the Government covets every extra tax penny it can squeeze out of an already overburdened taxpayer. The federal Government's adamant refusal to process income tax returns speedily is nothing less than scandalous.

Millions of Canadians, sir, are desperately waiting for their tax refunds merely to put bread on the table during the current deepening recession. Each year, as you will know, some 15 million Canadians file income tax returns. On average, after all returns are processed, the Government ends up owing about $3 billion more to taxpayers than taxpayers owe to the Government. The many taxpayers who lost their jobs during part of last year will likely be entitled to even larger refunds this year than in previous years. That is because the Government probably deducted too much tax at source on the assumption that those people who were laid off would be employed during the whole year. If such people are still out of work today, as many of them are, they will need their refunds urgently, especially if their Unemployment Insurance has run out or is running out.

Yet the Government says it wants to wait until Bill C-139 is passed by Parliament before issuing refunds. It is also delaying refunds on the ground that Government computers are having to be reprogrammed to reflect recent changes in income tax laws. Mr. Speaker, in a letter to me dated January 7, 1983, Mr. R. W. Mercer, Director of Taxation in the Charlottetown District Office of Revenue Canada, said that full processing of tax returns will not start before March 24, with the first refunds being issued no sooner than mid-May. That is absolutely shocking. By mid-May of last year, about 6.5 million Canadians had already received their income tax refunds. Many had received them as early as March 26. I hear the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) saying to me that the same thing will apply this year. I suggest he go back to his officials and look at the information they are sending out to taxpayers. With hundreds of thousands of Canadians desperately in need of their tax refunds this year just to heat their homes, to put food in their mouths, and to keep the bill collector at bay—as I am trying to keep the Minister of National Revenue at bay while I am speaking—the Government's footdragging concerning tax refunds is a national scandal.

The fact that Parliament has not yet passed the Government's income tax Bill, now before the House, should not be allowed to stall refunds, just as that fact did not prevent the Government from collecting income tax all along. Nor should the Government get away with blaming computers for the delay. The Government has had 14 months to retool its computers since the tax changes in November, 1981, and it has had at least seven months since those changes were modified in June, 1982. Clearly, the Government is using Bill C-139 and computer retooling—I suggest that the Minister of National Revenue examine the information sent out by his officials—as mere excuses to keep people's tax refunds as long as possible because it is broke and this is an easy way for it to get hold of lots of cash at someone else's expense.

The delay by Revenue Canada in mailing 1982 income tax refunds is forcing large numbers of desperate Canadians to pay exorbitant sums to firms that offer on-the-spot cash for refunds before they are actually received from the Government.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge the Government to accelerate the processing of income tax so as to put refund cheques in the hands of Canadians without further delay. In the meantime, the Government should take emergency measures to prevent unscrupulous tax firms from gouging needy taxpayers. The Government should establish mechanisms to process, on a priority basis, the tax returns of Canadians who can establish that they urgently require their refunds because of unemployment or some other factor. And until Bill C-139 becomes law, the Government should tax Canadians on the basis of existing laws, not on the basis of this shoddily drafted and unfair legislation. For the Government to do otherwise would signal that it is more interested in collecting taxes than it is in the welfare of the taxpayers themselves.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, the ten minutes allotted to us barely gives time to go into any detail. I look forward to this matter coming to Committee of the Whole when Canadians from one end of the country to the other might receive answers to their questions.

I want to deal with two aspects of the Bill. First of all, along with my colleague from Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) and other Members, I want to express my concern for and fear of the practice being followed by the Government. I still have not received my T-4 slip, Mr. Speaker, and I know that many other Canadians are wondering where theirs are. Usually we have them some time in February. Usually by this time, most Canadians have completed and submitted their income tax returns. Usually by this time, a lot of Canadians have received refunds. That is not the case this year.

The Government has clearly indicated it will not issue income tax refunds for the 1982 tax year until Bill C-139 is passed. That is a form of blackmail. As the Government sees the political process, it may be a useful tool to achieve its ends but it is discriminatory and it is unfair.

Bill C-139 was not introduced until December 7, 1982, more than one year after the November, 1981 budget. Yet the Government asks us to accept its edict, without debate and without argument, that there will be no refunds processed until Bill C-139 is passed.

As the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) explained earlier today in this Chamber, you cannot trample on or play with casually the lives of Canadians. The Bill before us embraces nearly 200 significant changes. It is so complex as to be barely understandable even to chartered accountants and lawyers. Why the Government chooses to blackmail people, to threaten them, to cause them undue hardship, is beyond me.

The Government obviously wants its money and it is entitled to it. We will not discuss the wastage that has gone on. I say the Government is being unfair and is imposing undue hardship on countless thousands of Canadians by deliberately shutting down the computer system for reprogramming. Who programs in the middle of a program? That is done ahead of time. The Government has deliberately shut down the computer system and it will not start up again until late March or, as the Government says, until Bill C-139 is passed.

The Bill demands a thorough examination by all of us and that examination can follow when the Members have put their views and concerns on record.

I want to deal with a very specific matter because ten minutes does not allow me enough time to cover the whole bill. I want to deal with the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge that was arbitrarily imposed on the air lines and the marine mode by the Government. It was removed later when the air lines threatened international action but was brought in through the back door by a tax measure in order to recover what had been lost in another process. The marine mode tax is in place; the recovery charge is there. There is no indication from the Government that it has any intention of removing it even on the ground of its being discriminatory. It was removed from the air mode but not from the marine mode. Last year one large shipping company lost 12 voyages because of the fuel tax. That does not include the number of jobs lost to Canadian seamen, officers, marine engineers, shore supply staff, merchantment and suppliers. At a time when we have 1.5 million unemployed, surely it is a piddling amount of money. Probably last year it amounted to 35 per cent to 40 per cent of what they collected in the first year of operation, 1981. There is a direct linkage between the tax and the downturn in activity on the Lakes, yet the Minister persists in this action.

I ask the Minister whether he has appealed to his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Has he acted as the advocate he should be for the marine industry in the country? Has he made its views known? When we get to Committee of the Whole consideration of this Bill, these will be questions to which we on this side will want direct answers.

We are coming up to another questionable year in respect of the level of activity on the Great Lakes. This tax is discriminatory in the sense that it is imposed on one mode of transportation, not on any others. As we approach the 1983 season, surely the principal advocate of the marine industry should make known in a very forceful manner the views of the marine industry to the Minister of Finance and other Treasury officials.

This tax is discriminatory. It raises very little money. We understand that approximately $5.5 million was raised in 1981 and that last year, as I said, probably only 35 per cent to 40 per cent of that figure was raised. We are talking about a very small amount of money, yet in the very narrow field of marine transportation it has an enormous and profound impact. We will have some questions about that when we get to Committee of the Whole. We will want to know why we are losing cargoes. We would like to know why the Minister deliberately, obviously and consciously allows this discriminatory tax to remain, especially when we consider its impact. We know what the Dominion Marine Association has said about it. It has consistently requested the removal of this tax on this mode of transportation.

If they go ahead with it in the area of air transportation, either through the front door or the back door, they will create enormous problems for an industry which does not need them and certainly does not deserve them. Seaway tolls are rising. We appeal to the Minister to take a long, hard, new look at increases in Seaway tolls and pilotage fees. Everything is going up and up. The pilotage fees for seasoned river captains of vessels plying coastal waters, the Great Lakes and other harbours are rising. They do not need pilots. Good Lord, in most cases many of these captains and mates are more familiar with the waters they are plying than the pilots they employ and have to pay.

I re-emphasize that this is just a very narrow issue which has a very profound impact on a small sector of Canadian entrepreneurship. It is discriminatory; it should be removed. It will be an issue which we will want the Minister to address himself to when we get to the point in time that we are dealing with the Bill clause by clause in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for allowing me this ten minutes to debate Bill C-139, a 295-page tax Bill, full of amendments to one of the most complicated tax Acts the world has ever seen. Government Members opposite are anxious that we seem to be taking time. Of course we are taking time. All they have done and accomplished in their decade of rule over what was once a free country, that once had a private sector of which we were proud and once was able through a good, solid—

Mr. Fisher: What is it now, Ron?

Mr. Huntington: It is 1.5 million unemployed Canadians who would not have had to be unemployed had you accepted and delivered your mandate properly. You have socialized this country and removed the decision-making process.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member should address his remarks to the Chair, as is the customary parliamentary practice.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I opened my remarks by thanking you for acknowledging me. Of course, my remarks are always through the Chair. Maybe they should make their interruptions through the Chair; then I would not get in a straight line as the crow flies in responding to them.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) pointed out how complex was this Bill and the oppressive atmosphere and environment it provided to the job-creating sector of Canada. Also we heard from the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) about the confusion in the marine sector which these amendments and the tax legislation delivered. Complexity is there in spades.

I was in the House through the budget of a former Minister of Finance, Mr. Turner. I was in the House and could not believe my ears when that man was asked what it was of which he was most proud in his capacity as Minister of Finance. He said: "I guess I am most proud of the one million jobs I have created". The people of Canada are paying the price for the creation of those types of jobs. In 1972, when they changed a basically simple tax Act to a complicated monster of paper, intrigue and purest academic thinking, they destroyed the decision-making base of people conducting widely diverse activities across Canada.

It is no longer possible to make a decision, even when one has lawyers and chartered accountants serving one's private sector entity in the boardroom. The amount of energy which is delivered to tax planning and tax management instead of to the essential productivity need of the nation is just a national disaster. It has delivered us the 1.5 million unemployed people we have today.

Our priorities are so screwed up, it does not seem that the Government has any way out. As I said last Friday, it is the result of a deliberate plan to move the state in and over all aspects of our lives and to remove the freedom of choice from the marketplace. If we want to see what they have done to the fundamental, natural law of supply and demand, all we have to do is look at the results delivered on the nation by their great academic, elitist, national energy policy. These elitists, these academics who have had no experience at all in the world of work, think they can plan everything from the centre and project their strategies over our future. They cannot even see three years ahead, so why do they keep hanging on to this mania that they have to allow academics, economists, engineers, socialist planners and national industrial strategists to plan our lives for the future?

The national energy policy just had the dot put on it in the last year and already it is obsolete. It has cost us jobs all across the country. The Government does not build infrastructures which will help create industries that will create jobs and allow us to participate in the marketplace. This Liberal Government keeps trying to interfere with the basic, natural law of supply and demand. Every time this Government does so, up goes the unemployment index in Canada. If you want to get back to a basic, fundamental truce, you have to get back to the basic, fundamental law of supply and demand. Had we stayed with the principle of supply and demand, we would have an energy policy in this country today that would be creating jobs, delivering the results of exploration efficiently and we would be a landmark of success in comparison to the overview of the world economic down cycle.

Mr. Cosgrove: Just like Reaganomics.

Mr. Huntington: The Liberals have spent everything we collected in taxes. It was done all through the good times. This Government spends, spends and spends. It does not matter how the money is spent; this Government just likes to spend. It goes for borrowing Bills of $19 billion, $22 billion, $14 billion and $5 billion. Its policy is to spend and create debt. But all the Liberals are doing is lining their own pockets today at the expense of those who follow tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: The Government that has to take over this mess has a decade of the hardest work you can imagine, Mr. Speaker. That Government will have to do the most responsible type of work imaginable to pull this country back into some kind of a condition of sanity. The Liberal Party of Canada has a chain and an anchor around its neck for what it has done to this country and for the condition we are now in.

Let me review some of the budgets we have had. We had the Chrétien budget. It took us all through our nine months to bring the Chrétien budget elements into law because the ways and means were in place. We had a series of national disasters, the three MacEachen budgets. Now we have a very able—I have to say very able—Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) who has had to fix up the total chaos which the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) delivered on the people of this country. In fixing up this total chaos, do you have any idea of the absolute confusion that exists across this land, Mr. Speaker? Not even the lawyers or the chartered accountants can assist the wealth producers of this nation.

The Government delivers a budget and employs a tax collection system that is totally illegal. It has become a practice to do things without having a law in place. What we have done in this House is to let this Government collect taxes illegally. I have been told that the 1982 tax form has changed unilaterally, without authority from this Parliament, the dividend factor from 25 per cent to 22.66 per cent. I have been told that not only is that formula printed in the new forms, but the computer has been reprogrammed to accept a 22.66 per cent factor. But not a word about this was put out across the nation. Now the chartered accountants are struggling and wondering why their calculations do not work out. They find this subtle, dirty technique of silent change, without the authority of this House, has delivered us into this type of hidden taxation.

The Government moves in with a dividend tax on the small business community. What the Government has done has created absolute chaos. The money being spent across this land to move out of holding companies, which the Chrétien budget created, is unbelievable.

Mr. Fisher: Quit while you are ahead, Ron.

Mr. Huntington: I see you are indicating that my time is coming to an end, Mr. Speaker, but let me state that confusion, crisis, chaos, disaster and subtlety is what we have. Nobody can trust this Government. We have taxation on taxation without law.

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) certainly made some very worth-while points that we should be pursuing as a Government and as a Parliament. I hope Hon. Members who sit on the Government benches will take heed of what he has said.

It seems to me, as the Hon. Member who preceded me said so eloquently, that this Government is leaving the country in a mess. There is no question that this Government will be leaving office after the next election. I am sure if Hon. Members opposite want to be honest with themselves there is no question in their minds either that they will be leaving the Government benches, but I hope that between now and election time they will behave as responsibly as they can.

It seems to me there is an attitude prevalent on the Government benches which is getting worse each day. It seems the Government does not care what it does now because the mess it will leave will have to be cleaned up by somebody else. If that is the attitude and it continues like that, Liberal Members will be seen to be totally irresponsible.

Let me talk a little bit about the taxation system. First, a taxation system, if it is going to work at all, has to be fair. It has to be applied equally to everyone who pays tax. Our system is based on voluntary compliance.

Mr. Blenkarn: Right on.

Mr. Mayer: Everyone who speaks on this Bill says that Bill C-139 consists of 300 pages. But it is substantially larger than that because there are many pages in it numbered, "a". For instance, we have pages 118 and 118a. The Bill is probably closer to having 500 pages than 300 pages. Something like this, so large and so complex, is very difficult for people to understand and to comply with. Their reasons for wanting to comply with it become less and less. If we ever get into a situation in this country when people do not want to comply voluntarily with the Income Tax Act, we will have utter chaos. The more complicated a tax measure becomes, the more discriminatory it becomes. People who can afford to hire the best tax lawyers and accountants will be the ones who will be the best treated under the Act.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) pointed out that in Canada we have more lawyers and accountants than we have research scientists. This just shows what this Government has done. It has not put emphasis on production, which should be the basis for a taxation system. We should have a system that is an incentive to produce rather than a disincentive.

Let me talk about a couple of principles and then I will refer specifically to two items in the Bill that I find most disheartening and discouraging. First, and this has been mentioned many times before, is the basic problem in the process we use to pass tax measures. Much uncertainty is created in how one calculates his or her tax. I have been in this House almost four years and there have been several changes within those four years, but none of them has been finalized, as I understand it, and put into law. This is what we will be doing when we finally pass Bill C-139, if in fact that happens. Unless you have some certainty with a tax measure, it is very difficult for people to comply with. That is the basic problem.

As I said, most Canadians voluntarily comply with the Income Tax Act. I think most Canadians feel they have an obligation to their country and an obligation to pay for the services the Government renders to them. But a tax system has to be fair. There has to be some kind of a belief that the redistribution of money which takes place after taxation is done fairly. People do not perceive that to be the case if tax Bills are so complicated and are being changed all the time. This leaves uncertainty and confusion in people's lives. They do not understand.

I have Bill C-143 before me. This is basically a tax Act. It is a method of spending. In it the Government is asking for authority to borrow money. It contains just two pages but it is asking for $19 billion. What you have is a two-page document to borrow $19 billion, and a document in excess of 300 pages to collect money which to me is unfair to the Canadian taxpayer. We have to understand a 300-page, complicated document to collect taxes while the Government produces a two-page document to borrow $19 billion. I question that. The Government has two pages to request authority to borrow and spend $19 billion but a document of more than 300 pages to collect money.

• (1210)

Let me use Section 12.2 as an example which was pointed out to me by the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who is very well acquainted with the Income Tax Act. Section 12.2(1) states:

> In computing the income for a taxation year of a corporation, partnership, unit trust or any trust of which a corporation or partnership is a beneficiary that holds—

It goes on to mention those things that a corporation or partnership may hold:

> —there shall be included the amount by which the accumulating fund at the end of the calendar year ending in the taxation year, as determined in prescribed manner, in respect of the interest exceeds the adjusted cost basis of the interest to the corporation, partnership, unit trust or trust at the end of that calendar year.

What that essentially means is that we will be taxed on accumulated or accrued income that we do not actually have in our hands. I believe that once the Government implements a measure such as that, it attacks the concept of private ownership in this country. The Government is saying through this Section that it owns everything and therefore has the authority to take money from the taxpayers that they have not even seen.

For example, if an individual takes out a life insurance policy that accrues in value over a period of time, that individual will have to pay a tax on that accrued income to the Government even though he has not seen the money. Once a tax like that is implemented—which the Government is attempting to do through this Section of the Bill—it means that the Government is attacking the very principle of private ownership. This Section will require an individual to find the money to pay a tax on the increased value of an instrument such as a life insurance policy. I suggest that a measure such as this has very serious implications for the direction in which this country is headed.

Another concern that I have with regard to the basic principle of income tax is that as the taxation system becomes more complex, the average taxpayer will have to spend more money to hire accountants and tax lawyers instead of concentrating on productively contributing to the country. Let me quote from Section 109 which implements paragraph 151 of the income tax motion. It states:

> That a corporation be required to pay a special tax of 12.5 per cent on distributions made by it out of earnings in taxation years commencing after 1982 that were subject to the small business deduction under Subsection 125(1) of the Act and that rules be introduced to counter the avoidance of the tax.

That paragraph is very complicated. I defy any Member in the House to explain what I just read. I am told that it essentially means that the system by which the distribution of dividends will be made will be changed. This is a change from the Department of Revenue's previous proposal of going to an integrated system of tax in which the corporate rate of tax is adjusted to the individual rate of tax so that there can be no double taxation. It is now being changed in midstream with the result that it will be very difficult for people to understand what kind of tax they should pay.

The entire process by which this Bill has been introduced is backwards. As Members of Parliament, we should be using the committee system that is in place to draft these Bills so that they make common sense and can be understood. This procedure should be followed instead of giving the bureaucracy the powers that the House should have in terms of drafting legislation. Once legislation has been drafted by the bureaucrats and has been introduced and supported by the Government, it becomes very difficult to change a Bill. That procedure is exactly opposite to what I and most Canadians envisage as Parliament's function. We should not be reacting to what the civil servants have given us, which is the situation with this Bill. I do not believe the Minister alone is responsible for drafting this Bill; I submit that we are reacting to legislation that was drafted by bureaucrats.

I believe we should make proper use of the committee system. In this case, the Finance Committee should be the body that would review the tax policies in Canada and decide how they should be changed. Through that process, the legislation drafted by the committee can be brought to the House for debate and final approval.

The fact that the taxation system has become a disincentive to production represents another backward step. The taxation system, rather, should create wealth and generate incentives. At that point the Government can concern itself with how taxes are distributed. Presently, this Government has bankrupt policies that spend us into oblivion. It then tries to determine how much money it can confiscate from Canadians for it to run some of its foolish and nonsensical schemes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Oxford.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cosgrove: Tory No. 66.

Mr. Halliday: As shown by the Hon. Member opposite, it is clear how concerned Members opposite are about our tax system. We seem to hear very little from them about this entire issue. One must conclude that they agree with this complicated 295-page Bill C-139 which is before us today. Apparently they do not believe they have any responsibility as Government Members to intervene in this debate on behalf of their constituents and all Canadians in an attempt to point out the inadequacies and incomprehensibility of this Bill to the Government. Nor do they seem concerned about the total tax system.

I am disappointed to see that there are that many Members who feel that this Bill is not sufficiently important for them to speak. I am rather proud that there are 66 Members on this side who are concerned about this Bill and are prepared to speak about it in the House. I would venture to say that one of the advantages of parliamentary reform is that there is more opportunity and more responsibility for all of us to speak.

I have not been one to speak frequently in the House in the past because I do not think it is important to repeat what somebody else has said. However, I think it is incumbent upon all of us who represent our respective constituencies to get up and comment when we are faced with a tax Bill that is as inequitable as this one. More Members now have the opportunity to speak about Bills such as this before the Government has a chance to bring in some form of closure.

In the course of the last several months I have had well over 100 letters sent to me complaining about various parts of the three different budgets which have been brought down since the fall of 1981. The majority of complaints were from those who were upset about the provisions regarding the taxation of premiums paid on health and dental plans. Fortunately, because of the reaction from the public the Government has backed down from that provision. The Government should back down from much of what it has proposed in Bill C-139.

I believe there is a fundamental flaw in this Bill which should be addressed. My colleagues, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) and the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), referred to it this morning. It refers to the fact that this Bill is totally incomprehensible. This fact was brought to our attention most effectively in a paper which was sent to us. It was a speech that was given by Mr. Lyman MacInnis of the Touche, Ross Company. I dare say that Members opposite have received the same document. The speech has been quoted previously in the House but I think it is important that Government Members be reminded of it so that they know what Mr. MacInnis has said about our present tax system.

It appears that the present Government is not interested in trying to alleviate the difficulties that Mr. MacInnis has illustrated in his paper about the tax system. He outlined three interesting problems in our tax system as he saw them. One problem related to the fact that, by the very nature of our present income tax system, the onus is upon the taxpayer to assess what tax he must pay. That method is different from most other taxes that we are forced to pay in this society. We have agreed to pay other taxes. For example, we pay sales tax, which is a predetermined amount that is paid with each purchase. We know what the tax is.

The other basic principle that we must acknowledge is that in order to be able to assess tax on our own, since we are not professionals in this area, the tax system must be clear and the language must be unmistakable. It must be possible for the average person to understand it.

Thirdly, now that our tax system is so complicated, many taxpayers must hire professionals to help them with their tax returns. The problem is that the very people who are least able to understand the complicated wording of the tax system are the very ones who need help the most and can least afford to pay for that help.

I think I can afford to devote a couple of minutes to reading what Mr. MacInnis wrote in his paper with regard to the complexity of the wording in the present Act. Mr. MacInnis quoted Section 56(1)(s) as follows:

"Without restricting the generality of Section 3, there shall be included in computing the income of a taxpayer for a taxation year, the amount of any grant received in the year under a prescribed program of the Government of Canada relating to home insulation or energy conversion by the taxpayer, other than a married taxpayer who resided with his spouse at the time the grant was received and whose income for the year is less than his spouse's income for the year, or the spouse of the taxpayer with whom he resided at the time the grant was received, if the spouse's income for the year is less than the taxpayer's income for the year to the extent that the amount is not required by paragraph 12(1)(u) to be included in computing his or his spouse's income for the year or a subsequent year".

That is but one paragraph, one little part of the Act, and it is completely incomprehensible.

If we look back in history a little to 1962, we find that it was acknowledged then that our tax system was very complicated and some changes were necessary. A Royal Commission was set up, and about ten years later the observations and recommendations with regard to the system translated into changes in the Income Tax which were supposedly to simplify and improve the ability of Canadian taxpayers to understand the Act. What we have before us today is the result of the work of the Royal Commission from 1962 onwards, culminating in the changes the Government introduced in 1971.

The Government has moved to complicate the Act even more and has not fulfilled the role which the Carter Commission was to have fulfilled. We were to have been given something which was more simple. However, this was based entirely on certain concepts and the Government jumped to a certain conclusion, namely, that "ability to pay" was a sound taxation principle. It seems to have entirely forgotten the concept that to be fair, the fact must also be taken into consideration that people are provided certain services under the umbrella of the state. There should therefore be a tax system which takes into account those two principles, the principle involving ability to pay as well as the principle that people should be required to pay something based on the kind of services received under the umbrella of the Government at the time. Of course, one can apply that to the three basic types of taxes: personal tax, business tax and property tax.

I see Your Honour is signalling that my allotted time has just about expired. I will conclude by saying that at a future date it would be well if we addressed the issues involving those three components of our tax system in relation to the concept of ability to pay, which is recognized now, as well as the concept of paying tax based on services received.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, if ever a nation needed a new tax Act and a new Government to administer it, it is this nation, now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: We have seen our country abused by the tax system to the point at which the system could not be described in anything but obscene language, to which you, Mr. Speaker, would properly raise objection in the House. Therefore, I will not use the obscene language which is really necessary to describe our tax system. I will just imply that that is what is required.

We see a nation in economic difficulty, faced with an unemployment problem, and a Government which does not understand the difference between its own cash flow and so-called tax expenditures when extending a little privilege to a company. The difference the Government has never been able to understand concerning revenue expenditure versus its net income is that when incentive is not provided, unemployment is created.

That is precisely what the Government has done, budget after budget, with Turner being the apostle of deficit financing, excessive taxation and over-expenditure of public revenue. He started it, and he certainly converted the apostles who followed in the field of Government finance.

We need a new Income Tax Act and we need a new Government that understands where revenue comes from, that understands it comes from profitable companies, from a productively employed work force, from a striving, thriving economy, not one which is choked to death by one taxation structure after another as in this country.

Mr. Huntington: Absolutely right.

Mr. McCain: And you sit there and grin, my friends?

Mr. Huntington: Fleming.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, do not get worried; I would not waste my breath on him.

I received a call from a gentleman who is involved in the tax structure since he happens to be a chartered accountant. He said: "In my career as an accountant I have never seen people being stripped of their working capital as the Government is presently robbing them, directly and indirectly, of the working capital which is so badly needed".

Mr. Huntington: Illegal, too.

Mr. McCain: He said: "I have never seen incentive being stripped along with the working capital as it is being stripped from the private sector in this day's society by the Government, with its successive budgets. I have never seen so many of my clients determined that they shall take whatever tax advantage they can, then take their money and retire very prematurely." He also said: "In my community, unemployment is increasing because people are taking their marbles, quitting the game and going home because of the disincentives resulting from what is happening here".

Concerning cash flow, the Government is prepared to assist Massey-Ferguson financially, but is not prepared to allow farmers to have the capital cost allowance to which they have been accustomed and which enabled them to buy farm equipment. The Government is prepared to back the Chrysler Corporation and the auto industry in general with hundreds of millions of dollars, but does everything possible to constrict the purchase of automobiles by removal of the capital cost allowance, by the change to the expense deductions of travellers, by the change in the opportunity to purchase executive cars. If there was ever an example of someone really trying to take advantage of it, it is myself. In my business and political career, I traded cars not less than every two years. My wife now has the use of one automobile which is five years old, and the one which I prefer to drive is four years old.

Mr. Cosgrove: You are lucky, you have two cars.

Mr. McCain: There are at least six automobiles which I have not purchased on the consumer market because of the tax structure which has been imposed on the nation. The idiots can sit and laugh at the economic realities, but it was better for me to take 20 per cent interest on the trading money and keep the old car than it was to trade and have that money tied up in an automobile.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1230)

Mr. McCain: They laugh while the unemployed autoworkers starve. That may be funny, but they should ask the gentleman from Oshawa what he thinks about that kind of idiocy.

I abhor the idea that we have goons in the National Revenue Department going through files as far back as five, six, eight and ten years to see what a fisherman's income was and whether he paid his taxes. What did the fisherman use for bait in his lobster traps and what was his expense? These goons go back four years and say to a fisherman that his expenses for lobster bait were excessive, and he cannot satisfactorily substantiate them. Fishermen had 300 lobsters in the water and are allowed depreciation on those traps, but are not allowed anything for the expense of baiting them. The Department of Fisheries established a figure in a particular year. I asked the then Minister what it cost to bait a lobster trap and was told that the cost was estimated at $15 per trap. The fisherman was allowed no cost for baiting his lobster traps on his return so there is $4,500 at an absolute minimum on which he is now being asked to pay back taxes. That is a goon type of collection system.

What is the situation with the farmer or the fellow who is trying to become a farmer in Prince Edward Island or New Brunswick, working at a job while trying to establish himself on a farm? He is considered as a hobby farmer. The Revenue officials go back four, five, six and eight years and say that this individual never made any money while trying to get into the farming business, so it is a hobby farm and he cannot be allowed any expenses in that regard. This individual is then told he owes taxes for that four, five, six or eight years. This policy is sucking the incentive out of the guy who wants to be a farmer, and there are many in P.E.I. and New Brunswick who do want to be farmers and are working day and night to get there. Yet these goons from the tax Department reassess them and take the incentive from these guys who have saved for years.

Let us suppose one of these individuals wants to appeal. He does not like what has been done. Such an individual in New Brunswick finds that he has been assessed in St. John's, Newfoundland. That is where the assessment or the revision of the tax requirement has been made. The individual appeals and all at once finds that he is addressing his appeal to no one else but the guy who did the reassessment. How is he going to win? He has no reasonable access to the courts and is merely appealing the assessment of one civil servant to another, and they all seem to be covering up their tails very nicely. In this way one will not appear to be making a mistake that can be overruled by another. The success rate of appeals from these reassessments is idiotically lacking. These people are being punished by a greedy Government with this group of people in place. For God's sake, I wonder if they are working on commission. They are certainly working without mercy as they assess or reassess fishermen, farmers and foresters.

We need a new tax Act and all the patches the Government can put on the present Act will never correct the inequities that have been brought about by irresponsible individuals who are described by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) as people who perhaps have never had to work in the open marketplace and seem to be pretty determined that no one else shall thrive in that area.

A chartered accountant said that we ought to give this Bill the attention it deserves. He said the place for it is the garbage can, and that is the attention it deserves. The Government should be asked to start over and bring in something that is definitive and understandable. This chartered accountant deplores the idea that people should be targeted as groups and that goon squads should go out to investigate the good work people have done. He deplores the fact that it is no longer the concept of the Canadian Government that one should be able to make out his own income tax return.

The initial concept of income tax was that it should be simple, there should be rates and certain deductions spelled out. There should be a single sheet income tax return so that any high school graduate would be competent to assess his own tax liability. In the early days there were very few reassessments.

We now have something which makes it impossible for the individual to file honestly. If he tries to file his return himself he is penalized and eventually has to go to an expert chartered accountant, or some other member of the accounting group, to bail him out of the interpretation that is placed on his return. The individual files the return honestly, but often the return is not acceptable to those who re-inspect, re-evaluate and reassess, and then stand firm on that reassessment without appeal. These people do not understand how to use the courts properly and are victimized in this situation. We need a new Act.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I think this may be the first opportunity I have had to congratulate you on the appointment to the position you now hold. As a New Brunswicker I take great pride in having the opportunity to do that.

When asked to provide a list of the changes that had been made to budgetary measures since November of 1981, the Department of Finance simply stated it had no such list. No wonder; there have been 47 changes to the November, 1981 budget.

One welcome change is that the Government will not tax employee health and dental benefits as originally planned. Another is that the implementation of the shift in the manufacturers' sales tax to the wholesale level is to be delayed until mid-1984. In the interim, the Government has indicated that it will work with industry to explore ways of modifying the proposals.

Bill C-139 now before us seeks to implement many of the hodge-podge of Government measures, and it is one of the most complex tax Bills since the introduction of the 1971 reforms. The hardest hit by this Bill will be low and middle-income Canadians who will gain little or nothing from the lowering of marginal tax breaks, and who will lose proportionately more from partial deindexation.

The taxation of housing loans will make it hard to recruit employees who must relocate. For those who already have loans, a taxation of this benefit may represent a rude shock that was not anticipated when the employee accepted a housing loan as part of a relocation package.

The restrictions of owner participation in deferred profit-sharing plans will discourage the owners of small firms from offering to their employees a plan for which they themselves are not eligible.

In its analysis, issued November 13, 1981, the accounting firm of Coopers & Lybrand suggested that the most disturbing thing about the November budget was its anti-business bias and its doctrinaire opposition to any form of tax relief and deferral.

The November budget attacked business as if it were a dreaded disease instead of being the principal force for economic growth and job creation. That budget eliminated many incentives for investment. Each of these incentives was originally placed in the Income Tax Act to encourage entrepreneurial activity and investment.

For example, the half-year convention will limit the capital cost allowance depreciation to half the normal rate in the year that an asset is purchased. This will significantly reduce the cash flow of a firm in the year that an asset is purchased. It will discourage capital investment at a time when the economy is in dire need of stimulus. It will hinder the retooling of Canadian manufacturers as they face the challenge of the 1980s.

Until the November budget, companies could make interest-free loans to employees to enable them to purchase shares in the companies for which they work. The taxation of benefits resulting from share purchase loans will reduce the healthy trend toward employee share ownership.

In November, 1981 the budget transformed the Small Business Development Bond from a development vehicle to a bail-out vehicle. Firms seeking financing from the Small Business Bonds are often faced with an interesting catch-22 situation. Financing is only available to firms in financial difficulty, but, as the bonds are not Government-guaranteed, the banks may not lend money to such businesses.

The November, 1981 budget proposed to end the immediate write-off, in full, of soft costs incurred prior to completion of construction. These include such expenses as promotion, legal and accounting fees, mortgage fees and interim interest expenses. These costs must now be capitalized and written off at the same rate as a building. Soft costs such as these are incurred in the construction of new factories, new wings for motels and new warehouses and, as in the case of a multiple unit residential building, they must now be capitalized.

Every time a new job is created, a new taxpayer is also created. If the 1.5 million Canadians who are now unemployed were put to work and over a period of years they paid $10,000 each in income tax, our revenues would swell by $15 billion. Our Unemployment Insurance and social justice payments would diminish radically so that those moneys too could be used for the betterment of all Canadians.

As I come to the conclusion of my short remarks, I would like to leave with the House for consideration two thoughts. At the corporate level, what if small businesses starting up in areas suffering from regional disparities were provided a 150 per cent tax credit to cover capital costs and labour costs for the first three years of operation? I am not talking here about an outright grant. I am speaking rather of allowing a newly-established or expanded firm to apply these expenses against future income tax payable, thus providing the investor with an opportunity to recover his investment plus 50 per cent, and his labour cost for the first three years plus 50 per cent. We would in this way create a new corporate taxpayer and ensure the creation of badly needed jobs, all without taking a cent from the federal Treasury, simply delaying the payment of taxes.

What if the capital gains tax were abolished? The enormous administrative costs which presently attach to the collection of these revenue already considerably offset any perceived fiscal advantage. Even if we accepted at face value the $400 million which the Government presently collects in capital gains tax, I would argue that the advantages of eliminating this tax in terms of potential domestic and foreign investment and the consequent creation both of jobs and of new individual and corporate taxpayers would be overwhelming.

I would urge the Government to study these two proposals and ascertain whether it feels, as I do, that they are worth looking at and could be feasible ways of bringing in new taxpayers and increasing our revenues with resultant benefits to all Canadians. This Bill in its present form reminds me of a nest of mosquitoes with a number of annoying bites. It should instead have been used to create a climate attractive to industrial development.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, one thing I can say about Government Members not participating in the debate is that it certainly raises the quality of debate in the House of Commons. Quality of debate is a concern of people in my area. Bill C-139 is also a concern to people in Peace River country because it affects them so dramatically.

Yesterday in the House we spent some time debating the largest borrowing Bill in Canadian history. Today we are speaking about one of the largest economic Bills to come before us, 290 pages long. It makes a person wonder why the Government does not concentrate a little more on quality and less on quantity. This is especially true when one remembers that all 290 pages of this Bill are simply amendments to the tax Act. It is not a new Act, not a better one, but a confusing collection of amendments that I hesitate to call fine tuning.

This is especially true when one remembers that budgets are so crucial to the investment in, and well-being of, Canada. We can see that this Government does not intend to improve the investment climate or allow Canadians to plan for their future. This Government has made little attempt to make the tax Act rational. It has in fact made it harsher. It has adopted forward averaging and now you have to guess where you will be. It is reducing the capital cost allowance and plugging the loopholes. In many cases the Government is in fact creating taxes where there were no previous taxes. For example, if you have a company car, a company loan or a life insurance policy, you are going to be looking at some taxes. You will in fact pay more tax and pay it more often.

The question that remains is whether the Government is in fact changing its mind about what Canadians should be encouraged to do. In the past, interest on loans to purchase RRSPs was deductible. That is no longer the case. This Bill reduces the dividend tax credit and restricts deductions for tuition fees. What we are finding is that these activities, where promoted in the past, are now not being promoted. We reduced the tax that you would have paid had you participated in the programs previously.

The Bill has made a complicated situation worse. Several of my colleagues have mentioned that fact. Many Canadians will need a good deal of help to do the Government's paper work, to do their own taxes. Payment for this help is not tax deductible for the majority of the Canadian people.

This Government will still insist that it be paid. Bill C-139 provides that the Government may garnishee money owed the taxpayer 90 days in advance of the funds becoming due to the taxpayer; in other words, an advance garnishee. We also find that if taxes are in arrears, Revenue Canada can seize the business and run it for the benefit of the taxes. Revenue Canada will become the bankruptcy initiator of Canada. It makes me shudder to think of Revenue Canada grabbing companies across Canada. Who will do business with these seized companies? How well will the bureaucrats run them? Who will decide when they can be grabbed? That is probably the most fundamental question to be faced. What do we think this will mean in terms of this new power when Canadians are already disenchanted with federal policies and the authoritarian actions of this Government?

This Bill gives with one hand and takes with the other. For example, we have the lower marginal tax rates, but on the other hand we have deindexing for inflation. The next budget will probably end the giving but do nothing about the taking. It is a vicious circle. Maybe they will take a different tack altogether and make it a highly political budget. That will give the Government a chance to play hero by reducing the marginal tax rate every year, something which the inflation index in the tax Act did automatically.

I have to say that this Bill will do some good. First, RRSPs can be divided on marriage breakdown. Second, and this is fairly significant in my area, travelling expenses for medical reasons are given a more reasonable tax deduction. Many people in my area live 300 miles from medical specialists and must incur once or twice a month heavy and dramatic medical travel costs. A man in my riding now cannot write off such medical expenses. Perhaps with this legislation he will. That is an important measure in the Bill.

Why stop there? Why not go the extra step to meet the basic needs of Canadians? The prime reason for having a Government is to look after the Canadian people, not to put stumbling blocks in front of them, as is the case with so much of this Bill. Much more is needed to make the tax system a reasonable system for Canadians.

I want to give another example. In my area many farmers now have to hold down two jobs. This is particularly true with new farmers. They want one job because they want to farm, but they need the other one to make ends meet, to allow them to farm. In many instances, the income from the second job goes directly into the farm. They are making an investment in machinery, an investment in land improvement, which is very important in order to bring new land onstream, and an investment in livestock, their future capital base. They are making personal sacrifices to make their farms and their country a better place, yet the Income Tax Act actually penalizes them for their sacrifices.

If their income from the "other" job is greater than 50 per cent of the farm's income, they can only use something which has been called a "restricted farm loss". In fact, they are limited to a maximum deduction of $5,000. We all know that in today's farming business, particularly when you are trying to establish a new farm, $5,000 is peanuts. If the restricted farm loss had been tied to inflation, the figure would be significantly more equitable. In fact, it would be somewhere in the area of $20,000, not the insignificant $5,000 which farmers are given at the moment. Farm costs have risen so dramatically over the last five years that something must be done to encourage both new farmers and established farmers who are forced to seek income from other employment in order to maintain their farm as a viable operation.

Bill C-139 could recognize the inequities of the old Act. The Government could bring this restricted farm loss up to a viable level, it could index it to inflation, or it could even raise the ceiling for income from other sources. If nothing is done this investment in a very important sector of the economy—and it is certainly important in terms of the young farmers of the country—is going to grind to a halt. If we look at the average age of our farmers in Canada today, we find it is very high, around the age of 50. We must start bringing in new young farmers and the only way we are going to accomplish that is by making farming attractive and by encouraging them, rather than coming out with legislation that stifles their incentive and forces them to change their dreams and move from the country into the city.

I would like to remind the Government of three essential matters which fall under its responsibility towards Canadians. First, Canadians should be able to understand the laws which govern them. That is a very simple and basic right which Canadians should be able to expect. Second, Canadians should be encouraged to do the things which would improve their lot, and which in turn would improve the lot of this country. Third, the Government must, in terms of its responsibility towards the citizens of Canada, ensure that it is not too difficult for them to do those things which seem correct, and a simple example of that is my illustration of the farms in my own area.

Bill C-139 does not do any of these things, neither does it improve the present Act. This Government should be a good Government and not one that reduces Canadians to dependence on their Government.

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on the second reading of Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act. Last December 7, this Government finally introduced the income tax legislation necessary to implement the November, 1981 budget. It took 389 days to introduce this Bill, a mammoth 600-page document. It has been said, Mr. Speaker, that if you give enough typewriters to enough monkeys, in time the law of averages will allow them to create a masterpiece. Certainly the Government has enough typewriters. We know they have enough monkeys. I believe they just ran out of time, sir.

At present there are four major revisions of the November, 1981 budget: the original budget itself; the budget as amended in December, 1981; the June, 1982 version; and the October 27, 1982 version. In addition, there have been minor announcements and clarifications on several occasions, such as the January, 1982 announcement of employee benefits. There have been extensive consultations outside this House as well as the debate within this Chamber on the provisions of the ill-conceived budget of November, 1981. On that point, I would like to give credit where credit is due and say I respect the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for going across the country to find out what people really have to say. Only time will tell, Mr. Speaker, whether or not the Minister listened.

There are many defects in this budget. I hope the present Minister of Finance will hear what my colleagues have had to say and take corrective measures before the Bill goes to committee. The Government seems to be listening and consulting, but despite the fact that there have been changes, the Government has not yet responded fully. Quite frankly, in reflecting upon all the wasted time and trouble which resulted from the original budget, the former Minister of Finance should have simply recognized the folly of his own budget, scrapped it and started over again from scratch. Neither he nor the present Minister of Finance has chosen to do this, which is precisely why we find ourselves in our present economic mess.

Bill C-139 is one of the most complex tax Bills since the introduction of the 1971 tax reforms. I have had an opportunity to wade through it, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to take this opportunity to address my remarks to specific examples showing which Canadians will be affected. The hardest hit will be low and middle-income Canadians. These are the Canadians who have been hit during the last 15 years of Liberal administration. They will gain little or nothing from the lowering of marginal tax rates and will lose proportionately more from partial deindexation.

The increased taxation of employee benefits will hit hardest those in the lower and middle income brackets. It will encourage employees to seek higher wage settlements at a time when moderation is indeed required. There are many examples in which employees have been receiving wage settlements in excess of the Government's own six and five restraint program. The taxation of housing loans will make it harder to recruit employees who must relocate in order to retain their jobs. For those who already have loans, the taxation of this benefit will represent a rude shock which was not anticipated when the employee accepted a housing loan as part of his relocation offer.

Limitations on retiring allowances, termination benefits, and the $1,000 pension income deduction will make it harder for many Canadians to prepare for their retirement years. The restrictions on owner participation in deferred profit-sharing plans will discourage owners from offering a plan to their employees for which they themselves are not eligible.

The proposed taxation of the work-in-progress of professionals has been withdrawn, as outlined under Section 125 of the Income Tax Act. This will affect doctors, lawyers, accountants, dentists, veterinarians and chiropractors. This measure, however, remains in effect for engineers, architects and management consultants. That indeed, sir, is a discriminatory measure. It will create an administrative and tax burden on those professionals who must not only estimate the value of their work in progress, but pay tax on work which has yet to be billed.

A provision of this Bill which I find particularly disturbing is the removal of some of the secrecy provisions of the Income Tax Act. Revenue Canada will now be able to share tax information with other federal and provincial officials for the enforcement of exploration programs, for compiling statistical information, and for enforcing the Unemployment Insurance Act or other prescribed employment programs. These are only a few of the many changes to the Act which will affect countless Canadians from coast to coast.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

FUNDS FOR PROTECTION OF PEOPLE

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, I am a little saddened and perplexed by our modern day pacifists who stand up and protest against any military organization developed by allied countries. If we look at the world today, Madam Speaker, we realize that the free world is shrinking and that the number of countries belonging to that community is diminishing steadily. In an ideal world, we all would prefer to have budgets used for peaceful ends, but who is going to guarantee that our opponents are acting in good faith? If tomorrow, people were to demand that all police forces in Canada be withdrawn, I would be the first to agree, Madam Speaker, provided I have a guarantee that no more crimes will be committed.

How could we expect this kind of guarantee from a system or power that since the beginning of this century has shown no hesitation in torturing and executing, often for no good reason, millions, I repeat millions, of people, brothers, sisters and fellow citizens. When all is said and done, Madam Speaker, I think I would rather die in a nuclear holocaust than live in a country where I would not even be allowed to think for myself.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES JUDGMENT ON NATIONAL FILM BOARD DOCUMENTARIES

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, Canadians were shocked and somewhat angered by the recent United States Government decision to label as "political propaganda" three National Film Board films, two on the subject of acid rain and one on the subject of nuclear arms. This silly and ill-thought-out decision taken by our American friends represents poor judgment on the part of the United States administration, and can serve no useful purpose.

If our two countries have problems, and they do, then surely the way to deal with these problems is by open and direct dialogue. Moves such as labelling films produced by the National Film Board "political propaganda" serve only to dismay those of us who support open and free Government, and invite greater criticism from America's opponents.

The Canadian Government must register its concern with Washington and urge that greater caution and sensitivity be used in the future. To label those films as propaganda is wrong, misleading, and inaccurate. To try to influence Canada's thinking or our decision-making process by this measure, sorely underestimates the Canadian people.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

EFFECT OF NAKINA RUN-THROUGH PROPOSAL ON NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane-Superior): Madam Speaker, I bring to the attention of the House a recurring northern Ontario problem related to the operations of the CNR. The problem to which I refer is known as the Nakina run-through proposal.

Simply stated, railway companies have determined that frequent crew changes are no longer required as they were in the age of steam. While this may be true in general, there are some exceptions. Northern Ontario, with its more severe weather conditions, the monotony of running a train through a seemingly endless coniferous corridor, and the difficulties associated with track and roadbed maintenance, are all good reasons for the continuation of a crew change at Nakina.

During the early 1970s the CNR got one foot in the door by gaining agreement to run-through one freight train per day. Based on this experience it argues that its point has been proved. This is not so, say railroaders, because this one freight train is being given a priority by train masters.

In 1964 the Nakina run-through proposal led to a wildcat strike and an inquiry which gave us the Freedman Report. Unions are now obliged to negotiate with the company the terms of a run-through on behalf of members who are adversely affected, but the unions remain strongly opposed to the Nakina run-through.

The CNR is widely regarded as northern Ontario's least responsive and responsible corporate citizen. We had hoped that the appointment of a new president and a new chairman of the Board of CN would improve the situation—

Madam Speaker: Order.

PUBLICATION OF ADVERTISEMENT IN QUEBEC

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, in connection with the grain transportation policy, on February 9 of this year, in his answer to the Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) stated: In Quebec, the Government of Quebec has led a special propaganda program, and I feel that by saying this, the Minister misled the public. On February 22, the Minister informed the Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse): The Province of Quebec, especially, has taken out huge ads, with movies and side displays et cetera. We are estimating that the total ad program will probably cost around $350,000.

To clarify the issue, I would like to straighten out the facts. I think the Minister was no better informed than his colleague was in a matter that has now become something of a cause célèbre. The Quebec coalition includes the FPU, the Fédérée, millers, agronomists, the Quebec Departments of Agriculture and Transport and even the Quebec Liberal Party. The coalition's advertising expenditures amounted to $6,089 and that was for invitations to local meetings. The Government of Quebec contributed 25 per cent of that amount and produced a slide display with funds from the Department of Agriculture. The coalition's only other source of income is the sale of buttons.

Instead of saying that a provincial Government has launched an aggresive propaganda campaign, and trying to demonstrate the need for a Canadian program to promote a policy that has been criticized by everyone, perhaps the Minister should check his sources and so be less likely to mislead the House. We all know now what the consequences can be, and the Minister should provide evidence before stating—

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

EDUCATION

SUGGESTED CHANGES TO STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, the Canada Student Loans Program is supposed to give all Canadians a better chance to get a college education or to get the training necessary to find a job in our technologically advanced society. At the present time the Program is failing on both counts.

High interest rates and a 22 per cent youth unemployment rate are very real barriers to kids from working class families who want an education but worry about being saddled with a large debt and no way to pay it back after graduation.

Also, the exclusion of part-time students from eligibility under the plan makes it impossible for many unskilled workers and single parents to improve their training while taking care of their other responsibilities. I therefore call on the Government to take positive action on two counts to call a moratorium on student loan interest charges for recent graduates who are unable to find work, and to review the loans Program to allow part-time students to get federal assistance to attend school and upgrade their skills.

THE ECONOMY

INDICATIONS OF RECOVERY

Mr. Jim Schroder (Guelph): Madam Speaker, although Canada has been able to survive the recession better than most other countries, there is no denying that the last few years have been very difficult for the many Canadians who lost their jobs or, in the case of young people, have not been able to get jobs.

It is encouraging to see some good news in the latest Statistics Canada figures. Consumer demand is up, and since inventories are down we can expect that laid-off workers will be recalled to start manufacturing the goods that people are again buying. Auto workers have been recalled in Oshawa and in Ste. Therese, Quebec, and lumber mills in B.C. are busy again. House sales are up in Toronto, where January and February sales have continued high; in fact February's sales were the highest for any February on record, except for February, 1981, when Metro Toronto was in the middle of a housing boom.

There are, then, indicators that the Canadian economy is moving toward recovery. As confidence grows, hope for the jobless will increase. It is therefore time that Parliament got back to the business of the House which will enhance the confidence and hope of all Canadians.

BROADCASTING

TABLING OF GOVERNMENT STRATEGY

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, the Canadian broadcasting industry is heavily regulated by the federal Government. It employs thousands of Canadians, spends hundreds of millions of dollars each year, and determines what we will be able to see and hear.

Following Question Period the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) will table the Government's broadcasting strategy. Members had a right to expect that, on an issue as important as this, the Minister would make a statement and answer questions from Members. Instead, in order to avoid comments and questions, the Minister will simply take the documents and flee the House to a press conference.

• (1410)

A week ago today, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) had one of the first statements on motions in the House in the past year. That worked very well for all Members on all sides. Last fall Members met with emissaries from the Minister of Communications who asked that the broadcasting strategy and the Applebaum-Hébert Report be dealt with in a non-partisan way. We thought the Minister meant it when he talked about good faith. We find now that the Minister is prepared to do an end run on Parliament in order to avoid allowing Members of Parliament to do their job.

Members on our side regret the Minister would seek to undertake this project by poisoning the atmosphere in which his document will be studied, but his actions confirm that the Liberal Government uses Parliament not as the central institution in Government but as an obstacle.

INCOME TAX

RESTAURANTS AND HOTELS—RATIONALIZATION OF WORKERS' STATUS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, restaurant and hotel workers who obtain a substantial part of their salary through tips are now being harrassed by the Department of National Revenue, which intends to tax the tips received by these workers. Although they do not object to paying their fair share of income tax, they do want a square deal, that is, they are prepared to pay tax on their total income, provided they are given normal employee status and thus social insurance and social benefits calculated on their entire income—on the same terms as other workers—including unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation, maternity leave, annual leave, bonuses and statutory holidays, and of course,the pension plan. I would ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to start talks as soon as possible with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières), with a view to rationalizing the status of these workers. "No taxation without social benefits".

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DENIAL OF BENEFITS DURING JURY SERVICE

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the Government an anomaly which occurs under the Unemployment Insurance Act when a person who is collecting unemployment insurance benefits is called for jury duty.

This situation arose with a constituent of mine who served jury duty for four days in February and was subsequently denied unemployment insurance benefits for those four days because he was technically not available for work during that time. In effect, my constituent has been penalized for performing his civic duty.

At present, if an individual is called upon for jury selection in the Province of Ontario, for the first ten days he is paid $10 per day, plus a travel expense of $2.50, for a total of $12.50 per day. This has been the fee since 1959. Should the trial run 11 or more days, he will then receive $40 per day. This innovation was introduced in 1980. This procedure with some variation is followed by all Provinces.

My constituent had been receiving $42 per day in UIC benefits, money which he urgently needed to provide food and shelter for his family. Given the per day rate of $12.50 for his jury services, he was therefore out $29.50 per day for the four-day period, bringing his total loss to $118, money which he needed.

I would like to suggest two possible courses of action by the Government to remedy situations such as this. First, the federal Government could make appropriate amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

ST. DAVID'S DAY

CELEBRATION OF PATRON SAINT OF WALES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, today, March 1, is celebrated throughout the world by men and women of Welsh origin in honour of their patron saint, St. David. Today is St. David's Day. In marking this occasion and extending parliamentary greetings to all Canadians of Welsh descent, I think we should extend as well Canada's thanks—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. I do not know what the rest of the statement will contain, but the Hon. Member knows that statements under the provisions of Standing Order 21 must not be used for congratulatory messages.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I am merely conveying a message to Canadians through this means. I think we should extend Canada's thanks to the Welsh community of New York City—

Madam Speaker: No, no, that is not in order; that part of the statement is not in order. Perhaps the Hon. Member has other things in his statement which could be accepted, but now the time has expired and I have to go to Oral Questions.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN PRICE OF GASOLINE—REQUEST FOR TAX REDUCTION

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who will know that today consumers are paying 3.5 cents more per litre, or 11 cents per gallon more at the pumps, than they did yesterday. We Progressive Conservatives were defeated because of an 18-cent excise tax. This Liberal Government has broken an irresponsible election promise, with the result that Canadians are now paying quite a bit more for gasoline than are the Americans, and yet Canadian producers of crude oil are getting less than 75 per cent of what American producers are getting. The difference, of course, is the tax burden imposed by Governments, a massive revenue grab that must be stopped.

Has the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs asked his seatmate, the Minister of Finance, or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to lower some of those taxes in order to live up to the Liberal election promise and to ease the impact of inflation on consumers?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, obviously, if the Canadian consumer had to pay an additional 18 cents in excise tax, the price of gas in Canada would be even higher.

Fortunately, the Canadian public voted the Progressive Conservatives out of office, and now at least it does not have to pay the extra 18 cents.

[English]

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, that is a pretty feeble answer. When the Conservative Party gets back into office, we will be treating Canadian consumers and oil producers much more fairly than this Government is doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): I am not expert on energy prices, but as a consumer I can say that unless and until the energy pact is renegotiated, everybody loses except the Government.

ENERGY

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP CHARGE—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Among the taxes that Canadian consumers have had to pay is the Canadian ownership charge which is used to buy service stations for Petro-Canada. Will the Minister commit to the House that, just as soon as the Petrofina purchase is paid off, the Government will at least remove this tax and give consumers a break? While he is on his feet, will the Minister also introduce in his next budget an energy tax credit to assist people on low incomes, especially the elderly, with oil-heated homes, who have no way of absorbing these price increases?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is not following press releases very closely. It was already announced last year under the arrangement concerning Dome Petroleum that funds would be made available as an investment by the Government of Canada into Dome and that the investment would be financed by the Canadian ownership charge.

Mr. Blenkarn: Shame.

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South just woke up, Madam Speaker. He has probably been asleep for the last year.

As far as the other question raised by my hon. friend is concerned, obviously he will have to wait for my budget, but I would like to draw to his attention a very important statement which was made this morning on television by the Premier of Alberta, Mr. Lougheed. He stressed quite strongly that, under current arrangements, Canadian consumers have benefited from a very large subsidy through the National Energy Program. That was the testimony of the Conservative Premier of Alberta. I suggest that my hon. friend should at least look at the record in that regard.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): When it comes to the taxes that this Government is putting on the price of gasoline, more than 60 cents per gallon is a federal tax on the production of food. I hope the Minister will look at that as well, in terms of reducing the burden on farmers in his next budget.

IMPOSITION OF TAXES BY CONSUMING PROVINCES

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. When we go to the pumps, two-thirds of what we pay is taxes and one-eighth is for the price of crude oil. Since the federal Government has agreements with the producing Provinces on the price of crude, why has the Government not initiated talks with the consuming Provinces regarding their tax rate levels, which clearly have a bigger impact upon consumers than the price of crude oil itself?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member confirmed that consuming Provinces contribute to the price through provincial taxes, and in some Provinces that is the major component, namely, my own Province of Quebec with its taxe ascenseur. I just say that to confirm that there was an increase today in the price of from 2.7 cents per litre to 3 cents per litre. But the Hon. Member forgot to mention that there was a decrease of 2.5 cents a litre on January 1. Therefore, the net increase since last fall is only one-half a cent per litre.

GOVERNMENT JOB CREATION PROGRAMS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, StatsCan confirmed that 1982 was the worst year for our economy since the Great Depression. But with Government spending estimated to increase next year at 17 per cent and the budget deficit estimated at $29 billion, the Minister has no room to spend on job creation programs. The Government is broke. Can the Minister give any hope to the 1,600,000 Canadians out of work that his forthcoming budget will do anything new to help them find a job?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker, I can certainly give that hope.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, that answer in itself would give Canadians no hope. It will leave them with a great empty feeling in the pits of their stomachs.

REQUEST FOR STIMULATION OF SMALL BUSINESS SECTOR

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, StatsCan also said that investment in new plant and equipment this coming year would drop by 14 per cent. That is about the same amount it dropped last year. This huge drop in spending on new investment in plant and equipment means a further loss of jobs in addition to the 1,600,000 people who are out of work today.

Will the Minister commit to this House that the main thrust of any stimulation in the budget will be directed to the small business sector which, in the past, created two-thirds of jobs in Canada and which was so severely attacked by the budget in 1981 brought in by his colleague, the former Minister of Finance?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can understand that, as a good Conservative, my hon. friend would have his eyes set on the past. I invite him to look at the future and to realize that at the present time all economists and analysts from the business sector, as well as the economic community, are concluding that, indeed, the indicators point to a recovery and that the Canadian economy is in a position to grow significantly during the course of 1983. Obviously economists and other people disagree as to the size of the growth, but they all conclude it is positive.

As far as the point raised by my hon. friend concerning the small business sector is concerned, I want to remind him that I have had two meetings with representatives of the small business community, plus a number of other meetings with representatives of the business community at large. The problems of small and medium-sized businesses and the importance of the role played by small and medium-sized businesses have been greatly stressed to me. Frankly, as far as I am concerned, I am convinced that sector will be a major factor in any recovery. Certainly in the preparation of my budget I will want to bear in mind very significantly the fate of the small and medium-sized business community in our economy, and I hope the measures which I come up with will have the support of my hon. friend.

PRICE OF CANADIAN OIL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. On September 18 the former Minister of Energy assured Canadians that the price of old oil produced in Canada, which is 90 per cent of our production, would never exceed 75 per cent of the international price. Yesterday the Prime Minister met with the Premier of Alberta to discuss the situation. Will the Prime Minister assure Canadians that the promise made by the Canadian Government in terms of pricing will be maintained so that if world prices continue to go down, Canadian prices will also go down?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Minister of Energy and myself when we met with the Premier of Alberta made that very point. As the Hon. Member knows, the Premier holds the contrary view, but we hold that the interpretation of the agreement was to ensure Canadians that our price would be at 75 per cent of world price.

EFFECT OF DROPPING WORLD OIL PRICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, for purposes of clarification, Madam Speaker, considering that jobs in the forest sector, the fishery, the automotive and the steel industry, in fact in every part of the economy, will be affected by changes in energy prices, is the Prime Minister saying unequivocally that the Government of Canada will ensure that, if world oil prices go down, oil prices charged to Canadian consumers will also go down?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is the very question we examined yesterday in the meeting with Premier Lougheed. Of course, not only in our discussion yesterday but in the form of a question it is hypothetical. There was no immediate need for action at this time because Canadian consumers are benefitting, thanks to the national energy policy, from a price which is only at 75 per cent of world prices for old oil. But the hypothesis which the Hon. Member examined led us to talk about the future.

I can only say that the 75 per cent pricing arrangement was contained in an agreement we had with the Province of Alberta. In fairness to the Province of Alberta, I must say that it holds a contrary view. Alberta holds the view that the 75 per cent rule was meant to protect Canadian consumers against ever escalating prices of world energy, that they were not meant to protect the Canadian consumer against the hypothesis of falling energy prices.

It is an honest disagreement on the meaning of the agreement we have with Alberta. The Premier has expressed his views, and we have expressed ours.

COMMITMENT SOUGHT ON GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I am not asking the Prime Minsiter for his interpretation of what the accord meant. I am asking him to give a commitment in terms of his Government's policy, not the policy of the Government of Alberta. Will he tell the House unequivocally that, if world prices continue to go down, the commitment made by his then Minister of Energy, concurred in by the Minister of Energy from Alberta in the communiqué, on Canadian competitiveness in international markets, will be maintained so we will get badly needed jobs for Canadians who are out of work?

An Hon. Member: No vacillating.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I hear support for that point of view from the Tory benches. I can assure the House that we will need support from all sides of the House.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You need support from everyone.

Mr. Trudeau: Exactly; particularly from the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West, because I can recall when that Province was led by an NDP Premier, the NDP Members of this House were not as vocal as they are today in imposing unilaterally on the Province our interpretation of the agreement. I just say I can give that commitment in so far as our intentions are concerned and in so far as the policy as we see it. But the Hon. Member has to realize that there was an agreement between the Province of Alberta and the Government of Canada. I think the Leader of the New Democratic Party would be the first to blame me if I gave him the assurance that I will impose my view of that agreement without considerating the view of the Province of Alberta.

Mr. Broadbent: It was Alberta's view on September 18.

IMMIGRATION

PLIGHT OF IRANIAN STUDENTS IN CANADA

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. For some time now there has been a critical problem regarding approximately 1,000 Iranian students in Canada whose funding has been cancelled by the Iranian Government. They are unable to return to Iran for fear of repression. Could the Minister tell the House what steps he is now ready to take to assist in this serious problem and allow these Iranian students to stay in Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, since 1979 and the major upheavals in Iran we have not taken any steps to deport or send people back to Iran. It looks quite clear that conditions will not change in the immediate future. We will apply the same special measures to the 2,000-odd Iranians in the country, including the 1,000 students whom the Hon. Member mentioned, as we have applied to the Salvadorans, Lebanese, and Polish groups. That means that if they have families in this country they can apply for landed status or, if they have been here for a 12-month period and can demonstrate some capacity to settle in the country, we will also provide for landing. I hope that this will be a proper response to the difficult situation faced by those groups, particularly the students, and that we will be able to protect their human rights in that circumstance.

GOVERNMENT BORROWING—SIZE OF PUBLIC DEBT

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He indicated in his earlier answer to the Hon. Member for Etibocoke Centre that he is waiting for an economic recovery to bail us out of our economic crisis. At the same time, however, the fastest growing envelope for Government spending is not job creation measures or social safety nets; it is the public debt which has grown from 12.6 per cent to 20 per cent of total outlays in just four years. How does the Minister justify his bid to borrow another $19 billion when the Estimates show that no serious attempt has been made to constrain Government spending?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member, who has a background in economics, ought to know that a recession is not the right time to try and balance a budget or have a budget surplus. In a recession like the one we have just experienced, it is perfectly normal that the Canadian Government should have a substantial deficit. That deficit is due to well known cyclical factors, namely a very substantial increase in unemployment and lower government revenues as a result of a drop in the amount of taxes paid by corporations and individuals. So this is a generally known strategy that is supported by economists throughout the world as an anti-recession strategy, and I am surprised that my hon. colleague should be concerned about this.

[English]

INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT SPENDING

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. I am glad that he admits that it was the Liberal Government's strategy to take a $10 billion deficit into this recession to start with.

How does the Minister of Finance justify a 17 per cent increase in Government spending, as shown by his own figures in the Estimates, when the Government has imposed 6 per cent and 5 per cent restraints on old age pensioners, civil servants, and families receiving Family Allowances?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the figures in the Estimates that were tabled last week represent an increase of 9.6 per cent over expenditures for 1982-83. Now I would like to ask my hon. colleague the following question. Does she feel that the Government should stop paying interest on Canada Savings Bonds, which were purchased by Canadians. Should the Government refuse to pay its share of medical insurance, health insurance, unemployment insurance and welfare payments which are now helping millions of Canadians who are in need? If that is the position of the Progressive Conservative Party, I would understand, but I can assure the Hon. Member that it is not the position of this Government.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

REQUEST THAT DUTY-FREE STORE BE OPENED IN FORT ERIE, ONT.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. At the opening of Canada's first overland duty-free store the Minister stated that he looked forward to opening a series of these stores across Canada at Canadian-United States border crossings. Since Fort Erie is in my riding and is the largest single vehicular point of entry, when does the Minister plan to open one of these overland duty-free stores in the town of Fort Erie in my riding?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, we, that is, my predecessor and myself, negotiated the establishment of duty-free shops as a pilot project. Most of the provinces negotiated with us in good faith, and we were able to agree on the sale of liquor in those shops. Unfortunately, we were unable to reach an agreement with the Government of Ontario. I suggest that the Hon. Member get in touch with the Government of the Province of Ontario and urge it to follow the example of other provinces and thus negotiate a satisfactory agreement with the Canadian Government with respect to the sale of alcohol in duty-free stores on the border between Ontario and the United States.

[English]

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, if the Minister receives a favourable response from the Province of Ontario, is he then committing himself to opening a store in the town of Fort Erie in my riding?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member's concern for his own riding. I also imagine that there are many Members from Ontario who are equally interested in having a duty-free store in their ridings. I shall bear the Hon. Member's representation in mind, and I hope that he will manage to persuade the Government of Ontario to reach an agreement with us.

AIR CANADA

STATUS OF DISCOUNT SEAT SALES

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Due to the importance of the issue I have given the Minister notice of the question. I would ask him to explain to the House why Air Canada promoted and sold discount seat sales before it had prior approval from the CAB and, in view of another deadline coming in this mess, what is the present status?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the system that exists now is fairly clear. Carriers can advertise and, when they do, they have to say "subject to the approval of the Government of Canada". They then have to file and then they can subsequently sell. That is the system. It is clear.

The justification for this system is simply the rules of competition, the requirements of marketing. If a company comes out with a sale such as the one Air Canada had, it wants to be first. The need to be first is part of the competition. The system is also predictable.

Mr. Nowlan: Are you making plans on a predictable basis?

Mr. Pepin: Yes. It is a predictable system because in most instances, 90 per cent or more, these special discounts go through. In this particular instance, the one we are concerned with, it was approved by the CTC as my hon. friend knows. It was also approved in principle by CAB in the United States. If my hon. friend read the documents he will know that they approved it. What they did after was to tie their approval to a condition concerning another company. So, what was unpredictable was the behaviour of the Americans in this particular instance.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TALK TO UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, in order to bring some certainty and predictability to this very confused situation I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Knowing full well that the Prime Minister and the President of the United States fly from country to country without CAB or CTC approval, and since it is clearly not competition but the use of innocent Canadian travellers as pawns in a regulatory fight between Canada and the United States, would he pick up the phone, if he has not already done so, and talk to his counterpart in the United States, President Reagan, to see if the CAB prohibition could be eliminated, that Canadians can travel, and that the two countries can work out their differences without using innocent Canadians as pawns?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that on this side of the House I have full confidence in the capabilities of my Ministers, and particularly in this case, of the Minister of Transport.

THE CONSTITUTION

METIS REPRESENTATION AT FORTHCOMING CONFERENCE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. As he knows, yesterday the Metis associations from western Canada walked out of the meeting of the Attorneys General on the Constitution. The position that has been taken by the Metis associations is that they are not represented by Metis at the First Ministers' Conference coming up on March 15 and 16. Will the Prime Minister act to guarantee that there will be seats for the Metis spokesmen at that Conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have not been briefed on all the details of what happened yesterday but I can assure the Hon. Member that, when I sent out invitations to that Conference, I sent them out to official groups representing the Inuit, Metis, and Indian population. Therefore, the three aboriginal groups were invited to the Conference.

I know that within the Metis themselves there was a jurisdictional quarrel which, I was informed, had been solved previous to yesterday's meeting. However, if there are further difficulties we will try to assist in solving them. I would point out to the Hon. Member that it is up to the Metis themselves to decide first and foremost who should speak for them. It would be quite paternalistic if the Government were to designate the spokesmen for the Métis people as though they could not make their own choice themselves.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TESTING OF CHEMICAL WEAPONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. I have received U.S. Army documents dealing with the technical co-operation program between Canada, the United Kingdom, the U.S. and Australia. Under this program, chemical biological and radiation weapon systems were tested and developed in Alberta, Saskatchewan, Newfoundland, and elsewhere. The documents quite clearly show that they were offensive attack purposes and involved tests concerning the spread of yellow fever, botulism, tuberculosis, genetic engineering, anti-crop agents, et cetera. I have passed this information and copies of the documents over to the Minister.

Will the Minister confirm that Canada was involved in the testing of offensive biological, chemical, and radiation weapons of war, and is he prepared to clear the public record by tabling in the House or before a parliamentary inquiry all documentation, past and present, relating to Canada's work on these weapons, before we start testing the Cruise missile?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Regina East is asking a question that deals somewhat with history. The policy of this Government as far as biological or chemical warfare is concerned is very clear. In 1925 we signed an international Convention prohibiting biological and chemical warfare. This policy formed part of the 1972 Geneva protocol. At the moment, in Geneva, we are pursuing the complete prohibition of stockpiling and production of any and all chemical weapons. This is still an issue before the disarmament committee in Geneva. It is true, however, that we as a country, including myself as Minister of National Defence, are burdened with the responsibility of protecting, by all possible means, our own soldiers and our own people against a possible attack of this nature by other peoples.

Miss Jewett: Chemical warfare?

Mr. Lamontagne: When we test this weaponry or do in fact make some use of it, we do so strictly on a defensive or protective basis; that is, to protect our own soldiers, just in case something happens.

WOMEN'S REPRESENTATION AT FORTHCOMING CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF SUBSEQUENT MEETING ON ECONOMY

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In light of the discussions now taking place with regard to the First Minister's Conference and the agenda of March 15 and 16, could the Prime Minister indicate whether invitations have been issued to women's groups so that they may be represented at that table, as well? Could he also confirm whether he has sent invitations to the Premiers for an economic First Minister's Conference the day after, namely, March 17, and, if so, will that be an open meeting?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in answer to the first part of the Hon. Member's question, my answer would be similar to the answer I gave with regard to the question of the Métis representation. However, I do not believe it is for the federal Government to designate the members of the delegations of the Provinces, of the Territories, or of the native people. We know that there will be women present on some of the delegations and, indeed, at the table in certain instances. Of course I cannot say, because I cannot dictate to the participants who their representatives should be, whether women will be on the delegations or not.

As to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, I did contact the Provinces to suggest that, since we were all in town for a constitutional conference, we should spend a few hours together discussing the economy. The Ministers of Finance of the Provinces and of the federal Government will be meeting next week. They may have some questions they want to refer to us, but they will certainly be considering short-term questions, because discussions will be in the context of the upcoming budgets of the Provinces and of the federal Government. I would hope that the provincial Premiers and myself would have some time to consider medium and longer term questions on the economy. I suggested an evening meeting, but I am open to counter suggestions by the Premiers with regard to the time.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INDEXING OF OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Moncton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Minister knows, there was a dramatic decrease in the Consumer Price Index in January. I wonder if she would care to inform the House what effect this will have on the indexing of Old Age Security pensions at the end of the first quarter of this year.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, senior citizens have just received in February, and will receive in March, cheques which were capped, each amounting to $250.62, but I have very good news to announce to all of them. The cheques for April—

Mr. Crosbie: Surprise.

Mr. Lawrence: Just read it.

Miss Bégin: —and all of the next quarter, because of the success of the six and five campaign, will be fully indexed for all seniors in Canada. In other words, inflation has dropped so much that they will not even be affected by the six and five campaign.

Miss MacDonald: Your legislation was not even necessary.

Miss Bégin: That is very good news, and the cheques will be approximately $254.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Why did you cap it, then?

INDUSTRY

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF CANADA PACKERS PLANT IN CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for regional development. Does the Minister agree that it would make better economic sense for his Department to help keep open the Canada Packers plant in Charlottetown than to spend huge amounts of money trying to attract a replacement plant or to be spending huge amounts of money on unemployment insurance for the employees laid off? If so, what possibilities, if any, are being pursued by the Government to save the plant which, as he knows, is the largest private sector employer on the Island, and which has announced it will close its doors in September?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, our Department has already given, if I am not mistaken, four grants to Canada Packers for its operations on Prince Edward Island. We are obviously very disappointed that the company decided, after all of this assistance, to close this operation. However, we have funded with the Province a federal contribution of 80 per cent of the cost of a consulting study regarding possible options for that operation.

MINISTER'S TALKS WITH COMPANY OFFICIALS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Has he discussed with any senior officials of Canada Packers in Toronto the plans of Canada Packers to close in September? If so, would he be good enough to inform the people of Prince Edward Island, through the House, especially the employees concerned, as to the substance of those discussions?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, we have discussions with regard to commercial confidentiality with all businesses across the country and it is very difficult to express those views in the House, but I will say that, yes, I have spoken to the President of Canada Packers with regard to its operations, not only in P.E.I. but also across Canada.

HEALTH

SUGGESTED CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT ON CARE FOR TOURISTS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Every day Canadians on vacation in the U.S. are being denied emergency treatment until they pay deposits. Will the Minister approach her counterpart in the United States and negotiate a reciprocal agreement for delivery of health care to visitors?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, next month, I believe, I will be visiting my new counterpart in the United States, the person replacing Dick Schweiker. I will determine the substance and basis of this suggestion and will eventually place it on the agenda, but I am not sure right now of the parameters of the dossier.

TREATMENT OF CANADIANS IN FLORIDA

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the same Minister. I am sure the Minister is aware of the fact, as described in The Toronto Star a few days ago, that Canadians are being held hostage by doctors and hospitals in Florida. This is causing great concern for Canadians visiting that State.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, we have reciprocity agreements with some countries, even on health matters. However, the main reason for success with other countries is that they also have public health systems with which we can deal on an equal footing. However, I will see what we can possibly do to resolve the problem. We are still recommending that Canadians visiting or staying for a few months in the States purchase personal insurance over and above the free national medicare.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN CONTENT LEGISLATION BE ENACTED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for international trade, and concerns jobs. About two weeks ago General Motors and Toyota signed an agreement to produce Japanese cars in California, providing about 12,000 jobs, directly or indirectly, to American citizens. In light of the fact that we are once again negotiating with respect to Japanese autos, and that past negotiations have failed in terms of Canadian content, I wonder whether the Minister would consider, in order to give himself some more bargaining power, introducing in this House, for first reading, a Canadian content Bill before negotiations continue on a very serious basis, so the Japanese will see that we are serious about Canadian jobs here in Canada.

• (1450)

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I am glad to know that the Hon. Member is thinking about jobs, because I believe all Canadians are particularly concerned about that. I want to say to him, through you, most seriously that my first responsibility as Minister of Trade is to create Canadian jobs by the export of Canadian goods.

During all our discussions about autos the Hon. Member should keep in mind that we are selling record levels of Canadian goods abroad today, and that Japan is an extremely important and large customer. Our trade with Japan is very much in our favour. Let us keep in mind, first of all, that our negotiations should be carried on in such a way as to protect the Canadian jobs that exist. Having said that, we will be going back to the table with Japan for the remaining portion of this year and for a further time period, in the near future. At that time we will be negotiating the allowed levels of imports. I may say to the Hon. Member that protectionism in respect of auto content or the content of any other product is not in the Canadian interest as a free trade exporting country.

CANADA-JAPAN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, the Minister talks about free trade. I wonder if he really knows what the Japanese are like as negotiators. Japan is a country that now has an unemployment rate of some 2.3 per cent. I want to ask the Minister specifically, if he is interested in creating jobs in this country, would he not consider introducing, for first reading at least, a Canadian content Bill. If he does not want to do that, will he tell us specifically what his goals are in negotiating with the Japanese? What is the bottom line? Is he going to make sure that there will be the development of Japanese cars in this country with at least 85 per cent Canadian content?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): First of all, Madam Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Member that if we start legislating something like auto content or protective measures, then the other countries with which we trade will enact the same sort of legislation. Export markets are immensely important to Canada with our great resources, our products, and our small population. We, of all people, should not be putting up barriers of protectionism. When we are negotiating with the Japanese we will be negotiating on the basis of seeking their investment in this country, yes, but, above all, of determining the number of vehicles that will come in. I might point out to the Hon. Member that some of the area of responsibility with which he is concerned, which is investment in this country, falls within the area of responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of Industry. I am dealing primarily with the number of cars that can be—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson).

NATIONAL DEFENCE

F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT—INDUSTRIAL BENEFITS TO CANADA

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that the Defence Systems Acquisition Review Council of the United States has approved the FA-18 Hornet aircraft as a light attack plane, and the U.S. Navy will proceed with its plan to buy 1,366 of the planes, will the Minister advise when Canada will begin to receive the $750 million in contracts, and the thousands of promised jobs as part of the $3 billion off-set package negotiated in tandem with Canada's $5 billion purchase of 138 Hornets?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think it would probably be better if this question were directed to the Minister of Supply and Services because he is the one who manages the specifics of the contract. I can assure the Hon. Member that Canada has already received over $900 million in industrial benefits as a result of the purchase of the CF-18, and each Province has benefited according to the shares and the amounts of money projected at the outset of this program.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADOR TO UNESCO

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who last Thursday announced the appointment of Ian Christie Clark as Canada's ambassador and permanent delegate to UNESCO. Will the Prime Minister state whether Mr. Clark is related by marriage to Alastair Gillespie?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I could not care less, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Bosley: Since the Prime Minister does not seem to care that his new ambassador is the brother-in-law of Alastair Gillespie, for the sake of the country perhaps I could ask him if he will put an end to the nepotistic practices of his own Government which bring all of the Government into disrepute?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I personally believe that the question is shameful and quite typical of the Hon. Member. I understand Mr. Clark has been a long-standing servant of the Department of External Affairs. He has had a very good career in that Department. He was loaned temporarily to another Department. Now the Department has asked for him back so it can have, for the first time in many years, a perfectly bilingual English-speaking Canadian at UNESCO in Paris, and I would be the last man to say that because he happens to have a relative who was a Minister one day in the distant past he should not be qualified for his job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT'S REFUSAL TO HOLD INQUIRY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Last weekend, many people wondered why the Prime Minister did not order an inquiry on the Gillespie affair. I told these people that I would put the question to the Prime Minister. Therefore, could the Prime Minister inform the House exactly why he is refusing to order an inquiry that would provide Canadians with the clarification they desire?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, since the Hon. Member wants me to do his work for him, I shall tell him how to answer the people in his riding who expressed this concern. I would tell them to bear in mind that Mr. Gillespie first got in touch with the Government of Nova Scotia—a Conservative Government; that the funds earmarked for the project were to be paid by the Conservative Government of Nova Scotia; that the project will benefit Nova Scotia workers and Canadians in general, because it would make us less dependent on imported oil. I would also tell the Hon. Member's constituents that the project was publicly announced by the Premier of Nova Scotia, who stood on a platform with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso. I would add that all this was done in full view, and that only twisted minds could see a scancal in something that was done openly more than two years ago, that was done for the benefit of the people of Nova Scotia and was, in fact, done at the requests of the Conservative Government of Nova Scotia. If the Hon. Member does not have enough Conservatives in his riding who trust the Conservative Government of Nova Scotia, perhaps he could go to his Liberal constituents who understand such things.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary.

The Prime Minister ought to know there are a lot of Conservatives in my riding.

Mr. Prud'homme: A lot of Péquistes too!

Mr. La Salle: A majority of 14,000, Madam Speaker, means a lot of Conservatives.

Since the Prime Minister seems to be very good at answering these questions, all the more reason for asking him the following question: Considering the fact that the present Minister of Finance lied to him at first and then retracted, which obliged—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member may wish to rephrase his question, since he used an expression I cannot allow in the House.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I probably should have said that the Minister misled the Right Hon. Prime Minister, who in turn misled the House. I should have said all that. In the circumstances, I think the situation is entirely unsatisfactory, and for the public as well, and therefore, on behalf of these people who are very concerned, I would like to ask what the real reason is, and if it is so straight forward, why the Right Hon. Prime Minister does not order an inquiry to clarify this matter for the general public. I think that is important, and the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada realizes this.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I do not know whether you noticed the smile on the Member for Joliette's face when he said there were a lot of Conservatives in his riding. We all remember that when he started his last campaign, he made a special appeal to the Separatists for their support—

Mr. La Salle: That is a lie! That is a patent lie!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, twice in two sentences—

Mr. La Salle: The Right Hon. Prime Minister does not have the right to lie!

Mr. Trudeau: —twice in two sentences, the Hon. Member first accuses the Minister of Energy and then me of lying. He did not withdraw his words in either case. Therefore Madam Speaker, I would ask you to ask the Hon. Member not merely to correct his language but to withdraw it.

• (1500)

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has again used the word "lie". Is he prepared to withdraw what he said? The first time I let him rephrase his sentence, but twice is a bit too much. So he will have to withdraw what he said.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I am prepared to withdraw what I said if the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is prepared to withdraw what he said. He lied—

Madam Speaker: Order. There are no conditions. The Hon. Member must withdraw his words and may not attach any conditions to his doing so. If the Right Hon. Prime Minister were to use unparliamentary language, he would also have to withdraw what he said. The Member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I thought I corrected myself when I said that I thought the Minister had misled the House in a first letter and that in the second letter he corrected that mistake.

Madam Speaker: No, that is not what I am referring to.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I take back the word "lie".

Madam Speaker: In both cases. The Hon. Member withdraws what he said in both cases, because just now, he did not have the floor but I clearly heard him say from his seat: Does the Right Hon. Prime Minister have the right to lie.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, just one question: Does the Right Hon. Prime Minister have the right to lie? If he does not, I would ask you to ask him to withdraw what he said.

Madam Speaker: I think or at least I hope the Hon. Member understands the Standing Order. The word "lie" may not be used in the House. It is considered unparliamentary language, and the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that the purpose of such rules is to maintain order during debate. I would therefore ask him to withdraw the word "lie" which he applied to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I withdraw the word "lie", but in any case, he was not telling the truth.

Madam Speaker: That is one opinion.

COMMUNICATIONS

TABLING OF NEW NATIONAL BROADCASTING POLICY

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 46(2), I wish to table in the House two documents, one under the French title: Vers une nouvelle politique nationale de la radiotélédiffusion and one bearing the English title: Towards a New National Broadcasting Policy.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) has just tabled in the House his broadcasting strategy document. Is it the Minister's intention to make a statement on motions, as he should do, that can be responded to by Members on this side of the House and questions asked, or is it his intention simply to go to a press conference at 3.30 and make a statement there, as has been happening since two o'clock with closed briefings by his officials?

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member will find out if the Minister intends to make a statement when we come to that item.

PETITION

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—CANADIAN MERCHANT MARINE POLICY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents of Burnaby and other Lower Mainland municipalities, pointing out that the federal Government has neglected to implement a Canadian merchant marine policy, although it promised over two years ago to develop such a policy, and calling upon the Government to implement immediately a sensible and effective marine policy that will result in the creation of a Canadian merchant marine and the expansion of Canadian shipbuilding and allied industries. I fully support this call by my constituents and urge the Government to take it very seriously indeed.

PENSION REFORM

APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY TASK FORCE

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions between the three Parties and I believe there is unanimous consent for a motion to be put today, without debate, setting up a Special Committee consisting of nine Members to be named later to act as a Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform.

I therefore move:

That a Special Committee consisting of nine members to be named later to act as a Parliamentary Task Force on Pension Reform, be appointed, to examine and report upon the proposals for reform of the Canadian retirement income system contained in the Government of Canada's paper "Better Pensions for Canadians" with particular reference to the following:

(1) the method of inflation protection proposed for employer-sponsored pension plans;

(2) the changes proposed in survivor benefits under the Canada and Quebec pension plans;

(3) the issue of expanding mandatory pension arrangements, including:

(a) the size of any expansion of mandatory pension arrangements required to enable Canadians to avoid serious disruption of their living standards upon retirement;

(b) the nature of any expansion, be it through the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, through compulsory employer-sponsored plans or through some other means; and

(c) when any recommended expansion of benefits and contributions should come into effect.

(4) the financing of the Canada Pension Plan;

(5) the proposals to overcome the special problems facing women, including homemakers, under the current pension system; provided

That changes in membership of the committee be made only pursuant to Standing Order 69(4)(b);

That the provisions of section (9) of Standing Order 69 be suspended in application to the Special Committee;

That the Special Committee have the power to retain the services of expert, professional, technical and clerical staff as may be deemed necessary;

That the Special Committee hold hearings and receive views and representation from interested groups and individuals across Canada and that, for this purpose the Special Committee and its members have the power when the Special Committee deems it necessary, to adjourn from place to place or travel inside Canada provided the estimated expenses for such travel and the locations to be visited are defined in advance and that, when deemed necessary, the required staff accompany the Special Committee or its members;

That notwithstanding the usual practices of the House, if the House is not sitting when an interim or final report of the Special Committee is completed, the Special Committee may make the said report public before it is laid before the House; and

That the Special Committee shall report no later than December 31, 1983.

Madam Speaker: Hon. Members have heard the motion of the Parliamentary Secretary. Is the House agreed and does it give its unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to accept the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LALONDE—SCOTIA COAL SYNFUELS PROJECT

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday on my question of privilege in the House, I said as reported at page 23279 of Hansard that as soon as further information became available, I so informed the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the House was also informed.

For the completeness of the record and so there will never be any doubt about anything, I have to complete this and say that on Monday afternoon, February 21, I was advised orally that the Treasury Board submission of April, 1981 had been found, but that it was not clear whether the complete Treasury Board submission had been brought to my attention. I asked that there be further investigation in that regard.

On Tuesday, February 22, I was advised in the afternoon that the Treasury Board submission had indeed been submitted to me complete for signature and that, in addition, a January memo to me had been found on the subject. I immediately asked that these facts be consigned to writing by the Deputy Minister of Energy so that there could be a full report to the Prime Minister and the House. I received that letter from the Deputy Minister on Wednesday, February 23. I immediately wrote to the Prime Minister and the documents were tabled in the House immediately.

I want this to be quite clear so that there can never be any doubt that as soon as the information was confirmed, I made it available to the House.

Madam Speaker: Correcting the record, which the Minister, of course, is allowed to do, should be a point of order.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): With respect, Madam Speaker, it is not a point of order. Indeed, the Minister has been allowed to smuggle in information that is now deserving of a response.

Madam Speaker: No. The Minister should not have said that he was rising on a question of privilege. Immediately from the first sentence it was clear to the Chair that the Minister was correcting the record, something he had said yesterday. That, of course, should be a point of order. As Hon. Members know, Members often get up on a question of privilege which is a point of order. When the Chair realizes it is a point of order, it permits the Member to go on and then at the end indicates that it should have been a point of order. The Chair usually hears that point of order. That is quite in order. A Minister may correct a statement that he made in the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. What the Minister has been allowed to do is to expand well beyond a point of order. My question of privilege has to do with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) misleading this House and with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) by omission misleading this House. The Minister was four seats away during those two days. He could have walked across and informed the Deputy Prime Minister who is in charge in the absence of the Prime Minister—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) knows he cannot begin a debate because the Minister raised a point of order. Furthermore, he is rising on a question of privilege, and he knows that is not a question of privilege. If the Hon. Leader of the Opposition wants more information, he may question the Government again on these questions; but I am very sorry, I cannot allow a debate on this at this present time.

• (1510)

Mr. Nielsen: I am rising on a question of privilege, Madam Speaker. I do not rise on a point of order; I rise in the same fashion as the Minister rose, on a question of privilege, to deal with the matter of the obligation of the Government to clear up its own misleading of this House of Commons when both Ministers were in the House, and it was the Deputy Prime Minister's responsibility to inform—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. If that is the type of question of privilege the Hon. Leader of the Opposition wants to raise—

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister did so.

Madam Speaker: I explained to the House that many Hon. Members, not only the Minister but many Hon. Members, rise and say they want to be heard on a question of privilege. From the very outset the Chair realizes they are really on a point of order. Hon. Members do have difficulty in distinguishing between points of order and questions of privilege. When the Chair realizes that they are on a point of order, the Chair allows them to continue; then at the end of their intervention, the Chair usually says: "Well, that was a point of order".

A question of privilege it was not; it was a point of order. Points of order do not require rebuttal in the way the Hon. Member is now doing. If the Hon. Member has a point of order to raise—and it must be a point of order or a question of privilege—he may give me notice of it; but I cannot allow him now to enter into debate because the Hon. Minister has corrected the record. It is perfectly legitimate for any Hon. Member who makes a statement in the House, on subsequent days after reading Hansard and seeing that he has said something which was not quite accurate, to correct the record.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I leave this one question to you on a point of order, a point of privilege which was raised by the Hon. Minister, of which no notice was given the Chair whatsoever, I dare say. How is it that the Minister is allowed to rise on what the Chair describes as a spurious point of privilege, more correctly called a point of order, is allowed to finish, is allowed to resume his seat, yet I am interrupted and not allowed to complete my response?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Minister rose on a question of privilege, that is true. The Chair realized from the very first sentence that the Hon. Minister was on a point of order to correct his statement. Therefore, the Chair allowed the Minister to continue. That is all that happened and that is perfectly in order.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) is rising on a point of order, is it?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, could you give some clarification to the House then? Does the point of order not have to be raised when it first comes to the attention of the Hon. Member raising the point of order? We have gone through the Question Period and Routine Proceedings, and we are almost at the point of answering Questions on the Order Paper. The Minister at that point realizes that once again there is a discrepancy in his facts. Does he not have to bring his point of order to your attention when it comes to his attention?

Madam Speaker: He may do that, but as the Hon. Member knows, the Chair, unless there are absolutely exceptional circumstances, does not hear a point of order in the course of the Question Period.

Mr. Lewis: But directly afterwards?

Madam Speaker: It does not matter. A point of order can be raised at any time except during the Question Period, where we have all agreed that unless there is something absolutely extraordinary, no points of order may be raised. A question of privilege, then, must be raised at the earliest possible opportunity.

Some Hon. Members have delayed their questions of privilege because the Minister to which that question of privilege referred was not in the House, and the Chair has considered that it could accept that delay and that the question of privilege could be heard later. But as the Hon. Member knows, most questions of privilege are not questions of privilege; otherwise the House would not function if they had not been raised at that time.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. Since the Hon. Minister placed some information on the record, would the Chair agree that he could now fulfil the undertaking which he gave to the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) last Friday to ascertain from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) when it was that he, the Deputy Prime Minister, first knew about the existence of the Synfuels project and Mr. Gillespie's involvement?

Madam Speaker: There is another Question Period tomorrow and the Hon. Member may ask his question then.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the point you make about tomorrow's Question Period is, of course, entirely accurate. There is a difficulty, however. The Minister is daily altering, albeit in a small way, the record of events.

Mr. Nielsen: Day by day.

Mr. Deans: Yes, day by day. I would simply ask that in the interest of trying to come to a satisfactory resolution of what is now a very difficult—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. That is debate, of course.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, in the House last week the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in response to a question from me, indicated that he would table some documents with respect to this matter. I wonder how long I will have to wait before the documents are tabled.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, with respect to the matter of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) making his statement under a point of privilege, or indeed a point of order, what transpired earlier on was that the Minister of Finance had written to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who advised the House as to the exact set and sequence of circumstances. I wonder whether it may not be a solution if the Minister sent a third letter of correction with respect to his knowledge of this—

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

14. What is the over-all cost of programs aimed at the francophone population or at fulfilling the government's bilingualism program as espoused by the Official Languages Act or by any other legislation currently in force?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. Data is provided centrally from two sources: The Public Service Commission with respect to employees trained at PSC's centres (this includes some members of the RCMP and some employees of the Crown Corporations and National Defence) and Departments and Agencies (Schedules A, B and C of the Financial Administration Act—including the National Defence) that, since 1976, have been providing Treasury Board with information on their own internal training program or recourse to the private sector. The costs include language training activities, orientation process, research, and specialized assistance.

Responsible for Language Training	Fiscal Years	Costs
(a) Public Service Commission (PSC)	1964-1982	$354 million
(b) Canadian Armed Forces (CAF)	1968-1982	$224 million
(c) Departments/Agencies	1975-1982	$ 30 million

2. French and English language training is mostly provided by the PSC and the Canadian Armed Forces.

Responsible for Language Training	Fiscal Years	Clientele	No. of Employees
			French Course	English Course
(a) PSC	1966 to 1982	Public Servants	50,486	13,609
		Crown corporations employees trained at PSC	8,105	1,659
		RCMP members trained at PSC	1,817	423
		Armed Forces members trained at PSC	1,470	99
(b) CAF	1966 to 1982	Members	32,302	27,715

3. The Public Service Commission has at its disposal since 1973 only standardized methods for testing the language proficiency of an employee in terms of the target language proficiency levels. The rate of success for candidates having completed their training as reported in the PSC 1981 Annual Report indicates: (a) 95.9 per cent for the French language course; (b) 99.5 per cent for the English language course, have successfully completed the Language Knowledge Examination (LKE) at the target level. Those who did not take or succeed the Language Knowledge Examination (LKE) represent: (a) employees who withdrew from training for pedogogical reasons; (b) students who withdrew voluntarily; (c) those who were recalled by their departments; (d) students who failed.

As for the Canadian Armed Forces, most of the students on training are considered capable of working in the second language at the level of proficiency required by their profession or classification at the end of the course.

4. Since the inception of the bilingualism bonus plan, departmental and agency information denotes that close to $204 million have been paid.

5. The number of employees having received language training is broken down as follows:

	Number of Employees on Language Training 1966-1982
	National Capital Region	Regions
Public servants trained by PSC	35,637	28,458
Crown corporations employees trained by PSC	3,883	5,881

	Number of Employees on Language Training 1966-1982
	National Capital Region	Regions
RCMP members trained by PSC	820	1,420
CAF members trained by PSC	732	837
Canadian Armed Forces members trained by CAF	6,792	51,401

Between 1966 and 1982, while stationed there, a total of 1,824 members of the Canadian Armed Forces were trained outside Canada by the CAF. According to the information provided by Departments and Agencies, between April, 1980 and now, two public servants were sent on language training to France for three months. In addition, during the same period, three went to Saint-Pierre-et-Miquelon for a 4-week period, and seven had a month or less of full-time language training abroad while they were posted there, while on a business trip, or travelling at their own expense.

6. The number of employees brought to the National Capital Region to undergo language training is as follows:

	Number of Regional Employees on Language Training in the NCR 1966-1982
Public Servants trained by PSC	7,635
Crown corporations employees trained by PSC	588
RCMP members trained by PSC	98
CAF members trained by PSC or CAF	572

7. For the 1981-82 fiscal year the average length of full-time courses and cost per student were:

Responsible for Training	Average Duration	Cost per Student
Public Service Commission	820 hours	$ 10,376
Canadian Armed Forces	1,030	$ 6,248

8. Employees are not required to repeat language training because of an unsuccessful first course. Furthermore, the official language policies revised in 1977, state that an employee cannot undergo language training at government expense to attain the same or a lower level achieved previously through language training at government expense.

9. For the periods referred to in reply to question 1, the total cost for the Public Service Commission/Departments/Agencies is $384 million. The language training cost in the Public Service have not been split by language of training due to the many diversified courses. Approximately 80 per cent of courses (response to question 2) have been for the study of French as a second language.

The Canadian Armed Forces language training cost is:

(i)	French training	$ 120.5 million
(ii)	English training	$ 103.7 million
(iii)	Other language training	$ 5.1 million
External Affairs and CIDA— Other Language Training 1980-82		$ .5 million

10. It is government policy that training is not considered as a loss of person/years.

11. It is government policy that training is not considered as a loss of person/years.

12. Formula and non-formula payments are federal-provincial programs administered by the Education Support Programs Branch of the Secretary of State. There are no special staffing practices.

13. Formula payments are based on average provincial education costs and enrolments, non-formula programs support specific provincial activities and initiatives. Statistics are available by Province and Territory, not by official language.

Formula payments	$1,248 million
Non-Formula	$ 179 million

14. The bilingualism program costs have not been split by population.

PETITION

MR. OGLE—SELF-DETERMINATION OF NICARAGUANS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the four hundred and third report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) on Monday, February 28, 1983, and finds that the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we engage in this debate, as we do with so many things these days, with a sense of bitterness and frustration. Where did they go, those bright promises of 1980, those bright promises of the years ahead? The bright hopes and undertakings with which this Government entered office have turned to broken dreams, scuppered promises, unfulfilled projects and benefits forgotten.

As we came into the House today, sir, we had the catastrophic news of a drop in the Gross National Product, the sum total of all the goods and services provided by Canadians. The drop is in the order of 5 per cent. That is the worst showing in domestic production since 1933. In that year, 1933, we were at the height of the Great Depression, with its soup kitchens, its bonus marchers, its farm foreclosures, its bank failures and its general despair. Instead of stimulating the economy, this Government has been hamstringing it. Instead of encouraging investment, this Government has closed the door to investment. Instead of allowing the private sector to do what it does best, which is provide jobs for Canadians, this Government has followed interventionist courses of curtailing, confining and milking the private sector of incentive and, of course, resources.

In the energy field alone this Government dropped 10,000 jobs by default when it fumbled Alsands, when it fumbled the Alaska Highway natural gas pipe line and other megaprojects that would have provided the lifeline that the economy so sorely needed. It dropped the megaprojects but went on with the Gillespie project which had the recommendation that none of the others had—it had that special urgency that comes when Liberals are dealing with Liberals. Day after day our Members have risen in this House to bring to the attention of the Government the attrition brought about in individual ridings by a collapsing economy.

In Ottawa this week, making the rounds of Ministers' offices, there has been a delegation of outstanding citizens from my riding of Yukon. They are seeking some slight sign of interest or initiative with regard to the reopening of the Cyprus-Anvil mine at Faro, a major employer in Yukon that contributes 40 per cent of the economy of that part of the country. The Japanese are waiting for the products of this lead-zinc mine. The workers are represented in this delegation by the head of the Yukon Federation of Labour, ready and eager to go back to work, having done everything that could be expected of labour. But the Government and its protege, Dome Petroleum, which took over the mine only to close it, have yet to make a move.

This is not an ordinary delegation. It represents the White Pass and Yukon Railway, the Yukon Federation of Labour, the territorial member from that riding, the town of Faro by its mayor, the Canadian Labour Congress, and other concerned citizens. From all over Canada groups have presented submissions, petitions, pleas and requests for action and in the face of the storming of the bastille—the Government's indifference—we have had an example of absolutely monumental inertia.

I have mentioned the jobs that have been lost. This is something that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) do not like to hear. It interrupts the even tenor of those plans and schemes which they continually juggle in the air—from schemes to extract oil from coal, to the latest Pitfield exercise in positive thinking, to the newest centralist intervention in the economy. They do not like to be reminded about the hard facts of life, such as the fact that they have frittered away half a million jobs for half a million Canadians since taking office. These are unpleasant facts and they do not like to be reminded of unpleasant facts. When you are riding around in a bullet-proof limousine and handing out $800 per diem jobs to your friends and possible successors, you do not like to be reminded of things that are unpleasant. Presumably the bullet-proof glass in the limousine is to protect the Prime Minister from his own supporters.

Mr. Smith: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: He has other problems, including the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith).

Mr. MacBain: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I hear the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain) intervening on behalf of his Party, which is so bereft of talent that he could think of only one name in the entire Liberal Party with the kind of calibre that could stand for leadership of the Party, according to his remarks the other day on national television.

For the first time in a quarter century we have employment declining on a year-by-year basis—400,000 below 1981 in 1982. This is just another first for the Government.

The intolerable tragedy of the situation is that of all those affected by the drying up of jobs, young people have been hardest hit. Job opportunities for young Canadians under this Government have dropped by 14.5 per cent. This is the traumatic side of the tragedy we are undergoing in this country owing to the policies of the Government.

First, it is a Government that has frittered away opportunities and initiatives that would have preserved economic buoyancy in spite of international pressures. It is a Government that was long on schemes—and still is—and short on action. It is a Government that went into seclusion at Meach Lake and came up with bold and imaginative schemes to remake the face of the nation. But sadly, after the remake it was the same old face of Liberal inaction.

We had development programs and make-work programs and new initiatives, announced with all the fanfare of a Government which spends more energy on announcing its putative achievements than it does in carrying them out. Nothing worked. The economy at this moment is being compared to the darkest days of the Depression. Does that dampen the spirits of Members opposite? Not a whit.

The Prime Minister flits to the Caribbean and promises that Canada will grant aid to governments that follow Marxist policies as well as those that choose democracy. That is statesmanship all right. This lets our friends and allies know where Canada stands.

After three years of the worst Government in the history of this country, Canadians are borne down by a sense of oppression and gloom. They sense dark clouds of disaster folding over a nation that by every standard should enjoy the brightest and most positive progress of any nation in the world. We stand twenty-fourth, at the bottom of the heap—and the Government put us there.

People sense an abdication of leadership, a fear of the future, an uncertainty about on-going prospects. Canadians have an uneasy awareness of a Government that does not care, a Government in isolation, a Government that worries more about permitting its friends to make a living out of the taxpayer—as the Prime Minister said the other day of his friend in Toronto—than in producing good management for the majority of Canadians.

One has the distinct impression in speaking in this House, Mr. Speaker, that the Government is not listening. Member after Member rises, points out the defects in the Government's proposals, and then the trained seals rise in their places, the measure is approved and another fragment of our freedoms is lost.

This is another of those rag-tag, grab-bag Bills which this most incompetent of Governments has brought before this House. This Bill is the relic and remnant of one former Minister and the present Minister. It took two Ministers to get this mess together. The first has gone to his reward in External Affairs. His own changes to this budget would have brought about the resignation of any self-respecting Minister of Finance. The second is still with us, but he should not be after the disclosures of the last several days.

• (1530)

The legislation which we are now facing is a compendium of no less than three budgets. The first was introduced in November of 1981, the second follow-up budget in June of 1982, and the third by the present Minister in October of 1982. None of these budgets went through the House because of the Government's intense preoccupation with buying gas stations, imposing metric conversion on Canadians, cooking up Canagrex, operating its several hundred Crown corporations, and daydreaming about establishing more, totally outside the purview of Parliament. This Government can hardly bring itself together about such mundane things as budgetary measures or unemployment. This Government can hardly bring itself to bother about standard practices of an annual session of Parliament, with a Throne Speech once a year, with a budget once a year, with order and planning to assist in discharging the business of the country. Sir, you cannot operate a country that way; certainly you cannot operate a House of Commons that way. It cannot be done. Parliament is entitled to have budgets delivered and presented at regular intervals, consistent with the fiscal periods in which they apply.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Instead of that, we are not only asked to deal with budgets representing several past fiscal periods and budgetary measures inextricably intermingled one with the other, but now we are establishing the practice of projecting budgetary requirements into fiscal years not even yet upon us, with no explanation as to how funds will be spent for future requirements. Under the circumstances it is impossible to attempt to deal logically and coherently with matters before the House affecting the livelihoods of thousands upon thousands of Canadians.

In the middle of this frightful disarray the Government comes into the House with a demand for cash requirements for the next fiscal year but with no accompanying budgetary measures or budget at all. This is a further indication of the extent to which the Government has gone totally out of control. Not only can Government Members not enunciate clear and workable policies, not only have they failed to deal with the problems of unemployment and economic disarray, they cannot even look after such elementary housekeeping duties as bringing down budgets at proper times.

Parliament is now confronted with bits and pieces of three budgets, along with a demand for authority to borrow $14 billion, this being the cash requirement for a fourth budget which we have not even seen yet. That is not financial policy; that is total disarray. How can Canadians expect equitable and reasonable tax treatment from a Government which does not know where its next budget is coming from or where its last budget has gone? How can business or industry have confidence in a Government whose national accounts not only will not balance, they cannot even be found? Never has Parliament in my experience been confronted with such a situation.

Here is a session which has been creaking and groaning along for over three years, the longest single session in Canadian Parliamentary history, simply because the Government has neither the wit nor the intelligence to put together a Throne Speech to tell us what it intends to do. The reason is simple: they are the last to know.

No area of Canada has been harder hit by the incompetence of this Government than the area which I have the honour to represent. The people in Yukon are like the people in any other part of Canada. They like to pay their bills and they like to bring up their families with a modicum of security and stability, yet under the policies of the Government that security and stability have disappeared. When I hear the tragic figures of unemployment in the Atlantic Provinces, when I hear the tribulations which confront the forest and other industries in British Columbia and their tragic unemployment figures, Members will excuse me for suggesting that they might gasp a little if I tell them that the unemployment figures in Yukon are 30 per cent and higher. We have witnessed there the closing of our entire mining industry; every single mine in Yukon has been closed. Employment and investment have dried up entirely. We have felt the heavy hand of Government in an area in which the authorities in Ottawa neither understand nor show any great interest.

Mr. Smith: Have you ever heard about supply and demand?

Mr. Nielsen: The Parliamentary Secretary mentions supply and demand.

Mr. Smith: I thought the Tories believed in that.

Mr. Nielsen: I will convey that very interesting interjection to my constituents of Yukon. That interjection is typical of the hard-hided, uncaring, insensitive attitude typical of the Government across the way. We have suffered a mass exodus from Yukon as jobs have dried up and as incomes have disappeared.

Members of the House know that people pay extra premiums in oil, gas and electricity, extra premiums in food, clothing, medical care, as well as in transportation and shipping, yet we have had notice that the Government will begin now taxing northern benefits accorded to those people who have chosen to live and work in the North. Benefits which have been free from tax for well over 30 years are now being fallen upon by this insatiable, greedy Government, adding one more nail in the lid of the coffin of northern development.

When the former Conservative Government was in office—and I go back to 1957—there was meaning to the northern vision, there was meaning to northern development. It was a vision that was lit by the Conservative Government of the day in the minds of Canadians who suddenly became aware that 40 per cent of the nation lay above the sixtieth parallel, rich in resources. Programs were brought into play to provide the kind of incentive for people to populate that area of Canada and to bring about a realization of the richness of those resources for the benefit of all Canadians. That policy was carried on in the short seven months of the administration of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), but this Government is doing everything in its power not to encourage people to live in northern Canada but, rather, to totally discourage them. Indeed, there is that mentality among some who would like to create that part of Canada as a huge national park and leave it unsullied.

The budgetary measures in this Bill represent a continuing saga in Liberal incompetence and in Liberal unconcern. They brought in the first budget of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) in November, 1981. It was an exercise in futility. The Minister built castles in the air, and they have all come tumbling down. His budget was so remote and so divorced from reality that it sounded like one of the speeches of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), those he very rarely delivers in the House of Commons. I believe, in the 15 years he has been Prime Minister, that he has spoken some six times in the debates in the House of Commons. He considers this place a nuisance. He considers all of us nobodies when we are 40 feet off the Hill. In December they tried to put MacEachen's Humpty-Dumpty back together again, back on the wall, and they failed. In June they tried again, practically returning to the status quo. In October the substitute Minister of Finance brought in a new budget—he did not call it that—wiping out the efforts of his predecessor and providing the most emphatic vote of non-confidence in history from one Minister to another in the same Government.

What must concern Parliament and all who are committed to this institution is the cavalier disregard by the Government of the rights and privileges of Members. Surely we have a right to expect to have spelled out a coherent financial policy, carefully set forth in budgetary terms so that Parliament and Canadians will know where we are going. We have not had that. They do not care over there. They do not even participate in the debate on this important measure before us. We have had academic exercises, epistemological experiments, casually arrived at, flung before Parliament almost contemptuously sometimes weeks and months out of date, while the Government goes about its business of pillaging, yes, Sir, pillaging, the Treasury of this nation.

What is also disturbing is that while the House is faced with the detritus of three budgets, the wreckage of fiscal and monetary experimentation, there remains enough of the underlying philosophy to cause grave disquiet. The first MacEachen budget was an exercise in unwarranted, unjustified confiscation. It was based on the premise, clearly spelled out, that all income was the property of the Government to do with as it saw fit.

There has been nothing so approaching the divine right of kings since the demise of Charles I. The philosophy enunciated in that budget would find ready acceptance in any totalitarian dictatorship in the world. In fact, the Prime Minister himself, basking in the sunny breezes of St. Lucia two weekends ago, said that, as for him, he could see no difference between states with Marxist governments and those embracing democracy. Those are not my words, they are his.

Mr. Smith: They are not his at all.

Mr. Nielsen: The Parliamentary Secretary says I am misquoting the Prime Minister. Pray correct me. Let him tell me and Members of the House, Mr. Speaker, in what respect my quote of the Prime Minister's in St. Lucia is incorrect. I challenge him right now. The Parliamentary Secretary does not do so because he knows, Sir, that I quote the Prime Minister correctly. This is something we in the House have been aware of for a long time.

The Prime Minister has to be the focal point of the dry rot in this institution. He and his Government have contributed coldly and deliberately to the deterioration of Parliament by neglecting our procedures, by ignoring our traditions, by undermining the great principles of free expression and free debate, and by treating this institution as an afterthought, as did the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) just today by his refusal to say in the House what he ran to a press conference to say. When you undermine Parliament, Sir, you are striking at the freedom of all Canadians.

We have before us a series of tax measures, some of them contradictory, some of them mutually exclusive, all of them incoherent, disorganized, chronologically out of sync, leftovers, bits and pieces of three or four budgets. How does the Prime Minister and his Government expect Parliament to deal intelligently with what is nothing more than a fiscal dog's breakfast? This kind of contemptuous disregard for the House of Commons permeates everything that is done on the other side of the House. While the Government asks this House, which has been sitting, as I have said, longer than any session in our history, for approval of this incredible melange of tax measures, most of which have been overtaken by economic shifts and changes, it goes on ladling out goodies to its friends and former colleagues. Here is a total disregard for what Parliament may think or do.

Former Ministers of this Government, with the ink scarcely dry on their discharge papers, are out making up packages with their friends in business, getting those packages approval at the departmental level by their former employees, and then getting approval by their friends in the Cabinet. In each case, they stand to make profits which would provide the ordinary Canadian with a worry-free retirement program for the rest of his or her life. The Prime Minister has produced a new guideline which he does not talk about. He does not want to talk about it. Perhaps it is between the lines. It is called the "belly up to the trough guideline."

In view of the last two weeks, I have spent some time redrawing the guidelines, not as they should be, not on the basis of analysis of what is there, which is enough for any Minister acting in a proper fashion, but on the basis of what the Prime Minister and his Government are doing. It reads something like this:

> Any former Minister may have unrestricted access to the goodies of his former Department, providing he obtains the approval of his former colleagues who are now Ministers not earlier than two years after leaving the Government. This does not prevent him from entering negotiations with his former Department immediately, nor does it prevent his using his insider knowledge and contacts to set up cosy little packages with friends in industry so as to become eligible for special treatment denied to other Canadians. This can result in quite considerable profits to those involved, as in the Banff townsite case and the coal liquefaction case. There is no problem in bypassing tiresome departmental regulations which are only there to freeze out the uninitiated, or members of the general public and do not apply to former Ministers. Best of all, the whole procedure is entirely within the guidelines. I promised I would not forget you. Bless you, Pierre.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I saw the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) smiling a moment ago because he will recognize the validity of that guideline.

This is the unwritten guideline, so confidential that even Iona has not seen it. This is the perception in the eyes of the Canadian public. And it is this perception, along with the incredible sloppiness of the Government, that is undermining Parliament as an institution of the people of this country. This Government, with the greatest expenditures, with the greatest deficit, with the greatest incompetence in the history of this country, has shown its absolute and utter disdain for Parliament.

In the Coalgate affair—some call it the Lalonde affair, some call it the MacEachen affair and some call it the Gillespie affair—

Mr. Smith: What do you call it?

Mr. Nielsen: I call it the Coalgate affair because it embraces everyone. Rather than admitting error and throwing themselves on the mercy of the House, they have resorted to bitter attacks on those who have dared to question the obviously sleazy activities in which they have been engaged. Day after day, the Prime Minister took refuge in clouds of evasion and obfuscation and, in his own words, misleading statements to the House of Commons. The truth has slowly risen to the surface.

• (1550)

This trail has always led in the same direction—to Gillespie. There were side turns and side branches, carefully hidden in the underbrush, put together by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and his friends. One trail led to the Deputy Prime Minister, who was the Minister of Finance at the time and who also at the time was Vice-President of the Treasury Board, to whom went a couple of submissions concerning this matter. Presumably he acted in his capacity as Deputy Prime Minister and Minister responsible for Nova Scotia. Now he refuses to answer questions, ignores questions or just simply fails to appear. It appears that although he is still Deputy Prime Minister, he cannot, as Minister of External Affairs, give the House an accounting of what he did when he was Minister of Finance.

Mr. Smith: Let's get back to the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Nielsen: The Parliamentary Secretary asks me what this has to do with the Income Tax Act. This Act asks us to tax Canadians so that the Parliamentary Secretary and the friends in his Party, led by those Ministers, can dole out favours, having a potential of $750,000 in profit in Canadian taxpayers' money, or an up front investment of $25,000 by Gillespie which he had already retrieved in the first year of the transaction. I trust that I have clarified, even for his thick skull, what this matter has to do with taxing Canadians. The Minister of External Affairs cannot give that accounting even though he was then, as now, Deputy Prime Minister.

One begins to see the reason for the sudden and bewildering Cabinet shuffle which took place a few months ago, which I described on that occasion as a shuffling of pallbearers, when the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources were suddenly shuffled to new roles which made it impossible under our rules to question either of them.

It is noteworthy that the present Minister of Finance has accepted his responsibility in this matter. He has made an explanation to the House. I, for one, cannot accept that explanation. I, for one, believe that despite the question of right or wrong, good or evil, he had an obligation under the traditions of this institution to tender his resignation. That he did not do. That obligation, because of the implication of the Deputy Prime Minister, was also upon him, an obligation which he has failed to fulfil. Loquacious enough on other occasions, the Deputy Prime Minister has preserved, in regard to the Gillespie affair, the attitude of Buddha personified. But then, that is his common attitude whenever he or his Government is in difficulty. We sometimes wonder whether he is contemplating his navel or is lost in meditation, but he has shown no sign of following the lead, as shallow as it might be, of the Minister of Finance in making a clean breast of his participation in this whole shoddy affair. His attitude of non-involvement is in stark contrast to the position he took in announcing the project when he was front and centre on the platform at Port Hawkesbury with dear Alastair.

If we were not aware of the purity of his intentions, the unblemished devotion shown in his record, it would appear that his present posture is one of a person burdened with guilt. It appears that he is satisfied to sulk in his tent, or his seat, and allow his colleague, the Minister of Finance, to bear the brunt of public inquiry into these activities. When searching for a reason for that kind of conduct on his part, one does not have to look far when one sees how the present Minister of Finance totally destroyed the credibility of the Minister for External Affairs when he was Minister of Finance in the presentation of that financial statement or budget.

I suggest that that is not the kind of attitude that would endear the Deputy Prime Minister to his colleagues on the front benches.

One has the feeling that if he chose, in his capacity as Deputy Prime Minister which was the capacity in which he acted at the time, he could elucidate many of the troubling issues in the Gillespie affair. Surely the Prime Minister must see that the time has come for the Deputy Prime Minister to break his silence and take the nation and the House into his confidence, as he once took Alastair Gillespie into his confidence. It is he who holds the key to unriddling the conundrum.

By speaking, he can get the Minister of Finance, who has been carrying the can for him, off the hook. He can relieve the Prime Minister of the burden of public criticism which he has been bearing on behalf of the Deputy Prime Minister. He can let the House and the public in on all the little secrets of this matter in an exercise which cannot be but of immense therapeutic value to himself.

Perhaps he could tell us what took place. Who inserted the funds for the synfuels program in the budget under the National Energy Program? It appears that the Deputy Prime Minister's original budget was more artful than it seemed. Perhaps he can elucidate what was in the submission that went to the Treasury Board and which bore the warning of Alastair Gillespie's involvement? He was, after all, Vice-President of the Treasury Board. He was both the Minister of Finance responsible for the budget and, of course, not just a member of the Treasury Board but Vice-President of the Treasury Board. Perhaps he might even go into the methods of persuasion that were used to screw the courage of the Minister of Energy at the time to the sticking point, after he became reluctant to sign the submission.

Everywhere one turns in this affair, one finds evidence of the fine hand of the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Smith: This is the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Nielsen: Again, the Parliamentary Secretary does not really understand the rules of relevance. Yes, I say to him, this is the Income Tax Act. This Government is asking for taxes from the Canadian people so that it can pay off its friends, such as Macdonald, $925 a day, and give lucrative architectural jobs to close friends of the Prime Minister, such as Mr. Erickson, to build an embassy. There is a whole list of them which appeared in the newspaper the other day. I am surprised that the Parliamentary Secretary has not read of them.

The Deputy Prime Minister owes it to himself, to the country and to his Prime Minister to speak.

Therefore, we are brought to today when, under a spurious point of order, the Minister of Finance rises in his place to make yet another correction to his previous statements. He sat there for a week. Even accepting the fact that after the week end's search he knew on February 21 that he had prior knowledge, it was his responsibility then to take half a dozen steps to the Deputy Prime Minister to inform the House immediately that the misleading statements of the Prime Minister were no longer valid. He could have lifted the telephone to do that. It is amazing that all of a sudden Alexander Graham Bell and the technology that he brought to our commerce in this country and to our private discussions went out of style. Ministers started writing letters instead of lifting telephones. The Minister had an obligation to inform us immediately. He did not do that.

• (1600)

I want to say a word or two before sitting down. I have touched on the taxation of northern benefits, and now I want to discuss another Cabinet document which came to my attention a short while ago.

Mr. Smith: It relates to the Income Tax Act, I guess.

Mr. Nielsen: It was sponsored by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) and relates to amending the Northern Inland Waters Act to make certain regulations which, in effect, would entirely lay to rest the Yukon placer mining industry. The Government has killed, has utterly destroyed, the hard rock mining industry in the Yukon, and now it is about to do the same to the placer mining industry. It will not get away with its intended amendments to the Northern Inland Waters Act. It will not get away with its intention to amend or completely revise the Yukon Placer Mining Act, because we intend to fight that kind of change every step of the way.

However, consider the Government's approach. We hear the Liberals self-righteously rising and saying, "We will abide by the spirit of the Freedom of Information Act. We will tell Members of Parliament more about Government business. We will inform Canadians more about what we do in Government on their behalf".

I will read from a Cabinet document under the sponsorship of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development concerning amendments to the Northern Inland Waters Act.

Mr. Smith: It is the Income Tax Act we are debating.

Mr. Nielsen: "It is not intended"—the Parliamentary Secretary has interjected. I said in my remarks a few moments ago that the Liberals neither understood nor wished to understand northern Canada. The Parliamentary Secretary obviously does not. I am referring to an industry which produces 93 per cent of Canada's placer gold, and the Government's decision with respect to hearings which are now under way in Whitehorse will cost that industry in Yukon $270 million.

Mr. Smith: I am sure it is important, but—

Mr. Nielsen: Taxes!

Mr. Smith: —it does not relate to the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Lewis: Who cares?

Mr. Nielsen: In keeping with the new bold spirit of the Government in making all this information accessible to Members of Parliament, let me quote from its own Cabinet document, sponsored by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, which states, "It is not intended to publicly announce the decision to amend the Act or to convene public meetings to explain the amendments or to obtain reaction and comments". That is the Government's approach.

Mr. Kempling: That's dictatorship.

Mr. Nielsen: It does things in secret, never letting it see the light of day because it might get some good ideas from Members of Parliament as well as public organizations which might like to have some input. This is the Government's idea of participatory democracy. That is why the Government can kiss goodbye any hopes of amending the Northern Inland Waters Act. That is why it can kiss goodbye any attempt to amend the Yukon Placer Mining Act without consultation with industry or with Yukoners, whom the Government has effectively frozen out of the public hearings which have been going on in the Yukon for the last two or three days. Industry is not even allowed input into those hearings which are top heavy with Ottawa bureaucrats and departmental Government figures comprising 70 per cent of those making submissions at the hearings.

I am sorry that I have not been able to convince the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith)—

Mr. Smith: At least I have listened to you.

Mr. Nielsen: —that what I have been saying has any bearing on tax measures. I have failed to convince him because he does not want to understand, or he refuses to understand. He has a closed Liberal mentality. He has the mentality so common among all Liberals today. They think, "We sit here by divine right. This institution is ours. We are the only ones fit to govern the country. This should be a unitary state because there is no one else in the country who is competent to govern". With the example of the standard of the Government, particularly as demonstrated in the last two weeks, if Canadians accept the Liberal party's belief that it is the only one fit to govern the country, all I can say is, God help my country. I will not believe it. We on this side do not accept it. At the first opportunity we will see those rascals out of the Government so that a fresh new breed can sweep into these halls and govern the country.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, it is often said that the sins of yesterday are the taxes of today, and that has probably never been more true than it is now. We have before us a document which is 295 pages long, producing for us the results of three budgets. It tells us that Canadians were deceived once again in the last election when they were told that all they must do is to vote Liberal and all their problems will be solved. They were promised cheap energy, cheaper taxes, a universal system of social welfare and total protection from the ravages of inflation and unemployment. All these promises were given by the Liberals to an innocent public.

The question arises, what is the Government's tax philosophy? What has happened to these principles of equity and fairness which we have the right to expect would be embraced in the tax policy of the Government? No one denies the Government the right to use the Income Tax Act as a leverage to regulate, to stimulate and to slow down an overheated economy. However, the Government has managed to produce a tax system which has very extended leverage to it, one which was designed to pursue certain, now clearly identifiable, ideological goals, these goals being total central control and total control of an economy. It is a system which extends leverage to those who are on the inside and which rewards political friends.

What happens to all the principles of equity and fairness? As soon as they were tabled, I reviewed the proposed changes to the Income Tax Act. I did not see anything which would relieve the plight of the truckers from my constituency who write to me. People who travel in that manner are away from home for two or three weeks at a time, travelling up the Alaska Highway. The Income Tax Act and the regulations allowed them to deduct $18 a day while away from home for income tax purposes. If Your Honour has ever travelled up and down the Alaska Highway, or between here and Montreal, or travelled anywhere in Canada, you know that you cannot live on $18 a day when you are away from home. Donald Macdonald knows that. He needs a stipend of $800 a day in order to live, while a trucker who is away from home on his job is allowed a sustenance deduction of only $18 a day.

It is not necessary to cite such a dramatic comparison, and no trucker travelling up the Alaska Highway wants to compare himself with Donald Macdonald. However, how about considering the bureaucrat who is dispatched from Ottawa to Kingston or to any place else? He is allowed a per diem of $28 for food, but not the trucker. I looked through these 294 pages and I found no relief in there for the trucker. There is no fairness or equity of any kind.

What has happened to the principle of the ability to pay? What has happened to a tax Act based on principles of equity, fairness and the redistribution of wealth, as well as the ability to pay, meaning that you pay a higher rate of tax if you are able?

My Leader just told you about some of the discrepancies that exist in the tax Act as it applies to northern residents. The ability of Canadians to pay taxes differs very dramatically in accordance with where one lives. When you have to pay up to $5 per gallon of gasoline, $400 per month to heat your home, and up to 2.5 times the southern rate for essential food for your family, as do people in the North, your ability to pay tax is less, obviously, than the ability of those who live in Toronto, Montreal or Ottawa. Is that fact respected in this tax Bill? The only reference to it is that northern benefits, which we have allowed northern steelworkers and workers in larger companies with the protection of large unions, are to be phased out over a three-year period. These people have traditionally received northern benefits for housing and for trips outside to civilization. We are now told in this 294-page document that those benefits are to be phased out. Does it contain anything to replace those benefits? There is nothing there. It does not respect the principles of equity, fairness and the ability to pay.

What has happened to the principle of the ability to comprehend? Has the Government made an effort to make this tax Act understandable to the average Canadian? Should I read to you, as some of my colleagues have done, some of the paragraphs in this tax Act that are convoluted and totally incomprehensible?

These people in Government do not do anything without a reason. The reason this Bill is so complicated and convoluted is that it is based not on the principles of the ability to pay, comprehend, or equity and fairness, but rather on the mushroom principle which goes something like this: keep people in the dark and cover them with horse manure, and you can do anything you like. That is the principle on which this document is based.

I could not pretend, and I suggest you could not either, to understand fully our tax Act today. There is a whole new cult of bureaucrats, corporate and tax lawyers. One used to be able to fill out one's own tax form. When it got a little more complicated and you had a little income and wanted to deduct money you sent overseas to help your ailing mother or relatives in a distressed country from which you had come, you could go to a tax accountant in April and ask him to help you make out your income tax return. That is not the case any longer. If you want to take advantage of all the things written into this Act today and you do not want to be shafted, you have to hire a tax lawyer. At one time you used to have a family doctor. Now you need a family tax lawyer.

It is also suggested that the crime of taxation is not in the taking but in the way it is being spent. This Government tells us that the reason it has to come to us for $5 billion in additional borrowing authority, and the reason our tax bill is increasing, as Government spending is increasing this year, by 17 per cent while everyone else's income increases are limited by the six and five program, is that the locked in social programs to which the Government is committed are growing. Naturally when the economy is in a decline the demand placed on these social programs increases. That is a reasonable argument.

This tax Bill also indicates that measures which have been laid before this House have put a cap on the social program. No longer are Family Allowances indexed to the rate of inflation. No longer are old age pensions indexed to the rate of inflation. The Government has protected itself against any unreasonable increases in the demand on our social contracts and programs.

Let me tell you something and make a comparison. It has been estimated that it would cost this country $2 billion to put in place an actuarially sound pension program that would compare with the best in the world, such as that of Sweden and West Germany. In that way when a worker had completed his productive years he would have 80 per cent of his earned wages as a pension. It is estimated that that would cost this country $2 billion. Imagine that.

This Government spent $6 billion buying service stations throughout the country to put in place a National Energy Program which has invited the scorn of everyone, and created a reputation that we will not live down in the next 25 years. That expenditure has not created one new job or found one new barrel of oil. It has done nothing. The Government spent $6 billion, three times what it would cost to put a universal program in place, to secure totally the future of every person who has ever made a contribution to the work base of this country. That is why I say the crime of taxation is not in the taking but in the way it is being spent.

What this Government is doing is to tax the poor. It has capped Family Allowances and old age pensions and it is phasing out the northern benefits. It has not forgotten to reward its friends. Mr. Gillespie will have no problem in coming to grips with the hardships of the times. The Liberals over there know how to reward their friends. Of the 24 million people in this country only a small number are Liberal friends, and that circle is getting smaller and smaller as the just society is becoming more and more just for Liberals.

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, of all the Bills which have come before Parliament during the present session of Parliament, Bill C-139 ranks as one of the most complicated. The bulky Bill to amend the statute law relating to income tax, as previous speakers have mentioned, is some 294 pages in length. Yet our Minister of Finance is asking the House to whip it through because he feels the various tax consultants need this legislation so they can fulfil their obligations to Canadians, and it will delay the return of income tax refunds to taxpayers if it is held up here.

The Minister is particularly justified in asking for a decision on this tax Bill. The tax laws have been so muddied by the process of budgets within recent years and subsequent financial statements which amend this and disallow that, that few Canadians, even tax experts, can claim to understand the income tax laws thoroughly. In that sense this Bill is required to clear the air.

Parliamentarians who have been debating this Bill are deeply concerned because it is too difficult to understand; it is simply too cumbersome a document to be swallowed in one bite. The risk connected with this Bill is that out of frustration, while under the pressure of time limitation on debate, Bill C-139 will get the green light from the House without Members being sure of exactly what is in the legislation. The Government's staff required some 389 days to draft this document. It embraces changes in income tax law introduced in budgets, and budgetary statements issued in November and December of 1981, the June budget of 1982, and the October, 1982, financial statement. It represents the work of two Finance Ministers. We need to have a better schedule of producing and debating these Bills. We need to further expand the parliamentary reform that has been established. We are still considering measures that were introduced in budgetary documents in excess of 15 months ago.

• (1620)

As previous speakers have indicated in this debate, I too would ask why the wording in this legislation has to be so complicated. The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) and a number of other Members have indicated their concern. I would ask the House to consider this passage referring to taxation to cover an employee being issued a company car. If, Mr. Speaker, you can make sense out of it, you will do a lot better than I. The legislation indicates, and I quote:

An amount that is a reasonable standby charge for the automobile for the aggregate number of days in a taxation year during which it was made available by an employer or by a person related to an employer shall be deemed to be the amount equal to the product obtained when

(a) where the employer or the person related to the employer owned the automobile at any time in the year, an amount in respect of its cost to the employer equal to the percentage thereof obtained when two per cent is multiplied by the quotient obtained when such of the aggregate number of days hereinbefore referred to as were days during which the employer or the person related to the employer owned the automobile is divided by 30 (except that if the quotient so obtained is not a full number, and exceeds one, it shall be taken to the nearest full number or, if there is no full number, then to the full number next below—

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether you or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) would be kind enough to explain that phraseology to us. Many individuals are making a great deal of money interpreting tax laws. As the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) indicated earlier, at one time we could fill out our own tax returns, but with complicated legislation such as this, it is impossible.

We oppose the limitation of the indexation factor on personal taxes according to the six and five program. This is nothing more than a sneaky income tax increase. If the Government wishes to increase taxes, let it do so. To slip this through without proper debate and backed up by a massive advertising program supporting the six and five program is pure and simple deceit.

Now is not the time for us as Parliamentarians to increase taxes. The economy is still in decline. Canadians should be encouraged to spend their money. A tax increase to feed the ever-growing appetite of the Government is counter-productive.

If the Government feels so strongly about the size of the deficit, let it cut its own spending. Let it curtail the 50 per cent increase in ministerial travel. Let it cut back on the size of the increase in the Minister's Department, and show it means business. Let it cut back where any businessman would start—on overhead and the administrative costs of running the Government. We have yet to hear why the overhead costs in the 12 largest Departments of this Government will increase by 17.1 per cent. As previous speakers have indicated, what we need is a new tax act, something to which everyday-Canadians can relate and which they can understand. It should be simplified so that tax rules are easily understood. I rather doubt that this will come about with the present administration. Their preoccupation is with the distribution rather than the generation of wealth in this country. They have stifled the growth of every sector in this country.

I wish to share with Hon. Members an article which appeared in The Edmonton Journal relating to farm bankruptcies in Canada. It reads:

Bankruptcies continue to reap a grim harvest across rural Canada as another 33 farmers were forced out of business in January, the Consumer Affairs Department reported Monday.

The figure is 32 per cent higher than in January 1982—

I have received, as I am sure all Members have, hundreds of letters relating to the budgetary measures and the legislation before us. Most of it is critical of what this Government is doing. Let me relate the one item on which we receive the most correspondence. It is with regard to the use of company automobiles. The Government did take a step back in this area and withdrew some of the provisions, but it did not go nearly far enough. I would ask the Minister of Finance to give further consideration to this area because this tax is totally unjustified.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in this debate at this time. I am one of millions of Canadians who have come to the conclusion that after a number of budgets and economic statements and other activities of this Government, of the former Minister of Finance, now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) and the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), as well as the changes, reversals and hesitations, we should get on with the job and pass something in the House of Commons after so much talk of uncertainty on the part of the Government.

I do not propose to speak at great length. I want to address one or two ideas at second reading stage. This may be of some assistance to the Government in terms of its future activities. In considering future taxation measures, we would like that element of certainty which Canadians require as to the amount of taxes they will be expected to pay. Also, we would like to know the time-frame within which these matters should be considered by Parliament.

When the budgets or economic statements of November, June and October were presented, I am sure Members on both sides of the House had roughly the same experience in their constituency offices. My office was deluged with delegations and representations from a wide spectrum of constituents in every type of occupation, farmers, small-business persons and those in the life insurance industry. God knows we heard from the life insurance industry and those who have life insurance policies. We heard from those who had certain investments which they hoped to use in order to support themselves during their retirement years.

They came into my office to see their Member of Parliament regarding the proposals put forward in the House of Commons. They sought advice as to what they should do in terms of their business and investment as a result of the proposals in the statements and budgets.

It was a preposterous and ridiculous situation. One gentleman who came to my office sought advice on a number of propositions set forth in the budget of the former Minister of Finance. He asked what the proposals meant. I could not tell him, and I informed him that I could get no clarification either from the Minister on the floor of the House of Commons. I recommended that he ask an accountant what he should do. He said, "I am an accountant". That is the situation in which we find ourselves. Canadians, regardless of their profession, have no idea as to what the Government has in mind.

We cannot get answers from the Government. There is confusion. Business decisions are held up. The Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) know this. They receive as many calls from their constituents as I do asking what this proposal means and how to plan their business.

I wish to relate to the House some of the information which those of us on the Special Committee on Procedure were privy to and were able to obtain on a recent visit to Westminster. We had the opportunity of examining the whole question of accountability and the way in which the United Kingdom, the Parliament of that country, deals with matters such as amendments to the Income Tax Act or taxation matters generally. In that country, Mr. Speaker, the question was raised some years ago as to whether or not taxation measures, once they were introduced in the budget, were effective before the Ways and Means motions and the legislation specifying the exact changes to the Income Tax Act or other legislation of the United Kingdom was passed. That is the same situation which we have now. The question has been raised on different occasions by Hon. Members of the Opposition as to whether or not the people of Canada are expected to pay these taxes which are brought down in the budgets even though we have not yet passed the legislation formally putting into effect the provisions set forth in the budgets.

• (1630)

The matter came to a point of confrontation in the United Kingdom in about 1923. It was challenged by a Member of Parliament there. The matter was to go to the courts for adjudication as to whether or not these taxation measures referred to in budgets were effective as of the date of the budget and were to be applied immediately notwithstanding the fact that Parliament had not yet spoken on these provisions. The resolution on the part of the Parliament of the United Kingdom was to pass an Act which provides for dealing with taxation measures brought down by a budget. And what they do in that country—and maybe it is something we should be looking at in this country as well—is to specify by statute that taxes which are brought into effect by a budget statement become effective on the date specified in the budget. They remain in effect for a certain period of time, within which time it is anticipated that the actual Ways and Means motions, and the amendments to the legislation in question, must be brought before the House and voted upon.

I mention this experience in Britain because of what I believe we have seen over the course of the last two and a half years in terms of the people of Canada, their great confusion and concern over exactly where they stand with respect to the different provisions set forth in the budget, because they were asked to pay taxes which were to be deducted at source with respect to certain benefits, and yet the amendments were not brought down and passed for various reasons, including indecision on the part of the Government.

We have this unfortunate experience, therefore, Mr. Speaker, which has really, I believe, brought home to us a substantial lesson, that sometimes, even though we may object to a particular tax A, B or C, it is more important to have certainty as to what the changes are going to be than to be concerned about the merits of the actual tax provision itself. The reason is that the damage which is caused to the lives of individual Canadians, to the business sector, the effect it has on our total economy, is owing to the indecision which exists in the minds of the people when investment decisions are held back because of the fact that the Government does not know what it wants to do, or is not certain.

Delays in bringing in its legislation, amendments to the Income Tax Act, cause serious problems, and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) would fully understand that since he has taken over his portfolio. This situation probably has been one of his greatest preoccupations as he receives complaints from Canadians and questions as to what they can expect in terms of actual amendments, when they can expect the amendments to be passed, and when the Government is going to make a decision about which ones they will keep and which ones they will drop from the budget. He knows the consequences this has had on investment in our country.

I simply say, therefore, by way of general advice to the Government and to Members of Parliament, that perhaps the time has come for us to look at some rules governing the time in which these budgetary provisions have to be dealt with by the House of Commons. There should be some opportunity for Members of Parliament to raise legitimate concerns or make constructive suggestions with respect to the advisability of these measures, but in due course it seems to me that what we have to do is to let the people of Canada know, as Parliamentarians in the House of Commons, where they are going so that they can make decisions about business investments, and when they will have the official decision with respect to budgetary matters.

I share that concern of many Canadians who have written to me. This Government has given me and all Members of Parliament more work in responding to letters of complaint and letters of clarification than any other Government that I can remember. That is saying something, because I have received a lot of letters of complaint with respect to the activities and policies of this Government. This budget has brought me more correspondence than any other single matter because of the way in which this Government has mishandled the matter. Unlike the Minister of State for Finance, I do not have a signature machine in my office. I have to sign all those letters, as well as compose and dictate them. I have to speak to my constituents. I do not have a phalanx of executive assistants to protect me as the Minister has protecting him from his constituents. I have to speak to my constituents, and I am proud and pleased to be able to do so. I do not look for that kind of work. I try to be constructive and give the Government the benefit of constructive advice, and that is the policy I bring to Government.

Now I say to the Minister that I hope he has learned his lesson in his new responsibility and that he will take my suggestion to his colleagues and bring something before Parliament which would allow us to deal with these matters on a more rational basis.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed, will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lalonde) which was agreed to on the following division:

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—ALLOCATION OF NON-SURPLUS STOCK TO EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, I realize that seven minutes is not much time in which to try to put down all my concerns about the question I raised on January 31, 1983. The question concerns the allocation of non-surplus stocks by the Government for market accessibility in the marketplace. I should like to define the term "non-surplus".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) has the floor.

Miss Campbell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not know if Hansard got everything that has gone on, it has been so noisy.

It used to be that we talked about traditional and non-traditional stocks. Then we talked about under-utilized and utilized species. Now the Department of Fisheries and Oceans is using the term non-surplus and surplus. For the benefit of Hon. Members I shall explain that the allocation of non-surplus fish stocks is the allocation of stocks that Canadians in the fishing industry can use. It has become the practice over the last year or so to allocate non-surplus stocks for market accessibility.

When I questioned the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané), he said he felt it was a perfectly suitable mechanism since the industry appeared to want it, and that we could allocate non-surplus stocks for market accessibility. This one related to the European Economic Community, last year it related to the Portuguese, and I understand that there will be another one shortly with the Portuguese as well that will double for them the amount of non-surplus stock in our fisheries this year.

I do not think it is a good practice for industry to suggest this, or for the Department of Fisheries and Oceans or the Department of External Affairs to go out and find new market accessibility by using non-surplus stocks.

I would ask Hon. Members to recall the days prior to the 200-mile jurisdiction being declared by Canada. At that time, all of the industry—inshore and offshore fishermen, small and big companies—protested against foreigners being in our waters. With the advent of the 200-mile jurisdiction foreign fishing was eliminated, except when they were going after what we considered stocks surplus to our needs. They were given allocations of surplus stock within our waters. I stress "surplus" Mr. Speaker.

I feel very strongly that to give up fish that we can use for market accessibility is not a good trading mechanism for the Government to be involved in.

I asked the question prior to the publication of the Kirby Report. I had already spoken to the Kirby Commission about this. I realized that one of the main objectives of the Kirby Task Force was that the Atlantic fishing industry should be economically viable on an on-going basis, viable implying an ability to survive downturns with only a normal business failure rate and without Government assistance.

It is very nice to have that type of objective. We find that the Government assistance that will be available as a result of the Kirby Report will be about $198 million. In 1974-75 when the fishing industry was also having problems it was $150 million. Yet the problem that Kirby recognized has not been corrected. On page 49 of his report he quoted from the 1928 Royal Commission on the Maritimes and Quebec Fisheries. I realize that my time is short, but I will read it quickly. It reads:

• (1805)

> The demands of the consumer must continue to dictate—

This was taken from a 1928 report. It continues:

> —the form in which fish are marketed. Consumption always regulates sales, and sales regulate not only production but the particular form of the product.

I say that it is the marketing end on which we are concentrating here. The report further indicated:

> The declaration of the 200-mile limit in 1977 served to heighten interest in selling Canadian fish products.

He accepted that. The only disappointing thing was that he did not go further. He did not allow for the fact that what has gone wrong over the last number of years is that although the industry has gone out and established new markets in traditional stocks, there are also gluts in the catching of that fish which serve to depress established markets. Because of the depressed state of the markets, we had to find new and alternative means to find new markets. This brings me back to the point concerning the use of non-surplus stocks for access to markets.

I say that because it is the wrong form of marketing. The Kirby Report recommended close to $50 million for marketing over the next five years. That is not nearly enough money when we are dealing with a natural resource which is food for the world. Yet this recommendation was accepted. Also it was accepted that the Kirby Report recommended over-the-side sales and non-allocation of surplus stocks for new market accessibility, to go along with the $50 million for new markets.

How much more will we trade of a resource which should not be bartered that way? We should have an effective industry and the involvement of Governments, both provincial and federal, so that we can go out and use the capacity we have built up over the 200-mile limit rather than decrease the capacity because Kirby had said that we will do marketing in the old direction rather than going for a new type of marketing. Perhaps this means Governments and industry getting involved with a natural resource. I do not think this has been considered by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans when he allowed this non-surplus allocation or in the Kirby Report which came out after the question arose. I am very disappointed. I realize my time is up—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I wish I had at least equal time to answer the questions of the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell). She has raised, in an articulate manner, in a very emotional manner and in a manner to which we in the House have become accustomed, the needs and concerns of her constituents. She referred to many of the questions confronting the Atlantic fisheries. She has gone through the whole scope of very important questions in her seven minutes. I will try to address one or two of the main ones.

She talked about the EEC agreement which Canada signed, and her concern that we have not obtained a good deal. I want to tell her, on behalf of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) and the Government of Canada, that we are concerned that the EEC has not lived up to the spirit and intent of that agreement.

The deal, which was signed in 1981, provided for a number of areas of co-operation between Canada and the EEC, but primarily, from the Hon. Member's point of view and concern, it provided for the promotion of economic and commercial co-operation. From the Canadian perspective, the supplementary agreement was designed mainly to assist our exporters to diversify and expand sales of their product into Europe. Canada is the world's leading exporter of fish products in terms of value, but we concentrate almost exclusively on the United States market. It was thought that this was a way of breaking into European markets. This is a very important concern for the Government and for Canadian producers.

In order to achieve improved access to EEC markets for Canadian cod and herring products, the cost to Canada would be a limited amount of surplus and non-surplus fish to be caught by European vessels. Regrettably, during 1982, the first year of operation of the agreement, the EEC failed to fulfil its obligations with respect to market access. Canada, on the other hand, honoured its obligations fully in 1982.

Canadian Government representatives have, on a number of occasions, as has the Minister personally, informed the EEC authorities of our strong dissatisfaction with the operation of the long-term agreement. Both the Minister of Fisheries and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) have recently discussed the matter with senior EEC representatives.

• (1810)

My time is short. Let me say this. Disagreement will be interpreted by Canada in future in so far as it benefits the Europeans in direct relation to their commitment to live up to the spirit and the intent of the agreement that was signed, that is, to allow Canadian producers access to European markets. Perhaps my few words today will improve the situation.

Mr. Prud'homme: Excellent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble).

INCOME TAX—PROPOSAL TO PAY RENT ACCORDING TO INCOME—USE OF TAX RETURNS. (B) LANDLORD'S ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Mr. John Gamble (York North): On February 11, I asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) a question that directly related to a practice of which the House became aware earlier in the week. That practice concerned the issuance of tax returns by the Department of National Revenue to individual taxpayers, changing the practice that had existed in the past. The return now discloses the income of the taxpayer for the immediately preceding taxation year together with the identified social insurance number of the spouse of the taxpayer. These returns in blank form for the 1982 taxation year had been dispatched by the Department of National Revenue to all taxpayers. They were mailed in the customary fashion enclosing information which had not previously appeared on blank forms. Canada Post Office, since that date, has indicated that approximately 10 per cent to 15 per cent of blank tax forms dispatched to individual taxpayers go astray.

Members of the House are very concerned about the consequences of the practice of including within blank form information that might be material to others. I asked the Minister, having regard to a statement which had been made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) as repeated to a reporter for The Toronto Star on February 7, and having regard to the comments he made in connection with the amount of rent that tenants should pay to landlords, whether there was not some indication that this practice of including information on blank tax returns might be part and parcel of an arrangement to see a plan which was approved by the Minister of Public Works put into play. If I may just quote from the article which appeared in The Toronto Star on February 7, 1983, it reads:

> LeBlanc told The Star he would like to see all tenants pay at least 25 to 30 per cent of their before-tax income for accommodation. This way, he believes, rent controls could be eliminated.
> "There are quite a lot of people who are living at quite a bit less than what has been deemed as the norm of 25 to 30 per cent of income for lodging. I think quite a bit less in some cases," he said—

My concern with the issue raised by the Minister is, of course, that the issue of the amount a landlord extracts from a tenant for rent is a matter of provincial rights. Under the Constitution, Section 92 of the British North America Act specifically designates as a power allocated to the Provinces, property and civil rights. Certainly in my Province of Ontario, and I suspect in all other Provinces in Canada, the provincial Government has taken advantage of this unquestioned right granted to provincial Governments and has enacted legislation under the Landlord and Tenant Act which deals with the right of landlords and tenants.

It is completely inappropriate and misguided on the part of the Minister of Public Works to intervene in a matter which is none of his concern. Indeed, it is not a federal concern at all. It is incredible that a federal Minister of the Crown with so many things which he might direct his attention to, having regard to the economy which is the responsibility of the federal Government and, for instance, the massive unemployment created by this Government's mismanagement, can take his time to deal with matters completely outside of his jurisdiction. That is exactly what the Minister has done in this case.

● (1815)

In any event, there is one further matter which must surely concern us. Who is to indicate what the income before tax of any taxpayer may be for the purpose of affixing the rate of rent that he is to pay? I fear that the Department of National Revenue may well be brought into play to help implement the plan determined to be appropriate by the Minister of Public Works, so that that Department may indicate to landlords the income of individual Canadian taxpayers. How could landlords know of the income of their tenants unless they had some co-operation from the government Department to which I made reference? I fear that the Department of National Revenue may be made a collecting agent for landlords, extracting a commission for their endeavours in order for that money to be handed over in appropriate fashion to the landlords of the nation on behalf of their tenants.

This Government has much to worry about and a lot to deal with. This issue is not one of them, and the Government should recognize that and leave the issue where it belongs, in the hands of the provincial Governments.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this question arose in the context of other questions regarding information printed on personalized tax returns which were recently mailed for the 1982 taxation year. At that time, the Hon. Member for North York (Mr. Gamble), for reasons which are difficult to fathom, chose to raise questions about rental payments as a percentage of a taxpayer's total income. He appeared to be concerned about the confidentiality of tax information and to be under the illusion that some arrangements had been made to disclose information about taxpayers' income so that it could be used as a basis for determining the appropriate rent for an individual. I do not know if that is a fair statement of his position, but it is all that one can gather from what he said at the time.

Let me assure him and all Hon. Members that the confidentiality provisions of the Income Tax Act remain in place and no amendment is contemplated which would go remotely along the lines that appear to disturb him. Basically, those confidentiality provisions require that information gathered for purposes of administering the Income Tax Act shall be used for that purpose only. Any exception is clearly spelled out in the Act, such as the one that permits the use of income tax information to develop tax policy, which is a perfectly reasonable idea, to be sure.

As the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) indicates, his colleague, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc), has expressed a view as to what he thought would be a reasonable share of an individual's income that could be spent on rent. This is a very common sociological concept and it is surprising that the Hon. Member would not be familiar with it. It is certainly a giant leap from these to a belief that there is some kind of plan to make income tax information available to landlords.

ENERGY—REQUEST THAT OIL PRICE BE ALLOWED TO DROP. (B) PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the question I wish to expand upon this evening relates to the question which was raised in the House today and on numerous other days about the price of crude oil in Canada. What is being questioned at the present time is the issue of an election promise and a commitment made by the federal Government to maintain the price of oil in Canada below the world price.

One of the quotations used from those promises is from the Prime Minister's statement on national television during the election campaign when he indicated that his Party was prepared to keep the price of oil below the world price and that it would not be set by OPEC nations. We find that promise in question today. The unfortunate part of it is that the Government, with its $89 billion in expenditures which it is facing, is in very difficult times. As well, there is an extremely large deficit this year. The fear in Canada is that instead of addressing the economy as a whole, the Government will address only the need for its own revenues as well as again narrowly concentrating on the energy sector. The major concern is that this Government live up to its election promises and commitments under the National Energy Program and allow the Canadian price to remain below the world price and to track downward as that world price moves. If that were to happen, we would find a very large improvement in the fortunes of farmers, fishermen, manufacturers and small businesses. In addition, we would find that Canadian goods were more competitive on the world markets. Beyond that, communities such as the ones I represent would be able to offset generously transportation costs and make general improvements in the quality of life of consumers.

● (1820)

The unfortunate other side of the coin is that if the Government opts to push Canadian prices up to or beyond the world price level, Canadian goods would become non-competitive. As has been predicted by a number of leading organizations and financial analysts, the Canadian economy would continue to recover more slowly than its trading partners. In addition, it would appear that the major and immediate beneficiaries of a move to push up the price of Canadian old oil, or old new oil, depending on how one classifies our present conventional reserves, would be a small number of multi-national oil companies. There would be no direct, beneficial effect on smaller Canadian companies dealing in the frontier areas, holding most of the new oil, which is at world price or higher, and it would certainly do nothing to alleviate the problems of those organizations which the Government strove to put in business under the National Energy Program.

Ultimately, the major problem facing us today is the fact that the National Energy Program, as devised in 1980, is in a state of collapse. There is no doubt that Canadianization has gone ahead, as the Minister correctly pointed out the other day. Nevertheless, in the present economic circumstances, those companies are in the greatest jeopardy, carrying as they do larger debt loads and dealing with areas of the country, especially Canada lands, where the costs of operation are extremely high. Therefore, those companies are in danger of losing their activities while, in fact, the major multinational corporations, the ones that we tried to deal with, are in a much stronger position in relation to Canadian companies.

The conservation effort has certainly moved ahead, and structural changes have occurred in the economy. However, on the other side of the coin, we are confronted with a severe cutback in the use of energy because of the recession, and the recession does not reflect the true need for appropriate sources of energy.

The next problem, of course, concerns Government revenues and the collapse of the National Energy Program. The federal Government moved ahead in an attempt to concentrate on one single industrial sector, which was probably the greatest single failing of the federal Government. It was a quick cash grab. We have seen the projected revenues drop from $65 billion down to approximately $30 billion, and continuing to drop to $20 billion. In fact, the projections for economic growth and for revenue sharing by the federal Government certainly depict a very difficult situation.

The National Energy Program as it related to economic growth between now and the end of the century was based exclusively on megaprojects which have all gone down the drain. Again, there has been a tremendous failing, not only of the national energy policy but also of our economic policy, or lack of one.

The question with which we are dealing is an integral part of the National Energy Program which has gone amok, and a made-in-Canada oil price is what we have basically considered, and it will have to be maintained. It is a fact that Canadians, if given a slightly beneficial price in relation to the world price of oil, would gain the advantage. There would be an acceleration in economic recovery which would improve the entire country.

The last aspect of the collapse of the National Energy Program which we are attempting to address tonight concerns the agreements between the producing and consuming Provinces. We are in a state of absolute turmoil. Recent events between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland have been of tremendous concern to the people of Canada and to the people of Newfoundland. The federal Government's role in that process has been less than honourable, I would suggest. Further, a wedge must not be driven between Alberta and Canada. It is very necessary to resolve the problems arising in an attempt to come to an agreement with the Province of Newfoundland in a fair and equitable way.

I think that the sixth point is the necessity of reaching agreements that will develop a unity of purpose between the producing Province and the consuming Provinces, with representation from the federal Government, is vitally important, and the fact that it matters not whether the federal Government is able to exercise jurisdiction through the courts. Ultimately the caring and sharing and the fair approach of the National Energy Program which was outlined in that basic document is not being displayed or adhered to by the federal Government. What we see on the part of the federal Government, particularly in the Newfoundland agreement, is a failure to take into account the needs of certain regions in this country for some control over the pacing and nature of development that occurs there, within the greater context of energy security for Canada as a whole.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, 18 months ago today an agreement was signed between the Government of Canada and the Province of Alberta which established the basis for our current petroleum pricing policy. This policy is that the world price is paid for oil imported into Canada and for newly discovered oil from domestic sources, while a maximum of 75 per cent of the world price is paid for oil produced in Canada that was discovered several years ago. The pricing mechanism administered by the government provides for a blending of these prices and, consequently, the Canadian price of petroleum products paid by consumers is always lower than the international price.

To encourage greater use of our abundant natural gas resources, our pricing policy includes a provision whereby the price of natural gas in the market is determined at Toronto in a 65 per cent price relationship with oil. The prices of oil and gas also strongly influence the prices of electrical energy and other energy sources and, consequently, our entire energy price structure is established at highly competitive levels in relation to energy prices in other countries.

• (1830)

The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) in this House on February 22 stated that the U.S. price of gasoline was only 95 cents a gallon whereas the price in Canada is $2 or more a gallon. Even if one makes the generous assumption that he was expressing the U.S. price in terms of the U.S. dollar and the American gallon, and comparing it with the Canadian price in imperial gallons, his apples and oranges comparison is still in error. The fact is that Canadian and U.S. gasoline prices are not greatly different on an average basis. Where Canadian gasoline prices do exceed those south of the border, it is largely due to higher provincial Government taxes in relation to state taxes in the U.S. Heating oil prices in Canada are considerably lower than U.S. heating oil prices. It should be noted too, that our gasoline prices are very much lower than those in European countries.

As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) noted in responding to the Hon. Member's question on February 22, the oil pricing policy has not been changed. Under agreements in operation since the latter part of 1981 with the Governments of Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, Canadians are benefiting from lower oil prices than if our prices were set at international levels.

Representations have been made by those who feel that changes are now needed in the 75 per cent relation to the international level and that the domestic price should be raised immediately, or in steps, to the international ceiling. The Government understands their views but would be extremely reluctant to change the basic policy. In any event, it would be premature at this time of great price uncertainty to take any final decisions. What can be said with certainty is that price and decisions for the future will have careful regard to the interests and concerns of producers and consumers, and to the objectives of regional and economic growth.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.34 p.m. the House adjourned, without question, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

AIR TRANSPORT

INTEGRATION OF NORDAIR AND QUEBECAIR

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, I would like to recall that in the Quebecair case, the plan to merge Nordair and Quebecair fell through as a result of action taken by Minister Bernard Landry. Today, I want to denounce the attitude of the Minister of Transport, Michel Clair, who at the first meeting of the Parliamentary Committee on Quebecair threatened to use nationalization—in fact, the Government already owns 87 per cent—in a bid to save the airline. The Minister preferred to use threats and ultimatums instead of approaching the case from a strictly economic point of view.

Madam Speaker, I feel this attitude is absurd and highly unreasonable, and it is, once again, typical of these frustrated people who base their thinking on the nationalistic principles derived from a separatist, Parti Québécois party line.

Madam Speaker, I think it is positively abhorrent to use the Commission's first meeting to play on people's sentiments this way instead of taking a strictly economic approach. The atmosphere in Quebec is permeated by this separatist virus, and as a result, the death knell is sounding for the economic sector in Quebec. In fact, the same philosophy is reflected in higher sales taxes, the highest gas prices in North America, an uncertain political climate and on top of it all, the highest income taxes in Canada. In this connection, Normand Girard wrote in one of the morning papers: The Quebec tax authorities—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

PETRO-CANADA

INCREASE IN ESTIMATES FOR 1983-84

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, in 1979 the then Conservative Government, recognizing among other things the potential loss of parliamentary control that Crown corporations represented, attempted either to justify or to dispose of many of these entities. A month ago the Auditor General made the self same point.

The Government, being interested not in parliamentary control but in its own unfettered power, has chosen to move in the opposite direction. Now it plans to pump another $368 million into our old favourite, Petro-Canada, in the coming fiscal year, which is up 272 per cent over current year spending. So much for six and five. Clearly, six and five is only for employees and pensioners. This will bring Government investment in Petro-Canada up to almost $5 billion. Can anyone here imagine a company in the private sector coming into the marketplace with financing of $5 billion?

What has this $5 billion of taxpayers' money bought? Some new signs for already existing service stations and the muscling in on already existing drilling permits. Can there be any wonder that the private sector, like most of the private citizenry of this once favoured nation, has given up all confidence and even hope in this discredited, tottering Government?

PENSIONS

WORK OF ALL-PARTY TASK FORCE

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, yesterday the House of Commons agreed to form an all-party task force on pension reform. It will examine our Government proposals in the Green Paper called "Better Pensions for Canadians", including reference to income protection in private plans, survivor benefits, expanding mandatory pension arrangements, financing the CPP, and overcoming special pension problems of women, including homemakers.

I believe that pension reform is the most essential social reform before us today. Liberal Governments over the last 30 years have brought in Old Age Security, Guaranteed Income Supplement, spousal allowance, and the Canada Pension Plan. They provide an income security base for our seniors, but many difficulties still exist in the public and, in particular, the private pension plans, regarding financing, vesting, portability, income protection and survivor benefits. The task force will examine the Green Paper and other recent reports and proposals on pension reform; will retain expert advisers; will hold hearings in Ottawa and across Canada open to all interested groups, and will report by the end of 1983.

I am confident that our Liberal Government, with the cooperation of the Provinces and private sector, will introduce significant pension reform legislation shortly thereafter.

HEALTH

HEPATITIS IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, yesterday a CP wire story focused on hepatitis in the Northwest Territories, citing that in Fort Rae, for example, 61 per cent of the people tested showed evidence of infection and 12 per cent of these were active carriers—60 times the national average. This is common knowledge to people who live in the Territories where diseases such as hepatitis and amoebic dysentry, which are more often associated with Third World countrie, are endemic.

Medical experts agree that the battle against these diseases will not be won until public sanitation systems can be upgraded to the standards of southern Canada.

In his speech to the Liberal Convention last November, the Prime Minister said, "We will put in place a national program to rebuild our communities" and "there are roads to be built and sewers to be constructed." Let him now keep to his word and work closely with the municipal and territorial Governments to build these desperately needed sewer systems so that our children no longer will be obliged to play amongst the barrels and bags of human excrement which line the streets of northern communities, awaiting collection.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EL SALVADOR—CONTENT OF CANADIAN RESOLUTION AT GENEVA CONFERENCE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I would like to state categorically today that I was amazed at the weakness of Resolution L-18 that was tabled by the Canadian delegation to the Human Rights Commission in Geneva this past week. It is about El Salvador but does not mention the real causes of the problems in El Salvador. It does not call on all foreign Governments to stop sending arms to that country, and it does not call for dialogue and negotiations.

In light of these matters the Holy Father, Pope John II, is visiting that region of the world this week. He is attempting to bring about some kind of peaceful solution to the whole area, but at the same time President Reagan of the United States is calling for $60 million more in military aid to El Salvador, as well as trying to increase the number of military advisers in the country.

• (1410)

Secretary Schultz of the United States has likewise, in a most insensitive way, attacked the Church, and particularly Archbishop Arturo Rivera y Damas, recently appointed Archbishop of El Salvador, for the position that the Archbishop holds which calls for dialogue.

Therefore I call upon the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to make our voices heard in the United States against such action, and, at the same time, to join together with the Governments of Mexico, France and Venezuela, and all others who are attempting to bring about peace in that region.

SPORTS

CANADA WINTER GAMES IN SAGUENAY-LAC-SAINT-JEAN REGION

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, the 1983 Canada Winter Games closing ceremonies will take place this evening, and I believe that it is fitting that we should draw the attention of the House to the fact that something like 2,000 Canadian athletes from our ten provinces and two territories have taken part in this sporting event. The Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area has hosted the 1983 Canada Winter Games. Close to 5,000 volunteers from the four host cities, namely Chicoutimi, Jonquière, Alma and Ville de la Baie, devoted their time and energy to ensure the success of that great sporting event.

The Right Hon. the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) attended the opening ceremonies, and he was impressed, as was the public at large, by the show which featured 410 singers, dancers, musicians and entertainers of my region. The 1983 Canada Winter Games were nothing less than the celebration of amateur sports, Canadian unity, and friendship between youths. As well, the Games did contribute to bringing our people closer together while fostering a spirit of cooperation and unity among all public associations of the area. The Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mr. Perrault) has played a leading role in the organization of the Games. The organizers, the participants and especially the volunteers at all levels are to be commended for their contributions.

Finally, I am convinced that the flame of the Canada Games which will be put out in Chicoutimi this evening will be lit anew in four years with as much—

AIR TRANSPORT

APPLICATION OF REGULATIONS TO SMALL FIRMS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, following the release of the Dubin Report, the Department of Transport began a campaign to ensure that every regulation which governed the air industry, and especially the helicopter industry, was complied with to the letter. Rather than attempting to ensure compliance from all sectors of the industry, it is the small operator who is being scrutinized, and special care is given to persecute those in the helicopter industry. As a consequence many are finding themselves in court on charges of a very minor or technical nature for practices which have been followed for years. At the beginning of January alone, there were fifteen such cases in British Columbia.

The situation has deteriorated to such an extent that the viability of small businesses governed by the air carrier regulations is seriously jeopoardized. Why is it that just the small-businessman is being scrutinized, and why is it that the Department only became concerned over possible minor violations after the Dubin Report was released?

To date no progress has been made in reaching a conciliation. The Department, in its mailed first approach, is forcing the independent operator into oblivion. Due to the total insecurity which exists in the industry, applicants cannot even bid for contracts simply because they do not know whether their applications for licences will be approved. Even so, applications are four months behind in processing. As a result the large firms are seizing the small contracts in coastal communities, which were traditionally the preserve of the small operator.

When the economy picks up, these small communities—

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

CONFERENCE BOARD FORECAST OF GROWTH IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, two weeks ago the Conference Board of Canada came out in its latest quarterly provincial economic forecast with the tragic prediction that our economy would grow by only 1.2 per cent in 1983. But even more shocking, Madam Speaker, if you can imagine it, is the fact that the growth rate in Saskatchewan will be 0.4 per cent, or about one-third of the national average. That is lower than any other Province in Canada.

In 1981 Saskatchewan had the highest growth rate in Canada, but after only eight short months of a Tory Government in that Province it has fallen from number one to number ten.

Mr. Epp: Try Manitoba for size.

Mr. Nystrom: Tory times are tough times. I see the Tories are objecting.

• (1415)

Another interesting fact is that bankruptcies are up by 116 per cent in eight months; unemployment has gone up from 4.6 per cent to 7.7 per cent, and that also is in in eight short months. History is repeating itself. The Tories are campaigning in our Province that they are open for business. Ross Thatcher and his Liberal Party did the same thing 20 years ago and those were seven long, lean years of liberalism that made our Province a have-not Province.

I ask, if this happens in eight months, just think what would happen to this country if that Party were in power for four years.

BROADCASTING

PUBLICATION OF STRATEGY—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS FOR CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications and it arises from his vague national broadcasting strategy which he announced outside the House yesterday. One can now see why he chose not to announce it in the House; it was because it was embarrassing because it contained so little.

The broadcasting strategy contains nothing on radio, and the Government's policy for the CBC is to tell it to study itself. In view of the fact that it is proposing major new competition to private broadcasters, how does the Government expect private broadcasters to plan for the future when the Government is incapable of making up its own mind about what to do with the CBC?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): In reply to the hon. gentleman I notice, for instance, that the Canadian Cable Television Association labels the strategy a significant turning point and the beginning of a new era for consumers and entrepreneurs alike. Yesterday was a significant turning point, particularly in relation to the development of Canadian programming. The Government announced that it would be making a fund of some $60 million available to the private sector in Canada to produce quality Canadian programming. This in turn will bring another $120 million of production funds into the hands of private program producers. What happened yesterday was not only a major advance in the area of program production for the Canadian creative community, it was indeed a quantum leap.

FUTURE OF PRIVATE BROADCASTERS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, perhaps now that the Minister has unburdened himself of that little speech he can answer the question. How are private sector broadcasters expected to plan for the future when the Government itself is incapable of deciding what it wants to do with the CBC?

Will the Minister also tell the House why did he last fall, on October 7 when he issued a press release, make false threats against bar owners who had TVRO's that were unlicensed, only to flip-flop on the policy yesterday?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I know that there are games that parliamentarians play, and I know full well that if I had come out yesterday with the CBC policy the Hon. Member would have said that I had cast aside the Applebaum-Hébert Report, that I had not allowed sufficient debate to take place in the community, that I had not allowed the Standing Committee on Culture and Communications of the House to pronounce itself on the Applebaum-Hébert Report, and on the models they proposed for the CBC.

I have yet to hear any informed comments by the Hon. Member on how he thinks the CBC ought to develop in the months to come. In the absence of that type of informed comment, I have of course asked the Board of the CBC to let me have their comments on how they see the CBC developing. My own officials are examining the situation, and I trust that during the course of examination of the Applebaum-Hébert Committee Report by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, over the next month or so, I will indeed have the advice of that Committee before any hard and fast decisions are taken.

In the meantime, obviously the CBC, which, as I indicated yesterday, is a crucial component of the Canadian broadcasting system, will continue to operate and the private broadcasters will continue to live with a strong public broadcasting component in the Canadian broadcasting system.

POLICY ON LEGALITY OF SATELLITE RECEIVING DISH ANTENNAS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, on this side of the House we will be glad to give the Minister all the advice that he wants. We know that he needs a great deal of it. Will he now answer the question I asked before about his flip-flop on bars and, secondly, can he confirm that in fact he told a reporter yesterday that, on two elements of his policy, the two out of four that required parliamentary action, he did not intend to introduce legislation until September? This would likely result in no action being taken until after the next election. When is the Minister going to get moving?

• (1420)

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, on the question of dish antennas, the policy statement made by the Government yesterday was to the effect that we wanted to ensure that Canadians who live in remote areas, particularly those who live in the northern part of Provinces such as Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, like their cousins from the south, have access to a comparable range of programming. We feel that because of the type of satellite development we have gone through with Canadian industries over the past ten years in the development of technology, that technology should be made available to Canadians in all parts of the country. Indeed, we have opened to Canadians living in all parts of the country access to what I consider to be one of the finest broadcasting systems in the world.

CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION TASK FORCE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CO-OPERATE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that earlier this day the Canadian Medical Association announced the formation of a task force to look into the allocation of health care resources. This task force is, I believe, in response, to the lack of action on the part of the Government, and growing concern about the medical care crisis which is expressed by professional groups, including doctors, nurses, physiotherapists, and by lay groups including churches, unions, and so on. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether or not the CMA request that they receive co-operation from the Government will in fact be met? Will the Government be co-operating with that task force?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, but I will be happy to take notice of the question on behalf of the Minister.

FUNDING FOR HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, the crisis in health care is partly a funding crisis. The Prime Minister has announced his intention to hold a First Ministers' conference to deal with the economy. Can the Prime Minister tell us if on that agenda he will be dealing with the issue of money for the health care system before it is too late and too many people die?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the meeting I am planning with the Premiers on the economy is to deal with the middle and longer-term issues. The Ministers of Finance will be meeting next week and they will be dealing with the short-term issues. I think they will be dealing mainly with the economic issues. In so far as health and welfare issues are concerned, they will, of course, be dealt with by the responsible Minister.

BROADCASTING

GOVERNMENT STRATEGY—POLICY ON CABLE COMPANIES

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question to the Minister of Communications is really supplementary to the series of questions asked a little earlier. The Minister has assured the House that if you live in a bar or in the bush you can watch a satellite dish, but if you live in a senior citizens' highrise or a co-op apartment, you cannot.

The Minister has obviously come out in favour of cable companies to protect their economic interests. Since he has dedicated himself to protecting the profitability of the cable companies, what plans does he have in mind for the cable companies to contribute to the broadcasting industry in some way through tax incentives, or revisions of the Copyright Act, an amount equivalent to the protection they are getting from the Minister?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the method that we have opted for is one of reinforcing the Canadian broadcasting system as a whole by making a fund available to independent program producers who, having obtained a distribution agreement either from the private sector broadcasters or public sector broadcasting, can then make a draw on the fund.

As far as cable operators are concerned, our general analysis of the situation is to the effect that, in order to meet the competition that will undoubtedly come from dishes, which will really be the competition for the cable operators in this country, the cable operators on the whole will have to modernize their plant. They will have to get into two-way television. They will also have to offer a variety of new services, both programming and non-programming services, to their subscribers. We feel that with that type of situation the cable operators will not only survive but will be able to compete very effectively with any of the new technology.

I would like to add that this is the same analysis that has been made in other countries, to wit, France, which this year is cabling 27 cities, and Great Britain where the Hunt Report recommends that in the face of the new technology, DBS technology, that country should also go cable, as is the case at the moment in Germany and Austria.

FUNDING FOR CBC PROGRAMMING

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, there are a number of comments and questions that a person could ask about the Minister's mythical fund. We really do not know anything about it. It provides loans and partial equity, but we really do not know how it is going to go over, and how it will work. In fact we do not even have the fund. It is all somewhere in the distant future, like the minister's mind and his decision.

The Minister calls upon the CBC to provide more Canadian content, and he knows very well that the necessity for Canadian content is so the CBC can compete with all the other agencies which deliver signals. Since Canadian content is based on the amount of money which the CBC can spend on programming, I would like the Minister to take that quantum leap and tell the House today what he plans to do to improve the viability and financial backing of CBC programming?

• (1425)

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will remember, undoubtedly, the Applebaum-Hébert Commission had a number of far-reaching recommendations concerning the CBC. One of those recommendations was that the CBC make a greater effort to increase the amount of programming which it contracts out to the private sector. If the Hon. Member reads the document which I tabled in the House yesterday he will see that the CBC can indeed have a call via the private production sector on that fund, and that call can be up to one-half of that fund, that is, up to 30 million new dollars.

SATELLITE RECEPTION IN MOTEL PREMISES

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister, and it is in respect of his announcement yesterday on satellite dishes and how they will affect hotel owners and so on. I read in The Citizen this morning that Item 3 of his four proposals would affect hotels and motels. Would the Minister tell us if hotel and motel owners will be allowed to direct incoming signals into rooms throughout their premises instead of into one central room where guests would have to go to view it rather than in the privacy of their own rooms?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I tabled the document in the House yesterday. If I may be so bold, I suggest to the Hon. Member that instead of simply reading a newspaper account of this he should take the trouble to read the original. If he reads the original, he will see that we have eliminated the requirement for licences for TVRO's which are used for individual purposes. We are also exempting from the licensing requirement certain categories of commercial establishments such as bars, one of which the Hon. Member mentioned before, where the signal is simply displayed for the convenience of the patrons. In the case of redistribution of signals to rooms, or redistribution of signals to various apartments which will be part of a complex, then the MATV rules will apply and would require an application to the CRTC for a licence.

TRADE

UNITED STATES PROTECTIONIST MEASURES—CANADIAN LUMBER INDUSTRY

Mr. Claude Tessier (Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for International Trade. Following his meeting on Monday with the American Trade representative, Mr. Brock, and his previous contacts with the Secretary of Trade, Mr. Baldridge, and the Secretary of State, Mr. Schultz, can the Minister assure the House and Canadian lumbermen that the complaint being reviewed to the effect that Canada practices various forms of dumping which are harmful to the American industry is unfounded and that Canada cannot accept undue American protectionism on or any protectionist measures which would endanger the Canadian lumber industry, an industry vital for our economy and essential for meeting American demand?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I met with the American Secretary of Trade, Mr. Baldridge, in Washington last Monday to discuss the forest industry and the proposed compensatory charges. It was the third time that I had met Mr. Baldridge to discuss this matter. The provincial ministers, the industry and the Government of Canada have worked together to meet this threat to our industry. I am confident that our position is correct. There are no subsidies on our lumber exports to the United States. We expect the Americans will announce their decision next Monday.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CERTAIN DOCUMENTS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday, by way of a point of order at the end of Question Period, the Minister of Finance gave one more version of what he knew and when he knew it in regard to the "Coalgate" affair. This represents the fifth or sixth time that we have had a change in the story when the previous story would not stand up to examination. Clearly a cover-up is under way.

On Monday I wrote to the Minister requesting that he make public two documents that were not among those he tabled in the House on February 23, plus all relevant PetroCan documents. Has the Minister asked his departmental officials to check the files of the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project for the January 12, 1981, minutes of the joint management committee? Also, has he had his officials check the July 9, 1981, directive referred to from the Minister to his Deputy which was referred to in a letter by the Deputy on July 14, 1981? Has he asked Petro-Canada for its complete files on this project? In the interest of putting an end to this cover-up, will he table those documents and make them available?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think I have some technical problems to overcome. In order to table the minutes of January 12, I had to seek the consent of the Premier of Nova Scotia. Apparently he has given his consent, so I will be able to table that.

In terms of the directive of July 9, it was a verbal directive so there is no such document.

In terms of the file of Petro-Canada, some of the correspondence involved private sector partners. In that file there is communication between the Nova Scotia Government and Mr. Gillespie and I have to seek the consent of those two parties before I can table the documents.

I hope that I will be in a position to table everything with the consent of all the parties involved by tomorrow. Of course because some of the documents are commercial in nature, and I have to seek the consent of the Nova Scotia Government and Gillespie and Associates.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, the Minister's contention that that directive of July 9, 1981, referred to in the letter from Mr. Cohen to the former Minister of Energy in the letter of July 14, would not lead one to believe that it is an oral communication. He refers to a directive. It certainly looks as if it is a written communication. I would ask the Minister to have his officials re-examine that situation.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, if we have the final story on the record and the Minister is willing to table all these documents, in the interest of putting an end to the suspicion of cover-up, and in an effort to repair some of the damage that has been done to this institution by the violation of the guidelines and the failure to accept responsibility by the Ministers, will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources permit a committee of this House to examine this whole question and look at all the available documentation so that there can be no doubt about what is the complete and true story?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there has been a lot of debate in the House about this. I have tabled more documents than ever before, and I will table some others when I have the consent of the people involved. I hope to have all these things ready for tomorrow. I had hoped to have them ready for today, but one confirmation is not in yet. I think Hon. Members should appreciate that I have been extremely open in that fashion.

AWARENESS OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER OF SYNFUELS PROJECT

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question that I attempted to deal with yesterday on a point of order. He will recall, and the House will recall, that last Friday he gave an undertaking to the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party to ascertain from his predecessor, now the Deputy Prime Minster and then Minister of Finance, when the Deputy Prime Minister first became aware of the existence of the Synfuels project and the participation of Alastair Gillespie. Is he now in a position to fulfil that undertaking, or perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister would prefer to answer directly?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have checked with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He indicated to me that, although he has not been able to find any particular, clear record in this regard, his view is that he would have been made aware some time in June of 1980.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, perhaps we can pursue the antecedents of this fascinating affair somewhere else.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He will recall that he, as well, indicated last Wednesday in response to a question from the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe that he would, I think he said, "look into" the possibility of producing some of the records, documents and correspondence from the Cape Breton Development Corporation. I wonder if he would be good enough to tell the House what progress he has made on this request.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, immediately after Question Period that day I contacted the president of the Cape Breton Development Corporation and asked him to forward to me any documents with respect to this transaction. At the present time our officials are looking at those documents for relevant information to give to the Hon. Member.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CANADA-JAPAN AGREEMENT—CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for International Trade. For the past two weeks the Minister has been boasting about his new six-month automotive agreement with Japan. Yesterday he said in this House, as reported at page 23333 of Hansard:

—my first responsibility as Minister of Trade is to create Canadian jobs by the export of Canadian goods.

I should like to ask the Minister a clear and simple question and I hope he will answer it just as clearly, instead of going into his usual diatribe. How many new jobs, and I stress the word "new", has this agreement created in Canada?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks a very difficult question and I will tell him in a very straightforward manner why he does. The fact that 11,000 fewer cars will come into Canada from Japan in the first six months of this year than last year would presumably create a considerable number of additional jobs in the Canadian car industry were it not for the fact that we are involved in a common market in cars with the United States. Of the cars sold in Canada that are considered to be of domestic origin, 90 per cent are actually manufactured in the United States, while a great number of cars manufactured here are sold in the United States.

Whether the fact that fewer Japanese cars are coming in will mean that more jobs will be created immediately in the Canadian car factories is a matter for Mr. White and UAW to negotiate with the car companies.

Mr. Jelinek: Madam Speaker, it is very obvious that the Minister is as ineffective in international trade as he was in the portfolio of fitness and amateur sport. He knows full well that that agreement does not create one new job in this country.

SALES OF AUTOMOTIVE PRODUCTS ABROAD

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): My supplementary question to the Minister is to ask him what has he done, or what does he intend to do in the domestic auto industry to create jobs in Canada by way of automotive exports, other than exporting Canadian jobs to Japan? Perhaps the Minister will share with us, with the House and with the industry, figures on the sales he has made of automotive products abroad during his extensive travels.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I have to conclude that the Hon. Member's condemnation of my effectiveness in various portfolios relates not to my performance but to the fact that he is in the Opposition and wants to have his crowd sit over here. They are not going to make it, but that is the basis for his attitude.

Let me say to the Hon. Member that, while I have only been in the portfolio for five or six months, my predecessor, now the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, did such a fantastic job that the Hon. Member ought to be really jealous of it. Last year Canada achieved a record in relation to exports. I think the Hon. Member knows enough to know that exports mean jobs in Canada. We are going to continue our record performance in exports. That is how we are creating jobs.

I would also point out to the Hon. Member that it is strange arithmetic that says that if we import fewer cars in the first six months this year than last year, that does not mean more jobs somewhere in the North American car market.

THE ECONOMY

QUERY RESPECTING POLICY ON STIMULATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It concerns jobs. Last November the Prime Minister favoured stimulating the Canadian economy through public investment. Now the Minister of Finance is cooling to that position. Last night he wined and dined himself while the CLC convention of workers got no answers from his Parliamentary Secretary.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Waddell: Does this Minister of Finance agree that the economy should be stimulated through public investment, or does he intend to rely on the private sector to stimulate the economy and get Canada growing again?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as far as wining and dining are concerned, I want to inform my hon. friend I had dinner last night in the Parliamentary Restaurant with another Member of Parliament and his wife whose birthday it was. Those of us who eat in the Parliamentary Restaurant know there is no great wining and dining there.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Clark: Attacking more public servants.

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the allegation of the Hon. Member is concerned, I want to assure him that he should be very cautious about relying on speculation in the press. I said that I will not comment on press speculation about the budget, and I will not comment on the kind of speculation in which the Hon. Member is engaging. There is no basis in fact that I know of for that kind of statement he has just made.

Mr. Waddell: I might remind the Minister of Finance that, while he was dining here, one delegate to the CLC said that his union which operates a clinic in Vancouver was putting bandages on the working casualties but, in spite of that, they were still bleeding. The workers are suffering, Madam Speaker.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DIVULGE POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, let me ask the Minister of Finance what is his Government's position? Does the Minister of Finance agree with what the Prime Minister said? Is he going to use public investment to stimulate the economy, or will he rely on private investment? All the Minister has to do is answer the question. If he is going to stimulate the economy, when is he going to do it? When will we see a budget? The Minister is fiddling while the Canadian worker is burning.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: There is an original line.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, knowing the eating habits of my hon. friend, I would like to know where he dined last night and what he ate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: We will leave that to speculation for the time being.

My hon. friend invites me to commit a budget leak. At the present time I am not ready to do that even on the floor of the House of Commons. There will be a budget, and I invite my hon. friend to wait for it. I hope in the meantime we will proceed speedily with the adoption of the Bills that are before the House, particularly the Income Tax Act amendments that have been considered for quite a while now and will be going to Committee of the Whole soon. I hope to present a budget to the House at an appropriate time once consideration of these Bills has been concluded.

PROPOSED VANCOUVER PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, this is a serious matter and the workers want some answers. Let me give a concrete example of a workable and an affordable program to the Minister of Finance.

The Mayor of Vancouver suggested this morning that the City of Vancouver was prepared to go with a $236 million public works program to computerize traffic signals, to build bridges, to build sewers, streets and so on. The City will pay $136 million, about which a plebiscite was taken. Will the Minister of Finance commit himself right now to this form of public investment in the amount of $100 million for the City of Vancouver in this instance, and in general for the Federation of Municipalities across the country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Mayor of Vancouver has some very good ideas. Many other mayors across the country have very good ideas for their cities, and many provincial ministers have very good ideas for their provincial Governments.

Mr. Lawrence: What has happened at the federal level?

Mr. Lalonde: And many federal Ministers have very good ideas on how to spend federal money in federal areas of responsibility. Each order of Government which has great ideas and wants to do things has a way of doing them. Every order of Government has a financial market available in this country from which it can borrow money, just as the federal Government has. The financial borrowing requirements of the Government, as the Hon. Member knows, are around $26 billion to $27 billion. That is a fair amount of borrowing in which the federal Government is engaging. I invite my hon. friend to invite his colleagues, his friends or even his enemies at the local municipal or provincial level, to do what the federal Government is doing, that is, to go out into the market and borrow to finance a lot of activities across the country. That is the responsibility of all orders of Government, not only of the federal Government.

Mr. Epp: Do not encourage them to borrow more.

AIR TRANSPORT

ACCUSATIONS MADE IN QUEBEC PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSION ON QUEBECAIR SITUATION

Mrs. Eva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, my question to the Minister of Transport refers to the allegations or rather the accusations which were made in a Quebec parliamentary commission concerning the Quebecair situation. Could the Minister of Transport advise the House of the way in which the negociations were conducted between Nordair and Quebecair and the Quebec government in July 1981 which resulted into the plight which Quebecair faces today?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, this would require a great deal of explanations, but one thing is certain, and it is the fact that the more Mr. Clair enjoys talking about my beating about the bush, the less I enjoy talking about his conceited attitude. This government, just like the one before, has experienced much difficulty in trying to amalgamate these two corporations. In spite of their efforts my colleagues, the hon. member for Joliette and the hon. member for Végréville, have failed. In 1981, however, a concrete proposal was made to the Quebec government, which, for nationalistic reasons, was turned down. That was the situation then.

The situation now is that Mr. Clair would like me to get involved, ahead of time, in the administration of Quebecair which we are trying to get back on track. I refused to do so before seeing its auditor financial statements. I believe it was the only safe thing for me to do.

FISHERIES

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY BAN ON CANADIAN SEAL PRODUCTS—REQUEST THAT FISHERIES AGREEMENT BE ABROGATED

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Now that the European Economic Community has formally banned the importation of Canadian seal products into the Community, thereby killing the Canadian seal industry and bringing hardship to Canadian fishermen and the Inuit people in the Eastern Arctic of Canada as well, does the Minister intend to recommend to his Cabinet colleagues that Canada abrogate the Canada-European Fisheries Agreement which has given little benefit to Canada? All one-way benefits have gone to the Community.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, first let me tell the Hon. Member what I have said. The European Community has been hypocritical all along on the question of the seal hunt. Every time I meet any Minister from the European Community I have been told that their scientific community fully agrees with our scientific advisers that the hunt is well regulated and there is absolutely nothing to do.

On the substance of the issue, I think my hon. friend is wrong. Yesterday the European Community did not impose any formal ban. The Community said there will be a ban starting next October if, in the meantime, there is no agreement between Canada and Norway about a study. Canada has been proposing for years that international scientists study the whole matter. We know that our hunters, our fishermen, have nothing to fear from any inquiry not done by Brigitte Bardot and Brian Davis but by reputable scientists.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. De Bané: On the question of the LTA with Europe, as I have said, my duty is to the Canadian fishermen, not to foreign fleets. If we give fishing allocations to foreign fleets, they will be for past performance. That was the policy I announced two weeks ago. Foreign fleets must buy Canadian fish before expecting access to Canadian waters. My colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and his Department jointly with my Department will announce a decision on the matter very shortly. I am already on record that I am not at all satisfied with the way Members of the European Community behaved last year. While they had access to Canadian fishing waters, they did not open up their country's markets to our fish. Obviously, they will have to bear the consequences of that action.

• (1450)

Mr. McGrath: I thank the Hon. Minister for his answer. I hope he will make it loud and clear to the Europeans, now that they have effectively killed this old Canadian industry, that there will not be one metric tonne of fish for them in our zone. That is the message that has to go to them.

KIRBY TASK FORCE REPORT—REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, a few weeks ago the Minister released the Report of the Kirby Task Force on Atlantic Fisheries. That Report has not been referred to a committee. The Fisheries Committee will be meeting this afternoon, and indeed there will be a delegation of fishermen from Nova Scotia and Newfoundland appearing before that Committee.

Will the Minister formally refer the Kirby Report to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry so that we can deal with very critical questions, one of which is the incomes of inshore fishermen which are, in many instances, I am ashamed to say, well below the poverty level?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I shall certainly consider the Hon. Member's suggestion. I also happen to know that Dr. Kirby will be appearing before the Parliamentary Committee very shortly.

As for the Hon. Member's question, we must ask ourselves who is going to be hurt if tomorrow, we cancel our agreement with the Common Market countries. Are they going to be hurt or is Canada?

What comes to mind is that most of our fish exports go to the United States, and it is therefore in Canada's interests to diversify its markets. Provided the EEC is prepared to settle the fisheries and seal hunt issues to our satisfaction, Canada would certainly be very pleased to enter into an arrangement on fisheries that will be satisfactory to both parties.

THE ADMINISTRATION

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ACTIONS BY MINISTERS AND OFFICIALS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On February 17, in answer to a question from the Hon. Member for Provencher, the Prime Minister said, as reported at page 22938 of Hansard:

> Yes, Madam Speaker, we are collectively responsible for the policies of this Government—
> The Government as a whole is not collectively responsible for some individual agreement—

Does the Prime Minister stand by that statement and, if so, what are the limits of either mismanagement or chicanery performed by officials of the Government or Members of his Cabinet before the Government feels that it is responsible for them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I did not quite understand the final part of the Hon. Member's question, but I believe that in the quotation of me that he was citing, I was talking of agreements which are made by individual Ministers or sometimes by officials under the authorities they have by statute or delegation. If someone acts improperly in such circumstances, it is not the whole Government that is acting. If a Minister is acting improperly or illegally, he has to be taken to task. However, one could not condemn the whole Government for some act by an individual, unless the whole Government itself had been part of the decision, much as on the other side of the House, if one Tory Member behaves illegally the whole caucus does not stand condemned.

GOVERNMENT MANDATE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Is the Prime Minister saying that if there is some kind of serious mismanagement or chicanery in the upper levels of his administration at the beginning of his mandate, the Government has a four-year mandate and can go on its merry way until the next election before it is held responsible?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not at all, Madam Speaker. If the Hon. Member is talking about the meaning of responsible government, literally, it means that the Government of the day is responsible to Parliament and can only continue exercising its powers with the authority of Parliament, that is, with the support of the majority of the Members of Parliament. That is what responsible government means.

BANKS AND BANKING

SEIZURE OF FARMS BY ROYAL BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. We have learned that the banks have been up to their usual skulduggery. The Minister of Finance would only be too sensitive to the fact that Canadian industries have long been forced to be tenants on their own land, and the recent crisis has forced many Canadians to be tenants as well. We learned yesterday that the Royal Bank of Canada has decided to introduce a policy to force farmers off their land, confiscate their land and lease it back to them. It is, in a sense, the twentieth century version of Canadian sharecropping. Is the Minister prepared not to talk but to take action with the Royal Bank of Canada and stop this policy before it proceeds with it any further?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware that according to banking practice—in fact, it is the practice of all lenders in our society—if the borrower defaults on his payments, the lender is entitled to take possession of the property that was given as collateral. Is my hon. friend suggesting that we should have a situation in which we would not only prohibit the lender from allowing the former owner to continue to occupy, for instance, a farm, but also oblige the lender to sell the property to someone else? I think that solution would be far less humane than the one being considered at the present time. This approach, while leaving the lender's rights intact, authorizes the lender to make certain adjustments and eventually, if and when the borrower's economic situation has improved, the latter can be given a chance to buy back the operation he was running before.

[English]

MEASURE TO REINSTATE FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I agree with what the Minister has to say in terms of the technicalities of the situation, but he says that he is interested in helping and he hopes that the situation will improve. It is within his ability to improve the situation immediately by promoting Bill C-653, the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, which would prohibit the banks from foreclosing on farmers, in an effort to leave the family farm in place and the food producers of Canada in place, yet make an equitable adjustment between the borrower and the lender. That ability is now before the House, if the Minister simply takes action with his Cabinet colleagues and has that Bill brought forward.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think I have already made it clear that the Government is very sympathetic to the Bill that was tabled in the House but there are a number of technical problems that arise in connection with the implementation of the Bill, and that by trying to help people who are in difficulty, we may be creating further problems for a great many farmers, and that is why the implications of such measures must be examined very carefully. I would therefore say to the Hon. Member that before we take the action he is suggesting, it is better to be fully aware of its implications.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—MEMORANDUM SEEKING FORMER MINISTER'S COMMENTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will know that the document dated January 15, the memorandum from Mickey Cohen to the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, had a memorandum in handwriting to Mr. Michael Phelps appended to it which asked for the Minister's comments directly. Can the Minister tell us what comments the then Minister of Energy made in relation to that request, and what action the then Minister of Energy took, having been brought to a state of knowledge that the conflict of interest guidelines had been breached? What was said by the former Minister of Energy? What was done by the former Minister of Energy?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I was not present at the discussions, so it is difficult for me. I did not question the former Minister of Energy about all the meetings he had, and about what he did or did not say. The House asked me to table documents and I tabled them. It is impossible for me to transmit verbal communications.

REQUEST FOR REPORT TO PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, since the question concerns when exactly the present Minister of Finance came to the knowledge that conflict of interest guidelines had been breached, since that is an important question, and since it is important for us to know what he did when he knew that the conflict of interest guidelines were breached, will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources find out what the former Minister of Energy said, what his comments were, and what he did after the conflict of interest had been brought to his attention? Will he report to the House at the earliest possible time?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I do not believe the question was well put, because in the minds of those who sit on this side of the House, and in the mind of the Minister of Finance, the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, there was no conflict of interest and there were no guidelines broken. Everything has been done above the table.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Everything was made public. Hon. Members opposite might disagree with that fact, but I just say that there was no breach of guidelines. The Hon. Member may say that, but the House of Commons, in a vote last week, rejected his view.

Mr. Clark: There was a conversation earlier as the definition of responsible government. An honourable Government is one which honours its own conflict of interest guidelines, which this Government consistently refuses to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Point of Order—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF FORMER MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Let me direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since he knows that his documents have made it clear that there was a request for comment and for action by the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and since he has been prepared to table other documents, will he also please come clean concerning the question as to what the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Lalonde—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Clark: —did when he was asked for comment, and what actions he took as a result of the memorandum which very clearly demonstrated the fact that Alastair Gillespie was exerting pressure on the Government in a way which broke the conflict of interest guidelines applying to former Ministers?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we held a thorough debate on this subject last week. It was clear that we tabled all documents available and that for months there was discussion with the Government of Nova Scotia, with private sector partners and so on. Everything was made known to the public. The Hon. Member should get out of the House because he is missing the point, trying to gain a few more votes he will need next June.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—NOTICE OF POSSIBLE POINT TO BE RAISED

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During the Question Period we heard enunciated a principle about parliamentary ministerial responsibility based on a majority that Cabinet can command. If I may, I would like to reserve my submissions on this particular point of order until I check the Hansard blues to ensure that this is what I actually heard. Surely the principle of moral responsibility—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member knows that is not a point of order. He may check Hansard and then ask questions the next day if he has some query. It does not necessitate giving notice.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Orders 62(15) and 63, I move, seconded by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray):

PETITIONS

MR. SKELLY—TELEVISION PROGRAMMING POLICY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, today I have the honour to present a petition to the House from the residents of Port Hardy, British Columbia, comprising some 40 pages of signatures, outlining a very serious problem resulting from the Government's removal of access to television programming choice in the Port Hardy area. It is an indication that the Government has discrimated against rural communities in terms of many leisure time activities.

In their petition, the people of Port Hardy wish to point out, and ask for relief from, rulings of the CRTC and policies of the Government which would prohibit their access to programming of their choice, and they ask that the quality of television and radio communications in the northern part of Vancouver Island be improved in general.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, that information gives us an opportunity to plan for tomorrow. I wonder if the President of the Privy Council would give us some idea as to the business for Friday.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as my hon. colleague knows, I told him in advance, earlier today, that we were to deal with Bill C-139 tomorrow because that is a change from what was to have been considered tomorrow. However, as usual, tomorrow I will be in a better position to confirm what the business will be for the remainder of the week and as far into the coming week as possible.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 4,662.

Order Paper Questions

[Text]

VIA RAIL CALENDAR

Question No. 4,662—Mr. McKnight:

1. Did VIA Rail distribute a 1983 calendar and, if so (a) to whom (b) what was the total cost of the calendar (c) how many copies were printed (d) who authorized the decision to print and distribute the calendar?

2. Does the cost of the printing of the calendar positively enhance passenger rail service in Canada and, if so, in what manner?

3. Are there any plans to print VIA Rail calendars for the next year?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of VIA Rail Canada Inc. advises as follows:

1. Yes. (a) The calendar was distributed in Canada to recipients of VIA's annual report, business leaders and business contacts, media contacts and travel writers, VIA appointed travel agents, and to similar groups in the United States and Europe. (b) $22,950. (c) 8,000 English, 5,000 French. (d) Vice-President, Marketing.

2. In the opinion of VIA management, the calendar is a valuable part of VIA's campaign to maintain a positive public image for passenger train service in Canada. VIA requested a Canadian artist to paint five scenes of Canada, as seen from a passing VIA train. The paintings represent each region of Canada at a different season, plus one "Pan Canadian" scene representative of the country as a whole.

3. A 1984 calendar is under consideration.

Mr. Smith: I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The question indicated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered.

[English]

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, very briefly, could I ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether he would expedite the answers to my Order Paper Question No. 4,704, involving CMHC, and particularly the Corporation's mortgage porfolio management system. I know that the Corporation is aware of the question. I also know that an audit is being carried out. I would like to have the answers as soon as possible so that I would not take up the time of the House unnecessarily in asking unduly detailed questions of the Minister.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would be delighted to review the matter on behalf of the Hon. Member.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I would also like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about Order Paper Question No. 4,175, which I placed on the Order Paper on March 24, 1982. The question asked whether there was correspondence between an R. W. B. Bailey, chairman of the subgroup, and a Mr. R. Gagnon, Assistant Deputy Minister to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, dated February 17 and 19, 1982, respectively, on the subject of the hiring team to recruit francophone employees.

Apparently they were hiring teams to go into universities and schools in Ontario and Quebec to hire strictly Francophones for jobs in the Government. I would like to know if the Government has sent any hiring teams into universities and schools in any other Provinces, such as the University of Winnipeg or the University of Manitoba. With the record high unemployment rate, it would certainly be beneficial for us to know if these hiring teams are going across Canada or whether they will be restricted to the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. I would appreciate it if the Parliamentary Secretary would come back with an answer for me, because I raised this matter on a number of occasions, and the question is a year old.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am sorry that I do not have the answer available today.

Mr. McDermid: You never do.

Mr. Smith: However, I will look into the matter on behalf of the Hon. Member.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENT TO ASSURE SURVIVAL OF CREATIVE ARTISTS

Mr. Robert Gourd (Argenteuil-Papineau) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to increase to $20,000 the basic exemption for creative artists (craftsmen, authors-composers, choreographers, film-makers, photographers, writers or any other creator of original works of an acknowledged cultural or artistic nature) in order to alleviate the financial difficulties threatening their survival and the survival of the Canadian culture to which they contribute.

He said: Madam Speaker, first of all I wish to thank my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who agreed to second this motion. Among his friends and in his riding, the Hon. Member is known as a friend of the arts, and he was therefore pleased to support the motion.

When I presented this motion on October 15, 1981, some of my colleagues, especially those on the opposite side, told me: You are wrong, because this is going to create a special class of citizens. Your motion wants to make craftsmen, authors, composers and artists a privileged class. I feel, however, that in Canada we have already created a number of privileged groups. Members of the Bar Association are a privileged group; the members of the College of Physicians are a privileged group; architects are a privileged group; engineers are a privileged group; and farmers are as well. Therefore, I fail to see how, now that we are about to review the Applebaum-Hébert Report which concerns that very important issue of Canada's cultural policy, could review cultural policy and ignore the people who create our culture.

Madam Speaker, when I presented my motion, I was thinking of Francine Périard, an artist in my riding, who in the course of her career will probably sell about $20,000, $25,000 or maybe $50,000 worth of paintings. I am not mentioning famous artists or famous Canadian authors. I am thinking of Jacques Lamarche for instance, author and citizen of La Petite-Nation who is barely making a living. That, Madam Speaker, is Canadian culture.

And why am I saying all this? Why am I asking for concrete action today? For the simple reason that for sixty years the Government has been examining the feasibility of amending the Copyright Act, legislation which formerly was the responsibility of the Department of Agriculture, although I am sure I do not know why. Today, the legislation is being revised, and the two Ministers involved, namely the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) have assured me that the revised version would be tabled in the House very shortly.

Mr. Speaker, I told the Applebaum-Hébert Commission that the rights of our creative artists were being abused. We have a system in which the State subsidizes artists, and as soon as we have the State acting as a patron of the arts, there is a form of prostitution involved. Our artists and authors have to go begging for grants. Instead of making beggars of our artists and authors and photographers and all those who create our Canadian culture, we could make them proud and happy to be artists. So many young people cannot participate as creative artists because they have to make a living some other way, in other words, get a job, and give up all hope of ever being an artist.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me to another aspect of the same subject, namely, communications. Yesterday, I attended a press conference given by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), when he presented a document bearing the title: Towards a New National Broadcasting Policy. Well, now we have the Appelbaum-Hébert Report, we can probably expect a new cultural policy as well.

I now wonder whether, since the Government has announced that we can expect a new national broadcasting policy, it has also decided to establish two classes of citizens, namely, those living in densely populated urban areas and those living outside those areas. I wonder whether the Government, in connection with the new policy it is announcing, is prepared to make use of an existing program, namely, the Northern Communications Assistance Program in which CN and Bell Canada are involved and which provides for telephone communications in remote areas. Since the Government has that program, I suggest that it be extended to all rural areas. In my own riding, which is scarcely 50 kilometers from our national capital, the towns of Papineauville and Saint-André cannot get something urban Canadians are now getting, namely, pay television or even cablevision to get all their favorite programs. This is incredible in a country where all citizens are supposed to have exactly the same privileges. Why do people in towns like Thurso which is right near Ottawa, towns such as Sylvan Lake in Alberta or Wartime in Saskatchewan or Cocksiscoe in Newfoundland, why can't they get the same services? Aren't these people Canadian citizens as well? Aren't they all paying the same taxes?

Mr. Speaker, if these people are paying the same taxes, I think the Government should consider providing them with the same services, and in this case, it should consider making an arrangement through its existing program and broadening its scope to cover telecommunications and audio-visual services as well. The Government should consider setting up such programs immediately, especially since this is International Communications' Year, and I hope that in his reply, the Parliamentary Secretary will let me know whether or not the Government intends to take this route.

Mr. Speaker, let me get back to our creative artists. They represent the very basis of our cultural policy in Canada, but what have we done for them since the Massey-Lévesque Commission reported? We have conducted more studies, and we now have the Applebaum-Hébert Report which unfortunately does not deal extensively with copyrights.

Mr. Speaker, it is indeed with great reluctance that I am now begging the Government to encourage Canadian artists rather than merely making grants available to them. Canada is a young country with a promising future, but to what extend do we help our artists? I am seeking the support of the House so that our creative artists, our photographers and our composers may find their place under the sun in Canada and live normally above the threshold of poverty without having to rely on grants.

To those who would ask me how many artists there are in my riding, I would say quite a few, and many people in my riding can indeed become creative artists, writers and great performers. Still, what are we doing for them? All we have are grant programs, which I am suggesting should be abolished. I am urging the Government to consider the possibility of changing those programs with a view to making it possible for any creative artist to earn an honest living.

• (1520)

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, let me start by congratulating the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd) for bringing forward this motion, and I congratulate the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his concern in seeing that it was brought forward.

I have no doubt what the Government's response will be to the motion. I am sure the Government will invent, as usual, any number of reasons for rejecting decent consideration for the artists of this country. It should be clear that the value of the motion is not necessarily the actual language of the motion. Both the mover of the motion and I would agree that the symbolism of pointing out how little has been done in tax policy vis-à-vis our artists is the important issue. There will be those who will argue that a basic exemption for artists different from other Canadians might be inappropriate. On its face, that is a plausible argument; but the point that has to be reiterated in any cultural policy discussion is that, in a way, it does not matter whether you increase the exemption to $20,000 or $100,000 because the average, struggling, full-time artist in Canada has an income of less than $10,000. The Writers' Union of Canada will tell you that people who write for a living, those who do nothing else but attempt to be creative writers in this country, earn on average $7,000 a year.

The Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau knows this motion will not increase their income. I do not think that is the purpose of his motion. I would not pretend that he is trying to kid anybody. What he is trying to say, and what I want to be very clear on, is that our artists have had their issues represented by others to this Government for a long time. I think specifically of the Disney report in 1977 which set out that for the artists in the Canadian community there are different problems than for the average Canadian worker. Therefore, a tax treatment of the way and of the circumstances under which our artists work is absolutely mandatory.

We are entering an era where productivity will be a buzz word. We are increasingly being told that if we are to survive in international trade and in international affairs, we will have to find ways to use our human resources to get more for less and to be more competitive. There is no other sector in this country as competitive and productive as the artistic community. Ironically, it is the most labour-intensive community in Canada. It is a labour force that works as much for love as for money. As a consequence, it accepts wages, remuneration and treatment from a Government that no other community, organized or unorganized in the labour field, would accept. It is long past the time we recognized that.

I am not going to speak for very long. By making a short speech, I want to say that Members on this side hope that the Government will see that a motion which says "It is advisable to consider change", which is what the Hon. Member's motion says, is overdue for adoption by this House, as is change in the treatment of our artists by this Government. I encourage the Parliamentary Secretary, who I presume will be speaking, to say very clearly that the Government accepts the advisability of the intent behind this motion, and that it will let this motion be adopted by the House of Commons. Our artists will then know that proper treatment, both in fiscal and tax terms, which they have asked for and have needed for so long, will finally be available to them.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak for very long on this motion either. While I do not necessarily agree with the statement made in the motion that it would necessarily help the vast majority of people engaged in the arts in this country, I certainly agree with the intent of the motion. It is a matter that requires extensive examination by Members of this House to find the best ways that Members of Parliament can assist those engaged in the arts through what I consider to be necessary legislation. That kind of examination has never been done.

Why I say that I do not think that the actual language used in the motion would be of significant benefit to those engaged in the arts is that, to my knowledge, and certainly to that of people I am acquainted with in my riding, there are very few artists who earn anywhere close to $20,000 a year. In fact, if many of them had the opportunity to earn an income of $20,000 or more, I am sure they would be delighted, but that certainly is not the case.

I am supported in that by some of the statements in the Applebaum report. I want to quote a few of the sections. They point out that the well-being of the visual and applied artists in Canada has tremendous weaknesses in terms of the initiatives that have been given to the artistic community by Government. The Applebaum report speaks about women in particular who are engaged in the visual arts field. They earn a gross income from their art of only $6,000 to $10,000 annually. I know many artists in my community of Beaches who do not have an income of $6,000 a year. That is for a number of reasons.

Several months ago my colleague for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) raised this point in the House in a question to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox). She insisted, indeed demanded, that it was time the Government took concrete initiatives to help that segment of the arts community.

While Private Members' motions rarely, if ever, pass through this House, as I said earlier, I would like to see this one go through the House and referred to a committee. From what I could see before I got up to speak, with the number of Liberals jumping up and down trying to catch the Speaker's eye, I doubt very much that will happen this afternoon.

• (1530)

I would like to say a few words about the important roles which artists play in Canadian life. Workers who are engaged in the arts and are essential to the cultural life of Canada often have earnings which make it difficult for them to provide for the necessities of life. In addition to these difficulties, there is the fact that public access to the arts is being eroded by inflationary pressures and the high unemployment we have in our country today.

If that were not enough to contend with, there is an increasing tendency on the part of Government at all levels to reduce its support of the arts; and as the Estimates which were tabled in the House recently show, this Government has again restricted its own level of expenditures to the arts. Surely it is in the interest of our country that policies be brought forward to ensure that professional workers in the arts receive a just remuneration for their work.

It is equally important that artists receive adequate protection for their creative products by assisting them with information and resources to improve the business aspect of their work. In that regard, Mr. Speaker, the time has long passed when there should have been measures brought before this House to strengthen the Copyright Act and provide real protection for those engaged in their field of work.

Despite its many statements to the contrary, this Government's commitment to promoting the artistic community over the years has been relatively non-existent in reality. It has failed miserably to develop an industrial strategy for the publishing industry, for broadcasting, films and recordings. It has done virtually nothing in the area of increasing Canadian ownership of production and distributing facilities, let alone increasing the share of the Canadian market for Canadian productions. We are still awaiting policies, Mr. Speaker, which would clarify and strengthen the definition of Canadian books and of what Canadian programs mean. The same applies to films and recordings. If those policies were brought forward they would go a long way toward expanding and improving employment for Canadian workers in the cultural industries.

Surely the time has come when Government should adopt taxation policies which would encourage and expand Canadian cultural creations and their subsequent availability to the public. If Government were clearly to indicate it had a serious commitment to the arts, then it would clearly be seen to be doing something rather than simply talking about it. Passing this motion today would be a strong indication that the Government at long last is prepared to make that kind of commitment.

However, the responsibility rests not only with the federal Government but also with other levels of Government. The federal Government can initiate discussions with provincial Governments; for example, there is a need for a greater degree of co-operation with the cultural agencies of provincial Governments to fund community artistic endeavours. In my own constituency there is a burning need for improved facilities and training in the visual and performing arts. At present, there are numerous groups experiencing difficulty because of a shortage of on-going operating funds. I am sure that many, if not all, Hon. Members in this House know of similar situations.

If there were improved co-operation it could not but help increase opportunities for people to attend exhibitions and performances in their own communities. I might add that it would contribute to the strength of the community. Greater co-operation would also provide the opportunity to make adequate funding available, so as to provide grants which would keep admission prices at affordable levels. It could also bring the arts into the schools and make the arts more accessible to smaller communities in the country.

The rights of performers in film, television, radio and audio recordings are not protected under the Copyright Act. The only rights these workers have to ensure their art is protected is that which is provided under collective agreements negotiated by their unions, such as the Association of Canadian Television and Radio Artists and the Musicians' Union.

With the advent of new technology for distribution of reserved performances such as video discs, satellite transmission spanning the globe, home video recording machines and the like, it is becoming increasingly clear that monitoring such use of performance materials would present major problems for the unions. Enforcing performers' rights certainly would require the support of legislation.

For all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that this Private Member's motion would find its way into a committee where we could examine it more thoroughly.

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to take part in this Private Members' discussion. First of all, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd) for his foresight back, I believe, in the fall of 1981, when he brought to the attention of this House through this Bill his concern for the artists of Canada. This concern has been brought to bear as well by the importance which the Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee, or the Applebaum-Hébert Committee, has placed on the status of artists. Indeed, the matters raised by my colleague in 1981 and by the motion which we are debating today are crucial to the well-being of Canadian artists, to the state of Canadian culture as a whole, and thus to the quality of life of all Canadians.

Canadian artists do not just help us understand our culture, they create it. Whether it be in the visual or performing arts, in the heritage area, or in the cultural industries such as film, sound recording or book publishing, the federal Government, to the extent it can, must identify and resolve the unique financial problems faced by our artists.

The previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), mentioned his concern that the federal Government has not done enough in the fields of broadcasting, television in particular, as it relates to artists and performers. Obviously, he has put his thoughts and notes together without reading through the policy which was tabled in this House yesterday by the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) with respect to a new national broadcasting policy which, of course, states very emphatically that the federal Government intends to set up in one area, at least, a program production fund which would enable private independent television producers to produce better and more Canadian programming. This would, of course, help the entire artistic industry in Canada today.

The plight of the artist has always been with us. It has been acknowledged by international forums such as UNESCO, and by virtually every Government in the world right down through history. Often this plight is reduced to simple financial duress, but no less important are the lack of adequate facilities, the lack of appropriate training facilities and the lack of meaningful public involvement and recognition, as noted by the Applebaum-Hébert Committee.

The Canadian public has recognized that Canadian artists face financial difficulties. For example, in a recent poll analysed by the Department of Communications, three-quarters of respondents favoured Government financial support for artists. Indeed, the Government has over the years evolved a number of mechanisms to deal with a variety of the most urgent problems. Through the Canadian Council, a portion of the core costs of most of our "national treasures" in the arts are directly subsidized. Project grants are available to individuals and a number of sectoral assistance programs are in place.

• (1540)

Efforts have also been made over the years to recognize and compensate for the dysfunction of marketing and distribution systems for our cultural products. The Department of Communications administers a major program of assistance to Canadian publishers, as well as a postal subsidy for books and periodicals, on the principle that it is a basic right of Canadians to have access to Canadian writing. I might also mention in this context the special program of cultural initiatives which assists the cultured community in Canada with the construction of facilities, improvement of management skills, and special projects of national cultural significance.

I remind Hon. Members of the papers that were tabled by the Minister of Communications yesterday, wherein he stated that we were setting out a definite financial program to assist private and independent television producers, which in the long run will affect the entire artistic life in Canada.

Before dealing with the particular problems facing the artist in Canada today, I will like to concentrate on some of the larger issues we must consider in this context. Most important, we must not forget that to a large degree the hands and minds of our artists shape Canada's international reputation and our shared sense of ourselves as Canadians with a unique history and a promising present, together occupying a very distinctive and sometimes challenging piece of terrain called Canada. We can and to take pride in a successful European tour by the Royal Winnipeg Ballet and the many international awards won by the National Film Board. As a matter of fact, the current controversy which is going on in the United States has been created by films produced and supplied by the National Film Board. They have won many awards on the international stage.

We learn something about ourselves and our country when we gaze at a Group of Seven painting and its startling representation of the Canadian landscape. Our heritage lives and evolves through the continuing work of individual researchers who explore, discover and reconceptualize our past. In many ways, Canada is what it is because individual artists have crystallized new insights into the Canadian reality and communicated them to us, all of us. In short, art is the collective memory of our civilization and, in fact, any civilization.

But what status, what support, do our artists enjoy? Their lives and their families' lives to a great extent are riddled with uncertainties as to employment. They face high costs for training and materials, as well as related expenses for management, promotion and the like. And the financial reward?

The actual statistics are dramatic. Revenue Canada, in its 1982 edition of Taxation Statistics, ranks the average income of self-employed artists and entertainers fourteenth in its 15 occupational categories. Only pensioners lag behind artists, though they pay proportionately more income tax than fishermen, farmers, investors and pensioners.

Most artists lack the basic protection provided by pension plans and Unemployment Insurance. The Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) earlier referred to the salaries or fees earned by Canadian artists. According to data supplied by the joint Department of Communications-Statistics Canada Cultural Statistics Program, only 23 per cent of Canada's 3,000 or so professional actors were employed full time in 1979. Around 35 per cent reported a total income from acting of less than $5,000. Nearly 60 per cent earned less than $10,000. These figures portray not just a financial crisis, but an artistic one. In order to supplement their incomes, these artists must spend time and energy on activity outside their chosen profession, time and energy which cannot be spent trying to achieve artistic excellence.

The situation is essentially the same for writers. A Department of Communications study on Canadian freelance writers revealed that one half of full-time writers earned less than $7,000 from their craft in 1978. Similar figures can be cited for every artistic discipline. Overall, individual artists earn on average an income which is below the poverty line for a family of four. This is why I feel it is so important that we discuss in detail and in all seriousness the motion before us presented by the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau.

With the accumulation of data from different studies, different sources and even different countries, it becomes clearer and clearer that artistic and cultural activity is most heavily subsidized by the financial sacrifices of individual artists. Artists, in short, do not receive a financial return which is commensurate with their contribution to the quality of Canadian life and, quite possibly, to the Canadian economy. Something obviously must be done.

The Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee, the Applebaum-Hébert Committee, was established in 1980 to examine the totality of the cultural scene in Canada and make recommendations to the Government for its enhancement and growth in recognition of the fact that, while we have done a good deal in this field, we were certainly not doing all we might, as efficiently and usefully as we might. One of the major areas the Committee was asked to address was specifically the problem of the status of the artist in our society.

They took that challenge to heart and examined the question thoroughly. One of the major conclusions they came to dealt specifically with the tax treatment of artists. I will quote it direct, since it speaks for itself:

> Tax provisions respecting the employment status of artists and such matters as the calculation of their costs against income, the valuation of works given for public use and enjoyment, and their entitlement to income averaging must afford equitable treatment in comparison with those applicable to other classes of taxpayers.

All of these concerns are now the subject of continuing study, but there are other broader issues as well. For example, should Government support take the form of direct grants to artists, or should Government expenditures focus on supplying facilities or special services which would constitute indirect support?

Certainly consideration must be given to tax issues to ensure fair treatment for artists, but these issues are complex and careful consideration is needed from a number of different perspectives. For example, if artists are to be treated as self-employed persons so that they can claim expenses, should they also be eligible for Unemployment Insurance? The easy answer to such a question may not be valid when it comes time to implement a policy. Careful deliberation is essential.

The development of new tax provisions for artists also cannot ignore the Federal Culture Policy Review Committee's diagnosis of the main problem as "not one of excessive tax burden, but rather of inadequate income". Yet the Canadian Conference of The Arts made an important point when it noted that our taxation system had not been used systematically to stimulate cultural, as opposed to economic, development.

The Department of Communications is now exploring these matters on a number of fronts. It is currently studying the impact of federal financial policy on the cultural sector and examining ways to bring specific financial policies into line with cultural policies. To this end, departmental officials are holding on-going meetings with the Department of Finance on possible amendments to financial legislation to improve the economic situation of artists. These discussions are serving to clarify a variety of complex issues.

The motion now under discussion was placed before this House in October, 1981. Since then, a strong, concerted effort has been made through the Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee and elsewhere to examine the problem and propose solutions.

• (1550)

As I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, this motion highlights a prime area of concern of both the Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee and the Department of Communications, namely support for the creative artist. I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau for defining so clearly and recognizing the importance of these key elements of the arts and culture environment. His focus on the artist, his recognition of the artist's plight, his emphasis on changes to the tax structure—all these represent significant contributions to the on-going debate on Canada's cultural future.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, within a period of 24 hours we have witnessed a perfect illustration of why Parliament has become irrelevant. Last evening, at 5:45 p.m., the House was called to vote on Bill C-139 which, as we all know, provides for substantial amendments to the Income Tax Act. We are now confronted with a motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd) who apparently urgently believes that it is important that some relief of a kind I shall describe later be offered to creative artists. One would have thought that if the Hon. Member really believed strongly in his motion, he would have stood in this House and voted against Bill C-139. There is no provision in that Bill for the motion he has brought before the House.

We have just listened to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Burghardt). He has praised the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau and at the same time has in no way indicated that it is the position of the Government to support the motion of the Hon. Member. We have, unfortunately, become a useless debating society where Members of the House are afraid to do what they say they wish to do. I lament the fact that Hon. Members take the time of the House to deal with issues in this fashion without substance and without the determination to see that their will is made part of the legislation of this country.

If I may pass on and deal with the provisions of the motion itself, I will say in advance that I am opposed to it, Mr. Speaker. The motion deals with the creation of additional tax exemptions for a select group in society. If the motion were adopted it would have the effect of amending Section 109 of the Income Tax Act which grants to ordinary, individual Canadian citizens a basic exemption with respect to which no tax is imposed. Last year that exemption was in the neighbourhood of $1,700 for an individual unmarried taxpayer. The effect of the motion before us would be to increase that basic exemption to $20,000. It would cover a group identified in the motion as follows:

—craftsmen, authors-composers, choreographers, film-makers, photographers, writers or any other creator of original works of an acknowledged cultural or artistic nature—

It is certainly true that Parliament has used the provisions of the Income Tax Act on a number of occasions to promote industrial or commercial communications activities. For example, there was the tax exemption for commercial mines on income generated during the first three years of operation, with the view of promoting the development of mines in Canada.

From the standpoint of culture and communications we can look to the special advantage for film-makers who are entitled to a 100 per cent write-off of the investment made in Canadian productions. One would suspect that this motion is designed to accomplish the same purpose, but I draw to the attention of the House that both of those other provisions were designed to promote the creation of industrial or commercial development.

There is nothing in this motion that would have the same effect. If you give an operator of a mine an exemption from tax on all the income generated within the first three years of operation, you would imagine that every mine that was operated would produce as much ore as it could during that three-year term. With respect to the film industry, the concept of the capital cost allowance deduction to the extent of 100 per cent obviously generated funds for the film industry.

One would be inclined to believe that the effect of this motion would be to lead to the creation of new artists. It has nothing to do with the actual creation of income for the artists. I would presume, having regard to the statistics given today, that artists are performing to the maximum of their achievement and financial return. What this would conceivably do would be to draw people out of other income-producing activities into activities of the creative artist so that they might benefit from the $20,000 exemption which is not available to the ordinary citizen. I did not know that artists can be created in this way. Either people are or are not able to produce artistic works. It seems unrealistic to turn to a dentist and say: "If you become a creative artist you can have a tax advantage that is not available to you as a dentist". The same might apply to every other walk of life in which Canadians find themselves.

Since the motion would have no effect on the creation of new wealth, I do not believe it is an appropriate undertaking for the House. I would add a further caveat to my examination of the motion, Mr. Speaker. On examination of the categories of artists to which it would apply, I cannot help but think, specifically having regard to the complex provisions of Bill C-139, that there is not any reasonable way that draftsmen can create the category of privileged artists entitled to these special benefits without writing an entirely new Income Tax Act.

One of the great tragedies of the Act as it stands is that it is too voluminous and too complex. The masters of the Department of Finance and the masters of the Department of National Revenue—the Deputy Ministers—would have a heyday playing with the words used in the motion. It would take page upon page to define a film maker. Should that include some of the large production facilities such as Paramount Studios in the United States, should it undertake activities in Canada? Of course not. It would have to be excluded. What would happen then? They would talk about public corporations which could not qualify, about individuals who incorporated themselves who could not qualify, about groups of artists who got together to undertake projects which would not qualify. If you want to have some fun with the kind of definition that would appear, Mr. Speaker, I urge you to exercise your mind and think how they would deal with the word "photographer".

I suggest that the undertaking of this task by the various Departments that would inevitably become involved in the drafting of the required legislation would render, in its final product, an absolutely confusing, burdensome and useless piece of legislation. That has been our experience in the past. There is no reason to believe that the Department of Finance in conjunction with the Department of National Revenue would treat this particular recommendation by the Hon. Member any differently.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure for me to comment on this motion, for two reasons. First, I think the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau (Mr. Gourd) has, as usual, done a very good job of raising an important issue for our attention. All of us are grateful to him for doing so. He has a reputation as a wise and hard working Member of Parliament. I am pleased to rank him as one of my friends and to have his advice available.

Second, for the past 15 years I have been a businessman in the book publishing industry. I understand something about problems facing writers, editors and other artistic people involved in that industry. My own business is on the commercial side. We are distributors and I am a salesman by training. I have seen people spend long hours trying to create a book, to take a vision of the world and to communicate it to readers. I hold these people in the highest regard. I look on this Bill, therefore, with some nostalgia and approval.

One of the toughest ways to make a living is that of writing books. It is not something which will make an ordinary individual into a rich person. There are exceptions, and we are grateful for them. I am thinking of people such as Pierre Berton, Margaret Atwood, Farley Mowat and so on. They are probably in a position where they can earn a comfortable living from their writing. Unlike American and British writers, Canadian artists are usually dependent on some kind of outside income to give them a decent standard of living. Those of us who know something about the industry are always looking for ways to provide extra support and help to people who play such a vital role in our lives.

I have worked in the industry for a long time. I was a publisher's agent for a while and I have seen what it means for an individual to spend six months on a book and then earn only a few hundred or a few thousand for the effort. Obviously, the individual has to find another way to make a living.

Having said all that, I do not personally agree with this technique for supporting artists. It seems to me it is always attractive to single out a special group in society and say that they are worthy of special tax treatment. I look around this House and see people here at the moment who have said that farmers should get special tax treatment because they are engaged in the vital activity of producing food. I am sure we could extend the list to include social workers who are increasing the happiness in life for people who otherwise might be suffering from emotional or social difficulties—

Mr. Althouse: Liberal MPs.

Mr. Fisher: —doctors and nurses who are involved in the vital question of personal health, teachers and professors who help us to expand our horizons and bring important training to everyone. All of these people can be described as important groups, people who have more than just a commercial pursuit in life. They are people who leave extra in the world rather than taking from the world. I guess in a way it is tempting to say that we should look at them as potential beneficiaries of special tax treatment.

Obviously, as we begin to draw up such a list the grey areas become more and more apparent and the list gets longer and longer, until we get to the point where no one would be paying any tax at all. That is not a bad idea, but it is not too practical. We always have the temptation to define a special group of people and give them special tax treatment.

On the other hand, we might take a look at a more practical way to go about achieving the same goal. Over the past few years the Government has more and more actively tried to bring in grants as a system of paying people instead of using the tax system.

Mr. McDermid: The big "L" in the corner.

Mr. Fisher: I hear my good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), making some comment. I might say that the use of grants by the Ontario Government, certainly in the artistic area, has been very constructive. The Ontario Government has used grants rather than tax deductions as an excellent way to reach out to the artistic community. The Ontario Arts Council has often been a pioneer in grant techniques. I remember the system it devised in the early 1970s to pay grants directly to Canadian authors through Canadian publishers, thereby giving the individual target group the maximum amount of help without any government strings attached.

Mr. McDermid: Where does the money come from?

Mr. Fisher: I find that grants are usually much more flexible. They allow us to get right to the group of people we want to support. In this case it would be artists. I suspect that we would look at nationality as well. We would want to have either Canadian citizens or landed immigrants as recipients, and I suspect we would also want Canadian-owned companies to be involved. That has been the thrust of grants at the federal and provincial levels for the past decade.

Grants are also much more accountable. When the Government gives out a grant it is called upon quite regularly to explain why the grant was given to the particular recipient.

Mr. McCuish: What about Alastair Gillespie?

Mr. Fisher: I recall we had a debate of this nature in the House some time ago on charitable donations. The topic got around to tax deductions versus grants. One of the Members from Halifax stood up, waved a newspaper advertisement and said he wanted to know why a grant had been given to a particular group. That is a very accurate illustration of what I mean. Grants are easily identified and, therefore, the Government is easily called upon to account for their distribution.

I would draw to the attention of the House a report prepared by Mr. Paul Audley of the Canadian Institute of Economic Policy, a private research group based here in Ottawa. He has urged that we move away from tax exemptions and get into a direct grant and tax credit system for artists because he sees the current deduction system as too broad and too open-ended.

Quite rightly, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown also wants to know where the money comes from for grants. I remind him that expenditures on grants are much more easily controlled than expenditures through the tax system. That is one of the big problems with tax deductions; they are wide open. Anyone can get a tax deduction if they fall into the general category.

The Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble) gave us a colorful description of the problems involved in defining categories. Once you are in the category you get the deduction, whereas a granting system is not open-ended in that fashion. It is a distinct and definable amount of money.

• (1610)

Perhaps the best way to consider this problem is to imagine ten people living on a desert island. The cost of running the Government on the desert island is $100. If one person demands a tax deduction, then that $100 has to be paid by the other nine. Instead of each person paying $10 they then pay $11 and change. If it is a grant, the grant will then be discussed among all of them and everyone will pay the same amount of tax. There will be a discussion about priorities and whether or not the grant should be paid out of the $100, whether the $100 should be increased or another system implemented. In fact, they might even find that the desert island should get into a deficit.

Overall, one will find that the granting system has been used in this area instead of tax deduction because it is more easily targeted. In fact, since grants are not open-ended, they are much more accountable. They are a distinct amount of money that can be spent within a predefined sense of affordability.

I would urge the Members of the House to applaud the Hon. Member for Argenteuil-Papineau. He has devised a good idea. From my own experience, I know that he is describing a group of people who are very worthy and have added considerably to our national life. I hope that he will take his ideas on tax deductions and further study the possibilities inherent in a grants system. I do not agree with the particular techniques suggested in the motion but I do agree very much with the spirit behind it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), to interrupt the proceedings.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING MORTGAGE PAYOUTS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved that Bill C-674, to amend the Interest Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there has been some degree of interest shown about this issue in my constituency. The reason I introduced this Bill is that I was approached by two people from the area of Almonte in my riding. One is a farmer and the other is a householder. They were inquiring about their mortgages and the high interest rates that they were locked into for a long period of time.

In supporting this Bill C-674 which I have introduced, I ask my fellow Members of Parliament to forget about their Party affiliation and to think squarely about the needs of their constituents. At a time when Canadians, if they have not already lost their homes, continue to risk the loss of their homes, it is incumbent upon Members of this House to do what they can to be of help to their fellow citizens.

This Bill will not cost any Government money whatsoever. The proposal is to change one word in Section 10 of the Interest Act. That Section has not reflected any of the changes which I have proposed in this Bill since at least 1906. However, our practice in mortgages and their interest has drastically changed.

This Bill is designed to benefit Canadians. According to CMHC research, a little over 700,000 Canadians have mortgages at 17 per cent or higher. If this Bill is passed, those Canadians might be able to refinance after one year with the payment of a three-month penalty, thus taking advantage of the presently lower interest rates.

If this Bill is talked out, it will be by those Members who favour the financial institutions and their profits rather than the average Canadian citizen who is unfortunate enough to be caught by the greatest increase in interest rates in history.

I have sought and received agreement from my Party that we will only put one speaker up, which is myself, for a very short period. I have spoken to the NDP and they have agreed to put only one speaker up for a short period of time. I have spoken with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) who has 50 per cent responsibility in handling this legislation. He is quite happy to let the Bill go to committee.

Last week, we postponed this Bill until this week to see whether the Minister responsible for the other 50 per cent would let it go to the committee as well. Today, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is non-committal. I will be interested to see whether the Liberals talk this Bill out and thus favour the corporations and their profits over Canadian citizens who are having some difficulty at the present time.

Even if this Bill passes second reading today and goes to committee, it will not become law. At the committee stage, the mortgage companies will be able to make their representations as to whether or not this Bill is out of order due to the deposits which they may have locked in. I only hope that this Bill will be approved or perhaps amended and approved at the committee stage after it has received appropriate scrutiny. We can then help those Canadians who are suffering from high interest rates.

I have noted in the last 12 to 16 months the great increase in the number of people who are on Unemployment Insurance, whose ability has been lessened to finance their homes, whether they be rented or, more pertinent to this Bill, mortgaged.

I have also noticed in the business sections of newspapers that some financial institutions are predicting that there will be more foreclosures this year than last year, due to the fact that people will be exhausting their Unemployment Insurance. Therefore, their ability to finance their homes will be less than it was when they were on Unemployment Insurance.

My proposed amendment to the Interest Act is very simple. It will cover approximately 700,000 Canadians who have mortgages at a rate from 17 per cent to 21 per cent and who have to worry about their next payment. They see mortgages today at 12 per cent. My Bill proposes a method for these home owners to take advantage of today's lower rates. Quite simply, it will allow the borrower the privilege of paying off their existing mortgage with a three-month penalty after one year rather than the five years which is presently the law under Section 10 of the Act. After one year they would then be able to reapply.

It is interesting to note that until about 14 years ago, Canadians could get a 25-year mortgage. The provision of Section 10 allowed them to pay it off after five years with a three-month penalty, which is in one-fifth of the time. In the last 12 years, mortgage companies, or those people who grant mortgages, have unilaterally cut out the 25-year mortgage and reduced the maximum term on residential mortgages to one of five years. Therefore, by proposing this amendment, I am actually staying in step by asking that it be possible to pay off a mortgage in one-fifth of the term, one year, which is one-fifth of five, whereas the Act is now outdated. Mortgages could be paid off in five years, being one-fifth of 25, apropos to a time when 25-year mortgages were possible.

• (1620)

The Bill meets the needs of our times. No longer are 25-year terms the norm. With the advent of the interest rate chaos we have witnessed in the past few years, shorter terms became the norm. In fact, a year ago one could not obtain a mortgage for five years. One might be able to obtain one over three years, but in many cases it was reduced to a maximum one-year term. However, our Interest Act never did react to this change of circumstance.

Today, let us get on with this overdue change to the Interest Act and forward the Bill to committee. The Bill changes one word, the word "five" to the word "one".

The Canadian Catholic Bishops' statement has been much discussed, but I dare say it has yet to really influence the actions of the House. Oh, there has been much talk about the statement, but as yet there has been no action. Here is the opportunity for action. Here is the opportunity for Hon. Members who rose from their seats on all sides of the House of Commons to praise the Bishops' statement to think and act in favour of the interests of those Canadians we represent.

I have noticed that I am not the first Member of the House to raise this issue. In fact, the issue has touched upon all sides of the House. Indeed, the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) spoke on a similar amendment to the Interest Act only two weeks ago, which Bill was talked out. After having read all the material concerning events of that day, I found there was much talk but not much sense. It was just talked out for the sake of being talked out. I hope that will not happen today.

I also noticed that on January 31, 1983, as reported on page 22340 of Hansard, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) asked a question which reflected a similar interest. Indeed, this merely goes to show that whether one is a Progressive Conservative, a Liberal or a Member of the New Democratic Party, it makes no difference. We all receive correspondence from our constituents seeking a change such as the one I have proposed.

It is with this in mind that I call upon Hon. Members, in the spirit of parliamentary reform, in the spirit of acting on the sentiments of the Bishops' statement, to pass this Bill to the committee for further study today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly pleased to enter into the debate very briefly this afternoon because I want this Bill to pass just as much as the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). I commend and congratulate him for bringing the Bill to the attention of the House. Nothing could be more timely, since interest rates have been so high, in fact I believe the highest in the history of this country, particularly in 1981 and 1982.

One of the greatest concerns expressed in my constituency of Brant is, of course, the extremely high cost of shelter, of home ownership. As we all know, when interest rates soared from around 8 per cent, 9 per cent or 10 per cent to as high as 20 per cent back in late 1981 and into 1982, thousands of people across this country and many in my own riding were forced to give up their homes. It is not that difficult to lose a car because of lack of money or to even lose a refrigerator or furniture. However, when one loses a house because one cannot afford to maintain the mortgage payments, that is indeed an extremely serious matter; often the family begins to disintegrate, and the family is still the social basis of this country. Without the family as the basis for our society, we are indeed in trouble.

As the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton has already explained, this Bill, which is under his name, will in a general sense allow persons to "buy down" their mortgages after a minimum of one year. The reason for this proposal is obvious. It is because a year and a half ago many home owners were forced to renew mortgages at rates in excess of 19 per cent or 20 per cent, and were locked in for perhaps two or three years. Now that the mortgage rate is down to around 12.5 per cent, if they could buy down their mortgages they would, of course, be afforded considerable monthly savings. For example, a $50,000 mortgage amortized over 20 years at 10 per cent would entail a monthly payment of about $475 a month, but at 19 per cent the monthly payment would be $818.69, or virtually double. There would be a tremendous saving to the average of middle-income home owner if this Bill were allowed to pass second reading and go to committee.

As the Hon. Member who introduced the Bill has very forcefully argued, it will not cost the Government one cent if the Bill passes second reading. It will not become law this afternoon; it will go to a parliamentary committee where the banks and mortgage companies will have their "day in court", so to speak, to present the alternative arguments.

As it is very relevant and cogent to the discussion this afternoon, I would like to remind Hon. Members that last spring the banks, which we in the New Democratic Party have argued never lose in this country, were crying "foul" and pleading poverty before the appropriate House Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which was studying bank profits. Our Party, when it came through with a minority report criticizing and indeed condemning the banks for their exorbitant profits during very tough times, was laughed at or scorned by the business sector and certainly by the banking institutions, yet in last night's news and in today's newspapers we were informed that in 1982 the banks indeed had an excellent year. On average, they had a 30 per cent increase in profits over 1981, which was their best year in history. I believe it was the Scotia Bank which had a 62 per cent profit. The Royal Bank had a 39 per cent profit in 1982 over 1981.

Something must be done about the exorbitant profits of the banks. We in the New Democratic Party have stated that, as in some other progressive countries, the banks should be used in part, not in total, as an extension of social policy. In other words, there should be pools of capital which the banks should be forced to set aside for such groups as farmers, who are extremely important producers in a country such as Canada, for small businesses that are viable but are having short-term cash flow problems, for fishermen, and for low- and middle-income earners with respect to home mortgages. This impacts directly upon the Bill which we are discussing this afternoon, Bill C-674.

In the long term it would help to overcome even the necessity for this kind of Bill if we were to go back to long-term mortgages and to stabilized interest rates over at least a ten-year period. This would also stimulate as well as stabilize the home construction industry and eliminate or certainly reduce a considerable amount of the rip-offs or questionable practices in the residential development area which were formerly evident across the country, to some degree because those in the development industry, the builders and real estate agents, looked ahead and saw crests in their industry of two or three years and then troughs of two or three years. Thus they could not adequately plan ahead. Therefore they tried to grab as much as they could in terms of profit, while the grabbing was good.

There are many aspects to this legislation that we commend to the Government. I see no reason why this Bill cannot go to committee, and I warn Hon. Members opposite that if they talk this Bill out this afternoon they will be deliberately assisting the banks, which made a fantastic profit in 1982 compared to almost every other sector of the economy; they are helping out the mortgage companies, whose profits are also high in comparison to the other sectors of the investment community, and they are directly hurting 700,000 Canadian homeowners—which was the figure used by the Hon. Member who introduced the Bill—who hold mortgages the interest rates of which are in excess of 17 per cent. They are hurting those 700,000, most of whom could reduce their mortgages to more reasonable interest rates and more manageable monthly payments.

I put this to the Liberal Members opposite: put aside partisanship this afternoon. It is not going to bring down the Government, it is not going to force a snap election, it is not even going to result in Bill C-674 becoming law. We are simply asking the Government Members to let it go through to committee for further study. And if that happens this afternoon, that will be a triumph for backbenchers of all Parties in this House. It will be a gigantic step forward in showing the Treasury benches as well as the banking and money-lending institutions that we ordinary MPs still have some clout, as well as compassion for our constituents.

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to address this Bill C-674, which has been proposed by the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), to amend the Interest Act.

The idea behind this Bill has been around for quite a while. At first blush it is natural to have considerable sympathy for what it attempts to achieve. The intent of this proposal is to be retroactive, to go back on contracts that have been established and to amend them after the fact.

It was pointed out by the two previous speakers that we used to have 25-year mortgages, and they lamented the fact that we do not have them any more, that they have been reduced to one-fifth, or five-year mortgages. The very process they are proposing this afternoon is to take five-year mortgages and cut them in five slices and therefore make them one-year mortgages for all future mortgage-holders. My central concern is that it would lead to a very undesirable result. The consequences would be more serious than the benefits that might be achieved, and we would end up in a situation where not only mortgage lenders but also homeowners who want to finance a mortgage would find themselves in a worse position than under the present legislative arrangements.

As I said, the purpose of the Bill looks good on the surface. It is only natural that when mortgage interest rates decline, a homeowner with a mortgage at higher rates would want to take advantage of the reduced interest rates. One can envisage circumstances where, even at a cost of three months' interest, this would be to the homeowner's advantage. I suppose it is the equivalent of having one's cake and eating it, too. Why was such a change not written into the Interest Act years ago? There is a good answer to that rhetorical question. One can begin to get a clue to the answer if one looks at the present terms of the Interest Act. This law allows mortgage borrowers with long-term mortgages of, say, 25 years, to redeem the mortgage at the five-year anniversary date. In effect, they can refinance the mortgage at the current interest rate. The result of this arrangement has been that the normal maximum length of mortgages is, effectively, only five years.

Of course there are times, such as we have passed through recently, when financial markets are in difficulties and shorter terms prevail. Not many homeowners were willing, in the fall of 1981, to tie themselves to five-year contracts at the then interest rates of nearly 22 per cent. So the one-year mortgage or even the six-month term, has prevailed recently. But we are beginning to see the return of five-year mortgages. And the important point to understand is that the prevailing maximum term is five years, not six years or four years, because of the provision in the Interest Act allowing mortgages to be paid off at the end of five years.

In considering this Bill before the House, we must appreciate that it would bring about a fundamental change in the mortgage market. The bottom line is that it would, in all likelihood, result in mortgages which would have a maximum term of no more than one year. Why is this? Well, it takes two to make a mortgage—a borrower and a lender. And under the mortgage structure which this Bill would impose, it is clear that the risks for mortgage lenders would increase. They would be quite unwilling to expose themselves to the dangers of a five-year mortgage if the borrower could, at any time when interest rates dropped, pay off their mortgage.

Mortgage lending institutions place great importance on the need to match the term structure of their mortgage assets with the maturity dates of their deposit liabilities, such as the guaranteed investment certificates, term deposits and debentures through which these institutions raised the funds to lend, in turn, in mortgages. Obviously they would not want to be in a position where their own liabilities are tied in for three or five-year terms at fixed interest rates while their earnings from mortgage interest are liable to decline in the event of a decline in interest rates on the market.

That is why the enactment of this Bill would produce a very quick change in the way mortgage lenders do business. It is clear that they would not want to issue mortgages with terms of more than one year. Because of the need to match that term with their own deposit liabilities, the mortgage lending institutions would no longer be offering the option of three or five-year terms for deposits and other investments. We would end up hurting both homeowners wishing to finance mortgages and also Canadians wishing to place their savings for reasonably long terms at a guaranteed interest return. We would, for example, greatly narrow the investment options open to retired persons. It is important for older Canadians to be able to count on getting a fixed return on their savings for a period of years. Under this system they would, instead, be forced into a situation of having their incomes fluctuate each year with changes in the level of interest rates on the market, and they would also face the problem of having to reinvest their funds every year.

A similar problem would face the homeowner with a mortgage. He would have to renew it each year, with the resulting burden of extra paperwork and legal costs. In effect, he would no longer have the benefit which this Bill seemed to promise: namely, the option of taking advantage of a drop in interest rates. He would, instead, be exposed to whatever the market offered at the end of the one-year term of his mortgage, instead of having the assurance of a five-year loan at a fixed rate.

Therefore, the change proposed by this Bill, rather than achieving the good intentions of its sponsor, would end up being self-defeating; and our position would be worse than when we began. Indeed, it is probable that the harmful results would be felt not only in financial markets. It would lead to increased uncertainties about the availability of mortgage funds to finance the house-building industry. Naturally this uncertainty would translate into problems for the construction industry, and probably a reduced level of housing construction.

The importance of stability in our mortgage markets—in interest rates and in the flow of savings into mortgages—can be seen in our experience of the last two years. The wild fluctuations of interest rates in recent years have created severe problems for lenders, borrowers, and house builders. It was less than two years ago, in the autumn of 1981, that conventional mortgage rates hit a peak of nearly 22 per cent. The average mortgage rate for the full year was 18.2 per cent. It is not surprising that the rate of housing starts fell off sharply, and would-be home buyers were scared off by the high rates. That situation continued into 1982, compounded by the effects of the recession which created uncertainties and fears for the future among people who might otherwise have been in the market for a house.

Last year the main activity in the mortgage market involved mortgage renewals, which were at the remarkably high level of approximately 650,000, but the flow of new loan funds into mortgages fell off quite sharply. Indeed, many of those who were renewing mortgages did their best to reduce their indebtedness by paying off as much as they could of their mortgages before renewing.

Since the middle of last year, however, there has been a welcome turnaround in the housing and mortgage situation. Three important factors have been at work: lower interest rates, government assistance programs, and lower housing prices in many areas. Since last June, mortgage rates have dropped by more than 7.5 percentage points. The rate on one-year conventional mortgages has dropped below 12 per cent. This means that the average monthly mortgage payment on a typical $50,000 mortgage, amortized over a 25-year period, has dropped by more than $250 since last June.

The lower rates combined with government assistance programs have helped greatly in improving access to home-ownership, especially for first-time buyers. All of these factors have helped to restore consumer confidence in housing as a viable investment. Most important, there are growing signs that a recovery in residential construction is imminent. Housing starts have been increasing steadily in recent months, and forecasts indicate that 1983 will be a much stronger year in the homebuilding industry than was 1982.

At the same time we have seen a strengthening in the mortgage market. There are increasing reports from lending institutions that borrowers with expiring one-year mortgages are switching to longer-term loans of three or five years. A few months ago it was hard to find a bank which offered five-year mortgages; now these longer-term loans are available at most of the major banks.

That welcome development has been made possible because Canadian investors are increasingly willing to put their savings into longer-term deposits and investments. Thanks to the decline in interest rates, they are moving to lock in current interest rates for three and five years. As a result, the supply of funds for mortgage lending is more than adequate to meet the prospective demand.

So our prospects in housing are more promising than they have been in some time. I feel it would be wrong to put all of this at risk by adopting the proposal in this Bill which, as I have indicated, would create far more problems than it would solve.

In fact, it is fair to say that market forces have not been doing a bad job of solving some of the problems which we faced. The mortgage market has proved itself remarkably adaptable, despite the turmoil and uncertainty of the financial situation in the last couple of years.

We have seen an increase in the number of open mortgages, which give the borrower the option to take advantage of a future drop in interest rates, provided he is prepared to pay the necessary premium for the privilege.

Another adaptation is variable rate mortgages, where monthly payments are fixed for a period of one or two years and then subject to adjustment in light of current interest rates in the market. These instruments are taking a substantial share of the market among some lending institutions which are promoting them. In addition, some lenders have adopted a plan whereby the borrower can renegotiate his mortgage at a predetermined cost. What this means in effect is that the homeowner who still has, perhaps, four, five or six months remaining on his current mortgage term, can switch to a new mortgage, locking in current favourable interest rates, at the cost of a pre-set premium.

One major trust company allows a mortgage borrower to switch to a lower interest rate in cases where the market rate has dropped within 30 days after having renegotiated a mortgage.

I believe that in view of this kind of adaptability in the mortgage market, it would be most unwise to attempt to impose a new rule by way of legislation. While recognizing the good intentions of the sponsor of this Bill, I think we must conclude that its adoption would be a mistake and that the market would prove this very quickly.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments made by the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael). This Bill attracts attention from a lot of people both here and in my riding. In Mississauga there are thousands of new homes which have just been completed. The people are rolling over their mortgages. There are subdivisions in my constituency where the mortgages came due block after block, street after street, all at the same time. With the astonishingly, incredibly high interest rates of the past two years, there have been difficulties in whole neighbourhoods. It has had a very dispiriting effect on the people living in those homes.

Equally, there are hundreds of small businesses in my riding. The people there are looking for ways to carry on their normal activities, using normal borrowing during a period when profits are down and interest rate costs have skyrocketed. The recent experience with skyhigh interest rates created a very difficult situation for these people. There is not a responsible political person who would not understand the impact of these high rates on our constituents.

In my constituency, and in carrying out my job as Parliamentary Secretary, I have had a lot of conversations with people faced with these difficulties. Last night I attended the meeting of the Canadian Labour Congress. There was an open question and answer period. There is no doubt that the workers represented at that Congress are deeply concerned about the impact of high interest rates on their jobs and on their personal lifestyles.

I was deeply impressed by the interest these people showed in finding some kind of alternative or some relief to the burden we all face. I would like again to extend to them my congratulations for what I thought were responsible ideas and, in many cases, well-expressed alternatives. But, Mr. Speaker, the intention in Bill C-674 will not work. The real answer is to lower interest rates. The real cure in the long run for all of us is to have interest rates back to levels we can all afford.

• (1650)

If we look at major structural changes such as the one recommended by my hon. friend in this Bill, we see that he is really suggesting that we turn over the whole financial system, and I am not sure it would have the results which he hopes for. However, it is the kind of approach toward which we can all be sympathetic. We would like to see one magic answer which we can impose on the whole financial system in the hope that this horrible problem will go away. Contrary to the opinions of the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), those of us who have some reservations about this Bill are not promoting higher profits for our financial institutions. What we are trying to do is to find a long-term legitimate cure, not some instant cure which is going to cause even greater difficulties in some other way. The Hon. Member for Brant, for example, has suggested that we go back to the kind of mortgage patterns which used to exist in the fifties and sixties. He would like to see mortgage terms of ten years or longer so that people can have some security in their home mortgages. I agree with the desire to find some security for these people. I would, however, want him to remember that not everyone in that period could get a mortgage when they wanted it. The mortgage market then was not as wide open or as readily accessible as it is at the moment.

Mr. Blackburn: Make it available by law.

Mr. Fisher: I believe I heard some advice shouted at me from across the way, but I could not make out what the Hon. Member said.

Mr. Blackburn: Make it available by law.

Mr. Fisher: Yes. The Hon. Member for Brant says, as I was afraid he would, that we should take his idea and enforce it by law. Again we see the pattern which begins to develop here, that one change in the law, as the one recommended in this Bill, must lead to a second change which would enforce some kind of mortgage pool into existence. I presume that if that does not work, we would then have to pass an additional law, an additional regulation. All of these kinds of regulations and interference in the financial market can be avoided if we get back to the real cure for high interest rates and the long-time cure toward volatile interest rates.

There are no magic answers. You cannot come up with an instant cure and slap it on top of a highly mobile situation, such as that of the capital markets in Canada. Last night at the CLC, for example, someone asked me why we did not have exchange controls. If our interest rates were reduced, and if the reduction in interest rates resulted in a flood of capital going out of the country, then we should cure that by bringing in exchange controls. Yet, Mr. Speaker, exchange controls would simply be another magic answer and, again, I am not very sure they are a workable answer.

Mr. Robert Bryce was the official in charge of exchange controls during World War II. In his recent writings his advice has been very cautious about exchange controls. He warns us that Canada is a wide open country. It is a place where we pride ourselves and we prosper on our trade and our openness. To bring in exchange controls on top of this kind of open situation would really not work. There are hundreds of ways in which individuals and corporations could avoid any exchange control if we were to bring it in. Over these past couple of years the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and other Hon. Members of Parliament have given thorough consideration to exchange controls. We have rejected them because they do not fit either the best part of our national economic character or the reality of our economic system. We would have to impose them and then would find that in their imposition they probably would not work. And so another magic answer, another magic solution, would have to be rejected. Just as we have rejected the idea that you can enforce or legislate a mortgage pool, in the same way I would reject the idea that exchange controls could be enforced.

I believe the main problem which we would face in all of this is the nature not only of the Canadian economy, but the nature of capital. Capital will move out of these areas very quickly, will move out of this country very quickly, if the Government appeared to be threatening. I believe the advice we received from the Lortie Commission indicated very clearly how fluid capital really is, and anyone who has worked at all in trying to raise funds will know that the capital market does not have any restrictions on it at this time and capital will move away from any situation which looks too threatening. Therefore, long before we are able to put this kind of suggestion into effect, we would find that the funds available for mortgages had disappeared.

The Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael) gave us a very good description of the need for balance in this area. For every borrower there has to be a lender. We are not doing the borrowers any good if we drive away the lenders or if we frighten away the money. This is not an abstract problem. This is not an unfair favouring of capital over the needs of the consumer or the needs of the businessman and the worker. This is in fact a realistic assessment of the existing capital market in North America and, indeed, around the world.

We only have to take a look at the French experience after the Mitterand election to see that attempts to change interest rates away from world trends do not work. Attempts to apply magic solutions do not work. The French had to abandon those attempts after the first unsuccessful experiments. We need to remember that there is a fair balance in this part of life, that every borrower has to be matched by a lender, and the lender has to feel that the arrangement is fair and that the money which is lent will be repaid in a proper way.

I have strayed from my topic, a little, Mr. Speaker, because I feel it is important to give that kind of background periodically whenever I hear comments about mortgages or high interest rates. It is important to talk about the background of the capital market and the nature of the Canadian economy within the North American economy, because to do otherwise is to mislead people.

I began my remarks by saying that the real cure for all of this comes in the form of lower interest rates, and the real way to cure the high interest rate problem is to follow the approach which the Government has taken, and that approach is twofold: first, we have said that the over-all high interest rate problem is going to be solved when the inflation level comes down. We cannot reach out into every Canadian's life and magically produce low interest rates for every Canadian, so we must deal with the causes of high interest rates. We have to attack the high inflation rate; second, we also have to react to American interest rates. Those are the two magnets which pull at our interest rates in this country, the U.S. rates and our own domestic inflation. As I tried to explain a moment ago, we would have to increase our interest rates if the Americans increased their rates, but we cannot automatically reduce our interest rates when the Americans do. We must lower our inflation rate at the same time.

• (1700)

As abstract as those ideas seem, they have an important bearing on our lives. Interest rates will come down when we clean up our own act here in Canada by lowering our own inflation. They will also come down when the American rates come down. I am happy to say that we have seen some very good news on those fronts in the past few months.

I should like to refer to a few statistics. The official Bank of Canada rate today is at 9.48 per cent. The one-year mortgage rate is at 11.5 per cent to 11.75 per cent. The prime rates are at 11.25 per cent. Those are record low levels. We have to go back about four years before we find rates that low. In the United States we see the same trend happening. There are now major movements among important American banks to lower their prime rates. Their prime seems to be settling in this week at about 10.5 per cent. Again we would have to go back about four years to find a rate that low.

With our low inflation rate we know that we will be in a position to take advantage of these declining American rates. Our inflation has been showing very good trends over the last six months. In May, our rate was at 11.8 per cent. Today, on a 12-month year-over-year basis, it is 8.3 per cent. In the last six months it has been at 6 per cent. We can see not only that it is lower, but that recent experience will pull it down even more. In January, prices fell by .3 per cent. We have lower prices in our economy. We have lower inflation, combined with lower American rates. The two factors together will give us lots of room to get Canadian interest rates down and to leave them down.

There has been much talk on the other side about Government deficits and how the Government will crowd out other investors in the market. I am reminded of a story appearing in The Globe and Mail today that indicated that federal bonds which were put on the market this week have sold very, very quickly; in fact, they sold at a premium. The bond market seems to be in a very good position.

Mr. Dick: Perhaps you set the interest rate too high.

Mr. Fisher: If we look at the availability of funds, there is plenty of room for the federal Government to go out and borrow money without crowding out private sector borrowers. I know that Conservatives like to claim otherwise, but it is important for us to reassure Canadians that federal Government borrowing at this time will not crowd out the private sector, nor cause any kind of resurgence in interest rates.

Today it seems we have the ingredients for some better long-term response on the interest rate front. We have lower inflation. We have lower rates abroad. We do not have a lot of competition on the market for money. We can anticipate that interest rates will be a little more favourable for consumers, home buyers and business people over the next few months. Let us welcome that as a sign that our recovery is on the way.

We can see a few results from all this. The Hon. Member for St. Boniface pointed out, quite rightly, that mortgage rates have come down dramatically ever since the Government introduced its six and five program.

Some Hon. Members: Nonsense!

Mr. Fisher: For example, an average $55,000 one-year mortgage is now $250 cheaper every month since the six and five program came in. Housing starts all across Canada have responded to those lower rates. In my own City of Toronto, housing starts in the last month were 75 per cent higher than they were a year earlier. People are getting back out on the market because houses are affordable and because they know that they will be affordable for a longer period of time. We can see through Christmas retail sales patterns that consumers are coming back out on the market and that consumer confidence is reviving.

If people took the time to read it, an interesting story appeared in yesterday's edition of The Toronto Star which quoted a man named Douglas Peters from the Toronto-Dominion Bank who indicated that the consumer response in this period of short inventories will have an immediate impact upon factories and manufacturers. This revival of consumer demand can indeed lead to people being recalled to the job and to a return of greater economic activity. Lower interest rates and the six and five program generally have given us some confidence.

However, we have not forgotten the individual who is in trouble. We have not forgotten the person who has really been pressed by high interest rates. In November, 1981 and in June, 1982 we continued the program of $3,000 grants for people with high mortgages who had to renew them. The people in the greatest despair, the people who were spending more than 30 per cent of their total family income on mortgages, were eligible for $3,000 grants to reduce those carrying costs to a more affordable level. We did that for a category of people who needed the help the most, the people who were spending 30 per cent or more of their family incomes on their mortgages. We want to help those people carry those mortgages and stay in their homes. In the same way we renewed the small business bond and we increased Farm Credit Corporation funds by $400 million.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak for a few minutes on this Bill. I must say that on reading it I am somewhat ambivalent about it. I feel it contains some good things, but also some that I question.

The Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Bockstael) said that it created more problems than it resolved. I am not sure whether I agree with that, because in general I support lower interest rates and the idea of paying off a mortgage as early as possible.

I should like to refer to the Explanatory Note which in part reads as follows:

> The Interest Act at present grants mortgagors the right to pay out a five-year mortgage at the expiration of the five-year term, subject only to a penalty of three months' interest in lieu of notice.

It says, "in lieu of notice". Actually that term is usually written into the mortgage, and I understand it. I think it would be most unfortunate to have a one-year mortgage and still have to pay the same bonus, whether it is in lieu of notice or whether it is written in the mortgage papers that one is required to pay three months' interest bonus. As I understand it, if the interest rate were 12 per cent, the three months' interest bonus would probably bring it up to 15 per cent. Thus one would be really paying a very high rate of interest, almost a usurious rate, to pay off the mortgage at the end of the one year.

Also I understand that some credit unions have been giving out funds at a flexible rate which fluctuates from month to month, and also that they have been prepared to accept weekly payments. It has been a real boon to their success and to the mortgage payer to have a fluctuating rate and to be able to pay them off weekly, with the payments being calculated weekly not monthly, at six-month intervals or even yearly as some mortgages are.

One matter which concerns me is the cost involved in a mortgage transaction, particularly if one has to refinance or renew it after one year. Today I find that many mortgage companies are not prepared to renew mortgages in the usual way in which it was done over the years. In many cases they say that we no longer want to accept this kind of risk. Usually it is because some people have been in some difficulty with their mortgage payments. They may have been in arrears. They may have brought them up to date but are still having difficulty making their payments from month to month. The mortgage companies, in their wisdom or lack of it, in my view, should assume some of the risky transactions or risky mortgages the same as anyone else, but rather than do that and act as good corporate financial citizens, they are prepared to say to their mortgagees, "We will not renew your mortgage". The individual must therefore look for a new mortgage. It may be very difficult, and in some cases impossible, to find a new mortgage or to get the mortgage that you need if you do not qualify financially.

With regard to mortgage costs, not only the cost paid to the mortgage company is involved or the cost of taking out a new mortgage with another financial institution but there is the whole question of the legal costs. It means another search of title, checking for mechanics' liens, executions and all the legal work that is required in such a situation.

Although interest rates are lower today than they were recently, they are nothing like the interest rates that were in effect just after the war. At that time National Housing Association mortgages were available at 6 per cent for 35 years. Some of those mortgages have matured just recently. They were a Godsend at the time, and rates have been much higher ever since. It is too bad that we do not have some way of guaranteeing a particular rate of mortgage interest over a number of years. I hope that in the Speech from the Throne which will be coming down shortly, the Minister will offer something of that nature.

We are all concerned about lowering interest rates and paying off mortgages as soon as possible at the least cost possible.

I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he change his Bill to indicate that people should be able to pay off any mortgage after one year, without notice and without bonus. That would be an improvement on the Bill and it would be much more likely to obtain the agreement of all Members of the House.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is very much time for me to make even a brief comment. As the Hon. Member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) said in his remarks, I introduced a similar Bill two weeks ago. Hon. Members are well aware of what is going to happen to this Bill in the minute or two remaining.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2) it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding item No. 469 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO EXTEND RIGHT TO VOTE TO CANADIANS ABROAD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) moved that Bill C-669 to amend the Canada Elections Act (civilian Canadian Forces electors) be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My interest in this matter arose several years ago when we discussed in the House extending the law to give teachers and administrators on National Defence posts outside the country the right to vote in federal elections. At that time several of my constituents asked that the law be amended to include employees who were not on military lists or, for that matter, on teachers' lists but were people who worked for the Armed Forces on the bases as advisers, professionals in the service sector, or in administration. They worked on contract but were not public servants under the law.

At that time I was told that this was a complicated subject and should probably be referred to the Chief Electoral Officer. Correspondence continued to come in to me, and so I decided to present a Bill.

This is a very simple and straightforward Bill which proposes to extend the right to vote to all Canadian citizens working for the Canadian Armed Forces outside Canada in any capacity whatsoever. Essentially, that is the purpose of the Bill.

I have written several letters to different Ministers—The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) and the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), as well as to the Chief Electoral Officer. I have received——a variety of opinions, Mr. Speaker.

The purpose of this Bill, which we shall be discussing for the remainder of the day, is to grant voting rights to some 850 Canadians who are working abroad for the Canadian Forces. At the present time, the only civilians employed by the Canadian Forces to have those rights are teachers, as I mentioned earlier, and members of the administrative support staff in Canadian Forces schools. This exception was made in the House in 1977, when we amended the Act to include this group.

If passed, the Bill would eliminate a provision which I consider to be discriminatory, and which allows certain civilian electors to exercise their voting rights, while prohibiting others from doing so. According to my information, a large proportion of the individuals to be affected by this Bill are now eligible to vote, but only as dependants of a Canadian Forces elector. This is why, Mr. Speaker, my comments will be on matters of principle rather than on electoral accounting problems. It would be easy to argue that there are not 850 people—perhaps there are only 300. I did not go to the Canadian Forces bases to count them, so I am not going to concentrate on figures but on the principle involved.

To understand the injustice of the present situation, I think Hon. Members should imagine how they would feel if they were a doctor, for instance, who has left his province to practise his profession in Europe on a Canadian Forces base. He reads the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which became effective last spring, a document that has been given wide circulation by the Government. He notices Section 3 of the Charter, which reads as follows, and I quote:

> Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of Members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

Our doctor says: Great! The Charter is absolutely clear, and I am a Canadian citizen. Even if I happen to be on a Canadian Forces base in Europe, surely I will have the right to vote. When general elections are called, he finds out that he, his wife and his daughter who is of voting age, do not have the right to vote, whatever the Charter says, because of the present wording of the legislation. Our doctor is not a member of the military, nor a teacher nor a dependant of a Canadian Forces elector. He is very disappointed, especially since both his military neighbour across the way and his next-door neighbour who happens to be a civilian teaching elementary school, can take advantage of the mechanisms provided under the Special Voting Rules and vote by mail in federal general elections.

I have heard three arguments which attempt to justify this discriminatory state of affairs. One was that the civilians who would stand to gain by this Bill had been abroad for a long time and, as a result, would have lost interest in Canadian politics. On the other hand, members of the Armed Forces and teachers are, in many cases, people who have been abroad for a number of years. But they have the right to vote.

In fact, that Canadians who stand to benefit from this Bill are still interested in voting was amply proven by the mail I received from these people at my office, and they are still interested in the political life of their country and in the Government because they are entitled to exercise their voting rights in general elections by casting a vote to show their approval or disapproval of the Government's activities, and in a democracy like ours, it is essential that everyone be allowed to exercise his voting rights.

Another argument was that the people affected by my Bill were not subject to the Code of Service Discipline and were therefore excluded and thus subject to the laws of the country where they were living, not Canadian law. As a result, it would be impossible to prosecute them in case of any violations of the voting rules. I admit there is a problem, but it seems to me it could be overcome. For instance, Canadians working abroad for the Canadian Forces as civilian employees could be declared subject to the Code of Service Discipline but only for the purposes of the Canada Elections Act.

• (1720)

[English]

Third, there is the need for administrative arrangements to put this Bill into effect. Here again, I have received from the people to whom I have written various opinions with regard to the administrative difficulties at hand. I want to read the opinion given to me by the Minister of National Defence. His letter, dated December 6, 1982, is addressed to me, and reads as follows:

> To extend the voting privileges beyond members of the Canadian Forces and career members of the Public Service of Canada would require the establishment of permanent lists of electors or continuous electoral rolls. At the moment, both the Department of National Defence and the Department of External Affairs maintain permanent lists of Canadian Forces and Public Service electors based on the information available on personnel departmental files; this information is not available in respect of locally engaged Canadians employed by this Department outside Canada.

The letter goes on:

> Administratively it would be extremely difficult and, at times, impossible to maintain permanent and accurate lists of electors and also to ensure that they are afforded the opportunity of voting at federal general elections throughout the world.

Miss MacDonald: Australia does.

Mr. Gauthier: That is the opinion of the Minister of National Defence.

I wrote, as I said before, to the President of the Privy Council. His answer to me, dated November 18, 1982, reads, in part:

> Your suggestion about the possibility of the civilian personnel office producing a list of its employees at the time of a federal election is a reasonable one, if this office keeps the personnel records of all public employees abroad. With the co-operation of the Defence Department, the votes of these employees could be forwarded in a similar manner to the votes of the members of the Armed Forces and their dependants.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, there is a difference of opinion between these two Ministers. I want to come now to the Chief Electoral Officer's letter to whom I wrote on the same point asking the same question. His answer dated November 22, 1982, and it reads in part:

> From an administrative point of view, I do not believe that such an undertaking would present any difficulty, providing the Department of National Defence is in a position to process the statements of ordinary residence of such employees, which is the basic requirement for voting under the Special Voting Rules, which form Schedule II of the Canada Elections Act.

As Hon. Members can see, there are divergent views as to the administrative challenge of putting this Bill into effect.

I do not want to take too long to discuss the fourth reason. I think the Charter of Rights speaks for itself. I do, however, want to quote again from the letter written to me by the Minister of National Defence. His point to me on the question of the constitutional right is worth having in our records.

I refer again to his letter of December 6, 1982 on the question of the constitutional right, Article 3. It reads:

Whether or not Article 3 of the Constitution 1981 will override the provisions of the Canada Elections Act and the Special Voting Rules, schedule II to that Act, is a matter which will have to be considered by officials in the Department of Justice and most probably eventually by the courts.

Will the Constitution of this country be a matter for consideration by officials in the Department of Justice? I do not understand, Mr. Speaker. The Minister goes on as follows:

—it would be difficult to recommend that a group of Canadian citizens employed locally by the Canadian Forces outside Canada, who are not subject to the Code of Service Discipline, should be given the right to vote at federal general elections without extending that same right to other Canadian citizens also employed outside Canada by other Government departments or agencies.

To that last point, I would like to add my support for a broader Bill. Possibly this Bill is too narrow in its application. It directs its impact toward Canadians working in Canadian Forces bases overseas. It could be that a committee, which would get a reference of this Bill, would want to extend that privilege to all Canadians, whether they are travelling on business or on pleasure outside of Canada at the time of an election. They would have the process at hand where they could go either to a consul or to an embassy to register themselves and be eligible to vote in a Canadian general election.

Miss MacDonald: Right on.

Mr. Gauthier: I do not think it is impossible for us to do that. I do not know that it would be difficult to have a permanent list that would allow us to do that. But I do think it would be a subject matter which would be of interest to all in the House and on which it would be interesting to hear the committee pronounce itself.

I do not want to take too much time because I would like to see the Bill referred to committee. In closing, I would like to thank those constituents and the people living in Lars who have written to me on this subject over the years. I hope for their sake that come the next election they will be able to exercise the democratic right of all Canadian citizens, namely, the right to vote in elections.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to speak to this much needed Bill. I want to compliment the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for presenting it. He is getting a reputation for doing some thinking on his own, a rare commodity on that side of the House, and I want to congratulate him.

Mr. Dingwall: Oh, come on.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): When did you last have a thought?

Mr. McKinnon: This Bill will help considerably the lot of people who are serving their country overseas. At present those who are on the voters' lists external to Canada are the Canadian Forces themselves, their dependants, and also, to my recollection, External Affairs employees. Their names are all recorded on various voters' lists which are very well and capably handled in each election that I have seen. I simply cannot understand why on earth, if External Affairs can put their Canadian employees on a voters' list in an embassy in a foreign land, the Armed Forces cannot do the same thing.

There are many people serving with the Armed Forces, for instance, in Germany, besides their dependants. Many of the senior positions are civilian positions. There are accountants and newspaper editors. There are people who operate the Maple Leaf services, the shopping centres. They have managers and purchasing agents. There are people who operate automobile agencies. These people are all Canadians and they should be entitled to vote according to the Bill of Rights, if nothing else, which, incidentally, allows all Canadians to vote and makes no discrimination at all, even to age.

The present Act has been improved over the years but obviously it needs some further improvement. Each Member of Parliament now gets a special list of service voters and dependants, and the External Affairs people who mark themselves down as wishing to vote in the Member's constituency. I would like to see that extended to these other employees as well.

• (1730)

While talking about that list, I am sure many Members wonder along with me why the Department of National Defence cannot refer to Navy personnel by their ranks and save us all the embarassment when we send something to a Major McKinnon, for example, who might be listed as being on HMCS Gatineau. When it is sent to Major McKinnon, it turns out he is a Lieutenant Commander. Not only is he mad, but you may have lost a vote. I am sure all Members would agree that this is an improvement which could be made to the Bill when it goes to committee, as I hope it does.

I agree with the Hon. Member who introduced the Bill that to say it is administratively extremely difficult to do something is not a good enough reason to disenfranchise Canadians who are serving their country. I hope that this Bill will not be talked out by the Liberals and that it will go to committee.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak on Bill C-669, which is an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act. I too would like to commend the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his independent thinking and his persistence with regard to this particular issue of extending the vote to those who are serving our country overseas. I would certainly echo the sentiments expressed by the previous speaker that, hopefully, the Government Members will not talk this Bill out, although I know they will.

I would like to refer to the Charter of Rights as it concerns this Bill. It is a Charter that our Parliament agonized over for a long time, the better part of a year. This is one of the first opportunities that the Government has had to demonstrate the importance of the Charter of Rights, particularly with respect to Part I, Section 3 which concerns the democratic rights that every citizen of Canada has. Our new Constitution says that every citizen has the right to vote in an election of Members of the House of Commons or Legislative Assembly and is qualified for membership therein. It is a pity that this right has not been extended to our citizens who are, in this case, serving with the Canadian Armed Forces, even though they may be employed in civilian categories.

Another part of our Charter concerns the whole question of mobility rights that ought to be recognized. Part I, Section 6 says that every citizen of Canada has the right to enter, remain in and leave Canada. If we recognize the right to vote and the right to be mobile both inside and outside of Canada, it is certainly very puzzling why the Government would want to talk out a Bill of this nature when we should be ensuring that all Canadians have that opportunity, wherever they are or from whatever background. The Charter states that they do have that right.

Aside from the fact that the Constitution indicates that we should support a Bill such as this, we also have to keep in mind the democratic principles under which we operate. On other occasions I have cited the famous quotation of Henry Emerson Fosdick who said that democracy is based upon the conviction that there are extraordinary possibilities in ordinary people. The people whom we want to include under this particular Bill may be considered by others as ordinary people overseas, but in some respects I think they are extraordinary. They are extending the service of Canadians not only here but overseas. They are making sacrifices in many ways by living in countries where they do not have the same kind of amenities that we have in Canada. It is a pity that they are not recognized.

I am pleased that this Bill seeks to extend this right to vote to all. I believe it concerns the basic question of citizenship. It has been said that the most important office is that of a private citizen. Why should certain private citizens be deprived of their opportunity and right to vote? I believe that citizenship is a demonstration of service to the country. One of the best ways to demonstrate citizenship is to allow people the right to vote. I would emphasize the importance of this fact.

Fortunately, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier has recognized the importance of voting. Perhaps the other Government Members have not recognized the importance of that right. It has been said that voting is the least arduous of a citizen's duties. He or she has the prior and harder duty of making up his or her mind. Therefore, when people vote, that is an outward manifestation of an inward act which they must perform. I do not understand why the Government wants to talk this Bill out and thereby deprive people serving overseas of the ability to make up their minds. I suspect the Government is fearful that when they do make up their mind their ballots will not be cast in the same way they have been in the past.

I do have some reservations about this Bill. I feel that it does not really go far enough. It seems to be limited purely to civilians who are working with the Armed Forces. I suggest that there must be an extension of this to anyone who is working in another country. Many of these people have sacrificed much to go abroad. They are still vitally interested in what is happening in Canada, but they are being deprived of a vote. I think, for example, of those working for CUSO. As well, there are those in non-government organizations such as the Mennonite Central Committee. They could also be missionaries who are in other countries.

Our Charter of Rights talks about the fact that we should not discriminate against individuals on the basis of religion, race or age. There should be a basic equality among people. This Bill should take into account all those Canadian citizens who have the right to vote under the Charter that we fought for.

The problem of administrative difficulties should not be of any concern. The previous speaker talked about the fact that we already receive lists of those in the Armed Forces overseas who are entitled to vote. We get their names regularly so that we can send them our "householders" and other information. What is stopping the Government from enfranchising all those overseas who can vote?

This Bill certainly merits the attention of the House. At least the contents of the Bill should be referred to the committee, and therefore I am somewhat disappointed that the Government will talk it out. The fact that the Government talks Bills out in some ways makes a farce out of Parliament. The fact is that this is a good idea, it will be raised in the next session, either in a Speech from the Throne or through proposals from the bureaucracy. I would like to expand on that point. The philosophy of this Bill will be brought forward by the bureaucracy as one of its own ideas. It will receive approval in the next session of Parliament. Here we have something which has been brought forward by Members of Parliament, people who have been elected to present their views. But no, that idea will not be accepted because it came from a Member of Parliament, even though it happened to be a Member from the Government side. However, when it comes from the bureaucracy, it will be accepted the next time around. I know that this is exactly what will happen in this particular case, and the Government is making a farce out of Parliament at this stage. I see the Parliamentary Secretary shaking his head, but this is unfortunately the way we are seeing things operating in the House.

I would therefore urge Hon. Members opposite to think this through, not to talk this Bill out, and at least to refer the subject matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections which may study it and bring us some recommendations to restore to Members of Parliament the power that they really deserve to have.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulate my colleague and good friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for bringing forth the Bill today. I think it is a Bill of extreme importance. I am sorry that the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) could not address himself to the contents of the Bill rather than making a series of rash judgments about other Members of Parliament. However, it is the kind of thing we have come to expect from Members of the Opposition, particularly in the last ten days or so when rash judgment seemed to be about the only act of which they were capable.

Miss Jewett: Why didn't you listen?

Mr. Kilgour: How long are you going to speak?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): As long as I must in order to express my thoughts, and if some of the—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I wish Hon. Members would address their remarks to the Chair, please.

Miss Jewett: We want the Hon. Member to sit down.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to address my remarks to you and to remind you that the rash judgments are still occurring. The importance of the Bill cannot be exaggerated, because the right to vote is the most fundamental of rights, next to the right to life, in my opinion.

Miss Jewett: To coin a phrase.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I would certainly hope that the Government would accept the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): The Hon. Member, in speaking to the Bill, said he had written to a number of Ministers and to the Chief Electoral Officer, and he quoted from some of those letters. I must say that whoever composed the letter from the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) was certainly making some long grasps, it seems to me, because the reasons given were not very valid. In fact, they were hardly rational. It seems to me that it should be easy to establish the mechanisms by which Canadians overseas may be able to vote.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I see only one major flaw in the Bill, it being that it is too narrow in scope. The mover of the Bill himself has recognized that fact. However, why should we not include the dependants of people who might be working overseas?

Mr. Lewycky: And the spouses.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Why should it apply only to dependants of those in the Canadian Armed Forces? Why should it not also apply to those who, while they may not be public servants, may be employed by the Department of External Affairs or by CIDA? What about volunteer workers in fields such as medicine, education or social work? Because they are serving humanity outside of Canada, why should they be denied their votes? Why could they not go to the nearest Canadian embassy or high commission and swear a standard affidavit stating that they had not voted in Canada and therefore are eligible to vote in any federal general election? What about missionaries, for instance, as the Hon. Member for Dauphin mentioned? It seems to me that rather than putting roadblocks in the way of people's right to vote, we should be doing everything possible to make it easy for them to vote.

Miss Jewett: Refer it to committee.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Therefore, because the Bill is, in my opinion, too narrow in scope, I should like to move:

That Bill C-669 be withdrawn and the subject matter thereof be referred forthwith to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. That motion requires a seconder.

Mr. Lewycky: I will second it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Mr. Dionne has moved a motion, seconded by Mr. Lewycky. Such a motion would require unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

Miss Jewett: David Smith said, "No".

Mr. Smith: They said it was me.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to see that the motion as put forth by the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne)—

Miss Jewett: Nice try.

Miss MacDonald: —did not receive the consent of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith).

Miss Jewett: He is just a nobody.

Miss MacDonald: It is a shame that a matter of this significance could not have been referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for study, for detail and for passage because a number of matters could have been raised and discussed at that time, matters which really need correction involving our Canada Elections Act, matters which are anachronistic now. I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for having brought the Bill forward to the House, for having vented the need for changes to the Canada Elections Act.

I would certainly support what the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier is proposing today. I was interested to note that he and others feel that perhaps the whole issue should go much further. It reminds of the time some years ago, long before I became a Member here, when I appeared before the parliamentary Committee on Privileges and Elections to put forth a proposal that we introduce absentee voting in this country and that we have a continuous electoral role system in this country such as there is in Australia. There is no problem in Australia managing to have absentee voting and extending the franchise to everyone who is a citizen. I do not think that Canadians are any less competent than Australians to carry that out. I feel that had we been able to send the subject matter to committee, as the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi suggested, we would have been able to discuss that broader issue.

Miss Jewett: That's right.

Miss MacDonald: However, I want to suggest to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, who has brought this very valuable piece of legislation before us, with regard to Schedule II of the Canada Elections Act, that extending the vote to persons whom he has designated would be one improvement we could make. There is another under Schedule II which he has mentioned, and I am sure that he and other Members of the House have heard this matter raised, as the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) has raised it both as Minister and again as an Hon. Member of the Opposition. I would refer particularly to the dependants, the spouses of Armed Forces personnel and public servants serving abroad who indeed have the vote.

It is clear to everyone here that the Canada Elections Act allows members of the Armed Forces and members of the diplomatic service to declare their place of residence in Canada in January or February of each year. They can designate the constituencies in which their votes will be cast. What I find repugnant and anachronistic is that the spouses who, by and large, happen to be women, must accept such designation of residence for themselves. Those women are not allowed to declare where they will vote in Canada. A spouse must accept the designation of the constituency declared by her husband even though she may never have lived in the riding when in Canada or met any of the candidates for the election, and may not have any connection whatsoever with the particular constituency designated for the vote.

I have raised this matter with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne). In fact, I raised it with him in questions on May 10 of last year, and suggested that this was something which could very easily be changed. In fact, when I raised it with him I suggested that the Election Act could be changed so that in January and February of each year the spouse, at the same time as the member of the Armed Forces is permitted to designate his constituency, could designate the constituency where she had formerly resided and where she had had in the past some connection from the point of view of residence. That is really a very anachronistic situation.

I raised that with the Minister of National Defence. In his reply he undertook to follow it up and said that he would bring it to the attention of the Chief Electoral Officer, but nothing has been done. Months have passed, and nothing has been done. There is an anger and frustration among the wives of the Armed Forces personnel serving abroad who, under the Canada Elections Act, are considered merely an extension of their husbands. They do not exist in their own right.

I would hope that when this Bill goes to committee, as I pray that it will, that will be another aspect of Schedule II, that is, the independent nature of spouses of Armed Forces and diplomatic personnel living abroad, that that subject matter can also be addressed, and that the very much out-of-date section of the Canada Elections Act will be corrected.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I want at the outset, as did some of my predecessors who have been speaking today, to congratulate the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for bringing forth a very timely Bill. It happens to be a matter that he has been working on, as I understand it, for some ten years, and it must make him feel very good at least to see it come before Parliament once again.

The difficulty, however, is that many people in effect are disenfranchised because the Bill does not go far enough. It is noted, however, in the explanatory note, that in 1977 the Canada Elections Act was amended to grant the right to vote to Canadian citizens teaching outside Canada in Canadian Armed Forces schools or employed as administrative support staff in such schools. However, this Bill only extends that privilege to Canadian citizens working for the Canadian Armed Forces outside of Canada. At the present time we merely have teachers being accepted. The civilians working for the Canadian Forces are not accepted at this time, but would be in this Bill.

I agree with my colleague from the NDP that the Bill does not go far enough. It should include all personnel, all Canadians at all missions, embassies, high commission offices, trade offices, immigration offices and so forth, wherever they might be in whatever country. It should include Canadians working on projects and contracts in various countries. For instance, we have a big contract coming up to build a Canadian embassy in Saudi Arabia, and we will have a number of Canadians there. They should have the right to vote in any elections that take place while they are working on that project. At the present time they would not be able to.

A number of Canadians are working on CIDA projects that we have in Africa, South America, Central America, the Caribbean and so on. They too should not be disenfranchised and should have the right to vote in elections. Some methods have been suggested as to how this can be done, and I think they make sense. I would go even further than that. I believe all Canadians throughout the world, even if they are on vacation, should have the opportunity of attending at the embassy or the high commissioner's office to fill out the necessary forms so that they can vote in a general election in Canada.

Although the Government tends to agree with the purpose of this Bill, it would be premature to go further at this stage since Mr. Hamel's report, to be tabled at the beginning of the new session, is going to discuss the problems related to the voting rights of those living outside Canada.

As a matter of fact, this problem has been discussed many times since 1963. But it has to be reviewed again, now that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the right to vote to each Canadian. Section 3 of the Charter reads as follows:

Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons—

The Justice Department is presently studying the meaning of this right for Canadians who happen to be outside the country on polling days and who cannot vote. They can be classified as follows: the students; the CIDA cooperants; the private corporations' employees; the travellers; and the permanent expatriates, as I have suggested before. At the same time, the office of the Chief Electoral Officer and the office of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) are assessing the technical problems involved here.

To grant voting rights now to one sub-group, the civil employees of the Armed Forces abroad hired locally, is to open the door to all the other groups at a time when the studies referred to above are not yet completed. A comprehensive review of "absentee voting" by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections should follow Mr. Hamel's report, to be tabled soon.

At the moment, both the Department of National Defence and the Department of External Affairs maintain permanent lists of Canadian Forces and Public Services electors based on the information available on personnel departmental files. Such an information is not available in respect of locally engaged Canadians employed by the Department of National Defence outside Canada. Therefore, the Chief Electoral Officer would have to keep and maintain a permanent register of electors, like as they do in countries with absentee voting systems such as the U.S.A., Australia and France. In Canada also, in the Province of British Columbia, I understand they keep a voters' registry.

But one must understand that, with regard to absentee voting, there is only one acceptable security offered, that is, a permanent list or continuous electoral rolls in which you have a registration card signed by each elector which is in the Office of the Returning Officer of the elector's constituency.

More than a year or two may be required before this could be put in place, and certainly there are some 15 million people in Canada who would be able to take advantage of it. Whatever the cost might be, and it might be considerable, I think it is important that Canadians world-wide have the opportunity of voting in elections.

I may say that although there may be some administrative difficulties, it is not something that could not be overcome. The Bill that we have before us, I would say, is somewhat inadequate in that it does not go far enough, and all Canadians should be included. I would suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections at the appropriate time, probably today if this Bill goes through without having been talked out.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed feelings that I rise and continue discussing this subject. I must, first of all, compliment the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his excellent presentation, for the amount of research work that he has done, and for his good judgment in selecting this particular issue. It is particularly applicable because it must be remembered that school teachers and administrative support staff in the Canadian Armed Forces schools have officer status and are subject to the Canadian Forces Code of Service discipline as contained in the National Defence Act and may be tried by a special general court martial. Therefore, they have a status very close to that of a member of the Canadian Armed Forces and have, by law, been deemed Canadian Armed Forces electors.

This shows that the Hon. Member has done a very thorough job in researching this particular issue, except for the point that has been brought out by the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) and by other spokesmen that it just does not go far enough. For that reason, it should be thought out and worked out carefully. As far as I understand, from the information that I have, it is in the process of being considered. It is being researched and will be brought forward by the Electoral Officer, Mr. Hamel, and in that form will be then considered properly in the proper committee and will undoubtedly come forward as an improvement in the Electoral Act.

I only hope that the Hon. Member will receive the credit that he deserves for the work that he has done, and I hope that this will be signified—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to Income Tax (No. 2)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Blaker in the chair.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order concerning the procedural acceptability of certain Clauses of Bill C-139. It is our contention that the Government, in at least two instances, has attempted to exceed the authority granted to it in the Ways and Means motion. With your indulgence, Mr. Chairman, I would like to spend a few moments explaining my case, and then if you feel that the argument is valid, I suggest we postpone consideration of the affected Clauses until such time as the deficiencies can be corrected.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw your attention to Citation 518 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which forms the basis of the procedural argument. Citation 518 states:

(1) A bill, related to a Ways and Means resolution, must be based on, but need not be identical with, the resolution. The taxing power of the Crown is limited by such resolutions, but relatively minor widening of exemptions from taxation may be allowed.

(2) The most desirable practice is for the Bill to adhere strictly to the provisions of the resolution, and departures if any, ought to be subject to the strictest interpretation.

We contend that in Clause 1 and Clause 109 the Government has attempted to extend its taxing power beyond that which is authorized in paragraphs 1 and 151 of the income tax motion. In a 1974 ruling, to which reference is given in Citation 518(1) of Beauchesne, Mr. Speaker Jerome outlined the five basic principles which apply to the question of how closely an income tax Bill should conform to the Ways and Means motion on which it is based.

With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I will review those five principles which may be found at page 224 of the Journals for December 18, 1974. Mr. Speaker Jerome's ruling reads in part as follows:

First, that the Ways and Means motions which follow the budget presentation are by virtue of time honoured practice and tradition, the very expression of the financial initiative of the Crown and therefore a most important aspect of our procedure.

Second, S.O. 60(11) establishes the relationship between the Ways and Means motion and the bills which follow. "The adoption of any Ways and Means motion shall be an order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion."

Third, the critical words are "based on". It must be assumed that if it was intended that the bills be required to be identical to the motion, the rule would say so.

Fourth, I am further unable to find any support, either in the Minutes of the Procedure Committee of 1968 which recommended the rule changes, the debates on those new rules, or even in analogous precedents, for the proposition that the bills must be identical to the Ways and Means motions.

It is equally clear that the taxing power of the Crown is limited by the Ways and Means motion, and any bill which sought to extend such power beyond the provisions of the Ways and Means motion would be out of order.

There can be no doubt, Mr. Chairman, as to the meaning of this ruling. The provisions of the income tax Bill must fall within the four corners of the Ways and Means motion. Mr. Speaker Jerome reiterated this position on subsequent occasions, including July 14, 1975 at page 707 of the Journals and May 19, 1978, at pages 784 and 786 of the Journals.

• (1110)

In rising on this point of order, I noted that there are at least two Clauses in the Bill which are before us today which do not appear to fulfil the requirements laid down by Mr. Speaker Jerome and by Beauchesne. The first instance in which the Bill exceeds the taxation authority granted to the Government may be found—and this is unfortunate—in Clause 1 of the Bill, in the provisions relating to the automobile standby charge. Paragraph (1) of the income tax motion reads as follows:

(1) That for the 1982 and subsequent taxation years, the provisions of the Act relating to the monthly standby charge for an automobile made available by an employer, a person related to the employer, or a corporation

(a) be applicable in any case where an employee or a shareholder or a person related to the employee or shareholder made personal use of the automobile, and

(b) be modified to increase the minimum monthly standby charge to 2 per cent of the automobile's capital cost or 2/3 of its leasing costs, as the case may be,

except that, where it is established in prescribed form that the number of kilometres that the automobile was driven in the year for personal purposes is less than 1,000 kilometres per month, the amount that would otherwise be determined under subparagraph (b) be proportionately reduced.

That is paragraph (1) of the Ways and Means motion and I submit that accounting firms and others looked at the standby charge only. For example, in Thorne Riddell's review of the 1981 budget, under "Use of Company Automobiles" it states, and I quote:

The present law requires a taxpayer to include at least a "minimum standby charge" in income which is 12 per cent of the cost of the car if owned by the employer or one-third of its lease cost.

Starting in 1982, the budget proposes to increase this minimum charge to 2½ per cent per month or five-sixths of the leasing costs, and to apply it in all cases where personal use is made of a company car.

Coopers & Lybrand made the same interpretation of what the Government was trying to do in the budget, and I quote from their budget report on page 16:

Where any personal use is made of a company car by an employee or someone related to him the minimum taxable benefit after 1981 will be either 30 per cent of the automobile's cost (where owned) or 5/6ths of its leasing cost.

When the Bill came down and the explanatory notes came out, Thorne Riddell, Coopers & Lybrand and other experts, and also the Canadian people, found that the Canadian Government went further than that, because page 1 of the explanatory notes to a Bill amending the Income Tax Act said that paragraph 6(1)(e)(iii) clarifies that the operating costs of an automobile used for personal purposes, which are paid by the employer, must be included in income.

As I pointed out, up until now what we have been dealing with is a Ways and Means motion referring to standby cost which is a fixed percentage of either the capital cost of the automobile or the lease cost. That is the motion. When the Act was brought in, it sought to extend the taxing power to the operating costs. In Section 1 the Government seeks to tax the benefits received by a person as it relates to the operation of an automobile, and nowhere is that found in the income tax motion on which the Bill, as I pointed out, is supposed to be based. The income tax motion modifies the application of the standby charge. It does not propose, as the Government has proposed in this Act, to tax the Canadian people on the operating costs of a company car. Furthermore, Clause 1(4) increases the standby charge for automobile sales persons, although no mention is made of this tax increase in the income tax motion.

This charge, I suggest, is particularly curious. It not only increases the tax rate for automobile sales persons, but it makes a substantive change in the Income Tax Act by changing the standby charge for automobile sales persons from three-quarters of 1 per cent to one and one half percent of the automobile's capital cost. Although the charge for sales persons remains in the same ratio to the general charge, for the first time it becomes a set charge rather than a percentage of the general automobile standby charge. We submit authority for these changes cannot be found in the income tax motion.

The second case that I refer to is the corporate distributions tax, Part II, which is found in Clause 109 of the Bill and relates to paragraph 151 of the income tax motion. As noted at page 5 of the January 11, 1983 edition of "The Canadian Taxpayer", this tax will "penalize companies in provinces where the tax rate is more than 10 per cent, but will give a bonus in Provinces where the tax is lower". The publication goes on to note that the anomaly results from the fact that the preferred earnings amount, PEA, to the measure of income to which the tax is applied is structured on a norm of a combined 25 per cent federal and provincial tax. Where the actual rate varies from this norm, the formula does not work accurately. If the rate is higher than 25 per cent, the preferred earnings amount cannot be eliminated by paying out all active business income. This in turn means that the 12.5 per cent tax will be levied on other income of the company, such as investment income when dividends are paid.

While the federal Government may in fact apply taxes differently across the country, and although a minor widening of exemptions from taxes may be allowed, according to Mr. Speaker Jerome's 1974 ruling the Government does not have the specific authority to increase taxation for corporations operating in Newfoundland beyond the level of taxation that is imposed as a result of the calculation of the preferred earnings amount of corporations operating in other Provinces. No provision for such an increase can be found, we submit, in paragraph 151 of the income tax motion.

The remedy that is suggested to the problem which we have posed—that is, the inadequacy of the relationship between the ways and means motion and the income tax Bill—is to postpone consideration of Clauses 1 and 109 until those Clauses can be amended so as to satisfy our objections, or until a Ways and Means resolution can be passed to permit the Bill as written to be passed. We submit that this remedy is consistent with the rulings delivered by Mr. Speaker Jerome in 1974, 1975 and 1978, as noted in Citation 519 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, and I quote:

If any of the provisions of the Bill should be found to go beyond the Ways and Means resolutions as agreed to by the House:

(a) a further motion must be passed by the House before those provisions in the Bill are considered in committee;

(b) or the Bill must be amended so as to conform to the motions to which the House has agreed.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I rise on the same point of order. I am somewhat disappointed that I did not have prior knowledge of the technical objection raised by the Hon. House Leader for the Loyal Opposition.

• (1120)

The Bill and the Act have been available to Hon. Members of the House and to the public for quite some time. As a matter of fact, the Hon. House Leader, in support of his argument, has used an analysis of the Bill by two firms of chartered accountants and, therefore, obviously many people in the country have had some time to consider this matter. I would have hoped, Mr. Chairman, if the Hon. Member felt that there was such deficiency in the motion tabled before the House, that for the sake of expediting consideration of this Bill, which all Hon. Members in discussion on second reading have considered to be important to Canadians, this could have been brought to the Government's attention for analysis months ago. I am, as I said, somewhat surprised that this technical objection to the first Clause would be raised at this point.

I am prepared to argue, on the basis of the authorities quoted by my hon. friend and as stated by the Hon. James Jerome, a former Speaker of this House, and the test which he did apply in the case cited, that in fact Clause 1, which is really the only Clause we have dealt with thus far, although my hon. friend has dealt with Clause 1 and Clause 109, really does meet those tests. The gist of my submission to the Chair is that, if we accepted the argument of the House Leader of the Official Opposition, we would be meeting the test which says that the Bill and the motion have to be identical. That really is the logical extension of what is argued by the Hon. House Leader for the Opposition. He makes reference to the substantial change in the tax, but admitted that that was a technical matter, the difference between the increased rate for sales persons, and then admitted that that was a small matter.

On his second point, he argued that because of a variation in tax rate and the calculations of rates which are used in the calculation of tax in so far as it applies to the standby is different in different Provinces. In my respectful submission, that is a matter which is dealt with in those Sections dealing with the calculation of tax from the different Provinces and does not bear directly upon the adequacy of the Bill; and it is parallel to the motion.

As the explanatory notes indicate, Mr. Chairman, Section 6(1)(a)(iii) is a clarification. It has always been the case under Section 6 of the Act that, except for explicit exceptions, all benefits from employment are treated as income for tax purposes. The amendments stipulating that automobile operating expenses paid for by an employer are benefits simply confirm and clarify, in my respectful submission, what the law has been for many years.

Therefore, I argue in rebuttal that the variation between the Bill and the motion in effect argues a rule which Speaker Jerome said did not apply, that is, that the two had to be identical.

In so far as automobile salesmen are concerned, Mr. Chairman, the amendment increases their standby charge rate to 1½ per cent from 3/4 per cent. This motion says 2 per cent. Therefore, the amendment is clearly within the motion. I have argued that it is a technical matter to begin with, that the variation is not great but because it is less than the amount, it is included. That is the thrust of my argument.

• (1125)

The position of the Government is that a careful reading of the four standards applied by Speaker Jerome would lead you to the conclusion that although there are minuscule differences in the formula for calculation of the standby charge as it affects people generally, or salesmen specifically raised in the example of the House Leader, the motion meets the three other tests and is sufficient to have the matter proceed. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that consideration of Clause 1 is validly before the House and reflects the provisions of the Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Chairman, it would be difficult to add to the excellent points made by the Minister. In fact, I do not intend to continue in the same vein, because it seems to me that he has covered the subject quite adequately and that there are sufficient grounds for you to deny the Hon. Member's point of order. However, I would like to point out to the Chair that the Notice of Ways and Means Motion was not opposed at the second reading stage, which would have been the appropriate time to do so. Since the House has adopted the second reading stage, I submit that there is no case for raising a point of order again at this time, since it should have been done before, when the Notice of Ways and Means Motion was tabled and the House was considering the second reading stage. Since the second reading stage has been passed, I do not think a point of order of this kind can be raised now, and even if the Chair were to conclude that it still can be done, and we disagree, the Minister has submitted sufficient grounds to justify the Chair's denying the point of order.

[English]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I am not aware whether at second reading this point was raised. If it was raised, when did the Chair deal with it? I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that the Government must still clean up its act.

Mr. McDermid: That is impossible.

Mr. Lambert: The Standing Order indicates clearly that a Bill will be introduced based on a notice of Ways and Means. The Minister says the amendments cited by my colleague were merely technical. I suggest to the Minister that he is applying his interpretation of "technical" much the same way as his colleagues were applying their, shall we say, elastic consciences to guidelines on conflict of interest during the past ten days of debate in this House.

On this particular point, a change of rate is not a technical change. There is only one tolerance allowed, I suggest to you. I refer back to the ruling of Speaker Lamoureux at the time I raised objection to the Bill that was tabled following the Ways and Means motion in the budget of 1970, which was a tax reform. There were 39 changes, some of them of the nature to which the Minister and my colleague adverted. The Chair disclaims any responsibility and I agree. It is not up to the Chair to "comb" the relative Ways and Means motions and the Bill. The Chair will insist that the Government keep its act clean. This is not a matter of tolerant interpretation.

• (1130)

As far as the Bill is concerned, we are not going to hold up the business of the House while the Government files a Ways and Means motion. The Government can do that later. It can substitute the Ways and Means motion to conform wth the Bill since the Bill represents the final decision. During the time when the Ways and Means motion is approved by the Department of Finance and the Cabinet Committee and the Bill is drafted, all sorts of differences can occur. There has been plenty of time between December 7 and calling the Bill for second reading for debate. People in the tax Department have admitted to me privately that many of these sections are totally incomprehensible. The Government can claim that Members should have noted all the inconsistencies between the Ways and Means motion and the Bill by the time second reading debate commenced. If my memory serves me correctly, that was for one day prior to Christmas. It was then abandoned until recently.

To use a popular expression, the Minister is "out to lunch" on that point. This is the time to say that the Minister and the Government must file an amended Ways and Means motion to conform with the Bill or reprint the Bill to conform with the Ways and Means motion.

We are not going to hold up proceedings, Mr. Chairman, but the Government must keep its act clean.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, the significance of this deficiency in the Bill in failing to conform to the provisions of the Ways and Means motion lies in the fact that the Ways and Means motion made no reference to the additional tax to be imposed upon automobile salesmen as a result of the standby charge changes that are now in the Bill before us. It is not a matter of a technical change; it is a matter directly related to the imposition of an additional tax.

I draw to your attention that while the former provisions of the Act dealing with standby charges in connection with automobiles referred to the imposition of a standby charge which would be at least equivalent to the amount determined under this rather complex section, the Bill now provides that that standby charge, the reasonable amount thereof, is the amount definitely determined under the provisions of Clause 3.

The difficulty that confronts taxpayers generally is that this Bill in its entirety, and more particularly as it deals with standby charges, applies to the entire 1982 tax year. We are talking about individual taxpayers, so it applies to the period from January 1 to December 31, 1982, at which time, if you should have reference to the nature of the compliance in prescribed form referred to for the keeping of accurate records of automobile use, it will immediately become apparent that this Clause will have the effect of obliging people to maintain in prescribed form records of automobile use—on the basis of kilometres—from the beginning of January to the end of December.

There was no knowledge in the general community that automobile salesmen would be required to maintain those records. How can we now properly impose a new tax that did not exist in the form it will take now upon those people when they were not aware that such would be the case, having regard to the fact that the Bill was introduced on December 7, 1982, during the last month of the taxation year of the individuals covered by the provision.

The Minister refers to this as a technical change. If there was a circumstance where basic inequity is built into the imposition of a tax, it is certainly the case here. It is for this specific reason that the rule with respect to the compliance of Bills directly with the provisions of the Ways and Means motion becomes most critical. This is the imposition of an additional tax upon taxpayers. That tax can only be applied in the way provided in the Ways and Means motion.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, in reply to my colleagues on the Government side, I would say that perhaps a Government which operates without notice should not always expect to receive notice.

When I referred to Thorne Riddell and Coopers & Lybrand's interpretation of the standby charge, it was as set forth in the original budget and the original Ways and Means motion, not as set forth in the Bill.

I suggest that debate on second reading is on the principle of the Bill. That is fair. We are now dealing with technicalities and suggesting that it is up to the Government to draft the Bill in accordance with the Ways and Means motion.

Citation 518(2) of Beauchesne reads as follows:

> The most desirable practice is for the bill to adhere strictly to the provisions of the resolution, and departures, if any, ought to be subject to the strictest interpretation.

We are not suggesting that an increase in tax is merely clarification or that we should go home, quit for the day or scrap the entire Bill. We are just suggesting that we have made a point regarding Clauses 1 and 109 and that consideration should be stood until the Government can draft a Ways and Means motion which adheres to the Bill, or vice versa.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, there seem to be two specific points here. The first is whether automobile salesmen have not been properly informed about a change of practice. The second is an over-all issue dealing with the operating cost of automobiles. I should like to argue that both of those things are clarifications of existing practice; they are not new principles.

The Act shows that since 1972 automobile salesmen have known that they will pay 75 per cent of the standby charge of every other salesman. It seems to me that what we are doing here is simply clarifying, as a consequence of other changes, the circumstances that apply to them. That follows directly from the 1972 law under the same Section 6 of the Income Tax Act which provides that all employee benefits are taxable. We are now clarifying what we mean in the area of automobile standby charges and operating costs. We are defining the circumstances for the taxpayer so that he will know precisely what his liabilities are.

• (1140)

The Hon. Member for York North had a great deal to say about record keeping. Again, that is not the case. People have had to keep records about the operation of their automobiles for as long as I can remember, certainly back to 1972. I think the current situation does not change that at all. I ask Hon. Members to see this simply as a clarification of what is an employee benefit and, following from that, a consequential change for automobile salesmen which is already in the law. It is not something brand-new.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, specifically what we have here is Clause I which substantially complies with the Ways and Means motion, but two particular provisions that impose particular taxes are not in the Ways and Means motion. Therefore, our contention is that while the Bill has received approval in principle, these particular provisions cannot be put to the House at this point in Committee. They have to be deleted from the Bill.

The Bill is not properly before us with respect to these particular provisions because the law is pretty clear that if the Government wants to levy a tax, it has to have a Ways and Means motion and a direction from the Crown. That is the reason we as ordinary Members cannot introduce taxing Bills. The Government cannot do that either unless it has specific authority from the Crown. The Government does not have this specific authority with respect to two parts of Clause 1. On that basis, those two parts of Clause 1 cannot be considered; they have to be ruled out. If the Government wants to come back with another statute and another Ways and Means motion, it can do that; it has all sorts of ways of doing it. But these particular provisions must be ruled out.

It is a very simple matter. I do not think there is anything else which should be done. We are not asking for the whole Income Tax Act to be thrown out. It was approved by the House and it substantially complies with the Ways and Means motion. But to the extent that there is an imposition of a levy which does not specifically comply with the Ways and Means motion, the Government does not have the right to introduce those provisions. It does not have royal authority, and it has to obtain that authority, the same as any other Member.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I want to capsulize briefly the position of the Government on this item. I cannot do better than begin by drawing to your attention the opening comments of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South who has just spoken. He indicated that the Government has substantially complied with the Ways and Means motion in the legislation which is before the House. That is the first test referred to by Mr. Speaker Jerome in his judgment, that if there is substantial compliance, there need not be verbatim, word by word, comma by comma, crossed "t" by crossed "t" submissions. That is my argument.

The explanation is that what we have in the Bill is really a clarification of the provisions which have always existed under Section 6 of the Act, that except for certain explicit exceptions, all benefits from employment are treated as income for tax purposes. This amendment stipulates that automobile operating expenses paid for by an employer are a benefit. This confirms and clarifies what has been the law and practice for many years.

On the second Clause, the House Leader of the Opposition complained that the Bill does not reflect the motion. I would reiterate for the consideration of the Chair that although the Government can draw another Ways and Means motion, if we did that every time Hon. Members opposite complained that there was some provision in some tax Act of some Province which was affected by legislation introduced in the House, we would have found the answer to the problem with the forest industry. What we would be doing is manufacturing paper, and that is all we would be doing.

I do not think it follows at all, with respect, that because there is an implication flowing from amendments before the House which affect different provinces differently, that is cause for complaint that the Bill does not comply with the Ways and Means motion.

I suspect that the Chair probably wants an opportunity to consider Clause 1 and Clause 109 and the point raised by the Opposition House Leader. At this point it may or may not be germane to draw to the attention of the Chair that I had hoped to begin my comments on the Act and on Clause 1 of the Bill before us by drawing to the attention of Members opposite and of the Chair the Government's intention to make two technical amendments to the Section. I do not believe they are germane or pertinent to the point raised by the Hon. Member but, in fairness, if we are to consider the Clause, I think all Members and the Chair should be apprised of these technical amendments.

Mr. McDermid: Why did you not give us notice?

Mr. Cosgrove: I did not have an apportunity to do so. The Opposition House Leader was the first person on his feet. It was my intention to bring these two technical amendments to the attention of the House and to seek the assistance of the Chair and Hon. Members opposite on how to deal with technical amendments to the Act. Because there are two technical amendments dealing with Clause 1 and other technical amendments, I feel I should now place them before the Chair and seek the advice of Members opposite.

I might add that I am advised that when there were substantial amendments to the Act in 1971, technical amendments were received, considered to be moved and thereby offered notice to Hon. Members opposite of technical changes which by and large were relieving changes to subsequent Sections of the Act. It will give Hon. Members opposite the opportunity to look at them as we deal with Subsection (1) and further Sections.

Before the Chair makes its decision on the point raised by the Opposition House Leader, I would like to offer to produce to the House the technical amendments, not only to Clause 1 but to other Clauses. It would be helpful as I table the amendments that they be deemed to have been moved and that they be printed as an appendix to today's debates. Then they would be available to all Hon. Members on both sides to consider as we go along. But I would like the advice of the Chair and the House on that point.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the extent of the amendments might be or what is the interpretation of "technical". Since I was in charge of the Opposition's team with regard to the income tax debate in 1970, let me indicate that there were substantive changes and technical changes, 39 of them, on the first Bill that was printed following the Ways and Means motion. The Government was given permission to substitute a new Ways and Means motion. Perhaps technical changes consist of forgetting to put in additional reference to a subclause or simply crossing the t's. The alteration of a rate of tax is not a technical change in any way.

• (1150)

I have suggested that there is a way of making changes. Further changes could be incorporated into a new Ways and Means motion or into the Bill. I take it that it is the Bill which the Government wants. If the Minister is now filing further notices of amendments to the Bill, of course, that is a further derogation from the Ways and Means motion.

The Minister is correct that amendments may be introduced in the Committee of the Whole. However, in case there is the idea that we had every opportunity to examine the Bill when even the Government's advisers did not know what was in the Bill, let me remind Hon. Members that first reading permission was given on Tuesday, December 7. The earliest time that Members received that information was December 9 due to the complex printing and so forth. Second reading was on Monday, December 13. Therefore, I suggest that almost no one had an opportunity to examine the Bill. One could almost suggest that an attempt was made to slide it under the door and have it passed. It would then be too late for any argument. This is a type of fast shuffle that has been known to happen.

I draw to the attention of the Chair that even the President of the Privy Council suggested that we had plenty of time to look at the Bill between first and second reading. He does not even understand it. He does not understand when the Bill was brought in or when it was delivered to Members so they could study this complex Bill of over 200 pages. I suggest that those responsible for tax policy in the Department of Finance have not yet fully explained a couple of Sections in the Bill.

I repeat my suggestion that the best way to proceed is to withdraw the Ways and Means motion with the permission of the House. There is no problem there. That can be withdrawn and a proper Ways and Means motion can be introduced. The President of the Privy Council is the one who insists that we follow the rules. On this occasion he would be the first to agree that the House should follow the rules as they are laid down.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, in order to give a format for the resolution of the point raised by the House Leader of the Opposition, could I propose for his consideration that the amendments to the Bill, which I submit are technical, be tabled and that the Committee agree that the amendments be deemed to have been moved. If Hon. Members opposite argue, as they have this morning on the first item, that the Bill does not comply with the motion, they can raise that point with the Chair as soon as they see those technical amendments to Clause 1 or any other Clause. Therefore, we do not derogate in any way from their right to raise that matter, as they have done on the first Clause.

The point that I wanted to make was that I did not think it was fair for you or Members opposite to be talking about Subsection (1) even before I had the opportunity to introduce technical changes to that Section. For all I know, Hon. Members opposite may have a different view from mine that the changes are technical in nature.

What I am suggesting is that in order for the House to deal with the Section, we have to have the Section before the House as proposed by the Government. Therefore, I propose that we lay before the House all of the changes which we say are relieving and technical. Members opposite will have an opportunity to analyze and consider them as we debate the issue. Your Honour will have the opportunity specifically to consider, as far as the first motion is concerned, whether the objection raised by the Opposition, with the amendments I am proposing on the first Section, do violate the rules and would require a separate Ways and Means motion.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to receiving notice of these amendments, but it would seem to me that we are now dealing with a point of order. I would query whether you can table and make motions when speaking to a point of order. We have no objection to receiving the information but I just wonder if it can be done that way.

The Deputy Chairman: The Chair has delayed consideration of the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North in order to give other Hon. Members the opportunity to comment on it. I agree that the issue of the deemed moving of the Minister's amendments has now slipped into that discussion. I have recognized that because there may be a further technicality in that if the Committee decides to accept the Minister's proposal, I want to keep in mind that under that proposal the amendments to Clause 1 which the Minister has referred to would also be acceptable even if Clause 1 may be stood for the purpose of taking under consideration the objections raised by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North.

If the Committee is agreeable, I suggest the best way to proceed is to put the question to the Committee as to whether the proposal by the Hon. Minister of State for Finance that certain amendments be deemed moved and made available to the House would be acceptable and could then be attached to today's Hansard. We might consider that issue first. Is it the wish of the Committee to accept the proposal made by the Minister of State in that regard?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I think we are quite disposed to receive the notice of the Minister as mere notice. At the appropriate time he will have one of his colleagues move the amendments properly, as should be the practice of the House. We thank the Minister for offering to give us notice of the amendments at this time. We will take them under advisement and decide whether we will accept the essence of them.

However, with respect to the procedure, he should follow the proper procedure and have one of his colleagues move the amendment at the appropriate time, as we normally do. There is nothing difficult about that.

With respect to standing Clause 1 on an amending Bill, I do not know how Clause 1 could be stood.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, with respect, we are back to the difficulty I was faced with upon commencement of the proceedings this morning. The Opposition rose on a point of order dealing with Clause 1 before I had an opportunity to bring the technical amendments which the Government intended to introduce to the attention of the House. How can we assess those amendments without the Government having the opportunity of formally introducing them? I have offered that as the formal process, that the matter may be considered by the House, based on precedents of the House.

• (1200)

I am therefore somewhat surprised, again, that Hon. Members opposite would not, as an expeditious matter, consent to having all of the material formally placed by motion before the House in the next few moments, rather than moving motion upon motion—

Mr. Kempling: Do it the right way.

Mr. Cosgrove: —and technical amendments, which would necessitate further consideration by Hon. Members as to their appropriateness.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the suggestion of the Minister is not acceptable. We think the proper way of handling it, and the way it is handled in most committees when the Government has a series of technical amendments to a Bill before the committee, would be for the Government, as a matter of courtesy, to table with the Opposition, other Parties and other Members at the committee meeting copies of all its proposed amendments to the Bill, all the way through. Then as individual clauses of the Bill are considered, each particular Clause would be moved by the Minister or a representative from the Government side on behalf of the Minister, and an amendment made to the Clause at the time the Clause is under consideration.

To attempt to move all of these changes now is totally unfair to us. The procedure is to deal with the Bill Clause by Clause and we are prepared to do that.

Our initial objection, and I think Your Honour has properly understood it, concerns particular provisions in Clause 1 which do not comply with the Ways and Means motion. I think, Mr. Chairman, you have decided that Clause 1 should be stood down for the time being and that we should proceed to Clause 2. Presumably, you will stand down Clause 109 as well because of the same objection. Then you, as Chairman, would have an opportunity to consider past rulings and practices and come back later today or perhaps on another day for consideration of the matter before the Committee and make your ruling. I think that is a proper way to proceed.

If the Minister, as a matter of courtesy to the House, would like to table his proposed amendments, they should then be affixed as an addendum to Hansard of today. The amendments should not be moved but, rather, should simply be tabled and affixed to Hansard, and that would be fine. However, let it be understood that we do not accept an amendment or a motion at this point because we are not dealing with Clauses in general; we are dealing with each Clause individually. As the Clauses are presented, Clause by Clause, so should the amendments be presented, individually.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, it is quite obvious that my proposal to the House to try to expedite the business is not acceptable to the Opposition. I would therefore propose a second method, and I am in Your Honour's hands. If your Honour thinks it inappropriate that I make this motion, I will be content that you draw it to my attention.

I propose to move two technical amendments to Clause 1, on which you are considering a matter of substance raised by the House Leader of the Opposition. At this time I am reluctant to indicate that it is the Government's intention to introduce further technical amendments. However, I must do that for two reasons, one which I have already indicated to Your Honour. My information from officials and from our research of practice in the House is that it has been done the other way, and that in order to expedite matters and so Hon. Members may see the interrelation of the Clauses—and there are presently some 195 Clauses—it only makes sense that the Government's intention, in so far as technical amendments are concerned, be placed before the House at one time. It is one Bill, interrelated.

Second, if we must spend an hour or more on each technical amendment proposed by the Government, I would have to consider the implications in so far as expediting consideration of the Bill before the House is concerned. In terms of expediting the Government's business, I might have to consider that I, indeed, might not propose some of the technical amendments which, in effect, amount to commas, words, crossing of t's and the like. Therefore, in order to assist Your Honour in dealing with the substantive motion in relation to Clause 1, I propose to move the technical amendments to the first Clause for consideration with the motion before the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: I want to indicate to the House, as I did earlier, that pursuant to the points of order raised by various Hon. Members, the Chair will be taking the points of order under consideration and I propose to the Committee that it stand Clause 1 until such time as the Chair can provide a ruling. However, there is still a proposal on the floor made by the Minister of State for Finance, which has two problems attached to it.

First, as the Chair is about to stand Clause 1, it would be a little difficult to amend it. Second, the Minister is proposing two amendments to Clause 1, which will require unanimous consent; because in the ordinary course we cannot accept a second amendment until we have disposed of the first amendment. I do not have the sense of the Committee and I do not know whether all Hon. Members are prepared to accept the Minister's proposal.

It would be easiest if I were to put the question in front of the House. The Minister now proposes and will seek unanimous consent to place two amendments on Clause 1, with the understanding that the Chair will be standing Clause 1 in order to consider points raised by Hon. Members.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that it might be inappropriate for the Minister to move amendments to a Clause, the authenticity or appropriateness of which is in dispute, requiring a ruling of the Chair in order to clarify the question which has been raised before you. I would like to suggest that the most appropriate move at this point in time would be the one which the Chair has proposed, to stand the Clause and to proceed with the balance of the Bill.

If, indeed, the Chair were to rule in favour of the Government's position, the amendments could then be proposed. If the Chair were to rule that the Government has not properly followed the Ways and Means motion, or has not provided a Ways and Means motion which is appropriate, then we could not proceed with that particular Clause, amended or otherwise. Therefore, I frankly believe that the most intelligent way to deal with it is the way proposed by the Chair, which does not surprise me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: The Chair should simply stand the Clause and proceed with whatever Clauses in the Bill are not in dispute.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain has made it clear that there is not unanimous consent to proposing two amendments to Clause 1. Therefore, I do not need to hear any further discussion on that subject.

I will now proceed to the ruling on the points of order. If the Hon. Member for Calgary West will give me a moment, I will just make it clear that the Chair has obviously accepted taking the points of order under advisement as to the acceptability of Clause 1. In the ordinary course I would now deal with Clause 2. However, I see the Hon. Member for Calgary West rising, perhaps on a point of order or to enter the debate.

Mr. Hawkes: I am just rising to make a momentary comment, Mr. Chairman. If the Minister is interested in expediting the work of the House, he should know that the sooner he shares amendments in an informal way with the Opposition, and the more time we have to consider them, the more likely we will be able to expeditiously deal with some which we believe to have wisdom.

Mr. Pinard: Promises, promises.

Mr. Hawkes: However, trying to circumvent the normal system of the House is really guaranteed to block and not to expedite.

Mr. Pinard: Don't waste your time.

Mr. Hawkes: That is really what was at issue.

Mr. Pinard: Nice try.

The Deputy Chairman: I think we have reached the point in the proceedings at which the committee may wish to consider Clause 2.

On Clause 2—Salary reimbursement

• (1210)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, in the same vein, would it be appropriate for you to ask the Minister to circulate those amendments? We would like to expedite this whole mission and that would certainly facilitate matters.

The Deputy Chairman: I think it is appropriate for the Hon. Member to inquire whether the Minister may wish to do so, but I do not feel that the Chair ought to be put in that position.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, we see no major objection to Clause 2 and would be prepared, on this side, to carry Clause 2 and indicate to the Minister how co-operative we can really be.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 3—Fair market value

Mr. Blenkarn: Clause 3 has something to do with Clause 16 which deals to some extent with work in progress of professionals. May we suggest to the Minister that Clause 3 either be considered with Clause 16 or, in the alternative, that Clause 3 be stood down until we come to Clause 16?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I am, of course, agreeable that we deal with Clause 3 now, since members of the Opposition have indicated that they want to deal with the Clauses in order. I have no objection to Clause 16 being dealt with at the same time, that is immediately following Clause 3, or, if I am not in breach of the procedure of the House, in conjunction with Clause 3.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that Clauses 3 and 16 be considered together?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

On Clause 16—Professional business

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, Clauses 3 and 16 deal with work in progress. Clause 3 is the basic taxing clause that says that work in progress of a professional is part of his earnings during the year, and the consequence is that it is bringing into income work in progress of the professional in general.

Clause 16 goes on to exempt certain professionals, lawyers, doctors, chiropractors and so on, but it misses some professionals completely. Therefore, some professionals are caught in the basic charging section in Clause 3 and are not exempt in Clause 16.

First of all, dealing with the professionals we are talking about, Clause 16 exempts, as I said, dentists, lawyers, medical doctors, veterinarians and chiropractors, but for some strange reason notaries in the Province of Quebec are to be taxed on their work in progress as it goes along.

Mr. Chairman, you will know that in the Province of Quebec a great deal of the legal business is done by people called notaries. They are not lawyers; they belong to the honoured profession of notaries. Indeed, in the rest of the country there are a number of places where notaries do the conveyancing, the wills and estate work. To leave that particular profession hanging out to dry seems to us to be totally inappropriate, but that is what the Minister has done in the Bill.

We seem to be getting more professions all the time. I was told that there were people who look after your feet, podiatrists, who are a profession. They are out to lunch too because they are not doctors in the sense that they are not medical doctors, but they are a profession and run a properly licensed profession.

What we have is a situation where, for example, optometrists are not included. I wonder why engineers are not included or draftsmen who are running a drafting office of some kind. It strikes us that the way of handling this matter has been totally without any real thought as to how the economy works. These people do work for clients or customers who come to them to get their professional service. Then what happens? They cannot get paid unless they complete their work. How can an optometrist charge someone for half an examination? No one is going to pay an optometrist until they receive their glasses, but he may have done some work before that. How is he going to get paid if he does not complete the work?

With respect to an architect's drawings, the plans for a building, the architect is usually paid a fee for completing the plans. No one is going to pay him for half a plan. As was explained when lawyers were given the exemption, no one is going to pay for half a lawsuit. There is really no reason for this mealy-mouthed way of operating by the Government. I want to ask the Minister, how much revenue does the Government hope to collect by taxing the work in progress of notaries in the Province of Quebec? How much extra revenue does the Government hope to collect for that?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, apropos the point raised by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, he has touched upon a matter that the Government was certainly alert to even before the Hon. Member raised it in the Question Period in the House some months ago. The Minister of Finance indicated the intention of the Government, in response to the Hon. Member's question, to look at his representation. One of the amendments of clarification which I referred to is indeed an amendment to Section 128 of Bill C-139, which is designed to include notaries in the Province of Quebec.

Without formally moving the motion lest I be out of order, I want to indicate in response to the question that the Minister indicated his intention to amend so as to clarify the inclusion of notaries for the reasons given by the Hon. Member, and at the appropriate time I will rise to move that amendment and make it available to Members opposite and to the Chair.

I might, before resuming my place, indicate that the Government has specified a number of professions that are exempt, but those occupations, some of which were touched upon by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, that are not included do have the advantage of other provisions of the Act which are of significant benefit to them in the carrying out of their business and their occupations. For example, some of the occupations talked about have the full benefit of the small business rate. Secondly, they have the benefit of incorporation as a business whereas indeed some of the professions that are exempted in this particular Section are by law in some Provinces prohibited from incorporating, thereby having the advantage not only of preferred rates of tax in the income tax but of the legal advantages which have pecuniary value in the protection of the incorporation.

Therefore, in an attempt to find some common basis for equity and treatment of these small "professional operations", we attempted to bring some equity to those who could not take advantage of the existing provisions of the Act or other Acts of Canada.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up a great deal more time because my colleagues also want to get into this. I raised the question of notaries. I now raise the question of optometrists. How much does the Minister intend to get from taxing the work in progress of optometrists? While he is at it, will he advise how much he expects to get from taxing work in progress of unincorporated architects? In some places architects cannot incorporate. How much does he expect to get from taxing work in progress of people selling computer services as unincorporated individuals? At the same time, perhaps the Minister could tell us what is the big deal about incorporation? How can he say there is a great tax advantage, after looking at some of the things which the Minister has done in this Statute to rip and tear apart the small business community.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, of course any answer that I gave to a breakdown of various professions would be hypothetical for the very reasons raised by the Hon. Member. Some bill in different ways, some carry on their practices in different ways. It was not the intention of the Government to go through each individual profession. My answer indicated that for those professions that were exempted, it was done on the rationale that there were benefits available to ones not excluded that flow, as I indicated, either from the incorporation, which is not in the Income Tax Act, but it does have benefits, or, second, businesses which have the advantage of the small business rate available to them.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I want to direct a question to the Minister to pursue this point a little further. I suspect there are going to be a great many professions, when they learn of this Clause and the new way of billing, that will be very interested in finding out why a handful of professions have been exempted. I realize the Minister has made some effort to clarify that. Keeping in mind such professions as planners, engineers and architects, will the Minister explain carefully so that any professional will understand why accountants, dentists, lawyers, medical doctors, veterinarians and chiropractors have been singled out specifically, as opposed to all the other professions? Why have they been singled out specifically as exempt? I say this in all sincerity because I believe that in the spirit of equity and fairness this question must be answered and answered in depth.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member prefaced his remarks by saying that a number of people will be surprised by the Bill and the provisions before the House. In fact, this provision was introduced in the November, 1981 budget. Further, people affected have the opportunity of making submissions to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. In fact, groups did make representations to the Committee. The rationale is the one that I have given to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. I would like to have the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, who sat through the Committee hearings, comment on that.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I did indeed have the opportunity to work in the Finance Committee through September. At that time we had submissions from various groups of lawyers and accountants from across Canada. I argued with these people. I asked them very directly why they should have a tax deferral that I as a small-businessman did not get.

I refer the Hon. Member to the minutes of those meetings because there were some convincing answers given to us by the professions which we have exempted. What those professionals were able to show us was that they would encounter huge difficulties with paper work. They would have to keep track of the enormous accounting problems. Their customers would end up paying for those difficulties and the extra paper work. Really, the Government would not benefit substantially by the tax revenue that it gained. We in effect were going to tighten up the tax payments on a one-time basis, but at enormous expense to these professions.

At the same time we were told, and I became convinced personally, that other people could handle this problem very effectively. Many of the professions that he has referred to have become professions by virtue of recent court rulings. These people have had to follow other business practices previously. They are already in a position to pay their taxes much closer to the date of billing. They are accustomed to treating unpaid bills or work in progress on an inventory basis rather than in the fashion that lawyers have traditionally.

As the Hon. Member for Mississauga South pointed out, there is a problem for lawyers to figure out how to bill on a divorce case that is half finished. There is not quite the same problem for someone who has already developed a professional practice which allows for billing at various stages; so much in advance, so much on completion of rough drawings, so much for the start of the project and so much after. Many of these professions already have that kind of professional practice.

It really boiled down to a two-fold question. First, by going after some professions like lawyers and the others that have been exempted, we were creating a lot of unnecessary paper work and big difficulties that the customer was eventually going to pay for and which had no real benefit. Second, the other people who are not exempted have business practices that already allow them to pay these taxes without those difficulties and without that paper work. They also have benefits like the small business rate which lawyers, and so on, are not always able to take advantage of.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, that is about the lightest-weight response that I have heard in a long time. To suggest that to be in this work in progress stipulation you had to appear as a lobby group during the month of September before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs is completely unacceptable, if that is the kind of rationale used. I suspect there are many professional groups across the country that probably were not even aware there was a sitting. They were probably struggling to keep alive in their profession and simply could not see themselves in a position to go to Ottawa and lobby. They thought that the sophistication of decision-making would be a little more than that. They expected more sophistication on these exemptions than simply those who had the loudest voice or the most political contacts on the Government side.

Quite frankly, I would ask the Minister, or in this case the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, to explain specifically how a chiropractor would differ in terms of the red tape, and so on, that he or she would experience as opposed to an architect or community planner.

• (1230)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member says that to qualify for an exemption you had to appear as a lobby group in front of the Finance Committee. I would venture to say that we will not be giving him any exemptions in the future because he chose very deliberately not to appear at the committee. In fact, his record shows he has a lot of opinions about our tax laws but has not put forward anything but slogans.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest that these are the kind of discussions we should not be entering into every time I raise a critical question. I remind the Hon. Member that I cannot be everywhere at once in my capacity as Finance critic for the New Democratic Party, so I am going to be criticized for not doing my job. Frankly, I think it is a low and cheap comment and I am surprised that he would deliver it.

Mr. Fisher: I believe it is an important point to make, Mr. Chairman, because we are dealing with a complex consideration here which involves more than just the surface question which the Hon. Member has asked. If he had been at the committee he would have heard about these difficult considerations. For example, he has asked me about—

Mr. Riis: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I take exception to the comment of the Hon. Member. There is something called Hansard in this House. There are briefs which were presented by every representative to the standing committee. I read every brief carefully. I read the verbatim comments in Hansard of that committee carefully. To suggest I have not done my homework, to suggest that I have not followed the deliberations which went on during the month of September, is quite unacceptable, and if that is the kind of response which is going to be given, perhaps this whole debate will turn into a farce.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, if the Hon. Member had done his homework, he would know that chiropractors do not receive the small business rate, neither do most lawyers, whereas the planners, architects and people he referred to do take advantage of that provision. So we in effect have straightened out that kind of inequity. The kind of complexity involved here was discussed in great detail.

I reject the Hon. Member's argument that you had to be a well-heeled lobbyist and come to that committee in order to get your way. In fact, most Members of the committee and most observers have said that the work done by Hon. Members who did show up was very productive and was in fact a considerable contribution towards the progress of the debate on this Bill.

I would answer his question regarding chiropractors in a two-stage way. First, I am told by our officials that they believe that most chiropractors do not have work in progress; they bill immediately after a session is finished. Second, even so, they are not subject to the small business rate; therefore, this exception straightens out that inequity.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask a few questions covering this particular section of the Bill, Clause 3 and Clause 16. What kind of additional yield does the Government feel it is going to get from this particular tax? I am not talking about specific, individual ones as mentioned by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, but what kind of a one-time shot is it where you are going to get additional income which you do not already have?

Mr. Cosgrove: The rough analysis done by the Department, Mr. Chairman, as we separated "corporate" from "individuals" under this section, showed a generation of income when the section is fully in place, fully implemented and returns are based on full implementation of the section, of $20 million on the corporate side and $20 million on the individual side.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, $20 million is a lot of money to me and it is a lot of money to individuals. Twenty million dollars plus $20 million is $40 million. That is a nice round figure, and very convenient—

Mr. Blenkarn: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the Government in its original submission on taxing work in progress in the budget of the former Minister of Finance of November 12 gave the total amount which could conceivably be taken from work in progress for all professions as $75 million. We have now been advised that, having removed a great number of professionals, lawyers, accountants and doctors and all those professional people, they still have $40 million. That was not the evidence before the committee and I would like this off the top of the head figure to be shown and proven before this House.

The Deputy Chairman: Nothing of what the Hon. Member has said strikes me as a point of order. It seems to me to be a point of debate.

Mr. McDermid: It may not be a point of order, Mr. Chairman, but it was a damn good point. I would like to ask the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary if these changes, in their opinion, will not complicate the field of taxation even more, provide those who are not exempt with more overhead and expand supervisory bureaucracy in order to keep an eye on this matter? Is the change, first of all, fair? Second, do you not believe it is going to complicate the field of taxation for small-business people and for professionals who are already very badly confused, as are our people in the Department who cannot even give answers? It depends on who you talk to in the Department as to what interpretation you receive. Do you not feel that it is going to complicate matters further for those business people who are affected?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I am told, although I did not participate in the committee deliberations, that there were tests applied, and a great amount of discussion and conversation was had in looking at the exemptions, for example identifying the legal profession as one of the exemptions. One of the tests used by the committee in deciding which profession would be unduly affected by this new provision, and which assisted the Government in looking at those operations which would be exempt, is the first question, Mr. Chairman, which I expected to be raised and could be raised with respect to any Section in the Act: does it complicate the Act? Second, is it fair? With amendments to the Act, even though the objective may be to simplify, necessary procedures engage the House, engage public debate and participation, and people come to committee. Therefore, yes, initially there are some problems of initial complication. However, there are some Sections of the Act which we hope, when finally in place, will simplify operations for certain segments of the financial and business community.

Second, is it fair? Fair to whom? Is the method of raising money fair? We argue that it is fair, Mr. Chairman. It is fair because the underlying principle of the Act is taxation of income; that income from whatever source is the basis for taxation. Taxation must be applied on an equitable basis. Those people who derive income on some equitable basis should make a contribution towards meeting expenditures of the Government. Whatever areas have called upon the Government to offer, as I indicated, advantages through the small business bond or a small business exemption under the Act, whether or not it is a direct expenditure of the Government. All income, large and small, goes towards meeting general Government operations. Generally speaking, the rule to be applied, we hope with equity, is that those who receive income should be taxed on income. The Government and Parliament, in using those resources, should as well disburse those resources with equity. So the question is, is it fair? Fair to whom? When you ask a question about fairness, you have to expand the question. Is it fair to whom? To all Canadians.

• (1240)

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, I find that very interesting. People are taxed on income they do not have. It makes one wonder if that is fair. It is much like the situation of our senior citizens who have to file income tax quarterly when they receive income on a yearly basis or half-yearly basis. They still have to pay their income tax before they receive their income. That is what is happening in this instance as well.

Let me remind the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary, who was critical of those who did not attend the committee hearings, that I did not attend them either. I am sure many of my colleagues did not. The Minister did not.

Mr. Fisher: Your whole Party did not.

Mr. McDermid: The Minister just said he did not, but, that is a red herring. Let us forget it. Let me read into the record what the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs were presented with on Wednesday, August 4, 1982:

> Some professionals such as trial lawyers, engineers and architects do not charge for their service on a time basis, but rather on a contingency basis where the calculation of fees for service rendered is feasible only when the service has been completed with a reasonable degree of success. If the outcome is unsuccessful, the firm may not be able to collect any fees from its client. Although taxes will have been paid with respect to work in progress, it would not be of any value to the firm since it is highly unlikely that specific professional service can be sold to another client.
> If professional work in progress is to be taxed in a similar manner as that of other business, some noted that the 3 per cent inventory allowance conferred to other business should also apply to professionals.

That is what was said in the committee.

There is a question that has not been answered either by the Minister or the Parliamentary Secretary. What happens if work in progress is taxed but is not completed? What happens to the individual who pays the tax and the work does not get completed, or it does get completed but he does not get paid for it?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, may I apologize to Hon. Members for my earlier partisan rudeness. I think the comments made were quite right. I do not want to pursue things in that vein. I have found some of the questions to be very useful.

Mr. McDermid: We accept those apologies.

Mr. Fisher: I own my own business. In my business I have to declare my inventory as an asset and then in the coming year write it off as an expense. What we are asking of people who experience this situation is to come into line with the tax practices of hundreds and thousands of other small businesses across the country. We would treat that debt in the same way we would treat bad debts in my business. I ask the Hon. Member to use that as a yardstick. If hundreds and thousands of small businesses across this country have inventory regulations and have write-off opportunities, then in the same way we are asking some professionals to treat their work in progress as if it were inventory.

We have had very clear indications from most of these people that they can handle this kind of thing. There were problems with lawyers who told us about having drawers upon drawers of files. Lawyers have relationships with clients. Often some of their cases are not billed successfully. Sometimes advice is given on a free basis and sometimes a fee is adjusted according to a client's income, and so on. There is a very personal relationship between lawyers and clients.

But let us look at the situation of a doctor, for example, in Ontario. If a doctor does a certain amount of work for a patient, the doctor can immediately at least bill OHIP or use the OHIP fee schedule. A doctor does not have any work in progress; a doctor has constant billing. Because of the safety net of the Ontario Government, he has some assurance of being paid.

When we looked at the difference between lawyers and small businesses or lawyers and doctors, or between architects and small businesses, during the committee hearings we found there were some parallels between some of these professions and other small businesses. But it was very clearly drawn out that some professionals really would be faced with a punitive burden if they had to go through all their hundreds of files right from the beginning to try to put a monetary value on a lot of work that often was not billed at all. All this unproductive work would have to be billed against clients in future. A kind of compromise was drawn up. On a tax basis the compromise matches the opportunities given those people who have a small business rate and those people who did not.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, what I am going to say now is nothing new to the Parliamentary Secretary. This is a shabby, disreputable remmant of rejected Carter that has been left lying around the floor for the past decade.

Mr. McDermid: That is right. It was turned down in 1969-1970.

Mr. Lambert: There is no need for it. One of the chief complaints in the committee hearings, which the Minister did not attend but the Parliamentary Secretary and the officials did, contained in brief after brief and which witness after witness complained about, was the cost of compliance with the Income Tax Act. This is just more piling it on and there is no need for it. The Crown will get its tax.

A compromise was made in 1970 that billings were to be taken in as income for the professions as a whole. They agreed to it, albeit reluctantly, but that compromise has been there. But why now toss in work in progress? It is not the tax officials who have been in the habit of evaluating business. With all due respect to the Parliamentary Secretary, if he will listen—

Mr. Fisher: Yes.

Mr. Lambert: The Parliamentary Secretary claims he is in business and has an inventory. The professionals in this particular case are not manufacturers of widgets. He thinks they are, or at least he would like to equate them with the manufacturers of widgets. But if we had reached—and this is a plea right from the bottom of my heart on behalf of taxpayers as a whole—the limits of the cost of compliance, this is something of which National Revenue officials and Finance officials have no conception. They have been told about it but they ignore it. Therefore, I will repeat it and repeat it.

I have a number of friends in business in Edmonton who at one time were officials of National Revenue. If you talk to officials at National Revenue off the record, they say it is a shame about the wasted economic effort in this country in having to comply with this Income Tax Act which is, remember, Mr. Chairman, self-assessment. We get verbal garbage. That is all it is. Neither tax officials nor the best tax lawyers and accountants in the country can understand it.

• (1250)

Just the other day my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth, pointed out that some Clauses, like Clause 39, run to pages and pages with hundreds of commas. One sentence even has 774 words. How can anyone understand that? The ordinary citizen or small businessman cannot take the Act to a chartered accountant and pay $500 or $1,000 to have his tax done. If he goes to a tax lawyer he will have to add a few zeros to that.

I am not talking about the man who runs three trucks. I am talking about the man who employs 20 or 25 people and has to maintain records for the deduction of income tax, Unemployment Insurance—with immediate remittal—for Canada Pension Plan and so on. The Government makes the small-businessman its bookkeeper. If the small-businessman is not incorporated, even though he has 20 or 25 employees, he is self-employed and will have to prepay his tax quarterly or face interest penalties.

Tax program officials admitted in evidence that writing up dividends, with the tax at 12.5 per cent, brings the small-businessman's rate of taxation to about the same as that of his employee. In other words, the man who runs a small business with 75 or 100 employees, with the attendant worry and pressure and the initiative that he displays, and all of the complications of being an owner and operator, is merely entitled to a salary taxed at the same rate as that of his employees. If he works 16 hours a day and his employees work eight hours a day, it makes no difference; his entitlement is the same.

When the committee sat during the summer, Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap was the only one who had to travel some distance to attend. I live in Ottawa and I was there, as was my colleague from Mississauga South. The Chairman was the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre and the other two Members of the Liberal Party were from the London area. No one else turned up for the hearings, not even one Member from the Province of Quebec. I guess for those who did attend it was just convenient and, as I say, I live here.

We all want to see justice done in regard to income tax and I make the strongest plea that I can for that. The cost of complying with the Act is high, Mr. Chairman. I wonder how much it costs the farmer who runs a couple of hundred acres with beef or dairy cattle in a profitable operation to comply with the Income Tax Act. He has the same responsibilities provincially, of course.

I have opposed work in progress as a concept ever since it was introduced. We agreed to it in 1970 in exchange for something else but now it is not a bargainable point. I think the Government is wrong—pigheadedly wrong. My colleagues are unalterably opposed to this provision and I advise the House to vote against it.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I have some questions. The Parliamentary Secretary indicated that he is a small-businessman and is interested in fairness. There is a contradiction in that; he never talks about fairness but about sameness. Am I correct in assuming that he wants to make the situation the same for these professional groups as for those engaged in small business? Is he talking about sameness rather than fairness?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, that is a good question. I should point out to the Hon. Member that many people now claiming professional status were previously small-business people. They enjoy the new status as a result of expanded and more liberal court rulings. Our officials tell us that millions and millions of dollars in the computer software industry are involved where people have been able to defer income by using the work in progress provision. They were previously treated as small business; now they have accounting systems set up and they take advantage of the small business tax rate.

We are not trying to turn everyone into the lowest common denominator. We have a group of people who have an opportunity to take advantage of the work in progress provisions. According to the Minister's comments it has become a $40 million industry. A $40 million allowance is quite a big chunk and we should take that into consideration.

The Deputy Chairman: It being one o'clock, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the Bill again later this day. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

TRANSPORT

NEW POLICY ON MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, with respect to the new grain transportation policy, not long ago, a telegram was sent by members of the Quebec coalition requesting a meeting with the federal authorities responsible for implementing the new policy.

Madam Speaker, today it is with great pleasure that I can inform the House, and all Quebec farmers as well, that the Federal Government has responded favourably to this request and that yesterday, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) sent a telex to Mr. Jacques Proulx, General President of the FPU, in which he said, on behalf of his colleagues, that he was agreeable to meeting spokesmen of the groups that have a special interest in this matter, namely, the FPU, the Coopérative fédérée du Québec, the Association professionnelle des meuniers du Québec, the Association des négociants en céréales du Québec and the Order of Agronomists. Now, Madam Speaker, and I think my constituents and Quebec farmers ought to know this, representatives for the parties concerned will have to agree on a date. Perhaps it would be advisable to have economists on both sides meet to discuss the various figures being mentioned by politicians and critics, in order to make this meeting a productive one and to find the best possible solution for further developing the agro-food industry in Quebec and not merely ensuring its survival.

NEW GRAIN TRANSPORT POLICY—QUEBEC FARMERS' ANXIETIES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, on the same subject, I would like to take advantage of this opportunity to add to the statement made by the Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois) and say that this morning, I was speaking to representatives of the FPU who were still concerned about the proposals made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) with respect to grain transportation. In the circumstances, I understand the Hon. Member's invitation and his optimism, but I would like to ask all Members from Quebec to tell Quebec farmers that nothing will be done until an agreement has been reached with representatives of the major groups mentioned earlier by the Hon. Member for Lotbinière, including the Coopérative fédérée and the FPU, and in fact with all farmers and those involved in farm-related industries.

I honestly hope that on the Government side, Hon. Members will see to it that no legislation is tabled until there has been a concerted effort to respond satisfactorily to the expectations of people across Canada. Quebec is of course affected by this question and has every reason to be concerned. I also hope that Government Members will make sure that Quebec's interests are not jeopardized, because it is now clear that there is not enough information to warrant going any further with the policy being proposed by the Minister of Transport.

UNFAVOURABLE WEATHER CONDITIONS FOR APPLE GROWERS—APPLICATION OF AID POLICY TO QUEBEC GROWERS

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Madam Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House, and especially of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), that apple growers in Eastern Canada and especially in Quebec, are in very serious financial difficulty. As a result of severe weather conditions during the winter of 1980-81, more than 300,000 apple trees, in other words, one third of the total number in Quebec, were lost. To illustrate the extent of this disaster, I may point out that normally, apples represent more than 70 per cent of the total value of fruit sales in Quebec. Furthermore, the Quebec apple industry's annual turnover has dropped to $12 million from an annual $22 million before nature struck so mercilessly.

I therefore urge the Minister of Agriculture to take a look at the policy followed by the Government in helping apple growers in British Columbia, in the 60's and farmers in the Prairie Provinces when they were struck by drought in 1980, and to meet the request for financial compensation submitted by Quebec apple growers, whose losses have been estimated at $62 million. Since it has been three months since the Department of Agriculture received all the necessary data to make a decision in this case, a decision is indeed long overdue, and one that will be in the best interests of apple growers in Eastern Canada.

INCOME TAX

COMPLEXITY OF FORM DEALING WITH INVESTMENT BORROWING

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, in his literally mad endeavour to ensure that every nickel of possible income tax is paid, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) has created a horror show in Form T-2219. This particular form demands that an investor who has borrowed money to make an investment specifically set out the exact relationship between the borrowed money and the investment, balancing each borrowing against each investment.

The very concepts of the demand in Form T-2219 are playing havoc with brokers in the stock exchanges, particularly with respect to those investing on a margin account. The amount of accounting requited is anti-productive and militates against disclosure of investment activity and will, if carried on, totally destroy the self-assessment principles in the Income Tax Act.

The form was concocted when the Government set out to limit the amount of interest a person could deduct when borrowings were made for investment activity. The Form makes little, if any, sense and is causing untold problems. The accounting costs to complete the Form alone represent an undue burden on the taxpayer. The Minister should forthwith withdraw the Form. It is a bureaucratic bungle.

THE CONSTITUTION

APPLICATION TO CANADIAN CHILDREN DETAINED IN JORDAN

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) the case of two Canadian citizens who are being held against their will in a foreign country, with no charges laid against them. I argue that the Government has a duty to defend their right under Section 6(1) of the Charter to re-enter Canada.

The children of the Ahlawat family, Rishi, aged 11, and Muni, aged 8, were born in Toronto of East Indian parents who are naturalized Canadians. The father went to Jordan in 1978 to teach, and the family followed. The father, who had a long history of violence toward his wife, kept the boys and refused to return to Canada or let them return. The mother returned to Canada, obtained a custody order, and returned to Jordan, but the father then converted to Islam, obtained an Islamic custody order, and seized their passports. The mother has interceded with King Hussein, but to no avail. These are Canadian citizens with the right under the Charter to return to Canada to a Canadian court which gave custody to the mother.

I ask that the Government negotiate with Jordan to ensure the return of the children and the father so that the matter of custody can be resolved in a court of the country of Canada, of which they are citizens.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DENIAL OF MATERNITY BENEFITS TO ADOPTIVE PARENTS

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention a Section of the Unemployment Insurance Act which I believe is unjust and requires amendment. I am referring to Section 30(1) of the Unemployment Insurance Act which requires that an applicant for maternity benefits "should prove her pregnancy". This Section, as currently written, effectively denies adoptive mothers the receipt of maternity benefits.

As I am sure we are all aware, the general need for maternal care of the adopted newborn is as great as that required for the biological newborn.

In the case of non-infant adopted children, dealing with the problems of parental or guardian transition can also require thorough parental attention. Immediate parental supervision in adoption cases is deemed so essential that many family service agencies make a six-month home stay a mandatory provision. I believe that the distinction between adoptive parents and natural or biological parents is unnecessary.

Inasmuch as the current unemployment insurance policy with respect to maternity benefits reflects the need of the mother to be with the new child, as well as reflecting the physical inability to work, I feel that Section 30(1) of the Unemployment Insurance Act should be amended in order to provide a form of maternity benefits to adoptive mothers as well as to natural mothers.

NECESSITY FOR BEEF STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, the vacillation of the Minister of Agriculture concerning the very important issue of stabilization for the beef livestock industry is a matter of grave importance to producers. Producers have been promised a policy "within months", "by the end of the summer", "within a week", and "before Christmas". When is it to be, Madam Speaker? In delaying, the Minister is at cross-purposes with the Provinces and the producers. He stands alone in his reluctance to act. Before even reading the provincial suggestions, for him to say that his proposals of a marketing board concept are better than the provincial suggestions is insulting.

Red meat producers can ill afford to wait for a federal Minister of Agriculture who needs weeks, months, even years, to make up his mind. It is hard enough for them to carry him on their backs, especially when he is dragging the one foot he does not have in his mouth.

AIR CANADA

UNITED STATES REACTION TO SEAT SALE

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, Canada and the United States have in the past followed an unwritten rule not to link issues when certain problems arise between the two countries. This practice has been broken by the United States Government which has refused all passengers of Air Canada who purchased bargain weekend flight tickets to take advantage of the discount fare and travel to their destinations. The U.S. Government has linked this issue to the negotiations involving Continental Airlines of Los Angeles to enable it to compete with C.P. Air of Vancouver and Quantas of Australia for passenger business between Canada and Australia. As well, the American Government is seeking total deregulation of cross border air travel.

These cases are totally unrelated to air discount fares, and therefore it is difficult to understand why the U.S. would reject one hundred thousand Canadian toursits. Must innocent individuals suffer because "Life With Uncle" continues to be fraught with difficulties?

CONDEMNATION OF UNITED STATES POSITION ON FLIGHTS TO ORIENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I would like to make a statement concerning the same issue.

The travel plans of thousands of Canadians are in limbo because the United States has cancelled Air Canada's seat sale air fares on a pretext involving totally separate issues of air fares to Australia and other parts of the Pacific. The United States Government is taking Canadian tourists hostage to try to win a point it was unable to win in negotiations for a new agreement between Canada and the United States.

The United States Government wants us to violate our air agreement with Australia in order to let Continental Airlines, a company which does not even fly to Canada, to siphon Canadian air passengers through Los Angeles. We do not tell the United States to violate its agreements with other countries. We must not let the United States meddle in our relations with other countries. If our country gives in to demands of the United Sates, the survival of Canadian airlines would be threatened. If we let the United States siphon off Canadian traffic to the Orient, it would only be a matter of time before American airlines would siphon off Canadian traffic to Europe. Eventually, transcontinental traffic between Canadian cities would be routed through large U.S. Airports.

The question is whether Canada wants to have a national airline system. Are we to be an independent and sovereign nation north of the 49th parallel, or are we to be just an appendage of the United States' transportation system and economy? We call upon the Government of Canada to send a strongly worded protest to the United States administration to let it know that, if it persists in this additional attack on friendly relations, there are reciprocal actions which Canada can take—

Madam Speaker: Order.

MACDONALD COMMISSION

OBJECTION TO CHAIRMAN'S REMUNERATION

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I want to read a letter sent to me by the Regional Municipality of Niagara. It states:

The following resolution of the Regional Finance Committee, approved and adopted by the Council of the Regional Municipality of Niagara February 17, 1983, is referred to you, as directed, for appropriate action:

'That the Council of the Regional Municipality of Niagara objects to the $800 per day payment being made to the Chairman of the commission examining the Canadian economy, recently appointed by the federal Government, on the grounds that the payment is considered exorbitant and not in the spirit of restraint presently being suggested by all levels of Government.

That this objection be lodged with all federal Members of Parliament who attend the Tri-Level Government meetings in Niagara.'

THE ECONOMY

PREMIERS' SUGGESTION OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Prime Minister, and relates to the response of Premier Buchanan to the invitation of the Prime Minister with respect to discussion of the economy of the country. Speaking on behalf of the Premiers, he suggested a full-scale summit between the federal Government and the provincial Premiers on the disastrous state of the Canadian economy.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House whether the Prime Minister is giving favourable consideration to this proposal of the Premiers, rather than the Prime Minister's suggestion that the economy be discussed somewhere between the entrée and dessert at 24 Sussex?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has received the message from Premier Buchanan—

Mr. Epp: Good. What's he doing with it?

Mr. MacEachen: —and is about to send a reply to the Premier indicating that it would not be feasible, because of other arrangements which have been made with respect to the constitutional conference, to have the type of meeting that Premier Buchanan has suggested at that particular time, but that it will be possible for the Premiers to meet with the Prime Minister on the evening after the constitutional conference and, if necessary, as has already been indicated, to meet again the following morning, at which time they would be able to consider the medium term objectives of all the Governments and discuss the possibility of holding a conference on the economy at some future date.

Mr. Nielsen: May I suggest to the Deputy Prime Minister that the suggestion of the Premiers that an agenda be set for a full scale summit on the economy has considerable merit and should be considered favourably by the Prime Minister and the Government.

PLIGHT OF UNEMPLOYED

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I ask the Minister, in his capacity as Deputy Prime Minister, whether he can give the House and the country, and particularly the two million unemployed, the assurance that the tragedy of their situation will be placed high on the agenda of such federal-provincial discussions concerning the tragic state of the Canadian economy, rather than being placed somewhere in between the vichyssoise and the filet mignon?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware that the Minister of Finance has already met with his counterparts in December and he will be meeting again with them in Toronto next month.

Mr. Crosbie: He does not have any counterpart. There is only one of him.

Mr. MacEachen: At the same time, the Minister of State for Economic Development has been meeting with his counterparts, as has the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Therefore, at the forefront of the ongoing consultations between the Governments at the ministerial level has been the economic situation existing in the country. These consultations will continue.

What the Prime Minister is stating to the Premiers is that, after the constitutional conference, in the evening, and the following morning if necessary, he is prepared to discuss with the Premiers the question of the economy and, in the context of the consultations which have already taken place, to consider the possibility at some future date of holding a First Ministers' Conference on the economy. Therefore I assure the Hon. Member that the economic situation is at the forefront of these discussions and will continue at the forefront. However, I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition would not want to have a repeat of the First Ministers' Conference on the economy which was held just about a year ago.

Mr. Epp: It was honest. Take a look at the policy.

Mr. Nielsen: We are not discussing anything other than the initiative of the Prime Minister in extending an invitation to the Premiers to discuss the economy. The disappointment of the Premiers lies in the fact that they are being expected to discuss the tragic proportions of that problem between the vichyssoise and the filet mignon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1420)

Mr. Nielsen: I ask the Deputy Prime Minister, with all of that background of experience that he has not only as a parliamentarian and as a Minister, but given the expertise that he has accumulated as Finance Minister, whether he does not consider it fit and proper at this time that this immense, tragic problem of unemployment should receive top priority in a federal-provincial conference of the Prime Minister and the Premiers? Does he not think that such a conference should be held at the earliest possible moment and, if necessary, take one or two or three days to bring about some solutions to the problem? Does he not think that the problem is important enough to warrant that kind of focus?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is seriously underestimating the state of mind of the Premiers who, he thinks, would be put off simply by the appearance of filet mignon on the table at 24 Sussex Drive.

What the Prime Minister has suggested is to have a meeting at 24 Sussex Drive, over dinner, on the night after the First Ministers' Conference on the Constitution, to have a review of the economic situation, and if in the view of the Premiers a further discussion is necessary the following morning—

Mr. Nielsen: Is there any doubt?

Mr. MacEachen: —then that will take place. The Premiers were already notified as to the possibility of continuing the discussion the following morning at 24 Sussex Drive. That will give the Prime Minister and the Premiers an opportunity to conduct a rather intense examination of the economic situation in private, rather than being distracted at a public television ceremony, which is often intended to impress the electorate rather than deal with the economic problems facing the country.

AGRICULTURE

PROVINCIAL TASK FORCE ON BEEF STABILIZATION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He will know that in the absence of any federal leadership the Ministers of Agriculture of the Provinces have named a task force that will look at a national program for income stabilization in support of beef and other agricultural commodities. I would like to ask the Minister if he is prepared to support that task force, if he will name his representative to it, and if he will put the resources of the federal Government behind the findings of that task force.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am very much aware that a meeting took place in Toronto this past Tuesday between the provincial Ministers of Agriculture, and the reason it took place this past Tuesday is that not all of them could be there next week, I am told, because some of them are going on vacation.

The presentation that was made is not dissimilar to what I made to them in 1978. You say there was not leadership given, but in 1978 I offered them practically the same thing that they are suggesting now. I have been patient in waiting for them to come around. I do not know how far they are going to go. For instance, they did not say that they were going to accept the Quebec plan which would cost $450 million, or they did not say that they were going to accept the Saskatchewan plan which has a $30 million deficit, or they did not say that they were going to accept the Alberta plan on which they have spent over $140 million in the last year.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: They did not say what plan they were going to accept. They did not say whether they were going to have equity in the plan, or anything else. That is the kind of plan it has to be, as far as I am concerned, and that is what I proposed in 1978. If they had followed my plan in 1978—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: —there would not be any bankruptcies now, as there are.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture will know, or should know, that the situation in 1978 was much different from the situation now, and the GM100 plan that was proposed then would not accommodate the difficulties that are present now.

The Minister of Agriculture has been conning agriculture for the last two years at least, and he has been telling farmers to wait for his plan. I would like to ask him if he really does have a plan and, if so, when it will be made public? Or is he leading the Ministers of Agriculture of the Provinces on so that he can act in a unilateral fashion? Meanwhile, farms are dying and there are bankruptcies at the rate of one a day, while he is doing nothing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refuses to recognize reality in what I had proposed in 1978, and had Government approval for, and which his Government withdrew in 1979 because it said that my plan was too rich. His Government withdrew that when they were in power in 1979. The Hon. Member said I was fronting. I was not fronting, and I had Government approval of that plan. The provincial Ministers said they were going to come forward with a plan.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: Where in Heaven's name is their plan, Madam Speaker? If they had a plan, where is it? Why did they not get together and present me with a plan?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: They presented nothing as far as I am concerned. All they did was present an old thing that I had proposed before. Madam Speaker, I have a 1983 model right now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS FACING BANKRUPTCY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, what I have to say does not have anything to do with filet mignon and vichyssoise but has a great deal to do with meat and potatoes. I too want to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Madam Speaker: Order. I do not know if anyone understands what is going on in the House, but the Chair certainly does not.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, the Minister will know that the Royal Bank of Canada recently announced its new policy of feudalism for farmers who were unable to make their payments in the past year as a result of punitive interest rates. He will also be well aware that last year there were record farm bankruptcies with a total liability of approximately $90 million. The Minister will also know that his Government helped to bail out and renegotiate loans to its friends, $200 million to Chrysler, $500 million to Dome, $125 million to Massey Ferguson, $125 million to Consolidated Computers, and on and on, to the tune of about $3 billion. Will the Minister of Agriculture explain why his Government will not spend one-thirtieth of what it spent on bailing out these major corporations, to enable farmers to stay on their own land and own their own farms?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member uses figures pretty loosely. I would ask him to check the record. In the fiscal year 1982/83 we will have provided nearly $500 million to farmers interest-free. We will have provided them on special loans, I would think by the first of April, with probably $140 million at nine and one-quarter per cent interest subsidized. Even the loans that we gave them before, which should amount to probably $700 million this year, were subsidized at about five points below the average cost of long-term money from any other place.

I ask the Hon. Member to check some of the things that are going on. For instance, in crop insurance we pay 50 per cent of the premium. In Saskatchewan what we put into the Crop Insurance Plan amounts to more than the Saskatchewan Government's total budget. So when they say that we are not doing anything, just let them face the facts of how many things we are doing.

The way that the Farm Credit Corporation is working, we have just moved into the market and borrowed $50 million on the private money market that we will be loaning into the different areas, and the arrangement with the Saskatchewan Government is that they are subsidizing that themselves to the tune of down to eight per cent. In co-operation with the Province of Saskatchewan, we are doing that kind of thing.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, he huffs and he puffs, and I think he blew his own house down after all of that.

ROYAL BANK PROPOSAL TO SEIZE FARMS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, let me put my question very specifically. The Minister knows that the Royal Bank has a policy in place where it is going to take over farmland and lease it back to farmers. That is the kind of move that will introduce sharecropping into Canada in the 1980s.

I want to ask the Minister why he does not stop that immediately by bringing forward his backbencher's version of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act which will prohibit banks from foreclosing on farmers and enable family farmers to stay on their own land and continue with food production during these difficult times.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I would hope that the Hon. Member would also check some of the things that the Farm Credit Corporation has done, working with the private lending institutions in making special arrangements with many farmers. In some instances they have not made a payment for three and going on four years, and we have not taken over their property.

• (1430)

Under the Bank Act, the Royal Bank can only hold a piece of property for so long. It cannot, as the Hon. Member says, be the landlord in perpetuity. It can only hold the land for a certain length of time, and then it has to be turned back into the private market so that someone can buy it if they wish. The Royal Bank admits that 5 per cent of its rural customers are in a real rough economic position. The Bill drafted by my colleague from Lambton-Middlesex is worthy of consideration. It is receiving deep and concerned consideration at the present time. The principle of that Bill was used once before in the history of this country. The principle is very good.

AIR CANADA

STATUS OF SEAT SALE

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the dispute between the Canadian Government and the United States Government concerning discount rates for passengers booking Air Canada flights to the United States, perhaps the Minister of Transport could inform the House about the outcome of his discussions with the U.S. Government and what chances or assurances Canadians who purchased seat-sale tickets have of travelling via Air Canada this week-end.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, yesterday and the day before, we talked for several hours, on the spot in Washington and on the telephone, about Canada's proposal. We left our proposal on the negotiating table, and it has not been accepted by the Americans. The situation is therefore as follows: people who are very realistic about the matter have obtained a refund or have decided to go elsewhere in Canada, patriotic Canadians have decided to go elsewhere in Canada, the more adventurous have decided to wait because Air Canada representatives are considering the possibility of offering discount rates to other places where there is sun too, and the real optimists hope that the court injunction that Air Canada is going to try to obtain today will be successful or that the Americans, after thinking it over, will come up with some new ideas with respect to the proposal we made yesterday. I think it was a good proposal, and they should have accepted it many hours ago.

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER TALKED TO UNITED STATES COUNTERPART

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, on Tuesday, as reported at page 23330 of Hansard, the Minister said that the system of sales and discount sales "is a predictable system". Will the Minister tell the House how the 100,000 Canadians who are directly affected by the regulatory fight between Canada and the United States can predict anything and make plans with certainty? In seriousness, has the Minister yet talked to his counterpart, the U.S. Secretary of Transportation, Elizabeth Dole, and not some flunky with the CAB? If he has talked to her, what has been her answer to this prohibition of CAB on an issue where the CTC is left out to dry, and so are innocent Canadian people?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there are two aspects to the question. One is with respect to the modus operandi in cases of special discount sales. I repeat what I said to my friend yesterday. The formula is first you advertise, second you file, and third, you sell the seats. With that I think he agrees. The subject of linkages is one that we find not acceptable. Is that what my hon. friend wants to know?

Mr. Nowlan: Have you spoken to Elizabeth yet?

Mr. Pepin: With respect to Elizabeth, I said yesterday that I was a gentleman. Being a gentleman, I did not ask where she was. It is not gentlemanly for a man to ask where a lady is. One thing is sure. On the first day of the negotiations, which was seven or eight days ago, I was informed that Mrs. Dole was not present and that Mr. Trent would negotiate with me.

Mr. Nowlan: Who is he?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Trent is an Under-Secretary of Transportation.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He is also Elizabeth's chauffeur.

Mr. Pepin: He is a very important man. I have been in almost constant touch with him since. I call it eyeball to eyeball, nose to nose, and belly button to belly button—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: You could not get any closer to a person, over the telephone.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: No wonder you didn't get to Elizabeth.

Mr. Pepin: It has been a very good discussion. The Americans have moved quite a lot, but they have not moved enough to satisfy the primary concern of the federal Government of Canada, which is the maintenance of the route between Canada and Australia.

REQUEST FOR TOP LEVEL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, there are many supplementaries I would like to address to the Minister. I certainly know now why he did not get to Elizabeth. Be that as it may, this is very serious. I am asking a very serious question.

Is the reason the Minister has been engaged in eyeball to eyeball conversation with an errand boy of the CAB because most of the CTC, especially Mr. Armstrong, the Chairman of the Air Transport Committee, is himself on holiday until April 14, and there is no one talking to Mr. MacKinnon, the Chairman of the CAB? Why does the Minister not go to the top instead of fooling around with the office boys?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, we have really been negotiating at the top. Mr. Armstrong was in touch with Mr. MacKinnon a number of times—

Mr. Nowlan: He is on vacation.

Mr. Pepin: —before he went on vacation, if he is on vacation now. Mr. Harman, the Canadian chief air negotiator, has been in Washington for the last three days. I have constantly been in touch with Mr. Trent. The Ambassador has been in touch with the State Department. My hon. friend is familiar with some of the difficulties in negotiating with the Americans. We have been present in all the Government board rooms in the United States in recent hours. Mr. Shultz is aware of that negotiation. The President of the United States was informed of that. As a matter of fact, he signed the piece of paper which led to the whole debate.

AGRICULTURE

IMPORTED TOMATOES—LABELLING AND GRADING REQUIREMENTS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. After the $500 million and the red meat problem, it should be very easy. The Minister will be aware of the severe problems being experienced by the tomato processing industry, especially in Ontario. I want him to keep the pressure on his colleagues to speed up the countervail action against Italian subsidized imports. However, there is another problem that is part of the same over-all problem.

There are still many products on store shelves in Canada which do not meet the labelling and grade requirements which the Canadian industry has to meet. Will the Minister indicate what action his Department is taking to ensure that all imported canned tomatoes, regardless of country of origin, meet Canadian labelling and grading requirements?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we are all very much aware of what the Hon. Member speaks of in the industry and the problems they face because of tomato imports. I want to make it very clear that those tomato imports did not walk here by themselves. Some good corporate citizen in Canada imported them into this country, and this is causing depressed prices for Canadian tomato products in this country. Does the Hon. Member have evidence that these products which have been brought in do not meet our standards? We have done some checking through our own Department and other Government Departments. So far I have not seen a report which states that they do not meet our standards. If the Hon. Member has evidence of that, I would be only too willing to look at it. If it is clear and plain, I will take appropriate action.

REQUEST THAT LABELS CLEARLY SHOW COUNTRY OF ORIGIN

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, the Minister well knows that Government Departments have proven the subsidy in Italy, and there is now a countervail action against that. What I want the Minister to ensure is that all packages are clearly labelled so that Canadians have a choice. The majority of Canadians would buy Canadian, given the opportunity, but his Department has been very, very lax. There are products coming in and you cannot tell where they are coming from. They are marked as Canada Grade A, No. 1, and they may well be, but they were produced in Italy, Spain, Taiwan, or some other country such as that.

• (1440)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, all I can say is that if they meet the standards set by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and the standards which my Department works with, there is very little that anyone can do. There have been representations made about them not quite meeting our standards according to the processing guidelines which they have to follow. For instance, tomatoes in Canada must be packed in tomato juice. We are told if tomatoes are shipped from other countries they can pack them in water. That is being checked, but I have no report on it at this time.

EMPLOYMENT

MANDATORY AFFIRMATIVE ACTION FOR WOMEN

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Next Tuesday will be a very gloomy International Women's Day in Canada. The recession, Government restraints, and the technological revolution have greatly increased discrimination against women in the work force. Experts have said that the only solution to ensure equal rights in the work place is mandatory affirmative action. Would the Deputy Prime Minister say what his position is on the important question of mandatory affirmative action?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I would like to answer that question and point out to the Hon. Member that, under federal jurisdiction, only 10 per cent of the work force is covered. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that she address her problem to those areas where no action has been taken, at the provincial and municipal Government's levels, where there is no affirmative action, and no such thing as equal pay for work of equal value, as there is under federal jurisdiction.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, not only did I not get an answer from the Deputy Prime Minister, but I did not get an answer to my question from the woman responsible for women.

Many reports indicate that the Government program to encourage voluntary affirmative action in the private sector has been a dismal failure. This time I would appreciate an answer from the Deputy Prime Minister on what steps his Government will take to require mandatory affirmative action in the whole government regulated sector, and also contract compliance with all firms which do business with the Government? This is essential in order for women to have equal opportunity.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I would point out to the Hon. Member that this Government has done more in the area of affirmative action than any other Government or the private sector. We have affirmative action programs in place in Government. I would ask the Hon. Member to look at the latest Treasury Board settlements to see just what is happening. This Government has a record to be proud of, much prouder than any other firm or any other Government in Canada.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUERY RESPECTING NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. A few days ago the Secretary of State for External Affairs told a reporter, "We don't have nuclear weapons." Would the Minister tell the House just when the nuclear weapons were removed from Comox?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I am very surprised at the question of the ex-Minister of National Defence. He should know the answer as well as the policy which we have. We neither confirm nor deny the possibility that we have nuclear heads for the armaments on some of our planes, which are not possessed by Canadians but are under American procurement and scrutiny. The Hon. Member should know, with the F-18 coming onstream very shortly, all this will be past history. He should know that better than I.

Mr. Beatty: He knows everything better than you.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I would like to quote from the Daily Colonist in Victoria, a reliable journal, which said that the Prime Minister said at a news conference, and I quote:

> ... that Canada would finally be clear of nuclear weapons when new fighter planes were delivered to the armed forces in two years.

Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell the House, when the Minister told the reporter two weeks ago that, "we don't have nuclear weapons", was he hoping to mislead the reporter and the public, or did he really not know about the nuclear weapons at Comox?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Minister of National Defence very lucidly explained what was meant in that context, and I am surprised it escaped the Hon. Member because it was so clearly explained by the Minister of National Defence.

Oral Questions

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S AWARENESS OF PROJECT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to address my question to the Acting Prime Minister. With respect to the Gillespie scam, I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister would inform the House of the first time the Deputy Prime Minister became aware of Mr. Gillespie's involvement in getting together a consortium for the coal liquefaction project in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, that question was raised yesterday, and I indicated to the House, I believe it was Monday of last week, that I knew about this facility before the announcement which was made in April. I knew that it was being considered by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and it was explained yesterday by the Minister of Finance in reply to another question—

Mr. Nielsen: You tell us.

Mr. MacEachen: —but to the best of my recollection I first heard about Mr. Gillespie's interest in the possibility of a facility for coal liquefaction in Cape Breton in June, 1980. That is almost a year before the announcement was made. It is not surprising that I would know about it at that time because Mr. Gillespie had been in consultation in May with the Province of Nova Scotia about the matter, with the Premier, and with the relevant Minister in that Province. Therefore, it was quite natural that I should know about it almost as quickly as the Premier of the Province.

ROLE OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I thank the Acting Prime Minister for clarifying one aspect of the Deputy Prime Minister's knowledge of this matter. However, I would like to ask him if he will undertake to obtain from the Deputy Prime Minister a letter outlining the details of the Deputy Prime Minister's involvement in this matter, including all contact which the Deputy Prime Minister had with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and departmental officials, with respect to this project? Will he undertake to have a letter delivered to the Prime Minister from the Deputy Prime Minister outlining the Deputy Prime Minister's involvement in this matter, including telephone conversations?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it will be unnecessary for the Acting Prime Minister to get in touch with the Deputy Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I have answered questions on this point on two occasions, and I can answer the Hon. Member's question very quickly by saying that there were no discussions, telephone conversations, or letters between myself and the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, nor were there any discussions with departmental officials at any time on this particular matter. All the documents from the Department have been laid out. The Hon. Member must have examined them. If he finds any correspondence from me, I wish he would draw it to my attention.

AGRICULTURE

STATIONING OF RESEARCHERS IN WEST

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In the absence of plant breeders' rights, but more particularly, because of the Pepin proposal which suggests taking hundreds of millions of dollars from western Canada, which revenue either will have to be made up by increased production or by different varieties which are frost free, and so on, does the Minister still intend to deprive western Canada at the end of this month of researchers who will be needed in order to produce this type of income which is going to satisfy the Pepin proposal? And for what reason are some of them being transferred to eastern Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): There are some 14 positions which they talk so much about and how bad it is that they are going to be transferred to eastern Canada. When I transferred 70 people to western Canada from eastern Canada, no one said a word about it. The Easterners did not complain and the Westerners did not say thank you for it. I feel that is not bad for Canada, Madam Speaker, as far as that goes. Then someone reports they are releasing 14 positions, but they are not changing one person from western Canada to eastern Canada under that proposal. We are concentrating in the area of food processing and that type of thing.

• (1450)

The Hon. Member made a statement about the Pepin plan. If he is talking about that long awaited and needed change in the Crow rate, I can tell him that I am 100 per cent behind the Minister of Transport on that program. It is one of the best things that ever happened. The Hon. Member might want to study and learn about it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEPLOYMENT OF RESEARCHERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, western Canada has 80 per cent of the cultivated land in Canada and there is one researcher for 250,000 acres in western Canada. There is one researcher for 106,000 acres in Ontario, and one researcher for 76,000 acres in Quebec. Why are processing and packaging so important at this time? Can private industries not undertake this research? Does this have anything to do with the Minister's plans for Canagrex through which he and the government will go into business?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that all the scientific and technical knowledge we have at our fingertips at present is used right now in western Canada. And within two years, as a result, you could increase grain production 30 per cent; that is with the knowledge that we have at the present time, and if the Provinces were using their authority under the Constitution, to provide proper education for the farmers. We developed the knowledge for them which is not being transferred to the farmers in the way it should be. I am almost tempted to interfere in the Constitution and become an educator for the farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—ALASTAIR GILLESPIE'S ROLE IN 1980

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. It has now become apparent from the record that, starting in May, 1980, when Mr. Gillespie first approached the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, through June, 1980, when the Deputy Prime Minister became aware of Mr. Gillespie's involvement, through to the budget of October 28, 1980 a series of discussions took place between Mr. Gillespie and representatives of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and indirectly at least, representatives of the Ministry of Finance.

On the day immediately after the budget Mr. Gillespie went ahead and formed a consortium based on the provisions contained in the budget.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister not think that there is just too much of a coincidence in all of these events to lead anyone other than to the conclusion that there was information available to Mr. Gillespie from somewhere that would lead him to know that the Government intended to provide funding for his particular project, and that all of his lobbying—and I use the term advisedly—was bound to be successful?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, if the situation were as described by the Hon. Member, then one might possibly reach the conclusions which he has reached. But it is not true, as he has alleged, that this particular project was carried forward on the basis of provisions in the budget. That is absolutely untrue. The Hon. Member can search the budget from top to bottom and he will not find any reference to this particular project. The project itself in fact did not go forward on any provision found in the budget. Therefore, the Hon. Member really has to examine the facts before he draws these very false conclusions.

REFERENCE IN NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Deputy Prime Minister knows that I have examined the facts. Given that on page 84 of the National Energy Program, which was very closely tied into, if not an integral part of the budget—

Mr. Benjamin: Lalonde said it was.

Mr. Deans: —there was quite clear reference to a coal liquefaction program in Cape Breton, is that not evidence enough that Mr. Gillespie's overtures to both the Energy and Finance Ministries met with success, and is that not reason enough to ask that there be further inquiries into this matter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, you know the Hon. Member should read the reference in the National Energy Program which was tabled as a separate document on budget night by myself on behalf of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A sentence in this very large document simply states:

> Alternative means to use coal in the production of liquid fuels will also be actively pursued.

Mr. Epp: It sure was too. Tell us about the active pursuit.

Mr. MacEachen: If the Hon. Member had followed the history of the coal industry as closely as I have followed it in the years since I have come to sit in the House of Commons, he would know that the question of coal liquefaction and its possibility did not originate in June, 1980, or in May, 1980.

Mr. Lewis: Before that?

Mr. MacEachen: It is a concept that has been in the literature for some time. It seems to me that it would be a glaring omission from the National Energy Program statement, which was intended to be a comprehensive statement of energy possibilities in Canada, if it had ignored and had not made reference to the possibility of converting coal into liquefied form. It is so natural that it would appear there because it is a concept that was brought up from time to time.

Mr. Deans: Address yourself to the question. Gillespie knew to form his consortium on the day after the budget announcement of provisions for coal liquefaction.

Mr. MacEachen: That is quite clear that this is a general reference to a concept that had been in place for some time, and the Hon. Member is trying to draw the conclusion, a false conclusion, that because coal liquefaction was mentioned, somehow it was a budget leak and somehow Mr. Gillespie had some prior knowledge. All of that is very unjustified conjecture.

Mr. Nowlan: You are as crooked as a colliery.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CHEMICAL CANISTER CONTRACT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In response to my questions earlier this week concerning the testing of chemical and biological warfare weapons in Canada, the Minister stated, first, that this was past history and, second, that those tests were for defensive purposes. If that is so, can the Minister explain why, for example, during the thirteenth Tripartite Conference on Toxicological Warfare which was held in Canada, the three countries agreed, and I quote:

To concentrate on research for incapacitating and new type lethal agents.

If this is history, can the Minister explain to the House why in February, through the Department of Supply and Services, the Army was contracting for $250,000 worth of chemical canisters to be used for chemical warfare games?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think I will be repeating what I have said before, that is, that the only chemical warfare, as the Hon. Member calls it, or chemical experience we had was strictly for our defensive and protective requirements. It is strictly for that.

An Hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Lamontagne: When I said it was history I was, of course, referring to some of the tests in previous years in the 1950s and 1960s. I still reaffirm that Canada is involved only in defensive testing. We do not stockpile and we do not possess in any way any amount of chemical products which can be used for other than protective and defensive purposes.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—INQUIRY RESPECTING ACTIONS OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to those asked by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West of the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister indicated that he first knew about the Gillespie project in June, 1980. Is he really asking the House to believe that he, a senior Member of the Cabinet, did not have any discussions with the then Minister of Energy, another senior Member of the Cabinet, for a period of some eight months about a major project which came under the jurisdiction of his colleague, or was it that he was asking Mr. Gillespie to act as his conduit with regard to those discussions?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the fact of the matter is as is evidenced in the documentation that has been tabled, that this particular project was dealt with at the official level and was carried through by officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It was carried through by a management committee composed of federal officials and provincial officials. We all know that the Premier of Nova Scotia was solidly behind this project. He reconfirmed his support and belief in this project, I understand, in the Legislature this very week.

• (1500)

Because of the merits of the program, because it fitted within the objectives of the Department, it was carried forward at the official level. It was not necessary at any time for me to speak to the Minister in order to urge him to put forward this program. It was not necessary at any time for me to ask the Premier of Nova Scotia if he would put his funds behind the program.

I ask the Hon. Member to believe that, because those are the facts. If they were otherwise they would be revealed in the documentation. Let me tell the Hon. Member that if I had spoken to the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, if I had written letters, I would be very pleased to reveal that. There would be no reason why I would conceal a representation which I might have made to the Minister on a project which might occur in the Province of Nova Scotia and might benefit my constituency. If that had happened, I would reveal it quite clearly because I think it would be quite in conformity with my responsibilities as a Member of Parliament.

PETITION

MR. SKELLY—TELEVISION PROGRAMMING POLICY

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) on Wednesday, March 2, 1983, has been examined and it has been found that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It arises from an answer given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), as reported at page 23362 of Hansard, when he said: "I have tabled more documents than ever before", as if to offer proof of unheralded openness in the Gillespie affair. In making that statement the Minister led the House to believe that he was breaking new ground.

I would ask you to rule whether there has been a breach of privilege, because included in "more documents than ever before" were 85 duplicates and redrafts of the same set of documents, four copies of one four-page letter, two copies of a 23-page memo and three copies of a ten-page agreement—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, I let the Hon. Member go on for a while because I was not sure whether he was discussing matters that had taken place in the House today. However, he is raising a question that relates to a matter that was discussed previously. If he wants to raise those questions and he feels he has a question of privilege concerning them he must give me notice. The little note he sent me did not have the proper delay to it.

I will hear the Hon. Member tomorrow if he feels he has something to bring up.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader about the business for tomorrow and as much of next week as possible.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, today we are in Committee of the Whole dealing with Bill C-139, the Income Tax Act. Tomorrow we will resume debate on second reading of Bill C-143, the borrowing authority.

[Translation]

As for next week's business, Madam Speaker, I intend to designate Monday as the sixth opposition day for the present supply period. Next Tuesday, we shall resume debate in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2) and as usual, Wednesday, the House will consider Private Members' Business. Next Thursday, if we do not finish tomorrow, we shall resume debate on second reading of Bill C-143, to authorize the Government to borrow certain sums of money.

Madam Speaker, that was, in brief, the order of business for next week.

PRESENTATION OF FIFTH REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, with the consent of and on behalf of the Hon. Member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), Chairman of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, I have the honour to present the fifth report of the Special Committee, in both official languages.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, in response to a letter from the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), and in the spirit of the Access to Information Act, I wish to table the following documents. First, my response to this letter; second, minutes of the January 12, 1981 meeting of the Management Committee of the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement on Oil Substitution and Conservation, with the permission of Premier Buchanan; third, relevant material from Petro-Canada's correspondence files; and fourth, in addition, I am including correspondence between Mr. Gillespie and Premier Buchanan, with their permission.

One of the documents requested by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre—the directive of the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of July 9, 1981—does not exist because the directive was given verbally.

PETITION

MR. FULTON—AMAX OPERATIONS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I have the honour today to table another 2,500 signatures calling for a full public inquiry into the Amax operation in British Columbia. These 2,500 petitioners are responding to a petition that was originally circulated by the Community Forum on Shared Responsibility. This group represents the religious community, primarily the Catholic church, although many of the signatories among the 2,500 who have signed are from across Canada, the majority from Ontario.

I think the tabling of this petition today is particularly timely in that the Ombudsman of British Columbia has added his voice to that of the seven major churches in Canada, the B.C. Medical Association and 50 other major groups across Canada.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 4,616.

[Text]

TESTING OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Question No. 4,616—Mr. Mitges:

Was Canada cited as having fallen far behind the rest of the world in testing 1,500 older prescription drugs, introduced before 1963, which may prove dangerous or useless and, if so, what is the Government doing to accelerate a testing program for this purpose?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Prescription drugs that were marketed before 1963 and which were not required to be supported by proof of efficacy before approval, are reviewed by the Department of National Health and Welfare: (a) whenever there is an indication of a safety problem arising from experience anywhere in the world; (b) These drugs are reviewed in collaboration with expert advisory committees whenever new drugs supersede them. This review is done with the aim of producing therapeutic monographs for both the old and new drug, so as to give an adequate description of their place in therapy.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

[English]

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council could inform the House when motions Nos. 109, 110 and 111 standing in my name on the Order Paper are likely to be tabled.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I do not have any new news but I will be happy to look into that on behalf of the Hon. Member.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 58, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into a Committee of the Whole.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration in Committee of the Whole of Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to Income Tax (No. 2)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Blaker in the chair.

On Clause 3—Fair Market Value

On Clause 16—Professional business

The Deputy Chairman: At one o'clock when the House rose, the Hon. Member for Calgary West had the floor.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, prior to one o'clock the Parliamentary Secretary had indicated that, in terms of "work in progress" for professionals, the Government's mindset was to take work in progress into inventory. Could the Parliamentary Secretary give us the Government's definition of the difference between inventory and accounts receivable?

• (1510)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I am told that the differences here have to do with the deductions on cost. Thinking back to my own experience, the differences between accounts receivable and inventory are fairly obvious. Accounts receivable are included in the incomes of businessmen or professionals for tax purposes. Inventory is listed as an asset, but it immediately becomes something which he can write off in the next year. If a businessman encounters a bad debt, he can write that off as well. The same would be true with a professional.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, could the Parliamentary Secretary tell us whether work in progress is classified under this proposed piece of legislation for tax purposes as inventory, or is it really more analogous to accounts receivable?

Mr. Fisher: I am sorry, could the Member repeat that?

Mr. Hawkes: The Parliamentary Secretary describes himself as a small-businessman. Earlier this day he suggested that this new tax Bill would classify work in progress as an inventory item. First, I am wondering whether he has read the legislation. Second, under this Bill as proposed and before us right now, is work in progress to be treated as accounts receivable or inventory?

Mr. Fisher: Inventory.

Mr. Hawkes: As I read the Bill, it is to be treated as a receivable. Inventory in a professional corporation is the cost of doing business. It may be wages paid out and so on. One is to treat this as an income item, not based on cost but cost plus profit. The Bill says that it is to be treated as an item for which one is putting in one's profit margins, and that is the rate at which one will bill.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, our officials assure us that we can deal with these things on a cost basis.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, in my next go-round I will find the pertinent Clause and bring it to the attention of the Minister.

I return to the original theme. Is it the Government's intention as these revisions are coming in to treat all taxpayers of all small businesses fairly or the same?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I would think that what we want all taxpayers to do is two-fold. We want them to be treated fairly and we want them to see themselves as being treated fairly. This is why those people who are currently in small businesses and cannot take advantage of a provision parallel to work in progress would like to know that the work in progress provisions are in the Act so that they do not have to foot the bill for the $40 million costs that were described earlier.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, what they are taxing here is income which has not been received. It is income for which bills have not even been sent out. The estimate of the Minister is that the revenue for the Government in the first year will be $40 million. If we assume that $40 million to be even 25 per cent, which I think is a high number, then we are dealing with $160 million worth of unbilled income of which they get $40 million. People have to use their own resources or go to the bank to borrow in order to pay their tax bill for money which has not yet come in. If they have to borrow the whole $40 million, there will be a $6 million borrowing cost at 15 per cent interest. It is an enormous amount of money sitting out there in the universe which has not been collected, has not been billed, and the Government is collecting revenue on it.

If the Government is minded to treat people the same and treat them fairly, will we get a change in tax policy as it relates to farmers? Farmers are small-business people who plant crops in the spring and harvest in the fall. At the point at which they harvest and put the crop in their granaries, is it the Government's intention to treat it as if it were already sold, that the income is already in their hands and therefore they tax it? Is that the direction in which the Government is heading, to the small-business farmers?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, first, I am happy to reassure the Hon. Member that there is no intention to change the provisions for farmers. Second, I would like to clear up two points which seem to be worrying him. I refer to Clause 3(2)(a) on page 6 which reads as follows:

—property (other than capital property) of a taxpayer that is work in progress of a business that is a profession, advertising or packaging material, parts or suppliers is, for greater certainty, inventory of the taxpayer;—

I hope that clears up that problem for him.

Also, he referred to $40 million coming in from this measure. May I correct any impression that I might have left. The $40 million figure is the one which we see ultimately. I believe that unincorporated businesses will have an opportunity to phase in rather than having to deal with the tax immediately. I think the first half of the income comes in in 1983 and then the full income comes in in 1984, so there is a phased-in procedure for professionals who are in unincorporated situations. The incorporated professional will deal with the whole load immediately.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I return to the Minister on this one. Grain farmers in western Canada today harvest their crop, put their grain in granaries, even deliver it to elevators, and defer the income to a subsequent tax year. In other words, they have a commodity which is clearly in inventory but is not taxable. They deliver it to elevators. They are eligible for cash, but they have a provision in the tax law which allows them to defer the income to a subsequent tax year. I give the Minister that situation and his own thrust of policy, which is to treat people fairly and equitably and more the same.

Why is he doing this with work in progress? Bills are not even sent out. The work is not completed. The analogy would be like charging a farmer half-way through the crop year for income which he clearly has not received because he has not yet harvested the crop, let alone delivered it to market. How can the Minister talk on the one hand about fairness, on the other hand tell us that they will not treat farmers differently and then go ahead with work in progress, on the logic they are giving us? Where is the logic and where is the fairness in the system? Is not the Minister really intending to treat farmers down the road as small-business people and to start charging them on income for products produced which have not yet been sold?

Mr. Fisher: As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, there were previously two groups which we treated in this fashion—professionals and farmers. Today it will be only farmers. I remind the Hon. Member of two rationales which we have already discussed. The first is that we are seeing increasing classifications of professionals as a result of some court rulings. Larger and larger numbers of people who were previously businessmen are now considered professionals.

I was told the story that someone called himself a professional because he was a consultant for weddings. Whereas previously that individual would have been treated as a straightforward businessman, now he wanted to take advantage of the work in progress provisions. There are more and more categories of people who are seeking to take advantage of this provision for professions. Second, many of these people, or the overwhelming number of the ones who are exempted, are able to take advantage of the small business tax rate.

Therefore, in answer to the Hon. Member I first want to say that there were two categories before, farmers and professionals. Now there is only the category of farmers, and we have no intention of making changes which would affect them. Second, there were larger and larger numbers of people seeking the advantages which had previously been limited to a small number of professions.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I guess, through experience, that we on this side of the House have learned to be very cautious about what the Government says on any given day.

Mr. Fisher: Thank you.

Mr. Hawkes: This is because the Government has a habit of saying one thing and doing another. If the Hon. Member wants to thank me for that comment, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Fisher: Sure.

Mr. Hawkes: He is ducking my question. Consider this example. A farmer plants a crop, it grows well, he harvests it and puts it in his granary. It is ready for market. We have a professional, an architect, who starts a building project. The end of the taxation year comes when he is three months into a nine-month project and the Government wants to tax him on his first three months of work. He cannot even send out a bill and he has no income. That seems to be analogous to a farmer with grain in his granary. It has not yet been sold, so he should not be taxed. I think that is fair. The Government should not tax people before they have received income.

However, why should there be this double standard? Again, I ask whether the Government is intending to set a precedent concerning professionals called "work in progress" and, at a later day, to start to tax all the farmers of the nation, the minute their crops are harvested and before they are sold? That is our suspicion and words are not enough. If the Government does this to one group and it works, and it sets a precedent, we are suspicious that it will happen again.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister has indicated that it is not the Government's intention to extend the provision so that it will affect farmers. The Hon. Member raised this as an example, in the context of drawing parallels. The Government has not raised this example. No officials of the Government have raised it. It is something concerning which the hon. gentleman, for reasons he has given, feels some anxiety. I would like to indicate that it is not being considered by the Government in so far as farmers are concerned. The question was raised in the context of treating taxpayers equitably, and of course this raises questions concerning whether people are treated the same.

The Parliamentary Secretary has indicated that considerations of equity motivated the Government to classify certain professions under this Section because, in equity, there were similar types of other small businesses, not farmers, which have become "professions" by legal definition. Some businesses which were not considered professions ten years ago are now being considered as such. When considering the issue of equity, the Government found, in comparing the tax treatment of small business, that some professions were able to take advantage of the small business rate under the Act as it now exists. Some were indeed able to take advantage of incorporation while others were not. For example, others are specifically prohibited from that type of legal protection and financial benefit by provincial statute.

Therefore, although equity does invite everyone to be treated equally, we know that that cannot be exactly the case in the real world. However, we do attempt, in equity, to give people somewhat the same advantage. For reasons I have given and for others given by the Parliamentary Secretary, the Clause was introduced so as to exclude work in progress. The Section would be amended to restrict its application to the named professions, for all the reasons submitted to the committee which moved it to exempt certain of those professions.

Mr. Hawkes: May I refer to page 6, Clause 3(4)(a). I will just read it into the record:

—work in progress at the end of the taxation year of a business that is a profession means the amount that can reasonably be expected to become receivable in respect thereof after the end of the year;—

I have a small business, an office coffee service. I buy my coffee for a certain amount of money from a wholesaler, I deliver it to a customer, and I give the customer a bill. That is a receivable. It includes my cost of purchasing the coffee, my delivery costs and hopefully some profit. That is the definition of a "receivable" in the normal business sense.

Earlier I asked the Parliamentary Secretary whether or not work in progress, in an accounting sense, would be judged, at a certain level, to be a receivable. If it is, and I think the clause makes it clear that it is, then the costs of doing the work, the overhead costs and profit, would be included.

When work is in progress, not only has one not sent out a bill, but one has not received the money either. However, through this Clause, the Government seeks to tax an inflated amount, more than one's expenses, presumed to include profit.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the Hon. Member for Calgary—

Mr. Hawkes: West.

Mr. Fisher: Calgary West. I extend my apologies for not knowing the name of the Hon. Member's riding. I can assure him that the professional will be required to value the work in progress in the same way as any other inventory, namely, at the lower of either its cost or its fair market value.

Mr. Hawkes: That is a refreshing set of words. Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell me where, in law, it is found that that will be the case? Where is the paragraph that states that, when Section 3(4)(a) states that work in progress means the amount "to become receivable in respect thereof after the end of the year"?

Mr. Fisher: I would refer the Hon. Member to the Income Tax Act, Part I, Section 10(1), with regard to evaluation of inventory property. I can read it for him if it is useful.

Mr. Hawkes: Please do.

Mr. Fisher: It states:

For the purpose of computing income from a business, the property described in an inventory should be valid at its cost to the taxpayer or its fair market value, whichever is lower, or in such other manner as may be permitted by regulation.

That is already in the Act.

Mr. Hawkes: Then may I ask the Minister why one part of the Bill, in relation to fair market value, states "expected to become receivable in respect thereof after the end of the year"? Why is that written in one place, with the taxpayers of the nation being forced to read another definition of inventory and then refer to a subsequent Section of the Bill? Why do we not have clarity? Can the Parliamentary Secretary really assure us that every one of those revenue agents from coast to coast who work for the civil service will read the Bill so thoroughly that every single one of those human beings will make the same decision in each individual tax case? Or will some read paragraph 4(a) and say: "You have not done it right", while other people read Section 10, which the Parliamentary Secretary has cited?

The Deputy Chairman: This will be the final answer. The twenty minutes allotted to the Hon. Member for Calgary West has expired.

Mr. Fisher: Section 10(4) defines fair market value for professionals, and it must therefore be included here because of the new additions elsewhere.

• (1530)

The Hon. Member has an interesting question about the complexity of the law as well, which I think is a very fair question. I would refer him to some of the discussions that we had in the Finance Committee about that. There are obviously two sides to that coin. He has raised one, very clearly, and I think properly. The other side of the coin is that those peole who are taking advantage of the complexities will tend to know the complexities. They may not be able to quote chapter and verse about each part of the law but they will know the provisions that apply to their own circumstances.

However, having said that, I certainly do not downplay the Hon. Member's concern about the complexity, but I think it is equally fair to say that peole tend to find out about the things that affect their own lives.

Furthermore, I would certainly think that the Revenue Canada officials would tend, if not to know the Act at first blush, they would certainly be able to take advantage of a document entitled "Explanatory Notes to a Bill Amending the Income Tax Act"—

Mr. Blenkarn: You know better than that.

Mr. Fisher: —and those explanatory notes will certainly be accessible to all the Revenue Canada people and will be learned by them.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Chairman, I just have one brief question—

The Deputy Chairman: Order please. May I explain to the Hon. Member for Calgary West that as soon as another Member has spoken or there has been an intervention, then, under the Standing Orders the Hon. Member for Calgary West can be recognized again, but at the moment his time has expired.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Chairman, I just have one brief question, if the Member for Calgary West wants to come back to his line of questioning, and that has to do with the exemptions that are made for some named professionals set out in the Bill. I was wondering, what was the methodology that was set up. Why were certain specific professionals exempted from the work in progress rule and others did not qualify for the exemption?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I would refer the Hon. Member again to the debates of the Finance Committee. There were some very clear representations made along this line at their sittings since September. At that time we were able to draw out two important facts: first, that some professionals, like lawyers, were not going to make substantial contributions to Government revenue over a period of time, that it would be a one-time revenue, but that that one-time revenue would be extracted from them at great cost. It was not a practical tax to apply to them. I must say that I was a convert to that point of view. I believed in the concept of work in progress for lawyers. I felt that lawyers should pay tax on their work in progress, but as a result of the representations made to me in the Finance Committee I changed my mind.

The problems are multifold. First of all, a lawyer with a small clientele often does not have access to sophisticated billing techniques, which would require the use of computers or a large staff and so on, and every year he would have to go through all his files to determine which ones had been fully billed and which ones only partially billed, and go through a lot of paperwork and a lot of red tape just to go through that reporting. To what end? In effect, so that the Government would collect its tax on a one-time basis. But at the same time all that expense and unproductive activity would have to be charged against someone, and that someone of course would be the lawyer's client. So sooner or later it would just be passed right down the line, in a very unproductive way.

On the other hand, there are groups of professionals who are relatively new professionals, either because their field is a brand new field or because they have been able to get that status as a result of court rulings. We found that these people were not going to go through that kind of unproductive behaviour. In the case of people who previously had small businesses, who wanted to become professionals because they could take advantage of work in progress, they had the accounting systems in place and they knew what was in place for a small business, previously. In addition, those people also benefited from the small business tax provisions. They were able to take advantage of the lower rates for small businesses. But lawyers and these other exempted professionals were not able to take advantage of those rates because, as the Minister pointed out, they are excluded from incorporation in various Provinces.

I guess the answer is twofold. One, it was not a productive thing to push it down the line with some professionals who are well established, whose collection techniques are vague, and who have not demonstrated a lot of tax avoidance. Second, there are groups of professionals who had other tax advantages, and also had the capacity to pay the tax without going through a lot of unproductive behaviour.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his examples but I am still looking for some kind of a methodology, if there is a methodology, in fact, in place. It seems to me that what you have told me is that this happened on a very ad hoc basis. If some professionals came before the Finance Committee and put forth their position quite strongly to the Committee, then they were exempted. I do not know that all professionals who will be affected by this will in fact be exempted, if they warrant some kind of an exemption. I think you can run into all kinds of problems with Bill C-139 unless there is some kind of set methodology there, not naming just professions but the methodology that exempts those certain groups from the provisions of work in progress rule.

What I am asking for is not for examples on an ad hoc basis but rather for the methodology whereby other professions can be deemed exempt from this provision.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the dividing line was the current law, those people who are now listed in the law as people not eligible for the small business tax. That was the basis on which we were able to draw the line.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Chairman, just for clarification, is the Hon. Member saying that if they are not eligible for the small business tax then they become exempt under this?

Mr. Fisher: That is the answer, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the comments made by the Minister who, in dealing with this proposed amendment as it affects the inclusion in income tax provisions of certain professionals, although not others, of an amount representing their work in progress of professionals. I was particularly intrigued by the remarks that he made with respect to fairness and equity, and I recall the same buzzwords being employed by the former Minister when he originally introduced the budget, giving rise to these inequitable provisions.

He also indicated, in talking about the Minister today, that what we were endeavouring to do in the House was to include income from whatever source. That of course leaves undecided the issue of what income is. What we should do in approaching this matter is not to adopt the position of the NDP, which has been to ask why certain professions are excluded from this change in the law, but rather to ask why the law is being changed.

Let us analyse what in fact is happening. We know that the concept of income tax is rooted in the belief that the Government is entitled to a portion of the income of taxpayers, be they individuals or corporations. It was not unreasonable, when this plan for taxing income was first conceived, that a portion of one's actual receipts in cash in the bank be allocated to Her Majesty in right of Canada, as represented by the Minister of National Revenue. It was not a very difficult task because the money was actually there. The Government decided that rather than wait until the cash is in the bank, it preferred to have its piece of the action before the cash was received. The method for extracting the pre-receipt tax was concocted and supported by the accrual method of taxation, the accrual of determining income, the basis thereby reflecting in the inclusion in income an account which had been rendered or in some cases an account that should have been rendered.

We have taken this matter a step further with this proposal. We have endeavoured to deal with professionals who, together with farmers, had been treated somewhat differently from the general small business community to which the Parliamentary Secretary earlier made reference, identifying himself as one of those Members.

It is true that the small business community has been obliged to calculate its income not only on the accrual method which applies to professionals, but by including in the determination of income a valuation for inventory. In determining inventory, it was necessary to affix a value to that inventory. It was fixed at the lower of cost or market.

In most cases applicable to the non-professional small business, however, that inventory generally consisted of something which was tangible and saleable, not all the time but most of the time. If it was not tangible and saleable as the stock in trade of that business, it was an item which could readily be disposed of as part of the stock in trade of another business. Accordingly, it was appropriate to value that inventory including the work in progress. Let me give a simple illustration. A small manufacturing firm which qualified for the small business deduction to which the Parliamentary Secretary referred fabricated metal shields of some kind. Those metal shields may have been partially completed at the end of the fiscal period. A determination would be made of the value of those partially completed goods. That was part of the value of the inventory of the small business. That inventory, because of the accounting method that was adopted, was used for the purpose of determining the actual income as of that moment, which is the end of the fiscal period of the business.

However, when you pass on to deal with the position of professionals, there is no corresponding item of trade goods that can be readily sold and valued at the lower of either cost or market value. If I may, I should like to give an illustration of a professional who is in fact not excluded by the provisions to which reference has been made and, accordingly, subject to this onerous provision. An engineer may practise on his own. An architect may draw plans in his home in the evenings and then put them away. As many architects find, some of those plans are not subject to further use. However, time and effort has been spent on the drawings. The drawings consist of paper and pencil markings on them. They may have a total value of $10. There may have been 100 hours of his time spent which could conceivably have a value of $3,000 if they are sold. Architects generally extract the majority of their fees at the end of a project when they are given a supervision contract, which includes not only the preparation of the drawings but supervision of the project.

How much are those drawings worth at the end of the fiscal period of the architect who has received no commission? The Government will say nothing, and that it is a matter for valuation.

The whole process is ludicrous and should be scrapped. The Government has attempted to transpose fixed stock in trade inventories of a regular business and the concepts of inventory values arising therefrom to the area of the professional. I tell you this, Mr. Chairman, the whole process will be for naught. There is not one professional excluded from the protection that is granted by way of exemption under this Bill who will not make a determination of those values which he in his own mind, and he is the best judge of it, determines to be the very lowest price at which they can be fixed. The illustration I gave about the $10 value of a $3,010 item is the one that will constantly confront the Department of National Revenue in enforcing the provisions of this Act.

We have been told that $40 million is to be generated in revenues as a consequence of these provisions. Because of the way in which income, which would have been taxed had it been billed, will now be taxed before it is billed, when the work is done as work in progress as part of an inventory, that income will not be taxed again when the bills go out because the inventory will have been reduced. In other words, we are looking at a one-shot opportunity that will confront every professional in this country with an obligation to keep and maintain ludicrous forms that have absolutely nothing to do with the conduct of his business. The whole process is designed to accomplish one thing, that is, raise $40 million. If the Department of National Revenue and the Minister of Finance would like to make an offer to the professions in Canada to make them a donation of $40 million in order to avoid compliance with this ridiculous provision, they would get the money. There is no other reason why the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Finance want these provisions in this Bill other than to extract taxes before they should. I would like the Minister of State for Finance to comment very briefly on the remarks which I have made.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member did not really go to the basis and ask the germane question: Why the Section in the first place? Never mind the Subsections and explanations and distinctions between professions and the like, but why the Section in the first place? He asked that question in the context of a very difficult issue of equity. This amendment to the Income Tax Act is some 295 pages and contains over 100 clauses. It is difficult for the amendments to bring equity to the treatment of all people in all circumstances in a parallel if not identical way. It was out of consideration for equity that the Clause 3 was introduced. Prior to the introduction of the amendment, in computing income from a professional business, taxpayers were permitted to elect, under Section 34 of the Act, to exclude work in progress. The problem is that it only affected certain taxpayers and certain types of business. Under another Section of the Act they had already been given an advantage, preference or some assistance through the tax system in the operation of their business. Permitting them to take, so to speak, a second bite of the apple, that is what is unfair. It is inequitable. It is inequitable having people in somewhat the same circumstances in their business operations, some being given the advantage of our tax system, the preferred small business rate and, in addition to that, permitting them to deduct, before realizing income, the cost of work in progress. That is why, for example, we moved to identify those who fell into that category and to exclude them from the introduction of Clause 3, which was an attempt to achieve equity, that is, in a sense, to give some preferential treatment to small business in somewhat the same fashion.

The Hon. Member uses the example of architects, but I believe he answered his own question because he was able to make reference to Section 10 and he was able to refer to the definition of the value of work in progress as being the lesser of the fair market value, and in those circumstances it is quite conceivable that the cost of the preparation of those plans would be a write-off. Therefore, the architect would not be caught by the Section in any event.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, what I have said was that people would manipulate the provisions in the Act. The great trouble with the Income Tax Act very clearly, if the Minister would just put his ear to the ground and open his eyes, is that it has become not only so complex, but so unreasonable in its rigours that people are taking justice into their own hands. There is an underground economy which has developed in this country, and if the Minister would like to consult the Deputy Minister of National Revenue, he will find that studies have been made by the Department of National Revenue of just how much revenue is lost. Revenue is lost because people cheat. People cheat because they are being robbed. It is this kind of madness which just induces people to take steps which are completely unwarranted and which will create a cycle in this country which will undermine the general tendency of Canadians to be honest and to assess themselves in the fashion which the Income Tax Act demands.

We are dealing with a monstrous Act, amended in a monstrous way, to extract more revenue from the taxpayers of Canada. I wonder how far the Minister proposes to push the taxpayers of Canada before that underground economy, which is created as a result of that manœuvre, will exceed the aboveboard recorded economy of Canadians? What we are talking about is a process which absolutely rejects reason. I dealt with the circumstances as they affect a small businessman who produces saleable stock in trade. There is no saleable stock in trade in the normal professions which are so identified, and we know the Minister has had no hesitation at all in going through a number of professions and exempting them. Why does the Minister not go through all the genuine professions, instead of the profession referred to by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance when he talked about wedding counsellors? Let him deal with the real professions. Let him deal with the determination of whether that work in progress consists of ideas on paper which are worthless to anyone but the person who put them there. Those are the real facts. But the trouble to which he is putting the taxpaying public, in particular the taxpaying public we are concerned with here, the professionals of Canada, is not warranted. It is a permanent, not temporary obligation imposed upon them for the purpose of giving to the Department of National Revenue a single one-time—I am sorry, not one-time because they programmed it over a couple of years—general tax burden. Is that in fact fair, equitable and is it reasonable, which is surely the question to which the Government must direct its attention?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, there was considerable debate in committee on, I believe, the two points raised by the Hon. Member. I am told that the consensus of the private accountants, that is, those people who made submissions to the Committee on Finance, was one that did not coincide with the opinion of the Hon. Member in so far as the underground economy was concerned. All I can do is to report that to the Hon. Member. This was a committee consisting of Hon. Members on both sides of the House which asked for input from the profession as to what they thought of the points raised by the Hon. Member. Obviously there are some people who will try to avoid paying tax, some people who will try to evade paying tax, and some people who will be outright dishonest. I suppose, in the final analysis, there are some people who will commit an immoral or criminal act in so far as Government regulations are concerned. But the consensus of opinion is not that which was expressed by the Hon. Member, that the underground economy is of the proportions of which the Hon. Member has tried to convince Hon. Members here this afternoon.

I thought I had answered the question of how you value ideas, or how ideas, transcribed on paper as in the case of architects, could be dealt with by the profession, and that is by valuation under Section 10. The architect is the best person qualified to put a value on that, and his valuation is one which will be, I submit, taken into account by the Revenue authorities.

The Hon. Member asks if this Section is reasonable. I argue that it is reasonable and it is equitable. As to the revenues which are generated, which the Hon. Member talked about, the $40 million, the Hon. Member might go back to my rationale as explained at the beginning, that is, that some small-businessmen have an advantage over other small-businessmen, and it is backing up to the extent of $40 million. If we permitted the same kind of advantage or parallel advantage to be granted to small-businessmen, and used that as an equitable basis, the general revenue fund of the Government of Canada would be increased by some $40 million. The Expenditures of the Government with its programs and the cost of providing services, are thereby enhanced by that $40 million on all counts. I believe it is reasonable, and it is just. The accountants who have made submissions have indicated that neither these amendments to the Act, nor the Act, are "on tilt" to the extent of which the Hon. Member has urged this afternoon.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the Minister will know, if he takes a look at the record of that committee and reads the testimony of Donald Huggett from Coopers & Lybrand, that a great discussion took place with respect to the underground economy, the extent to which the complications of the Act were increasing the size of the underground economy. In answer to my colleague, the Hon. Member for York North, the Minister referred to Section 10 and said something about the lower of either cost or market value. Does he not realize that the amendment which he is proposing in Clause 6(3) of this Bill amends Section 10(4) of the Act by making Clause 10(4) with respect to work in progress mean the amount which can be reasonably expected to become a receivable thereof after the end of the year? In other words, rather than being the lower of cost or market value of the work, it is the value that is intended to be received. That is what the complaint is all about. Rather than treating professionals like the manufacturer who has half completed his work, there being no value attached to what he has done, what you have done is to treat a professional on the basis of what he may well be able to build when his work is completed. In other words, if he has done three-quarters of the work, he must bring three-quarters of the value of his bill into income. This does not make any sense in a profession because three-quarters of the value is determined after the work is totally done. It cannot be determined what the value of the work is when it is only three-quarters done. What you have is a nothing becoming a something. The something is only a something when it is completed. That is why professionals should not be charged for their work in progress. They have no asset that can be determined to be the lower of cost or market value. Thefore, it has no market value. That is the very reason this crazy amendment, this expropriatory amendment is put into the Act. Will the Minister please withdraw that amendment? It makes no sense. It is totally unfair, and that is the reason for the complaint.

• (1600)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I do not know how appropriate it is, but I would like to congratulate you on the terrific job you are doing. You look marvellous in your new role. I now see the regular Chairman reappearing. He does not want you to continue because you may take over his job permanently.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South is an acute analyst of the Income Tax Act. We had many differences of opinion in the committee hearings. Perhaps this question best clarifies the difference between us. I would like to point out that, as with inventory, a professional will pay the lowest cost.

Mr. Blenkarn: No, Sir. Not according to this.

Mr. Fisher: He will have to pay the lowest cost. There are times when a professional will not be able to bill for the full amount of his effort. He may discover that he has put too much time into the project and cannot bill for a full effort. Therefore, he will go out with a value on his item at its cost, for tax purposes, rather than cost plus profit. Or he might be a professional who is out of his depth. Perhaps when I start practising law everything will not be a profitable situation. Maybe people will not be willing to pay me for my advice.

Mr. Young: Don't do it. You will wreck the profession.

Mr. Anguish: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Rather than compliment me on my understanding of the Act, would the Parliamentary Secretary read Subclause 4? He will note that work in progress is specifically differentiated from the cost of advertising and packaging material. Advertising and packaging materials are dealt with in Subclause (b). In Subclause (a) work in progress is defined differently. The other says, " ... other than work in progress". Will the Parliamentary Secretary read the section and see that what he has been saying does not make sense at all?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South is quite correct, I should stop complimenting him, although I find it tempting.

The Section I read before, Section 10(1) defines very clearly the fact that we take either the lower of costs or fair market value.

Mr. Blenkarn: Read the Bill.

Mr. Fisher: And then the Bill defines fair market value in the circumstance of professions. The previous Clause that I read gives you the general context, as I understand it. The professional, for some reason, who has found that the fair market value of his project is now lower than the cost would have to give that figure, but in other circumstances—let us hope it is all circumstances for all professionals—if they find the cost is lower than the fair market value, that is the amount they would use.

What I read to the Hon. Member previously which is already in the Act, sets out the general rule. This sets out the definition of fair market value for a particular professional.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, fair market value is exactly what we are talking about with respect to professions as now set out in the new Clause 10(4) and the specific definition of work in progress has nothing to do with cost at all. It is what can reasonably be expected to become a receivable.

Mr. Fisher: Lower than the cost.

Mr. Blenkarn: No. It is what can be reasonably expected to become a receivable. Sure it could be lower than the cost. And it could be very very much more than the cost.

Mr. Fisher: In which case it would not be used.

Mr. Blenkarn: In other words, there is no cost value to it. What the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister and his friends from the Department of Finance do not understand is that a professional is essentially selling ideas. He is not selling anything you can take hold of and walk to the grocery store with. It is ideas. It is doing something entirely different from performing a physical thing that you can actually put down and take away with you. You may say that you can take away the plans of an architect, but incomplete plans are nothing. They are waste paper. That is what they are. When you are talking about waste paper, and that is what this is, what is the cost? It may be the cost of the paper, it may be less than the cost of the paper. You can say it is worth nothing. In order to solve that, you decide to define work in progress as what can reasonably be expected to become a receivable.

To determine reasonableness you have to do it always after the event. It is always after the event, when you look back on the professional's return, that you say "Yes, but you were working on Mr. Smith's new home in November, 1982 and, therefore, when you bill Mr. Smith in February, 1983, you probably had half the work done by that time and you should have included that half in your 1982 return", but if you look at the situation at December 31 of 1982, you find the architect at that point had half a building designed. Now the design of half a building is not worth a tinker's damn. If the architect had died at that time and gone to heaven or gone to hell, he would not have got anything, not a thing. What you are saying four or six months after the event is, we will come back and look at the bill and say, "Yes, you got $2,000 for that work. Obviously, you had over half the work done prior to the year-end and obviously you should include half of what you eventually charged in your income for the year". That is what is wrong with what the Government is doing. I do not understand why the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary cannot see that. Do they not realize for one moment that the work of a professional has absolutely no value, or very little value, until it is actually completed?

Mr. Fisher: I would like to go through the Act as I understand it and list the steps so the Hon. Member for Mississauga south can understand why I keep referring back to one simple principle.

Clause 10(5)(a) says work in progress is inventory. Section 10(1) of the current Act says that the value of inventory is either at the lesser of cost or at fair market value. It is not some speculative thing or some process that is worked backwards in time. If the professional finds, for example, that his fair market value is lower than the costs he has incurred, then he uses the fair market value. We heard the Hon. Member for York North give examples about $10 worth of paper versus a $3,000 fair market value. In that cause the $10 is written off. That is the amount that is involved in the cancellation.

• (1610)

If the Hon. Member would find it useful, I would be happy to read those references to the Act again.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate it if the Parliamentary Secretary would read Subsection 10(4) of the Act as it stands at the moment and tell me where there is any reference to work in progress in it.

Mr. Fisher: There is not.

Mr. Blenkarn: The fact is that the whole of Subsection 10 makes no reference to the work in progress of a professional. This amendment brings the work in progress of professionals into the Act, however.

Mr. Fisher: Right.

Mr. Blenkarn: And how the value of that work in progress is defined, is contained in the amendment. The amendment has nothing do to with the cost or with the fair market value. The value is to be determined on what can reasonably be expected to be billed. That is what can reasonably be expected to become receivable.

Would the Parliamentary Secretary please answer the question instead of giving us the bafflegab of what is in Section 10 of the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I think that the Hon. Member has difficulty with the difference between the Act and the amendment. At the moment we have before us an Act and an amendment. When they are passed, they will be blended into one document and we will have three Sections in the law that work together; Section 10(5)(a) that says that work in progress is inventory, that is the first step; Section 10(1) in the current one which says that the value of inventory will be the lesser of either the cost or the fair market value, and finally, Section 10(4) which will define fair market value for work in progress for professionals.

We are asking the Hon. Member to see all of these in one package. We want him to realize that fair market value, is defined in Section 10(4), and will then be utilized against cost in Section 10(1) to come up with the lower of the two amounts. When we have the lower of the two amounts, we have the value of the work in progress.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, if the Parliamentary Secretary had any knowledge of law he would realize that when you refer in the specific to the value of work in progress for a professional, the general categorization of work in progress, which would be applicable to manufacturers, retailers or processors, would apply, according to his argument, in Section 10(1). When you get to the specific—and the specific is clearly defined in Section 10(4)(a) to mean what work in progress is and its value—then there is no question of how it is determined. It is determined by what can reasonably be expected to become a receivable. That is what the inventory value is. That is where the problem lies. Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary not understand that?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Hon. Member for his representation. Our officials will look at this again to see if his concern is justified. I think we are looking at the same thing and seeing two different images. I am assured by the officials that the definitions he has referred to set the fair market value, and then that is put into the equation and balanced against cost, in order to determine which of the two is lower.

As I say, we understand what he is talking about. It is on the record and we will look into it and see whether there is agreement. I suspect, however, that he may be seeing a one-way street where we intend it to be a two-way street. He sees it as an irrevocable definition, that once a professional has a project, it has an invoice value and, therefore, that must be the value that the professional uses. We do not agree with that. We say that when he reaches that value he is on a two-way street. He compares it with the cost. Between the two, he determines whichever is the lower for tax purposes. Some day he will make a profit on top of the cost and then that will be taxed, in addition to the cost. Like all businesses, in the meantime that cost is taxed at the end of his year and becomes a credit for him on the first day of the next year. He continues with that credit in the same way as any other business.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for undertaking to review Clause 3. His understanding is more or less the understanding we had in committee. If he will recall the committee evidence, at that time the Minister was talking about the value of work in progress at the actual cost to the professional. In other words, he was saying, with respect to a lawyer, that we would charge the cost of a junior lawyer, the actual out-of-pocket expenses. On that basis I can understand him.

What I am pointing out to him is that this particular Clause does not achieve that. It takes the hard-nosed position that taxes the work in progress and determines an inventory value for that work in progress on the basis of what might reasonably be expected to become a receivable. That can only be determined at the end of the event.

That being the case, if the Government would like to stand Clause 3 and Clause 16 temporarily and move on, we would accept that. I should like to know what the Government would like to do in that regard.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, in the exchange between the Parliamentary Secretary and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, each Member expressed a point of view which is a different interpretation of the Act. I have attempted to follow the exchange, and that is what has happened.

The officials have confirmed to me that the explanation given by the Parliamentary Secretary is the intention of the Government, it is the intention of the Section, and it is the way in which the Act has been interpreted in the past. They are confident that that is the way a court would interpret it as well.

I have to say, with the greatest respect to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, that the officials have concluded that his interpretation of the definition of market value—the exposition being the difference between a one-way street and a two-way street—is faulty. Certainly the officials and I are not of different opinions, but obviously there will continue to be a difference of opinion between the Hon. Member for Mississauga South and the Parliamentary Secretary.

• (1620)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring two or three concrete illustrations to the attention of the Minister to see if we can resolve them and understand the Minister's interpretation. Let us assume that I am a professional person and that I sign a three-year retainer. The retainer is one where you purchase my services on a first-call basis, and the amount of money you will give me for that is $90,000. When I do the work, I get $600 per day. Now, at what point does the $90,000 come into income, and how do we deal with this for inventory of work in progress? I start with a signed contract for a three-year retainer for work worth $90,000.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, on a technical basis I know what the Hon. Member is talking about because I have worked under these kinds of contracts. I am sure he would agree that in his experience there is usually a minimum number of days committed per annum. Is he talking about that kind of situation? What are we talking about? Is it a three-year contract which has an ultimate $90,000 value that he collects at the end of three years, whether or not he puts in any time? Is he talking about a minimum number of days per annum, or does he have some more open-ended idea in mind? I am just curious. I would like to know his view on this.

Mr. Hawkes: I would like to keep it clear. I get $90,000 at the end of the three years because you have had first call on my services. For every day that I work I get a per diem fee, let us say $600 per day. Even if I do not work a day for you, I still get the $90,000 at the end of three years. How do I treat that situation for tax purposes over that three-year period?

Mr. Fisher: Again, Mr. Chairman, just as a matter of clarification, is the Hon. Member dividing his contract into three one-year periods, for example, where he bills $30,000 every year, or does he simply hope that he does not put in a single day and at the end of the three years he collects $90,000?

Mr. Hawkes: I thought I was clear. I get $90,000 at the end of the three years because I have performed and given you first call on my services. That is the work I did.

Mr. Fisher: As I understand it, he would be considered to have $30,000 per annum income, so he would be including $30,000 worth of work in progress every year. I am sorry, just a moment. He would be deemed to have received $30,000 income per year for three years, not work in progress. It is not work in progress; it is income.

Mr. Hawkes: It is not work in progress; it is income. I did not get any money.

Mr. Darling: You did not do anything.

Mr. Hawkes: I did not do anything, and I have $30,000 worth of income on which I have to pay taxes.

Mr. Fisher: I can answer this for you if you will just hang on for a second.

Mr. Hawkes: I want some of these answers before we finish with this Clause. Why is that not inventory or work in progress? Why is that deemed to be income all of a sudden when I did not receive a penny?

Mr. Fisher: As I understand it, although I would have a question for our officials which I would like to explore further, they indicate to me that at the end of the year each year the time is deemed to have passed and the Hon. Member has collected his income of $30,000. I would wonder what would happen if he did $90,000 worth of work in the last two years in terms of time and therefore has $90,000 worth of billable time in the last two years. I wonder how that would affect his tax position.

The Hon. Member has asked a very complicated specific question which reflects not on work in progress but on the current legislation. This is why we are having some difficulty. He has asked a very complicated specific question, and we want to give him an accurate example because we know that millions of people are hanging on this answer. At the same time we would like to point out to him that we view this not as work in progress but as income, and therefore something which would probably fall under existing provisions of the law.

Mr. Hawkes: Let me give the Parliamentary Secretary another example. You have a small business and you contract with me to do some work on your behalf over a three-year period of time, and there is no guaranteed amount involved. I do five hours' worth of business for you this year as part of something which will take me ten hours, but I do not do the other five hours until two years down the road and I cannot bill you until the job is done. In that circumstance, the work in progress provision says that I have to take in the inventory the first five hours. I keep it in inventory and pay tax on it until I do the last five hours two years down the road. How can you do that to me and treat the guy with the retainer contract as having received income?

Mr. Fisher: If the Hon. Member recollects some of the discussions that we had earlier with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, a good deal of the difficulties surrounding the question of work in progress is not around liability of income but around writing off costs. The individual the Hon. Member has cited does not have costs which are being written off; he has straightforward income. Then, on the five-hour example which he just cited, I understand that he can just save that up until the end, the costs of it, and apply the whole thing at the end.

Mr. Hawkes: Let us be even more specific about work in progress. Somebody works for me and I bill their services out at $40 per hour, but I only pay them $20. They do the work this year but I have not billed anybody for it because it is part of a larger project. What is this whole thing about, if I do not have to put something into inventory? What am I putting into inventory? Is it those five hours at $20 or those 5 hours at $40, which is the amount I will eventually bill? What goes into inventory?

Mr. Fisher: As I understand the example I have just been given it is $20 per hour that you are paying out, times five hours, which is $100. You would not write that off as costs until you had income. It is just the same as the example with physical inventory.

Mr. Hawkes: You have quoted those three paragraphs and you have told me that I have a choice of fair market value or cost, whichever is lower.

Mr. Fisher: All right.

Mr. Hawkes: Now, help me decide what cost is. I have somebody working for me. I pay them $20 per hour. They do five hours' worth of work on a project for which I have not billed. When I bill, I will bill at the rate of $40 per hour. Now, what is cost?

Mr. Fisher: As I understand it, this was the entire discussion we had with the Hon. Member with Mississauga South, so I thank the Hon. Member for Calgary West for his specific example. The fair market value is $200. The cost of getting that fair market value is $100. Therefore, the cost of the inventory is $100.

• (1630)

I would like to follow through with specific references so that the Hon. Member may have them. I would refer him to Section 10(5)(a) which states that work in progress is inventory. That is what we are discussing now. Second, Section 10(1) states that we should take either the lesser of the cost or the fair market value, and the definition of the fair market value is provided in Section 10(4). Therefore, Section 10(4) tells us that the fair market value of the Hon. Member's example is $200. Section 10(1) states that the lower of those two is the cost, at $100. Therefore, according to Section 10(5)(a), work in progress is treated as $100.

Mr. Hawkes: Thank you.

Mr. Fisher: You are welcome.

Mr. Hawkes: I would like to return to the subject of my retainer. Why can I not have the right of choice between fair market value and cost? I am a professional. I sign a retainer. This paragraph refers to fair market value, and another refers to cost. If I can take it into inventory, I should be able to take it into inventory as zero, because I did not pay the $20 an hour. I did not pay anything.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, that is a fascinating example and I congratulate the Hon. Member for it. However, he does not have any costs involved in the kind of hypothetical retainer which he has described. By the way, I would like to know, looking ahead to the days when I am retired, how I can receive $90,000 for doing nothing over three years. I look forward to any suggestions that my colleagues can give to me.

Mr. Crouse: See the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fisher: However, I can tell him that until he has incurred costs and he has write-offs and so on, he is not in the work in progress category. He has a retainer, which is a contract, and he earns it as income which comes under the existing law, not under work in progress.

Mr. Hawkes: Let me give the Parliamentary Secretary another example. Professionals are working on the Olympic Stadium in Calgary, a new arena which will host the 1988 Winter Olympics. It is probable that for their services, they will receive a bonus upon completion of their work, if they bring it in under cost or in a hurry. There are several ways in which bonus contracts are written. However, let us assume there is a $100,000 bonus for those people in 1987 if they have done a good job as architects. How will that work in progress be treated?

Mr. Fisher: Not as I understand it. I am learning a great deal about what goes on in Calgary. It sounds like the land of milk and honey to me that people are able to arrange these deals. I congratulate them for their comfortable arrangements.

As I understand it, such bonuses are contingent and they will not be taken into account until they are earned, because it is quite possible that they would not be earned and that such individuals would not make their bonuses, for whatever reason, whether their contracts were filled or not filled, or whether it was not possible to pay the bonuses which were promised. Therefore, it is contingent. One waits until the payment is made and then one deals with it accordingly.

Mr. Hawkes: Now we are getting to the nub of the objection. Professionals generally do not get paid until the task is completed. If they fail to complete, they receive nothing.

Mr. Fisher: They get write-offs, though.

Mr. Hawkes: Why is there a tax Bill which treats them as though they have earned income when they have not earned any income? How does a contingency contract differ from a normal contract concerning professional people who do not get paid until they have done the job?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is quite right, but professionals have costs. While they have the potential of earning such income, they also incur costs, and that is part of what we are discussing here. If people are to have write-offs, then they must be treated in the appropriate fashion. For instance, it is not always possible, in my business, to make a sale which we anticipated. The only difference is that we are dealing with physical property, in my case, which might end up as being unsaleable, or professional services. In someone else's case, this might also be true, with their services or goods being unsaleable. However, each case is treated in the same manner.

Mr. Hawkes: Let us examine that logic. I have a small business and incur costs involved in purchasing gasoline to run a car, costs of buying my coffee, and other costs. After I sell my coffee, I must pay bills. I can see all kinds of legitimate costs. A professional person incurs direct costs, perhaps such as advertising, or time costs involved in travelling to different places.

I invest my time in the development of my business, and also dollars. In the coffee business, those are legitimate costs. Concerning a professional, are those legitimate costs, or are those legitimate investments in inventory? I suggest that the Government is attempting to make them investments in inventory.

Mr. Fisher: As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, direct costs are the factors that we are considering here, not the individual's time, which is profit, in effect, on the arrangement, in the same way as the Hon. Member for Edmonton West, a little earlier, described a businessman's time as being his profit from his efforts.

Mr. Hawkes: Then, if I am in business for myself and have completed five hours of work, but the Government is forcing me to do the work in progress and put it into inventory, is the Parliamentary Secretary telling me that all I must declare is costs of heat, light, rent, water and transportation, and that I do not have to put my time into that inventory? Is this the tax department's interpretation?

Mr. Fisher: Again, I remind the Hon. Member that it is only the direct costs of the job. Our officials have indicated that if one is a sole proprietor and one has overhead costs, then those costs are not included here. They can be used in other ways in one's business operations. It concerns the direct costs of the project itself, the direct wages of business employees, the costs involved in the development of the project.

The Hon. Member indicates that he is concerned, for instance, about the costs of the proprietor, the professional or whoever. I remind him again that it is the profit in the situation, not part of the work in progress.

Mr. Hawkes: We know of a professional person who has been the subject of much discussion in the House. His name is Alastair Gillespie. On October 29 he signed a consortium agreement with several firms. It provided a retainer of $30,000 a year, $600 per diem, plus expenses. There were also provisions in that agreement for buy-outs. If he wanted to be bought out he would receive $250,000, and if his partners wanted him out he would receive $750,000.

If he is acting as a professional person, providing services to that consortium, explain to me the income situation relative to work in progress. What does he take into inventory? What does he pay tax on, and at what point?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I do not have enough information on the situation posed by the Hon. Member as a specific case, but rather, I suppose, as a hypothetical case. For example, I do not know whether Mr. Gillespie, in that situation, is the shareholder, the stockholder or a partner. We just do not have those kinds of facts. Mind you, I suppose we have had much time in which to look at the situation, inasmuch as the project and its details were announced in concert with the announcement made by the Premier of Nova Scotia some two years ago. I suppose that if we had been concerned about it, those details could have been made available to us today. However, I think it would be inappropriate for the Minister to respond to a question which becomes less of a hypothetical question and more of a specific example. If one substitutes the name of Mr. Gillespie for any other Canadian's name, then what the Hon. Member, in effect, is inviting officials and the Minister to do is to give free legal and tax advice on a specific case this afternoon, and we obviously cannot do that.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to make one point of clarification. When the Minister was responding to the effects of Clause 3, he stated that this in no way applied to farmers and that the Government had no intention of applying it to farmers in the future. Now I am assuming that there are some cases, and if my assumption is wrong I hope that the Minister will be advised and will in turn let me know, where farmers and farming operations could be considered eligible for the small business tax. If they are eligible for the small business tax in some circumstances then, from what the Parliamentary Secretary has told me, they could quite well be included in the work in progress provision. The key here is whether or not farmers or farming operations are eligible for the small business tax. Could he provide me with that information?

• (1640)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member was asking us earlier how we drew the distinction between one set of professionals and the other, and I appreciated his question because it allowed us to say very clearly that the small business tax was in fact the device that we use to draw that line, and that these people who were exempted were people who had previously been named in the Act.

Now he has carried that question one step further. As I understand it, farmers are a completely separate category from professionals in the Act. They are cash-basis taxpayers who are entitled to a small business rate, but they are treated separately in the Act from professionals. They are not included in the same category, I am told.

Mr. Anguish: So the minister can give us his assurance then that when this Clause and the provisions of C-139 have been passed, if we assume that they are going to pass at some point in time, Revenue Canada will not bring in regulations to include farmers under the provisions of the work in progress, and they cannot do that under the present regulation, either.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I can confirm my earlier answer to the hon. gentleman. The answer is, yes, Revenue Canada would not do that. It is not the intention of the Government; it is not in the legislation; the Income Tax Act has dealt with farmers in a separate category, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister has indicated. Yes, we are hopeful that the Bill will pass and, of course, the sooner the better because there are some 11 million taxpayers, families, who would benefit by refunds upon passage of this Act.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, I am rather disturbed to hear the Minister suggest that the sooner we pass this piece of legislation the better, justifying that urging upon the House by the fact that there are some people who may be entitled to refunds. I would hope that the guide that might be used in this place is whether the legislation we are contemplating is good or bad for the country, whether it indeed lives up to its billing as being fair, reasonable and equitable, whether it brings justice to the tax scene. With that in mind let me just draw to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary, who has been dealing with this issue, the consequences of the application of the various Sections of the Act to which he has already made reference with respect to valuing work in progress. I think he will agree with me that if he analyses the circumstances of the present case in light of the proposed amendment, when we are dealing with the valuation of the work in progress of a professional of a kind that is not exempt from the provision of these amendments, the amount included in the inventory of that professional with respect to that work in progress is an amount representing the lower of costs or, in this case, the amount that can reasonably be expected to become receivable in respect thereof after the end of the year.

Would he not agree that that indeed will be the law if this section is passed?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, I agree with that, Mr. Chairman. The Member for Mississauga South and I had a long discussion about that. That certainly is my opinion.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, I was here during that discussion and I was not left with the absolutely firm conviction that that was the interpretation that the Parliamentary Secretary has placed on Clause 3, amending as it does Subsection 10(4). If indeed that is the case, let me ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether the treatment of work in progress is the same for a manufacturing firm as it is for a profession. If it is not, does he not also share my concern that fair market value can, in many cases, be considerably lower than the amount that you expect to receive when the work is billed?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that inventory is inventory under this proposal, whether the inventory be a physical item or professional services. Therefore, the parallel that the Hon. Member has drawn is correct. I was not quite sure about what he was referring to, in setting the price tag for fair market value. I agree that prices will fluctuate up and down, but I am not sure what the consequences of that fact are, for his question. I would be grateful for clarification.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, let me then pose the question in this fashion. Why has the Government found it necessary to treat work in progress of a profession in any fashion differently from the way it would treat work in progress for a small manufacturing undertaking? Why in fact do they not simply leave Subsection 10(1) to apply to the valuation of the work in progress of a professional? I can tell you, very simply, why they have decided that this would be inappropriate. It is because the work in progress of a professional, if it is to be valued at the lower of either cost or market will in fact be valued at nil.

What the Government has done, recognizing this obvious fact, is to decide it will create new rules for professionals. I cannot help but think that if you examine the new rules to determine what fair market value is, in the case of work in progress for professionals, it is an amount that can reasonably be expected to become receivable. There is no valuation process, be it fair or otherwise. It is what in the minds of the intended biller of those accounts he can receive after the end of the year.

I would suspect that what we will become involved in is a very acute examination of the financial status of the recipient of that intended account, whether at the end of the year the company that is to pay that bill is insolvent or has financial difficulties and what considerations the professional might bear in mind in the event that he wished to establish something in the case of a lower amount for that bill than he would otherwise send.

I fully appreciate that it is the lower of two items, the lower of the cost to the taxpayer professional or the reasonable amount that he might bill for it. I recognize that fully, and in some cases the cost may be the lower of the two and would save him the trouble. But I just listened to the explanation given by the Parliamentary Secretary with respect to what cost was, and it too troubles me. He has said that cost would only include direct cost for that project.

Mr. Chairman, if it includes only the direct costs for that project, what we now have is one horrendous burden of identifying each project for the architect, for instance, to which reference has been made, so that we can see the costs that are applicable to that project.

This is an undertaking which in the past has not been absolutely essential, clearly not essential at all. The Parliamentary Secretary has indicated that, in determining what these costs are, the costs in terms of the work of the proprietor are not to be included. If that is the case, I wonder how those comments in fact tie in with the assurance, or the threat I might suggest, of the Minister of State for Finance who, a short time ago, told us that it was appropriate in this process to value ideas. If he is valuing ideas to determine costs, where in heaven's name will this lead us? I would like both the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister of State for Finance genuinely to give us some guidance as to what the rules are.

• (1650)

There is one other consideration that has to be borne in mind. Having listened to the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister of State for Finance receiving some guidance from officials in the Department of Finance, I cannot help but think that this House is relying very substantially on officials for the kind of information we require. If indeed the cost is to be calculated exempting the work of the proprietor, let us have that kind of assurance included in the statute. If the overhead costs referred to by the Parliamentary Secretary are to be excluded in determining costs, then let those provisions be written into the statute.

It is small comfort to the taxpayers of this country who read the debates in the House and find that on a number of occasions these very issues later give rise to a costly appeal before the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court of Canada, especially when they look at the debates in Hansard and find that we have had assurance that what they are arguing about would never occur. We know the courts pay absolutely no attention to what is said in this House, either by Members of the Opposition or by Members of the Government. The courts will interpret these Sections.

I am not convinced that any genuine assurance is given to this place upon which Members should rely that in determining costs they, the bureaucracy, are going to exclude overhead costs or a *tipro rata amount with respect thereto or costs representing the valuation of ideas, referred to by the Minister, in fixing the costs which are to be used for the purpose of determining the amount that is to be included in the income of professionals.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the additional questions from the Hon. Member for York North who is giving us a chance to cover some important details in all of this.

First, I think that professionals keep dossiers or files on their costs. When I served in this kind of capacity, I did that. I know that my lawyer does it. We are talking here about people who normally, as a matter of business practice, do not have a great deal of difficulty defining the direct costs of a project for their own use or for tax use. In fact, it is probably the pattern that all professionals—architects, engineers and others—keep some kind of running tab of the exact costs or direct costs that they apply to a project.

On December 18, 1981 the then Minister of Finance said that in order to make it easier for professionals, he would only ask them to include such direct costs as a convenience for professionals because the professionals have their own accounting in this style, because they do keep track of their direct project costs. The broader picture he has described of overheads and so on is very often more contentious, and it is in fact harder to keep track of these overheads on a project by project basis. It was because of that and in order to facilitate this kind of accounting that we had that comment on December 18.

The Hon. Member made some reference to businesses becoming insolvent and, therefore, the values of the goods fluctuating. As I understand it, this law is written on the basis of businesses being an on-going affair. It is not written for occasions when businesses go bankrupt.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, I noted the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary who indicated that the professions with which he has become familiar have followed a practice of accounting and maintaining a record of their costs. There is no doubt of that. The question here is whether the record maintenance is with respect to each individual project. I know that professionals keep a record of their intended billings, but there is no record maintained of the allocation of actual costs.

Let me give the Parliamentary Secretary an illustration. While dockets may be maintained by an architect with respect to those on his staff so that he may render an account to his client, to the best of my knowledge, as in the case of the practice of law, there is not a record maintained of the salaries paid to employees who may be professionals in the group working on the files, breaking that account down as between a number of files. It is precisely that kind of bookkeeping and accounting process which will become necessary under the circumstances.

The Parliamentary Secretary referred to those who practise law. Quite frankly, they are not the ones who are covered because of their exemption as a consequence of the provisions here. I know personally that the legal profession never did keep a record of the costs. They keep a record of the bills. They keep a record of the charges that apply to a particular client with respect to a particular project, but not a pro rata share of salaried solicitors in a firm who are allocated to that particular file. I know of no professional who hitherto has been obliged to maintain that kind of record with respect to the project now to be undertaken. I would like the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary with respect to that.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I can only repeat what I said earlier. Professionals generally do have very good records for their very own use. We are attempting to tie in our requirements to existing record-keeping habits. We are not anxious to force people into keeping brand new records.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South will recall the heated discussion we had in the Finance Committee about lawyers and the difficulties they would have in this regard. It was precisely because of this argument that we were somewhat sympathetic to their case. We felt that they would indeed be in a situation where they would have to go through unproductive paper work and unproductive activity, to determine costs for the sake of tax.

We were also told very clearly that it is a professional practice to keep costs and to keep some idea of expenses for the sake of billing. When the law is devised, we can say with some confidence that we believe that professions like computer companies and so on can figure out their direct costs for a specific project for the sake of this provision.

Mr. Gamble: Mr. Chairman, can the Parliamentary Secretary indicate whether he has any evidence that firms of architects maintain a specific list of salary allocations among various client accounts, salary allocations with respect to employees of that firm who are working on a client's project?

• (1700)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I refer the Hon. Member to the suggestions in the Finance Committee from representatives of the Canadian Institution for Chartered Accountants who at that point indicated what they would consider to be reasonable accounting practices.

Mr. Gamble: I would have hoped, with a view to informing this House of a serious obligation which, I suggest, is going to be imposed on a group of professionals, that the Parliamentary Secretary would have simply given us a yes or no. I accept that response as an answer in the negative, and I seriously doubt that we will ever get an answer in the affirmative, because professionals do not allocate direct costs among client files.

What they do, obviously, and I indicated this before, is to maintain a list of charges to client files but not in fact costs.

May I inquire of the Parliamentary Secretary whether, in light of the recognized generation of tax in but a single initial period—I know the increased taxes are going to be split over a couple of years—there is any genuinely long-term benefit in maintaining taxpayers in the professions on this complicated burdensome route?

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if the Hon. Member would be so kind as to repeat his last question. I understood his explanation a little, but I wonder if he would give us the question again?

Mr. Gamble: Let me say, by way of background, that we know, from an accounting standpoint that income is equal to the sales, minus the cost of sales. Cost of sales are generally defined as including an opening inventory, plus additions during the year, minus a closing inventory. As a consequence of adopting that formula taxwise to these circumstances, we become involved in the process of valuing inventory and involved in the process of determining what work in progress is and how to value it. We also know that until now, and until this Bill has been dealt with, it has not been the obligation of professionals, or fishermen, to include in income an item which would be part of the inventory or the work in progress. It has only been necessary to include items in income which have been billed, whether or not they are ever received. Having regard to the fact that this changeover of systems will have but a brief temporary effect, an initial injection of revenue, does the Parliamentary Secretary genuinely believe, under those circumstances—since there will be no continuing source of revenue as such—that it is appropriate to burden the professional community with this kind of arrangement?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, that is a very important question. It is one we have been struggling with all day. In fact, my answer to that directly is, yes, I believe the taxation measure is worth-while and it is a good idea. I remind the Hon. Member that we are dealing here with many professionals who are only newly classified as professionals, either because their profession did not exist previously or because, as a result of some court ruling, they have been able to get themselves classified as professionals. There has been, for example, some behaviour in this respect in the computer industry. In those circumstances, many of these people did in fact go through the inventory process previously, and we are now trying to put them back on that footing. We believe that we are dealing with people who have some experience and understanding of this tax measure. At the same time, to turn that coin over, it was because the measure would not have been productive, would not have had a long-term benefit and would have had disruptive costs, that we did exempt some professionals. Also, I would remind the Hon. Member that the people involved here are people who have access to the small business tax rate, whereas the people who are exempted were not given that tax rate.

The Hon. Member has asked me, and I appreciate the question, whether the tax would be productive in the long run. My answer is that it will not be disruptive in the way he has described. The people who would have been hurt have been exempted. The people for whom it would have been a brand new experience, an unproductive administrative experience, such as lawyers, have been excluded from this provision. Equally, the people for whom it would have been inequitable in a tax sense have been excluded, whereas those who are able to take advantage of the small business rate are now being, in effect, treated like all small businesses and their work in progress is viewed as their inventory instead of some physical goods. Therefore, those who get the small business rate are being treated like other small businesses. The Hon. Member should turn his mind to the fact that we are not looking here at these people solely as taxpayers. There are other taxpayers in Canada, small businesses, large businesses and unincorporated people, who have to pay the freight for those who receive the exemptions. Therefore, we must be able to go to those taxpayers and justify such exemptions. For example, how do we define some professionals' work in progress? Is it different from a small business inventory? I will tell the Hon. Member quite directly that if he reviews the records of meetings of the Finance Committee, he will see there my concern which I voiced as a taxpayer precisely about that point. How could I, as a small businessman, dealing with a physical inventory be expected to pay extra tax because a professional who has work in progress in inventory is being excluded? I queried all kinds of people about that. I asked lawyers and the accountants who came in. I kept on repeating this question with all of them. Why would a small businessman, dealing with physical goods, have to pay more because a professional dealing with a service pays less? Where is the equity in that? I was able to satisfy myself with the case of lawyers and doctors, and it was tough. But I was converted. It was not a question of my being convinced in the beginning. As the record will show, and the Hon. Member will see, I was converted. I could see that some professionals would be subjected unfairly to too much paperwork, which was unproductive, and also because they are not paying the same rate of tax that I am in the beginning. I hope those specifics will help the Hon. Member to understand at least my perspective on the tax.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration in Committee of Bill C-139, to amend the Income Tax Act (No. 2)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Corbin in the Chair.

On Clause 3—Fair Market Value

On Clause 16—Professional Business

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the question to be determined here with respect to Section 10 of the Act is, what is the cost of the work? Subsection (4) as it appears in Clause 3 determines what the fair market value is. Now we want to know what the cost is. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North suggested that it was a new profession to those people who look after marriage arranging or setting up a marriage. I put this question to him: suppose he goes into that business—which probably he would be very good at—but he does not have any marriages coming up until 1984; suppose that during 1983 he spends a great deal of money setting up a plush office with fancy phones and has a series of expenses, enormous expenses. Those expenses could be deducted from his other income, his investment income, for example. Would those expenses represent his cost of the work, because he does not bill anything until 1984? All those expenses, the cost of the work, are they his costs? Presumably, what he has led us to believe so far is that it is only direct costs. Where do direct costs end and ordinary overhead costs start? What are costs? Is he not now required, if he takes the position that the professional is obligated to pay tax on the lesser of costs or fair market value, to have the Section further amended to define what is a professional cost with reference to the work? If he does not further define it, are we not in a position where we put the professional to an enormous amount of bookkeeping to determine the pro rata of overhead expenses which has reference to the unbuilt or uncompleted work?

• (1710)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, in the case of a hypothetical marriage counsellor who is not able to find anybody to counsel but who still has expenses, I understand this individual would have a variety of different expenses but they would not directly relate to work in progress. The professional would consider work in progress usually to be the wages of someone hired to work on a specific project.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, in the case of a manufacturer, when he determines what the cost of his work in progress is, why does he, in the normal accrual sense, put in an amount for his light, heat, water, general overhead and that type of thing? Why would he do it but a professional not be required to do that? If you are going to try to treat the cost of a professional as only his out-of-pocket expense specific to a file or retainer, how can you treat him any differently from a manufacturer? If the representation you intend to make in that regard is the same representation as the Minister made in the House on December 18, 1981, why would you not now add a further provision to determine what the cost is with reference to professionals since you have determined what their market value is with regard to professionals?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member has asked me basically two questions. He has asked about specific details involving the definition of cost for professionals in comparison with manufacturers. He has asked a policy question about why we do not include costs in the legislation. I will defer to the Minister of State for Finance for the second part of that question.

On the first part, I understand that manufacturers have costing systems set up which would allow them to incorporate a certain portion of overhead into the value of a good. Most manufacturers, if they are worried about their overhead, will include it in the price of every good. There is nothing in the provisions that would prevent a professional from doing that if he wanted to set up some formula which would allow him to consider overhead on some direct basis. I would remind the Hon. Member of the alternative to that, the example used by the Hon. Member for York North who indicated that somebody might spend $10 on a piece of paper to draw up some architectural plans and have $3,000 worth of time. Therefore, the fair market value might be $3,010, but the taxpayer would have the advantage of charging off only $10 as work in progress, and would wait until he gets to the point of selling the project to earn the income. I would suggest to the Hon. Member of Mississauga South that if manufacturers choose to set up some factor for overhead to be included in the cost of inventory, then so can professionals. On the other hand, they might find it advantageous to just keep track of their cost and use that.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, perhaps before we have the answer from the Minister I could put one situation to him. A young man goes into architecture, not one of the favoured professions. He does not incorporate because he cannot incorporate. He proceeds to do work on an important building, but he cannot bill that work until the following year.

Mr. Fisher: No employees?

Mr. Blenkarn: He has no employees. Is the value of his work in progress the lower of his costs or realizable value? If it is the lower of his costs or realizable value, is his cost not the cost of his telephone, his office space, his automobile, his paper and his secretary? Is that not his cost? If that is his cost, and it is the intention of the Government to make that his cost, will the Government be introducing an amendment to so provide for that? In other words, will the Government introduce an amendment to define what is the cost when we are determining what is the lower of the cost or value, just as we have been determining what is fair market value with respect to value?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the officials advise me that, flowing from the examples and discussions between the Parliamentary Secretary and the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, the architect under those circumstances has a choice between the two. It could be zero. No wages, no employees. It could be the example he uses as cost.

Mr. Blenkarn: He does not have a choice.

Mr. Cosgrove: I do not think the item is a matter of policy, I think it is a matter of application of the sections of the Act presently existing, and the amendment which is before us, which the Parliamentary Secretary has already indicated, is taken in conjunction and presently provides the architect, or who ever under the circumstances, a choice to submit his returns on the basis of the existing legislation, assisted by the statements of the Minister of Finance on December 18, 1981.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the Minister in his statement in December, if I understand it correctly, said that the professionals would only have to account for the actual wages paid to people specifically working on the project. The case I have put to him was not just wages; it was all overhead costs. They are in fact his costs. If that is the intention of the Government, then I point out that what it is attempting to do is to tax professionals not on what they have earned—because they have not earned anything at that moment—but on what they hope to earn or what their costs are. Whoever taxed a person through an Income Tax Act on the basis of what it costs the individual to do business? Normally you deduct costs; here you want to tax the costs. When you want to tax the costs, that is exactly what you should do. If you were going to have a definition of what is fair market value for a professional, which means what he can reasonably expect to become a receivable, why would you not also have a definition of costs for a professional in line with what the Minister said in December 1981?

• (1720)

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. I would remind him of our discussions in the Finance Committee when he said that normal business costs are not taxed, they are deductible. I urge him to review the discussion in that Committee and also all the provisions that one normally applies to inventory. As he knows, inventory does not quite match the definition he has given. I urge him to see that what we are talking about is inventory, the definition of inventory and the definition of costs to generate that inventory.

We have tried to indicate to the Hon. Member that it is an option for the professional. If the professional has a direct cost involved in the generation of that inventory, then the professional can write off that cost, or, as we have just said, if the professional wants to broaden that and include other costs, he can.

We went over all this in the Parliamentary Committee, talking about the parallels between physical inventory and work in progress inventory. The parallels are exact. I draw to the Hon. Member's attention the comments I made about equity and about small businesses. I discussed the same matter with the Hon. Member for York North. We have been over this ground a few times already.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be repetitive, but apparently the Government is not prepared to accept the position taken by the Parliamentary Committee that professional work in progress would not be taxed. The Parliamentary Committee held that if professional work in progress is to be taxed in a similar manner to other businesses, then, some noted, the 3 per cent inventory allowance conferred on other businesses should be applied to the professional.

I wonder if, on the basis of the Committee report, the Parliamentary Secretary will be introducing a further amendment to the Act to lessen the burden on the taxpayer, so that he will not need a further Ways and Means motion to add for professionals who are now to be taxed on their inventory—this is defined as inventory. Will they be given a 3 per cent inventory allowance?

Mr. Fisher: I would remind the Hon. Member that the report he is quoting from was intended to be a discussion of the various viewpoints put forward. That recommendation for a 3 per cent inventory allowance was by no means a unanimous opinion, any more than it is a unanimous opinion now. The 3 per cent inventory allowance that is in the law now is intended specifically for tangible property, not intangible property.

I do not think we could say that the Parliamentary Committee was unanimous in its report that this should be allowed under this provision. In fact, I think the division of views between us now probably reflects accurately the division of views in the Committee.

Mr. Blenkarn: If that is the case, the argument in favour of taxing professionals on their work in progress has been argued on the basis of fairness and equity. We are now in the position where apparently fairness and equity do not apply because the receivable is an intangible inventory and should not have the inventory allowance.

Do we have a situation where it is heads the Government wins and tails the taxpayer loses? Is that the fairness and equity that we are getting with all this bafflegab about taxing the professional who is operating an unincorporated business on his work in progress? He is not being given the same advantage as a manufacturer or retailer. Why will the Government not give him the same advantage? Why is it being so unfair?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, we went into this in some depth in the Parliamentary Committee. I would urge the Hon. Member to come up with some new information. He knows that real estate and securities, for example, are not given the 3 per cent inventory allowance. He also knows that the 3 per cent inventory allowance was intended to help manufacturers who have problems with inflation. It was not intended to be used as a parallel with intangibles like work in progress or real estate and securities.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, in my previous round, we dealt with two or three situations. We have with us today a Minister of the Crown, a Parliamentary Secretary and two major officials from the Department of Finance. Given concrete examples, they could not tell us how this tax law would apply. I suggest that there are a lot of situations where it would be difficult for this group to tell us how it would apply. In my opinion, that is clear evidence that the law should be rewritten.

After the last hour or hour and a half of questions may I ask if the Minister is now persuaded that we have a piece of legislation which Canadians do not understand, which departmental officials cannot understand, and which the Minister himself cannot understand? If no one can understand it, will the Minister undertake to stand the Clause and come back with a rewrite?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I made notes of the questions raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary West this afternoon. He posed five specific questions. It took four of them to get him to the fifth, which was the only one germane to the Clause of the Bill under consideration. The examples he used were not of work in progress but examples of contracts or business arrangements between people. The Parliamentary Secretary, advised by the officials, indicated that these did not fall under this Section.

I think the Hon. Member is either unfair or he does not recall well the answer given to him. If he would read the "blues" to check the answers, I think he will find that as he introduced the five examples, he even said that. In other words, he admitted himself that "fine, I have asked more questions that are not on point and do not have to do with work in progress, but my fifth example to the Minister and to the Parliamentary Secretary must surely be one that comes under the sanction". Then I believe the Parliamentary Secretary satisfied the Hon. Member's fifth example. I thought that he had done it to the satisfaction of the Hon. Member.

• (1730)

I invite Hon. Members who did not have the advantage of hearing that exchange between the Hon. Member for Calgary West and the Parliamentary Secretary to refer to the "blues". On this item the exercise or exchange was a valuable one because the Hon. Member referred to specific examples. He did not talk hypothetically, with the exception of the last case in which he was being, I may say charitably, a little mischievous. With the exception of that last item, there were specific questions. We were able to look at the specific questions. We were able to put them against Clause 3 dealing with work in progress and they did not apply. I invite Hon. Members to take a look at that exchange. Also I invite the Hon. Member to check the "blues" because I thought the exchange was very valuable. I thought it would be useful, not only to him but to other Members or people looking for some assistance in the interpretation of Clause 3.

Mr. Hawkes: Let us test the Minister's thesis. I will return to one of my examples and just change it slightly. I am a professional. I have a professional business. I normally charge $40 per hour for my services. I have done five hours' worth of work in this taxation year. It is part of a longer term project. Now, what do I have to take into inventory? What are the types of costs, exactly, which I have to include in the inventory?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, in responding to the Hon. Member, he has really turned the clock back an hour and a half. He began with that very question. It was his second example this afternoon. He began with that question, and we had to rise and ask, "What were the specifics of the contract?" We had to ask him whether there were other conditions of the contract to assist us in answering the question. We went through that route. We have answered that question. With respect, I think the Hon. Member does not advance an understanding of the Clause by repeating the process and having to lead up, by questions and answers, to the question he really wants to ask.

Mr. Hawkes: If the Minister checks the "blues", he will see that I have not asked that question.

Mr. Fisher: Yes, you have.

Mr. Hawkes: No. I was a professional who employed somebody who was paid $20 per hour, and they did the work. That was the way I first asked the question. Now I am the professional. I have done the five hours' worth of work and I have not billed for it because it is part of a longer-term project. I normally bill my own services out of $40 per hour. What do I take into inventory? What are the factors which I have to take into inventory?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, as the Hon. Member must know after the debate this afternoon, he has choices as to what he can take into inventory. He can assess some costs, as we discussed with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, as we also discussed with the Hon. Member for York North, and as we will apparently discuss with him. The businessman or the professional would choose his method of assigning costs to that project.

We have indicated that we are trying to facilitate professionals by allowing them to assign direct costs because we believe that that is the approach most commonly found among professionals for their billing practices, and therefore it might be a very easy approach for them to follow for their tax practices. We had an earlier discussion comparing manufacturers and professionals, wherein it was indicated that professionals could allocate some formula per project for their general overhead costs.

Mr. Hawkes: Let me contrast two firms. Over here we have a one-person firm with a professional. Over there we have a professional plus an employee. In the one case, the professional does the five hours' worth of work. In the other case, the employee does the five hours' worth of work. It seems to me, from what you have told us earlier, that the single-professional firm can cost his time at zero and simply take into inventory the overhead costs, a proportion of those which are relative to the work. But in the second case, that of the two-person firm, that person has to take the overhead costs, plus the wages of the employee. They have both done the same work, but the tax position for the two-person firm is a lot more expensive than for the one-person firm. Is that the Liberal idea of justice?

Mr. Fisher: Again I would like to remind the Hon. Member of the many, many examples which we have had this afternoon along this very route. The individual who has an employee has a direct cost which can be applied against the project. The person involved in the project, the professional, will have to define the value of the inventory as either the lower of the costs or the fair market value. Then, when the project is completed and the billing is finished, the individual who has the one employee has a higher deduction which he can put against income than the professional. The professional will have to bill the full time as profit, whereas the two-person company will have a salary which will be used as a deduction. There is an offsetting deduction against the cost. It is not a question of being unfair to the individuals.

Mr. Hawkes: I guess that when you serve in Parliament for quite a while you lose track of the real world. Out there in the real world firms compete with each other, and if you are a better competitor than the person on the other side, you might get the business and the other person does not. When you take tax law and you give a bonus to some firms and punish other firms, you are distorting the marketplace. My question is really a very simple one. Are you or are you not granting bonuses through this system, potentially through the tax system, to single-member firms and putting at a disadvantage those with two or more employees? Is that not the impact of your taxation?

Mr. Fisher: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hawkes: I appreciate the assertion, but can you tell me how you are not?

Mr. Fisher: We have gone over it again, and again we repeat for the benefit of the Hon. Member that you deduct your costs when you sell the goods.

Mr. Hawkes: If I have a small business, I start with an opening inventory of tangible goods. I add to that the costs associated with the purchase of replacement goods or new goods. From that, I substract the actual purchase value of those goods which remain in my warehouse. From that, I have some which is left over, which is the value of my inventory. Tell me what I must put in each of those three parts of that formula, under this tax Bill.

• (1740)

Mr. Fisher: I could ask the same question concerning almost any business. Is there an advantage which is being artificially created here? I must apologize to the Hon. Member. I feel that I am somehow missing his point. However, I know that in my own business, physical inventory is treated in this fashion. I do not suffer a competitive disadvantage with regard to someone who has a different structure. The inventory is created. The value of that inventory is added to my tax bill. The very next day, in effect, it is taken off my tax bill as a deduction. The whole inventory rolls over from year to year. There are some years in my business when I have a more valuable asset added on, and then if I sell it or if I go out at the end of the year, I reduce my tax bill. However, I am not at a competitive disadvantage.

I must apologize to the Hon. Member. I do not know if I have been in Parliament for too long or simply if I am confused, but I do not understand how it is possible for us to have this competitive disadvantage.

Mr. Hawkes: Out there in the marketplace, if I buy a number of boxes of coffee from someone else, I am given an invoice and the price I pay is set out. What the Government is inviting me to do, through this piece of legislation, is to estimate cost for inventory. It is not set out by someone else, who sold to me. The Government is saying to a single individual or to a collection of two or three or five, "Invent your inventory costs". Then someone, some policeman out there, must decide whether it was done correctly.

The legislation is not the least bit helpful in telling me how to value my inventory at cost. There is not a single word which tells me what I must do. If I am faced with that situation, then how do I appeal to a tax board? If the law is silent, and an official says that I did it wrong, then a cost has been immediately added to my business because I must appeal or suffer a penalty. How can I appeal when the law is silent?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, again, I am sort of forced to go back to the bedrock of my own experience. Nothing in the statute has told me how to value my physical inventory, yet somehow, between myself and my accountant, I have been able to do it, and to come up, on an annual basis, with the lower of costs or fair market value for physical inventory. I would hope that we could have the same happy circumstance with professionals.

The Minister has indicated a reply to this line of thought earlier, in his discussion with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. I would only want to add to the Minister's reply by saying that the Hon. Member for Calgary West is not asking for greater clarification. If we were to follow his line of reasoning here, we would be adding even more complexities to the law. He would want us to add more Clauses, more definitions, more complexities—

Mr. McDermid: Just wipe out the whole thing.

Mr. Fisher: —yet in proven business practice, we have been able to find that it is not necessary elsewhere, where the circumstances are far more complex and where the range of services and goods is far broader.

Mr. Hawkes: I simply cannot imagine sitting down with my accountant tomorrow, faced with the problem involving work I had in progress last December, and trying to value it on a cost basis. Generally, tangible goods which are purchased in total or in part for inventory are purchased from others. For the most part, the costs become readily apparent from someone else's invoices. However, the Government is trying to set up a system which I believe would be a bureaucratic nightmare.

In every city in this country, a local official from the tax department will have almost unlimited discretion to say, "You did it right", or "You did it wrong", and the taxpayers out there will have no idea as to what it is they are supposed to do. Where is the historical experience which would enable people to estimate what should go into their inventories? Where has that been evident in our system?

Mr. Fisher: We could go over this matter again and again. I just remind the Hon. Member that all we are doing here is deferring the deduction of costs to the time when income is earned. It is a basic accounting principle. Although I am not an accountant, I am told that these are practices which have been followed over the past century.

I know from my own experience with my own business that these practices have been followed at least over the last decade, because that is how long I have been going through this. As far as costs are concerned, I think that if the Hon. Member has a hard time defining costs, then he would not be well advised to get into a business because, sooner or later, he will run into a cost somewhere and he might not be able to recognize it.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2) be amended in Clause 3 by adding, immediately after line 33 at page 6, the following new sub-section:

"4.(1) For the purpose of sub-section 1, the cost of the property, that is, the work in progress at the end of the taxation year of a business, means those costs which are directly related to a specific work in progress of the professional but excludes (a) any cost associated with the time incurred by the professional or any other non-employed professional associated with him and (b) any costs associated with the general overhead of carrying on the business which is a profession.

Mr. Fisher: That is not complex, eh?

Mr. Cullen: Author!

Mr. Fisher: What's "overhead"? Let us have a body of law on that.

Mr. Cosgrove: I rise on a point of order. I would draw to the Chair's attention the argument introduced by the House Leader for the Opposition, the first point made in the proceedings this morning. He indicated that any provision of the legislation, which is the Bill, must follow the Ways and Means motion. I disagree that the examples raised in argument dealing with amendments to Section 1 and Section 109 earlier were examples or fit that criterion. In other words, we argued that the provisions of the Bill did fit the notice of motion as tabled. I would ask Your Honour to find that you are faced with the same problem concerning the motion of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. The Hon. Member is attempting to introduce a provision by way of amendment to the Section. I do not want to discuss its merits or argue the case, but the amendment clearly does not follow the provisions of the Ways and Means motion before the House.

• (1750)

In as much as the Chair has reserved on the argument proposed by the Opposition, I would urge that the Chair must consider whether in fact it can proceed with the motion if it violates our rules for the same very reason put forward by the House Leader for the Opposition earlier in the day.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, on that particular point it would be very instructive if the Minister of State for Finance brushed up on his precedents with regard to the nature of amendments at this point in Committee of the Whole. May I point out to him that it has been long established that it is within the competence of any Member to move to either reduce or restrict a tax proposal. No private Member may increase the incidence of the tax, but at any stage in Committee of the Whole an Hon. Member of the Opposition, or even on the Government side, and we would welcome them from the Government side, could move to limit the incidence of a tax or reduce it. This is well within the competence of a Member. Those limitations do not have to follow the strictures of the Ways and Means motion.

The Minister again has missed the point, which is that the Government is bound by the Ways and Means motion in the nature of the Bill it brings in. Subsequently the Government may bring in motions to amend, particularly to reduce the incidence of the tax or to clarify the tax.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order raised by the Minister, the particular amendment introduced by myself and seconded by the Member for Brampton-Georgetown is an amendment that just defines what is cost. In fact, it comes within the statement by the Minister in the House on December 18, 1981. It is, as pointed out by the Member for Edmonton West, a relieving matter, but even so, if anything, perhaps it reduces the tax. It certainly does not extend the tax, and therefore the amendment is perfectly in order.

The argument put forward by the Member for Simcoe North with respect to Clause 1, which of course is still under the consideration of the Chair, was that the Government was attempting without a Ways and Means motion to introduce two additional forms of taxation that were not included in any Ways and Means motion. Here we have an amendment that defines more precisely and indeed reduces the scope of the tax imposed or alleged to be imposed in the Ways and Means motion and therefore is perfectly acceptable, whereas in the other case there was an attempt by the Government to impose taxes that are not authorized in the Ways and Means motion under the instruction from the Crown.

On that basis, I suggest that the motion is in order, and can be put.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, on the same point of order, with the greatest respect, you are in the position of having to determine, on the basis of the motion before you, even using the test put forward by the Member for Mississauga South, whether the impact of the amendment is to reduce or restrict. Is it a relieving matter, or does it contravene the rule that it is not admissible because it would increase the tax?

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South has indicated that it would offend. If the motion offends by increasing the cost and increasing taxation then, by his own words, it is not admissible as an amendment. That was the rule that he said the Chair must apply.

My submission, Mr. Chairman, is that you are in the position that you are going to have to interpret the amendment and take a look at that. I argue that the effect on some firms and some professionals of the adoption of the resolution by way of the amendment of the Hon. Member would have the result of increasing the cost to the professional. The point I began with is that the Chair, earlier this morning, faced with this kind of argument reserved the issue of whether amendments could be introduced for consideration, because it involves the argument of whether such an amendment, number one, increases and, number two, offends because it introduces a matter that is not in the Bill which is not in accordance with the Ways and Means motion introduced in December.

The gist of my submission is that the Chair, with respect, I think must consider this matter and reserve this matter unto itself, just as it did on the submission made by the House Leader of the Opposition earlier today.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, on the same point of order, I tried to listen carefully to the Hon. Minister. I think he talked about individual taxpayers. I think the point at issue in relation to an amendment should be whether or not Government revenue is increased or decreased, in total.

Could the Minister indicate to us his understanding of that amendment and whether or not he believes the force of that amendment would be to either increase or decrease Government revenue in total, as a test of what he knows about the legislation.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to give one example to back up the point of order raised by the Minister. You heard earlier in the afternoon the Member for York North indicate that direct cost to a professional could in fact be as low as $10 or, in other examples here, we heard them being described as as low as zero.

If we were to allow those same professionals to charge off their overhead, their tax obligations would differ here. Obviously, when you have that kind of a circumstance in this motion, it is going to add extra tax burden to some people and take a tax burden away from other people. This is because it creates inflexibility around the very question of overhead and what the definition is and whether those who would be able to have it would pay more and others who would not be able to have it would pay less.

So I agree with the point made by the Minister. The motion is totally inappropriate because it adds extra expense and inflexibility and extra burden for some taxpayers.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, on the same point of order, the Minister has suggested that the matter be deferred for your consideration, as to whether the amendment increases the burden on the taxpayer or in fact decreases the burden. It is obviously our submission that it decreases the burden. It was our hope to complete this matter, but I suggest, in view of the Minister's suggestion, that the Chair consider the matter. The Chair will have until Tuesday to do that, presumably, if we start again on this Bill on Tuesday. I suggest that the Chair take until Tuesday to consider the amendment and that we then would be able to proceed, I think relatively quickly, with considering the balance of Clause 3 and Clause 16.

Before six o'clock, and just for a moment, may I ask the Minister if he will be introducing the amendment that would protect notaries, or is he going to leave those out, and when will he be introducing his amendments so that—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The Hon. Member is introducing a totally new element in the debate on the point of order.

I thank Hon. Members for their comments. It has been suggested that the Chair take the amendment under advisement. The Chair will do that.

Progress reported.

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTION TO INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF APPLIED SYSTEMS ANALYSIS. (B) REPORTED USE OF DATA BANKS BY SOVIET DELEGATES

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, on February 11 the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) in reply to my inquiry promised to review the results produced to date by the International Institute of Applied Systems Analysis. On the same occasion the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) made a commitment to look into the security aspects of this international organization. I am still awaiting the results flowing from these promises. In the meantime, I would like to put on record a few facts about the Canadian participation which costs the taxpayers of this country $400,000 annually.

To start with, the Systems Analysis approach to global problem-solving is increasingly decried as a passing fad, or worse, as an intellectual fraud committed by bureaucrats of participating countries. It is for this reason that the venerable Royal Society of the United Kingdom recommended an end to British participation in this venture. In fact, the British Government stopped financial support by the end of last year.

The United States also withdrew financial support from the institute. Americans decided that their money could be spent elsewhere and that the technological benefits gained by the Soviets at the institute outweighed those obtained by the West. In fact, the Americans realized that under the guise of international co-operation, the Soviets are using the institute as a vehicle for access to Western scientists, technology and data banks without providing anything valuable in return.

The Soviets over the last decade or so succeeded in acquiring the most advanced Western technology by using, in part, their technological and scientific agreements with the West, thus supplementing their clandestine purchases of Western equipment and know-how.

Together with Austria and Switzerland, Canada seems to have become, unwittingly or otherwise, one of the most frequently used Soviet intermediaries in transferring American and Western technological innovations to the Soviets. I am not going to cite the well-known examples in this respect which occurred in the recent past. I am going to mention two lesser-known ones.

I would like to call the Government's attention, for example, to the trans-shipment from Detroit via an Ontario firm of a complete car assembly technology capability to the Lada, factory in Soviet Russia. The other involves a Canadian manufacturing company in Montreal named Velan Engineering which exports high-pressure valves to Russia, Czechoslovakia and Hungary. The latter case involves components which are almost exclusively used in rocketry and the nuclear industry. Believe it or not, it appears to be a quite legal undertaking, given that over the years these particular exports were backed up by many millions of dollars from the coffers of the federal Export Development Corporation.

It seems that Canada is one of the best examples of the old Communist doctrine that Western capitalistic countries will sell Communists whatever they need to succeed. In the Velan case, for a few million dollars we weaken and jeopardize our future as a free society. Interestingly enough Mr. Velan, as he calls himself, appears to have the background of a refugee from a worker's paradise in Eastern Europe, I believe Czechoslovakia. Suffering perhaps from pangs of conscience at the time of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, he was quoted in the Montreal press to the effect that he was curtailing his dealings with the Soviet Union, but an examination of his record indicates that the business was merely shifted to Hungary and Czechoslovakia.

In the IASSA matter, we are giving the Soviets not only access to our technology, but also an annual bonus for the upkeep of this institution, whatever it should be called, of about $400,000.

The Canadian representative who appears to be a catalyst here is Dr. Michael Kirby whose expertise runs the gamut from railways to fish. Nonetheless, I would urge some of the more responsible and sensible Cabinet Ministers opposite, such as the Minister of State for Science and Technology, to reassess this whole affair and ask himself whether this is really a better use of our resources at a time when every dollar that we need for Research and Development could be better used here in this country.

• (1805)

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to be able to respond to the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay).

Let us examine first of all the reason why the United States has withdrawn from this organization. They have cited budgetary reasons, and I believe that factors relating to the cold war might have also been a part of that influence. But what has happened in the United States? The official role of the Government has been assumed by the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, and this Academy is being supported by industry, foundations and private sources, thus the continuing participation of the United States in these exchanges is assured. In the United Kingdom, the Royal Society has withdrawn, but there is, nevertheless, a body of support within that country for continued types of exchanges of know-how and technology, and we have a feeling that perhaps this official relationship is going to be maintained between the United Kingdom and the Organization through the Fellowship of Engineering.

As to Canada's relationship, we joined in 1972, and the question is, can we as Canadians, a technology-hungry country attempting to compete on world markets, do this in isolation? I believe we have to be forward looking and resourceful in bringing new ideas to Canadian production, to Canadian manufacturing, new Research and Development and new know-how to Canadians, in order that we can compete in world markets. Many other countries in the past have benefited from exchanges. They have adopted the highest technologies they have found in the West, and they are now outcompeting with us in world markets. That is the opportunity we have by participating in organizations which offer Canadian scientists and engineers the opportunity to learn what is going on in other parts of the world.

Let us not condemn these initiatives on the basis of smear and innuendo. I do not believe this should be a basis for attacking someone who has been working assiduously to come to grips with the very difficult question of the fisheries, which affects the Hon. Member's riding very closely. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians from all walks of life should be more outward looking in trying to find out the best of what is happening in every type of industrialized region of the world.

NUCLEAR ENERGY—FUTURE OF HEAVY WATER PLANTS IN NOVA SCOTIA. (B) USE OF COAL TO PRODUCE OIL

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, on January 25, 1983, I expressed once again in this House of Commons my concern for the future of the heavy water plants in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia. Last fall, and on several occasions before that, I raised with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources the problem which would result if the heavy water plants located at Glace Bay and on the Strait of Canso were closed.

Just to give you some idea of the magnitude of this problem, I point out that there are over 760 skilled workers employed in these two plants. More importantly there are at least 2,000 related jobs which would be adversely affected by the closure of the plant, particularly the Seaboard Power Plant where 100 jobs would be in jeopardy, as well as the power plant at Point Tupper. When one considers the effect of closure of these sources of employment, one must realize that an horrendous problem would be generated in an area that has already been shocked by employment problems for the last century, particularly the last decade.

In November 1981, the unemployment rate in Cape Breton was 11.8 per cent. A year later, in 1982, it was 12.4 per cent. Then it rose very sharply in that same year to 15.2 per cent. Unemployment there is now over 18 per cent. If you are talking about the loss of as many as 3,000 jobs in an area that is already hit with drastic unemployment, you realize the seriousness and magnitude of the problem, Mr. Speaker.

What is the solution? The former Minister of Finance, whose constituency of Cape Breton Highlands Canso is affected by this closure of the Strait of Canso heavy water plant, has indicated to the people that they ought to be optimistic. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) has in the same tone and form indicated that there is reason for some optimism. But the fact is that Canada's nuclear program has been failure. The failure to sell and market CANDU reactors has left the heavy water plants virtually with no market for their products. One must come very close to a realization and recognition that the closure of the heavy water plants is inevitable. That is what I wanted to find out from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), because on other occasions and before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts he indicated fairly clearly that the closure of the heavy water plants was inevitable.

The Ottawa Citizen reported last month that there was a row brewing between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) over the closure of the plants. It was evident from that report that the Minister of Finance was losing the battle with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources over the closure of the heavy water plants. That is what prompted me in my supplementary questions to ask the Minister what alternative sources of employment could the Government provide to those workers who would be out of work as a result of the closure of heavy water plants.

It may come as a surprise to you, Mr. Speaker, and to other Members of the House, that it was on that occasion when for the first time in this House of Commons I made a reference to the infamous Scotia Coal Synfuels Project. I said to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that I hoped the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project headed by Alastair Gillespie would not be put forward as the source of alternate employment for the nearly 3,000 Cape Breton workers whose jobs are in jeopardy. Later on, and day after day in this House, we heard about Mr. Gillespie and his involvement with the former Minister of Energy, the former Minister of Finance and all the other Cabinet Ministers and Government officials who were involved in the promotion of the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project. We have heard that subject debated ad nauseam.

I want to comment just briefly in the few minutes remaining on how important the debate of that subject is to the people of Canada, particularly to the people of Cape Breton. If we are going to allow the Government of Canada and its Ministers to play fast and loose with the public financial resources in the manner in which they have done in the case of the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project, then we are in even greater jeopardy than the jeopardy Cape Bretoners are facing as a result of the closure of the heavy water plants. That kind of public and governmental immorality will bring this whole system crashing to the ground.

The only way we can deal with this is to have before the Parliament of Canada and enact as a statute of the Parliament of Canada, sensible rules of conduct not only for Cabinet Ministers but for all Government officials and those who pass from that status into the private sector. Unless we know what are the rules that govern conduct, the conduct of Government affairs, and unless we can have some confidence in the ability and capacity of our Government officials, Members of Parliament, Cabinet Ministers and our public service officials, to deal properly with the affairs of Government, then we are in very serious difficulty. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) comes into the House and tables what he claims are guidelines of conduct for Ministers and Members in the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project and claims that those guidelines and rules of conduct are not enforceable, so they can do what they want, we realize what a terrible state the Government has brought the country to.

I want to make an appeal on behalf of Cape Breton workers for a sensible way to deal with the problem created by the imminent closure of the heavy water plants. At the same time I want to appeal to the Government to review, in a sensible way, the manner in which Government business is conducted and to develop and present to the House some sensible rules of conduct, or conflict of interest rules which Cabinet Ministers and other officials can be made to follow. When there are instances in which the public interest is being deflected and diverted because of the conduct of present or former officials, we will then have a forum in which to make the complaint and where the officials must answer for their wrongdoing. We will not again find ourselves in the kind of mess we have been in during these past weeks, arguing over something which is of vital importance to the people of Cape Breton and, indeed, to all the people of Canada.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) is not the only person in the House who is concerned about unemployment and about jobs in Cape Breton. We recognize that there is serious difficulty in that situation. At the moment markets for heavy water are closed because in Canada we have adopted a policy that we will not sell nuclear generation facilities to any country which has not signed the international Non-Proliferation Treaty. We are not prepared to sacrifice the prospect of the peaceful use of atomic energy for the betterment of humanity everywhere just to earn export dollars. This is a critical issue which we have pursued and we are prepared to follow up on it. I hope that the Hon. Member will agree that we have a responsibility, above and beyond everything else, to ensure that there is non-proliferation.

We are trying to create jobs in that depressed area of the country. There is under consideration a coal liquefaction plant which would use coal to produce gasoline from existing reserves. If the feasibility plans prove up we can look forward to expenditures of perhaps $1 billion to provide direct employment for 1,200 coal miners and 800 workers in the liquefaction plant. This enterprise would take advantage of the unique availability of Cape Breton coal, Sable Island gas and the facilities of a closed refinery on Canso Strait.

We have been working on this proposition and the Hon. Member for Halifax West has not come forward with any concrete alternative. All he does is bemoan the fate of some people who may lose their jobs, and complain that he does not like the way things are being done to create jobs in that area. He has not offered any positive alternative. We are very concerned about what is happening to those workers and their families, Mr. Speaker. That is why we are trying to come up with projects that would be of benefit to all Canadians, particularly those faced with the prospect of losing their jobs in that area. This is the object and the desire of the Government in the days, weeks and years ahead.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—DELAY IN MAKING PAYMENTS UNDER WORK PROGRAMS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE PERSONAL INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on February 2 I raised a question in the House regarding delays in UIC payments and payments under the Employment Bridging Assistance Program. I should like to say something that is not often said in the House, particularly by Members of the Opposition, that after months of complaints, substantial progress has been shown by the Department of Employment and Immigration. They have virtually eliminated long delays in British Columbia in payments to people under that program.

• (1820)

When I realized that I would be participating in the adjournment debate today, I did some checking among my colleagues and the various project sponsors in my constituency. They in fact report that the long delays seem now to be in hand. I thank the Department and its officials for getting at that, and just hope that we never again find ourselves with the kind of backlog which was so evident just a matter of a few short weeks ago.

I was also advised today that a new committee has been formed in my constituency among all the Employment Bridging Assistance Program sponsors called the West Kootenay Committee on Forest Employment Development. Yesterday they wrote to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), with copies to myself, and to various provincial officials with a number of recommendations they feel may help prevent some of the same problems and other possible future problems. I would like to touch on some of those recommendations as food for thought and hopefully as prods to action.

The first recommendation was that the Employment Bridging Assistance Program be extended to December 31, 1983. We are still awaiting word of this hoped-for extension of that program. Hopefully, participants who are working on those programs now might continue to draw payments until perhaps June 30, despite the fact that payments would otherwise expire by March 1, in order to allow for a sensible conversion over to the NEED program for some of those participants whose benefits are expiring. Some of those projects are worthwhile. Hopefully, if we can integrate those two programs in such a way that the programs themselves can continue, it will be of benefit not only to the workers involved but to the forest industry in those particular regions.

I know my time is fast running out, so I will not continue to list the various recommendations at this point. Again I thank the Government and the officers of the Department, particularly since they have taken a lot of brow-beating by some of us over the past number of weeks and months, for finally getting some of those matters straightened out. I ask them again to keep a close eye on the situation and perhaps give some additional authority to local forestry or employment officials, if payments should be delayed beyond three weeks in the future, so that locally they may have the authority to be able to meet emergency payments until such time as the broader questions can be straightened out.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that I want to thank the Hon. Member for his words of appreciation for the peple of the Department of Employment and Immigration. I am sure that his comments and those of his Progressive Conservative colleagues regarding improvements that have been made, and particularly the substantial amount of work being done by departmental employees, especially in the areas they represent on the West Coast, will be greatly appreciated by the people concerned. Many people are aware, and I am sure all Hon. Members and most Canadians have realized that Employment and Immigration employees have had an enormous workload during the past year. The Department and the Government have taken steps to try to reduce delays, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) informed the Hon. Member accordingly when he enquired about this in the House.

We have had to increase the number of staff in order to answer requests as quickly as possible, and in the British Columbia Region we have also set up a computerized system in order to be able to provide a quick response to all requests and provide efficient service to people who are seeking work and are to benefit from the various job creation programs we have established.

As for the recommendations made by a committee formed in my hon. colleague's riding, I am sure the Minister and the Government will bear them in mind. The Government and Cabinet are now examining various job creation projects, and the committee's recommendations will undoubtedly be most welcome. Mr. Speaker, I would hope that other groups would take similar action, and I am sure the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) will be very pleased to receive these recommendations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.25 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

POLLUTION

NECESSITY TO REDUCE TRANS-BORDER ATMOSPHERIC POLLUTION

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, the Sub-committee on Acid Rain of the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry published its report in 1981. Among its recommendations, there are two which read, and I quote:

The Sub-committee recommends that Canada and the United States reach an agreement on the necessary legislation and mechanisms to substantially reduce transboundary air pollution particularly as it relates to acid rain, by the end of 1982.

The Sub-committee recommends that Governments, public interest groups, and individual Canadians in general explore and utilize all possible political, legal, administrative and media channels to ensure that acid rain-causing emissions originating in the United States are substantially reduced and that a Canada-U.S. agreement on the long-range transportation of air pollutants is signed by the end of 1982.

Madam Speaker, negotiations between Canada and the United States have failed, because although many years of research have already been done, our neighbours to the south insist that further research is necessary.

I would therefore ask Canadians to do everything they can to make Americans aware of this very serious problem, and to support the efforts of the Canadian Government. Canadians may be sure that private conversations, written statements or meetings will not be subject to censorship, unlike the NFB films.

AIR TRANSPORT

REPORTED PLAN TO CLOSE WINNIPEG AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL CENTRE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I and other Manitobans were shocked to hear from a Winnipeg open line radio broadcast, the Peter Warren Show, on radio station CJOB, that the federal Government plans to eliminate 250 jobs in Winnipeg by closing down the air traffic control centre located there. These jobs are going to be relocated in Edmonton and Toronto.

Winnipeg has been an important centre of Canadian aviation for 40 years. The Winnipeg air traffic control office handles all aviation control functions for Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and northwest Ontario as far south as Sault Ste. Marie. Now that long and distinguished tradition is going to be forcibly terminated, ostensibly to avoid building a new control centre. The real reason, however, probably lies in a phrase used by a civil servant in discussing this matter. He said that "a greater federal presence was needed in Alberta." I find the implications of this remark deeply repugnant.

The loss of 250 jobs and the closing down of the air traffic control centre would have an extremely detrimental impact on Winnipeg's and Manitoba's economy. I have seen the federal Government repeatedly ignore Winnipeg's efforts to become more actively involved in Canada's growing aviation industry. This additional blow would openly confirm the suspicion shared by many Manitobans that the Government has absolutely no understanding of the skills and services the people of Manitoba have to offer. This move must be stopped.

PLIGHT OF SOUTHWEST ONTARIO APPLE INDUSTRY

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Madam Speaker, I stand to draw attention to a persistent and increasing problem in the apple growing industry in Essex and Kent counties of Ontario. Given the extreme southwest location of these counties, the apple industry faces significantly different growing, climatic, and disease conditions than other regions of Ontario. These local growing conditions have resulted in adverse responses by many of the rootstocks and, therefore, the recommended rootstocks are proving to be totally undesirable in Essex and Kent counties.

Apple growers continue to suffer financial losses because of the lack of local performance and inadequate research information being supplied by the Departments of Agriculture, both provincially and federally. To rectify this problem, and to respond to the concerns of the growers, I urge the federal Department of Agriculture to take immediate steps to set up and finance a study at the Harrow Research Station. This study should adequately test the performance of the presently available varieties and rootstocks of apples, to determine their suitability for commercial use by the growers in these counties. The Department of Agriculture should also undertake to recommend those varieties and rootstocks that are found to be best suited to the particular conditions in the area.

MINES AND MINING

GUIDELINES FOR YUKON PLACER INDUSTRY

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, the federal Government has developed a set of guidelines affecting the placer mining industry in Yukon Territory which, if implemented, will bring tremendous hardship to this industry and further unemployment to the people of Yukon. In fact an Environment Canada impact study, which has yet to be released officially, shows that the implementation of these guidelines would cause 47 per cent of the placer mines in Yukon to close. Consequently the Environment Canada report suggests that these guidelines be modified for the good of all Yukoners.

This is obviously the reasonable approach, but it appears the Government is not interested in the reasonable approach. Not only does it refuse to release the impact study officially, but it is now editing and tinkering with the study in order to maintain the credibility of those officials who drafted these unworkable guidelines. Clearly, the Government should scrap the proposed guidelines altogether and develop alternatives which are both practical and acceptable to the placer miners. At the very least it should release all relevant materials for public scrutiny, not merely some doctored document designed to help some Ministers and bureaucrats save face.

This is a very important matter because, unlike certain members of the cabinet, the Yukon placer mining industry will have to adhere to both the spirit and the letter of the guidelines, once they are set down.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ONTARIO INDIAN FISHING AGREEMENT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the Ontario Indian Fishing Agreement was signed on December 17, 1982, in Ottawa by the provincial Minister of Natural Resources and the five Ontario Indian organizations. The federal Government refused to sign on the grounds that the Agreement was unconstitutional. It has since come to light that both the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) have indicated that they misunderstood the Agreement and that it is in fact not unconstitutional.

In September the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development committed himself to the principle of the Agreement, including 100 per cent funding of 20 Indian conservation officers to be trained and made responsible to the Minister of Natural Resources. At the December 17 meeting both federal Ministers undertook to conclude the Agreement as soon as possible. They have reaffirmed through the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans their commitment to sign the Agreement. The Agreement has since been amended and sent to them. This was done on February 4. Although there was considerable public debate, the opposition to the signing of the Agreement was greatly reduced, to the point where, at a recent anglers' and hunters' convention, they endorsed the position of the chiefs of the Indian Bands.

It is necessary to go ahead with this before the fishing season starts. There is a constitutional conference coming up on Indian and Native Rights. It would be a gesture of good faith on the part of the Government if in advance of that conference it were to sign that Agreement which now appears to have almost total, if not total support, from all of the people most involved.

HEALTH

CALL FOR COMMITTEE ON GENETIC ENGINEERING AND BIOTECHNOLOGY

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, it is urgent and indeed essential that the federal Government take positive steps to promote the growth of research and development in the field of biotechnology. One manner in which this can be accomplished is through the formation of a House of Commons Standing Committee or Subcommittee on genetic engineering and biotechnology. Such a committee would regularly call on scientists and industrialists who are expert in these areas, for advice and direction in order to supply the Government with ongoing recommendations in this rapidly escalating field.

Second, I would urge the Government to reconsider its intention to turn down an application to host the proposed International Centre for Genetic Engineering and Biotechnology which is being sponsored by the United Nations Industrial Development Organization. Granted, such a centre would direct research and training in biotechnology toward the specific needs of developing countries, but this centre would be a world class research institute attracting scientists of international stature. Investment in such a project would have effective spin-offs for the biotechnology industry in Canada. It would be a catalyst for the application of science and technology in the numerous industries with a biological orientation, while at the same time it would give positive help to fill the social and economic needs of developing countries.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REFERENCES TO CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION PRODUCER

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, some years ago the then Member for Leeds noted for the first time in this House the name of CBC producer Mark Starowicz in connection with the expelled KGB agent, Konstantin Geyvandov, who masqueraded in Ottawa as a Soviet journalist. Two years later the Attorney General of Ontario quoted in the Legislature an RCMP document according to which a Canadian media person over a period of five years was selling Geyvandov reports at clandestine meetings. Next day CBC producer Mark Starowicz identified himself as the person who, between 1970 and 1973, had accepted money for reports written for a Soviet correspondent in Ottawa.

Three months later Peter Worthington published excerpts from an RCMP document dated March 24, 1976, as well as this passage:

The RCMP report says Pravda's man in Ottawa, Geyvandov, was expelled from Canada after persuading a Canadian journalist to act on behalf of Soviet interests when reporting Canadian political events.

Mr. Worthington, as well as the Toronto Sun, were promptly charged under the Official Secrets Act. Needless to say, the mercenary agent of influence receiving rubles for services rendered was not charged.

I am strongly inclined to believe that the Canadian media person in the McMurtry statement and the Canadian journalist in the report referred to by Mr. Worthington are the same person. I wrote about it to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan). He is reluctant to reveal the man's identity. In the meantime, CBC keeps on its payroll a senior executive who, by his own admission, was also on the payroll of a Soviet official and who, I strongly suspect, is the same person identified by the RCMP as acting on behalf of Soviet interests.

I do not believe at this stage that the Liberal Government with its track record—

Madam Speaker: Order.

BROADCASTING

PROVISION OF FUNDS FOR NATIVE BROADCASTERS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, the Government's latest broadcasting announcement contains a few new policy initiatives, some recognition of technological reality, and a whole lot of rhetoric designed to make policy inertia sound like dynamic action. Nowhere is that façade of dynamism more transparent than in the call of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) for a new native peoples' thrust in broadcasting policy.

Two years ago next month, the CRTC granted the Council of Yukon Indians and the Dene Nation a licence to distribute radio and television services in the North via the Cancom satellite system. The CRTC made clear in that decision what everybody else already knew, that, if native broadcasting were going to exist, funding would have to be provided by the federal Government. The Government has had comprehensive funding proposals for native broadcasting in front of it for almost two years and has been apologizing for delays in acting on them for almost a year and a half.

The channels are there, the personnel have been trained, and the ideas and programs are ready to be developed. Let us cut out the rhetoric and provide native broadcasters with the long-term funds which they have been promised.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—CANADIAN POSITION ON POSSIBLE CEASEFIRE DURING PAPAL VISIT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): My question, Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and of the Secretary of State for External Affairs—there is not even a quarter of Cabinet here—is directed to the Minister of State for foreign affairs.

This Sunday, March 6, His Holiness the Pope, will visit El Salvador. The guerrilla or rebel movement there suggested or agreed to a ceasefire while the Pope was visiting El Salvador. The whole of Central America, of course, is a dangerous area. We have just seen the kind of obnoxious behaviour which is occurring in Guatemala just before his visit there. Has the Canadian Government made representations to the Government of El Salvador, which has refused to have a ceasefire on Sunday? Have we made representations urging it to do so? If we have not, why have we not? Are we intervening in the matter at all?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member must know that the Canadian Government is extremely concerned about the situation in El Salvador and is showing a continuing interest in the subject. In fact, a few weeks ago, we received the Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs of El Salvador and informed him of our concern, especially with respect to the general human rights situation in his country.

Futhermore, as the Hon. Member may know, we have now submitted a draft resolution to the U.N. Commission on Human Rights in Geneva, in which we are supporting as much as possible the conclusions of the U.N. Special Attaché on the human rights question in El Salvador, and we have tried to submit a resolution that would be endorsed by as many countries as possible in the international community.

[English]

CONTENT OF CANADIAN RESOLUTION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question was specifically about the visit of His Holiness, the Pope, to El Salvador this Sunday, and on whether the Canadian Government has taken any interest in his safety by making a representation to the Government of El Salvador that it declare a ceasefire while His Holiness is there, in response to the same suggestion from the guerrilla side. The Minister has not answered that, and I would like him to do so.

The Minister mentioned the resolution which Canada introduced at the U.N. Commission on Human Rights. There has been a wave of protest across the country about the fact that the resolution is weak. It was no teeth. It fails to call for any political dialogue between the Government of El Salvador and the rebel forces there. Why has the Government in its resolution not called for a political dialogue between the contending forces in El Salvador? This is the only way that human rights violations will cease. Why have we not done that? Are we opposed to such a dialogue? Are we urging such a dialogue on the United States? If the Minister would deal with both those issues, I would appreciate it.

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, regarding the U.N. resolution presented to the U.N. Commission on Human Rights, it is a draft resolution which we are negotiating with a number of other delegations. As far as appealing to the parties to initiate a political dialogue, we are certainly prepared to include that aspect in our resolution, and we are also prepared to appeal to the international community to cease all military aid to El Salvador. Therefore, as far as the first half of the question is concerned, namely, whether we have made any direct representation recently, urging a cease-fire during the Pope's visit to El Salvador, I can inform the Hon. Member that we are urging the Salvadorean parties to initiate a cease-fire, without specifying any particular events to justify doing so. The Pope's visit as such should not be grounds for bringing about a cease-fire which we have been seeking for quite some time.

• (1120)

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I gather from the Minister's reply that we have not made representations to El Salvador in connection with the visit of His Holiness the Pope. I can assure the Minister that there are many hundreds of thousands of people in this country who are very concerned about the Pope's safety, and I think representations should be made today.

PARLIAMENTARY SUBCOMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. The final report of the Subcommittee on Canada's relations with Latin America and the Caribbean was tabled on November 30, 1982. The Minister will know that report asked the Government to make a written response to the Committee's recommendations and to schedule a day's debate in the House, the same treatment accorded to the Committee on North South Relations. Three months have passed and we have had no response to the recommendations, although the Prime Minister indicated he favoured our joining the OAS but he was just waiting for a report from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can the Minister tell the House if the Government is going to observe that request by making a written response to the Subcommittee's recommendations, and schedule a debate in the House on the report? Further, what is the position on the OAS? Are we going to have an answer on the recommendations of the majority, in that area?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I am indeed aware of the contents of the report of the Sub-Committee of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, which examines Canada's policy on Latin America. After the report was published, it was said on several occasions, and in fact I myself made this clear, that we were very impressed with the excellent work done by the members of this committee. However, I am not in a position today to give exact dates for our response to the committee's report, but I think it would be reasonable to assume that such response will be forthcoming by the beginning of this summer.

AIRPORTS

SALE OF SURPLUS EXPROPRIATED LANDS AT MIRABEL

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works regarding the sale of land at Mirabel. Mr. J. P. Goyer, head of the Canada Lands Company, has issued a notice to tenants of surplus Mirabel lands to the effect that those wishing to purchase the property they occupy must put down a 5 per cent deposit immediately and arrange for full payment within 30 days. If they do not, the deposit is lost. Can the Minister say if this is accurate?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am not familiar with those facts. I will look into this and report.

IMPOSITION OF TIME LIMIT ON PROSPECTIVE PURCHASERS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I am amazed that the Minister who is responsible for Canada Lands is not aware of how those lands are being disposed of, since it has been brought up in this House so often. Does he feel that 30 days are an adequate amount of time for these tenants to arrange financing to purchase the property? Does he feel it is fair that these people will lose their deposit if they cannot arrange the financing within 30 days?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, obviously I am not in favour of being unfair to anyone. However, I have to be cautious, because the last time the Hon. Member and his former Leader raised this issue, both of them were misinformed and I had to provide both of them with a legal opinion. I would like to check the facts before I try to answer the Hon. Member's allegations.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIR CANADA SEAT SALE—ROLE OF CONTINENTAL AIRLINES OF UNITED STATES

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I think the Minister of Transport is well aware that the United States is holding thousands of Canadian tourists hostage in order to bail out Continental Airlines of the United States. Is the Minister also aware of the possible links this airline has with the CIA, the White House, and the U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board which cancelled Air Canada's discount seat fares and, if so, what is the Canadian Government going to do about it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, obviously I cannot interfere in American policies. I am aware of the power of Continental Airlines, and I am aware of the power of the American Government. But I am a realist, so we have been discussing this for a number of days. At eleven o'clock it was go; it 11:10 it was touch. We are working on it now. I am very attentive to the western interest and to CP Air's interest in that, and my western caucus is following me very closely.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You have nothing to lose, so you are gambling everything.

Mr. Pepin: I am very cautious, particularly about the route that exists between Canada and Australia in the Pacific. That route has been developing for 20-odd years and we are not about to give it away. We are having discussions now and we hope that they will work.

U.S. POSITION ON CANADA'S AIR AGREEMENTS WITH OTHER NATIONS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, as everyone knows, Continental Airlines wants to cut Canadian traffic to the Orient because it has lost business since the end of the Vietnam War.

I know that negotiations are extremely sensitive at the moment, but I should like to know in greater detail what action the Canadian Government proposes to take to prevent United States authorities from interfering in Canadian airline policy and our foreign relations and treaties, and transport relations with Australia?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, "interfering" is not really the right word. There is a border between Canada and the United States. It is undefended. We have to negotiate with the United States in order to ensure that trans-border routes are established between the two countries, and in order to maximize communications between the people of our two countries. This is terribly difficult because of the geography and the numbers involved. The population of the United States is ten times that of Canada; consequently, to the United States, Canadian points are but an extension of their hub and spoke system. To us, each of these routes is single; it has to be developed, it has to be fed, and it has to be viable.

Some Americans do not understand that too well, and I do not blame them. It is the right of a big power not to understand the rights of smaller powers. That is why, for a number of years now, we have been discussing this. We are now into the seventh round of discussions on air relationships with the Americans. We have failed, up to now. We feel that they do not understand our case, and they feel that we are dragging our feet.

This is a symbol of what can happen. In their instance they have tied a decision on Air Canada and American Airlines' special fares to a resolution of the question of Continental. We are being careful because, in the resolution of the Continental question, they might establish beach-heads or points of principle with which we do not want to live. That is why the negotiation is quite complicated. It is very difficult, but we hope that good sense will prevail and that people will be able to travel.

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, the Minister is too diplomatic to mention the fact that deep philosophical differences are involved as well. There is a difference between the regulation and protection of our airlines and the deregulation policy of the United States which has left many American airlines flat broke and in hock to the bank. I am not interested in saving Continental Airlines in order to save the Rockefellers, and neither are other Canadians.

DANGER PRESENTED BY U.S. POSITION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister to reassure the House that no beachheads will be established on the Canada-Australia line. If we allow U.S. airlines to siphon off Canadian traffic to Australia, how soon will United States authorities be up here trying to siphon off Canadian traffic to Europe?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his advice. I had thought of a number of these things, if not all of them, before. The difficulty now is that we are trying to take three major points into account. First of all, there are the 100,000 people who had made plans to go to the United States to see Aunt Annie and Uncle Charles, and so on. We are mindful of that, and we are mindful of the route that I indicated, the Pacific

CP Air route. Also we are mindful of the general mood, climate or atmosphere of Canada-United States relationships. We are trying to combine that, shake it well, and serve it dry.

• (1130)

PLIGHT OF WEEKEND TRAVELLERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I have a brief supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Philosophy to one side for a moment, can the Minister tell those Canadians who are planning or hoping to travel later today whether or not they will be able to, and briefly can he indicate the nature of the proposal made by the United States late last night?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, on the first question, I cannot really say. I think sometime after twelve, one or two o'clock, we will have to cut whatever it is that we cut.

An Hon. Member: Bait.

Mr. Pepin: Cut bait. Let us say two o'clock, but the problem on Continental is that in the many conversations to which I have referred, with Mr. Harman, the Canadian negotiator, or I directly with Mr. Trent of the Transportation Department of the United States, reference was constantly made to mirror image. I understood that to mean that we would give Continental the equivalent or the mirror image of what Canada has on the Pacific. It is a strange mirror, because it tends to agrandize what it is supposed to reflect. They have been asking for much more than the mirror image. The name of the game has been to reduce that and bring it back to the normal job of a mirror, which is to reflect reality.

SUGGESTED NEGOTIATION OF OVER-ALL CANADA-UNITED STATES PROTOCOL

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. In view of the 100,000 Canadians who are on pins and needles with regard to their travel plans, and who must be very happy that the United States is our friend, not our enemy, will the Minister of Transport have his officials instigate negotiations once this immediate problem is resolved with the United States, to arrive at some kind of protocol whereby this kind of ham-fisted action will not occur again?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, to speak very frankly and confidentially on this subject—

Mr. Crosbie: We won't say a word.

Mr. Pepin: No, you don't. Traditionally, negotiating with the Americans has always been very complicated because power in the United States is divided among many people, agencies, departments and so on. It is always very complicated. If I look back 15 years, we have always had in the United States a number of people in the American administration or in Congress who sympathized with Canada, who had a knowledge of it, who understood and made it a point of honour for them to understand our situation. Maybe through lack of effort on my part, or on our part generally, we do not find this commodity as often as we did in the past. The Ambassador is helping tremendously in establishing that good relationship.

In air transportation, because of this crisis on Continental we may have reached a number of them by constantly repeating that Canada is not the United States, that what is good for the United States is not necessarily good for Canada. They are not even sure their deregulation is good for the United States, so how can we go ahead and accept that? The present situation has given us plenty of opportunity to contact a great number of people in the United States. Maybe it will be a blessing in disguise, the fact that we have reached so many of them.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

DATE OF LEGISLATION'S PROCLAMATION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister. Some time ago the President of the Treasury Board, who is responsible for the administration of freedom of information and, I gather, privacy, indicated that Bill C-43 would be proclaimed and put into law on April 1, 1983. Is that still the intention of the Government?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I apologize, but I do not know the answer to that. Perhaps my hon. friend could ask it again on Monday when the Ministers will be here.

NOMINATION OF COMMISSIONERS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister another question with respect to Bill C-43. There are now public stories appearing in the public press about the nominations of the Government for the positions of Information Commissioner and Privacy Commissioner. It is important with respect to those two nominations that these matters not be dissipated in rumour, and that those people be appointed prior to April 1 which, as far as I know, is still the date the Government has in mind, and the Acting Prime Minister will check that.

Will he also undertake to consult with his colleagues and whatever officials are necessary in order to make the appropriate announcements at the earliest possible date prior to the proclamation of the statute, so that those individuals can be in place before that time?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton—in fact, he can check with his Parliamentary House

Leader—that I have already initiated negotiations with the representatives of the two Opposition parties, since the appointment of the Information Commissioner requires a joint resolution of the House of Commons and the Senate. I know that my counterpart in the Senate is doing the same. We are now at the consultation stage. Obviously, sooner or later a joint resolution will have to be presented in the House. Up to now, a number of Members have indicated that they were not necessarily opposed to the proposals but would like to express certain views.

However, our parliamentary schedule is pretty full. We have some very urgent bills that must be adopted before we consider representations on any other motion, so that as soon as we have dealt with the urgent legislation, and if we get a consensus in both the Senate and the House of Commons, we shall then table the appropriate joint resolution regarding this important appointment.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF FORMER RCMP CONSTABLE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a couple of security matters which have been before the House before, that I would like to get cleared up. My first question is for the Minister of Justice in his role as Attorney General. Since November 23 last, when it was publicly announced that the matter had been placed in his hands, the Minister of Justice has been pleading ignorance about the case of Long Knife, the pseudonym for the ex-RCMP corporal who recently admitted selling out a potential Canadian double agent to the Soviets for more than $4,000. I do not know how much more bluntly, simply, or directly, I can put it to the Minister: Will James Morrison be charged or not?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I have to tell the Hon. Member that I have still not received a report from my Department on this matter. Until such time as the matter is brought before me, I am not in a position to be able to make a decision.

Mr. Lawrence: That is almost unbelievable, but I guess not.

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF GOUZENKO INQUIRY EXHIBITS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. It is now over 18 months since the Gouzenko trancripts were released and we were told an internal departmental inquiry was underway which would report back to the House and to the Minister as to whether the actual exhibits and transcripts, the documentation of 30 years ago which Gouzenko took out of the Russian Embassy, should or should not be released. Will they be released, or will they not be released?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member indicated in his question, the transcripts have already been made public. The review process has turned its attention now to a collection of materials which are of great interest to the public that were generated by various Government Departments in the course of the hearings. These materials are contained, of course, right across the whole of the Government, not in one place. This inquiry, which I think is of great value and should be given priority, is underway now. As those documents are reviewed for the purpose of gathering them to make them public, the review will then turn its attention to the numerous exhibits to which the Hon. Member referred. It is a matter to which attention is being given.

• (1140)

If there were more resources available for allocations, it would go more quickly. But the job is being done, and it is being done seriously. I hope very shortly it will be possible to make public all the internal material generated within the Government in relation to the hearings, because there have been many requests for it.

INDUSTRY

ACCESS TO TECHNOLOGY CONFERENCE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State of External Affairs I will direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the Minister knows, his Government is hosting a conference in Ottawa starting on Monday, called "Hi Tech 83", to promote increased participation by Canadian manufacturers in foreign, defence, and related high-tech areas. The Government has refused to release information requested by Members of Parliament and has restricted their access to this conference. Will the Minister tell the House why such secrecy is being used, and what the Government is hiding?

Miss MacDonald: It is the age of information.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, in the absence of my colleague I will take notice of the question and I will try to get an answer back for the Hon. Member.

PROMOTION OF ARMS SALES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Transport in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister. Since the Government has invited to this secret conference not only U.S. military officials and Canadian trade commissioners from sixty posts abroad, including Chile, Argentina, South Korea, and the Phillipines—governments with shockingly bad records of vital repression against their own people—will the Minister tell us why the taxpayers' money is being used to promote arms sales abroad, and especially why the Government is promoting high-tech arms sales to such repressive governments as Chile, Argentina, South Korea, and the Phillipines? Will the Minister also tell us how this conference fits into U.S. military plans?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, quite obviously I do not know the exact answer to this question, but a reflection comes to mind. If Canada were going to trade only with countries that were universally loved in Canada, Canada would not trade much. Presumably some of my friends in the New Democratic Party would probably indicate that we should break commercial relations with the United States quite regularly. That is my reflection for today. If you trade only with countries you love, you diminish singularly your chances of economic wealth. As different Canadians love and dislike different countries, the choice would be quite difficult to make.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—REQUEST THAT PRESIDENT BE INVITED TO CANADA

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs or whomever will be taking his place in the House today. In view of the fact the Government feted and honoured in various ways the Foreign Minister from Nicaragua, does the Government plan to extend an invitation to President Majano of El Salvador to come to Canada to have some discussions, and present his point of view with respect to the crisis in that country, and, if so, has any overture been made?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, as I said earlier today in my first reply, three weeks ago we met with the Deputy Minister of External Affairs of El Salvador for the purpose of continuing the dialogue with the authorities of this country. Our own Assistant Deputy Secretary for External Affairs went to El Salvador about two months ago, I believe it was last December, to pursue this dialogue with the Salvadorean authorities.

[English]

PROVISION OF EXTERNAL AID

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. He must be well aware of the fact that aid in the millions of dollars is still being extended to Nicaragua, yet El Salvador, which has chosen the democratic route and plans a general election later this year, in December, has been virtually cut off from all aid. Would the Minister indicate whether this matter is being reconsidered and, if not, how can he justify such aid to a socialistic country such as Nicaragua and no aid, to speak of, to a country that has opted for democracy?

[Translation]

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to have forgotten that fighting is going on at the present time inside Salvadorean territory, and we have every reason to believe that foreign military support is involved. Generally speaking, Canada's policy has always been to avoid any involvement with countries where armed conflicts or civil wars involve rebel movements and actual fighting. As far as aid to Nicaragua is concerned, I believe this country is among the poorest in the world, and that whatever its political affiliation, it has a stable government and its reconstruction plan needs the assistance of all undustrialized countries, and I believe that Canada is fulfilling its role in the international community as a responsible partner by providing assistance to this country.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INVITATION TO EL SALVADOR

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (External Relations) and is supplementary to the question put by the Member for York-Peel, which concerned an invitation sent to President Magana of El Salvador to visit Canada. If we intend to invite the real head of Government of El Salvador, I would suggest to the Minister of State that perhaps it would be better to invite General Garcia and Mr. Roberto Da Buisson, who are the two real bosses of El Salvador, not the President.

Hon. Charles Lapointe (Minister of State (External Relations)): Madam Speaker, I think these two questions have amply demonstrated our problems in sending an invitation to El Salvador.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—DEPUTY MINISTER'S MEMORANDUM OF JANUARY 15, 1981

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance respecting his Deputy Minister. Can he tell us whether his Deputy Minister received a reply to his Deputy Minister's memorandum of January 15, 1981, to his then Minister, respecting the Gillespie affair?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, obviously this is a question which should be addressed to the Minister of Energy.

Mr. Crosbie: Cover up.

ADVICE ON POSSIBLE BREACH OF MINISTERIAL CONDUCT GUIDELINES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Energy will recall that I asked him the other day whether there had been a reply to the request that the now Minister of Finance act or comment on the memorandum of January 15, 1981, from his then and present Deputy Minister, Mr. Mickey Cohen. The Minister, I am sure, is interested in knowing all of the details and revealing them to the House. Has he asked his colleague, the present Minister of Finance, whether that colleague acted on the advice given to him in the January 15, 1981, memorandum that there was an action in breach of the conflict of interest guidelines respecting Mr. Alastair Gillespie? What was the action taken by the present Minister of Finance?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have checked this question of the Hon. Member and I think this note was mentioned on the memorandum. There was no discussion about it with the Minister and this note has not been followed up by anybody else.

Mr. Lawrence: Ping pong.

ROLE OF FORMER ENERGY MINISTER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, just so I can be clear about this, is the Minister telling us that the present Minister of Finance was advised on January 15 by his Deputy Minister, as indicated in a document tabled in this House, of dealings in breach of the conflict of interest guidelines, and that Minister did nothing about it? Is that what he is telling us?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, that is not what I said. I said there was no discussion about it with the Minister and that the note that was in the dossier was not brought to his attention.

AIR TRANSPORT

WINNIPEG AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL CENTRE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Manitobans generally were shocked to learn this morning of the proposed shut down of the air traffic control centre in Winnipeg. The services of that centre are to be relocated in both Toronto and Edmonton. On top of that there is the loss of some 250 jobs to the Province of Manitoba, more specifically to the City of Winnipeg. This proposed move cannot be allowed to happen at this time. Winnipeg has asked for a new control centre to be built, and six new control centres have been built across Canada. Could the Minister intervene to put a stop to this insane action which will severely damage the economy in Manitoba and also hurt the whole aviation industry in the Province?

• (1150)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to comfort my hon. friend for the weekend. I will read a note which I have just received. It states, "There is no talk by Transport Canada officials of a permanent move from Winnipeg. Stop. All that is being considered is a temporary relocation of controllers while asbestos problems are being resolved to protect controllers' own health."

Some Hon. Members: Stop.

Mr. Pepin: Stop.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Watch those stops.

TEMPORARY RELOCATION OF CONTROLLERS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Transport. His answer, which he received just a few minutes ago in the form of that note, is reassuring. Can he indicate to the House the length of the temporary relocation, and will this "temporary relocation" be carried out in Edmonton and Winnipeg, as the information available to me has indicated? Lastly, if it is the case that there will be construction, as is my assumption from his answer, could he also indicate when the construction of this new terminal or facility will be started in Manitoba?

Mr. Nielsen: Got another telegram?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I cannot do that, but I will make sure that my hon. friend has the answer before the end of the morning. This asbestos situation has created problems in all airports. Taking it off walls, ceilings and floors has necessitated some adjustments. What is taking place in Winnipeg also took place in Ottawa some days ago. I will inform the Hon. Member of the exact number of days it will take to adjust to this necessity.

FINANCE

INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF BUDGET PRESENTATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who, on a number of occasions, has acknowledged that unemployment levels for this year will remain at very high levels. The Minister will know that if one factors in the number of people entering the job market for the first time this year, and recognizing the number of jobs that are being permanently lost, one will find that, simply to maintain the status quo, new jobs will have to be created to the extent of 5.5 per cent above the existing level.

We have been listening for many months now as the Minister has promised to take stimulative measures with regard to the economy by a variety of techniques. We were hoping to have a budget, first of all, at the end of February. Then we were hopeful that it would be in March. Now rumours are that the Minister is probably considering April. Will the Minister of Finance please give a clear message to the people of Canada on when he will make that budget statement so that we can begin the process of rebuilding the country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am certainly very eager to present a budget. I can indicate to you that if the House were to proceed expeditiously with the various Bills dealing with the Income Tax Act and borrowing authority, it would be easier to proceed with a budget shortly thereafter, but quite clearly the debate on those Bills is dragging. The debate has been proceeding for days and days and we still do not see the end. I can tell the Hon. Member that I am just as eager to introduce a budget as he is eager to hear one.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Produce.

Mr. Lalonde: We will see when it can be done, when it will be convenient for all concerned.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I do not suppose that the Hon. Member is suggesting that the Opposition is holding up any of the Bills. When the Government is asking for $19 billion after only two or three days of discussion, I certainly do not think it amounts to holding up any Bill.

ROYAL BANK POLICY OF SEIZING FARMS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question, which is directed to the Minister of Finance, relates to the action of the Royal Bank of Canada. The Minister will probably be one of the most able in the House to appreciate the value of the family farm, having himself been part of a family which has lived on the land for many generations. Does the Minister support the new policy of the Royal Bank of Canada whereby it will foreclose on a family farm and will then be prepared to lease or rent the land back to its original owner as a way of adjusting to these difficult times?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is not so much a matter of whether I support or oppose the policy; rather, it is a matter of policy decided by a private institution. What I have noticed from the press reports on this plan of the Royal Bank is that it has indeed been very well received by some spokesmen for the agricultural and farming community who said that this would at least ensure that families would remain on the farm. They have hoped that there would be some arrangement whereby these families could return to their farms when their financial situation improves, rather than having them removed from the farms they have occupied for many years, and sometimes for generations.

Some farming community spokesmen have noted that the Royal Bank has acted in a very humane way compared to the alternative of removing the people from the farms they have occupied for years. It is a matter of judgment, and I will not stand up here and condemn the Royal Bank for doing this. It is a matter for people to decide as to whether they would rather have the Bank exercise its full right rather than lease back the farms to the families concerned. Obviously and ideally, my objective is to reduce interest rates in this country and ease the interest rate burden on farmers and small-businessmen and others. The Hon. Member will have noticed that yesterday the Bank of Canada rate was the lowest in four and a half years. That is action which will benefit the farmers as well as everyone else in the community, and we will proceed with the kind of action which I hope will lead to lower interest rates and make things easier for everyone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER PROGRAM FOR STUDENTS—APPLICATION CLOSING DATE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I have received representations from my constituency with respect to the closing date for applications for the various elements of the Summer Canada Program. I suppose I would like to address my question to the Acting Prime Minister of the day and request that he draw the fact to the attention of the Minister of Employment and Immigration that there has been no advertising of this Program and its closing date in many rural areas. I would ask whether the Minister would extend the date for receiving eligible applications for all elements of the Program for at least two additional weeks?

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that many Government Members have also made representations to the Minister of Employment and Immigration regarding this possibility. The proposal has been analyzed within the Department and we are certainly going to examine it and consider the feasibility of extending the deadline for a few days after March 4. I can inform the Hon. Member right now that departmental employees across Canada are considering this possibility and that projects will be accepted after March 4.

[English]

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF CLOSING DATE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. The officials of the Department in the various areas of Canada cannot act unilaterally and must have authority from the Minister in charge because he is the one over whose signature the regulations and directives have come down to these people. Without ministerial authority and prompt ministerial decision, it will be impossible for many deserving people to take advantage of the various elements of this program. I would urge the Minister to act immediately by extending the closing date by a minimum of two weeks so that the proper publicity and application opportunity may take place. Would he please make that representation to the Minister?

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I will try to answer the Hon. Member's question more slowly this time. I said just now that representations had been made to the Department and that employees of the Department of Employment and Immigration across Canada were informed that they would be able to accept applications after March 4.

PENITENTIARIES

EDMONTON INSTITUTION—PLACEMENT OF INMATES IN DOUBLE CELLS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, it has been announced that there is to be some doubling up of prisoners who are inmates in the cells of the Edmonton Institution. To what extent is it intended that this be carried out? Is the Minister satisfied that it is proper policy, in view of the objections of both the guards and the inmates?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I think that reports have greatly exaggerated the amount of doubling which is occurring in the institution.

Miss MacDonald: Oh?

Mr. Kaplan: There are close to 11,000 inmates in federal penitentiaries. Less than 400 are in double cells. This compares very favourably with any other penitentiary or correctional system in our country. It is certainly much better than that found in Provinces and which I have viewed directly. Also, we have a far lower crowding problem, if I can put it that way, than any system at all in the United States. Still, I am not happy about it. I am looking for alternative ways of being able to maintain our policy of having a separate cell for every inmate.

The difficulty now is that there has been a rapid increase in the inmate population, which is really the result of the imposition of longer sentences and of a far more conservative policy by the National Parole Board than has ever existed in the past. Inmates who apply for parole are being released at only one-half the rate that they were being released ten years ago.

• (1200)

There is a construction program under way. It will not provide an immediate solution because we are not in a position to open any of these institutions in the immediate short term. I am concerned about the problem; I am looking for solutions, and it is not my intention to institute double-bunking as a permanent feature of the federal penitentiary system.

THE SENATE

RUMOURED APPOINTMENT OF ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister and concerns another federal institution in this country, the other place. It is based on a rumour emanating from a highly placed source in this House that Mr. Alastair Gillespie is being appointed to the Senate. Could the Acting Prime Minister rise at once and reassure this House and the country at large that there is absolutely no foundation to this rumour?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is well known that under any regime, that of the Hon. Member for Yellowhead as well as this one, appointments to the Senate are the exclusive prerogative of the Prime Minister, and comments on those appointments are not particularly welcomed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF LAW CLERK AND PARLIAMENTARY COUNSEL AND OF CLERK ASSISTANTS

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty to inform the House that the Governor in Council has appointed Marcel Pelletier, Q.C., as Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel and P. A. C. Laundy and Robert Marleau as Clerk Assistants of the House of Commons.

I must say that I am very sorry to see Mr. Pelletier leave the Office of the House, where he worked for thirteen years. I wish to express my warm appreciation for the services he has rendered to the House of Commons of Canada. His competence and his vast knowledge of parliamentary procedure as well as his cheerful and calm disposition have made it a great pleasure to work with him. I am sure that all Hon. Members will agree that he leaves behind him a tradition of tremendous intellectual integrity and unconditional dedication to the institution he has served so well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Fortunately for us, he is not leaving us altogether. In his new duties as Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, one of his tasks will be to forge links between his new office and his former one, so as to improve the capabilities of the Office by establishing the necessary liaison and structured exchanges.

[English]

It is with much regret but much gratitude that I wish Mr. Marcel Pelletier well in his new function as Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel. I am only comforted by the thought that in his new responsibility he will still be able to serve the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I know it is not customary to comment on announcements from the Chair but I rise to associate the Opposition wholeheartedly and completely with every comment you have made with respect to Mr. Pelletier.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, on behalf of my party I also wish Mr. Pelletier well in all his future endeavours. I am sure he will handle them as well as he has served this House.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I would like to add that I am happy to see my Opposition friends appreciate this judicious decision by Cabinet, since these appointments are made by Order in Council. Furthermore, I would like to extend my best wishes to Mr. Pelletier and to our new Clerk Assistants who, I am sure, will serve the House and its Members very well in their new functions.

[English]

Madam Speaker: Now may I welcome to their new responsibilities Mr. Laundy and Mr. Marleau as Clerk Assistants. They both come to their new responsibilities in the full knowledge of the importance and difficulties of that function. Of course, their performance up until now at the Table and elsewhere is a guarantee to us all that we do have a very strong team to assist the Chair and the House in its proceedings. Welcome to you both, and congratulations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

As we have been asking for some time why this information has not been given to the Canadian public, I am getting more curious all the time as to why it is being hidden.

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed from Monday, February 28, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Skelly, (p. 22957).

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, Bill C-143, the borrowing authority for $19 billion, is another illustration of the ineptitude and irresponsibility to the taxpayer of the present Liberal Government. Once again the Liberal Government is in need of funds, but funds which so far have no direction. Where and how this enormous sum is to be spent is yet to be stated. Projected shortfalls seem to be constant with the current Government.

The present deficit is approximately $23.6 billion and the estimated deficit for the fiscal year 1983-84 is $29 billion. The Government has asked the Canadian people to follow a program of restraint, although the Government itself is unable to control its spending. The attitude is: "Don't do as I do, do as I say"

There are a number of occurrences which exemplify my point. On November 17 I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) if he could give any indication of what the total cost will be to administer the Charter of Rights and patriate the Constitution. The Minister evaded the question. I followed up with a question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) as to whether he has conducted a cost-benefit analysis of patriating the Constitution. He evaded the question as well.

Canadians have a right to answers to questions about how much of their tax dollars are being spent and on what. They have a right to know what benefits these expenditures will bring them. The Auditor General has reported sloppy accounting procedures in the Government. It was found that the Government over-estimated its worth by $11 billion, assets are $4 billion less than projected and liabilities are in fact $12 billion more than were outlined.

Once again the Government is proving itself to be irresponsible to Canadian taxpayers as it persists with blank-cheque spending. No cost-benefit analysis has been done. The Government is voting for legislation on expenditure programs about which it does not have any idea of the cost involved.

The problem is escalated in that expenditures are being advocated of which no one seems to be aware and which certainly are not approved by the legislature. I ask that the Auditor General be requested to review legislation in aid of providing an estimate before the House is asked to vote on expenditures. Members do not actually know for what they are voting.

Negligence on the part of the Government has given rise to various inefficient and costly Government policies which can readily be cited. Complications in the Charter of Rights have caused an outlay of $102,000 for a contract from the Justice Department to study this entangled state of affairs at the University of Ottawa. Coupled with this expense is a $1.8 million increase in administrative costs and related expenses for the proclamation of the Constitution which are also to be borne by the Justice Department. Where is the cost accounting? Who knows how much more wasteful expenditure will be permitted while jobless Canadians suffer because of this flagrant exhaustion of funds that should be put to better use for their benefit?

To add insult to injury, the official languages program is costing more than $448 million annually. Apparently there is no actual figure available. Either no one knows or no one is willing to let the cost be known of trying to force bilingualism on an unwilling work force. In 1982 one Member of the Liberal work force was most willing to learn French. Janet Smith, an assistant secretary to the Cabinet, was sent to Nice in Southern France for four months to learn French. The cost to the taxpayer of this Riviera education was $12,000 plus Ms. Smith's salary, which is in the range of $60,000 to $70,000 per year.

Friends of mine in the federal civil service in Ottawa, after receiving a language diagnostic analysis, were informed that it will take 11 months to learn the French language. They were sent back to the Department and are dead-ended. They will only be trained for eight months. If you work for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), you are sent to the South of France.

Between September, 1981 and August, 1982 another civil servant, this time a field officer in the Barrie office of the Department of National Health and Welfare's income security program, attended a French language training course in Toronto at the expense of the taxpayer. The cost to the Government in wages was between $22,000 and $25,000, plus the same amount in wages for this individual's replacement employed in an acting position. The accommodation expense for 11 months totalled $9,295 plus $6,000 in other expenses. This is another example of the double standard of the Liberal Party. Those who cannot learn the French language in eight months are dead-ended. Their careers are finished. Others receive expense accounts and apartments and are sent to the south of France.

The translation of 276 million words at 24 cents cost Canadians $66 million last year. Training for the Armed Forces will cost $59 million. Between 1973 and 1977, $268 million was spent to make only 8,300 civil servants proficient in a second language. Although billions of dollars have been spent, only some 14,000 public servants have become bilingual.

These constitute the visible costs only. To date no one has recorded the indirect costs that a forced bilingual program has on private companies which must deal with the federal Government. Incidentally, the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) has legislation to deal with the private sector. If they do not comply with the Official Languages Act, they will receive jail sentences and fines. How does one put a dollar figure on lost time and misinformation because of communication restrictions? The Members of this House should decide whether Canadians would prefer to stand in the soup lines and ask for soup or be able to ask for it in either language.

The ominous dissipation of public funds by this Government has been exemplified time and time again. Illustrative of this fact in broader terms is the national deficit which has been revised twice since November 1981 from $10 billion to $25 billion. This is an increase of 250 per cent. The projected figure for the upcoming fiscal year is $29 billion. Bill C-143 is breaking all records. It is the largest borrowing Bill in Canadian history. Is this the example the Government is setting for the public?

I stand again today to make an earnest appeal to the Government to find a system of cost-benefit analysis before enacting any further blank-cheque legislation. Canadians want to know the benefits accrued to them through their ever-increasing tax dollars.

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-143 is only two pages in length but it speaks volumes about our current financial state in Canada.

Since the November, 1981 budget when the 1982-83 fiscal deficit was estimated to be $10 billion, we have seen an incompetent Government plundering our Treasury and watched the deficit increase by 260 per cent.

While the Government has argued that much of this extra funding has been needed to finance cost increases in programs related to the recession—for example, increased UIC and welfare payments—the problem is much deeper than that. It is the culmination of 15 years in which the size of the Government has increased at a rate much faster than the ability of Parliament effectively to manage it. What has resulted is a system that is cumbersome, expensive, inefficient and virtually unmanageable.

In a recent column by W. A. Wilson in the Saturday, February 26 Ottawa Citizen, he said and I quote:

• (1220)

The Government now makes a determined and dishonest effort to attribute its huge deficit to the decline in revenues brought by the recession, ignoring the fact that it was chronically in deficit for years before the economy turned down. The deficit will not disappear when times improve. Economic recovery will bring tax increases to pay for the excesses that are still going on.

When Government becomes so large after a decade of sprawling, cancerous growth, the fact that recession has no power to force the elimination of fat becomes serious. It matters now in a way that it did not matter when the '60s ended.

This leaves a troubling question: If severe recessions do not force Governments to pare away the wasteful fat, what will do it?

That is a key statement, Mr. Speaker, and I will repeat it:

If severe recessions do not force Governments to pare away the wasteful fat, what will do it?

Every year the Auditor General in his Annual Report to Parliament brings forth new evidence of financial mismanagement and waste. Every year the Government bobs and weaves and soldiers through the criticism and makes vague promises about trying harder next time. And every year we see little action to encourage financial responsibility. This past year the Auditor General spoke of the lack of accountability of the 480-odd corporations in which the Government has an interest. He told us of how PetroCan purchased oil companies at will, without requiring the approval of even the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, much less the Parliament of Canada. Rather than examine these purchases to see how they may or may not improve the lot of Canadians, the Government has treated each and every trip to the consumers' pockets as a triumph.

Spending of Crown Corporations amounted to over $25 billion annually at the end of 1979, and it has been growing steadily ever since, largely as a result of a sort of blank-cheque mentality, the same mindset, the same malignancy, that is destroying our entire federal system. The greatest single obstacle to an economic recovery for Canadians is the wastefulness of the federal Government and the intolerable burden which this has placed on our economic system. If we simply took less out of our economy to pay for mismanagement, then we would not need "injections" by Government to stimulate—or more accurately, "simulate"—demand.

I am not asking the Government to save money by cutting Unemployment Insurance payments or by taking welfare payments away from the needy. I am not saying that we should decrease payments to pensioners. However, we should, and can, manage our existing programs in a more efficient and effective manner without causing suffering by the disadvantaged.

As an example of a program which is mismanaged, I would like to cite the Summer Canada Student Employment Program. Every year the Department of Employment and Immigration allocates many millions of dollars to provide jobs for students. Every summer, the Government also habitually delivers cheques late to some program managers, instructing these individuals to go to a bank and make personal loans to pay program workers who are waiting for their cheques. This has happened every year since I have been associated with the Program in my constituency as a Member of Parliament.

Who is supposed to bear the interest costs on these loans? I wrote to the Minister about this problem last year and in his response he indicated that if the Program sponsor, or manager, would contact one of his officials in Vancouver, they would then be compensated for interest paid on these loans. If the Government proposes to solve our unemployment problems with these make-work programs, you would think it would be well enough organized to at least pay the workers on time. After the Program has become established, as this one has, one would at least expect that Government would have figured out a way of performing this simple task.

It is not simply the interest charges which must cost the Government in this situation. The Minister, of course, must assign someone to administer the payment of these interest charges. There is also considerable cost and frustration caused to the sponsor, and many people in my riding have indicated to me that they will not apply for the Program again because it simply is not worth it. There are just too many problems.

The Department has also become less efficient in another area of the "Summer Canada" Program. In 1981 I knew how much money my constituency would be allocated by January 19, and the deadline for applications was March 16. This gave project sponsors almost two full months to develop worth-while projects and to submit proposals. This year I found out how much my constituency would be allowed on February 25, just a week ago, and the dealdine for submissions is today, March 4. Many of my constituents are only now finding out that there will be a Summer Canada Program. This smacks of gross lack of planning by the Government, if not downright mismanagement. Today, Mr. Speaker, this matter came up in Question Period, and I would urge the Minister to see if he could give us another two weeks before the cut-off dealdine on this Program. One would think that the process would become more efficient as the kinks were ironed out and as established procedures were set up. What has in fact happened is the opposite.

Another such example within the same Department is the Employment Bridging Assistance Program. Last August I wrote to the Minister indicating that this Program was being very poorly administered. I sent him copies of newspaper articles and editorials condemning the fact that participants in this Program were simply not receiving their pay cheques from the federal Government on time, and that this was placing them under considerable hardship. What is interesting is that during this same time there was not one single complaint of late pay cheques issued by private sector companies which were also involved in the Program. The Minister responded to my letter on September 30, saying, and I quote:

As you pointed out in your second and third letters, there have also been legitimate concerns relating to late payments to Employment Bridging Assistance Program participants. Although these will continue to be an unavoidable delay of approximately two weeks while participants' claims are transferred to our manual pay system, because of the tighter administrative control that is now being exercised, there should be no further lengthy delays of the type that occurred in the past.

He goes on to say:

I have been advised as well that courier service is being used to transport claim cards in order to help ensure that participants are paid as quickly as possible.

The problem has not been resolved, Mr. Speaker. Two weeks ago I received a call from a distraught constituent who was participating in the EBA Program. His cheques were still arriving anywhere from four to eight weeks late. The situation has become so serious that many people who joined the Program are now considering dropping out, because when they are collecting Unemployment Insurance, at least they receive their cheques on time, even though they are smaller. Almost all of these people are in desperate financial straits. Some of them have had to borrow from friends and relatives simply to feed themselves and their families while waiting for their cheques.

If this is the result of the Minister's "tighter administrative control", imagine how things operated when the administrative control was less efficient. Even after half a year and the added expense of having a courier service deliver the claim cards to the head office in Vancouver, the Program is so poorly run that participants must wait up to two months to collect their pay. If a private employer involved in these programs had been similarly inefficient, he would probably be out of business by now. But when the Government does it, the employees have no alternative. They must simply wait and hope for the Government cheque to appear some time in the future.

These people are not lazy, Mr. Speaker, they want to work. Everyone who has contacted me about this Program has said that they approve of it because it at least gives them a job. They do not want to simply sit and collect Unemployment Insurance benefits. However, the sloppy administration and poor management of the Department is driving people away from such programs. This is a complete and utter disgrace.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, about two weeks ago I received a news release in my office from the Public Service Alliance of Canada. In the release, the PSAC condemned the Government for its proposal to decentralize the Department of National Health and Welfare as "a totally inexcusable waste" of public funds. It goes on to state that restraint and decentralization are mutually exclusive terms. The 505 positions being moved deal with the administration of the Canada Pension Plan, Family Allowances and Old Age Security benefits. The Government is asking those least able to afford it, the pensioners, to exercise restraint, yet feels no compunction at all in spending large amounts of money in relocating 505 positions for reasons described by the PSAC as "politically motivated". Personnel will be moved from Ottawa to Timmins, Chatham and Peterborough, and from Halifax to Sydney, Nova Scotia. The Vice-President of the Public Service Alliance has said, and I quote:

The decision by Cabinet is a politically motivated plan designed to help improve the chances of the sitting Liberal Members to retain their ridings in the next election.

This is typical of the present administration. When it comes to taking care of Liberal MPs who are about to lose their seats in the next election, or with Peter Stollery, Donald Macdonald, Michael Pitfield and Alastair Gillespie, the Government spares no expense.

The decentralization of National Health and Welfare employees is a perfect example of the Liberal style of governing. They are willing to abuse the system to retain power, but are incapable of effectively using that power for the public good when elected. They have no sense of direction. The Government's effort at restraint is limited to a slogan, "six and five", but it is incapable of putting in place a program which would put substance behind the slogan.

Its continued mismanagement of existing funds and programs has resulted in Bill C-143, a request to borrow a further $19 billion, and that makes the six and five program a farce. No amount of gloss and slick public relations can hide that simple fact. That Bill is an admission of failure by the Government. It has failed to exercise the restraint it urges upon all other Canadians, and by doing so it has failed to provide the economic leadership which this country so desperately needs at this time.

As I said at the beginning of my speech, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-143 is only two pages long, but it speaks volumes about the incompetence of this Government.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the comments of the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) and I must say I agree with the concerns he has raised and the problems he has identified with so many of the direct job-creation programs of the Government. I certainly would like to lend my support to the concerns he has raised.

However, in the few minutes that I have this afternoon I want to focus on the issue before the House now to refer this matter of borrowing $19 billion to committee for further discussion and examination. I would like to list the groups from one constituency in western Canada who have communicated to their Member of Parliament on this matter. Various priests and ministers, mayors and councils, labour councils, chambers of commerce, business and professional groups, church groups, specific unions, community groups and ethnic organizations, service clubs, special interest groups, and a variety of businesses and different individuals have taken time over the last number of days to communicate to a Member of Parliament a simple question to be raised in the House. This is from a community which is experiencing unemployment levels of nearly 30 per cent as defined by Statistics Canada. The question is: What indication is Government giving to justify borrowing $19 billion?

With some reluctance, Mr. Speaker, I have had to respond to each and every inquiry that I do not know. Members of Parliament are unable at this time to determine the Government's priorities when it comes to spending $19 billion. I know the Minister, when he introduced this request some days ago, suggested that we simply have to wait until the Estimates are tabled and then there will be a very clear indication what the priorities and goals of this Government are. Well, I have looked through those Estimates. I discussed them with a number of my colleagues and it is difficult to say, looking at that information, just what the specific goals and objectives of the Government are. Are they to work towards a full employment option? Are they to work towards higher productivity in Canada? Are they to restrain or stimulate the economy? Are they to move more towards the process of Canadianization? One can list a whole number of questions. Yet looking at the Estimates, Mr. Speaker, it is unclear what the Government's priorities are.

Another question usually raised is: What is the Government trying to do? Is it trying to assist us in some direct way? One can lay out the list of job-creation programs which the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin mentioned in his remarks, the alphabet soup of LIPs and FLIPs and BLIPs and NEEDs, a whole list of things that the Government has in place designed to create jobs. But we as Members of Parliament know that that is by and large an ad hoc approach, a band-aid approach. They do put a handful of people to work for a short period of time, hopefully to allow certain people to requalify for UI benefits; but by and large, if we are talking about thousands out of work in a particular region, we are creating jobs for a few hundred and obviously it is not solving the problem.

What frustrates people, Mr. Speaker, is when they read on a regular basis about the millions of dollars going to assist certain firms in bail-outs, or assisting certain firms to reorganize their financial affairs. I am not talking about millions of dollars or tens of millions of dollars; in many cases we are talking about hundreds of millions of dollars which go to a single firm. Dome Petroleum, Chrysler and Massey-Ferguson spring to mind. I could go on because there is a whole variety of firms receiving hundreds of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money to assist them in restructuring their financial obligations so that they can continue in business.

Small businesses and farmers and ranchers, and I suspect fishermen in other parts of Canada, are asking why it is they get no assistance, absolutely nothing, other than being possibly eligible for some of these simplistic make-work programs with all the red tape and hassle and so on that the previous speaker mentioned. Is this what we get? Why do we not get these other forms of assistance? Then, Mr. Speaker, they begin to get very cynical when they see certain businesses collapsing, such as in the forest industry, with thousands of jobs lost, which jobs will not return as the result of restructuring going on in that sector. Then they hear that a certain industry in central Canada will be getting a bail-out to enable thousands of jobs to remain in place. They will get financial assistance to shore up that industry to enable them to continue. That is fine, Mr. Speaker, but the point is that if they are going to do it for one industry, one sector in one region of Canada, what about the other parts of Canada? What about industries in other parts of Canada which some of us would argue get very little assistance? In some cases they get absolutely no assistance at all.

We have been listening to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) saying: "Just wait until the Estimates come out and then you will understand what is going on"; or more recently he is saying the budget will soon be coming down, perhaps in March, maybe April, and then we will get an idea of how the Government plans to spend the $19 billion. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is asking a great deal of the people of Canada, remembering this was the Government whose leader back in 1980, in Toronto, said this Party will not stand by and let the recession come. Unfortunately, he meant it. The Government did a whole number of things to ensure that the recession came, faster and bigger than perhaps it normally would.

This is the same Government that says yes, we have an industrial strategy in this country. It is called dependency on the oil industry. We have identified the petroleum industry as the goose and the revenue coming from that industry is the golden egg. That was our strategy, our economic saviour. That was what we were going to depend on for economic recovery in this country. When the Government reached into the nest and lifted up the goose to get at the golden egg, what it found was not an egg. It found other material and the whole thing collapsed. The one strategy in place collapsed because of the assumption that energy prices were going to continue to increase forever.

Mr. Corbett: What did they find?

Mr. Riis: What did they find? I will leave that up to one's imagination.

This is the same Government, Mr. Speaker, which says: "Have faith in us and the upcoming budget". This is the same Government which created a situation in Canada where people went to sleep one night and when they woke up the next morning they could easily have thought they were in Poland. Workers in the public sector across the country found that some of their basic rights had been dropped stripped away. They found that the basic right of free collective bargaining was no more. This is the Government that time and time again has told us that Liberals are good for us. Hon. Members opposite say that their policies are good for Canadians, but that is like saying that bush fires and floods in Australia are good for Australians. That is not the case, Mr. Speaker, and it is not the kind of statement that builds confidence.

• (1240)

I suspect that the scorched earth policy that the Government has introduced, the fact that 1.6 million people are unemployed and that the Estimates tell us that the Government's commitment to direct job creation is an increase of $100 million from last year, all demonstrate very clearly that solving the problem of unemployment in the country is not a priority. The Government has another priority. As the Minister of Finance told us recently, the Government is not interested in promoting a major stimulus in order to get people back to work. Contrary to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said recently, the Minister of Finance now says the Government is backing off from that idea and this hesitation is gaining strength in caucus and in Cabinet.

I want to end my remarks by saying that economic recovery in the country cannot occur when 1.6 million people are out of work and increasing numbers of people are threatened with losing their jobs. The consuming public must regain confidence before recovery can occur. But this confidence will not build while people see their neighbours out of work and face the prospect of unemployment themselves.

I make a plea to Members of the Government, Mr. Speaker, to see to it that the budget contains serious, major and bold steps toward short-term and long-term job creation. Unless it does, economic recovery will not occur in 1983 as we had all hoped it would.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity this afternoon to speak on this Bill. I will address it from a very positive point of view rather than a negative point of view and make some concrete suggestions about what the Government might do with the $19 billion it intends to borrow. I take it as a positive sign that the Government has not yet made any announcement about the plans for the utilization of that $19 billion, a sum that would have made old "What's a million" C. D. Howe blush with shame.

I think it is unfortunate that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), who was in his place a short time ago and obviously has other business, is no longer present. The bulk of what I have to say and the suggestions that I will make during the short time available to me will be directed to transportation and in particular to matters that I have dealt with in the House from time to time in the past. I think my remarks will be of particular interest to the Department of Transport and to the Minister.

I feel it is vitally important for the future confidence of Canadians that they feel that this enormous sum of money will be utilized for the benefit of Canadians generally rather than for a select few in a select area for a period of time of short duration. What they are talking about is something that is close to the heart of all Canadians—their future and their jobs.

The Government has taken the position that, in the final analysis, the six and five program may prove to be of some benefit to Canadians. I hope that will be the case but I think the program has to be implemented and has to be shown to be implemented to the benefit of all Canadians.

I want to stress the issue of the six and five program in relation to the CPR, Mr. Speaker, and the fact that the CPR has become part of the legislation. It has included its employees in the legislative process; it has legislated its employees into the six and five program. We know that the CPR is the beneficiary of a great amount of money through various Government programs, not the least of which is the Crowsnest agreement and other subsidies, such as those conferred on VIA Rail and through other associations with the government.

I think it is necessary that we petition the CPR on behalf of its employees. I know that many Hon. Members have concerns both outside and inside Canada, such as the right of human beings to live in dignity and in the style that we as Canadians should be accustomed to. My plea will be for those employees of the CPR who are particularly affected by the six and five restraint program yet who, unfortunately, are not being treated in a manner which befits an industry of such substance and of such high profile in this country as the CPR.

I want particularly to refer to the group of Canadians who belong to the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Airline and Steamship Clerks in the Saint John region of New Brunswick. They are concerned about their future, the future of their families and their jobs. They have been tied to the six and five program since its implementation. Their main concern is job security, as many of them have lost jobs. For some of them the job future is bleak. They have petitioned Members of Parliament to urge the Government to impress upon the CPR its responsibility to the community to act as a good corporate citizen benefiting from the six and five program.

I urge the Minister of Transport to appeal to the CPR to recognize that job security is not only vital to the individuals involved but is vital to the security of the entire region. Many of these people have lost their jobs and now other jobs are in doubt. Twenty-eight jobs have been lost in the customer service centre, 62 truckers in the Saint John area recently lost their jobs and there are rumours that another 17 jobs will be lost in the McAdam and Saint John area by May 1. All these people are entitled to know what the future holds and they are also entitled to benefit from some of the money that will accrue to Canadians through the Government's proposal to borrow this $19 billion.

I am glad to see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) in his seat. Two months ago I questioned him about the shipbuilding policy review that the Government had announced. I asked him when he would be undertaking implementation of that legislation for the benefit of shipyard workers in the Saint John area. At that time the Minister assured us that, if we gave him some assurance of co-operation in the passage of the Bill, he would introduce it forthwith or within a very short period of time. We have anxiously awaited introduction of this particular Bill in the House but to date we have not seen it.

• (1250)

We know there is an accelerated program before Cabinet at the present time which deals with shipbuilding and that the Minister will have some input into those particular measures. This accelerated program would be used to stimulate the shipbuilding industry, and hopefully the Minister will see fit to encourage his colleagues to spend some of this $19 billion in this area. We know that $150 million, for instance, was allotted for the purpose of the construction of two buoy tender icebreakers, that there is a program in place for modifying offshore vessels for aid in navigation and that $78 million has been allotted for that particular construction project. We also know that this accelerated program is now before Cabinet. We hope it is implemented and that Cabinet agrees to it, so that some people in the area will have the advantage of at least future job security. There are many things for which the Government can utilize that money to enhance the security of people in job-related areas and in a meaningful way, not in a band-aid way. I strongly urge the Government to do that.

Also I urge the Minister of Transport to implement his program for increased VIA Rail services rather than decreased ones. We know that when the matter of the elimination of the Atlantic Limited was raised here some time ago, the Minister promised that the Maritimes region, in particular southern New Brunswick, would have LRC participation by 1983. Now we understand it has been extended to 1985. Perhaps the Government will use some of the $19 billion for the restoration and improvement of rail services in southern New Brunswick which have been taken away from us. We see that another ten VIA Rail jobs in the Moncton region will be cut.

I ask the Government to allow this money to be used for the benefit of Canadians in a universal manner, not only in band-aid projects or for the benefit of a few constituents who happen to be located in constituencies represented by sitting Liberal Members and support the Government. I see the Hon. Member Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) is present in the Chamber. I know his concern for the people of his region. I encourage him to rise in his place and urge the Government and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) to meet with officials in that area so that they will have access to some of those funds. I ask the Government to let this money be used for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to follow in this debate the very positive note established by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett) and also the other Hon. Members on this side of the House who have spoken. We have noticed the absence of Government Members participating in this debate. Perhaps that this is to be expected, but I think the tone of the debate is a positive one which should be supported by both sides of the House.

Bill C-143 is in several parts. The first part would allow an additional $5 billion worth of borrowing power for fiscal year 1982-83 and an additional amount of $14 billion which will give us borrowing authority for fiscal year 1983-84. Obviously our major concern is the second part of this two-page Bill and the $14 billion which will be borrowed by the Government without it having established what are its priorities and what the money will be used for.

This entire debate takes place in a context which is unfortunate for Canadians. It sees us in the midst of a recession which has been unparalleled, certainly in my lifetime and probably in the lifetimes of most Members of the House. This recession is marked by a lack of confidence which is also unparalleled in my experience. There is a lack of certainty about where the Government is going, what it will do and what are its priorities.

We all know too well that it is clearly the priority of politicians to be re-elected. Many of the moves of the Government in the allocation of funding and in looking at opportunities in Canada have unfortunately been misdirected toward allowing the Government to assume the best profile in the eyes of the electorate. It has failed miserably, as indicated by the feelings of Canadians across the country in different polls. In fact, this is one of the essential ingredients in its planning and its approach to the allocation of public funds. We regret that and can only encourage Government Members, instead of viewing their position from the point of view of trying to get re-elected, to try to think of the interests of the country and the future planning which is necessary if we are to develop our potential.

I would like to spend a little time establishing what are our debts and liabilities in Canada in contrast to our assets. This borrowing Bill has established that our cash requirements for the fiscal year will be $26.1 billion. If we add that cash requirement, Government deficits and so on together, we end up with a total debt of approximately $120 billion. There are different methods of figuring this amount. I found it somewhat confusing. I do not think it would be extraordinary to think that other Hon. Members and the public in general would find it confusing.

One of the best short explanations I could find appeared in The Financial Post on February 26, 1983. I would like to read into the record our assets and liabilities. First, under liabilities, on top of the $120 billion in securities that we have as liabilities, which include Canada Savings Bonds, Treasury bills and Government of Canada marketable bonds, we have $20 billion or so in liabilities. They are comprised of the following. There is $3 billion in loans from domestic and foreign banks to support the Canadian dollar. There is $1 billion in coins. Coins are a direct liability of the federal Government, whereas dollar bills are a liability of the Bank of Canada. There is another $1 billion in life insurance and pensions, mostly annuities which were sold by Ottawa up until 1968, and there is $15 billion in such things as matured debt, bonds which have reached maturity but have not yet been cashed, provincial tax collected but not given to the Provinces, money owed to the Canada Pension Plan but not yet paid, and interest due but not paid. I will talk about the total of these in a minute.

After we have listed our liabilities, under assets we have, as the federal Government's major asset, about $32 billion representing its share in the assets of Crown corporations. There is also about $7 billion in loans to the Provinces, Territories, other countries and international organizations. There is $1 billion in things such as taxes accrued, the Veterans Loans Act, mortgages and Ottawa's 48.5 per cent interest in the Canada Development Corporation. Fixed capital assets are also included. They are buildings, Armed Forces equipment, machinery, other equipment, natural resources and so on.

It would raise the assets total considerably if we combined all these items. Indeed, if natural resources were included, we would see the federal Government in a very large surplus position. We cannot for our balance sheet count on those. There has been very clear demonstration in the past several months, particularly with what is happening in OPEC and so on, to show that we cannot rely in a traditional manner on natural resources. We are in a pinch right now because the Government counted on the revenues and taxes it hoped to achieve through the National Energy Program. Indeed, they will fall far short of the expectations of even a few short months ago.

My time is coming to a close. I have had very little time to contribute to this debate, except to read into the record what are our assets and liabilities. But in conclusion, as I call it one o'clock, let me indicate that Canadians are really looking for an indication of confidence in leadership and management of Government. This Government has not shown that. It is its responsibility to establish that vital link as soon as possible in order to achieve economic recovery.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I think it is worth reminding ourselves that Bill C-143, which is now before us, is intended to empower this Government to borrow, first, $5 billion before the end of this fiscal year, and to pass $2 billion of that borrowing power, if that amount remains, on to the next fiscal year. In addition to the $5 billion, the Government is seeking from Parliament the authority to borrow another $14 billion for next year. The Government is seeking the authority to borrow that amount without telling Parliament or anyone else the purpose for which that $14 billion is intended.

We are also dealing with an amendment put forward by the New Democratic Party which asks that the subject matter of this Bill be referred to a committee, especially the $14 billion portion of it. The New Democratic Party is concerned about that, as we are. Members on the other side of the House do not seem to be concerned about it at all.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Look at them, they are unconcerned.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): But $14 billion for next year's unspecified purposes is the basis for our consideration this afternoon.

This is the first time to my knowledge, and I venture to say within the experience of anyone in this chamber, possibly the first time in the experience of anyone in any democratic parliamentary institution, that a Government has dared to put out its begging bowl to ask for authority to borrow an amount of this magnitude, $19 billion without showing cause. This is the first time; may it be the last.

Even more reprehensible, the Government is asking this Parliament in March, 1983, to authorize this Government, which has shown its disregard for public finance, to borrow funds for the next fiscal year. I think it is worth reminding those who are listening that kings have lost their heads for less.

Parliamentary control over Government spending by long tradition—going back at least three and one-half centuries, possibly even longer—rests on the proposition that no Parliament will grant funds that are to be spent beyond the fiscal year in which they are requested. This principle after a long struggle was embedded in parliamentary practice as a result of Parliament's long struggle with Charles I; and we all know what happened to him. "Pierre the Terrible" may suffer the same fate.

We are being asked, let me repeat, to empower the Government to borrow $19 billion—$5 billion this year and $14 billion next year. But for what purpose? For further interventions in the economy? For further purchases like Petrofina which cost a little bit more than $1.5 billion? A purchase like that would use up about 10 per cent of the $14 billion. Perhaps the Government wants to advertise more about energy self-sufficiency, which we are told is "that close" to being realized. That is not quite true either. That energy advertising cost just less than one million dollars. Those are the sorts of things the Government presumably wants the $14 billion for—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They are closing bases in the riding of Northumberland-Miramichi.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): —and possibly to pay their friends, the Gillespies of this world, for their participation in projects which, if we are to believe the documentation brought forward most recently, are uneconomic.

• (1410)

Perhaps it is to find the $11 million which the Minister offered to an enterprise in my riding last weekend, if I remember correctly, or perhaps it was the weekend before, of which $7 million would be a straight grant and $4 million would be an interest-free loan. This money was offered in order to create an automated chip industry, to be run by people whose experience in this particular field is nil. The Government wants a test bed for automating the development of the chip industry in my riding. That would amount to $11 million. Is that the sort of project that the Government has in mind? We must bear the fact in mind that $19 billion will be adding almost 13 per cent to the federal debt which now stands on our books.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Think of it!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Thirteen per cent will be added to our debt if this Bill is passed.

Here is the record. In 1970 there was a budget surplus of about $400,000. The net debt at that particular time stood at $17 billion, less than what we are being asked today to authorize the Government to borrow. That $17 billion represented 20 per cent of the GNP. In 1975, five years later, the net debt amounted to about $20 billion. It had grown slowly over those five years, but the proportion of the GNP that that debt represented had dropped to about 13 per cent. Between 1975 and 1983-84, the period we are now discussing, Ottawa's cumulative deficit has brought our total net debt to $152 billion, which represents almost 40 per cent of the Gross National Product.

An Hon. Member: Tell us about the transfers to the Provinces.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It had risen from 20 per cent in 1970 to 40 per cent in 1983-84. That is really quite a record for a Government, but I suppose it has been working on it pretty hard.

What does this mean to me and to you, Mr. Speaker? When I was discussing the financing of various enterprises and Government interference in the economy, I was reminded of having seen the most recent edition of Chimo, the publication with the dartboard on the cover. There was an interesting series of articles by 17 prominent businessmen who spoke of this very matter concerning state intervention in the economy, raising the questions: "Is it a blessing? Is it a curse? Is it good? Is it bad? Is it for co-operation?" I would highly recommend that issue of Chimo to Your Honour as something which ought to be read.

Let me return to the subject of what this large debt of $152 billion means to everyone. Here I have recourse to The Financial Times of February 28, an article on the front page dealing with this matter in some detail. For example, that debt represents $6,200 per man, woman and child in this country, no matter the age of the child. A child who is being born now already has a debt of $6,200 on its shoulders. The debt interest is $530. For a family of four, the debt is $24,800, with interest of $2,100.

You are not uneasy, are you, Mr. Speaker? My ten minutes has not nearly come to an end.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Oh, Mr. Speaker! I am just beginning to explain to you the seriousness of this particular problem.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The House will give him all the time he needs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I know the Hon. Member has explanations but ten minutes has expired.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I continue with unanimous consent?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Shame!

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-143 asks this House to approve borrowing by the present Government of Canada of an additional $19 billion. The Government already has a borrowing authority of $21.1 billion for the current year, consisting of $3.5 billion of authority carried over from previous years, $6.6 billion from Bill C-111, $7 billion from Bill C-125, and $4 billion from Bill C-128.

Additional borrowing authority of $5 billion for 1982-83 is requested in Bill C-143, which would bring the total authority for 1982-83 up to $26.1 billion. As much as $2 billion of the $5 billion requested in this Bill, if passed, may be used in future years. In addition, the Bill would permit the Government to borrow an additional $14 billion in 1983-84, which just happens to be close to the time for another federal election. It will be interesting to see which ridings and interest groups will be pork-barreled as we enter the pre-election period.

Buying votes has been successful in the past but people have now begun to appreciate the fact that they will be made to suffer, along with their children, grandchildren and great grandchildren, as a direct result of the Government's misspending and mismanagement. The day of short-term gain to retain power has gone. It is unfortunate that future Governments, whatever their political persuasion, along with the people of Canada will have to pay dearly for the costly mistakes that this so-called "Liberal" administration has been and is hoisting on the richest country in the world. It is sad to see such potential wasted and Canada being compared to a banana republic.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The nation weeps.

Mr. Vankoughnet: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has refused to provide a forecast of the Government's financial requirements for the fiscal year 1983. The Government has had the audacity to imply that we should trust its statement that it needs $5 billion now and $14 billion to start off next year on the right foot. Parliament, in effect, is being asked to grant authority for a year for which there are no current projections. No other authority would grant a line of credit to a bankrupt creditor who refused to provide up to date financial statements, so why should the House?

As of mid-February, the Government had $4 billion in cash deposits, of which $2 billion could be drawn before there were problems, and $500 million in unused borrowing authority. If Bill C-143 is passed, the Government will have $21.5 billion with which to operate.

Over the past 15 years, Government spending has risen at an unprecedented rate. On a national accounts basis, where data is comparable over time, spending climbed some $12.4 billion in 1968-69 to an estimated $90.6 billion this year, an increase of 630 per cent. A significant portion of the increase has occurred since the re-election of the Liberals to the House in February of 1980.

Relative to 1979-80, spending has risen by 59 per cent on a public accounts basis, or 66 per cent on a national accounts basis. Spending in 1982-83 alone increased by 20.5 per cent on a national accounts basis, or by 19.6 per cent on a public accounts basis. So much for the six and five program. Spending on a national accounts basis is now equal to 26 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product. The deficit today is equal to 34 per cent of all expenditures. For every $4 the Government spends, it must borrow $1.

There are only two ways to finance the deficit. One is by borrowing more money. In 1982, borrowing by the federal Government accounted for 51 per cent of all new security issues placed in Canada. The other way is by printing money. Over the past 12 years, the Bank of Canada has monetarised a total of $12 billion of the Government's financial requirements. Borrowing of that magnitude clearly must have an effect on the supply and demand for money, and thus on the interest rates which must be borne by the private sector, and on average Canadians, of whom 1.6 million officially, and many more thousands unofficially, are out of work through the policy of the Government and previous administrations over the past decade.

Government debt and the interest on the debt is becoming a very serious problem. The gross debt, which amounts to the total liabilities of the Government of Canada, includes not only interest but pension fund liabilities and several other items as well. At the end of the 1981-82 fiscal year, the gross debt was $134 billion. By the end of the current fiscal year the gross debt will be as high as $160 billion. In comparison the gross debt was $31 billion when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office. The cost of interest on the debt in fiscal 1982-1983 is forecast to be $16.7 billion. That is the equivalent of one revenue dollar in three, or one expenditure dollar in five. It is more than double the cost of interest that prevailed only three years ago in 1979-1980. It is more than ten times the cost of interest in 1968-1969. If the Government only borrowed to pay interest on the debt, its annual financial requirements would soar to $40 billion by the end of this decade. The ever-growing interest burden which this year will cost $16.7 billion is the equivalent of $700 for every man, woman and child and $1,700 for each taxpayer in Canada.

Bill C-143 is dangerous because it creates further uncertainty and can only lead to disruptive speculation in the financial markets as to the state of the federal Government's finances. Parliament is being asked to vote borrowing authority without being given information as to the future direction of Government finances. Canada's poor economic performance will continue to have a negative impact on the finances of the Government as the cost of social assistance rises and revenues stagnate or fall. Any recovery that does occur is likely to be a weak recovery, based mainly on external factors.

People to whom I talk are sick and tired of being told by Government that this is a world recession and therefore it is the fault of our major trading partners, such as the United States, Germany, Britain and Japan. The fact is that whatever the world problem, Canada should be one of the most successful countries because of the human and natural resources which we have in this country. However, because of bad management and incompetence, Canada is now listed as being twenty-fourth out of 24 OECD countries in economic performance.

Confidence in this Government not only because of its fiscal conduct but because of the moral conduct of its members, is at an all-time low. How can Canadians have respect for Parliamentarians when Cabinet Ministers are continually mixed up in affairs such as the Gillespie controversy, the so-called judges affair or the Minister who forged the signature of the husband of his mistress for an abortion, a married woman with whom he was having an affair?

I have just received a petition of over 1,000 names objecting to pornography and obscenity on Pay TV. In recent weeks many Canadians have expressed their concern that First Choice Pay TV would be introducing a Playboy channel. We live in an era that does not need any further promotion of sex or the permissive attitude which lowers public morals. How can Canadians have respect for a Government which has lost control of its bureaucracy, or for a Prime Minister who courts Marxist policies? Is this $14 billion going to be used to support Marxist regimes or will it be used to help farmers, whose bankruptcy rate in January of 1983 was up 32 per cent over the same period in 1982?

I would like to see some of this money that the Government throws away to Marxist countries used in the federal riding of Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington. It would be a welcome relief to eastern Ontario if the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which is responsible for federal Government efforts to overcome regional economic disparities, had some of this $19 billion to implement a program to develop economic and social policies designed to reduce disparity and increase employment opportunities in eastern Ontario.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish we were not engaged in this debate. I think it is extremely difficult to Hon. Members who take their jobs seriously to discuss honestly the request of the Government for some $19 billion, $14 billion of which will be spent in the early part of the coming fiscal year.

I was saying to my colleague from Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) just a moment ago that I had a constituent call me yesterday to discuss, among other things, the Government's request for additional borrowing. He said to me: "The hard part for us who are away from Ottawa and trying to follow the events is trying to make a determination as to how the Government might spend the money". He said to me: "Tell me, Ian, how do you think the Government will spend the money?" I could only think of one way to reply—"Badly".

I came to the conclusion a long time ago that the Government was not in control of the expenditures of the country, was not clear where it was going, had very little to offer in the way of programs that even appeared to begin to meet the obvious needs of the majority of Canadians and was in fact engaged in a hanging-on process. It reminds me of the poster that one can see in a poster shop of a kitten hanging over a bar and it says: "Hang in there, baby." That is how I thought of this Government as I watched it operate over the course of the last two years.

My colleague has put in an amendment that suggests that at least the $14 billion should be referred to committee for a very careful review, and I think that any fair-minded person in the House of Commons who honestly took their job seriously and thought that it was in fact the responsibility of the Hon. Members of the House of Commons to be scrupulous in their review of Government taxing measures and expenditures could come to no other conclusion than that this $14 billion, needed though it may be, has not been brought forward with adequate justification to back up the request. They would conclude that it has not been brought forward in such a way that those of us who do in fact report back to our constituencies on a regular basis could feel confident of knowing how to answer the serious question: "What is this money to be used for?"

I suggested, and I continue to suggest, that the Government ought not to be borrowing in March for next year. What we should have had in March was a statement from the Government as to its spending intentions. We should have seen quite clearly a program-by-program outline of how the Government proposed to deal with the social and economic problems of this country for the next 12 months. That should be before us now. We should also have before us the proposals of the Government with regard to how they propose to raise money, including this borrowing; how they propose to tax; how they propose to deficit finance, if they do; and to what extent deficit financing and subsequent borrowing will play a major part in the coming 12 months as far as the careful management of Canada's economy is concerned.

I would have liked to see the Government get into the habit of putting before Parliament in the early months of the year—in fact, I would go even further and say I would prefer that the Government put before Parliament in the last quarter of the previous year—its projections for the coming fiscal period, both in terms of expenditure and in terms of revenue and taxation. I think we have to try in this House, if we are ever going to get responsible Government, to sell the idea that responsibility for spending and for taxing rests with Parliament. It is not just the domain of the Government. It is not just the Cabinet which makes those decisions. Neither is it simply Cabinet in consultation with some, if not all, of their backbenchers. The final decision and responsibility must surely rest with all Members of Parliament.

The only way that that concept can be approached is if we change the system entirely. Before the Government is given any further authority to go to the money lenders of the world and raise additional capital, we in the House of Commons should demand that the Government bring forward all of its projections, its expenditures and program projections. Then, having looked at the overview, we can reasonably and sensibly come to conclusions as to what is being asked.

I said earlier that there are certain things for which borrowing may well be appropriate. In our daily lives, we all engage in borrowing at some time or other. However, there is a distinction between borrowing in order to take a trip to Las Vegas to put money in the slot machines or on a gambling table and borrowing for the purchase of a home. Anyone would say that is a pretty simple comparison and they know the difference between the two. Borrowing for the purpose of buying a home and paying it back over a long period of time is a worth-while investment in one's future.

If the Government were borrowing for the purpose of establishing some stability in this country, if it were in the business of borrowing money in order to expand the railroad and transportation system, if it were in the business of coming to Parliament and asking for the right to borrow in order to build a new and modern port system on the coasts of this country and in the interior, or to develop a system which would allow us properly to exploit the resources in the long-term, best interests of this country, I might be inclined to say that kind of borrowing makes sense. That is the kind of borrowing from which you derive a significant return. It is truly an investment borrowing.

Members of Parliament have a responsibility to attempt to extract from the Government those kinds of commitments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), who adopts his normal smiling posture, is listening to me. I know he will take this to heart and dash back to the appropriate people in Cabinet and suggest that if only they were only to listen to Deans, things would be better around here! Others say that too. I do not personally say it.

I want to stress that the kind of borrowing we are now doing does not meet the justification, at least none that we have now, that would allow us to feel confident that what is about to be done will serve us well either in the short or long term. We all understand that even now this country is capable of massive economic undertaking. This country is second to none in terms of its resource capacity and its ability to be self-sufficient both in energy and in food. We have access to two entire worlds, the Pacific rim on one side and the European sphere on the other.

Before you rise to your feet, Mr. Speaker, let me say that with that potential and with proper management of our finances, I am confident that this country will go ahead by leaps and bounds. If the Government were kind enough to heed what we are asking for, we could achieve the goals we are setting.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments on this legislation. It is one thing to be asked to okay a $19 billion spending Bill, although that figure is so large that even Members of this House of Commons cannot grasp the significance of it. It is something else entirely to be asked to approve the borrowing of that amount of money without any information as to how, when or where it will be spent That is what I find most offensive about this legislation.

We have been asked to sign a blank cheque. The Government wants $5 billion for the current fiscal year, which ends in approximately five weeks. We have already been asked to grant authority to borrow $14 billion for fiscal 1983-84. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has suggested that, depending on the economy, that amount might last until midsummer.

It is madness to ask Members elected to this House of Commons to deal with figures that we cannot in good conscience grapple with. We are asked to pass this legislation when we have no idea in the world where the money will be spent. That is not only true of Opposition Members but of Members on the Government side as well.

The amount of the borrowing will have a very dramatic effect on the business community over the next number of months. It may threaten the recovery we all hope will take place. It will fuel inflationary expectations as we look further into 1983. This will have a direct effect on other segments of the economy which will have to compete with the federal Government when borrowing money. This will not only affect how Canadians view their Government but people outside Canada. The credibility of the Government in the whole area of economics has been totally shattered.

In 1981 the then Minister of Finance, now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), budgeted for a $10.5 billion deficit for the 1982-83 year. Seven months later that figure was revised to $19.6 billion. By October of that same year the deficit had increased to $22.6 billion, and it is still climbing. Today we are talking of a budget deficit in the neighbourhood of $27 billion. Many people now believe that the budget deficit will go as high as $30 billion. The figures are becoming astronomical. They do not mean anything to the Canadian people. Canadians do not realize where we are going. They only know that we are in very serious financial trouble.

This Government thought its financial requirement for this year would be $6.6 billion. It is total madness for the Government to come to us now and ask for, in effect, a blank cheque. It is, in effect, saying: "Pass this legislation and trust us". Surely, this is not the way to run a country. Given the Government's track record, how could we support such a request without proper documentation? Back in 1982, the then Minister of Finance, the Hon. Allan MacEachen, indicated before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on May 31, 1982, and I quote:

> I do not think it would be appropriate to ask the House for additional borrowing authority until I have laid out in some detail an update of both the economic situation and the fiscal situation.

At page 20081 of Hansard of October 27, 1982, the present Minister of Finance said this, and I quote:

> In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-84 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

Obviously, that has not happened and, Mr. Speaker, we are going to take as long a period of time as necessary in dealing with this particular legislation because we do not know where we are going. We do not know what we are doing, and I believe the Canadian people do not deserve this kind of representation from their elected Members of Parliament.

This is the largest borrowing in Canadian history which we have been asked to comment on. The $19 billion which we are talking about today equals total federal Government spending for 1973-74. When I was first elected in the fall of 1970, Mr. Speaker, total federal Government spending was only $15.8 billion. Today it is estimated at $88 billion. The $19 billion which we have been asked to comment on and give our approval to means, Mr. Speaker, that the Government wants to borrow for six months the equivalent of $3.16 billion per month, or $100 million per day, or $4.5 million per hour for every 24-hour day. We are spending money at that great rate in this country without any direction as to how the money should be spent.

The Government has failed to give us leadership, not only in the economy but in the area, for instance, of training Canadians for skilled jobs. This is all part of the economy. Newspapers are filled with ads at the present time offering employment to Canadians, but they have to be skilled. We have not made the transition yet in terms of training Canadians for skilled work. We have no industrial strategy to show us exactly where we are going.

I would like to comment briefly on the effect of the mismanagement which has taken place in this country. Of course, I am better able to comment on my own constituency of Lisgar in southern Manitoba. The mismanagement of this Government in my particular part of the country has caused a tremendous degree of uncertainty and low morale. There is indecision as to what will happen in the future even in terms of the coming spring. There is no trust in Government, or Government institutions, and that may be, Mr. Speaker, one of the worst results of the Government's mismanagement. It has caused a general lack of the objectivity which is going to be needed if we are going to pull ourselves out of our current economic situation.

This Bill is inappropriate because of the numbers we are talking about, but it is even more inappropriate because we have been asked to deal with something and we have no idea where we are going with it. We are faced with the Estimates and we desperately need a budget, and a budget now.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this is the second occasion on which I have had an opportunity to speak to this particular Bill. On the previous occasion I covered certain other ground but this time I want to talk about the nature of the amendment. I also want to talk about the clear and absolute breach of the undertaking of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) not only to this House but the undertaking to the members of the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee given by his predecessor. Surely to goodness, the present Minister of Finance is in a position to be able to consider what the former Minister of Finance said, because he echoed it last October.

It may be that some Hon. Members have already referred to the particular words which I will quote shortly, but I believe Hon. Members should be reminded of them, as well as people from one end of the country to the other. They indicate the "loosey-doosey" nature of the Minister's principles, not only from what we saw in Coalgate, but the attitude of the Government on its own guidelines, and what I believe was a clear breach of those guidelines, albeit by some peculiar twisting of logic, guidelines dependent upon what they mean to the individual concerned.

There has been since 1982 a number of borrowing authorities, which incidentally totalled approximately $21.2 billion compared to the projected financial requirements of only $17.1 billion as outlined in the June 28 budget. The Official Opposition was able to get the Government to reduce the amounts which were projected in these various Bills. In Bill C-125 the borrowing authority asked for was trimmed from $11 billion to $7 billion. Bill 128, which replaced it, gave the Government the necessary borrowing authority. At present there are no up-to-date forecasts to show that the Government needs even $5 billion in borrowing authority because there is money left over. There is money on hand. By some rule of thumb the Minister says he requires $5 billion to carry him to mid-summer. This is what the present Minister of Finance said last October 27 when he made his budgetary statement, as recorded in Hansard at page 20081:

> In the budget I intend to present early in 1983—

May I interject here that even today he indicated it would be likely some time late in April before he delivered a budget. That is "early in 1983", four months into the year? He continued:

> —I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-84 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

And I wish to underline these words, Mr. Speaker:

> —and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

• (1450)

Bill C-143, Mr. Speaker, is the answer as to how much faith we should put in the words of the Minister of Finance. He says not only does he need $5 billion until June, but then he comes along with the second portion of what is an omnibus Bill. I would have thought that after the lesson of last year the Government would keep away from omnibus Bills, which this is. There is a borrowing authority for 1982-83 and then there is added a second part to the Bill known as the borrowing authority for 1983-84, for $14 billion.

I sympathize with the objective, I suppose, of the amendment before us, although with the greatest respect I frankly do not understand what the amendment is going to do. Frankly, to me it is written in pure Sanskrit as far as I can understand, because it asks that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof, particularly the $14 billion section, be referred to committee. But why? The budget has not come down. The Government has said, through its most authoritative Minister in this field, that there would be a budget before he sought borrowing authority. I do not know what our friends in the New Democratic Party are trying to do when they say refer that portion to committee. What is it to do with that? What is it to report back and in what way?

There is only one way to deal with this Bill, and that is insist that it be split and we vote on the first portion, and I think generally, after some hemming and hawing, we would accept it, but not the second portion. I referred to this in my speech the other day. I said that I am unalterably opposed to the second portion of the Bill. With the greatest respect to the mover of the amendment, I do not see what the amendment is going to achieve. As a matter of fact, I have some doubt as to why the amendment was ever accepted. However, it was; therefore, I can only say that this Bill has to be defeated or the Government backed into the corner of withdrawing the second portion.

Hon. Members opposite, Mr. Speaker, do not question the $14 billion. Not one of them has said to his Minister: "Well, why are you not waiting until after the budget, as you said?" No, they are sheep. I doubt if the Minister of Finance has consulted his provincial counterparts to see where on earth they are going to borrow all that money this year. In other words, that there is going to be an orderly placing of Government obligations on the market. That is another point. The federal Government is going to go rampaging in, snare off all the ground, and the Provinces who have legitimate needs are going to be told to go peddle their wares with others who have had to go to Europe to try to get money.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (Halton): Mr. Speaker, because this Bill is probably the single most important piece of economic legislation and will affect every Canadian today, allow me to repeat briefly some of the massive statistics which have arisen as a result before I outline what I believe could and should be some potential and perhaps definite solutions.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government is not only asking for a further $5 billion to supplement the $21.6

billion it has already borrowed for the fiscal year 1982-83, but the Liberals have the audacity to demand from Parliament a further $14 billion borrowing authority for 1983-84 with absolutely no accounting or explanation whatsoever. We, and Canadians in general, do not know how, where and why this largest money grab in Canadian history will be spent. What will the interest cost be? How much will be collected from personal income tax and corporate taxes? What does the increased outlay consist of?

In effect, Parliament is being asked to grant authority for a year for which there are no current forecasts. Will the deficit next year be $20 billion, $25 billion or $30 billion? No banker would grant a line of credit to a bankrupt creditor who refused to provide up-to-date financial statements. Therefore, why should Parliament grant it to the Government under these conditions? These are just some of the questions that must be answered.

However, and unfortunately, what is abundantly clear is the reason for this massive tax grab by the Government. The reason, of course, is the Liberals' continuing and growing rate of excessive, wasteful, unnecessary, shameful and perhaps even criminal Government spending. This is not a temporary phenomenon either, because ever since the Grits were returned to office 15 years ago, all caution and control on tax dollars spent went out the window, creating a spending bonanza unparalleled not only in our nation's history but anywhere in the industrialized western world. No wonder we rank 24th out of 24 countries on the economic and productive scales. We are dead last, but that does not have to be in this nation of wealth and potential unmatched anywhere in the world. We should be number one, but immediate changes in spending habits must be made.

For example, we cannot continue to prop up the CBC to the tune of $800 million per year when private networks can provide adequate service at no cost to the taxpayer. Nor should the taxpayer pay $800 per day to former Liberal Finance Minister Donald Macdonald for ascertaining what is wrong with our economy today and telling us about it three years from now. The Liberal Government should stop advertising itself, a selfish and political habit which cost the taxpayer $100 million last year alone. The Post Office is yet another example. While postal rates have more than doubled in recent years, the Post Office still has a deficit of approximately $500 million and it is not even efficient. If it was not so important a service, the Post Office would be a joke.

There are virtually hundreds of other areas where the Government can and should make spending cuts in order to prevent this type of massive borrowing. Time does not permit me to name them all, but there are some I would like to bring forward. For example, the costly and bloated civil service should be reduced by attrition and the introduction of sunset laws. Even the Auditor General says one third of civil servants do not even know what their jobs are supposed to be. Cutting the cost of Government Departments is possible, as demonstrated by the short-lived Conservative Government in 1979. Liberal consulting costs, Mr. Speaker, totalled $2,010,874,347 last year. That is over $2 billion, Mr. Speaker. Surely some of the highly paid mandarins who are supposed to be so knowledgeable in their areas of responsibility should be able to do their jobs effectively rather than having to demand the services of consultants and consultating consultants and probably consulting civil servants sitting in an ivory tower who do not know what the real world is all about and do not listen to the consultants in any event, just as the Liberal Government does not listen.

Foreign aid is out of control. Spending through CIDA alone has skyrocketed to a record $1,089,000,000, not to mention the long list of other Government agencies that are paying out millions of dollars to various countries in the world, including some countries behind the Iron Curtain.

Then there is the cost of Unemployment Insurance benefits. Canadians know that the cost to the taxpayer increased by 134 per cent last year to $2.9 billion. I do not suggest that it should be eliminated. Instead of the Government creating jobs in the private sector through the offer of incentives, it is spending hundred and hundreds of millions of dollars on phoney temporary make-work programs, many of which existed under a different name in the first place. It does not create long-term jobs and therefore unemployment continues to grow to 1.6 million people and the cost has skyrocketed to $2.9 billion.

Whatever happened to the Government's much touted six and five program? With all the examples I can give and the hundreds of others that exist, it seems that the Liberal Government is telling Canadians, "Do as I say, not as I do". In short, Mr. Speaker, this irresponsible Government has increased Government spending by 630 per cent in the last decade to the point where the federal deficit is now projected to be $30 billion this year. That will increase our national debt to $200 billion or, to put it in simple terms that we can all understand, $8,000 for each man, woman and child in Canada. As soon as a child is born, he or she is immediately saddled with a $8,000 debt. That debt will increase, rather than decrease. I do not think it is fair—it is not fair to allow the costs of mistakes of this Liberal administration to be passed on to our children and grandchildren.

It is no wonder that the Auditor General of Canada concluded as early as 1976 that the Liberal Government "had lost or was close to losing effective control of the public purse". Subsequent reports of the Auditor General were even more scathing. The Government does not act on the recommendations; it does not even listen.

There is no doubt that it is imperative that Government spending be cut. The fact is that unless measures are taken immediately to control spending and to create economic growth, it can be expected that the current economic situation will not improve in the near future. The argument that deficit financing is necessary under present economic conditions, is hogwash. As I said, Canadians are sick and tired of passing on the Goverment's debt load to their children.

To back up this comment I want to share with the House the results of a questionnaire that I sent out to my constituents last month. I asked whether deficit financing—and I explained what it meant—would be preferred to a reduction in Government spending. A staggering 99.8 per cent of respondents chose a reduction in Government spending and emphatically wrote in every response that Parliament must take action in this regard. I believe that the wishes of my constituents are indicative of the wishes of Canadians in most other parts of the country.

The need to get federal Government spending under control is obvious, Mr. Speaker. The problem is: if a majority Government, like the present Liberal administration, refuses to act in this regard, what can be done?

First, I believe that a special all-Party parliamentary committee should be struck forthwith to do nothing else but deal with Government expenditures. It should be able to come to Parliament, take specific action and have Parliament take the necessary action to reduce spending, and it should insist that Parliament listen to the recommendations of the Auditor General. Only then will Parliament and Canadians be able to fulfil their potential.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak briefly on Bill C-143 which is before the Housing asking for borrowing authority in the sum of $19 billion. Recently when I was in my constituency, a constituent who came into my office shook his head and asked how it could be that the Government would come to Parliament and ask for $5 billion in this fiscal year and some $14 billion for the next fiscal year, when no statement whatsoever had been made of the Government's priorities and objectives for this money.

Surely that is the fundamental question before us as we debate this Bill today. No one in this House would suggest that if the Government is prepared to come forward with sensible objectives for spending money to create jobs in difficult economic times, Members would resist it. However, we take strong exception to the Government saying, "Trust us. We want $14 billion for the next fiscal year ending March 1984 but we still will not tell you what our priorities are." I suggest that that is an irresponsible approach to financing this country, and certainly I believe that the question my constituent asked has not yet been answered by the representatives of the Government in the House today or on any other day.

There are a number of areas of concern about this proposal. As the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) put it, basically we are being asked to buy a pig in a poke. We are being asked to authorize the Government to spend $14 billion in the next fiscal year when we do not have the confidence that the Government will spend it wisely. In fact, the record of the Government is such that I do not believe it should be authorized a single penny until it indicates a fundamental change in its priorities.

There are still some 2 million Canadians out of work and literally millions more who, while they have a job, are working in an atmosphere of insecurity and fear of losing it. There are thousands and thousands of Canadians who are in part-time jobs and who are not using their full skills, and so their talent is being wasted.

What has the Government proposed in terms of priorities and job creation? Mr. Speaker, it has offered no real alternative whatsoever. It is clear that the major victims of the Government's lack of priorities on job creation are women and young people. These are the groups that are disproportionately affected.

We are not talking about short-term job-creation programs, important though they may be. In the last few months the New Democratic Party has put forward a number of proposals for creating jobs in the short term. We have come to grips with the fact that in a civilized society today, every Canadian who wants a job should be entitled to a job. It is absolutely and fundamemtally immoral that 2 million Canadians, half of them young people, still do not have work. Not only is it immoral, but it does not make any economic sense.

We have seen the Estimates with respect to Unemployment Insurance for the coming fiscal year. We know the cost of welfare in all Provinces is increasing dramatically. Recently, an article in the Vancouver Sun indicated that one out of three residents of British Columbia presently receives all or part of his monthly income from some sort of Government assistance. On this side we advocate that Canadians should have an opportunity to work. They want that opportunity; they do not want to be on the welfare rolls or collecting Unemployment Insurance. Not only does that have an economic impact but it also has a profound social and personal impact.

I could give many illustrations, as I am sure all Members of the House could, of the devastating consequences of the failure of the Government's economic policy, but I shall just give a couple.

About two weeks ago in my constituency office I received a telephone call from a grandmother. She was phoning because she did not know where to turn, she said. Her grandson has just graduated from UBC where he had spent six years getting a degree in applied science. He is a qualified engineer, but some eight months after he graduated he is still looking for a job. What kind of society is it or what kind of Government is it that would permit that tragic waste of human potential?

• (1510)

There are many illustrations, as I said. There is the 56-year old gentleman who got off the bus in Burnaby and came into my constituency office. He sat down and said "Mr. Robinson, after some 30 years in the same job I have been laid off. I have lost my job, not because I did not do a good job, not because I did not want to work." He had lost his job simply because the downturn in the economy was such that his employer could not afford to keep him on any longer. Also he said, "How do I go back home, face my family and tell them that we will get Unemployment Insurance as long as we are entitled to it, but after that we will have to go on welfare?" There are far too many Canadians who are faced with that reality today, but not everyone is hurting in these difficult economic times.

There are a number of examples of people who are not hurting. One is the Canadian banking community. It is doing quite nicely, thank you very much. In fact its profits last year were incredibly high, particularly by comparison with the previous year which was a record year. Even though it was a very difficult time for thousands and thousands of Canadians, the banks did very well. They managed to look after themselves with the assistance of their allies in Government, to the extent that many of them effectively paid no taxes whatsoever.

What about equity and fairness? What kind of fairness is there in an economic system which allows those who are big and powerful to continue to get bigger, more powerful and more wealthy, at the same time as it literally condemns millions of Canadians to economic servitude? In their recent statement the Catholic Bishops said it far more eloquently than I could, that this system, which is based upon the pursuit of profit and upon the aggrandizement of capital at the expense of labour, is fundamentally immoral. We must reshape our priorities so that we have an economic system which serves the needs of people, not an economic system which increasingly serves the needs of only a wealthy few. There are a number of recipients of this largesse. We need look no further than the friends of the Liberal Government such as Michael Pitfield who was appointed to the Senate. Surely that must be one of the most cynical appointments at a cost of literally millions of dollars to Canadians. Also there is the appointment of Donald Macdonald, leadership candidate and former Conservative—former Liberal, I should say. I am sorry I confused the two, but there is not a great deal of difference. Mr. Macdonald, who is receiving some $800 per day, says that he needs money for the overhead of his law firm.

Mr. Pepin: Oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Macdonald is not serving the people of Canada as a lawyer. He is serving the people of Canada, his good friend, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), and his colleagues as a commissioner. To suggest that he needs overhead for his law firm is absolute rubbish.

I suppose none of us should be particularly surprised at this gravy-train approach to friends of the Liberal Government. We need look no further than the recent Gillespie affair for a further illustration of that. I know that my time is limited, but I want to say that the Bill is fundamentally wrong. It continues to reflect the policies of a bankrupt Government, policies which have not in any way represented a significant difference from those of the Conservative Party.

For example, the Conservative Party is silent on the scandalous situation of bank profits and the fact that both the Liberals and the Conservatives receive some $50,000 a year from each of the major banks, which I am sure has something to do with it. These are the same banks which have refused to allow Canadians to renegotiate their mortgages. If their mortgages have terms of less than five years, they are locked into them at very high rates of interest.

I am sorry my time has come to an end. I very strongly urge all Members of Parliament to reject the Bill and to call upon the Government to come to its sense and reorder its economic priorities to create jobs for all Canadians.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, indeed it is a pleasure to follow the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). The New Democratic Party is guilty, and the more guilty it feels the louder it gets. To listen to the Hon. Member for Burnaby rise on behalf of unemployed Canadians and say to the House that it is immoral to have a society in which people cannot have jobs is to assert a truth. It is immoral, but the real immorality of which 1.6 million Canadians should be aware today is that back in December 1979 a Government was defeated, one which had been in place for nine months, and it was not a Liberal Government. Jobs in this country had increased on an average of 35,000 per month in the private sector; in nine months over 300,000 more jobs were created. For that little rump group from the West to rise in the House and throw out a Government which was creating jobs was truly an immoral act.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): The people of Canada passed judgment on you.

Mr. Hawkes: For it to stand in this House and throw out the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) when in fact its budget was judged by the Canadian Welfare Council to be the fairest budget—

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): The people of Canada threw out that Government.

Mr. Roche: You threw it out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I believe the record will show that it was the people of Canada who decided that the Progressive Conservative Government should not continue in power.

Mr. Hawkes: In this Chamber on that night I was here, and you stood and you threw out the Government. It was your motion, and it was a budget which was the fairest—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's remarks should be addressed to the chair, and I assure him that this occupant of the Chair was not here on that occasion.

Mr. Hawkes: I stand corrected, Mr. Speaker. I hate to saddle you with their burdens, because their guilt is so deep and so true. That Government created 35,000 jobs per month in its nine-month life. That Government was reducing the federal deficit and the interest payments. That budget was reducing the burden of regulation on the small-business sector.

Mr. Riis: Then why did the people of Canada throw you out?

Mr. Hawkes: That Government was putting a transportation system in place in the West to export food. That Government was treating the poor people of Canada in a fairer manner than they had been treated in a decade. That Government was giving pensions to widowers between 60 and 65 years of age. That Government was doing everything which the New Democratic Party stands for in the House and which it says needs to be done, but the immorality was in standing in this Chamber and throwing that Government out of office; that was an immoral act.

Mr. Riis: Louder.

Mr. Hawkes: We have a situation in the country today where the Liberal Government spends $150 for every $100 it collects. If one does that in one's budget month after month or year after year, one is bankrupt in a big hurry. This Government is bankrupt. Where is the history of that?

I should like to refer to the time when that history began. It was in 1973 and 1974. I was not in the House at that time, but it was a minority Liberal Government. John Turner was the Finance Minister, and the NDP supported those budgets in good times. This caused Canadian taxpayers to go into debt in ever-increasing amounts. Those were the budgets which the NDP supported. They were good-times budgets under which they were borrowing money instead of paying their way. In hard times, when there is not enough money for welfare, Unemployment Insurance and job creation, we ought to know that the reason for that is that in good times the New Democratic Party, in its marriage with the Liberal Party of Canada, was borrowing money that was not necessary, to do things that were not necessary but had the consequence one decade later of reducing the degrees of freedom which Parliamentarians and Canadians have to help people who are in trouble.

That is another immoral act. It sits there unchallengeable in the history of the country—vote for budgets which put taxpayers in debt when they do not need to be, then stand in the House a decade later and say that we should be doing things differently.

• (1520)

Now let us go into modern history. The federal Government is borrowing this year something very close to $1,100 for every man, woman and child in this country. Fifty one per cent of the money borrowed for new securities in this country last year was borrowed by the federal Government. Every time the federal Government goes to the marketplace to borrow a dollar, it competes with you, me and everybody else who wants to borrow a dollar. The federal Government competes with those people who want to borrow to buy a home, a car, a washing machine. The consequence of that borrowing in the first instance is to raise interest rates. That is the first thing. It also makes the cost of borrowing more expensive for every single Canadian who needs to borrow money.

Second, this Government, in conjunction with the New Democratic Party, spends today, which means that all the children who are in school now will have to pay it back tomorrow. In other words, it is okay to waste money today because others will be the ones having to pay it back tomorrow. That is the second consequence of borrowing which is not fair to future generations.

Although we see this particular $19 billion borrowing Bill, we may not realize that we are participating in history as a result if it. No government in the history of this nation has ever brought forth a piece of legislation in which it asked to borrow so much money at any one time. This is the largest borrowing Bill in our history.

This makes me think of my own family budget. I borrow money for things that will last a long time. I borrowed money to buy a home, to buy a car, to buy a washer and dryer, to buy living room furniture and beds, but I pay off my debts as quickly as I can.

Why is the federal Government borrowing money? The federal Government borrows money simply to spend it. It does not borrow money to produce the kinds of things that will last, endure and help.

If the Government were here today asking for the support of Parliamentarians to borrow money to improve the transportation system in our country, significantly and if the Government were asking us to borrow money to get a sector of the economy going, perhaps the oil and gas or the lumber or food sectors in order to put in better infrastructure so that in the long-term we would be a more productive nation having more taxpayers and fewer tax spenders, we could stand in the House and support the Government.

However, when in this fiscal year alone the federal Government, through hidden and direct subsidies, has given $1 billion to one company called Petro-Canada and another $600 million-odd to it so that it could buy service stations that already exist, what happens, Mr. Speaker, is that 5 per cent or 6 per cent of that money is completely wasted.

Petro-Canada has not produced a single job in this country. It simply bought out an existing company? It changed the name of the employer. If this sum of money were put into new developments and new jobs, we could support the borrowing.

I say to Liberal Members opposite and to Members of the New Democratic Party, "Wake up, bring this borrowing to a halt and let us defeat the Bill together."

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, it is always interesting to sit in the House and listen to our socialist friends to the left who speak in very pious, sanctimonious and puritanical tones and then make snide remarks to Members of the Opposition and to Members of the Government. But when someone either from the Conservative or Liberal Parties makes any comment about them, their very thin skin shows through because they shout, they scream and they howl.

We are dealing today with Bill C-143, a Bill made up of two parts. The first part contains a request to borrow $5 billion by the Government of Canada for the period ending March 31, 1983, which is less than a month from now. The second part contains a request to authorize the borrowing of $14 billion for the 1983-1984 taxation year. The total of these two sums amounts to $19 billion. When and if this Bill is passed, it means the Government will have had the authority to borrow $26.2 billion in the fiscal period 1982-1983.

It is interesting to note that this Bill for $19 billion is the largest borrowing Bill that has ever been put before our Parliament. Equally it is very enlightening to look back at statistics over the years. If one goes back to the 1968-1969 fiscal year, the figure for the public expenditure or the Estimates—the total cost of operating our whole country—was some $12.39 billion. In that same year the interest on the public debt was about $1.4 billion or 11.7 per cent of the total budget expenditures. That year, 1968-1969, was the year the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first took power. Then if we look ahead from 1968-1969 to the 1983-1984 fiscal year, the one into which we are now entering, we find from the Estimates tabled by the Minister a week or so ago that expenditures for the coming fiscal year are some $88.9 billion. Of that $88.9 billion, some $18.5 billion will be used to pay interest on the public debt or to service our debt. That figure of $18.5 billion represents 20.9 per cent of the total estimated budgetary expenditures. If we compare those two fiscal years, 1968-1969 and 1983-1984, we find that public expenditures have risen some 750 per cent, or 7.5 times. The interest on our public debt has risen some 1,285 per cent, or 12.8 times. In other words, the interest that we will be paying in the 1983-84 fiscal year on our public debt exceeds the total cost of running the country in 1968-69 by over 50 per cent. I want to impress upon Hon. Members the fact that I am referring to the interest only and comparing that to the total cost of running the country. It is almost unbelievable.

It is also interesting to relate these figures on a per capita basis. If one considers the Estimates for the coming fiscal year which amount to $88.9 billion, one finds that this amounts to some $3,560 per capita, or for every man, woman and child in Canada. If one relates this figure to the 282 constituencies, one finds that each constituency is faced with a debt this year, or cost of running the country, of some $315 million. Let us consider the interest on the public debt of $18 billion plus. If one relates that on a per capita basis, one finds that this year alone every man, woman and child in Canada is responsible for $700 of interest on our public debt. That has nothing to do with paying back any part of the capital.

People ask me, "How long can this continue? What has happened to our country?" One can tell people that the Government has overspent, and they understand that fact. However, I think a simple way of explaining it to people is to compare Government to a small-businessman, a farmer or another individual. If one spends more than one takes in, one will eventually end up in trouble. In the case of an individual, he or she ends up in bankruptcy.

In normal times, when a businessman sees that he is running into financial difficulties, he has one or two options. He tries to increase sales, but if times are tough, he sometimes has difficulty in increasing his sales and cash flow. However, most important, he cuts his costs. He looks around and tries to find where he can cut back on an expenditure so that his costs will not exceed his income. A businessman who is shrewd enough to do those things usually survives.

The Government has a similar option. It can cut expenses, but it can also increase its income through taxes, which it does, and it can borrow.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that my allotted time has expired. I will simply say that that is exactly what the Government has done. It has not cut expenses. It has borrowed and borrowed and borrowed, year after year, and that is why we are in this trouble today.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, you may be wondering why so many Conservative Members are rising to oppose the Bill. Not least among our reasons is that, despite the sanctimonious offerings of the NDP a few moments ago, as we tried to find any representatives of that Party to oppose the Bill, there is not even one Member of the NDP in the House of Commons at this moment. That is why the Conservative Party is needed to fight this kind of Government.

Mr. Riis: Point of order!

An Hon. Member: You were not in the House at the right time.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if it is normal practice for Hon. Member to refer to people who are absent from their seats. However, I want to remind the Hon. Member that I was standing at the back—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has made his point.

An Hon. Member: You do it all the time.

Mr. Riis: Low blow.

Mr. Roche: I am glad that the spokesman for the NDP is—

An Hon. Member: The sole Member.

Mr. Roche: —is present to hear these words, because—

Mr. Pepin: Be specific.

An Hon. Member: He is leaving again.

Mr. Roche: Maybe he likes my television image and he wants to watch the proceedings on TV, and that is all right.

Mr. Riis: Why don't you say something, Doug? You are above those comments.

Mr. Pepin: Don't be bellicose.

Mr. Roche: To get down to some serious discussion, Bill C-143 comprises two pieces of paper without any kind of explanation, and asks for $19 billion. It is the largest borrowing authority Bill in the history of our country. I must ask whether or not seven out of ten Canadians can be wrong. The latest Gallup poll showed that seven out of ten Canadians have little or no confidence in the Government. It is no wonder that is so, when the Government has a deficit of $27.5 billion and now comes before us with a small, two-page Bill requesting authority to borrow $19 billion, when the debt servicing of the federal deficit has now reached 20.9 per cent. Those figures are horrendous. It is the Conservatives who are fighting the Bill, and if anyone asks why that is so, that is the reason.

The performance of the Government reminds me of that of many of the developing countries around the world today. I often speak, in my responsibilities here, about developing countries. I can tell Your Honour that as I rise to speak to Bill C-143 this afternoon, I almost feel as though I were referring to a developing country. Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that of the 24 industrialized countries in the OECD, the economic performance of Canada was ranked last? That is a shocking statement, a shocking performance by the Government.

My objections to the Bill concern both what the Government is doing and how it is doing it. It is requesting $19 billion, which works out to $1 billion a week from now until the Bill constitutes the largest borrowing authority Bill in Canadian history. It must be viewed in the context of the deficit of almost $27.5 billion.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came to power in 1968, the deficit stood at $497 million, meaning that it has increased some 60 times since then. In 1968, there were 358,000 unemployed. Today, there are 1.6 million. The $19 billion in spending authority sought through the Bill represents the size of the entire budget of the federal Government from 1973 to 1974, the very first year I came to Parliament.

The current deficit of $27.5 billion means that every man, woman and child in Canada carries a debt of $1,125 or $3,700 per family. I cite these figures to highlight the magnitude of the Bill. It is a comment on the Government's economic mismanagement. In the future, moreover, the massive size of the deficit will place severe constraints on economic policy, leaving a legacy of debt to the taxpayers of the future.

I do not have time to go into detail concerning how the Government's deficit could be both reduced and better applied. However, I refer Hon. Members to the excellent three-point program introduced earlier in the debate by my Party's finance critic, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), and the nine suggestions offered by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I remember the words of the present Prime Minister who, in the 1980 election campaign, said that the Government was going to hold the line on Government expenditure growth down to below the rate of the GNP. The Prime Minister said that the deficit would be reduced in a phased and orderly fashion and any new expenditure programs to meet the evolving needs and requirements of Canadians would be financed by reallocating existing expenditures or by increases in revenue. So much for those words and that campaign rhetoric that was forced on the Canadian people by our friends from the NDP, who voted out the only decent Government that this country has had in the last 20 years.

Since returning to office, the Liberals have spent at twice the rate of growth in the GNP and their deficit has more than doubled, all that since 1980. No wonder we are standing in our place to oppose this kind of Government performance.

The substance of what the Government is doing through this Bill is made much worse by the incomprehensible manner in which it is being done. In November of 1981, the then Minister of Finance predicted a budgetary deficit of $10.5 billion for 1982-83. In May, 1982 he was speaking in terms of a deficit of $19.2 billion. Last October, the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) forecast a deficit of $23.6 billion. Now it is up to $27.5 billion, with anticipation of going up to $30 bilion next year.

This fourth borrowing Bill now before us, the fourth in the last eight months, stands for an increase in the deficit of well over two and one-half times, in just 15 months. What guarantee do we have that the Government will not come back to the House within a couple of months, arrogantly demanding more and more and using its majority to force such a Bill through the House of Commons, despite the fact that seven out of ten Canadians today have no confidence in the economic record of this Government?

In view of this abysmal record, Sir, I would expect the Government to be concerned about its own credibility. Such does not appear to be the case. This failure to project with a modicum of accuracy and to fulfil its promises with even a modicum of decency should have brought expressions of remorse. Above all, we on this side of the House would have liked to have seen an explanation of why the Government had so erred, as well as some signs of measures to rectify this colossal error. Instead, no documentation has been provided to us beyond specifics such as figures on the Unemployment Insurance fund, financing for established programs, and the entire question of revenue. What is more, this kind of accounting had been explicitly promised by both the present Minister of Finance and his predecessor, now the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) who promised, and I quote:

> I would not expect the House to act upon an additional request for borrowing authority without providing it with detailed information on the economic situation—

So much for another broken Liberal promise!

Notwithstanding, Bill C-143 effectively asks the House to sign a blank cheque. Any creditor who walked into a financial institution asking for this massive line of credit without spelling out how the loan would be used and how it would be repaid would be thrown out in an instant. That is what the Canadian electorate is going to do with this Government—throw it out the instant they get that first opportunity, in an election.

In conclusion, this supplementary borrowing authority Bill is but another nail in the casket of this Liberal regime. Not only does that Government do the wrong thing, it insists on going about it the wrong way, and forcing its way through by the arbitrary use of its majority in the House of Commons, notwithstanding the fact that it has lost the confidence of the Canadian people.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the supplementary borrowing authority that we are discussing in the House of Commons today has the Liberal Government asking the Parliament of Canada to approve borrowing of some $19 billion. The Government has not explained exactly how this money is going to be spent. We understand that there is a shortfall of some $5 billion in terms of the current year's budget, but we have little knowledge as to what the Government is going to do with the other $14 billion.

I suppose that the Government is asking us, on behalf of all Canadians, to trust it. I personally find it hard to trust this Government when it says in effect, "This is what we want. We cannot tell you what it is for, but trust us."

The New Democratic Party does not trust this Government, nor do many Canadians across this country. For example, last year the budget projected approximately a $10 billion deficit for the 1982-83 fiscal year, but the end result was a deficit of $26 billion. The accumulation of our national debt over the years amounts to what could be, by the end of this fiscal year, approximately $160 billion. It would be impossible to find a business, an individual or a law practice in this country that could operate under the same financial management as this Government is operating under and asking Parliament to approve.

Another more pressing issue of mismanagement by this Government lies in the plan of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to change the statutory rates for movement of grain. Possibly part of the money which the Government is requesting to borrow will be used in this plan, but let me use the example of the Crow rate to point out the mistrust that has built up in Canadians for this Government.

In the Battlefords-Meadow Lake constituency which I represent, by the year 1990 it will cost the grain-producers some $42 million to $46 million per year to move their grain to the ports. In fact, the cost is becoming so astronomical that it could possibly be cheaper to move grain through the United States, if the Americans would allow us to do so, and through the river system there to New Orleans, as opposed to moving it to our ports in Canada. I think it is a very sad situation in which we find ourselves.

I pointed out earlier that the change in the Crow rates will cost, in my constituency alone, somewhere between $42 million and $46 million per year. That is based on approximately 7,000 Wheat Board permit-holders who reside within the Battlefords-Meadow Lake constituency. In areas like this, agricultural economists say that the dollar produced by the farmer has a multiplier effect of somewhere between four to seven times. By simple mathematics, if the multiplier effect amounted to a minimum of $4, looking at the cost of $42 million per year, that would take out of the economy of the Battlefords-Meadow Lake area $168 million a year by the year 1990. The worst scenario that is predicted is that if it costs the producers of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake constituency $46 million a year and it has a multiplier effect of seven times, it could cost the economy of our local area $322 million a year.

Agriculture is a very important part of the economy in northwestern Saskatchewan, and this will have very serious effects not only on farmers themselves but on the business community and, in fact, all of the people who live within that area.

• (1550)

I see that the Minister of Transport, the Member for Ottawa-Carleton, has left the Chamber. The Ottawa-Carleton riding cannot stand to hear too much about the Pepin plan, as it has been called, the change in the Crow rate, because that is a damaging thing which this Government is doing to the grain producers of this country.

The Government says the grain producers have to pay more in order to upgrade the rail lines and get their products to the ports and on to the international markets which are so important. We had a trade advantage, it might be called, of some $6 billion last year because of agricultural products which we were able to move under the statutory Crow rate. Once this is gone, it may not be financially viable for Canadian farmers to produce, especially those grains which fall under the statutory Crow rate. They will pay more for transportation than the price they actually receive for the product. We could end up with a very serious situation economically and in terms of the food production on which we are so dependent in our over-all economy. If I am not mistaken, 20 per cent of our economy is based on agriculture.

As I mentioned earlier, the Government says it is necessary to increase the cost of grain transportation to farmers so that the money can be used to upgrade the rail transportation system, even though by the end of this decade grain will only account for between 14 and 20 per cent of all products moved over the rail line. The products making up the larger amount will be coal, some of it owned by Canadian Pacific, petrochemical products and potash. These products are not now moved with any great efficiency unless the railways tend to benefit.

The Crow rate is an historic rate. Taken in isolation, one might come to the conclusion that it should be changed, but not so. We cannot look at the Crow rate in isolation. We must look at it in a global context.

The railway companies of Canada, especially Canadian Pacific Railway, were paid handsomely with millions of acres of land and millions of dollars in subsidies and grants for putting in place a rail transportation system in Canada. In fact, they had resources to draw funds from if in future years the statutory Crow rate did not fully compensate them for the movement of grain. The railway companies have forgotten about that. The profits which they have received from their ventures, ventures made possible by the Government of Canada through land grants, money and rolling stock, were not re-invested in the rail system of Canada. Obviously they were invested in the many other diverse operations of Canadian Pacific. They now come back to Parliament to say they need more money. Maybe they do in terms of movement of grain. However, they should be able to draw from the vast resources they have been given. They were originally given to them to subsidize grain transportation in this country. The companies have forgotten that, and the Liberal Government has forgotten it as well. They say the farmers should pay more to move their products to the ports and on to the markets.

We in the New Democratic Party say that the Crow rate should be maintained. On the other hand, the railways should not lose money in transporting grain to the ports. If the railways suffer a valid loss, they should be compensated, but not by the farmers alone. It should be by the people of Canada through their Government because of the vast importance of agriculture to the Canadian economy. This should be shared equally among all sectors of the Canadian economy.

Before closing, I would like to return to the item before us. The borrowing authority for $19 billion is not looked upon favourably by myself as an individual Member of Parliament. It is shameful that this Government can come and ask us for this sum of money without laying out a plan, that it can simply ask us to trust it when it has betrayed so many trusts in the past.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They are absolutely shameless.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly on this Bill which the Government is insisting that we pass with undue haste. The Government is asking for a record amount under this borrowing authority of some $19 billion. What is so unusual is that it is asking for part of the money for the present fiscal year, the majority of it, however, to be spent in the next fiscal year, even though we have not had a budget.

When the Government dealt with the financial mess this country is in last October, it gave us the up-to-date statistics and their projections. Four months later they need a further $4 billion more than what they projected. In order to get through the end of fiscal 1982-83, they must increase the deficit from $22.1 billion to the new figure of $26.2 billion. The Government wants an additional $4 billion. They are not sure why they want $4 billion. They agree they need $3 billion now. They want to borrow an additional $2 billion for a possible $5 billion for this fiscal year. If this money is not needed, it wants to transfer the $2 billion into the next fiscal year. Therefore, it will have $3 billion or $5 billion for this year, depending on what it wants to do. It is rather unique for the Government to be in the situation of not knowing whether it will need that $2 billion this year or keep it for next year when we are only 27 days away from the end of the fiscal year.

The part of the Bill which upsets most people who have been dealing with it in this debate and a great number of Canadians is that the Government, which promised to bring in a budget early in 1983, is now almost a quarter of the way into the new year and there is no intention of bringing in the budget until April or May, which will be one-third into the year.

The Government is not telling us why or on what it intends to spend the money, but it wants $14 billion to spend. I do not know whether this will go to financing more projects for Mr. Gillespie or toward hire more people in the situation of Donald Macdonald. Canadians are becoming a little jaded, tired and cynical about this Government and the way it spends money.

The House of Commons, its committees and individual Members, the whole system of Government, only works with a certain amount of goodwill, faith and trust by one side in the other. We have to work together. The Government has destroyed much of the trust, goodwill and faith that it might have had in its reservoir. The Hon. Members in the House do not trust the Government, they do not trust what the Government is doing and, I believe, by and large, that feeling reflects what the people in the country feel. The whittling away of the power of Parliament, the whittling away of the ability of Parliament or its committees to scrutinize the devious methods which the Government uses to get its will done, has made people very cynical about the entire political process. I do not believe that the Canadian people today have nearly as much trust in their politicians as they had just a decade or two ago. I do not believe that the Canadian people are willing to write a carte blanche cheque to the present Liberal Government for $14 billion without receiving some indication of what it is in fact going to be spending it on, without getting some detail by way of a budget.

• (1600)

It was not too long ago, Mr. Speaker, that the former Minister of Finance set down what he thought was a practical, intelligent statement. I quote from the report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of May 31, 1982 where he said:

> I do not think it would be appropriate to ask the House for additional borrowing authority until I have laid out in some detail an update of both the economic situation and the fiscal situation.

That rule was good on May 31, 1982, but less than a year later it does not seem to apply to the Minister of Finance any longer. Of course, we heard that rules were set down dealing with the conduct of Cabinet Ministers within a two-year period, but they did not apply, either. Just last October 27 Hansard records the present Minister of Finance making a promise. That promise was that he would introduce a new budget before he sought any more authority to borrow money. On page 20081 of Hansard he says, and I quote:

> In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-84 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

So it is a precondition to seeking any more borrowing authority that we were going to have a budget with some detail as to what the Government's plans and projections were for the 1983-84 fiscal year, as well as the following fiscal years. The promise made by the present Minister of Finance on October 27, 1982, is now also out the window. We have had two Ministers of Finance in a row who have made promises and commitments, set down guidelines, and now the Government does not want to follow them. What we have been asked for by the introduction of Bill C-143 is a carte blanche cheque for $19 billion, "some of which we are going to use this year, some next year, and the part we are not sure we are going to use this year, we are going to carry over to next year." I do not believe anyone would lend anyone such a large sum of money, or give anyone a line of credit, without knowing what their projections were and why they wanted it.

The interesting part is that this Liberal Government has become so used to spending money, it is not really sure why it needs it. Let us take a look at some historical facts. In 1968-69 when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first came to office as the head of the Liberal Government, the Government only needed $12.4 billion. That has increased now to $90.6 billion for the upcoming year, which is an increase of 630 per cent.

I see that my time has now run out and perhaps I will have an opportunity to continue with this point when we get back to the main motion.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Horticultural Council met in session in Ottawa earlier this week at its annual convention, providing an opportunity for farmers of horticultural crops from across Canada to get together to discuss various aspects of their business in which they have shared interest. The concern of the Horticultural Council this year reflects the damage which the recession is doing to the farm communities. To this extent, farmers have much in common with other segments of our Canadian economy.

Nearly every domestic Canadian producer is troubled by the share of the Canadian market which is taken by cheaper offshore products. Our problem in farming in Canada, as in manufacturing, is that our cost of production in many instances exceeds the costs of competitive foreign products delivered to our Canadian markets. One of our main Canadian distinctions, which presently work against our competitive effectiveness in all segments of our economy, is to be found in the expanding share of our Gross National Product which is being seized by Government. The demands of Government are presently dramatized by Bill C-143, a request for authority to borrow an additional $19 billion simply to keep the Government operating for the next several months, and operating in its "normal" fashion, I might say. Borrowing of this magnitude must tell Canadians that one reason we are losing our competitive edge is that the money which the Government spends eventually costs us in tax dollars, eventually reflects in the cost of every commodity we produce, and eventually makes Canada less competitive than other areas of the world.

There is no pleasure in responding to the challenge thrown out by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when, on February 17, he asked the House to approve the request of the Government for authority to borrow $19 billion. This House, if it is foolish enough to approve this latest borrowing authority Bill, will be simply shifting a permanent burden of debt to the backs of the youth of Canada who, like my grandchildren, Tara, Lucas, Tasha and Trione, will be the future wage earners and taxpayers of our nation. How can there be any suggestion of a docile acceptance by this House of the request of the Minister for yet another $19 billion? When and where is it going to end? I believe it will only end when the Government itself is prepared to discipline its own fiscal demands. The six and five restraint is for others, not for this Government. That is very apparent.

Saturday Night magazine, in its February issue, deals with this issue in an article entitled, "Is Government spending out of control?" It quotes Dian Cohen as observing:

> The $76-billion budget, . . . "means that three and a half million Canadians are working all year so that the government can spend their money."

The article goes on to state:

> The government's "six and five" restraint programme offers little in the way of economic substance, . . . pinning the blame for a faltering economy, or even the blame for high government spending, on the pay package of public servants is a gross distortion of reality.

I would like to read what the article says about the six and five restraint program. It says:

> Savings generated by "six and five" will reduce total government expenditures by less than one per cent.

● (1610)

The patent phoniness of Government Members representing their six and five policy as being responsible for the lowering inflation rate is in character with past distortions. The Government they support so obediently has killed the economy, wrecked the ambition and hope of the people, offended investment, and reduced the spirit of adventure and risk-taking by removing opportunities for success. Having broken the confidence that Canadians have had in themselves historically, as well as in their Government and their country, having killed the expectations of Canadians by placing more than 1.5 million people on the unemployment rolls, Members opposite engage themselves in chest thumping in unison, claiming for themselves the success for six and five which they could not possibly under any circumstances have achieved.

Crediting the six and five program with bringing inflation under 10 per cent is about as rational as the farmer who goes into the chicken house, kills all the chickens, and a week later takes pride that the weasels are no longer getting the eggs. Or perhaps like the arsonist standing in the cold ashes of his house, taking pleasure in the fact that he no longer spends anything on house repairs. This Government's achievement is that it has killed the economy, not that it has succeeded in reducing inflation.

The Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), who I am sorry to say is absent, challenged us to be honest; be moral, he said. What advice from a source which recently demonstrated that this Government considers anything which benefits Liberals to be moral! The failure of the Government to provide a rationale for its borrowing authority demands is an indication of its contempt for Parliament and the nation. Or is it that this Government is simply so utterly ashamed of its role in bringing the economy to a state of collapse that it cannot bear to expose itself to the truth? Not only is Bill C-143 unprecedented in size, but is unprecedented in the circumstances surrounding the request. It is the norm to ask the House for leave to borrow money for purposes of the Government which are known, understood and debatable in the House. It is far from usual to suggest to the House, which has the responsibility to understand, debate, approve and, if possible, control Government spending regimes, that it dissociate itself from that responsibility and become, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) put it, simply a rubber stamp in the hands of the Government.

It is not the intention of Members on this side to become the putty in the hands of the Government which the Members opposite have become, molding themselves instantly and easily and completely to the political priorities of the Cabinet. It seems no more important to follow the traditions of this House in the matter of the latest borrowing authority Bill than it is for Cabinet Ministers and ex-Cabinet Ministers to observe the Prime Minister's own guidelines for conduct. These guidelines were clearly breached by Ministers of the Crown and by an ex-Minister in the Coalgate affair. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) states that it is up to each person's conscience to define how these guidelines should be observed. Well, Scripture speaks of the time when there was no king in Israel, every man was doing what was right in his own eyes, and that was not a good time in the history of Israel.

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to listen to the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King). I have enjoyed his remarks on this Bill.

I am very pleased to have the opportunity to speak today on Bill C-143 because I am concerned about the far reaching effect it will have on so many Canadians. On the surface this Bill is asking for authority to borrow an unprecedented amount of $19 billion. The Government wants further authority to borrow $5 billion just to cover its spending to the end of this fiscal year, and then another $14 billion to start off the next fiscal year. Authority to borrow such a large sum of money before the year has ended is no way to start out, particularly in view of the disastrous year just ending.

It is time, Mr. Speaker, that this Government gave us some indication as to when all this borrowing will end. To date the Government has asked for and received the authority to borrow $21.1 billion for this year alone, and the additional $5 billion it is requesting will bring it up to almost $27 billion. Will it be enough? If we look at the Government's past record we can see that it will not be enough. It is never enough. The Government is like a slot machine, it eats money, spits out a little in return and then asks for more. But there comes a time when we have to say: stop. We have to make the Government accountable. We have to make the Government reassess its fiscal policies and make an honest attempt at balancing the budget instead of creating larger and larger deficits. It is this present attitude of "we can always borrow the money" that is driving this country into the ground and toward bankruptcy. Expenditure of public funds must be accountable to Parliament.

Three years ago, Mr. Speaker, interest on the national debt was half of what it is today, some $16.7 billion. To the average Canadian, that means one out of three dollars the Government takes in through taxes is going toward paying the interest on a debt which is over $134 billion. It is time the Government faced the reality that it has to find other means to pay its debts. It is time it faced the reality that Canada cannot continue forever to operate on a deficit basis, otherwise we will continue to fall further and further behind every year as this Government continues to muddle its way through budget after budget and borrowing authority Bill after borrowing authority Bill.

We have now reached the stage, Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) will not even provide us with the necessary information and financial forecasts so that Parliament can scrutinize the need for this increased spending. We have reached a point when the Government asks Parliament for more and more money and hopes we will not even ask why and for what. There is no bank in this country, Mr. Speaker, which would approve a loan to any citizen without the reasons being specified. Is this any way to run a country? We have to know why the Government needs $14 billion of borrowing authority for the next year. We have to know why we should be giving our approval to borrow this kind of money. What we in the Opposition cannot accept is that this Government has not yet learned its lesson, that deficit financing cannot last forever. We cannot accept that this Government cannot do a better job of trying to balance its budget.

The cost of borrowing money to finance programs the Government could otherwise fund through better fiscal management is a cost much too high for Canadians to bear. We have a Government which is operating on annual budgets in the billions, operating on annual budgets from a bottomless trough, yet the difference is that my constituents—indeed, all Canadians—do not constantly borrow money needed to pay their bills. They use other means, they adjust their lifestyles in keeping with reduced incomes and rising prices. The time is long past when this Government should operate within its own projected estimates and not have come to Parliament time and time again asking for more and more.

What we are seeing is a Government so far in debt, it has lost the room to manoeuvre. Just a few short years ago, if the Government was not doing as well as it should, it had the flexibility to inject funds into programs to put the country back on the right road again. Now the Government has incurred such a disastrously large deficit through constant mismanagement that it cannot afford to adopt fiscal measures that will stimulate the economy, get people back to work and get businesses moving again.

• (1620)

With such a large deficit, the Government cannot afford to produce the tax incentives that are so desperately needed to get people to spend money instead of saving it.

What we are seeing is a Government that is chasing its own tail, going around and around in circles. The more it borrows the less flexibility it has, and the less flexibility it has the more it has to borrow.

The Liberal Government is the biggest borrower we have in Canada. It borrows for everything. The Government needs a Royal commission on the economy—we borrow. The Government needs money to pay exorbitant stipends to its old friends—we borrow. The Government needs to pay for the use of JetStars by Cabinet Ministers—we borrow.

Let us take a look at how much it costs each and every taxpayer of this country to finance this deficit. Fifteen years ago, the deficit used only 4 per cent of the Government's spending money—this year, 34 per cent of the total expenditures are taken up by the deficit—a deficit the Minister of Finance is asking us to increase with the passage of this Bill. That is an increase of 30 per cent in 15 years.

On the other hand, if the Liberal Government had managed to balance its budget for the last 15 years, the cost of servicing the debt would be only $3.3 billion. That is a far cry from the $16.7 billion we are facing today.

But the worse effect of this continued borrowing and continued mismanagement of the affairs of Canada is the loss of confidence other nations have in Canada and the continued loss of confidence Canadians have in their country. We used to be an industrial power, but now we cannot even begin to compete. We stand twenty-fourth out of 24 countries in productive capacity. Economists predict that we will be the last country out of the recession, and that is not something the Hon. Members opposite can blame on the world recession.

The Government has been operating in the red since 1970. That is 13 years of operating at a loss—a deplorable record of a Liberal Government that knows no restrictions. Any businessman knows that you cannot recover from 13 years of operating in the red unless you take some drastic action such as cutting costs and stimulating sales through effective marketing strategies. What strategies has the Government produced? It has only produced a defence of its policies at great expense to the taxpayer.

It cost the Canadian taxpayer $70 million to learn that the six and five program is working—that is advocacy advertising. It cost the Canadian taxpayer $10 million for Government hospitality—food, drink and entertainment. That money could have been better spent on employment programs and could have provided employment for 10,000 people. This in turn would have meant more taxes and netted revenue for the Government and more money being spent in the economy as well as savings to the Government on UIC benefits.

The metric program has cost the Canadian taxpayer a total of $65 million to date. It has also cost the business sector additional costs in conversion measures and has created a furor among Canadians that still rages.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on for hours but I realize that my time is limited. There is much to say about government waste but my major concern about this borrowing authority and all the previous borrowing authorities we have seen go through here in recent years, is the effect it will have on our citizens in the future. The effects on the younger generation of today of a stagnant economy and an escalating deficit is evident in the many letters I am receiving from students who are frustrated and wondering why they have to pay for the extravagant and ostentatious spending habits of an irresponsible Government. Students are faced with high unemployment and little prospect of job when they graduate. They are starting off their adult life with no hope for a secure financial future.

No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot condone the request by the Government to borrow a further $19 billion unless it is prepared to take a responsible and realistic view of its spending habits and be accountable to Parliament for its spending needs.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, like others in the House I am very pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-143. I consider this to be an historic event because this is the largest, one-shot request for supplementary borrowing authority in the history of this Parliament. I would be happy if I could be assured that this is a unique event, that this is the only time the request would be as low, but I am very much afraid that I cannot hope for that.

Bill C-143 requests authority to borrow $19 billion. Someone once asked how you could get your arms around $19 billion. Never mind your arms, Mr. Speaker, how do you get your mind to grasp the extent of the $19 billion requested by a Government that congratulates itself on its restraint program?

The only thing about Bill C-143 that smacks of restraint is the amount of paper used to ask for the authority—it is one sheet of paper, printed on both sides. The first side requests authority for $5 billion. I suppose the natural thing for Members to ask is why the Government wants the $5 billion. In this little sheet of paper it is stated that it may be required for public works and general purposes. The second page contains a request for a further $14 billion. All day long Members in the House have been asking why the Government wants to borrow $14 billion. The stated purpose, according to this paper, is that it is required for public works and general purposes.

How can we possibly get a handle on what the Government is trying to do? Perhaps I can tackle it this way, Mr. Speaker. You are a family man, a father and a grandfather, and I am sure other Liberal Members have children and grandchildren. If one of their children or grandchildren asked them for 50 cents or a dollar, they would probably ask what it was for. If the child answered that it was just for spending, presumably the parent would hand over the money.

If the Government asked us for authority to borrow $1 billion, we would probably reply in the same way and not insist on a detailed account of what it was for. But suppose the child or grandchild asked for $100 or $150. Surely the parent would want to know what it was going to be spent on. If the child still answered it was just for spending, how many parents or grandparents would hand the money over without some explanation of what it was for?

It is somewhat the same with this little piece of paper which requests $14 billion. It is an unreasonable request. The Canadian people are the parents of the Government and are responsible for its existence. The situation is the same—the Government, through Members of this House, is asking the Canadian people for money, and the Canadian people are entitled to ask what it is for. They are entitled to know why the Government wants $14 billion.

It is almost inconceivable what we are being asked to do. How can any Member of the House, certainly any Opposition Member, return to his or her constituency and answer as to why the Government was just given authority to borrow $14 billion? How could we reply to such a question? How will Liberal backbenchers reply to their constituents when asked why they gave the Government the authority to borrow and spend $14 billion? When they are asked what it was for, what will they say? They are not interested and they do not care. Their excuse will be, "I am sorry, but I was not in the House; I was back home in my constituency". We are entitled to know before we pass this Bill what the funds will be used for.

On February 17, 1983, the Minister of Finance informed the House that as of February 11 a total of $20.6 billion of borrowing authority had been used of the $21 billion authorized. Now the Minister is asking us to authorize a further $5 billion immediately and another $14 billion to be spent by next summer. The House will not be in recess for that long, the Government does not need that $14 billion now. If it does, we would like to know why. It may well be that the net deficit is far larger than the Minister of Finance is prepared to tell us.

This is the third time the Liberal Government has come before the House in the past year for supplementary borrowing authority. First, there was Bill C-111 for $6.6 billion; then there was Bill C-125 for $7 billion; then Bill C-128 for $4 billion. They have all been passed. The Opposition has kept hammering at the Government to stop increasing the Government debt. Speaker after speaker has pointed out today that we have not obtained any kind of answer or explanation from the Government.

I remember in 1980 when I was first elected to the House of Commons. At that time the Liberal Government had left a deficit running of $10 billion. I could not comprehend that figure at that time, and I remember discussing it with my constituents. They could not understand it either. I said that surely this was the height of irresponsibility which the Government would show. It is not even three years, and the deficit has almost tripled; it is now $27.6 billion or $26.9 billion. In any event, it will be $30 billion the next time the Minister opens his mouth.

That has to be an irresponsibility which no Government in the western world has exercised before. The Government has attempted to disguise the increases in the borrowing authority in a variety of ways. Every time it asks for a larger amount, it expects the House to pass without question various borrowing Bills. Canadians are very much aware of the delinquent fiscal policies and economic mismanagement of successive Liberal Governments since 1968 which have thrust the country into a recession, I would say almost a depression. Certainly it is a recession of which we have not seen the likes since the 1930s. As many speakers have indicated, Canada's economic decline is the worst of the 24 OECD countries. By the third quarter of 1982, Canadian manufacturers were operating at the lowest level of capacity and utilization since records were first kept in 1961.

I see Mr. Speaker is motioning that my time is up. I might say that my time is not up. It is the Liberal Government's and the Liberal Party's time that is up. As soon as Canadians get an opportunity, they will show them that their time is up.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to follow an act like the one of the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer).

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Try.

Mr. Halliday: Indeed I will. I have in my hand Bill C-143. As the Hon. Member for Okanagan North said, it is a Bill of less than two pages. It is interesting because it is somewhat different from the usual supplementary borrowing authority Bills which come before us, in as much as it is divided into two parts. We would not be surprised if it contained only one part, because we are in the habit of receiving such Bills in the past where we were expected to provide some borrowing authority. Having only a few weeks to go to the end of the current fiscal year, we would expect, as in the past, that the Government would need some more money. Indeed it does. It needs another $5 billion to finish out this fiscal year which ends on March 31. It would not surprise us to have that particular part of the Bill to deal with, but the Government has surprised us this time. As the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said earlier this afternoon, the Government has given us a two-part Bill. The vicious and offensive part about it is that the Government has also probably gone into six months of the next fiscal year and is seeking borrowing authority for another $14 billion. The worst part of it all is that the Government has completely refused to give any explanation of why it needs that extra money. It would be very repetitive to go through some of the analogies. The Hon. Member for Okanagan North did an excellent job of bringing to your attention, Mr. Speaker, how you would handle your grandchildren if they were to come to you and ask for a significantly large sum of money. Knowing you as I do, I am sure you would not handle them in the way the Government is expecting us to handle its request for $14 billion for the next fiscal year.

As I said, it is a two-page Bill. It is very simple, but it has to be contrasted with the 295-page Bill which we were debating yesterday and have been for some time. It was a Bill to amend the Income Tax Act; it was not the Income Tax Act itself. The Government has found ways and means of digging into the purses of every Canadian to extract a little more money here and there from Canadians who have justly and rightly earned the money. It takes some 295 pages for it to get all the money it can, but when it comes to explaining how it will spend the money, it is so arrogant that it does it in a page and three-quarters. The Government expects the Opposition to sit back and accept it.

There was a time in parliamentary history when this could not have happened. Some of my colleagues go back further than I and can probably remember days when it would have been very difficult for a Government to put through such a Bill because it would have been stymied in the House until Members were told something about it. The Bill would not have passed because of unending debate. It would not have passed until the Government had committed itself to some explanation of what it was all about.

This brings me to what I feel is of great concern to me and of increasing concern to the people of Canada. I am referring to the attitudes and characteristics of the present Government and their adverse effect on our total parliamentary system, as well as the respect of Canadians not only for Members of Parliament and governments but for the parliamentary system, which should be something very dear to all of us.

In my last few minutes I would like to make some comments about some very serious and deplorable characteristics of the present Government which need to be brought to the attention of the people of Canada. Actually, they know about them. Their feelings about the Government and all of us in the House are aroused as a result of attempts by the Government to do what it is doing in Bill C-143.

We are seeing signs of a lack of trustworthiness. If not that, it is incompetence or both. It is very manifest in this Bill. One has to go back only three or four months to the time when the Minister of Finance gave his financial statement in the House. You have heard it before in these debates. This is so important as evidence of what I am trying to say that I will repeat it, not for your benefit, Mr. Speaker, but for the benefit of about 140 Liberal backbenchers, only one of whom is here today. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on October 27, 1982, in this House, as reported in Hansard at page 20081, said:

• (1640)

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government is presently seeking a $4 billion increase in its borrowing authority under the provisions of Standing Order 72A. I have outlined the factors leading to this request. I have also made it clear by the estimates I have presented that further borrowing authority will be required before the end of this fiscal year. In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the curent fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-1984 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

That was a commitment on the part of the Minister of Finance to give us a budget and set out estimates and future predictions, and he concluded his sentence with:

—and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

Let me give one more example of this lack of trustworthiness. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) when he was Minister of Finance appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on May 31, 1982, less than a year ago, had this to say:

I do not think it would be appropriate to ask the House for additional borrowing authority until I have laid out in some detail an update of both the economic situation and the fiscal situation.

Here we have two very senior Ministers telling the House and the Canadian people that they will give us some information before seeking further borrowing authority. But what do we have? We have Bill C-143 before us and we do not have that information. It is that kind of attitude that causes cynicism with regard to Parliament and to governments. I can say that honestly about this Government in particular. I hope that when we get rid of this Government we will not see that cynicism existing and pervading in the country as it does today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Halliday: A second characteristic of this Government alarms me. That of the arrogance, the secrecy and the contempt this Government has for Parliament. I could give a full hour's speech on the contempt this Government has had for Parliament over the years, but I do not think it could be expressed any more effectively than it was in an editorial that appeared in a leading Canadian newspaper, the Toronto Star. That newspaper is not known to be a supporter of the Progressive Conservative Party, but is often a supporter of the Liberal Party. On February 20, 1983, the editorial was headed "Sidestepping Parliament". This editorial was describing the attempt of the Minister of Finance to get money without saying what he wants it for. In part, this editorial reads:

—it would be tempting to look on his corner-cutting as a necessary evil. But to do so would undermine the supremacy of Parliament.

That is precisely right. The present Government has no respect for the supremacy of Parliament. The editorial continues:

One of the lynchpins of our democracy is the belief that directly elected representatives of the people—not mandarins in the finance department—should make the final decisions on how and where and in what quantities our budget is to be disbursed.

That is very true. There is another characteristic of the present Government which is downgrading the feeling of Canadians about Parliament. This Government is prepared to sidestep Parliament and it is prepared to denigrate the role of Parliamentarians in order to satisfy the Government's own needs. We have to admit that over the last 12 years it has done that. This Government has succeeded in being re-elected by this kind of action.

Finally, there is the matter of deceit. I trust deceit is a parliamentary word. What we are witnessing here through Bill C-143 is nothing less than deceit. We are seeing deferred taxes being levied against Canadian people and future generations, as my colleague pointed out.

I see you are about to rise, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude by saying that this Government has three types of personality defects. I think they are leading to the downgrading of Parliament and to the cynicism that we now see right aross the country.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, over the years we have seen the present Government ignore the House. It passes regulations by Order in Council. We hear so much about this. I want to put a typical example on the record. I had a telephone call earlier this week from a gun collector. He asked me about the gun Bill that had been passed in Parliament. I told him that I did not know anything about a gun Bill that had been passed in Parliament. But we found out that it was another Order in Council. This is another example of sneaking something in through the back door. This should not be part of our democracy that we are hoping to enjoy in Canada today.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Right on.

Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): This Government is asking to borrow an additional $14 billion, but the Government has not yet explained the reasons for the borrowing. This mismanagement has brought us to a situation where we can anticipate a deficit this year which will probably be around $30 billion over the year.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) may feel confortable talking about owing billions of dollars. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, I do not nor do most Canadians. It is inconceivable to most of us what a billion dollars really means. At big-buck Mac's rate of $800 a day for chairing the Commission on the Economy, he could work for approximately 1,250,000 days or 3,425 years on $1 billion. That is 102,750 years on $30 billion. Calculated at 14 per cent interest, the annual interest on that $30 billion amounts to $4.2 billion. Mr. Macdonald could survive on that for 14,385 years. This gives us some concept of what a billion dollars really is.

A figure more understandable to most Canadians is $6,100. That figure represents something just below the poverty level for a single-income family as established by the Senate report in 1981. It is also the cost to Canadian taxpayers of the salaries of the commissioners for each day the Macdonald Commission sits. Does the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) sleep comfortably at night knowing that this amount is slightly more than a single senior citizen would see on full pension and full supplement for one full year? Or does this Government simply write off this discrepancy to the cost of patronage? At $6,100 a day a big-buck Mac commission is no bargain.

In 1980 this Government was elected to run this country. It made all sorts of promises. It was not elected to hire Royal commissions to run the country after it made a mess of it for the last three years. The Canadian people must look at this. We all remember the promises in the 1980 election campaign. On January 12, 1980, the Prime Minister stated that he would hold the line on Government growth under the rate of the Gross National Product; the deficit would be reduced in a phased and orderly fashion; any new expenditure programs to meet the evolving needs and requirements of Canadians would be financed by re-allocating existing expenditures or by increases in revenues; that his Government would not add to the deficit by adding new programs. Of course, this is now a joke. The Gross National Product of 13.5 per cent in 1982 spending grew by 16.7 per cent. If Bill C-131 is approved, Old Age Security payments will increase in the second quarter of 1983 by only 1.2 per cent, which is the equivalent of only a 4.8 per cent yearly increase.

• (1650)

How can the Government explain to senior citizens why they are being held to an increase well below 6 per cent when the Government is creating what amounts to a new program costing more per day than seniors receive per year, especially in light of the statement of the Prime Minister? How can the Government justify an increase in the deficit, as Bill C-143 will permit, caused by events such as the creation of this Commission, after reading that statement?

My constituency has a population of approximately 90,000 people, of whom approximately 60,000 are eligible voters. Labour Canada statistics show that in January of this year, the employment to population ratio in my area was approximately 49 per cent. I think it is therefore legitimate to say that the maximum number of taxpayers would be approximately 29,400.

These taxpayers share the burden of the near $30 billion deficit, with their share being approximately $110,160,000. This works out to an amount of $3,746.96 per taxpayer. In other words, the Government of Canada has run up a debt on behalf of each taxpayer in my constituency of almost $4,000. They are the ones who will ultimately have to pay the interest on the debt. At 14 per cent, a competitive rate for a personal loan these days, they will be paying around $525 this year in taxes just for this purpose. That is what the deficit means to Canadians. They are paying extra taxes because the Government has mismanaged the economy of Canada.

In Bill C-143, the Government is asking Parliament to give consent to keep on misusing public funds. Tacitly, the Government is requesting us to approve a deficit, the scope of which most of us cannot even imagine. As if that were not bad enough, it is also requesting permission to run up a similar deficit in the next fiscal year, whether we need it or not. This House, my friends, is not a rubberstamp designed to approve the Government's every whim. This is the executive boardroom of the nation. We are expected to analyze proposed legislation in a representative and fair manner. How can we do so when this legislation lacks detail and purpose? It also proposes to bankrupt our country. I urge the Minister of Finance to withdraw the Bill in its present form.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might call it five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement to calling it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 4.55 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—EQUALITY FOR WOMEN

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands) moved:

This House condemns the Government for the apathy that it has shown toward issues affecting Canadian women and for its failure to promote equality for women, and its inaction with respect to pension reform for women, and its tacit approval of sexual stereotyping and abusive material in the media, as demonstrated by the Government's unwillingness to prevent pornographic films from being shown on pay television, and its lack of commitment to its own affirmative action programme within the public service, and calls upon the Government to immediately establish a standing committee of Parliament empowered to deal with issues that have a particular impact upon women and to review the progress, or lack thereof, made by the Government with respect to such issues.

She said: Mr. Speaker, it is a profound privilege to rise in the House today, on the eve of International Women's Day, at the beginning of this week dedicated to women internationally, and to move this motion on behalf of my Party.

The events in history from 1857 and in 1908 which are commemorated in tomorrow's celebration may long be in the past, but the indifference which gave rise to the sweatshops, to the cotton mills and to the injustices of that day unfortunately still too frequently live on. It is for that reason that the rights of women, which are given prominence on March 8 each year and indeed throughout this week, should be given equal prominence on every day of the year.

[Translation]

Indifference to the concerns and lack of respect for the rights of half the Canadian population is continuing. That is why, we, Members of the Progressive Conservative Party, have put this motion before the House.

[English]

For make no mistake, there is still a deep-rooted apathy in Canada toward women's issues and the condition of women, whether in the labour force or in the home. That apathy, as our motion indicates, is particularly prevalent in the ranks of the federal Government, the one body which could by its leadership, its action and by its participation do so much to improve the status of women if the political will and the political determination were there to do so. Unfortunately, it has not.

• (1110)

We all know what the response to that criticism will be. The Hon. Ministers opposite will rise up and one after the other congratulate themselves on what they have done over the past year. They will cite the new Charter of Rights and the Constitution. There in black and white, we will be told, is proof positive of what the Government's commitment is to the rights of women. We will be told once again how certain Ministers fought for those rights to be entrenched in the Constitution. Oh, how we will be told! Forget, they will say, the original constitutional proposals which excluded women's rights altogether. Forget that the former Minister responsible for the status of women tried so crudely to manipulate the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. Forget the spontaneous fury and the anger of women the length and breadth of this country against that manipulation; and, indeed, forget the tremendously successful efforts of these women, not once but twice, to move the Government from its original constitutional position. Forget, they will try to intimate, that the amendments which led to the insertion of equal rights for women in the Constitution were moved first by the New Democratic Party, and then the re-insertion, when they were cancelled, of the amendment moved by the Progressive Conservative Party. That is how those rights were put into the Constitution, by the Opposition Parties of the day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: We should not be surprised at such forgetfulness on the part of the Government, the forgetfulness of a whole clutch of Ministers, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) right on down which has been shown over these past two weeks. That kind of forgetfulness is a hallmark of the present Liberal Government. But let us not forget, sir, that the Constitution requires legislation to eradicate the legal inequalities which exist under present law. Let us not forget that the Government has three years beginning last year to introduce such legislation, after which interpretation will have to be left up to the courts. And let us not forget that to date not one single piece of such legislation has come before the House.

The Government even recently admitted through a Justice official—and I have the quote here from the Ottawa Citizen of November 8—that its review of all legislation to bring that legislation into conformity with the Charter of Rights does not include a review of laws which discriminate against women since this, the Government indicates, can be safely ignored until after 1985.

Not only is the Government failing to review its laws to determine which are discriminatory, but it is also refusing to amend laws which blatantly discriminate against women. For instance, the Indian Act: the Government has made no move to amend Section 12(1)(b) of the Indian Act, even though there has been international condemnation of it. As well, a special subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the fall of 1982 called for its immediate repeal. There has not even been one representative of the Native Women's Association of Canada invited to the Constitutional Conference on Native Rights which is to be held here in Ottawa on March 15 and 16, even though one of the major items includes the rights of native women.

• (1115)

With regard to the Unemployment Insurance Act, the Government has failed to amend sections of that Act which discriminate against pregnant women. These discriminatory aspects have been brought to the attention of the Government by the Canadian Human Rights Commission in its unsuccessful attempts last December to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act. They were unsuccessful, Mr. Speaker, because they offended the very groups they were intended to benefit. The Government touched on the issue of discrimination on the basis of pregnancy, but only within the very narrow confines of the Human Rights Act. The fact that the Canadian Human Rights Act cannot override the discriminatory aspects of the Unemployment Insurance Act was left untouched.

These and other Acts have not even been considered by the Government in this three-year period. I could mention the Income Tax Act, the Elections Act and a great many other Acts which today discriminate against women. If the three-year period between 1982 and 1985 goes by without substantial action on the part of the federal Government to introduce and pass the legislation necessary to confirm equal rights for women, then the result is that our courts are going to be swamped. It may take decades to rule through the courts on every challenge. Now, the Government of the day may be able to afford the time, so it thinks; I am saying to the Government that the women of Canada cannot afford that time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: But if women cannot afford legal inequality any longer, how much less can they afford economic inequality?

[Translation]

Equality and legal guarantees are very important to women but this does not feed and clothe the children. It does not give them dignity and comfort in their old age. That is why women must also attain economic equality.

[English]

Women have the right, sir, to the same opportunity of freedom from poverty and need, to dignity and self-respect, as any other Canadian. They have the right to those opportunities for themselves and their children. Largely, however, these rights continue to be denied.

Let me bring that clearly to your attention, sir, by these statistics which I will present. The facts make this so clear. Women in the labour force today in Canada earn less than half the income their male counterparts earn. Households headed by women earn only two-fifths of the income of households headed by men. Two-thirds of Canada's elderly who live below the official poverty line are women. That is 350,000 elderly women, sir, who live below the poverty line. Now, these are the economic realities that women in Canada face today, and they will continue to face those economic realities tomorrow so long as nothing is done to change the situation.

We have had a great deal of talk from this Government about its awareness and concern for the economic plight of women. We have heard of the soul searching and hand wringing over pensions, high technology, training programs and affirmative action. Government Departments have initiated reports, white papers and green papers without number. But when it comes to doing something, they do nothing. All the studies and papers are turning grey with age, and meanwhile women continue to receive the short end of the stick.

• (1120)

The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women published a report two weeks ago entitled "A Working Majority—What Women must do for Pay" that makes the situation very clear. The authors of the report, Pat and Hugh Armstrong, stated that they were depressed with what they found. I recommend to Hon. Members the statement on page 216 of the report, which reads as follows:

> Depressed by an economy that continues to structure women into women's work at women's wages in spite of laws forbidding differential treatment of men and women:
> Depressed by the nature and condition of their paid and unpaid work which structure out alternatives even though women have been flooding into the labour force and even though domestic work and technology have dramatically changed:
> Depressed by women's high underemployment and unemployment rates which will continue to grow with the microelectronic revolution, in spite of women's increasing educational attainment and the recent raise in demand for women workers.

The authors said that they were depressed. They have a right to be depressed, sir. In that last statement I read lies potentially the greatest lost opportunity for women today. The explosive growth of the microelectronic industry is today a world reality.

The microchip revolution is upon us, yet what could be a fundamental opportunity for women in the labour force to obtain equality—this is the one chance for women to make that breakthrough—looks as if it will bring about disaster for women. Many jobs will be lost. Everyone that I have talked to in the industry has indicated that, in the short term, jobs will be lost, most of them in areas of employment traditionally performed by women. Many hundreds of thousands of jobs, predominantly in the service industries, banking, insurance, communications, government, office workers, tellers, telephone operators and so on, will be lost. The Government knows this from its own reports, such as "In The Chips" which was presented to it last year, and "Employment Impacts of the New Technologies". There are similar reports from Great Britain, the United States, Japan and France. So there is adequate documentation on what will happen to women in the short run.

From its own research and from industry, the Government also knows that microtechnology may eventually lead to more jobs being created than are lost in the long run, but the question is whether those jobs will go to women. There is no indication at the moment that they will. In fact, there is every indication that these new, more exciting, better paid jobs will not go to women. That is the major problem that women are facing. No one is insisting that women get a fair share of these new jobs that will be created.

The federal Government has been called upon repeatedly to offer leadership on the microchip issue, to set priorities with regard to industry and unions and our educational institutions. These are things that the Government has been urged to do, yet research shows that women, who are the majority of displaced workers already, are going to be shut out of these new opportunities. We see that time and again, Mr. Speaker. We see it with regard to the present role of the federal Government.

I raised that question in the House not long ago with the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. I pointed out that Government training places are being cut back this year and the numbers of women who are being included in training places is a minimum of the over-all opportunities. Of those training places which remain, just 27 per cent of the industrial training places—the areas of future employment—have been allocated to women and only 6.4 per cent of the enrollees in non-traditional segments of that program are women.

• (1125)

Now, in her cavalier reply to these questions, the Minister went so far as to imply that women made redundant by high technology are already unretrainable because they do not have the proper maths and sciences. She seemed to imply that it was no problem of ours. We in the Progressive Conservative Party are not prepared to write off up to a million women who could become unemployed over the next few years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: This is one area that I feel has to be dealt with very substantially and immediately by the Government. It should establish a task force to help the transition through this period of high technological revolution.

There are other critical areas which my colleagues will be addressing today. The Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer) will be dealing primarily with the issue of pensions, a program that we know is the great social issue of the 1980s. That has been delayed and delayed even though it was mentioned three years ago by the Government as being of immediate concern. Now we have another study to take us forward into more delay and procrastination.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) will be dealing with another area which has escaped the attention of the federal Government, and that is controlling sexual stereotyping. There is no action by the Government on the very serious issue of pornography on Pay TV. The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona will be dealing with that issue, but I want to mention that in the area for which the Government itself is responsible, and that is the question of affirmative action, nothing affirmative is being done and there is no action. From 1975 to 1980 the number of women in the lowest category of jobs in the federal Government increased. It went up from 79 per cent to 81 per cent. The bulk of the women in the Federal Public Service are still being ghettoized in low-paying, dead-end jobs, many of which may soon become redundant. The minimum number of increases at the upper level does not begin to offset that. I am talking about 52 female executives against 1,250 male executives, or 699 women at the senior level compared with 12,500 men.

There are a number of issues which have to be dealt with. I know that I cannot deal with them all in 20 minutes, but I want to say that one of the most critical issues which should be dealt with on this particular day has been the comments over the last couple of months of the Minister responsible for the status of women when she hurt women, angered women and made them bitter all across the country, because she denied them the feeling of worth and dignity that they should have because of their contributions to society.

It is because of these matters that we on this side feel there should be a standing committee of the House of Commons on issues relating to women. If we can have standing committees for farmers and bankers, surely we can have a standing committee for 52 per cent of the population.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The rules of the House permit a ten-minute period of questions and answers. Are any Hon. Members rising to put questions to the Hon. Member?

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, I listened quite attentively to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). I wondered at times if the Hon. Member was aware of the funding the Government has committed through the Department of National Health and Welfare for the pension conference, especially as it relates to women. Is the Hon. Member aware of the funding the Government has provided for daycare centres across Canada, or is the Hon. Member aware of the Government's commitment to shelters for battered women? Can the Hon. Member tell me how many Provinces have established Ministries responsible for the status of women across this country and how many have departments?

• (1130)

While the Hon. Member is on her feet, can she tell us whether it is true that during the short-lived Clark Government that administration was committed to cutting 60,000 jobs in the Public Service, of which approximately 80 per cent of those jobs were women's jobs? I would like to have answers to those questions.

Mr. Stevens: That is not true.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I can see that unfortunately the Hon. Member did not get the gist of my remarks at all. I am very sorry about that. He needs to come to grips with the basic issues that are being raised here, especially the legal and economic equality that women should have.

Perhaps I can tell the Hon. Member that I am not responsible for the provincial Governments in this country. I would like to see all provincial Governments establish Ministries responsible for the status of women. However, I would like to see far more done by the federal Government with regard to the responsibilities it has for women through the Minister responsible for the status of women.

When the Hon. Member asks me whether I am aware that money has been allocated to pension conferences, indeed, I am. I was at many of them. At every one of those conferences I urged the people from the federal Government who were involved to take some action and to stop the talk. That is what the question is all about. We have had conferences, studies and reports, but when will we have some action?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). Is she aware that the Minister responsible for the status of women made a gesture to the native women in this country and asked them if they required assistance in their efforts to attend the upcoming conference?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister could inform me that there will be a representative seated at that table from the Native Council of Women, I would be delighted to offer her my congratulations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any other questions?

Mr. Nielsen: Where are the answers?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it not the intention of the Government to make any kind of statement regard to the very fine speech made by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald)? The normal practice—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

An Hon. Member: It is the normal practice.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is not rising on a point of order. The Chair will recognize Hon. Members seeking the floor. At this point the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller).

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise again on a point of order. The normal practice—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Minister, presumably, at the appropriate time will rise in debate, but at this time the Chair recognizes those Hon. Members seeking the floor for the purpose of making a speech.

Mr. Deans: Is the Minister not going to speak?

Mrs. Erola: Yes.

Mr. Deans: Then why don't you speak, as is the normal practice?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to speak on behalf of the New Democratic Party on this very important Opposition day motion. I congratulate the Official Opposition for presenting us with the opportunity to deal with what I think is one of the most important areas of concern in Canadian politics today.

Today we will debate the issue of women, how women function in the economy, how we as Parliamentarians perceive women's issues and the importance that we place on those issues. The Minister responsible for the status of women obviously does not want to respond to the Official Opposition at this point. I think that is an indication that she really does not take her job as seriously as she would like the public, and particularly women in this country, to believe.

Mr. Campbell (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member mentions that the Hon. Minister responsible for the status of women is not prepared to answer the Opposition. She certainly is prepared.

Mr. Deans: She is not prepared. Why does she not get up and do it, then?

Mr. Blackburn: She does not have her speech prepared.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member does not have a point of order. The Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller) has the floor.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, certainly one of the things that we cannot do in this country is to isolate women's issues from economic issues. I think we all understand just what is happening to women in the workplace today. They are usually the last people hired and the first fired from their jobs.

Let me deal with the economic issue for a moment. What is happening in the workplace? What is happening to the women in Canada under an economic program deliberately implemented not only by this federal Government but by other federal Governments around the world? We have a monetarist policy which purports to fight the causes of inflation through high interest rates. Unfortunately, it puts people out of work.

We have a situation in this country of women making far less than men in the workplace. The majority of elderly Canadian women are living below the poverty line. That situation is a disgrace and a reflection of the economic principles under which this country is operating. Nearly 39 per cent of the single parent families headed by women are low-income families. Yet less than 7 per cent of families headed by single men are poor. This shows the disparity. The average income of families headed by women is about $15,000 a year whereas the average income of families headed by men is $29,000. The average working woman with a full-time job earns about 60 per cent of what the average working man earns.

To compound those horrendous statistics, we had the spectre of both the Official Opposition and the Government implementing a restraint program. This may have been popular publicly. The restraint program was brought in under Bill C-124. When you look at the effect that Bill had on women, it is reflective of the attitude that the Official Opposition and the Government have concerning women. Bill C-124 is part of the infamous six and five program. It effectively eliminated bargaining rights, particularly for women. It was through negotiation that many of the necessary benefits were won. Bill C-124 prohibits negotiations on many maternity leave clauses for various sections of the Public Service. Clauses protecting women, particularly those pregnant, from the hazards of video display terminals in noisy, poorly ventilated buildings were also terminated by the restriction of bargaining rights. Clauses giving some protection against sexual harassment in the workplace were also negated. Equal pay for work of equal value clauses were also negated by Bill C-124. Clauses protecting women from discriminatory employment practices, such as recruitment, selection, training, promotion, classification and lay-off were also undermined by Bill C-124. This Bill was actively pursued by the federal Government in its dealing with the public, not because the Government looked at the Bill as being necessary or fair, but because the Government sensed that within the public there was a sense of insecurity, a fear of recession, and a fear about the size of the budget deficit. The Liberal Government felt, therefore, that it had a popular issue.

Unfortunately, the people most affected by Bill C-124 were women because of the six and five percentage restriction on wage increases in 1983 and 1984. The people most affected by that restriction will obviously be the low-income earners in the Canadian workplace, which just happen to be women. Rather than just happening to be women who are the low-income earners, I wonder whether it is a deliberate attempt by Governments and private industry to restrict women from gaining sufficient employment to allow them to support themselves and their families if they are single parents.

I am proud to say that the NDP took the initiative some time ago to set up a task force on older women. The Opposition, in its motion, is supporting a long-time NDP proposal for a parliamentary committee to be set up do deal with women's issues in order to determine how the Government and the private sector are dealing with those issues and what can be done to improve working conditions, pensions, restricting sexual harassment in the workplace and how to help single women raise families.

The NDP task force visited 13 communities from coast to coast, listened to 150 briefs and received 1,300 questionnaires on the issues that were most important to women. Pension reform is a main issue that has already been discussed at length in Parliament. There have been approximately 17 different pension studies conducted in the last five years. The Government task force on pension reform recently tabled a green paper that has led to a pension task force of the House of Commons. That is a task force that we are pleased to be involved with. We certainly have some definite ideas about what pension reforms should take place.

However, pension reform is not women's only concern. Women are concerned about income, job availability, as well as those jobs that are not available to them. Income support is definitely a key issue, not only for women but for all Canadians at a time when the unemployment rate is 12 per cent and close to two million people are out of work. Income support is not only important for women but for all people in the workplace who are trying to raise families.

Another area involves women's contributions to pension plans. Obviously, women who are not working cannot become involved in an employee-sponsored pension plan. As well, if they have a low income, the pension at the end of their working life is not as high as it would be if they were earning a greater income that would give greater pension benefits.

Another concern faced by women is lack of training and the opportunity for training for new technologies or professions such as engineering, which would provide women with the leadership skills and educational training that are necessary to see them take their rightful positions in the Canadian workplace.

As well, there is a lack of job opportunities for women who attempt to re-enter the work force after they have spent some time in the home raising children. After the children have left home or have started school, women have difficulty finding employment because their educational training which they had received earlier is not sufficient.

Our task force also heard very informative briefs about such issues as discrimination by sexist and ageist employers, the problems of single parenthood and a number of other issues dealing with income. We have heard about the whole area of employment with respect to women in low-paying jobs—also job ghettos—where they have had very little opportunity in terms of negotiation with their employers. Often they are working in non-unionized businesses or shops, earning low wages with very little protection from sexual harassment and health and safety dangers in the workplace. Women are provided very little protection in those areas.

I would like to elaborate on the issue of pensions. I have been fortunate to be assigned to the pension task force on behalf of the NDP. While I have heard much of the input that will be given from reading the numerous reports on pensions that have been published through the House of Commons, provincial Governments and private organizations, I am looking forward to hearing them again.

Pension reform is an important issue and it will be interesting to see how the Government responds to the task force recommendations. It will be interesting to see how the Conservative Party will respond to some of the input that we expect Canadians to give to the task force.

I approach the task force study in a somewhat cynical manner. We are aware of some of the underlying problems with pensions in Canada. We understand that the people most affected by low pensions are elderly women. Approximately 45 per cent of elderly women are dependent upon Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. That is a far higher percentage than men, who have had the opportunity during their working lives to have a stable job and contribute to private pension plans and the vesting provisions of those plans. As a result of their higher incomes, they have been able to contribute a significant amount of their salaries as compared to women in similar occupations. It will be interesting to see the Government's response to the task force recommendations because our Party believes that many of the decisions made by the Liberal Party are based on public consensus and Gallup polls. Their decisions are not based on the needs of elderly women and pensioners.

It will be interesting to see whether the Conservative Party will look at the pension schemes objectively and review the private pension plans in Canada which only cover about 12 per cent of the income of elderly people. Some of those employer-sponsored plans are partly public plans as well. It will be interesting to see whether those plans can be adjusted to respect working Canadians, whether they will be adjusted to give earlier vesting and be made more portable throughout the workplace. Pensions should be adjusted because women's income is low and the length of time that they work for one employer is less than that of males. Therefore, they find that when they reach retirement age they have inadequate income. They are faced with poverty income at the age of 65.

Since there is support from all Parties in the House, I suspect that the task force will make a proposal for finally getting a drop-out provision for child rearing in the pension plan. It will be interesting to see if we get complete agreement with many of the Provinces, particularly with Ontario which is currently blocking that pension reform.

Pornography on Pay TV is one issue that has annoyed all of us in the House. Our Party believes that there is almost unanimous opposition to the Playboy channel because of the way it depicts women, whether through violence or demeaning spectacles such as women clad in bikinis participating on relay teams. Apparently there is almost universal opposition to using our Pay TV channels for that purpose. However, we have been unable to convince the federal Government to enact legislation or put any pressure on the CRTC or the First Choice channel to remove that type of discriminatory and violent portrayal of women on Pay TV. I believe it is a reflection of the lack of commitment on the part of the Government to deal with women's issues in any solid and constructive way.

I suggest that this motion points out some of the serious flaws in the federal Government's approach to women's issues. It points out some of the serious flaws as well, I would say, in the approach of some of the provincial Governments. To approach women's issues in a serious way and to allow Members of Parliament to deal with women's issues on a day-to-day basis through a parliamentary committee, such a motion could very well have been introduced in almost every provincial capital in Canada.

I suggest that the demands from the New Democratic Party over the last year and a half and, more recently, from the Conservative Party to have a parliamentary committee deal with women's issues is one way in which the Minister responsible for the status of women could give her commitment that the approach to women's issues would become an all-Party approach. It would then no longer be the domain of the governing Party who have been able to use these issues for publicity purposes and have really not come to grips with many of the problems concerning women that we have within our Canadian society. We have the problem of wife-battering, we have the problem of low pay for women, we have the problem of pension reform and the requirements for pension reform, yet we have a federal Government that simply would appear to be judging public opinion through Gallup polls and trying to develop some kind of consensus, rather than showing the leadership which is so urgently required.

Our Party, over the next six months, will be dealing with the information that we have gathered through 150 briefs and many meetings with women who are affected by Government edict and lack of opportunities. We hope to develop in Regina a consolidated policy on how this Party is going to deal with the issues that have been dealt with in this motion, issues which have been raised by hundreds and hundreds of women across Canada.

It is time we have some action on women's issues. It is time we had a parliamentary committee that could deal in a progressive way with meeting those problems head on, instead of having more and more studies asking what the problems are in Canadian society. It is time to have a Government committed to economic growth, committed to defeating the problems of unemployment rather than simply using unemployment for its own benefit and gain.

Until we have an industrial strategy and a full employment strategy, women are going to have problems trying to get into the work force; we are going to have trouble trying to provide training opportunities for women and other workers in our Canadian work force, and single parents without jobs, are going to have problems trying to raise children while depending on UIC or the welfare system. We are also going to have problems in our society with massive budget deficits, the lack of any attempt by this Government to put women to work, and also put women in a pension scheme so that they can have a reasonable retirement age.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The rules permit a period of questions and answers at this point.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, while I recognize that women still suffer inequities in the system which, unfortunately, we have had to carry on as a result of historical development, to hear the Hon. Member say that we need action to respond to the needs of women, one would be led to believe that nothing has been done at all by the federal Government with regard to meeting the needs of women.

I wonder if the Hon. Member is aware that the Canada Community Services Program has 38 projects representing over $1 million for funded rehabilitation centres; 31 projects related to daycare at a cost of close to $750,000; and 23 projects at a cost of some $609,000 which are similar to the Big Brother-Sister counselling, for example, which is the sort of thing that women want to get involved in because they are related to the needs of the community. I mention that 70 per cent of the employees of all such projects are women.

Another $1.7 million has been allocated to over 60 projects—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, he could be recognized to make his own speech. I suggest he make his point or put his question.

Mr. Breau: I want to ask the Hon. Member if he has made himself aware of all the programs of the Government that do respond to the needs of women in the community and also create employment for women. This is one example of Government programs which do that.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for apprising me of all those wonderful programs. In my particular constituency there are 10,000 people who are on Unemployment Insurance, many of whom are women. Many others have stopped looking for work. There are probably 2,000 people on welfare. The pittance in job-creation programs that the Hon. Member talks about has no impact on the majority of the workers in my riding. There is no significant impact, compared with what this Government is spending on Dome Petroleum or Massey-Ferguson and other companies getting massive amounts of money. The same amounts of money are not being spent to improve the economy of this country.

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, what concerns me is the implication that this Government is not interested in the plight of women. I would like to draw to the attention of the House that the New Democratic Party has not one woman Member in the House today. While there may be all kinds of reasons for that, I think it is obvious one should be careful about implying motives to this Party when at least we have two women Members present. I might also say that all women Members of the Official Opposition are not present today.

An Hon. Member: Two out of twelve.

Mr. Schroder: The Hon. Member made allegations with regard to the six and five program—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With respect to the Parliamentary Secretary, reference to the absence or presence of Members is not a practice generally encouraged in the House. Does he wish to make a point or ask a question?

An Hon. Member: The rules prohibit it, in fact.

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the last Member, who spoke about the six and five program, that Bill C-131 which had to do with Old Age Security and Bill C-132 which had to do with Family Allowances both of which were passed in this House, endeavoured to get the inflation rate down to 6 and 5 per cent so that all Canadians, not only women, would find that they could cope much better.

I wonder if the Hon. Member has forgotten that that six and five program is working and the inflation rate is below 6 per cent. I agree that the plight of single women in this country is desperate, and we should certainly be doing something about it; but I do not think it does this House any good to talk about the idea that those Bills were not doing something to help the plight of women.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I am not at all convinced that it is the six and five program, whether C-124, C-131, C-132 or C-133, that has brought inflation down. I submit to the Hon. Member that the reason the inflation rate has been reduced has a lot to do with the number of people who are out of work, who are carrying the can for inflation by being out of work or on welfare. I submit to the Member that it is the lack of confidence that the business sector has in this Liberal Government that is causing inflation to be reduced, not the Government restraint program and not restrictions on the old age pension and Family Allowances. That has nothing to do with what is happening to inflation. It is the restrictions in the United States, in Great Britain and in Canada on employment that are bringing the inflation rate down, because no one has any confidence in any of those Governments.

• (1200)

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I realize that in his speech he made reference to the fact that the NDP has strongly supported the setting up of a standing committee on issues relating to women. I know they have done that over a period of time and I commend them for it. My question is this. As we put this proposal forward once again, since we already have standing committees dealing with the problems of farmers, fishermen, miners and bankers, the majority of whom are men, committees which deal with economic issues, should we not also have one on economic and legal issues relating to problems concerning women? Does he agree that the refusal to have such a committee is in itself a form of discrimination on behalf of the Government?

Mr. Miller: I thank the Hon. Member. Obviously the New Democratic Party, in calling for a similar committee in the past, has recognized this, as I have in my speech. It is not only the kind of discrimination which we find in the workplace that is important; it is all related to economic issues. Certainly the need for this Parliament to deal with the majority of Canadians—and women make up the majority—and the innumerable kinds of discrimination that influence women's rights, require that this Parliament set up a special committee.

Since we have an Opposition day today, we urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister to set up this committee and let Parliament deal with the myriad of issues concerning women, issues that women are demanding receive more attention.

Mr. Desmarais: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member not aware that Bill C-124 is a temporary restraint Bill that increases women's and men's salaries in the Public Service by 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year? I fail to understand the Hon. Member's inference that this Bill favours one sex over another. This is clearly not so. Is the Hon. Member aware of this?

Mr. Miller: I am quite aware of what Bill C-124 does to the Public Service. I am also aware that six and five applies across the board in the Public Service.

Mr. Blenkarn: No, it doesn't.

Mr. Miller: There is no discrimination. I have been corrected by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). If women earn a lower wage, as they do in the Public Service, 6 per cent applied to that low wage will result in much less of an increase than 6 per cent applied to a high wage. That is where we find the discrimination against women in Bill C-124. Women will get less of an increase than men, who in general are higher paid.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and answers has now expired.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am pleased to address the House today, on the eve of International Women's Day, on the subject of this Government's efforts on behalf of the women in Canada. My gratitude should be extended to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) for making this possible.

This is the first Opposition day on this subject since I was appointed Minister responsible for the status of women close to two years ago. I would like to add that I am somewhat surprised that it has taken this long to have the Opposition call for this subject to be debated.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Erola: I am somewhat surprised as well to find that the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands has found herself to be a born-again feminist, a convert. The Random House Collegiate Dictionary describes a convert as "one who has acquired different beliefs, attitudes, especially those believed to be better or to adapt a different means or usage".

I suggest to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands that her born-again feminism is very useful to her at the present moment, but it comes a bit late. I suggest that in her comments not only has she been blissfully ignorant of what this Government has been doing for some time, but perhaps blissfully indifferent as well.

This Government is proud of its record, which dates back to the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, and of the 100 of the 122 recommendations which have already been implemented. This Government continues with participation in, and contribution to, International Women's Year 1975, the Mexico and Copenhagen Conferences, the National Plan of Action tabled in this House in 1979 and subsequent ratification of the international conventions.

I might add in this regard the convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women. I wonder if the Members of this House are aware of how few Western countries have signed this convention. By way of evidence of Canada's participation, I offer the Hon. Member the report of Canada's response to the convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women. We are working very actively and Canada's international record, as the Hon. Member is very much aware, is very good.

Apathy indeed! The record of this past year has been an outstanding one, for it is replete with legislation which has immeasurably improved the status of women in Canada. I submit, however, that we must recognize that we deal not simply with issues concerning rights and claims for equality. Unlike other areas of governance, the struggle is in many cases against intangibles, attitudes, assumptions, prejudices, preconceived notions; in fact, against the host of traditional and societal responses rooted in historic and sociological causes.

Nonetheless, we have grappled with these factors and, as Minister responsible for the status of women, I can proudly say that an awareness, sensitivity and consciousness have become increasingly apparent. My colleagues in Cabinet as well as the Members of my caucus are in touch and are au courant with the pressures and demands generated by the expectations of Canadian women. I would hope that I could say likewise for the Hon. Members facing me on the opposite side of the House.

Let me return to the issues. What has this Government done recently? Let me begin with legal and constitutional guarantees. Section 28 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms was proclaimed into law by this Government despite much opposition. The women of Canada undertook a historic lobby. Together with a responsive and sympathetic Government, the lobby was extremely effective. We now have the clear and unequivocal principle of equality forever enshrined as a constitutional guarantee.

This event occurred at the beginning of my appointment as the Minister responsible for the status of women, and a challenging and demanding beginning it was. Indeed, it was a momentous event in the history of Canada. It was an exercise in democracy of great significance. Its reverberations will resound for generations to come.

How do we change attitudes? This Government has seen its role very clearly. We know how the printed word and images on television manufacture stereo-typical images and symbols. With the introduction of the Treasury Board guidelines last December, the federal Government effectively moved to eliminate sexual stereotyping from all Government publications and communications.

I note as well that the Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders of the House have been modified to reflect these guidelines, but any set of guidelines is ineffective unless there is a group to ensure that they are implemented. To that end, I am setting up an interdepartmental mechanism to ensure that these guidelines are followed.

In this light, it is rather astounding that the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands would call this Government to task for its approval of sexual stereotyping. I am really quite surprised. She seems to be completely unaware of what has been going on in the last year. Let me cite some examples. The CRTC report on sex role stereotyping in the media was released this year. Its recommendations for monitoring programs are already in place for the prescribed trial period.

It is my privilege today to announce to this House and the people of Canada that the federal Government has just recently completed arrangements to fund a national non-governmental organization based in Vancouver called Media Watch. The funds allocated are $50,000. It will be the role of Media Watch to monitor media programming for sex stereotype content and make the CRTC and the media industry aware of their findings during the interim two-year period while the industry is developing its own guidelines. In addition, the most crucial duty of Media Watch will be its activities right across Canada to inform and educate women about sex stereotyping in the media and to forward their complaints and concerns to regulating and self-regulating bodies. Women of this country will then be able to have direct input into this area of vital concern to them.

On April 6, a year ago, the CBC office of the co-ordinator of "Portrayal of Women", released its report: "The Presence, Role and Image of Women in Prime Time on the English Television Network of the CBC". Work has already begun to address some of the problems which have been outlined in this report. For example, the establishment of a "resource bank" of qualified women to be interviewed for their informed analyses of current events, both in traditional and non-traditional areas.

Let me point out as well to the Hon. Members of this House that in the past few months six women have been appointed to the Board of the CBC and the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission. Therefore, we see commitment and implementation by this Government at every level. It is painfully obvious, however, that we have a long way to go until the Hon. Members of this House fully understand the effects of sexual stereotyping. Until then, can we really expect societal changes to take place? Perhaps that will not happen until 50 per cent of this House is represented by the more than 51 per cent of our society. I refer, of course, to the women of Canada.

I would like to speak about training and education. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) referred to it—and I mean this most sincerely. According to the report of the Science Council of Canada entitled "Who Turns the Wheel", statistics show that the number of girls studying physics and mathematics in high school is less than half the number of boys. The report goes on to say that as a result girls who opt out of physics and mathematics before the age of 15 deprive themselves of many career choices, including the skilled technical and computer-oriented occupations. However, this is beginning to change. The latest census statistics show that there were five times more women engineers, six times more lawyers and three times as many accountants as a decade ago. I need not, however, remind the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands that traditional elementary, high school and university education falls under the jurisdiction of the provincial Governments.

There are encouraging signs, as I mentioned earlier. Women have made some considerable gains in several of the male-dominated professions. But while there is good news, there is also a very disappointing factor. Women's wages have not significantly risen in the last 30 years.

What has the federal Government done about this situation? Let us first of all examine how much effect the federal Government has on women in the workplace. It is very clear that only 10 per cent of our work force comes under federal jurisdiction. Ninety per cent of the work force comes under provincial jurisdiction. This point must be clearly understood. I should like to quote Mrs. Cadieux, a former President of the Federation of Women of Quebec, who was speaking last week. The federal law, she said, and I quote:

—which covers about 10 per cent of Canada's work force—applies to all federal Government departments and agencies, Crown corporations and companies in the private sector under federal regulation such as the chartered banks, interprovincial trucking firms, railways, airlines and bus companies.

Quebec is the only province to incorporate a similar equal-pay provision for employees within its jurisdiction. Other provinces limit the provision to equal pay for equal or similar work.

Mrs. Cadieux also told delegates at the conference that:

—very few unions go after equal pay provisions in contract negotiations. The unions come to the commission with complaints—

That is the Human Rights Commission. I again quote Mrs. Cadieux, who said:

—and I have to ask myself why they are coming to us rather than bringing it up during collective bargaining—

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands asks us how effective the Human Rights Commission is. I would reply to her that it is very effective. We have new guidelines on equal pay for work of equal value. In December, 1980 the federal Government librarians won equalization adjustments and back pay following settlement of an equal pay for work of equal value complaint in which the librarian group was compared to historical researchers. Equal pay for work of equal value is now a standard in all collective agreements negotiated with federal Public Service employers. Who else can boast this claim in this country?

"Canadian Women and Job-Related Laws, 1981" provides excellent analyses on the subject, and I suggest to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and indeed to all Hon. Members of the House that they read this pamphlet. In fact, I suggest to them that they read much of what has been published in the last year. I doubt very much whether many Hon. Members of the House have read "Better Pensions for Canadians—Focus on Women", which was recently published. How many Hon. Members have read "A Working Majority. What Women Must Do for Pay", funded again by the federal Government? If Hon. Members had read this book they would know that only 10 per cent of the women in this country come under federal jurisdiction. How many have read "Reproductive Hazards at Work", again published by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women? I suggest that Hon. Members take the time to read the publications which have been funded by this Government which explore in depth the problem of women in our Canadian society.

My colleague, the Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), this year had the first national conference on the impact of microelectronics on the individual work environment. Resulting from the conclusions of this conference, the Minister of Labour established a task force on microelectronics and employment, chaired by Dr. Margaret Fulton. The task force heard from a great many women's groups and women representing industry and Government. Some very important findings were reported in the task force report. We have established a commission of inquiry into part-time work, also under the leadership of the Minister of Labour. This commission, chaired by Joan Wallace, showed that 25.1 per cent of working women work part-time. This has wide-ranging implications on such things as pensions and unemployment benefits, and we are anxious to see the findings of this commission.

The Government funded a conference on daycare in Winnipeg—the first national conference on daycare—to the tune of $100,000, and I emphasize as well that while daycare remains under the Welfare umbrella, it will be stigmatized and not recognized as the universal service it must effectively become. The federal Government funds daycare centres across the country through the Canada Assistance Program and, again, showing leadership, it is establishing daycare centres for its own employees. Last year, the Department of the Environment opened its Sunburst Children's Centre in the Environment Canada building in Downsview, Ontario. This daycare centre was the second of such facilities in Canada, second only to our own centre here on the Hill for use by House of Commons employees.

As the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women stated 13 years ago:

> We consider the tax system unfair, not because it over-taxes indirectly the incomes of married women who work outside the home, but because it under-taxes the incomes of those taxpayers without dependent children whose wives work at home.

The fact is, and Hon. Members of this House who are familiar with the issues know this, that the family has changed dramatically in the last 20 years. No one in this House or in this country would disagree that the family as we knew it in 1919 is not the family as we know it today. Why do I use the year 1919 as an example? Because this is the year in which the Income Tax Act came into effect. Yet when this Hon. Member suggested it was time for a change, there were howls of protest from the other side of the House and from across the country. But the fact remains that one out of three marriages ends in divorce. We have an increasing number of single parent families—something like 58,000 at the last count. Furthermore, 40 per cent more families would be below the poverty line if there were not two earners in that family.

Therefore, I would like to recommend to the Hon. Members of this House, as part of their process of education—and I suggest to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands that she has a great deal to do on her side of the House in educating her Members—that they read the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, a Commission which, I might add, was set up by a Liberal Government. I suggest for reading as well the report of another of this Government's Commissions, that of the International Year of the Child, in order to obtain a really true picture of the family in today's society. As committed, concerned Members of Parliament, we must read these reports.

It has become increasingly clear to me that there is little understanding of the nature of the role of the status of women in Canada. Let me explain briefly. It is my role as Minister responsible for the status of women, and the role of my Secretariat, to examine Cabinet documents and be involved in all discussions on policy issues, whether it be economics or social development policies, changes to the Labour Code, the Human Rights Act, or matters pertaining to the Divorce Act. Status of women in Canada is present at these discussions, and that is happening here at the federal level. But I ask Hon. Members, are there people at every level of provincial Governments, for the most part confrères of the Hon. Opposition, examining documents and questioning the impact of these programs and policies on women? I have seen no evidence of it. There is no such machinery of Government in place in the Provinces with the exception of Quebec. Yet without that machinery of Government we cannot expect to see the impact of provincial policies pertaining to the status of women.

It will be very interesting for me when I come to the second meeting of the Ministers responsible for the status of women, my provincial counterparts who were so hard to find last year. Once they were named or routed out, however, they came full of good intentions; but did they, in the year since that last conference, put into place that machinery we have at the federal level?

As to other alleged areas of apathy, let me merely touch on some for they are subjects which my colleagues will address more completely in the course of this day. We have affirmative action programs in place in a number of Government Departments. In August, 1981 CEIC, Secretary of State and Treasury Board Secretariat agreed to participate in affirmative action projects for women. But where are my provincial counterparts? Any action there? Pensions for women? Yes, it is true that older women in this country live near or beneath the poverty line. Why? Well, it is very easy to say that a change in the pension system would increase their income. But we all know that while pensions are based on income we cannot realistically expect the situation will change. If women are to continue to earn lower wages, or for that matter provide unpaid services, they will continue to have low pensions. No amount of accessibility or portability will change that.

That Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs has produced an outstanding report on the issue of family violence which has generated interest across Canada and in all provincial Governments. It has exposed a social problem which has probably been around since time immemorial, but one which has never been aired before. I suggest that under the leadership of this Government many, many of these changes, such as Bills C-82, C-115, C-61 and C-127, have come to see the light of day.

In conclusion, if all this constitutes apathy, then the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands has provided us with a new and strange meaning of the term. I would like to say to the Member who suggested that we establish a standing committee on issues pertaining to women: to what end? So that once again we reduce these matters, these so-called women's issues which are not women's issues but societal issues, to a segregated ghetto status? These issues do not partake of any gender; they are societal in nature.

This Government has gone very far to lift the carpet beneath which all these matters have been swept, and I suggest to her and other Members of the Opposition that that is exactly what they are repeating when they ask for a standing committee. To suggest that we once again relegate discussions to the narrow confines of the committee room would, I submit, constitute regression and ghettoization.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if this "born-again feminist" who was busy writing papers for the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in 1969 and 1970 could pose a question to the Minister responsible for the status of women, I want to ask first of all if the Minister can give us any more encouraging figures than the latest produced by the Government with regard to that 10 per cent of employees who work for the federal Public Service. At the administrative support level, that is the lowest category, the low-paid, locked-in, ghettoized jobs, we are talking about 65,000 women compared to 15,000 men. The number of women in that sector is increasing all the time. So I would like to ask whether or not there has been any reversal of that situation? There had not been in the five years from 1975 to 1980.

I would like to ask why there have been no amendments in this last year come before the House with regard to the discriminatory sections of the Unemployment Insurance Act, which blatantly discriminate against women who are pregnant and have to take maternity leave at any time in the nine-month period, whether or not they are ill for some other reason.

Finally, I gathered from the Minister's remarks today that she is still advocating the abolition of the spousal tax exemption. That is what came through in her remarks and I would ask her to confirm or deny that.

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, I will take the last question first, if I may. I have never at any time advocated the removal of the spousal deduction. I said very clearly that I recommended it be included in the examination of family benefits; that we examine its effect on the women of Canada, particularly those at the lower income level. I do have some statistics, I believe, on just how that effects lower income families in our country. It is particularly interesting, Mr. Speaker, to note that those at the lower end of the scale benefit less. In fact, around the $10,000 mark it is something like $148. It is also interesting to note that at the lower end of the scale those with children benefit less than those without children, and I will be happy to provide those statistics to the Hon. Member.

On the subject of the spousal allowance, I would like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member her words in Hansard of July 8, 1977 where she said:

> —in the . . . spouse's allowance we have the demeaning situation where the older spouse, generally the male, has to give his written consent before the younger spouse, the woman, can collect the spouse's allowance. Has the Minister any idea of how degrading and demeaning this is to women? Does he have any idea what it means to women to be relegated to that second-class status? When will he come to a recognition that certain principles which reflect the self-worth of an individual are important because of what they mean in terms of human dignity and not merely in dollar terms?

I suggest to the Hon. Member that she, too, has had some concerns about the spousal allowance, concerns which I share. I should like to point to the most recent settlements of equal pay for work of equal value, and all of those situations which have come to bear in the last couple of years which have upgraded the status of women in the Public Service. I do not think the Hon. Member is aware of that.

Miss MacDonald: What about the other two questions?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I think the exact words in the Minister's speech were that certain Canadians were being undertaxed. Could we have a better description of those Canadians who are being under-taxed?

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, I did not say they were being under-taxed. I simply said that the spousal allowance meant more to some taxpayers than to others.

• (1230)

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Minister. The test of the pudding is in the tasting, not in talking about it or making reports about it. Will the Minister tell us how many Deputy Ministers appointed by the Government are women; how many executive or special assistants of Cabinet Ministers are women and how may Order in Council appointments of women have been made since March, 1980? In short, can she tell us what the Government has done, specifically in the areas immediately within the control of Cabinet Ministers, to give women the role they deserve in Canadian society?

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, there have been considerable improvements in this area. This is statistical information which I will be happy to provide to the Hon. Member. There is recognition by all members of Cabinet of the status of women in the country and of the commitment to improve that status.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Minister responsible for the status of women if she would undertake, on behalf of the Government, to introduce in the House within the next six months amendments to the Indian Act which would get rid of the blatant discrimination against women that exists in the Act? If not, why not?

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, I concur completely with the Hon. Member and I believe we will see these changes coming very quickly.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister responsible for the status of women one question. It seems to me that in quoting a number of Royal Commission reports in the possession of the Government and the Opposition the Minister has made the case that the motion calls for a committee of Parliament to deal with the reports, to see that they are implemented and to judge the activity of the Government in regard to them.

Another thing that a committee of this nature would do is something that the Minister feels is important, and that is undergo a period of education. That could be done for the House and for society as a whole. Would the Minister not admit that a parliamentary committee to deal with all these issues, such as single parent families, daycare, pensions, the International Year of the Child, the problem of increasing divorce, would not only serve the House of Commons but the women we are trying to deghettoize?

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has missed the point entirely. I do not think we have time to educate the Members of the House, particularly the Members of the Opposition. I suggest to him again that the ghettoization of these women would lead to a further "hiding under the carpet" situation, as exists in society today.

Would the Hon. Member suggest that divorce is a women's issue? That daycare is a women's issue? That pensions are strictly a women's issue? Of course not. These must be studied as broadly and as fully as possible by all Members of the House. When the next report of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women is tabled, I intend that it be studied by a committee of the House or even by a number of committees.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate that I should comment at this moment. One of the difficulties with the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs is that it deals with far too many issues—housing, consumer affairs, welfare, daycare and so on. We have been pushing the Government to provide references to the Committee on a number of issues that the Minister says she is concerned about. Cabinet Ministers have not made such references. It was interesting to note that she complimented the Committee on handling the issue of spousal violence, a reference which came from a Conservative Member. In three years the Committee has not been seized with a single reference from a Cabinet Minister on one of these issues.

We would like more committees; one is not enough. We need references or else we cannot proceed. Would the Minister please indicate why she is blocking the Committee from looking at these issues?

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, for the reasons I have stated in the House and state again for the third time: the issues are too important to be relegated to a small committee. They must be examined carefully at every level available to Members of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The period for question and answer has expired.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to participate in the debate. Before I get to the substance of my remarks I should like to give recognition to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) who opened the debate for this Party. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, she has an honourable and distinguished record for hard work and dedication, not only in the House but throughout Canada, and for helping bring social and economic justice to Canadians. Nowhere is it more apparent than in her untiring attempts to bring social and economic justice to women. She alone is responsible for this debate today, a debate that is absolutely necessary. I should like to give her recognition for bringing it before the public at this time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, I hardly ever agree with the Minister responsible for the status of women, but she did touch on an element of truth today when she indicated that, to a large degree, the problems of women exist because society really does not know the problems. The House of Commons knows them—certainly the Opposition does—but I am not sure that the average man and woman on the street is aware of the difficulties of a large number of women in society.

I say that from experience, Mr. Speaker. Three years ago, when I entered federal politics, I thought I was pretty sophisticated and knew most of the problems of society. I thought I had a social conscience and understood social concerns. At one time I spoke at a chamber of commerce meeting and dealt mainly with the budget. After that meeting two young women asked me what my solution would be to the problems of women in the work force. I am ashamed to say that I answered, what problems? That was not a smart answer. I just did not know the problems of the working woman but I quickly learned. Those two young women followed me around in my election campaign and they made me learn.

I did not know that every Canadian woman, regardless of economic status today, has a good statistical chance of experiencing the desperation of poverty. I did not know that two out of every three poor, single Canadians are women. I did not know, three and a half years ago, that almost one-half of single persons over 70 years of age are poor. I did not know that most Canadian women over the age of 55 are poor. I did not realize, as is reported by the National Council on Welfare, that 1,219,000 women are living in poverty in this country. That organization estimates that by the year 2000 over two million women will be living in poverty.

Sixty years ago that famous Conservative, who was also an economist, Stephen Leacock, made this comment:

> To expect a woman, for example, if left by the death of her husband with young children without support, to maintain herself with her own efforts, is the most absurd mockery of freedom ever devised.

That is what he said about our society 60 years ago. Today, Statistics Canada tells us that 41.5 per cent of all female-headed families live below the poverty line. To my mind, those are horrendous statistics. Things have not improved at all over the last 60 years. We have not recognized that the basis of society is changed. We have not come to grips and the Government has not come to grips with the problem.

There are many economic and social issues facing women which cry out for justice and for solution. Other speakers will deal with other problems today but I should like to deal with pensions.

In spite of what the Minister said a moment ago, to a large degree pension problems are a women's issue. Effective pension reform could go a long way toward solving the problems faced by many women in our society. I think we should ask ourselves why pension reform is a women's issue. Basically, pensions and pension systems today are designed mostly by men for men. The size of a pension is directly related to the work history and earnings of the person receiving the pension.

• (1240)

I think it has been long recognized why pensions are a women's issue. It is basically because of their place in the work force. Women are less frequently covered by employer-sponsored pension plans, and they are more likely to lose their private pension protection because of poor pension portability and higher job mobility. They generally earn less and receive smaller pension benefits as a result. They are certainly more disadvantaged by the lack of inflation in many of the schemes because they live substantially longer.

There is a general agreement on solutions to the problem. Recently, as the Minister mentioned, we had a Green Paper proposed by the Government. It did not add anything new; it merely brought together most of the solutions. The Government in that paper, from which I would like to read, established three principles upon which it will proceed with pension reform. The first of those principles is the one to which I would like to refer at this time. It indicated that elderly Canadians should be guaranteed a reasonable, minimal level of income. I do not think anyone in the House or anyone in the country would disagree with that pious statement, which completely ignores the fact that there are over 400,000 elderly people over 65 years of age, 350,000 of whom are women, living below the poverty line.

What precisely does that mean? It means that 350,000 women do not have enough food or clothing or perhaps do not have adequate shelter. This is what living below the poverty line means. I am perfectly aware of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that there were many poverty lines, but that sophistry is nonsense. There is a poverty line and there are people living below it. Who are those people? They are people who came to this countrty from Europe at an early age. They are people who were born here 65 to 75 years ago. They are people who struggled, opened the land, built the farms and the industries. They are people who also went through the 1930s and struggled to keep their homes together. They are also the people who either went or sent their children to the Second World War. In fact, they are the people who made this country. In 1967 Canada had one of the highest standards of living in the world. It was a country in which people could achieve what they wanted.

Those are the people we are now relegating to the poor house, some 350,000 women. What answer does the Government give to this problem? The Green Paper indicated that changes were required in retirement income provided by the Government and that initiative in this area would be an increase in benefits for those single elderly living with insufficient income "as soon as resources permit".

The Government spends $88 billion per year. Perhaps this year it will be $90 billion. It has to be a question of priorities. It spends approximately $90 billion a year and it cannot bring the standard of living of 350,000 elderly women to the poverty level. If that is attempting to solve the problem faced by elderly women in our society, I think the Government has not gone very far. Then it established a Green Paper to postpone the solutions, yet it knew about the problem since 1979 and the Leger report.

There are other areas in which the Government has failed to fulfil the basic requirements of Canadian women. In the Green Paper several solutions were proposed, one of which was income splitting of pensions upon marriage breakdown. This is a solution which most people accept. There is no question with the way marriages break up today that it is not only good enough to have it split on divorce but also on marriage breakdown or separation.

Does the Government do this itself? I would like to refer to the Superannuation Act for the Public Service and the diplomatic service. It makes no provision for divorced spouses in terms of splitting pensions. In the Canadian Armed Forces Superannuation Act there is no provision at all. Many people are suffering badly because of this. I would point out that in the Armed Forces and in the diplomatic corps it is very difficult for spouses of those in the forces to earn a living because they move from spot to spot. Also it is very difficult after the age of 40 or 50 to obtain employment in a new area. The Government has ignored this aspect entirely. Therefore, I cannot understand why it came out with this green paper which we are supposed to study for another year. The Government proposes it but does not do it itself. This complete disregard for the rights of women is indicative of the Government's lack of interest and real concern.

I would like to talk about other issues in the green paper which affect women. As I have said, employer pension benefits are generally not split on divorce or separation. This should be done and done very quickly. Virtually all pension plans, including the CPP, were designed to guarantee greater benefits to the contributor. That is really as it should be. Unfortunately that person is often male and the surviving spouse is often female. Few employer-sponsored pension plans provide satisfactory survivor benefits. Again this mostly affects women and something should be done very quickly. We do not need another study.

Women bear far greater responsibility for child rearing and because of this they have a lower participation rate in paid employment, particularly in pensions. The Government has been aware of these problems for a long time.

At this point I would like to mention the drop-out provision. This provision has been agreed to by the federal Government and the Provinces, except the Province of Ontario, in order to improve pension schemes and assist women in their pension rights. What does the Government say about it? This Government of Canada, which says that it works so hard, indicated in the Green Paper, the summary of its pension report, that it would vigorously pursue implementation of the child rearing drop-out provision with the Government of Ontario. Approximately two or three weeks ago I attended the pensions conference in Toronto, and the Ontario Minister responsible for pensions said: "We will agree to put that in right now. We have had our study and our commission". Where is the Government vigorously pursuing this? I have not heard a word. There were Members of the Government at that particular conference. I do not think they are interested. They have long since given up. An indication of this can be found in the Green Paper, in their recommendation of yet another study and in more delay.

There are several issues which this Government could put forward immediately without waiting for any further pension discussions, task force report, or anything like that. Most of the Provinces are in agreement with most of the difficulties. For instance, vesting. Everybody agrees that the present rules for vesting are bad. The Government of Saskatchewan has passed legislation improving them tremendously. The suggestion in the Green Paper is two years. From a woman's point of view the earlier the pension is vested the better. Perhaps a year would be better. Even at 25 years it is late for women who are early into the work force and early out of it to have children and to raise them.

Then there is the method of calculating annuities, the so-called unisex table. That is something which could be handled very quickly. A woman buying an annuity in order to receive the same amount as a man needs considerably more money because it is said a woman lives longer. But 80 per cent of males and females have the same life expectancy. The difference is accounted for by 10 per cent of the men who die early and 10 per cent of the women who live longer. It is a perfectly proper thing for women to have that sort of a feature put into their pension plans.

I talked earlier about automatic splitting of pension benefits. We should also talk about the lack of portability in most pension arrangements. Again, this is something which could be changed very quickly without all the time required for a green paper.

I suppose one of the most difficult chores in this whole area is the question of pensions for home makers. This question will certainly have to be solved. It is probably the most difficult area for discussion in the months to come, but I believe it is an issue that should be addressed and should be addressed as quickly as possible.

Most pension reforms now before this House and before the task force as set forth in this Green Paper could be dealt with immediately. There is no need to wait for a long time. This Government would show good faith if it proceeded to bring in those reforms to improve the standard of living of the 350,000 elderly women who presently live below the poverty line and if it enacted legislation in that regard. It has nothing to do with pensions; it has to do with the Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. There is no need to ask the Provinces for their opinion on that; this Government has the power itself. On that issue alone I think the motion before the House should be supported. The Committee could look into the reason why nothing is being done.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member for Okanagan North?

Mr. Miller: I have a question for the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer). I appreciate his concern that some of these pension reforms can be implemented and implemented quickly. I support him in that regard. However, I am somewhat puzzled by his statement about the OAS and the GIS. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that Parliament take action now to raise the Old Age Security and the GIS for the 350,000 elderly women about whom he spoke? Is the Hon. Member suggesting that the Government raise the income under GIS and the OAS to the poverty level? If so, is the Hon. Member's Party now prepared to support that policy, or is the Hon. Member talking about using private pension plans to overcome some of the poverty that elderly women face?

Mr. Dantzer: Mr. Speaker, I think it is clear that the problem faced by elderly men and women who live below the poverty level is not a question for private plans to solve. This problem cannot be solved by private pension plans. It is far too late now. These people are over the age of 65. They are no longer in the workplace. They cannot get any other pension. They get only the OAS and GIS. I believe it is the responsibility of this Government, given the first principle in the Green Paper, to ensure they have a reasonable level of income. It is the Government's responsibility to bring in legislation right now to increase the GIS in order to rectify their situation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any other questions? The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State For Mines (Mrs. Killens).

[Translation]

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I too am a bit impatient with the way various levels of government are dragging their feet with respect to this issue. I deplore the fact that the situation of women in this country, and I am sure Members on both sides of the House are more or less agreed on what it should be, is the subject of debate on an Opposition day, since we are all aware that such days merely give Opposition Members a chance to unload their very negative thinking on a given subject.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I intend to make my comments in the same positive spirit that will pervade International Women's Day tomorrow, March 8.

This morning, we heard the Minister of State (Mines) (Mrs. Erola), who is responsible for the status of women, describe before the House the latest initiatives taken by our Government, and I must admit it is a very impressive record. To appreciate our progress, however, we must look back into the past, and when we do, we see that there was a lot to be done. There are memories of the celebrated struggle in the 20's, when in 1929, after a long fight, women finally became legal persons. In 1940, when I was still at school, I did not realize my mother was not allowed to vote in provincial elections in Quebec. That same year, the first woman to study law in Quebec had to go to New Brunswick to pass her bar examinations. She was not allowed to do so in Quebec. Furthermore, it was not until 1971 that women in Quebec were allowed to sit on a jury.

We cannot discuss the status of women in Quebec without recalling the tireless efforts of the Hon. Senator Thérèse Casgrain, and it is with great pleasure that I pay tribute to her here today. I am sure that if she were among us, she would denounce the injustice perpetrated on Quebec women through Bill 111, which hits women far more than it does men, since two-thirds of Quebec teachers are women. The Government of Quebec invoked the notwithstanding clause of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms to pass Bill 111, a bill that violates the rights of teachers in Quebec. The Federal Government trusted the provinces to act honourably, but we see now that Quebec has already shamefully abused the notwithstanding clause.

As far as pensions are concerned, however, Quebec has an exclusion clause in its pension plan which allows young mothers to stay home for seven years to raise their children, without losing any years for the purposes of the pension plan.

Mr. Speaker, today, we should take advantage of this opportunity to appeal to all Canadian women, wherever they may be, to take action immediately. Elsewhere in Canada we have a problem. In order to allow young mothers to stay home for seven years after the birth of a child, without losing pension continuity, the Federal Government needs the signature of two-thirds of the provincial Governments representing two-thirds of the Canadian population.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry I have to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

METHOD TO CORRECT ERRORS

Mr. Louis R. Desmarais (Dollard): Madam Speaker, I wish to inform the House that a serious injustice has been done. I am referring to a taxpayer who applied to Employment Canada for permission to add an employee to his staff. The Department agreed, the employer hired a new employee and he received the requested subsidy for two years. Madam Speaker, I think it is unfair that two years later, another department, namely, Revenue Canada, should claim the subsidy under one of the Income Tax Regulations of which neither Employment Canada nor the taxpayer were aware.

Madam Speaker, when a department unwittingly misleads a taxpayer, I think the Government should be flexible and refrain from making the taxpayer pay for its mistakes. I realize that ignorance of the law is not a valid excuse, but I do believe it is reasonable to assume that a citizen should be able to rely on a department that enables him to take certain legitimate action.

BROADCASTING

CONDEMNATION OF PORNOGRAPHIC FILM PROGRAMMING

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, some time ago a corporation which was granted a licence by the CRTC announced that it would be showing pornographic movies. There has been an avalanche of protest. Canadians insist that the CRTC follow its stated objectives which are, among other things, safeguarding, strengthening and enriching the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada.

Canadians are demanding to know how the showing of pornographic material fulfils these objectives. The Canadian Teacher's Federation says that, in view of the central and influential role of television in shaping children's conception of male and female roles, and recognizing that children watch the full spectrum of television programs, it protests the inclusion of pornography in Pay Television.

People perceive themselves as being cheated and robbed of their dignity and their humanity. They perceive their Government as being party to a blatant attempt by a company licensed by this Government to reap huge rewards by pandering to the lowest and least worthy appetities in our society.

One woman said that she felt like an alien in her own land, expressing her frustration and helplessness at this intrusion of pornographic material into her home. My constituents and other Canadians plead with the Government to show some moral leadership and stop this programming.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST THAT CROWN CORPORATIONS BE SUBJECTED TO TIGHTER CONTROL

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger), has done an excellent job concerning the shady activities of Air Canada. It would seem that, in recent years, that Crown corporation has slowly begun to shift its operations from Montreal to Toronto. Such action is reprehensible, all the more as the management of Air Canada has ordered the Hon. Member for La Prairie not to make his findings public.

For a few years now, Crown corporations have been accountable only after the fact and oftentimes only to have the Canadian Government pay their bills, which is unacceptable. I would therefore suggest that those corporations be subjected to more regular and tighter control by the Government and Parliament.

I would ask Air Canada and its president, first, to make public a full report on the allegations of the Hon. Member for La Prairie and, second, to undertake immediately a thorough review of its policy aimed at moving its operations to Toronto.

As a Quebecer, I find it difficult not to denounce Air Canada for such underhand action.

MARINE TRANSPORT

CALL FOR PROVISION OF ASSISTANCE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance is now telling unemployed Canadians that their best hope for the short-term future is that his economic advisers are wrong in their forecasts. One might have expected a somewhat more positive message from the Minister of Finance over the weekend. There is just a little touch of cynicism in that.

If all the Minister can do is reduce the staggering 13.7 per cent unemployment by 1 per cent, then we are in fact in deep trouble. More discouraging is the probability that most of the funding to achieve even this minor improvement will go to so-called job creation programs and not to long-term job creation.

Instead of this, thousands upon thousands would appreciate some stimulation of our ailing marine and shipbuilding industry and a more, not less, competitive Seaway. It has become twice as expensive for U.S. grain to move through the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence Seaway than it is down the barge canal of the Mississippi River. We would appreciate the cancellation of the burden of the marine fuels tax. Get on with the gradual development of the Canadian Merchant Marine. Step up the Navy's fleet replacement program, indeed that of Coast Guard and of Fisheries and Oceans. As well, restore assistance to shipbuilding.

Take measures such as these, and not only will new and long-term job opportunities be created, but they will help prevent the loss the thousands of existing ones.

AIR TRANSPORT

CONCESSION TO UNITED STATES AIRLINE ON CANADA-AUSTRALIA ROUTE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, on Friday the Minister of Transport caved in to let Continental, an airline which does not even land in Canada, haul passengers from Canada to Australia, via Los Angeles. If we let the United States siphon off Canadian traffic to the Orient, it will only be a matter of time before American airlines haul Canadian traffic to Europe, and trans-Canada passengers as well. After this concession, there is no guarantee that the U.S. will not take Canadian passengers hostage the next time it is unable to get what it wants at the bargaining table.

The United States Government twisted Canada's arm to help bail out several American airlines left flat broke by deregulation. The banks holding the debts of these airlines have an interest in seeing the border opened up to the planes now flying half empty around the United States. Is it just coincidence that the Chase Manhattan Bank which holds the debt of Continental Airlines is linked to the U.S. administration through the influential Rockefeller family?

American airlines fly to nearly twice as many destinations in Canada as Canadian airlines fly to in the United States. The Americans had $150 million in trade surplus last year on air travel between our countries. Do we have to let them put Canadian airlines out of business as well?

FINANCE

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, the federal deficit is like an accordion; it is infinitely expandable. So says the Minister of Finance in the latest of his not so astute commentaries on national government finance.

Last year, shortly after taking office, this Minister promised us a budget early in the new year. After the calamities of his predecessor, many Canadians had hoped that such a budget would be designed to put Canada back onto a solid financial footing, but it now appears that the budget will be delayed at least until April. Then it will be no more than yet another exercise in Liberal fiscal gimmickry designed with short-term political expediency in mind, a budget with ever-increasing deficits which will guarantee high unemployment coupled with continuing inflation in the years to come. The Minister may toy with his wheezy financial squeezebox while Canada burns, but let me tell him that it will not expand forever.

Canadians must be wise enough to rid themselves of an incompetent Government that has no financial policies except to raise taxes and increase deficits, before this great nation is utterly destroyed.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

OPPOSITION BY UNITED STATES INDUSTRY TO ACID RAIN CONTROLS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Press has reported recently that some of the major U.S. air polluters are asking some of Canada's industries to support their opposition to strong acid rain controls in the United States. According to Canadian Press, the American companies made the approach to the U.S. and Canadian Chambers of Commerce and industrial representatives from both countries when they met in Toronto recently to work out a joint position on acid rain.

This move comes as the Canadian Government is attempting to negotiate a clean air pact with the U.S., including a 50 per cent reduction in acidic air pollution by American industries. Presently these talks have been stalled by the U.S. Government on the grounds that there is insufficient information about acid rain. Yet it is probable that U.S. legislation to control acid rain will be passed this year.

While U.S. companies are attempting to temper and modify some of the stricter acid rain provisions that are being promoted, I strongly urge that the Canadian companies involved continue to support the Canadian Government's request to cut back on acidic pollution and encourage their U.S. counterparts also to comply with this policy.

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF TAX ON FUEL USED FOR AGRICULTURAL PURPOSES

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I see the Minister of National Revenue here. I hope he pays attention because this statement is addressed to his Department.

• (1410)

Canadian consumers pay a lot of taxes and one of the forms in which they pay is a tax on gasoline. Approximately 60 cents a gallon in tax is paid on gasoline. The Government has recognized, and I agree with it, that one of the ways we could keep down the cost of food is to lower the input cost to farmers. As a result there has been a seven cents per gallon rebate made available to farmers for fuel that is used in basic agricultural production.

What happens is that a lot of farmers have difficulty in filling out the forms and they find that it is a lot of bother to pay the tax, first, and then ask for a refund. What I am suggesting to the Minister is that he look at the possibility of not collecting this money in the first place. In my own Province of Manitoba where the enforcement procedure is in place, which is the RCMP, it is illegal to burn "blue gas" in anything other than farm vehicles.

The system for enforcement is already in place, so it would be very easy to recommend to his Department that this tax not be collected in the purchase price. That would accomplish three things. It would lower the cash cost that a farmer has to incur to get his crop in, in the spring; it would lower the cost to the Department in terms of not having to collect and then refund the money and, thirdly, it would accomplish all of this without increasing the deficit one penny.

I would urge the Minister to take a serious look at this very practical suggestion.

THE ECONOMY

DECLINE IN GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT IN 1982

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the real GNP dropped 4.8 per cent in the year 1982. This is the first fall in real Gross National Product since 1954 and it is the most pronounced decline since 1933. This was the sixth quarterly decline in a row.

S.O. 21

The federal Government has continued to insist that the private sector should be the engine of growth, but I think those of us who come from areas where the private sector dominates recognize that the private sector's recovery is considerably slower than the Government might otherwise wish.

Last year private sector investment fell 4 per cent, and this year it is predicted to decline 6.9 per cent. In Hamilton we have seen a net loss of jobs both in the private and in the public sector. Over the course of the last two years we have seen the Income Tax office and the Veterans Affairs office all but disappear from the area. We have seen CNCP Telex deciding to close its operations and the Government determined that the Oceanography Department should move from Hamilton to Quebec City. In the private sector we have seen Harvester virtually close; Bathurst announce that it will close and the Steel Company operating at a considerably reduced level of involvement.

I say to the Government that the private sector cannot do it alone, it needs Government involvement—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR EARLY IMPLEMENTATION OF KIRBY REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to a very important document on Canadian fisheries, namely, the Kirby report. On the North Shore, people are very interested in the various recommendations made in this report, and they have asked the Association des pêcheurs of the Middle North Shore, the Lower North Shore and Blanc-Sablon to see to it that these recommendations are implemented as soon as possible. This is very important because the North Shore fishermen want to continue developing their industry jointly with their South Shore colleagues, and we hope that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) will do everything in his power to implement the recommendations in the Kirby report as soon as possible.

FUTURE OF QUEBECAIR

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a few comments on the future of Quebecair. Some time ago, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) promised to make a proposal to the Government of Quebec, based on the financial statements of Quebecair. I hope that today, the Minister has acquired sufficient information on Quebecair's financial situation to be able to make a proposal very soon, in view of the importance of this question for Quebec. Last week, the Member for Rimouski-Témiscouata (Mrs. Côté) severely criticized the threats made by the Quebec Minister of Transport to nationalize the company if Ottawa did not give an answer. The Minister had already threatened to let Quebecair go down the drain because of its financial situation. I therefore hope that the Minister will realize how important this question is, and that based on the company's financial statements and for the benefit of Quebecair employees and Quebec, he will be able to make a public proposal as soon as possible. That is what I am asking, Madam Speaker.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE ON UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister explain to the House how the jobless workers of Canada can continue to have confidence in his Government when his Minister of Finance expresses the public view that he cannot hope to bring down unemployment by more than one per cent?

While the Prime Minister is answering that question, can he also inform the House whether his Finance Minister was expressing Government policy when he stated that all the unemployed could hope for is for economic forecasters, including his own, to be wrong?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the second question, the Hon. Member knows that that is not a statement of policy. It is an opinion, and probably a tongue-in-cheek opinion, about the validity of forecasting.

The first question is more serious, and the Hon. Member will realize that he is merely repeating what the Minister of Finance has been saying since his statement to the House last fall, that economic recovery is necessary and we will attempt to bring it on as soon as possible, but that the unemployment figures themselves will remain high for longer than we would like, and they will remain high even after real growth has returned to Canada. There will be a lag before the unemployment figures are seriously brought down.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES—REQUEST FOR REVERSAL

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister appears to be sharing the view of the Minister of Finance that his Government cannot hope to bring down unemployment by more than one per cent.

In view of what appears to be the total abdication by his Government, faced with 2 million unemployed Canadians and a deficit now approaching $30 billion, and without a single permanent job to show for it, does the Prime Minister not feel that the time has come for a total reversal of the Government's negative and self-defeating policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, of course the Hon. Member, when he talks about the total abdication of our duty to create jobs, is forgetting the more than $2 billion which have been brought forward precisely to create jobs in the last June budget and in the Fall statement. The two together total more than $2 billion, and it is hard to call that a total abdication.

Mr. Crosbie: Totally ineffective.

FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister in his response seems to be overlooking the assertion I made in my question of the fact that the country faces 2 million unemployed, and not a single permanent job has been created.

While he was away last week, no doubt justifiably, I put the question to his Deputy Prime Minister as to whether he will be viewing favourably the request put forward by Premier Buchanan on behalf of the Premiers for a full day at least to be set aside for a summit on the economy. I was given to understand, as we all were, by the Deputy Prime Minister in his response last week that it was still the intent to discuss the tragic unemployment figures somewhere between the vichyssoise and the filet mignon.

Will the Prime Minister, now that he has had time to reflect over the weekend, not consider Premier Buchanan's request on behalf of the Premiers favourably and respond positively that he has the time to set aside a full day at least, or whatever time it takes, to discuss with them the solutions to the problem?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot understand how the Hon. Member has managed to read so incorrectly Premier Buchanan's telegram to me. Whereas I had suggested a meeting on the Wednesday night in order to ensure that we had dealt completely with the aboriginal questions before we got to the economy, a meeting on Wednesday night which I had said could go on to the Thursday in order to discuss medium-term economic issues while our Ministers were looking at the short-term budgetary question, Premier Buchanan did not answer that he wanted a full day. He answered that he wanted to have that meeting on Monday night, between the pears and the cheese. Therefore I do not see why the Hon. Member from Yukon prefers pears to vichyssoise, but that is a matter of taste. It seems to me, in terms of the time consumed in discussing the matter, that our propositions are pretty similar—

Mr. Crosbie: Let them eat cake.

Mr. Trudeau: —except that mine was on a night which was not already pre-empted by the Governor General who had invited all First Ministers and, of course, the aboriginal leaders. The purpose of the meeting, whether it be on one night or another, would be to discuss the broad term economic issues, and also of course to discuss among ourselves whether we think there should be a full First Ministers' conference on the economy sometime later in the spring.

Once again, I do not understand how the Hon. Member could interpret Premier Buchanan as suggesting a full day. He suggested a short time on Monday night, whereas I was suggesting a longer time on Wednesday night and again on Thursday during the day.

INCOME TAX

FORECAST OF DELAY IN ISSUANCE OF REFUNDS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister will know that hundreds of thousands of Canadians, many of whom have lost their jobs due to the Liberal recession, are desperately waiting for their 1982 income tax refunds. Last year 6.5 million Canadians had received their refunds by the middle of May. This year the Government has stated that the refund cheques will not start going out until the middle of May. In view of the concern that is out there, and in view of the need for this money, I would ask the Minister how the Government can justify this unconscionable delay.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I wonder when the Hon. Member heard the government state that the refund cheques would not be going out before the middle of May, for it is definitely not so. As far as I know, the government has never made such a statement. What we have been saying and which I repeat now is that we are waiting for the House to approve the legislation to amend the statute law relating to income tax, in order to issue cheques which reflect the new provisions in this bill. We believe the business of the House as scheduled will make is possible for Hon. Members to approve this bill before the end of March, in which case the time allocated for issuing cheques this year would be the same or about the same as last year.

[English]

LEGISLATIVE BASIS FOR REFUNDS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, we received our information on cheques starting to go out at the middle of May, from the Director of Revenue Canada for Prince Edward Island. That is in letter form, if the Minister wants it.

• (1420)

Since these refunds flow from the October, 1981, budget of the departed Minister of Finance, how can the Minister account for the fact that the 1981 income tax refunds have gone out if the refunds we are talking about now are based on the same budget, the same Bill? How can he account for the fact that all those 1981 refunds went out and we still have not got the 1982 refunds started?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Misister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is disregarding the fact that the tax returns for this year are consistent with the provisions of Bill C-139 which is now before the House, and therefore make it possible for many taxpayers to claim significant tax refunds. It is in accordance with past practices that we are waiting for the House to approve this bill before issuing any cheque.

INDUSTRY

LAKE DIEFENBAKER WATER PIPELINE PROJECT—OFFER BY IPSCO STEEL PLANT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I am sure he is aware that late last week the Saskatchewan steel plant, Ipsco, announced that it would be closing down totally for an indefinite period of time, throwing nearly 1,200 people out of work. I am sure he is also aware it has offered to put up the steel at cost for the $100 million Lake Diefenbaker pipeline. My question is twofold. First, has the federal Government received a formal request from the Government of Saskatchewan for a contribution to the Lake Diefenbaker pipeline? Second, while he is on his feet, can he inform the House whether or not the Government has decided to contribute some money for the project and, if so, what amount?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot say. I will have to see if that request was received by the Government, and how it will be handled. But I am happy to see that the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville is now coming over to the utility of building steel out there. I remember when we agreed on this side to the pre-build in order to permit that plant to get into operation, the Hon. Member and his Party combated it tooth and nail. Now he is seeing the error of his ways a little. It is too bad it is so late.

Mr. Nystrom: Perhaps the Prime Minister would explain to the House what happened to that pipeline in the end, Madam Speaker?

POSSIBLE IPSCO BID ON BOX CAR CONTRACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, in terms of supporting western industry I will shift my question to the Minister of Transport and perhaps I will get an answer from him. He will recall that during the 1980 election campaign his Party promised to aid the creation of industry in our part of the country. He might also be aware that Ipsco has announced it will be bidding on the construction of boxcars for the first time. Could the Minister now put the Government's money where its mouth was in 1980, and make a commitment to use funds from the Western Development Fund to help Ipsco make a bid which will be competitive with bids from companies here in eastern Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I wrote recently on that subject and made sure that Ipsco would be allowed to compete for the steel going into the boxcars, so that is done. If the Company wants to benefit from the $75 million of economic development, as it knows, this program is administered by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and it is really accessible to all companies in the West. Hopefully, they will get in line and present worthwhile proposals.

FUNDING OF PROPOSED PIPELINE FROM MAINLAND TO VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will also be aware that there are unemployed Ipsco workers in Port Moody, British Columbia, partly as a result of the fact that the whole Alaska Highway Pipeline did not go ahead. He might also know that he has received a request from the Government of British Columbia for money to build a pipeline to Vancouver Island. Would the Prime Minister agree with me that the domestic market might best be served before the needs of the export market, and would he be prepared to give a commitment now on the federal Government helping with funding of the pipeline to Vancouver Island so jobs could be provided for Ipsco workers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the question is somewhat vague. I am not sure if the Hon. Member is suggesting that we take an equity position in that pipeline, or just hand the money to the Province. He is shaking his head—hand the money to the Province, Madam Speaker. Well, I believe his home Province has some responsibility for unemployment.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROJECTED INCREASE IN NUMBER OF MANAGERS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. I was wondering if the Minister can advise this House why, this year, the Government needs 78.3 per cent more managers in its top 11 Department to handle things than it had a year ago.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I believe it is well known that in some cases there are additional workload demands for programs like unemployment insurance, and in other cases there are new programs. However, I would be happy to get more detailed information for my hon. friend and get back to him as soon as possible on this.

MANAGERIAL PAY SCALES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, is the true reason for the increase in the number of management positions because the Government does not want to comply with the six and five requirements, because it can pay managers up to $88,000 a year and it is limited in other positions to $50,000 a year?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I reject completely the premise of my hon. friend's question. We are applying the guidelines of the six and five program as established by this House, very strictly. I am glad to see my hon. friend's continued support of the six and five program.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS COVERING HORTICULTURAL WORKERS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In a unilateral and unfair action the Unemployment Insurance Commission is forcing horticultural employers and employees to pay Unemployment Insurance premiums for part-time employees receiving less than $250 per year, or where an employee works less than 25 days a year. Would the Minister not agree with the Canadian horticultural industry that this decision is totally unrealistic and unfair to such employers and employees, and will he take it upon himself to negate this regulation and reinstate Section 16(1) of the Unemployment Insurance Act which dealt with this matter in a fair and equitable manner?

• (1430)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, while the Hon. Member may not, I think many Members of this House would agree that agricultural workers, who are on the lower end of the income scale, deserve the same amount of protection under the unemployment insurance system as do other workers. I would not want the Hon. Member to think that, just because the philosophy of his own Party does not recognize the needs of workers at the lower end of the scale, we would allow that course.

I would indicate to the Hon. Member that we are not taking any unilateral action at all. In fact we have been involved in constant discussions with the Horticultural Society and other groups to work out ways in which this particular program to ensure proper income security protection for horticultural workers can be maintained. Those negotiations are going very well, and I think the kind of statement made by the Hon. Member only interferes with them.

PUBLIC WORKS

FUTURE OF CANADIAN FORCES BASE CHATHAM

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. The Minister will remember CFB Chatham and the disclosure that the Government intends to close that base out and the subsequent unemployment that is bound to create in the region. He will recall that that region is now suffering from unemployment figures of in the vicinity of 20 per cent to 40 per cent.

Can the Minister advise the House, has he been approached by the Minister of National Defence with the suggestion or recommendation that the Minister of Public Works take under his wing the future of CFB Chatham and, if so, what has his response been to that suggestion?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, it is a well known fact that the Minister of Public Works inherits a number of bases and buildings, some of which he is very happy to receive and others which turn out to cause him considerable headaches. This is a process which has happened in the case of other military bases, but I have not been approached. I understand the Department of National Defence intends to keep part of this base in operation. In fact it intends to keep the runway and some other components in operation, as has been explained by my colleague, the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Corbett: That is a most interesting revelation, Madam Speaker. I would make a recommendation that the Minister of National Defence deny the press reports then that he has indeed been in contact with his colleague who is supposed to be responsible for New Brunswick and the affairs of that Province, because these are certainly contradictory statements.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET LOCAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister follows on the fact that the CFB Chatham Steering Committee has made a request to the Minister of Public Works for a meeting with him, and his colleague from Northumberland-Miramichi has asked for action, not statements of principle. We know where the Minister's principles lie, but will he give this House and the Steering Committee a commitment now that he will meet with them in an effort to resolve the problems that he, as the Minister responsible for New Brunswick, should be addressing himself to for the benefit of those unemployed people and those who are about to become unemployed due to decisions taken by this Government?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, it would be perfectly normal for the Department of National Defence to inform the Department of Public Works that certain lands and facilities may be transferred in the future. If the Hon. Member is interested in the welfare of the Miramichi area, he might want to try to do what we have been doing, which is to find solutions, including a very important decision by my colleague, the Minister of National Defence. Maybe it is time that the rhetoric of the provincial Government during the last provincial election should be put to rest and that people should work with Members of Parliament like my colleague, the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi, and others, who want to try to solve problems and not score political points.

AIR TRANSPORT

CANADA-AUSTRALIA ROUTE NEGOTIATIONS—CONSEQUENCES TO CANADIAN PACIFIC AIR

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport who has just bailed Air Canada out of its seat sale problems by granting an American carrier a slice of Canadian Pacific's Australian market. Since the Minister has protected the state-owned airline at the expense of the private sector airline, what slice of Air Canada's market is he willing to give Canadian Pacific?

Mr. Benjamin: That is not the way it is.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, all through the—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pepin: —negotiations with the Americans I have been in touch with CP Air. The situation is not as black and white as described by a Member of the NDP a moment ago. For example, CP Air has an agreement with Western Airlines under which Western takes American passengers from Los Angeles, and CP Air takes them from Hawaii to Australia. So CP Air takes some American travellers from the United States.

Another thing which should be borne in mind is that Continental has had in the recent past a "funny fare" under which they accommodate with special terms Canadian travellers from the Los Angeles base. So it is not a black and white—

Mr. Benjamin: No.

Mr. Pepin: Yes, indeed, it is not a black and white situation. CP Air has said in public that it thought that its route from Toronto and Vancouver to Australia was not damaged or put in jeopardy because of the action which took place last week.

Mr. Benjamin: You want to bet?

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, I would like to point out that I am a Conservative Member of Parliament, not a Member of the NDP—

Mr. Benjamin: Thank God!

Miss Carney: —which shows how confused the Minister is on this issue of transportation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR REALLOCATION OF AIR CANADA ROUTES

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister's answer ignores the very clear fact that he has allocated a portion of the route of our flag carrier in the Pacific to an American carrier. He has taken 8,000 seats off Canadian Pacific's route and given them to an American carrier. So I ask again: when will he announce the reallocation of Air Canada routes to Canadian Pacific?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I was trying to convince the House that the situation is not as simple as presented by the Conservative and NDP Members who have asked questions on it. I was trying to indicate to my hon. friend that Continental at the moment, because of this "funny fare", is attracting a good number of Canadian travellers to this route.

An Hon. Member: So you sold out.

Mr. Pepin: No, on the contrary, I was trying to indicate that CP Air would have had to match that "funny fare" from the Los Angeles base and that the agreement we have reached will prevent that, and consequently help CP Air to maintain a viable route to Australia. It is a bit more complicated than appears at first. It requires a bit of research and a look at the complexity of the situation, instead of simplifying it to the level of children.

MINES AND MINING

REQUEST FOR LOAN GUARANTEE TO YUKON MINE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, my question is for the Minister of State for Mines. She met with a widely representative group here last week from Yukon regarding the reopening of the Cyprus Anvil mine at Faro. Since the workers have made a number of concessions, and a package of Section 38 UI Funds and NEED Funds has been put in place for the reopening of the mine which has laid off 600 workers for more than eight months, has the Minister found support among her colleagues and on Treasury Board to provide the $25 million loan guarantee to Dome to see that this mine reopens now before those workers run into difficulties regarding their existing benefits?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, we had a very good meeting with representatives from the community of Faro. The matter is now being considered by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

TRADE

IMPENDING RULING BY UNITED STATES ON CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. As he knows, a ruling regarding countervailing duties is being made today in Washington. Since within the next couple of hours we will find out whether or not certain federal policies which have been put in place will be judged by the U.S. Department of Commerce hearings as being subsidies, would the Prime Minister commit to this House that by tomorrow on motions, earlier if possible, he will make a statement to this House on what steps he intends to take should it be found that there are subsidies and countervailing duties will be applied against our forest industry which will affect one worker in ten in Canada?

• (1440)

COMPULSORY GRADING OF BEEF CARCASSES FOR EXPORT

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. He will be aware of his Department's intention to require compulsory grading of beef carcasses crossing both the provincial borders and the U.S. border. The grade is applied both as a stamp and roller brand. It is applied with a colour code. The difficulty with export carcass grading is that our red roller brand indicates the top grade in Canada, while blue is the United States top grade colour. Will the Minister explain why it is suddenly necessary to require compulsory grading on Canadian export carcasses?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, if I remember correctly, I believe it is because of a legislative change that took place. It is restating this regulation that has always been there. That is why it has been published and gazetted.

Mr. Hargrave: With the greatest respect to the Minister, Madam Speaker, there have been regulations that allowed for voluntary use only, not for a compulsory run.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW SITUATION

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, in view of the March 9 deadline for receiving objections to this current proposal, and in view of the special problems this grading change makes for Lakeside Packers at Brooks, Alberta, which presently exports the largest amount of carcass beef from Canada to the United States, would the Minister look into this matter before we lose a very good beef export order, and reinstate the optional grade standards listed in Section 11 of the regulations?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we are reviewing this clause as well as mechanisms to provide quickly for approval of ungraded shipments when the importing country desires it. It is the importing country that desires the stamp. We are going to make sure that it is done properly. It is they who want it.

AIR CANADA

STATUS OF RCMP INQUIRY INTO TRANSFER OF HEADQUARTERS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. He is aware that the transfer to Montreal of Air Canada Headquarters last December at a cost $10 million higher than the price quoted in the second best offer is being investigated by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police at the request of the Minister of Justice with the approval of the Minister of Transport. Can the Solicitor General now tell the House how this investigation is going and what was its nature?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, it would be quite improper for me to make a statement about an investigation which has not yet been completed.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I thought that the Solicitor General was responsible for the RCMP. However, I shall put my question to the Minister of Justice. Can he tell us when we will be able to make this investigation public and, since Canadians will pay $10 million more than they should, whether he intends to make its results public? The Minister will agree that the taxpayer has the right to know why we should pay $10 million more for new Air Canada headquarters.

Mr. MacGuigan: Madam Speaker, my reply to the Hon. Member has to be the same as to his first question.

CANADA INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

DELAY IN APPOINTING PRESIDENT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the Minister explain why a delay of nearly five months has occurred in filling the presidency of the Canadian International Development Agency, and tell the House if special criteria are being applied this time? When does the Minister expect to make an announcement?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether the question is addressed to me. There are no special reasons for the delay except that we are making a very careful scrutiny of possible candidates so that this agency will have the best possible leadership.

Mr. Roche: Madam Speaker, I do not know why the Government does not appoint Bill McWhinney as permanent president. He has been doing a splendid job for five months as acting president. I hope I have not put the kiss of death on him by commending him in the House of Commons.

CLASSIFICATION OF ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, can the Minister confirm that the 1982 CIDA Annual Report falls into the classification of a parliamentary document and will therefore automatically be referred for study to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that Mr. McWhinney is doing an excellent job in the leadership of CIDA at the present time.

I can tell the Hon. Member that I am not quite sure whether the annual report is one of those documents that is automatically referred to the Standing Committee. That is a question of fact but I shall look into it and certainly, if it is in that category, I will welcome the opportunity to have it examined by the Committee.

AGRICULTURE

PROMISED TRANSFER OF EMERGENCY FUND TO WESTERN GRAIN RESEARCH FOUNDATION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture. For two years the Minister has been promising to turn over the $9.6 million in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund to the Western Grain Research Foundation. I wonder if he can advise the House when the money will be turned over.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, soon.

REQUEST FOR ACCELERATION OF TRANSFER

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, a year and a half ago I received the same answer from the Minister of Agriculture. He does not seem to understand what soon means. This is a non-interest bearing account and, in the past two years, probably $2 million in interest has been lost to research. Can the Minister explain to the House what he means by soon?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, it will be sooner than soon.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT UNDERTAKE MAJOR PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. For the majority of Canadians the only measure of economic recovery that will matter is whether they have a job or have the prospect of getting a job. There are probably two million Canadians presently unemployed. According to Statistics Canada the number is 1.6 million, but considerably more are out of the work force. There are umpteen thousand young people looking forward to finding employment but cannot find it at the present time.

Does the Prime Minister not believe that, since indirect investment by the Government it costs 48 cents for every dollar spent in stimulation in public works, it would make sense now, rather than later, to go ahead with a major public works program in order to stimulate that confidence that most people need, that somehow, somewhere, some day soon they will be able to go back to work and earn a living?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that it is important to take initiatives to create jobs. I would remind him of my answer to a question a moment ago, of the $2 billion that the Government allotted to the creation of jobs. Whether it is in public works, housing, or other forms of expenditure to encourage consumer demand and provide investment is, I think, a little bit secondary from the point of view of the unemployed worker. He wants a job. He does not necessarily think it has to come from the sole source that the Hon. Member suggests, but it is one of many sources.

REQUEST THAT PUBLIC WORKS PROJECTS BE EXPEDITED

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, if it were possible to project with any degree of accuracy or confidence that the private sector is about to make a massive recovery, I think we could give these people some hope. It is quite clear from the recent statistics that private sector investment will be down this year over last year, and it was down last year over the year before. The only hope of recovery in the short run is the massive involvement of the Government.

Is the Government prepared to take that inventory of public works that it claimed some months ago it had undertaken, and authorize the various municipalities and provincial agencies, together with federal agencies, to go ahead and begin the projects in order to create the economic stimulation necessary to put tens, if not hundreds of thousands of people, back to work?

• (1450)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, I am agreeing with the Hon. Member. As a matter of fact in one of my more recent statements on the economy I said that that was one of the ways in which we could create jobs, using federal money to lever the municipalities, the Provinces, and also the private sector into investments now which otherwise would be made at a later date. I am in complete agreement with the Hon. Member. I can only say that hopefully the budget will bring down the kind of mix which the Hon. Member will find fit to approve.

ENERGY

OFFSHORE SAFETY OF NEWFOUNDLAND WORKERS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Energy was wired on Saturday about a meeting which is taking place in St. John's today in connection with safety in the offshore. He was wired by the Minister of Mines and Energy of Newfoundland, Mr. Marshall. There is a meeting with Mobil Oil and all companies involved in the offshore. The Newfoundland Government says that, after a prudent assessment of all the facts, it has concluded that winter drilling should be halted for the remainder of the season, and it invited the Minister to a meeting of all these companies and the Government which is taking place this evening.

Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether his Minister is attending, or whether arrangements have been made to have somebody else attend with respect to this very important situation?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. There was a telex forwarded to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He has responded to that telex of Mr. Marshall and, yes, there will be a senior official of the COGLA office attending the meeting this evening in Newfoundland.

CLOSURE OF SATELLITE SURVEILLANCE STATION AT SHOE COVE, NFLD.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister was sent a telex by Premier Peckford in connection with the closing of the satellite surveillance station located at Shoe Cove on the east coast of Newfoundland in St. John's East. That is a federal station. As a result of that closure Canada will no longer be able to track down properly the weather or ice conditions on the East Coast offshore. The replacement station in Churchill, Manitoba, will only reach across part of the Island of Newfoundland, not the offshore oil and gas area. Premier Peckford has offered to pay part of the costs of that satellite receiving station, if necessary.

In view of the very dangerous situation in the offshore now and the importance of developing oil fields offshore the east coast of Newfoundland, is the Prime Minister prepared to agree to that suggestion and stop the disgraceful dismantling of this satellite tracking station which is under way now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I believe I had occasion, in my answer to Premier Peckford, to deal with that matter. The Hon. Member is incorrect in stating as he does that the closing of that satellite tracking station will result in less information. On the contrary, we are doing that so that we can have better information on the whole area.

Mr. Crosbie: Nonsense. You are being misled, Mr. Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member has a different opinion on that. That, of course, is his right. I am not an expert in satellite tracking, but I understand that this question has been looked at very carefully. It should not be a question of territorial possession. It should be a question of where the best information can be obtained from, and that is what the Department is doing.

ESTIMATES

INCREASE IN MAIN ESTIMATES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Now that we have all had an opportunity to review the Main Estimates for fiscal year 1983-84 and to compare them with the Main Estimates of the previous year, would the Minister agree that the Main Estimates this year are up over 17 per cent in total expenditures compared with last year?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, certainly the Main Estimates for this year compared with the Main Estimates for last year are up in the area my hon. friend has mentioned. On the other hand, if one wants to compare total outlays, total expenditure by the federal Government in the 1982-83 fiscal year, which includes more items than the Main Estimates, with the total outlays forecast for the next fiscal year, then total expenditures are up only 9.6 per cent, the lowest rate of increase in four years.

PRESENTATION OF FUTURE SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, again my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In order that we may get a fair overview on spending in the coming year, would the Minister assure the House that there will be no more Supplementary Estimates or additions to the Main Estimates he has already tabled?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, as far as I am aware there will be no further Supplementary Estimates for the current fiscal year, 1982-83.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: With respect to the next fiscal year, as I said in my statement in the House on February 22, there will be, as in the past, Supplementary Estimates, but it is our intention to accommodate them within the envelope reserves which I made public at the time of making my statement. They are included in the total expenditure outlay figure forecast that I brought before the House which will involve an increase in expenditures compared with total outlays last year of 9.6 per cent, the lowest rate of increase in four years.

COST OF PROPOSED PRESS COUNCIL

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that one of the key proposals being made by the Minister of State for Multiculturalism to control Canada's press is a government sponsored press council which would be funded to the extent of $4 million per year over four years, could the Minister confirm that money for this has not been included in the Estimates and that that $4 million per year over four years will have to be added in the form of Supplementary Estimates?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, first I want to say that my hon. friend is quite wrong when he said the Minister of State for Multiculturalism proposed a press council to control Canada's press. That is not the intention of the Hon. Minister or of the Government at all. It is my recollection of the proposal that essentially it is for a voluntary body. In any event, if there is a proposal brought before the House to set up such a body, the expenditure in question will be requested in Supplementary Estimates that will be accommodated within the total expenditure figure I brought forward and tabled in the House on February 22. As far as I am aware, it will not be an addition to the total expenditure forecast which I made known on February 22. In any event, the expenditure will have to be voted on and accepted by the House.

WESTERN DEVELOPMENT FUND

POSSIBLE USE IN CONSTRUCTION OF REGINA WATER PIPELINE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Minister who is also in charge of the Western Development Fund. The Minister knows that the Ipsco steel plant in Regina will be totally shut down by March 18 of this year. He also knows that there is a desire and a need on the part of the citizens of Regina for a water pipeline to Lake Diefenbaker. Could the Minister inform us, as the Minister in charge of western Canadian development, whether there has been any proposals made to the federal Government by the provincial Government regarding the Water pipeline to Regina from Lake Diefenbaker?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I should point out that there is no Minister specifically in charge of the Western Development Fund, but as the Chairman of the Cabinet Committee on Western Affairs, I would be glad to answer the question and point out to the Hon. Member that the largest percentage of allocation of that fund was put toward the modernization of the railway system in western Canada. Part of those funds were directly targeted toward western Canadian industry to help it prepare for a more modern, up-to-date industrial base in that region so that it could take advantage of the major opportunities and potential that vast undertaking will provide for the creation of permanent jobs and economic activity across Canada.

I want to point out to him specifically that Ipsco is in a position to make proposals under that fund. Considering the very strong interest of the Hon. Member, I hope he convinces his colleagues to go along with the proposal put forward by the Minister of Transport to agree to that major modernization of the Crow rate so that we can get on with the business of developing railway lines in a proper way in western Canada.

ENERGY

SAFETY OF NEWFOUNDLAND OFFSHORE OIL RIG WORKERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I can put it fairly specifically to him because I am sure he will be aware of what I am getting at. Did the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at any time seek professional ice or weather advice, or direction with respect to the safety of offshore drilling rigs before he entered into his current round of debates with the Government of Newfoundland? Was the Minister's departmental advice sought? Did he give it? If it was not sought, who on earth is in charge of marine transport matters in the country? Is it he or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, because we are talking about the lives of hundreds of men on those offshore rigs?

• (1500)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the responsibility for rigs is that of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The responsibility for ships in the area is that of the Minister of Transport. There is no discussion on that subject. That is why most of the initiative in these matters has been taken by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

NOTICE OF ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-143

Madam Speaker: The Minister of State for Finance.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, did I understand the Chair to call Government Notices of Motions?

Madam Speaker: I will call it now. We will go back to Government Notices of Motions.

Mr. Nielsen: Only by leave.

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, I wish to inform the House that there have been consultations among the representatives of the Parties and it has not been possible—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cosgrove: —to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 80 or 81—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cosgrove: —with regard to the allocation of time for the second reading stage—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cosgrove: —of Bill C-143—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I am rising on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Could I ask the Minister to resume his seat for a minute. The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, you went through Routine Proceedings as you do every day. You are now calling Motions. The Minister missed Government Notices of Motions, and we do not give leave to revert.

Madam Speaker: I wonder under what practice I am not allowed to go back?

Mr. Nielsen: Only by leave.

Madam Speaker: I do it every day. When Hon. Members want to present petitions and I have already called Petitions but they have not heard, we revert in that very flexible way.

Mr. Deans: You do it by leave.

Madam Speaker: It might be that the Speaker did not see the Hon. Minister when he rose. I cannot ascertain that. Perhaps the Minister might tell me if he was rising when I called that item.

Some Hon. Members: No, he was not.

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, I did rise at the appropriate time under the appropriate section, but unfortunately the Chair did not recognize me at that point.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: At any rate, I do not think there is any problem. The Hon. Minister, I believe, wants to move a motion. Therefore, I am now presently at Motions and the Hon. Minister may make his motion at that time.

The Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Beatty: Madam Speaker, I assume that you have not ruled on this point as yet. It is a very critical issue. The Speaker follows a set procedure every day. After we passed the particular piece of business for which the Minister has responsibility, he sought the consent of the Chair and the House to revert to the previous piece of business. Any time this is done, Madam Speaker, it must be done with the consent of the House. Consent of the House was not requested. Certainly on this side of the House we would not have given consent to revert to Government Notices of Motions. I suggest the Minister does not have the ability today, without the consent of the House, to return to the item he missed.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I merely wish to draw your attention to the fact that the Hon. Minister was on his feet and was trying to get your attention to be recognized. I find it rather strange that Opposition Members should raise the issue now. I myself was looking around and trying to get the Chair's attention to have my colleague, the Minister, recognized so that he could put his motion. In my view, it is entirely appropriate that the Chair should recognize the Hon. Minister and allow him to finish reading his motion.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I do not want to make the matter more complicated than it has already become, but when the Minister gained the floor he asked whether we had passed that part in Orders where Ministers may make motions.

Mr. Nielsen: That is right.

Mr. Deans: The Speaker said, "I will revert to that." I think quite clearly the Minister asked whether we had passed that point; the Speaker, having recognized that we had, indicated that the Chair would revert to that stage. I heard the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) distinctly say, "Only with leave". I suspect on this occasion, at least at this point in time, that unless leave is forthcoming, I do not see how we can revert.

Madam Speaker: I will accept that judgment of the House. If the House does not want to give leave to revert, I just warn the House that that is a change of practice.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: Constantly we have reverted. However, we were at Motions. May I read to Hon. Members Standing Order 82:

> A Minister of the Crown who from his or her place in the House at a previous sitting has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 80 or 81 in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration either in the House or in any committee and has given notice of his or her intention so to do, may propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage;—

This can be done now under Motions.

Mr. Andre: With notice.

Madam Speaker: We are under Motions. It may be done under Motions at the usual time at which those notices are given.

Mr. Andre: With notice.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, with great respect, the Chair is being ill advised. I say that to the Officer who is advising her. Standing Order—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: In order to protect the Officers of the House from any interpretation which Members might have, the fact that this Officer is standing next to me does not necessarily mean he is advising me and the Hon. Member does not necessarily know what that Officer is telling me. Therefore, that comment is not welcome.

Mr. Ouellet: Withdraw!

Mr. Nielsen: I withdraw nothing. I have the greatest possible respect for every Officer at the Table and I stated so before that comment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: If the Chair will study Standing Order 81, it refers to notice being given by a Minister rising in his or her place. The item which the Chair had reached in Routine Proceedings was Motions. The proper time for notice to be given under Standing Order 81 is on the item "Government Notices of Motions" which precedes the item in which the House is now engaged. The Minister knew that himself. He rose and asked whether we had passed that item. The Chair said yes, indeed we had, and that the Chair would revert.

With the greatest respect, Madam Speaker, it has always been the practice in this place that when we revert from an item reached on Routine Proceedings to another item preceding that item, it has always been by leave or with the consent of the House. The Chair has never arrogated to itself the discretion to make that decision.

I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that there might be a procedural argument as to whether or not the Minister has a right to move such a notice at any stage of our proceedings in this House. That is another matter. I would maintain, of course, that the only place the Minister can give that notice is on Government Notices of Motion. We have passed that stage. We are on another item. We can certainly revert to the previous item of Government Notices, but only by leave of the House.

• (1510)

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, as with everything, it becomes more complicated as we proceed. I suggest, however, that for a Minister of the Crown to give notice he is required to gain the floor legitimately. He cannot rise under the pretext of doing something else and then give notice pursuant to Standing Order 82. I suggest that there is no provision for a Minister of the Crown, during this part of House business, to rise and give notice under Standing Order 82. What they would be doing is simply indicating that agreement could not be found to proceed under Standing Order 80 or 81.

While I think it wrong, on the basis of precedent I think it would be appropriate for a Minister of the Crown to rise in the afternoon during debate, as did the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) some time ago during the middle of debate, to indicate quite out of the blue that he or she wanted to give notice that agreement could not be achieved. I thought it was wrong at the time but the Speaker ruled in favour of it, so I accept it. However, it certainly would not be appropriate for the Minister to rise under the guise of giving notice of something to indicate simply that there was no agreement.

Madam Speaker: For clarification, may I remind Hon. Members that I only went back to Notices of Motions because the Hon. Minister asked me to go back to Notices of Motions and I said yes. We do that very often and we can go back.

However, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is right. A Minister might give notice in the course of debate this afternoon, but he may also do it now because the only restriction upon that is a Minister "in his or her place". That is the only restriction. A Minister may do it at any time. He can do it under Motions, Notices of Motions or during debate. Therefore, I feel the Hon. Minister can give notice at any time.

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, in opening my remarks I indicated that I wanted to inform the House and give notice that consultations have not been successful among the Parties and it has not been possible to reach agreement pursuant to Standing Order 80 or 81 with regard to the allocation of time to the second reading stage of Bill C-143, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority. Therefore, at the next sitting of the House, I shall propose a motion pursuant to Standing Order 82 to allocate one sitting day to the said stage of the said Bill.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister first sought to smuggle in a Government Notice of Motion under Motions. Now the Minister is trying to do it on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: I hope the Hon. Member agrees with me—I will repeat his term but I cannot accept it—that the Minister could have smuggled it in at any time. I repeat that the only restriction is that a Minister of the Crown be in his or her place. That is the only restriction. He may give that notice of motion at any time. He has now given it, not under a point of order but under Motions.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 4,587.

[Text]

PARKING AT PLACE DU PORTAGE

Question No. 4,587—Mr. McCuish:

1. How many public servants are located in the Place du Portage office complex in Hull, Quebec?

2. How many parking stalls are allocated for public servants there?

3. What is the monthly charge for parking permits?

4. Are person-hours lost each month due to public servants queuing up during regular working hours in order to purchase parking permits and, if so, how many?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works):

1. Place du Portage, Phase I, II, III, IV 8,900
   Place du Centre 1,400
   10,300

   This is an approximate figure based on NCC survey and update.

2. In all garages servicing the complex:

Public servants—normal working hours (This figure includes 159 spaces provided to employees working in Place du Centre and Terrasses de la Chaudière.)	691
Public servants working shifts outside the normal 8 to 5 base hours	172
Total	863

(In addition, 39 spaces are provided for Crown-owned vehicles.)

3. It is $28.05 for public servants qualified under the Treasury Board parking policy; $38 commercial rate.

4. The sale of monthly parking passes at the Place du Portage is normally implemented five days prior to the parking month. The sale at Laurier-Taché Garage commences at 7:30 a.m. and is normally sold out by 9 a.m. the same day. The passes at Notre-Dame Garage have never been sold out; hence, the sale there starts at noon and continues during normal working hours.

The person-hours lost due to these sales are not readily available. The only means for Public Works Canada to obtain the information would be to write to all Departments located in Hull. The time and cost of such an effort would be excessive and there would be no way of verifying the information.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—EQUALITY FOR WOMEN

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands):

That this House condemns the Government for the apathy that it has shown toward issues affecting Canadian women and for its failure to promote equality for women, and its inaction with respect to pension reform for women, and its tacit approval of sexual stereotyping and abusive material in the media, as demonstrated by the Government's unwillingness to prevent pornographic films from being shown on pay television, and its lack of commitment to its own affirmative action programme within the public service, and calls upon the Government to immediately establish a standing committee of Parliament empowered to deal with issues that have a particular impact upon women and to review the progress, or lack thereof, made by the Government with respect to such issues.

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, before the House adjourned at one o'clock, I was talking about pensions, with specific reference to the exclusion clause for the raising of children, which is in effect in Quebec. Quebec women are extremely lucky in this respect. However, there is still a serious problem in the rest of Canada. In order to enable young mothers to stay home for seven years after the birth of a child without losing their pension continuity, the Federal Government must have the signatures of two-thirds of the provincial governments representing two-thirds of the Canadian population. Our Government has tried several times to obtain a joint agreement with the other provinces. Several provinces refused, including Ontario, which holds the balance of power because of its large population. As a Member of the Government, I am willing to accept criticism when it is justified, but in the case I have just described, I am afraid the provinces are at fault.

If we really want to maximize the benefits of this Opposition day, Mr. Speaker, we should refresh our memory with respect to a number of problems affecting the status of women. If there is one subject that does not deserve to the subject of bickering by the House, it is indeed this one. The study on battered wives has revealed one more injustice among so many others. If only there were enough time to discuss pension problems, equal pay for equal work, daycare, exploitation of women, sexual harassment, sexual stereotyping in the media, discrimination against Indian women, and there are many more.

I can assure the House and the Members opposite that we on this side of the House are fully aware of the very difficult problems women have to face. In enumerating these problems, I also want to make it clear to Hon. Members that in many cases, although it would like to do so, the Government is prevented from improving the situation. For instance, under Section 56.1 of the non-profit housing program, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has set aside 151 units for use as transition houses, but here again, the initiative must come from the provinces and the municipalities.

Regarding the issue of equal pay for equal work, women must learn to submit complaints to the Human Rights Commission when their rights have been abused. I had the honour of sitting on the Committee on Wife Battering, and before that I sat on the Committee on the Handicapped, and I am pleased to say that both committee reports have been followed up by our Government. We tabled our report on Violence in the Family in May 1982. I must say that the Government acted on the recommendations that were within its jurisdiction, but unfortunately, here again, many of the seventeen recommendations fell under joint federal-provincial jurisdiction and we are still waiting.

The Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan) has instructed the executive of the chiefs of police of Canada and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to set up immediately a training program for policemen on family violence. Alberta and Manitoba policemen can now put assailants under arrest.

As I said, it is now up to the people to make strong representations to the provincial authorities so that this practice will be extended to the rest of the country. The Department of National Health and Welfare of Canada has established a national information centre on family violence, and the Minster of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has sent a pamphlet on battered women to all those who receive family allowances.

Last August, our Government passed Bill C-127 to amend the Criminal Code as it relates to sexual assault. This new legislation gives more protection to women who are victims of violence.

[English]

In the limited time I have left, I would like to give Hon. Members some idea of the Green Paper's proposal to improve pension protection for women under the pension system.

First, the Government recognizes that the current elderly, those already retired from the active labour force, would benefit little, if at all, from changes in work-related pension plans. We know that the combined Old Age Security Guaranteed Income Supplement Program already guarantees pensioner couples an income which is generally sufficient to meet their basic needs. Unfortunately, the same cannot be said for the single pensioners, the large majority of whom are women. Many of our single pensioners, those who have no income other than their Old Age Security Guaranteed Income Supplement, have to get by on an inadequate income, an income which is low relative to pensioner couples and to other groups in Canadian society.

The Green Paper clearly identifies the problems of the single elderly as a key social policy priority of the Government of Canada. We are committed to raising the Guaranteed Income Supplement for this group as soon as resources permit. Of course, in a time of economic restraint such expenditures are difficult, but there are indications that the economy is improving. For example, in January the annual inflation rate was 8.3 per cent, well below the annual rate of 11.2 per cent which was evident when the six and five restraint program was first announced last June.

In future years, of course, it is our hope that fewer women will have to rely so heavily on GIS benefits. That extent to which this goal can be reached will depend, in large measure, on improvements made in other aspects of the pension system.

[Translation]

The Green Paper advocates a number of changes to private pension plans designed to better protect retirement income. Some of those suggestions are of particular interest to women. For instance, protection against inflation is especially significant for them because in their lifetime they usually earn less than men and generally live longer than men do. The same can be said about the suggestions concerning compulsory vesting of pension contributions after two years, and the measures to be taken so that their transfer from one employer to another might be particularly worthwhile for women since they have more mobility than men and their work schedule is more often interrupted.

The Green Paper proposes the introduction of a new tax free retirement savings mechanism which would be called the Registered Pension Account. As in any Registered Retirement Savings Plan, the Registered Pension Account would make it possible to deduct contributions from the income, except that the employer could contribute directly to the RPA on behalf of a wage earner, provided certain conditions were met. This provision would make it easier for small businesses to pay retirement benefits to their employees. In addition to these general improvements to the employer's plans, which will be particularly beneficial to women, the Green Paper recommends special provisions to improve the situation of the spouses of contributors. Among these, I would first like to mention pension benefits based on the income of the surviving spouse with survivor benefits amounting to at least 60 per cent of the initial benefits; second, the sharing of pension entitlements in the case of divorce or separation; and third, the continued payment of survivor benefits after remarriage.

I would now like to examine briefly the proposals of the Green Paper to improve the protection offered by the Canada Pension Plan to women who are now or will later become members of the labour force. Two suggestions have already been debated at length and seem to have many supporters. One would be to increase the maximum earnings covered by the plan to the same level as the average industrial wages over the last three years. The other would be to implement as soon as possible the clause of exclusion for the purpose of child raising which I mentioned earlier, and which is now applied in Quebec but nowhere else in Canada. In this regard, I was very pleased to hear that the Ontario government might be willing to accept this clause. Canada as a whole would benefit from this improvement. I understand that Ontario is willing to support the other recommendations of the Green Paper as soon as an agreement is reached about long-term financing conditions of the plan.

The Green Paper also contains recommendations to improve the situation of non-working spouses, which would involve an extension of arrangements for pension entitlement sharing and would be one way of recognizing that both spouses have contributed to the accumulation of Canada Pension Plan entitlements during their marriage and that both own these entitlements equally. Since 1978, such arrangements have applied to divorced spouses. It seems to me that there is no reason why spouses with a lasting marriage should be denied access to entitlement sharing. I see some heads shaking, which might mean that everyone does not agree. This is why we will have public hearings. The fact is that the sharing of entitlements could take place when the younger spouse reaches 65. When either spouse dies or when the non-employed spouse or the lower wage earner, where both spouses work, becomes incapacitated, benefits would be paid on the basis of entitlement sharing. However, the entitlements could be divided on request in cases where the spouses have been separated for more than three years.

The Green Paper also recommends that changes be made to survivor benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. For spouses over 65, the Green Paper suggests that the lifetime survivor benefit be equal to 60 per cent of the accumulated retirement pension of the deceased spouse after entitlement sharing. Still on the assumption that the entitlement sharing provision is enacted, whether the spouse is a contributor or not, he would also receive a personal retirement pension based on half the pension entitlement. I am certain that people find this complicated and confusing, but we shall have some answers after the committee has heard submissions from interested parties during its meetings throughout Canada. The surviving spouse would therefore receive up to 80 per cent of the Canada Pension Plan benefits paid to the couple before the death of the other spouse. The present ceiling of combined benefits would cease to apply. As for the spouse under 65, the Green Paper recommends a two-level structure which would involve transition benefits and a lifetime pension. Permanent benefits would be the same as for survivors over 65, namely 60 per cent of the accumulated shared pension. The transition benefit could be a more substantial amount, for instance an amount equal to the Old Age Security Pension, and could be paid to the survivor for either three years or until the age of 65 is reached, whichever is shorter. Survivors with children could be entitled to the transition benefit for a longer period, for instance, until the youngest child reaches seven. A two-tier structure would help young widows in re-adjusting their lifestyles immediately after the death of their spouses, and would provide them with some kind of help for later on. The Green Paper further suggests that marriage should no longer put an end to the benefits paid to the surviving spouse.

As I said earlier, the special committee will soon initiate its consultation process, holding hearings all across the country. I would ask Hon. Members from both sides of the House to encourage women groups in their constituencies to avail themselves of their freedom of speech and submit presentations at those hearings.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope my remarks on pensions reflect the Government's concerns on this issue.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question to the Parliamentary Secretary, for whom I have a good deal of affection and respect. Does she feel that the federal Government should invest any money in the film Videodrome which, as she will know, advocates pornography and violence against women, and also, since she referred to battered wives as if there were a link between pornography and wife-beating men, does she feel that the law should be clarified respecting pornography?

Mrs. Killens: I believe that most Hon. Members know my feelings on this. I must agree with the Hon. Member that pornography is conducive to violence and even rape, and I could not support any kind of active participation by this Government in the promotion of pornography. This goes without saying, and certainly there can be no doubt that I am sincere when I stress that were it proven that this Government in some way or another is helping to promote pornography with the knowledge that this is conducive to violence, I would be the first to denounce it. Until I have such proof, I must be on the alert.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Parliamentary Secretary. The implication of her comments about pension-credit splitting was that she is content with the view that married persons shall be entitled to half the pension to which they would be entitled if they were single. Was that the thrust and intent of what she was saying?

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, that is not what I said. There were 60,000 women who participated in the regional conferences. I attended many of them in Montreal. I heard women come to the microphone and express the wish that the pension be divided, asking why they should be penalized if they stayed married and yet if they were divorced, they got half the pension. Some men in the audience became so excited that I thought they would have a heart attack because they were so much against it. The question is not settled at all. A committee will be studying it along with other items.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question. I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern regarding pensions. I understand that she will be on the Pension Committee. I look forward to working with her on that Committee.

How does the Hon. Member feel about Government intervention in pension schemes? In particular, does she believe that the pensioners in this country should have any confidence in the Liberal Government in view of the fact that, under the six and five program, the basic Old Age Security Pension was capped at six and five? In the Public Service, the RCMP and the Armed Forces, not only were those pensions capped but additional funds which individuals had specifically put into those programs to protect themselves from inflation were also capped. The Hon. Member was critical of the private plans because they are not protected against inflation. I would rather not have the reply from the Hon. Member that because inflation is down to 8.3 per cent, the impact will not be as severe. The principal point is that those pensioners expected to be protected against inflation. Those pensioners paid an indexation fee. They expected to be protected against inflation, not undermined by Government decree, as was implied and in fact as occurred under the six and five program in Bill C-124.

Mrs. Killens: The Hon. Member asked whether I thought the people had confidence in the Liberal Government. They have proven that. They have demonstrated it for the last 11 years and will do so again. Therefore, they do have confidence in us.

I am glad to answer that question. When the Hon. Member spoke of Bill C-131 this morning, I was going to raise a question with him. He seemed to imply that the Government was imposing six and five on pensioners. Last week the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) was asked a question about this in the House. She replied that with the rate of inflation having dropped since the June, 1982 budget, she was pleased to announce that for the next three-month period, commencing April, 1983, Old Age Security pensions will be paid at the fully-indexed rate. That is what the Minister of National Health and Welfare said last week. I believe that answers the question regarding pensioners.

[Translation]

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary could indicate to the House just how much money the government has earmarked for the promotion of women's rights through various programs initiated by the Secretary of State. I know that the federal government has made a major effort, but for the benefit of the House, I should like the Parliamentary Secretary to tell us the extent of the financial commitment of the Secretary of State.

Mrs. Killens: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer this question. In my own riding, there is "La maison de l'ancre", which is a sort of shelter for women. Also, I have just contacted the Secretary of State to try and obtain financial assistance for battered or raped women. Last year, the Secretary of State provided $3.2 million to help Canadian women in emergency situations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Any more questions?

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the motion of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), I think that perhaps the clearest-cut statement that there is a problem in this country, and this is the thrust of the Hon. Member's motion, is that equality has not been achieved, we are a long way from it and there are immediate problems. There is a proposal for a long-term possible mechanism to help us reach a solution over time.

In the context of that motion, my biggest disappointment to this point is that both the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary stood in the House and indicated that they were proud of the record of this Government. If I were a Member of a Government that had a track record like the one this Government has, I could not stand in this House or on a platform anywhere in the country and feel proud. There really is not a record to be proud of.

The most solid achievement which Members have referred to is the constitutional provision on equality for women. That is not an achievement of Government; that is an achievement of the Opposition and of the women of this country. There was no provision in the original Constitution that was laid before this Chamber that would make women equal to men in Canada. In committee, through the protests of people around this country and the good work of the Opposition, which forced the Government to open the committee to the public in the first place, that equality provision was put in the Constitution. Then the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) bargained it away on a weekend. He threw it out, and the Opposition had to dig in its heels again and work in concert with the women of Canada to get it back in. So when the Minister stands in this House, Mr. Speaker, and says to Canadians, "That is our prime achievement in the last three years", I will say that that is an achievement for which the Minister should hang her head in shame. The Parliament of Canada has reason for pride in forcing that provision back, but not the Government. The Members of the Government should hang their heads in shame. Fifty-one per cent of the people of this country have had to organize, to protest, simply to have a provision included in the Constitution of Canada which makes them equal to other persons. The Government has forced them to do that, and this is an achievement in which no one should have pride.

The Minister responsible for the status of women is rapidly acquiring a reputation as the Minister responsible for the buffer, the Minister responsible for bafflegab, the Minister responsible for making speeches on behalf of women and sounding sympathetic, for trying to portray a Government which is supposedly sympathetic, when in reality we have a Government which clearly is not sympathetic and does not believe in the equality of female persons. That is a track record which is abysmal. That is a track record which should cause all Members of Parliament to feel some sense of shame about participating in a Parliament with a Government so consistently and so clearly violating the basic sense of equality.

The Minister of State responsible for women stood in this House earlier this day and announced a new program under an interdepartmental committee to enforce her guidelines relative to Government action, and if you read the speech in Hansard tomorrow you will find that she said, "What is the point of guidelines if you do not have an enforcement mechanism. I stand in this Chamber and I proudly announce a mechanism to enforce guidelines." I must draw the Minister's attention to her behaviour on the previous Opposition day, Mr. Speaker, when she stood in this Chamber and voted against a motion which would have referred the Coalgate-Gillespie affair to the individual responsible for enforcing guidelines. The Hon. Members of this House spent almost a week in the Question Period on the issue of guidelines, the possibility that guidelines had been violated, and we stood in the House and had a whole day's debate on the need to refer the issue to a body which could reach a judgment on whether or not guidelines had been violated. Nothing in the Minister's behaviour today exemplifies to me more clearly the consistent pattern of this Government, which is to say one thing and do another. To say you need an enforcement of the mechanism for guidelines on one issue and, then, as they did a week ago, to beat down the Opposition in its atempt to have guidelines reviewed by an enforcement body, is first-rate hypocrisy.

Every backbencher on that side who supports a Government which says one thing and does another is equally guilty of the same hypocrisy. The judgment of the Canadian public will come. One day there will be a general election and that hypocrisy will be headlined on platform after platform. You cannot say one thing and do another day in and day out and retain any credibility for your Party, for the Parliament and for the whole governing process in this nation.

The second major item of which the Minister said she was proud in terms of Government achievement was the provision of equal pay for work of equal value. She apologized for it saying that the federal Government had the power to legislate and control over only 10 per cent of the work force. But she was proud of the progress made by the Government. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Treasury Board President of this Government, day in and day out, with all the legal resources of this Government, fought the general service workers through the court system when those general service workers wanted equal pay for work of equal value. This Government took them to court and said they could not have it. It was the court and not the Cabinet, not the backbenchers, which said the Government had to pay those general service workers equal pay for work of equal value. Thank heavens, Mr. Speaker, for the courts. And for a Minister of the Crown to stand in the House and try to take credit for what the court made the Government do is hypocrisy of the first order. This Government did not do that. The courts did it.

That is the record of this Government, Mr. Speaker. We get announcements about programs, and most of those programs are an insult to the women of this nation. They are token programs for the most part, and to stand in the House and brag about reports and conferences, is to help us all identify the fact that, yes, this Government funds talk-fests, this Government funds reports, but then this Government never acts, never does what those conferences and reports recommend.

I have in my possession, Sir, a letter from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) addressed to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, dated October 7, 1982, and that date is important, Mr. Speaker, because it deals with the report on violence in the family. I was a member of the Committee which drafted that report. We gave that report to Parliament in May, 1982, and here is a letter of October, 1982, six months later, in which the Minister is saying, "I have agreed to meet with the Minister responsible for the status of women, the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General, to discuss your Committee's report." Six months later the Minister has agreed to a meeting to discuss these matters. "We intend to go into questions and proposals that may be raised by our provincial counterparts at future federal-provincial conferences".

There were a lot of recommendations in that report, Mr. Speaker, but essentially it reported a couple of things. One of them was that the nation was in a state of emergency on this issue. The problems are here now, they are real. The committee had spent some time in investigating these matters and action needs to be taken now. Here we have a Minister of the Crown writing back to the Committee Chairman six months later saying there was to be a meeting sometime in the indefinite future. Taxpayers' money was spent on that investigation which resulted in that report, but far too little has happened. It is almost one year later and I do not even know if that meeting ever took place. As I look around the country, I know that the recommendations we made have not been implemented, whether that meeting took place or not. But when the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister responsible for the status of women say they are going to get together six months later to talk about it some day in the future, then that tells us as clearly as we ever want to hear that the purpose of reports and conferences on behalf of the Liberal Government is to give the appearance of action without the reality of action.

You must always look at what they say and contrast that with what they do. Never in the history of a nation have we had a Government which says so much and does so little of what it says. Never have we had a Government which says one thing and does another with so much consistency. If you look at the record, Mr. Speaker, it is a modern-day phenomenon that today young women have made remarkable progress in the law faculties of this country. In many cases they make up over 50 per cent of the enrolment. That is modern Canada. Women have broken through in the legal profession. Some day down the road they may dominate the legal profession.

• (1550)

Mr. Kilgour: They do dominate it.

Mr. Hawkes: But then you look at what this Government has done in the last 365 days. It has appointed 47 judges, and only two of them are women. Women are achieving parity and equality in this occupational field, except in the area over which the Government has control. In that area we have two females appointed out of 47, and those two are at the lowest level of court appointments.

Mr. Kilgour: Four per cent.

Mr. Hawkes: Fifty per cent of the people in law school, 4 per cent of the judicial appointments.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the Minister repeated a promise about Section 12(b)(1) of the Indian Act. A promise, a promise, a promise. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) stood up and asked if there would be a woman at the conference table to look at native rights with the Premiers and the Prime Minister. Well, we got a lot of bafflegab, which when you cut through it, means the answer is no. The future of Indian women and their relationship to the Constitution of Canada may or may not be decided at that conference, but we know one thing about it: there will be no female person at the table looking at the fundamental law of this country and at probably the most glaring human rights violations of which this nation is guilty, to be found in the Indian Act. We will not have a single female person at the table, that is what the Minister responsible for the status of women told us this morning.

Then we heard this morning about retraining, Mr. Speaker. The Minister talked about the fact that 15-year-old females are dropping out of physics and mathematics. That is true and relates in part to our culture, in part to the counsellors in the school system and to many other factors. But the context in which the Minister talked about that was the issue of retraining. The problem today for women in large measure is a retraining problem, but at 15 years of age we are not talking about retraining, we are talking about initial training. At 25, 35, 45 and 55 years of age we are talking about retraining, and we heard no new announcements about retraining today. We have some token programs out there but that is what they are, token programs. There is no sincere, large-scale effort on behalf of the federal Government to provide retraining for women. That is the reality.

Now, Mr. Speaker, recommendations in that area were made by an all-Party task force back in September, 1981. The report of the Work For Tomorrow Task Force brought to the attention of this Parliament that there was a problem and something needed to be done about it. However, when you look at the budget of the Minister of Finance which followed soon thereafter, there was nothing in it which told us the Government paid any attention to any of the recommendations. The record of this Government is to fund a study, a report, and now we have the referral of that report to Donald Macdonald for three years at $800 a day so he can read it.

Mr. Kilgour: He has to eat.

Mr. Hawkes: Yes, the man has to eat. What about pensions for widows, Mr. Speaker?

This morning the Minister responsible for the status of women stood in the House and quoted some remarks of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands which dealt with spouse's allowance. If you read that very closely, the Minister was talking about the spousal deduction in the income tax system, and she was reading a speech of the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands who was speaking about spousal allowance. It is time the Minister learned the difference between an income tax deduction and the spousal allowance. The spousal allowance is something which goes to women between the ages of 60 and 65 because their husbands are 65 years of age and over. The converse can be true. It provides income support to married couples when one of the partners has hit the age of 65 and the other has not. That is what the spousal allowance is all about. That is what the Hon. Member was talking about. We have a Minister responsible for the status of women who does not understand that very basic, universal program and the difference between it and income tax deductions. There is a massive difference, Mr. Speaker, and after two years it is time that the Minister learned the difference.

This is a good time, Mr. Speaker, to remind Members of the House that the Clark Government, in its brief nine months in office, took that spousal allowance and put it into the law of this country so that if the older spouse dies, the younger spouse still gets the allowance. That was an achievement on behalf of women, indeed on behalf of all Canadians. It was an action which was promised, and it was an action which was taken.

I see you rising, Mr. Speaker, so may I just conclude by asking Members opposite to look at what their Ministers have done with planned parenthood. There are two female persons in the Cabinet, only two out of some 30-odd. Look at what your own Ministers do; be critical of what your Ministers do. If you truly believe in equality, we have a long way to go and no Member of this Chamber should be proud of the progress we have made to this point. We should not be proud, we should be ashamed.

[Translation]

Mr. Tardif: Could the Hon. Member tell this House whether he is aware of the amount paid to the National Action Committee, and if not, whether he feels that $191,000 is something considered marginal?

Mr. Hawkes: If the Government did listen to the Council, that money will be of benefit to women, but in this case the Government did not listen to the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women. That was so much money wasted.

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to ask a question from the Hon. Member who just resumed his seat. In his statement, he suggested the Hon. Minister was making pretty nice speeches but that the Government never took any action either on them or on representations made by various committees that have been meeting these last few years. Is the Hon. Member aware that in the Department of Employment and Immigration, there are programs that have been introduced in recent years? I will list a few that are known as——the Women's Employment Counselling Centre, the Outreach Programs, wage incentives to the private sector for non-traditional job training, institutional training incentives, and Affirmative Action Programs in the Public Service.

[English]

[Translation]

It is the responsibility of the Canadian Government to look after on-the-job training, or post-university training. In his speech, the Hon. Member has apparently suggested that the Canadian Government should call on community colleges and universities in order to dictate to the provinces what kind of courses they should give women so they could later on be accepted in the work force and find employment. He also referred in his speech to the new Constitution adopted last year, right here in Canada, as enacted by this House and Parliament. Is the Hon. Member not satisfied with the training programs we put forward? Is he suggesting we should amend the Canadian Constitution in order that we might then dictate to the provinces what courses should be given in universities and colleges?

• (1600)

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I think it is about time the Liberal Government began to respect the Constitution of Canada. That would be a big improvement. That is the first thing.

Second, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member. I can tell him he has been doing an excellent job of reading the propaganda of the Department of Employment and Immigration. However, I recommend that he read the proceedings of the Task Force on Employment Opportunities for the '80s. Officials of the Department of Employment and Immigration and other Departments testified at the hearings. The task force travelled the country, met the people and made over 200 recommendations on what should be done. Most of them have not been implemented. It carefully drew out the difference in jurisdictions, federal and provincial.

Members of the Government recite a litany of federal problems, but I sit here and say tokenism, tokenism, tokenism. Small amounts of money are made available to very few people in programs designed to get the maximum media exposure and the maximum public relations coverage but do nothing about the problems.

One of the programs mentioned by Liberals was Outreach. As the task force travelled the country—four Liberals, two Conservatives and one NDP—it saw that this was an excellent program but, Mr. Speaker, a year and a half later it is smaller, less well funded and is not being used. That is because the Government was not getting the credit for it. It was a private sector program operated by private agencies with Government help. But the Government could not brag about the program because civil servants were not involved.

We find that the low cost, effective programs are being cut out and replaced by higher profile, public relation gimmicks that do not help the people find jobs.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member a question about the jurisdictional responsibilities raised by the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr). Under the National Training Act that was introduced last year, the federal Government has authority to inaugurate these very vital retraining programs that we are talking about. Has the Hon. Member seen any sign of that being done in any part of the country he has visited in recent weeks or months?

Mr. Hawkes: No, I have not. I participated in drawing up the legislative framework as I was a Member of the Committee. It was a reasonable framework and could be helpful.

Earlier today, the Minister responsible for the status of women tried to leave the House with the impression that no one in the Provinces has any concern for women. There are women's bureaus and Ministers responsible for women's issues in most Provinces, not just in Quebec.

It speaks to the difficulty in the country when a Minister of the Crown tries to mislead the House. There is then more difficulty working co-operatively with the provincial institutions, to try to solve the problems.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member outlined a catalogue of problems with regard to the non-equality of women in the marketplace. I understand that he did not finish his speech so he did not have time to outline solutions to the problems.

I have only a limited scope of observation of women's issues as I did not participate in that Committee, but I see what has been going on in my own Province. Since the change from and NDP to a Conservative Government, I note that many of the affirmative-action programs for women and native people that were in place, are being chopped, apparently as part of the "open for business" theme. Would the Hon. Member be prepared to tell the House how he and his Party propose to get men and women back on an equal footing in the marketplace? Are they going to propose new Affirmative Action Programs? Are they going to tell business that they must pay all female employees the same as male employees for equal work?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I think there are three female Cabinet Ministers in the Government of Saskatchewan now. I do not think that the previous Government had so many.

In terms of an ultimate solution, that was available to Members of the House in December 1979 when there was a Clark Government and a Clark Cabinet. That was a group that believed that women were equal and it was acting on that assumption. This was borne out by the appointment of women to the posts of Secretary of State for External Affairs and High Commissioner to Great Britain, both high public profile positions. It was a true commitment to the principle of equality. You lead by example, Mr. Speaker: you lead by doing. I was proud to serve in a Government that made so much progress in such a short period of time, and I look forward to doing it again.

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to a reduction in Outreach Programs. I should like to ask him if he is aware how many Outreach Programs were in place when this Government came into office and how many are in place now under this Government. Is he aware of the figures?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it sounds as if the Minister were aware. It would be a nice surprise if she was aware of something in that Department.

In return, I would ask the Minister if there are as many today as there were a year ago when the all-Party committee said that there had to be a lot more. Today there are fewer than there were at the time we made the report.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for question and answers has expired.

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to join my colleagues on this side of the House in stating the very positive record of this Government since 1980 on questions relating to women in Canada. I believe my colleague spoke earlier of hypocrisy. I do not intend to be as hard as that on the Opposition, and I would rather call their attitude one of ignorance.

If we look at the record, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Government must base its actions on a set of basic laws such as the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms in our Constitution. In fact, the Charter of Rights, with its equality clause providing for the right to have affirmative action programs and recognizing the principle of equality, was adopted by the Parliament of Canada at the initiative of a Liberal Government. Mr. Speaker, we must remember that no Conservative Governments ever suggested we enshrine a charter of rights in the Canadian Constitution. We must remember that Conservative Governments across the country objected to the Charter and obliged us to include a notwithstanding clause which is now being used to abuse the rights of female workers in Quebec. Finally, let us not forget that, thanks to a Liberal Government, the basic rights of women in Canada are now enshrined in the Canadian Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, I also believe the Government broke new ground a number of years ago by appointing a Minister responsible for the Status of Women. In the Conservative Governments in Canada today, there are no ministers responsible for the status of women, a position that exists only in the Péquiste Government in Quebec. Granted, some departments have a director of the status of women but as far as having a ministerial spokesman for women in Conservative or NDP cabinets across the country, I am sorry to say that the provincial record is pretty negative.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention a series of measures that have been taken. In only three years, we now have a Cabinet that includes two women, we have a woman as Speaker of the House, on the Government side, and ten women as Liberal Members, compared to three Conservatives and three New Democratic Party Members. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we have to apologize for our record.

It was also a Federal Liberal Government that formed a special committee to examine the question of violence perpetrated on women in Canada. Following the committee's impressive report, that same Government provided funds through the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and I must say that I am pleased to be able to take advantage of this program, which will provide a transition house for women in my riding, that is, the Maison l'Escale for the women of Montreal-Mercier.

I would also like to mention that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has prepared special courses for officers who may be called in to intervene in the case of violence in the family. I think that excellent work has been done by our colleagues within the committee, but a number of measures must be taken by the provinces, because social services fall under provincial jurisdiction. I am still waiting to see all these provincial programs that will address the problems of women in Canada.

Last year, Mr. Speaker, we had a number of consultations on pensions. In fact, I think that all studies on the issue have clearly demonstrated that in this area, women are not being treated equally. I think it is a controversial issue which is difficult to raise and even more so during a recession, but here again I hope that the provincial authorities will see the light and realize that women in Canada must have decent living conditions when they reach retirement age.

Since my colleague from Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) raised the question of vocational training, Mr. Speaker, I must point out that the new legislation does enable us to offer courses. However, we must not lose sight of provincial jurisdictions and section 93 of the Constitution which provides that education is under provincial responsibility. We cannot offer courses unless they are authorized by the province. I know what I am talking about because I am from Quebec where I was member and president of a school board for six years. God knows that my school board did organize many vocational training courses, and since the new act is more flexible, we will be able to offer courses which will enable women to apply for jobs in the years 2000 in the fields of computers, automation and other sciences of the future.

Another thing to the credit of our Government, Mr. Speaker, is the part-time work committee chaired by Mrs. Wallace. I am looking forward to the findings of that committee, Mr. Speaker, because I think that the Canadian women who want to continue to raise their children will have a means or a mechanism to combine work and child rearing without being deprived of the benefits derived from work when time has come to retire.

Mr. Speaker, the Constitution is also the launching pad of several affirmative action programs now in force in various Departments. The Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has taken a leading role in that field, and I hope that the provinces and the private sector will benefit from the experience of federal Deparments. Still, I would remind my colleagues opposite that the initiative was again taken by the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, I come now to a delicate question for women in Canada—family allowances. We are aware that the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), who is a candidate for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative Party, has already mentioned the possibility of establishing a selective program. I would remind Hon. Members that the family allowances program is a universal program for all Canadian women for as long as married women fail to achieve equal status within the family. Once again, Mr. Speaker, I must point out that it is because this comes under provincial jurisdiction that married women are still considered dependents legally.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to deal with current issues such as pornography on television which was raised because one station decided to broadcast programs which Canadian feminist groups consider pornographic. While this issue has become very emotional, I must say that, without violating the Charter of rights, which provides freedom of speech, we shall be able to develop in co-operation with Canadian producers a code of ethics without bringing us back to the Dark Ages which prevailed in Quebec during the 40s and 50s, will enable producers to show programs which respect women. For the enlightment of Hon. Members who have much to learn about women, I would like to give a short definition of pornography.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, pornography is not a question of nudity but simply of women being treated degradingly and humiliatingly in a relationship of dominator to dominated, while eroticism involves equal adult partners in no humiliating circumstances. I believe that it is important in the present debate that we understand exactly what we are getting into. Who applies our laws? Who applies the present Criminal Code? Who interprets the definition of pornography? It is the provincial governments, male attorneys, male judges and male policemen. Mr. Speaker, I believe that if there had been equal representation of both sexes in our legislative assemblies in Canada, we would long ago have passed laws which would quite simply have prevented such a situation from developing.

I shall deal with another current issue, in my capacity of member of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has raised the issue of solliciting on Vancouver streets. I recognize that it is difficult to solve this problem without tampering with the freedom of movement of individuals and individual liberties. But what the mayor of Vancouver and the Hon. Member for Calgary West are asking us to do to help solve this problem is pass a law to amend the Criminal Code and empower the law enforcement authorities to arrest, imprison and condemn prostitutes, thereby committing an even more serious crime because they are the victims of the system Mr. Speaker. Moreover, the mayor of Vancouver has very naively told us: "To make an arrest, we simply must have undercover agents, and of course, they are policemen. You can imagine that the customer is very seldom arrested since he is always a policeman."

On the other hand, my colleague for Burnaby, who has very avant-garde ideas, simply suggests that we legalize prostitution at large and adopt a laissez-faire attitude. The government would be nothing less than responsible for brothels. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that such a solution is quite unrealistic or shows a profound ignorance, because, as I understand, this approach has been used in France, and we are all aware of the problems now facing French women who are beaten and mistreated, and the problem of procurers and of women being victimized by the system has not yet been eliminated.

My suggestion to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs is quite simply to amend the Criminal Code and put an end to prostitution, which is essentially a degrading way to sell an individual, by simply providing for a criminal trial and summary conviction for the customer. My colleagues from the Opposition who support private enterprise know that it is a matter of offer and demand. I believe that if there were no demand, there would be no offer, there would be no more poor women on the streets, there would no longer by any prostitutes on the sidewalks of Vancouver and women would no longer be harassed on the sidewalk if the customers were arrested. We could then have a situation where undercover police officers impersonating prostitutes would arrest customers. For hundreds of years, Mr. Speaker, legislators have only sought ways and means to eliminate prostitution from public places and rid the world of this degrading trade which is being plyed most everywhere behind drawn curtains ... of course I am not referring to the curtains in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker.

I apologize for this digression. There is also this major step which this Liberal government took during the Christmas holiday to curb sexual harassment within the Civil Service, setting a procedure whereby an official found guilty of abusing his authority could be forced to resign.

[English]

I would also like to discuss the matter of Indian women because I worked on the subcommittee for two weeks last summer. I heard over 100 hours of testimony from Indian and Inuit women throughout the country. I was surprised that my colleagues from the Opposition, both Members of the Conservative Party and Members of the NDP, were there to vote against the report. The report recommended that we amend Section 12(1)(b) and restore the rights of women who have been deprived of those rights for the last 100 years. Those Members were there and they voted against that. Why? Because they were afraid of the Indian men who would vote against them.

• (1620)

When we talk about rights, we do not talk about the electorate and votes, we talk about fundamental rights and the right to be equal.

I am surprised the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) did not outline the problem of women in prison in her motion. When she was in Cabinet and making decisions, why were the programs not available for the women in the Kingston federal penitentiary? Why were these programs to give people the opportunity for rehabilitation and retraining given by a federal Liberal Government?

Miss MacDonald: Where are they now? Come back and see how it is working.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Why is it that provincial Conservative Governments are not signing agreements in order that women may stay in their own Provinces and thus receive the subsidy being granted by the federal Government? We have been waiting for months for Provinces like British Columbia to sign these agreements so that women can move from Kingston to British Columbia and be close to their families.

I am proud of the record of our balance sheet. We now have a report which was voted for by the Liberals. The Conservatives and NDP were against the amendment of Section 12(1)(b). We have adopted Bill C-82 regarding widows of veterans. We have Bill C-127. It is not our best record because it is an amendment of Bill C-53 in which child pornography was removed by the Opposition. I do not yet know what the real reason was behind that. But if we are going to clear the record, I want this to be on the record. As far as the equality clause in the Charter of Rights and the Positive Action Program is concerned, I want the women of this country to remember that this law was introduced by a Liberal Government, and I am proud to be a Member of this Government.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Hon. Member. The first is with regard to a question I posed in the House, both to the Minister of Indians Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), which I did on two occasions. I asked whether or not the Government would bring in an immediate amendment to the Indian Act, which would be supported on this side of the House. Both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development refused. What did the Hon. Member do in that case when the request to make that change all in one day was turned down?

Second, since the Hon. Member has said that the Government of the day was responsible for Clause 28 in the Charter, does she not remember that that Clause was not in the original Charter of Rights? It was proposed first by the New Democratic Party, supported by this Party. It was then questioned at the time of the First Ministers' meeting in October, 1981. Clause 28 came back to the House and the Prime Minister was asked whether or not the override power pertained to it. He did not know the answer. On November 2, 1981 the Prime Minister was asked that question. Responding to the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) on November 6, 1981, the Prime Minister said, "I have conferred with my officials and we have decided that this Clause is subject to the override power." It was the Prime Minister of Canada who took away the right to equality that had already been given to women in this country. It took an amendment from this side of the House, moved by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead and seconded by myself, to reinsert it in the Constituton of Canada. Is the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) denying that is what took place?

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the Indian women and the amendment to Section 12(1)(b), I would like to submit respectfully to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands that it is not only a matter of amending Section 12(1)(b), it is a matter of giving rights to women and children. It is not just making an amendment and removing that provision. Over 20 Orders in Council have been passed for several bands in the country who have requested that amendment. It is already in force.

As far as removing Section 12(1)(b) is concerned, every band in this country has been advised what can be done. The Hon. Member was signing the document when we requested that from the bands. It can be done. The Hon. Member is willing to have a paper signed by all Members of her Party as well as Members of the NDP so that not only will we remove Section 12(1)(b) from the law but that we grant the rights. Of course, it would be done with the money and the additional funding needed to make sure that these rights can be exercised on the reserves. I will support that, and I am sure the Whip of our Party will support that.

As far as the equality clause is concerned, I would just like to remind Hon. Members that if the Bill were changed over the time, very often it was changed as a result of negotiations with the Provinces. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that regardless of whether or not one article was there one day or the other, I remember sending telegrams to Mr. Blakeney asking him to give rights to the women of this country.

Miss MacDonald: The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is the one who made the decision.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: To my great regret we have to live today with a notwithstanding clause, and that clause is there because of the Provinces. It will be there for a long while. If the Hon. Member wants to convince somebody that we have acquired rights, I will not enter into debate on whether that was done by the Government or by some amendment. I will just say it is there. Now we need a withstanding clause. We can go one step forward and instead of debating the merit of whom did it, let me say that first the Charter of Rights was there, which was introduced by our Government, and that the Hon. Member was doing her job when she introduced an amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I have three questions to direct to the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier. First of all, is she for or against the pornographic and violent movie "Videodrome", in which the government has invested quite a large amount of money? Second, is she for or against what First Choice is doing with Playboy's program? Third, following the many meetings she has had with me and other Hon. Members, she must be perfectly aware that pornography is one of the major reasons for the somewhat large number of teenage prostitutes; I am told that there are some 5,000 of them—that is an estimated figure—on Montreal streets alone; is she in favour of doing something to stop the current trend? As proposed by this side of the House, the idea would be to put an end to the situation which has developped since the Westendorp and Hutt decisions.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: I have not seen the "Videodrome" movie, Mr. Speaker. My position concerning pornography is well-known, and I suggest to the Hon. Member that if the right definition of pornography had been applied by our law enforcement authorities, something he knows quite well as a lawyer, we would not be faced withe the current crisis. If it is now an offence under the Criminal Code, he knows full well that the Attorney General can file complaints and that legal proceedings can be started. As it happens, the people with a rather accommodating conscience who so far have had the last word in defining pornography will not get away with it. That is why, Mr. Speaker, we intend to take action with respect to First Choice. As for the "Playboy" films, I have not seen them because I do not travel in the United States. I live in Canada and I must say that I was one of the first women to side with the feminist groups and state quite simply that they are unacceptable and that we will not play that dirty trick on our daughters and on Canadian women.

As for underaged prostitutes, I can tell Hon. Members that we are still waiting for the Provincial Governments to take action because within the purview of Bill C-61, they continue to negotiate most shamefully. They could sign agreements with the Federal Government to enable us to implement Bill C-61 respecting young offenders specifically to solve the problem caused by juvenile delinquents under age 18. That, Mr. Speaker, is another suggestion I made to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I think that a criminal offence by a client, man or woman, seeking to corrupt a child sexually should be jailed for at least five years.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to the motion of my colleague—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Are there any other Hon. Members who wish to ask questions?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—EQUALITY FOR WOMEN

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands):

That this House condemns the Government for the apathy that it has shown toward issues affecting Canadian women and for its failure to promote equality for women, and its inaction with respect to pension reform for women, and its tacit approval of sexual stereotyping and abusive material in the media, as demonstrated by the Government's unwillingness to prevent pornographic films from being shown on pay television, and its lack of commitment to its own affirmative action programme within the public service, and calls upon the Government to immediately establish a standing committee of Parliament empowered to deal with issues that have a particular impact upon women and to review the progress, or lack thereof, made by the Government with respect to such issues.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I think I will start over again. I am pleased to speak to the motion introduced by my colleague from Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald). Since you did not read the motion in French a moment ago, perhaps you will allow me to do so rapidly:

Que la Chambre blâme le gouvernement d'avoir fait preuve d'apathie à l'égard des questions qui affectent les Canadiennes, de ne pas avoir assuré la promotion de l'égalité des femmes, de n'avoir rien fait au sujet de la réforme des pensions pour les femmes, d'approuver tacitement les stéréotypes sexuels et les abus auxquels se livrent les médias, comme le prouve le fait qu'il ne veuille pas empêcher la télédiffusion de films pornographiques à la télévision à péage, de ne pas donner suite à son propre programme d'action positive à l'intérieur de la Fonction publique, et qu'elle exhorte le gouvernement à créer sur-le-champ un comité permanent du Parlement qui aurait le pouvoir d'examiner les questions qui ont des répercussions particulières sur les femmes, ainsi que les progrès réalisés ou non par le gouvernement en la matière.

[English]

I would simply say how much I appreciate the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, with respect to the important question of legal inequalities which she mentioned this morning. She also mentioned the deep rooted apathy to the issue which she indicated was particularly prevalent in the ranks of the Government. I think she is absolutely correct. She mentioned the original constitutional proposals and how the Government was dragged, kicking and screaming, into doing something about the matter that we are talking about today. The Indian Act was discussed, and I also agree with what she said about the Unemployment Insurance Act.

She spoke of the economic inequality of women in our country. I can only agree with everything she said about that concern. It is absolutely devastating to realize that female heads of households earn about two-fifths of the income of male heads of households.

She also spoke about the 350,000 older women who are living below the poverty line. She talked of the role of the Government in terms of its own appointments. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) pointed out that the Treasury Board literally fought tooth and nail against giving the female general service workers equal pay for equal work. Of course, it was the courts, not the Government of Canada, that effected that necessary change. The point was also made that in the last year the Government of Canada has appointed two women judges out of 47 appointments. This reflects the old saying, "Judge by what I say, not by what I do".

My role today is to speak on pornography and sexual stereotyping mentioned in the motion. I would specifically like to speak to the Government's indicated attitude with respect to pornography on Pay TV and other media. There are a few Canadians who still believe that pornography is a victimless product. Pornography is defined here as a visual representation of a sexual behaviour that includes a degrading portrayal of a human being. Does it result in increased crimes against women and children? I think that the evidence now is overwhelming that it does. Time is short, so I will give just a couple of reasons for saying that.

One police superintendant in Detroit was asked a number of years ago about the connection between pornography and sex murders in his city. He said, "There has not been a sex murder in the history of our department", that is the City of Detroit Police department, "in which the killer was not an avid reader of lewd magazines."

The question of wife battering was raised today. Let me quote Irene Diamond from Purdue University who cited a number of police reports indicating that wife batterers are frequently devotees of pornography. She quotes Dr. James Bannon of the Detroit Police Force as saying:

—often we find that the man is trying to enact a scene in some pornographic pictures.

Dr. Diana Russell of Mills College, California, has recently conducted research in this area. She surveyed 929 women living in the San Francisco area and asked them if they had, "ever been upset by anyone trying to get you to do what they had seen in pornographic pictures, movies or books." There were 89 of these women whom she surveyed, or 10 per cent, who indicated that they had been upset at least once when they were asked to describe experiences that concerned them the most. The list of replies included 15 sexual assaults. She concluded, on the premise that the sample was representative of the area, that:

—10 per cent of the women interviewed felt they had been personally victimized by pornography.

Unfortunately, we have not had the same amount of research done in Canada up to now, but I submit that the more recent research indicates a similar connection in Canada. Some studies which were conducted by Dr. Neil Malamuth of the University of Manitoba have indicated, for example, that repeatedly exposing adult males to violent pornography has resulted in self-generated rape fantasies. His conclusion is that there is a causal connection between pornography and crimes against women and children.

I think it is no accident that we have seen a 20 per cent increase in the number of sexual offences across Canada between 1976 and 1980, rising from 10,000 offences to 12,000 offences. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that this increase in Canada appears to track the increase of sexual violence in soft and hard core pornography magazines during the same period. Some will say that it is a coincidence. I say that it is not.

Finally, I would cite Dr. Susan Penfield who announced last fall that in about 50 father-daughter incest cases that she has treated, there was a wealth of pornography in the adults' home. She concluded that, indeed, there was a connection between pornography and incest in these cases. I put this to someone whom I might call a pro-pornography acquaintance of mine some time ago, and his reply was: "Well, you would find pornography in any fifty homes". I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if we would.

• (1640)

The second issue I would like to deal with is the question of the Government of Canada putting taxpayer money in to what by any definition is a hard-core pornography movie, namely "Videodrome", which is now playing across Canada. I asked the President of the Canadian Coalition Against Media Pornography, Maude Barlow—and I might add that her coalition now appears to be represented in 19 cities and seems to have enormous and rising support from people across the country—what was her opinion of the film, "Videodrome"? I would like to quote part of the letter she wrote about it recently. I quote:

I watched nude women shackled, being whipped by men in leather masks; I saw the heroine burn her own breast with a lighted cigarette to get herself in the mood; and I watched the audience, watch and moan, as the hero making love to the newly burned heroine, rammed hat pins through her ear lobes, licking off the blood, all to heighten—

—the experience. She called it, and I quote:

—a brutal little movie, with little plot and dreadful acting, and it is part of a growing trend to treat women as willing victims to male masochism in the mass media.

So we have the incredible situation where the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) is pretending to be against what First Choice is doing with Playboy movies, and at the same time we have the Government investing taxpayers' money to produce garbage films like "Videodrome."

Last week, the Minister of Communications announced a new policy in which he explicitly barred the CRTC from dealing with "any restriction on freedom of expression." So the Minister of Communications, while seemingly against what First Choice is doing with the Playboy program, last week brought in a new policy to prevent the Government from telling CRTC to bar this type of thing in the case of cable pay television.

I go back to what the Coalition Against Media Pornography is saying, and I am told that these four recommendations that they have, none of which the Government has accepted, have recently been accepted by the Advisory Council for the Status of Women and was adopted by 60 national women's groups across Canada.

First, the National Coalition is calling for legislation which would in effect bar, and I quote:

—all media images that equate sex and violence. The Criminal Code definition of obscenity would have to be changed from an emphasis on morality and sexual explicitness to one dealing with the repression inherent in violent pornography;—

Second, the Government should:

2. Establish guidelines for the C.R.T.C. and the Canadian Film Development Corporation who are at present in the business of licensing a pornography market in Canada, and have those guidelines apply to federally funded films and pay television. The C.R.T.C. guidelines on sex-role stereotyping are, I believe, excellent and would serve. As well, the Broadcast Act which must also be applied to pay television, must be changed to include the protection of women and children.

Third, the National Coalition Against Media Pornography asks that the Governments of Canada:

3. Implement local by-laws to limit access to pornography by children. While this will not erase the problem, at least it will say to the next generation that this generation cares about it, and it is not okay when they go to buy candy at their local store to flip through magazines showing the bondage and rape of women, who are of course, "loving it."

The fourth recommendation of the Coalition is:

4. And finally, and permanently, education. We must confront pornography, talk about it, protest it, boycott stores carrying it, fight about it in our homes, include courses dealing with it in our schools and understand it. For to continue to turn a blind eye to pornography,—

I add parenthetically "as this Government is doing":

—is to never confront what we need to know. What we need to know about pornography is painful, but until we see that truth, we will continue to live a lie.

Those are the recommendations of the Coalition Against Media Pornography. I understand that that coalition has the support of something like three million Canadians. Churches have supported them, as well as women's organizations and other organizations right across Canada.

My time is running out, but I want to repeat some of the things that have been said by the National Association of Women and the Law which held its biennial conference in Victoria recently on February 23 to 25, which made the following recommendations.

Mrs. Erola: We funded that.

Mr. Kilgour: First, that Canada's pay television licensees should be bound by the sex-role stereotyping guidelines recommended last September by the CRTC task force. You might be aware, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian Association of Broadcasters strongly supports these guidelines but no pay TV licensee is a member of that organization. This Party has already indicated through its cultural spokesman, the Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley), that it supports this recommendation, and we supported it at the time of the controversy over the licensing by the CRTC of pornography on pay TV.

The second recommendation of the National Association of Women and the Law was, and I quote:

(2) That the Regulations under the Broadcasting Act which prohibit the broadcasting of "any abusive comment or pictorial representation of any race, religion or creed" be amended to include ABUSIVE MATERIAL ON THE BASIS OF SEX (i.e. abusive material against women) and that these Regulations be made to apply to pay television licensees;—

Again I would state for the record that this Party has already urged that this be done through its cultural spokesman.

Third the National Women's group recommended, and I am quoting:

(3) That the hate propaganda section (281.2) of the Criminal Code prohibiting the incitement of hatred against identifiable races, ethnic and religious groups be amended to include hate propaganda against women.

How has the Government replied to all this? The Minister Responsible for the status of women (Mrs. Erola) interjected that they had funded the conference. Very good, but what is the Government going to do about the meat, as compared to the icing on the cake? What is going to be done about the substance of what is recommended as compared to funding, with the $89 billion budget this year? Instead, as I mentioned earlier, the Minister of Communication brought in a new policy last week, and I have already referred to how that policy explicitly bars the CRTC from doing anything about content. In his policy statement the Minister said that the issuing of a broadcasting license to a particular applicant or the amendment or renewal of a particular broadcast license, the specific content of programming, any restriction on freedom of expression are not to be the business, it would appear to me, of the Governor in Council. In other words, the Government is opting out of the problem created by the pay television Playboy broadcasts.

Why can the Government not do something in its new broadcasting policy to prevent the Canada Film Development Corporation from making anti-women, anti-humanity, anti-children films like "Videodrome"? They will come back and tell us that it is freedom of expression and they want total freedom of expression whether it involves the disembowelling of women or children or whatever. That is total freedom of expression. That is one of the altars at which this Government worships, unfortunately.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, my time is up. I am simply saying to the Government that it is easy to talk, it is easy to fund. It is harder to act, it is harder to do, when one knows that it is, I gather, one of the chief tenets of 1980s liberalism that the community has no rights, families have no rights, people with any sense of decency have no rights because the only people we listen to are those who call for total freedom of expression. If a producer calls for a movie such as "Videodrome" which requires disembowelling or sticking a pin in a woman's earlobe, that is okay because there is a minority who think that is just fine. I submit that times have changed. People are getting concerned about the causal connection between pornography and crimes against women and children. I tried to cite some evidence showing that it is becoming more and more obvious that there is a connection.

• (1650)

I simply ask the Government for once not to talk about its concern but to get up on its hind legs and do something about the problem that will make this country fit for all Canadians and finally break the connection between crime and sex and violence which has become so endemic to our culture at the moment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, answers, comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Tousignant: Mr. Speaker, whenever the Hon. Member refers to violence, pornography and so on, I must first assure him that I wholeheartedly share his concerns. He stated earlier that what was needed was something besides speeches, that is action. But to introduce a positive element in this debate, I would like to hear the Hon. Member make suggestions to this House. If his party were in government, what concrete steps would he suggest and advocate, because he said indeed that action was needed besides speeches? Concerning, for instance, the cable distribution of pornographic films and so forth, I would like to know what concrete steps his Government, were they in power—

An Hon. Member: Impossible!

Mr. Tousignant: —would take specifically to avoid this.

Mr. Kilgour: Briefly, Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for asking those questions. I am quite happy that he shares my concerns about pornography. It just happens that I introduced a bill, two weeks ago, that dealt with child and adult pornography. There is no secret about this. If he wants a copy, I can send him one. I can say very briefly that my bill is quite similar to that introduced by Senator Kennedy, from the State of Massachusetts, in the U.S. Senate, and I suggest without hesitation that Mr. Kennedy was no great conservative in the ethnological sense of the term. I think he now knows that pornography has become a problem so big that something must be done, especially with respect to child pornography. If he wants a copy, I will very gladly send him one.

Briefly, this illustrates three aspects of the subject. First, the film was clearly offensive to the vast majority of the people. Second, it has no scientific or serious purpose, and, third, for a citizen, this is something unacceptable; those are three arguments against adult and child pornography. Clearly there can be no right, as we now have in Canada, to involve a child under 18 in a sexual act, and it is my sincere hope that he can speak with the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), because action is needed now in that area.

Mr. Tousignant: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member and I want to say that I fully share his concern. I also wish to take a few moments to congratulate him on his French which has been excellent these last few months. He has made tremendous progress and his French is really very good now.

However, to get back to pornography, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether, considering Canada's geographical location with respect to the United States . . . Yes, I think we could easily oblige the CRTC to ban those programs if we really wanted to. But when we consider that fairly soon, our neighbours to the south will be broadcasting 100 or so television programs which we will be able to pick up here in Canada, what is Canada going to do about that?

Mr. Kilgour: Once again, I understand perfectly well that there is a problem with our neighbours to the south. However, not long ago I was told about a conference held in Great Britain some months ago with 25 countries participating. Among these countries, 23 or 24 were terribly concerned about pornography. Only the United States failed to show any serious appreciation of this problem. But after all, we cannot allow First Choice to broadcast Playboy films on rape, for instance. The Hon. Member probably saw the fragment we were showed two weeks ago on rape and similar subjects.

I realize there is a problem with the United States. However, we must not grant a licence. We must tell First Choice that they may not broadcast films dealing with violence against women.

Today I happened to have lunch with someone who had just arrived from India. We talked about this subject and he mentioned that if the Indian film industry, which is very large, shows anything that represents an attack against women, the Supreme Court will not allow it to be shown. So in India, there is respect for women, in fact for both sexes, and I wonder why Canada is incapable of taking the same attitude towards people of both sexes, just as Indian and many other countries have done.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I really would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona on his excellent French and the progress he has made in the course of the years, and I also want to congratulate his French teacher. That being said——having said that, I now want to say that this very important subject dealing with the status of women in this country, which we all know is not what it should be, is not being treated by this House with the seriousness it deserves. I say this because as I look across at the Official Opposition, I see only five Members sitting there while this motion which they brought before this House is being debated. We have ten on this side, and it is not our day. It is not our responsibility to have Members here. It is shocking that the galleries are empty except for a few people at one end. It is shocking that there is no one here from the press.

[English]

Is this levity the way in which we should be treating this situation today? Is this the seriousness with which the Opposition Parties treat their own motion? There are three Ministers here who take these issues very seriously, as do the majority of Members in this Party, even on an Opposition day.

If the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) is so concerned about pornography why, when this matter was before the Justice Committee last year and we were dealing with a Bill on child pornography so that children could not be exploited for pornographic purposes, did we not have the support of all Members of the Opposition? I know that the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona was in favour of changes at that time, and I congratulate him, but why were the other Members of the Opposition not supporting us at that time on that important piece of legislation?

• (1700)

Mr. Kilgour: I believe, Mr. Speaker, your colleague this morning ruled we should not make a comment about the number of Members here or not here, and I think that is the question. There are a lot of Hon. Members not present on this side, and a lot of Hon. Members not present on the other side. I do not think the Hon. Member can expect us to fill the galleries this afternoon. That is not our responsibility.

The trouble with the Bill which was proposed last summer, although it was a step forward by the Government, and its heart was in the right place—I admit that freely and openly—was that it was not as good as it should be, and I believe the Hon. Member will also recognize that fact. I looked at that Bill and I looked at the Bill of Senator Kennedy in the United States Senate, and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will go to the new Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and persuade him that Senator Kennedy's Bill is much better than the one the Parliamentary Secretary brought in last summer. I hope that the Government will do something about it quickly because child pornography is not a joke in this country. It is something, I submit, which should be a priority of Government. I believe we could pass it in the House in a day, if the Government brought in a Bill which fights child pornography. I am sure that the Hon. Members of this House would pass such a Bill very, very quickly. We in the Opposition cannot bring forward Bills, as the Parliamentary Secretary knows. It is something that this Government should do with all maximum speed.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will take my theme from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson), that the resolution deals with a range of issues which are of very critical concern to the well-being of this country, that is, the status of women and the ways in which we must define their opportunities for greater equality and a definition of their role in society. I would like to change, though, if I might, the focus of the day from that of the previous Hon. Member who dealt exclusively with questions of pornography, and speak about an issue which I believe is very much at the base of the issue of equality for women, and that is the question of employment.

There is no question but that the economics of women in this society is one which must be faced, and faced with a great deal of candid scrutiny, both in terms of where we have gone in the past and where we should go in the future. I would like to begin by refuting the assertion made in the resolution that this Government has not attempted to respond to specific questions. Certainly it is true we have not solved the problem but it is not true to say we have not cared. There has been a great deal of time and attention paid as to how we could address ourselves to the very long, traditional and conventional biases and discriminations which have existed in the system for generations, in fact, for centuries. I would feel that Hon. Members of the Opposition might be kind enough to accept and acknowledge that those underlying hard, obdurate elements of discrimination which have been around for so long, are not subject to a miraculous panacea which can be implemented in a matter of weeks or even in some cases years. It must be something which is worked at in a very diligent way.

I would like to address those issues, in part, because I believe many of the other areas mentioned in the resolution, such as pension reform, pornography and relations of families in society, are matters which are now receiving a high level of leadership from our present Minister responsible for the status of women. Perhaps no one in this House can speak better than I about the volatility and sensitivity of those issues, Mr. Speaker. But I would like to indicate that I feel the present Minister has accomplished a great and significant step forward in those areas and does provide in our Government a high degree of sensitivity to those issues in a way which I think is exemplary, and is providing all of us with a very profound and a very useful set of directions in which we must go.

However, I would like to point out my own continuing concern and interest in the issue of women's employment because in our own Department we have a special responsibility to provide some sense of leadership in this area. I would like to take the opportunity in the House to outline what I see the problems to be and to share the kinds of concerns I have, as well as to indicate to Hon. Members of this House the initiatives which we are taking and where we would welcome their support and involvement in trying to make those initiatives work.

To begin with, we must face the ageless problem which women have always faced, that of being in the job ghetto. For a long period of time women were basically confined in society to a role which did not even permit them to work in occupations which were considered to be the natural preserve of men. Fortunately, that is beginning to change. We have gone through a really remarkable and critical transformation, if you look at the history of this country. In the 1950s some 20 per cent of women in this country worked. That figure is now closer to 60 per cent. In fact, Mr. Speaker, what is even more dramatic is that in the rest of the decade of the 1980s, women will make up close to 70 per cent of the new workers coming into the new work force. They will represent almost two out of every three workers coming into the work force and, therefore, will represent the best potential we have in terms of new people with new skills, aptitudes, and a freshness of approach, who will help this country adapt to the very profound changes which are taking place in our industrial structure. In order for that to happen, Mr. Speaker, there must be ways in which women can break out of the conventional mould. It is still true and still very tragic that about 60 per cent of women working are working in fields which are classically considered to be the preserve of women, primarily in service and clerical occupations. There continue to be limits to a high degree of access to the non-traditional areas for women. I can point to the apprenticeship programs which are administered by our provincial Governments where they consider it to be a great achievement if 5 per cent of the enrolment in machinist courses, electrician courses or high technology courses are women. That is not the way they are going to break out of the ghetto trap they are in now.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, we are also facing, perhaps, a new shadow on the horizon which again will have a very, very dark impact upon the occupational role of women, that is, the changing of our industrial structure. My colleague, the Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), has commissioned a major task force which has reported on the technological change which we will be experiencing in this area. What is pointed out very clearly is the way in which women will be, perhaps, the group of society most profoundly affected by that change, because the occupations which will be altered and adjusted are those which are susceptible to the new microchip technology. That makes it all the more imperative and critical that we address the employment occupational role of women in our society. We must help them adjust to their new jobs, their new training and their new employment opportunities.

I believe that that particular exercise is one which we tried to address almost three years ago at the beginning of this new Government. We recognized that we would have to start a number of initiatives on a number of fronts in order to address that problem. The first area where we attempted to meet the issue was on the basic support which we could give to women in terms of their entry into the work force and their adjustment to new jobs. It was quite clear that many of the systems of guidance and counselling which were available to women were not sufficient because in many respects the ability of younger women in the school system to gain that kind of information was simply non-existent. These women were in fact preparing themselves for occupations which were not going to be there in the future, which simply would no longer exist. Furthermore, women coming into the work force after their families had grown up also did not have the proper skills, the orientation or know-how to go and get that first job or take advantage of the opportunities which might exist.

One of the critical issues we tried to face was to improve substantially and to upgrade the counselling, guidance and employment information system available to Government. Let me just point out two major initiatives we have taken. I think this does reflect in part on the Opposition resolution. We decided that one of the most important things to do was to develop a network of specialized counselling centres for women which would be able to concentrate and specialize in the problems women have in the work force, and make sure they were available on a much wider basis. When I took over this ministry, Mr. Speaker, the number of Outreach Programs available to women, instituted by the previous Government, was 14. I am proud to say that there are now 32. We have virtually doubled the number of Outreach projects, and we will continue to increase those numbers as time goes on. So when Hon. Members talk about sensitivity, I ask, where were they in 1979 when they had the opportunity to do the very same thing but did not do it? There was no increase in Outreach Programs to help women.

Similarly, we recognize that in our own network of employment centres we had to establish a system which would provide specialized centres and a source of information which could radiate out through the other employment counselling centres across Canada. So what we have done is to establish a series of nine specialized women's counselling units in major centres across Canada. Their job and responsibility is to work with other employment centres, the school system and provincial Governments to provide that specialized counselling, training and information, and make it available to women.

I have a sheaf of correspondence which I received from a number of women who have gone through those programs, benefited from them and have now been able to gain a new or different kind of employment as a result of the services offered. I simply point out that those pilot projects can provide the prototype that we would like to apply across the board to ensure that we are able to take the initiative. I think that indicates that indeed we are responsive and sensitive to the employment concerns of women by putting that network in place.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, going beyond counselling and guidance, you must provide the link in the chain which will ensure that women have adequate and proper skills to take the jobs that will be there. I cannot over-emphasize the critical importance of training as a key element enabling women to cope with the present ghettoization they face, but also to adjust to the new world of work they will be forced to face as this decade proceeds. The ability to acquire new skills and move into new occupational areas is really at the centre of our employment strategy, and one I think which provides the greatest opportunity for women to make a major leap forward in obtaining new occupational opportunities.

So the question is, what have we attempted to do under this particular category of initiatives? Again, the most important step was the passing of a new National Training Act. That Act had the support of Opposition Members, and I am still appreciative of that response. It has also been well received by all the Provinces, which have signed agreements under that Act and are now working jointly with us in its implementation. There are a number of initiatives in that program with special relevance to women. First is the establishment of the COPS program, which will really be a future navigational system to detect and determine the occupational changes in the labour force. We have been flying blind for so long in this country, not knowing what jobs will be there and the skills required to meet them. So we now have established a pooled information system, using all the modern techniques of forecasting, to enable us to begin to forecast and look ahead to the kind of jobs that will be there. Once we have that information in place we will be able to transmit it back into the school system so that young men and women can begin preparing themselves for the jobs that will be there. The school program will then anticipate, not merely react, and then share that information with employers, trade unions and provincial Governments so that we have an early warning system so that young people will not be caught in an occupational trap. They will be able to anticipate and therefore prepare themselves.

A second element of that program is the establishment of the skills growth fund, because we recognize that in order to meet the demands of new occupations we had to modernize the training system in Canada. We cannot continue training people in old occupations, obsolescent jobs; we have to prepare them for the new world of work. We have to be able to work with community colleges, non-profit organizations and business groups to begin new training centres. In particular, we have openly invited women's groups and non-profit groups to start specialized training centres for women in those new occupational requirements. I have on my desk now a series of very useful proposals from the YWCA to establish new training programs for women in the new high-skill, high-tech trades. We have been able to open up right across this country, for example in the community colleges in the riding of the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald), new areas of computer and machine technology which will increase the number of places available to men and women. But then we have gone beyond that and established reserve places for women in those occupations so that they will not have to compete, that they will in effect have an advantage to make sure that their previous disadvantages could be overcome.

The third step we have taken, Mr. Speaker, is to provide for special subsidies under the National Training Act, again to ensure that the employer of a woman in job training would receive up to a 75 per cent subsidy to help break down the barrier so that women who have not had the opportunity to be trained as a heavy duty mechanic, millwright or pipe fitter will get on the job training. We have been able to put close to 5,000 women in those training positions over the past two years. This will substantially change the scale of non-traditional training of women in those areas. Under the National Training Act we have tried to reorganize and reform the programs available for pre-trade and occupational training. Again we have something like 2,000 or 3,000 specialized places, 85 per cent of which are occupied by women who can receive the three or four-week sort of initial skills preparation so that they are in a position to chose which kind of new technical skills they would like to occupy.

What we are trying to do, Mr. Speaker, is to use this Act as the instrument by which we can shift the direction, focus and orientation of training, and open up new opportunities for women. We will do this partly by allowing them to be self-sufficient and establish their own training programs; partly by reserving places for them; and partly by providing fiscal incentives for employers, community colleges and others to break down the existing training barriers.

The third area I would like to address is that of job creation. Again, we recognize that it is important to provide for programs which would enable women to get first-time experience in the job market. Perhaps one of the most difficult and agonizing problems faced by women coming into the labour market is that first-time job, getting the track record to be able to demonstrate competence in certain fields. It is there that we have tried to refocus our job creation programs. We have a highly specialized Canada Community Services Program which provides direct employment grants to a large variety of service agencies, partly to help the agencies directed toward women, such as abuse centres and day-care centres, but also to provide an avenue in which women can get that first-time employment. Close to 85 per cent of people employed in that program are women, and through the program we provided for first-time job experience in areas that are crucial.

• (1720)

As Hon. Members know, in the application forms for the Canada Community Development Project sponsors are required to list an affirmative action plan as part of their submission. The validity of the submission is judged upon the demonstrated ability or willingness of the sponsors to hire women. In the past, that particular facet of the program had been ignored or not properly utilized. We are now trying to reorient our job-creation programs in that direction.

Third, the special program for employment of the disadvantaged is working very well through providing direct employment incentives and subsidies. These will pay up to 85 per cent of the employment costs, to employers of women who have special problems. Immigrant women, first-time women workers or women who have been out of the work force for a long period of time are all eligible. We are trying to use that employment disadvantaged program as a vehicle to break down employment barriers and open up opportunities that did not exist previously.

We have put in place a number of initiatives and support, Mr. Speaker. Beyond that, we recognize that there are special categories of women who must cope with problems beyond the normal frustrations and anxieties of women. A good example is native women. Perhaps no group in our society is more deeply discriminated against than they are. We work very closely with the Canadian Native Women's Council and we support them in the development of a number of employment co-ordinators for native women across Canada. They are now working with employers, with native organizations and community organizations to try to find a special employment role for native women.

We also took notice of the fact that domestic workers—women brought in to provide a service function which Canadians in large part are not prepared to provide—are being discriminated against in a number of areas. We gave them the option of choosing to settle in Canada as part of the benefit they would receive because they are prepared to do a job that many Canadians do not want to do. The preliminary assessments of that program made by the organization representing domestic workers, shows that in large part it has been successful.

I want to point out that the Government is trying to initiate a number of proposals to provide employment opportunities for women and to break down barriers. In order to be totally successful we need the support of all Members of Parliament. It is important that they work with us in their constituencies to help make these programs effective. If we can work in partnership with the other major players in the economy, we will be able to take a long step forward to discount or eliminate many of the hard or unyielding areas of discrimination that have existed up to now. I am confident that we can break this barrier down if we find ways of working in a partnership.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) took part in the debate. I want to express to him now, as I have before, the concern that the Government does not seem to be aware of the magnitude of the problem that confronts us, and not just today but that will confront us in the next number of years. As the Minister knows, employment amongst women increased 41 per cent last year. The Minister responsible for the status of women said that that was not very substantial, but I consider it to be substantial.

I am concerned as well that every study, every document, every analysis shows that one million additional women may become unemployed in the next few years as a result of the technological revolution that is sweeping over us. The Minister made some very encouraging comments with regard to training younger people. The question that has not been addressed is what happens to these millions of women who are presently employed and are going to see their jobs vanish in the next few years. These women hold the jobs that are considered most vulnerable to the high technology revolution.

These things are not going to be resolved by increasing the number of Outreach Programs or putting in nine new counsellors, or whatever number the Minister mentioned. That is fine, but it is not the major issue. The question is, what is being done about this major problem? It is being addressed by other countries in different ways. The problem is not just the number of people who will be unemployed; it is also that women, more than men, are reluctant to come to grips with the high technology revolution. That has been proven in studies in France and Japan where public information and educational programs have been carried out in a television series so that people can be educated while their jobs still exist.

Is this sort of thing being considered by the Government? It is of such magnitude that it goes much beyond anything the Minister said this afternoon. I am not arguing with what he said, I am only asking him to address a much larger question.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. Member asked for elaboration. I was trying to cover a number of topics in my response and did not take time to address the issue she raised, which, unquestionably, is of great magnitude.

I point out that not only the numbers of women coming into the labour force, but the adjustment of many women in their present occupations, represents one of the major challenges the country faces. The question is, how do we respond to this challenge?

I believe we have to start with a new training system and a way of transmitting new skills. If we do not have that framework in place, all the other information and education programs would be of no avail. If a woman is prepared to change and wants to know how to go about it, we would not be in a position to help her if those programs were not in place. That is why I put such strong emphasis on the modernization of our training systems, such as helping community colleges to buy new machinery or facilities in order to open up new hi-tech training opportunities.

I can give an example in the Province of New Brunswick. About 25 per cent of the training offered was in high-skill trades. In one year, with the skills growth fund, that has been increased to 38 per cent. This dramatic leap is owing to the strategic allocation of funds and to help given that college to buy the new simulator it needed.

I should like to tell one small anecdote, Mr. Speaker. I went to Holland College in Prince Edward Island which has a training program for deck officers in the offshore industry. We are still required to import people from offshore because not enough Canadians have been trained. By sheer coincidence I found a young woman from my riding in Winnipeg taking the course. A year ago, the college could not train people in the high-skill navigational jobs because it did not have a navigational simulator which cost $900,000. It had been trying to get one for ten years. We made the grant from the skills growth fund, and two months ago the college bought the simulator. It is now in a position to train 60 or 70 additional deck officers, and they will be able to find instant employment in the offshore industries on the East Coast. Women are being trained because that is part of the agreement.

I recognize that once the framework is in place, we must take the next step. We recognize that the essential ingredient is to provide ways for people to train while they are on the job. A special task force has been established in my Department, involving business and labour, to look at the whole area of skill development leave. That is so that workers presently employed would be able to take a month or three months or six months off to be retrained for a new occupation.

There is one other area that I would like the Hon. Member to consider, although it is not yet policy. We are looking very seriously at the way in which the work-sharing program that has been very successful across Canada—we have signed 11,000 agreements with private sector firms—might be utilized to enable workers on the job to be retrained in new skills, new technology and new machines on which they will have to work, so that they can still maintain their income while on the job and gain a new skill. This would require some very serious co-operation from business and labour, who are both quite nervous about it because it will break many of the old rules of unions, of hiring and of doing business. It will take some basic restructuring of our industrial fabric in order to respond to the problem.

We cannot provide a major reform or change simply in a unilateral way. We have to bring people along with us. We are using that particular task force and the work done by the Minister of Labour to try to develop a consensus on a new form of paid educational leave in the country which will allow people to be trained on the job for the new skills they will require. That is another area in which we are taking a major step.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct three questions to the Minister, if I may. First, does he feel that the six and five program has borne more heavily upon men or women? Second, is the women's Affirmative Action Program of his own Department in the action stage or in the assessment stage? Third, could he tell us how the 1.5 million to two million unemployed Canadians break down in terms of sex; more women or more men?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes remaining I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the six and five program has had a very dramatic and positive impact upon the employment of women. The hundreds of millions of dollars we were able to realize from that program were reallocated into direct employment programs which have put many people back to work, including a lot of women.

On the issue of Affirmative Action, we decided very clearly that it was important as a way of demonstrating to society at large that the Public Service of Canada must incorporate and implement its own Affirmative Action Programs before it could ask them to do the same thing.

We are not moving into the action stage. We have completed the first two phases of that Affirmative Action Program. A full assessment of numbers has been done, the comparative figures in terms of the work force, across the board in the Department of the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal), in Treasury Board, my Department and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The program is now in the implementation stage. I believe the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) has a number of new proposals to expand substantially the program, but they are really within his responsibility. I do not want to interfere. I believe in that particular area we are supplying another initiative to show how we can bring down work barriers.

On the question concerning the division of the unemployed, it is not a simple division between men and women. I believe the group most seriously affected by the recession, the group about which we should be most preoccupied, is young women. They are the ones who are most dramatically affected by the lack of jobs at the present time. This is why Members of my caucus and myself have been working very diligently to try to provide a new youth employment strategy. I hope we will have an opportunity to present it to the House in very short order.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that I have just returned from British Columbia where there were a number of very successful and moving meetings of women's groups over the weekend in celebration of International Women's Day. At this time I would like to pay tribute—and I am sure that I speak on behalf of all Members of the House—to the many active women's groups across Canada that are working within their own membership and forming coalitions with each other to work for change in this country. I am sure most of us in the House have profited by the information and the lobbying they do so effectively.

In Vancouver the theme was particularly appropriate. The theme they were using this year was: "Hard times won't stop us". If ever there was a need for that theme and that kind of objective, it is during these very hard times which are affecting women in particular.

We are proud of the women of Canada and their accomplishments. We are not so proud of the accomplishments of the Government or of the House. Over a century ago working women first protested cruel working conditions, miserable pay and the hard hours to which they were condemned. Their sisters 75 years ago started the demand for bread and roses—bread which was for economic security and roses for a better quality of life. I think we would agree that we still have a long way to go in reaching true equality in both the bread and roses sense.

This past year there were a few symbolic gains. The first women judge was appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada; only one out of seven of course. We have 16 women out of approximately 282 Members of Parliament; certainly that is far from what we all want to achieve. Also we can be very proud of the role women played in insisting that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms must guarantee equality for both male and female persons, and for the skilful organization and lobbying and the persistence which twice brought women to Ottawa, with no funding, to help change the provisions of the Charter of Rights in their favour.

The annual lobby of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women is another very positive and effective tradition which is developing. We will be hearing from women across Canada very soon. Close to 200 organizations will lobby on behalf of equity for women. However, when we look at the facts, in particular when Canadian women look at the facts, we agree that the status of women in Canada in 1983 is a national disgrace.

The figures indicate that two out of three elderly women live in poverty and that nearly 50 per cent of all single women are poor. This includes younger women as well as women in their middle years and pensioners. This is increasing every month as more women are left on their own when they are separated, widowed and divorced. Statistics show that most poor families are headed by women. These are mothers who have been left to raise children on their own. Their numbers are increasing every month. Included also is the very serious increase in the number of teenage pregnancies and young teenage mothers who are keeping their children and will probably be on welfare most of their lives.

We protested strongly the Government restraint Bills because they imposed a very unfair burden on women, in particular the six and five restraints on the very low salaries paid most women in the Government service, on family Allowances and, of course, on pensioners, most of whom are women with very minimum standards of living.

Women in the work force also have suffered exceedingly this past year. In a year when we should be improving their situation and when the Speech from the Throne promised to improve their situation for women in Canada, the condition of women in the work force has worsened considerably.

More than ever before women are locked into low-paying job ghettoes in clerical sales and service fields, fields where they will soon be phased out by technological change, as other speakers have documented. Women have little chance for promotion. In fact, the Government's record of promotion within the federal Public Service is deplorable. There are fewer women in middle management and senior positions now than there were a few years ago. If they are not already unemployed, many women are very insecure in their jobs, expecting to be the next to go, or they are being reduced to part-time jobs. Again this is a situation which the Government is almost promoting—the whole concept of part-time work. We know that it is usually women who are forced into part-time jobs with part-time pay, with no opportunity to get ahead and, of course, usually in non-unionized situations.

• (1740)

As times get tougher men move into the few well paid jobs which have been female dominated, such as those in the field of teaching and nursing, as was documented recently by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women. There are few promotions for women into executive and management jobs, certainly not in the federal Public Service. The only gains women are making seem to be in some of the professions. I think one of the most positive developments is the increasing number of very bright, competent young women entering the field of law. They are entering law because they are determined to right the wrongs and to work for further equality for women.

I spoke yesterday to a business and professional women's group in Vancouver. I was pleased to hear that many women who have held junior jobs in businesses, banks, and so on, are now moving into their own small businesses. The failure rate for businesswomen has been much lower than for businessmen, which is another positive sign for women. But it is thanks to the women themselves, not to Government action.

Last week I also attended the annual conference of the National Association of Women and the Law which was held in Victoria. For two days they discussed at great length the whole situation of the economy as it affects women, as well as technological change which is phasing women out of traditional areas of work. Group after group and expert after expert who spoke to this conference insisted that the only way to protect women against this kind of inequality in the work place is to have mandatory affirmative action. That is why, upon my return to the House, I questioned the Minister responsible for the status of women on the Government's position on mandatory affirmative action. This was very important to the many groups, the ones who are the most knowledgeable about this aspect who attended that conference. I was extremely disappointed the Minister ignored the question of mandatory affirmative action and contract compliance—and instead gave us a lot of platitudes about what this Government is doing. This Government is doing nothing in a positive way respecting the whole question of affirmative action.

We must keep insisting on the legal right of women to equal pay for work of equal value. This must start at the federal Government level, at the provincial Government level and at the local Government level. I would urge women across this country to get after their Governments and insist that the standards be set in the Public Service.

Women across Canada have been studying the impact of microtechnology and automation which threatens their economic future even more than does the present recession and, heaven knows, that is serious enough. It is essential for the Government to get involved in this area much more directly. I think it is important to encourage some kind of charter of economic rights to impress upon employers that they must protect women in the work place from the hazards of VDTs, and so on. Employers must plan with employees for future layoffs and future technological changes. Employers must get involved in retraining and they must give women equal opportunities to move into the new technologies, management and supervisory positions.

The Government has held conferences on this subject, but we have to have more than conferences. We need real leadership. The best protection women have is to belong to a union and to have a union fighting for these rights, making sure that women have equal rights in the work force. Unfortunately, many of the job areas we are talking about are not unionized, which makes things difficult. Usually these are the areas in which women are first displaced.

There must be a greater opportunity for women to train in non-traditional fields of work, such as the trades. The Minister for Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) spoke of the Government's record in this field. I know he is aware of the need in this area. I know he is trying, and I will give him credit for that. However, I cannot understand, when I listen to him talking about all the wonderful things he is doing, why it is that week after week in my constituency women tell me that they cannot get into apprentice training courses or pre-apprentice training, nor can they get child care. Women who live outside of urban centres have absolutely no hope of getting into these fields. At the moment it is far from practical for women to get into these non-traditional fields of work such as the trades.

While pressing for equality in the work force, we must also make sure that social services are not eroded, particularly those needed by women, whatever their age. This House is well aware of the increase in the number of battered wives and the need for transition houses in the community. Not enough is being done about that. The Government itself needs to be called to task, and it needs to take a look at the recommendations that we all agreed to last spring.

Women with young children, especially those on their own and working, need affordable child care. They need family support centres of different kinds. This is another area in which we have a long way to go. We are going backwards instead of forwards in the whole area of child care which is so important to women and children.

The essential work of women in the home must be recognized. This is the year when we should commit ourselves to this recognition as a major goal. I will not go over the history of statements by the Minister responsible for the status of women, but many women who stay at home feel put down. It is very important to realize that women, despite great financial difficulty, often remain at home because they feel it is very important to be with their children when they are young. These women should have some recognition for doing this. I think it is important that the Government begin to think about some form of financial recognition. Perhaps Family Allowances should be increased even more and some of the amount go toward a benefits payment into the Canada Pension Plan.

As more and more people, particularly women, are forced into part-time work we must review the whole concept of a guaranteed income. This is long overdue. We know there will not be enough jobs to go around in the future. People will be under-employed in the traditional sense, if not completely unemployed. There are many things which they can still be doing. But we will have to look at the whole concept of a guaranteed income and how we can begin phasing in this kind of program, perhaps targeting first at some of the groups with the greatest need. Surely in the future computers and robots that are taking over our industries can be put to work to increase our Gross National Product to improve society rather than dehumanizing the work place. There are many community jobs in human services that are needed, particularly as our population is aging rapidly. There are many creative endeavours in which people can be involved for which they have skills and talents. These must be expanded in the future as our traditional jobs are phased out. Women who have been home makers have particular skills for human relations kinds of jobs and for management and community service. But they need pay just like the rest of us do.

On this subject I would like to refer the findings of the NDP Task Force on Older Women. This was a non-partisan task force. We held hearings in every Province last fall. We received 150 briefs and questionnaires from over 1,200 women from all across Canada, including the North. These were from women in their middle years as well as in the older age group. We found over and over again that this age group, the forgotten age group, women in their middle years and over, are facing double, if not triple, discrimination. They often are hidden from society, particularly if they live alone. Many often live in one room apartments and are alienated from society.

I expected that the needs of women on old age pensions would be the greatest. However, I found that although inadequate pensions for women is a major concern in every Province, there are many other issues that need our attention. Women who are single, divorced or widowed find their middle years the most difficult. Women who have spent their earlier years raising children must be given priority for retraining and re-entry into the work force so that they can become self-sufficient and independent. Mature women have much to offer employers and should be credited for their human relations and management skills, as well as for their rich community experience.

Older women must not be content to work in job ghettos for low wages. They have a right to a decent pay and they must be given the opportunity to earn pension benefits for later years. Women must fight for equal rights on all fronts, particularly for the right to have liveable incomes in their later years.

In the time I have left I would like to review quickly the Government's record on equality for women. What we have seen is a lot of lip service paid by the Government and many studies, and we have listened to many platitudes. The situation is bad and getting worse. Women have been displaced from jobs and are facing unemployment now and in the future in deplorable numbers. They are being forced to take part-time work as an alternative. With respect to equal pay for work of equal value, even the Government itself has rolled back the pay increase decision it made, which was a very important precedent for clerks in the Public Service. It has denied the equal pay for work of equal value principle.

The Government's six and five restraint on wages, Family Allowances and pensions is another attack on women by the Government.

Affirmative Action does not even appear as one of the requirements written into contracts for job creation programs. The Cabinet has refused to instigate mandatory affirmative action and contract compliance.

We have heard much about high-tech training today. Women cannot get into many of these training programs. They are being denied the opportunity to acquire new skills and further experience.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) denies that poverty even exists. He does not recognize how many women are experiencing devastating poverty. Pension reform has again been put off in favour of a task force review because the Government refuses to act, particularly on behalf of women.

Special income support programs for single women in middle and later years are definitely needed. Even if pensions are reformed, nothing will be done for older women.

With respect to support for families, the Government will not even deal with the report on children that was brought to the House two years ago. Nothing is being done about making major tax reforms in favour of women and families.

While some action has been taken regarding violence against women as a result of the battered wives report, nothing really substantial has been done. There must be federal leadership for transition houses and other tangible programs for women. My colleagues have already talked about pornography as another form of violence.

We have implored the Government, and I would implore the Minister responsible for the status of women, to establish a standing committee of the House which would be responsible for reviewing and working toward an improved status for women in Canada. This committee is essential because there is no other group that will take on that ombudsman role. These issues are not being dealt with in other Government Departments. We need a committee to study women's issues similar to the committee responsible for Indian Affairs.

I would urge the Minister to take action and tell us where she stands on this issue because she has not committed herself. I suspect that this is why the Government is dragging its feet. There are many positive steps that can be taken.

In conclusion, I suggest that the most positive step is what women are doing for themselves and what they will continue to do. Women power is a great force in this country, and it is becoming stronger. Women have tremendous talents for organizing and working for change and lobbying the Government. I believe this is the way to solutions and they should continue to do this in order to make us all accountable and make these issues a major condition for their votes in the next election.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most important issues that this House has dealt with. Again, I can only lament the fact that because this motion was brought forward by the Opposition, there would have been so few Members present from the Opposition.

I wish to point out that our Minister responsible for the status of women has made some very important commitments to improving the lot of women. Her leadership has been very important in giving it fire and direction. It is devoid of empty rhetoric. I think that all of us who are here were touched by the very concrete measures that were announced and elaborated upon today by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) which attempt to give women in the workplace enhanced opportunities and more prevalent positions in order to participate in the mainstream of Canadian jobs, as intimated by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell). These measures are critical to accomplish those goals.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East cited a litany of issues. She described many issues with which we are all concerned. However, she failed to give credit where credit is due. I will use just one example, and it is one with which she is very concerned. It is the question of wife battering. Is she aware that the recommendations calling for increased funding for shelters were acted upon in our June, 1982 budget through giving CMHC increased power to create shelters? Is she aware of the increased awareness program that has been instituted with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police? Sensitizing programs and training has been undertaken in that area. Is she aware that, as a result of the requested research on the battering phenomenon, the family violence clearing house was established by the Department of Health and Welfare and is currently gathering information? Is she aware of the fact that one of the other recommendations, an information program, has been undertaken by the Department of Health and Welfare? Family Allowance cheques have contained pamphlets dealing with wife battering. Is she aware of the fact that the problems dealing with jurisdiction are now being dealt with? Commitments have been undertaken by the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the Hon. Member intend to allow the Hon. Member for Vancouver East to reply?

Mr. Peterson: Yes, I would be delighted to give her the opportunity to reply. These are just some of the questions I have for her.

I would also ask her why she did not mention the significant progress we have made in changing the rape laws to sexual assault. It was the most important change in the Criminal Code in 50 years, to give women the opportunity to come forward when they have been subjected to violent assault. I would ask her why her Party, when she brought up the question of pornography, did nothing about our efforts to deal with child pornography and abuse of young people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order.

Mrs. Mitchell: I thought I would not get a chance to respond. With respect to the Hon. Member's first point about the number of Members in the House today, I would suggest that if we had a committee responsible for the status of women we could be talking about these issues every day. Not only could we be talking about them but also acting on them in a non-partisan and collaborative fashion. I think we should hear why the Government has refused to act on that proposal.

I have been holding a watching brief on the report on battered wives and have visited many transition houses and talked to many groups across the country.

• (1800)

I commend the Government, and all of us really, because I think that that report was a very good example of how we can work together in the interests of women in Canada. The CMHC provision, I might point out to the Hon. Member in case he is not aware of it, because that is one of the ones that I pressed for very hard in committee, covers second stage housing, I believe. There still is a great need for funding for transition houses.

In regard to the RCMP, that is a good move too. My understanding is that it is mostly the younger recruits who are getting that training, but it is a start, I agree. I wish we had as much action from the Government on the whole question which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), has raised of changing the Broadcasting Act. That is another piece of legislation where changes are needed.

Certainly there has been some progress made in the areas he mentioned, but I refer back to the 12 points I raised where an awful lot more action could be taken.

An. Hon. Member: It is six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is six o'clock.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—TRANSFER OF HEAVY FREIGHT OPERATIONS FROM PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND TO NEW BRUNSWICK. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER INVESTIGATE TRANSFER

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, January 19, and again on Friday, February 4, I posed questions to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) concerning the consolidation of Canadian National Carload Centres throughout the Atlantic region, especially in Prince Edward Island. CN has decided to fold the Prince Edward Island Carload Centre into its operations at Moncton as part of an over-all rationalization of services throughout the Atlantic region. All three Maritime Provinces, as well as border communities in Quebec, are being affected. But the Island will be especially hurt because our Province will be rendered the only one in all of Canada without a fully operational Carload Centre.

On the Island, the number of employees is to be reduced from 11 to five through layoffs, transfers or early retirements. More than jobs, however, are at stake. Instead of being able to deal directly and personally with knowledgeable CN personnel right on the spot, in the Province, local shippers will be forced to rely on whatever assistance they can obtain from a computer network based in Moncton. If a shipper requires information or advice, or if a shipment gets lost or delayed, the shipper will just have to hope that someone at the end of the computer terminal might have a vague idea of what the matter is all about. No longer will the customer be able to count on the help of a familiar face at the Carload Centre in Charlottetown because, for all practical purposes, the doors will be locked.

The CN elite, in their plush boardrooms in Montreal, argue that Prince Edward Island will not be hurt by the gutting of the Province's Carload Centre. The official line is that the change is merely administrative and that the Island will continue to be serviced the same way as before. But we Islanders know better. We have long experience with having to plug into some elaborate and esoteric computer system in centres remote from our shores for services that other Canadians receive right on the spot in their own communities.

No one is arguing, and I am certainly not today, that CN should not keep its operations lean and modern and efficient. Nor is anyone proposing that the corporation should keep jobs on the Island just for the sake of creating employment. What is being said is this: We need the CN Carload Centre because it provides an essential service to our Province. Being an island, by definition, P.E.I. depends on its transportation links with the outside world more than any other single Province in our Confederation, with the possible exception of Newfoundland, which is also an island.

By stripping the Province of its railroad bit by bit, step by step, inexorably, CN is undermining a vital part of our economic base upon which both the public and private sectors depend to create jobs and other economic opportunities. The emasculation of the Carload Centre is yet another tightening of the noose around the neck of the Island's railway. If the present trend is allowed to continue unchecked, nothing worth saving will be left. The irony of history is that all of this is happening in the very Province that entered Confederation in the first place for the sake of its railway.

I urge the Minister of Transport to put a halt to the dismantling by Canadian National of P.E.I.'s railway system. He should instruct, in fact order, Canadian National to present to the Government a five-year plan to modernize the entire system. If certain essential parts of the Island's railway cannot be operated without a subsidy, the Government should provide assistance up to some reasonable maximum amount. Meanwhile, an immediate freeze should be imposed on all plans by CN to withdraw jobs and services on the Island, including those of the Carload Centre.

In conclusion, allow me to serve notice that I intend to press the Minister in the coming weeks for such a rational approach to the railway on P.E.I. Few issues were more important to the Province back in 1873 when we joined Confederation. Because rail is more energy-efficient than any other mode of transport, the issue remains as relevant now as it was over 100 years ago. That is why for us on P.E.I. the demise of the Carload Centre is not just a symbolic matter. It is a question of preserving an essential instrument of commerce, without which our very future as a viable partner in the Canadian economic union is jeopardized.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat ironic to hear the Hon. Member talk about subsidies and various forms of assistance to those enterprises, whether they be Crown corporations or public corporations, which may need financial assistance from the Government of Canada. I am hopeful that when the federal Government introduces its budget in the not too distant future, if there is an increase in the deficit of the Government of Canada, the Hon. Member will support it and not take the official position of his Party, which would reduce the deficit at all costs.

As the Hon. Member knows, CN's customers conduct their day-to-day communications with the railway by toll-free telephone to the Carload Centre from where they receive information on traffic movement, equipment orders, availability, and train and yard operations. Computers at the Carload Centre process traffic data and customer invoices. Recent advances in computer systems and mini-computers have made it possible for a carload centre to serve a larger area without loss of service. CN therefore decided that several centres could be consolidated at a single location, reducing CN's costs without any decrease in service. That has to be underlined. Service will not be decreased as alluded to by the Hon. Member.

The computerization of carload centres has improved the reliability and accessibility of information to customers. It is, of course, and I share the sentiment which the Hon. Member stated, regrettable that jobs are being lost, although in this case a very small number are involved. It should be stressed, however, that those positions involving direct contact with customers—the sales representatives—and the assistant superintendent will remain, as at present, at Charlottetown.

I would also like to remind the Hon. Member that CN has a full range of employee-assistance programs designed to minimize the adverse effects of such changes. As usual, pre-retirement, retraining and other provisions are available to these employees.

HEALTH—CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION TASK FORCE—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CO-OPERATE. (B) FUNDING FOR HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, my participation in this adjournment debate relates to a question I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) several days ago, as to whether or not the federal Government would co-operate with the Canadian Medical Association in the conduct of the task force which is dealing with the allocation of health care resources. The Prime Minister responded negatively. That led to my request to have a little more discussion about the issue this evening. My supplementary question was whether the federal Government, and the Prime Minister, specifically, would be discussing the issue of health care funding with the Premiers at the First Ministers' Conference. Again the answer was, no. There was certainly a lack of clarity in the answer to the second half of my question.

The issue of health care is an important one to the Opposition, and I am sure it is important to Government backbenchers. But I believe it is most important, Mr. Speaker, to Canadians in all walks of life and in all parts of the country. One of the reasons for the development of the medicare system historically is that it would break down access barriers to good health care. With the Government sort of dithering around and cutting revenue to Provinces, we have a developing crisis in the country in the sense that Canadians are being denied access to health care because they must go on waiting lists. If I needed heart surgery of some kind, Mr. Speaker, and I had to wait six months to get it because there were no hospital beds or doctors available, the odds on me dying prior to treatment would go up with every passing day. That situation is occurring in Canada today.

The Minister recently wrote a letter, asking that it be printed in the Canadian Medical Journal. In her letter she acknowledged freely that the Canada health Act will be controversial. She indicated that most major initiatives are controversial. I say to the Members opposite, Mr. Speaker, that controversy seems to be the order of the day. If you look back over the last 15 years of federal Government activity, you will see an accelerated sense of controversy. I ask myself whether many problems in the human sphere are really solved through controversy. They are resolved, but are they really solved?

I asked myself if there is not another model available rather than controversy, whether we might be better advised to more often use co-operation. I look at the issue of health care and I see 24 million Canadians who are potential users of the health care system. I look at two levels of Government, provincial and federal, which are both involved in the funding, although constitutionally it is clear that the delivery of health care is a provincial responsibility, and I am reminded of all the meetings I have held since I took on this responsibility on behalf of the Conservative Party with professional groups, physiotherapists, nurses, medical doctors and union groups, all concerned about the health care system. After a series of meetings like that, Mr. Speaker, one has to be convinced that the problem will not be resolved unless people of goodwill and knowledge sit down, co-operating together in a problem-solving modality.

The present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has told us on more than one occasion that one of the groups she is consulting with is the Provinces. I put a question on the Order Paper asking for specifics of when and where that consultation took place. The answer I received back was very polite, but if you cut through the politeness it really said, "It's none of your darn business." I was elected by the people of the Calgary West riding, and I have assumed the responsibility on behalf of the Conservative Caucus of the Official Opposition to deal with health care matters in this country. I asked a simple question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, namely, which provincial Ministers did she meet with, and I received the answer that it is none of my business. The Canadian public apparently has no right to know when and where the Minister of National Health and Welfare is meeting with provincial officials.

• (1815)

I rose in the House and put to the Prime Minister that the Canadian Medical Association had put a task force in place to look at the allocation of health care resources because it felt the health care of Canadians was at risk. I asked if the Government and its officials would co-operate with that task force? The Prime Minister stood in the House and said no. I posed to the Prime Minister the issue of the lack of funding in the health care system, and asked whether he would consult with provincial Premiers on methods of providing more money for that system. The Prime Minister said, no. Whatever other anxiety there is among the 1.6 million unemployed, Mr. Speaker, there is an increasing incidence of stress-related illness at a time when our medical care sytem is in danger of falling apart because of a lack of funding and co-operation.

I simply say to the Government, quit confronting, be open, let us know what is going on, invite people to co-operate with you in problem solving, and the health care of Canadians will be better because of it.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my recollection of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) answer to the Hon.

Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) was that he would take notice of the question because the Minister was not in the House that day.

The Canadian Medical Association has kept the federal and provincial Governments informed of the establishment of this task force. At the invitation of the CMA, a representative of the Department of National Health and Welfare attended two meetings of the task force. A representative of the Province of Nova Scotia also attended. They did not participate in the deliberations, but they were there as observers.

The terms of reference of the task force, have been made public. They are very broadly worded, but they emphasize concerns about the introduction of new procedures and technologies in the health care system, and the demographic changes such as the increased aging population. It is understood that the task force is still in the process of getting organized and oriented. It will be holding a press conference of its own in about two or three weeks, at which time it will presumably clarify how it will proceed and what it hopes to achieve.

There have been a number of important studies on the health care system in the recent past; the 1980 report by Mr. Justice Emmett Hall entitled "Canada's National Provincial Health Program for the 1980s", and also the 1981 report of the Parliamentary Task Force on Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, entitled "Fiscal Federalism in Canada". I trust that the members of the task force will want to review carefully these useful reports, as well as a number of other research studies that have been carried out.

The task force will undoubtedly request data and information from the federal and provincial Governments to assist in its work. The Department of National Health and Welfare is prepared to respond to such requests to the extent that information is available. The Department will watch with interest the progress of the task force, and I hope it will make a useful contribution to the health care system.

ENERGY—PRICE OF NATURAL GAS EXPORTED TO UNITED STATES. (B) LINKAGE TO PRICE OF OIL

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise some issues in relation to the question before us which will tend to focus the question on those issues we really should be discussing in the House at this time. The Minister's response would seem to indicate that the Government really does not have a sense of direction as far as a pricing policy for natural gas at the present time. As a result I think we have created enormous difficulties for ourselves.

The matter goes beyond that, Mr. Speaker. I think that at this time there are some very serious questions in this country about the national energy policy generally. Given the present situation of declining oil prices in the world market and the glut of natural gas, the Government obviously based its original national energy policy on false assumptions. Then in 1982 we had the national energy policy update which tried to address some of the problems the Government failed to anticipate. Given the kinds of answers the Minister is giving in the House now, and in the beginning of 1983, as well as the answers given by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), we are more adrift than when the update was made. This lack of direction on the energy and financial questions demonstrates the fact that we have no effective national energy policy. What is required, given the changing circumstances and the false assumptions on which the first policy was developed, is an indication of policy parameters or guidelines for the vital decisions to be made on energy.

What is also required on the matter of pricing natural gas in Canada, as well as the export price, is that we also deal with Government revenues. The collapse of Government revenues in the energy sector must be causing severe headaches for the Minister of Finance. It is certainly causing headaches for the entire country. We are asked to deal with $89 billion in spending estimates, while at the same time we see a good portion of our revenues dissolving. Unfortunately, this does not give the House much confidence in the Government's energy policy, its gas-pricing policy or its economic policy. The Minister of Finance should give us an indication where we stand on the spending estimates and the revenues that were originally expected to come from the energy sector.

We need a national energy policy that relates to a much broader national industrial strategy and a much broader area of economic activity. In its national energy policy the Government seems to have identified our energy resources as a single target area for revenue, economic growth, and expansion. That was the basic mistake in the original national energy policy in 1980, the Government has attempted to hold on to that policy in the 1982 update. There are still serious questions today which have not been resolved. The Government is reacting to a crisis, without benchmarks. Decisions are being made in this House about which people are very seriously concerned. For example, as a result of the pricing policy for domestic natural gas the Government dropped $300 million in revenue. If we want to get the economy rolling again, and if the Government is going to live up to its commitment for the pricing of oil and gas, those lost revenues must be made up.

An even broader question is whether we are to continue to export natural gas to the United States. If we do, we better consider retaining the pricing arrangements previously made in that market.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will address the issue that was raised on January 26. The National Energy Board now estimates that we have marketable gas reserves of over 76 trillion cubit feet in conventional producing areas, and the country's remaining ultimate marketable gas potential is estimated at over three times currently established reserves. Therefore, as a Government, we are taking steps to provide Canadians with strong incentives to become gas consumers.

For example, the federal Government has funded more than 380 projects under the Distribution System Expansion Program, which helps distributors finance expansion of their pipeline networks. In the Natural Gas Laterals Program the federal Government is financing $500 million of pipeline expansion in the Province of Quebec. To complement this program we also introduced the $100 million Gas Marketing Assistance Program to minimize gas contracting risks for Quebec distributors.

• (1825)

To further encourage the use of natural gas and other alternative energy sources, the Canada Oil Substitution Program has provided close to 360,000 Canadian energy consumers with funds to convert off-oil. Of this number, more than 130,000 have chosen natural gas. This program helps the producer. It helps Canada achieve self-sufficiency. It also provides a stimulus to the economy.

The Government is keeping its commitment to maintain the wholesale price of gas in eastern Canada at about two-thirds of the price of oil. Just last month a major step was taken in honouring its pricing promise when the Government announced an 18-cent reduction in the natural gas and gas liquids tax. This reduction will keep gas prices in new eastern Canadian markets at approximately 65 per cent of crude oil. The tax reduction will also mean that although gas producers have benefited from the recent Alberta border price increase with an additional $235 million in increased cash flow, eastern consumers will feel only minimal effects of those rising costs and lower consumer prices will be realized in British Columbia and Alberta.

No one can argue that the federal Government has not put into place crucial measures conducive to the optimal utilization of our rich natural gas resources.

I can appreciate that there has been much concern over the Government's natural gas export policy. We certainly acknowledge that an increase in exports can have a very positive effect on our economy. New export volumes could provide close to $10 billion in revenue to the Canadian gas industry this decade, and they could generate close to $5 billion in investment in the construction of new facilities in the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.27 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 3, 1983, consideration in Committee of Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2)—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Corbin in the Chair.

On Clause 3—Fair Market Value

On Clause 16—Professional Business

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. When the Chair rose to report progress on Bill C-139 last Thursday, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South moved an amendment, and upon the advice of Hon. Members the Chair took the amendment under advisement. The Chair is now in a position this morning to rule on the acceptability of that amendment, and the Chair finds that it is well within the scope of the Clause which the Hon. Member for Mississauga South seeks to amend.

Therefore, I shall now read the amendment for the consideration of the Committee:

That Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2), be amended in Clause 3 by adding, immediately after line 33 at page 6, the following new sub-section:

"4.(1) For the purpose of sub-section 1, the cost of the property, that is, the work in progress at the end of the taxation year of a business, means those costs which are directly related to a specific work in progress of the professional but excludes (a) any cost associated with the time incurred by the professional or any other non-employed professional associated with him and (b) any costs associated with the general overhead of carrying on the business which is a profession."

Debate is upon the amendment.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I believe that upon the introduction of the amendment by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South I did have the opportunity of alerting the Chair that the amendment was unacceptable. It introduces an unnecessary complexity to what all Hon. Members would agree is a complex matter, and the amendment is not necessary because we believe that the provisions of the Act in the statement of the former Minister makes the objective behind the motion unnecessary. Finally, and probably more important, we believe that the amendment could restrict taxpayer flexibility. Therefore we are puzzled or somewhat perplexed by the move of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

For those reasons, Mr. Chairman, the Government cannot accept the amendment and would urge all Hon. Members, for the sake of keeping the Act less complex by not introducing unnecessary items, with the taxpayers' benefit in mind, that they not accept the amendment. We are prepared to illustrate the intentions of the Government in this matter forthwith.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the Minister has indicated to this Committee today the attitude of this Government with respect to complexity and fairness, and its attitude towards what it says and what it does. The Minister, on December 18, 1981, cited in this House rules with respect to determining the cost of work in progress by a professional, and we have codified that in the amendment presented to this House. It is clear to us at this point that what the Minister of Finance says, the Minister of Finance does not mean. What this Government says, this Government does not mean.

Sir, it is on that basis that the total perfidy of this Government is demonstrated daily to the people of Canada. We, however, are not going to spend a great deal of time today on Clause 3 and Clause 16. We think in the interests of moving Bill C-139 ahead that we would like to vote on the amendment and vote on Clause 3 and Clause 16. We see no particular point in delaying the passage of an income tax Bill. We think, though, it is absolutely necessary that the House fully consider each Clause of the Bill. The House had an ample opportunity last Thursday to consider Clause 3 and Clause 16 and we would have liked to bring those Clauses to a vote then. Unfortunately, because of the delaying tactics of the Government, we were not able to do that.

Speaking to the amendment, sir, and to the main motion—because I am going to suggest that the amendment be put and then the main motion on Clause 3 and Clause 16—may I say, further to the perfidy of the Minister, that he claimed that a professional would have the advantage of the small business tax rate and allowances. He knows that in this very Bill small business was gutted and destroyed. He knows that he put a 12.5 per cent distribution tax on the earnings of small business so that when they are distributed to the owner of the small business he is subject to even more tax than the earnings of ordinary wage earners. Indeed, the Minister made it impossible for small business to operate behind a corporation, and we will be dealing with that later. But to suggest that professionals are going to be treated the same as small business is to say that professionals are going to be hurt and hampered the same as small business, and that there are no advantages in a small business.

Let us deal with Clause 16. We on this side suggested that the Minister at least include notaries in the exemptions in Clause 16. We have not seen an amendment from the Minister with respect to that. The Minister mentioned amendments to Section 125 of the Income Tax Act which deals with the incorporation of professional companies and a tax rate for those companies of 33 per cent. He knows that he cannot amend Section 125 of the Income Tax Act without a Ways and Means motion. However, He could amend Clause 16 without a Ways and Means motion because that would be a reduction of taxes. We have not seen that amendment from this Minister because, again, what this Government says is not what this Government does. It says one thing and it does the opposite.

Let us now put the questions on the amendment, and on Clause 3 and Clause 16 without further amendment.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

• (1115)

Amendment (Mr. Blenkarn) negatived: Yeas: 13; Nays: 25.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I propose that we agree to the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South and proceed to a vote on Clause 3.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the two Clauses were grouped; therefore, I suggest we vote on Clause 3 and Clause 16 at the same time.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 3 and Clause 16 carry?

Mr. Riis: On division.

Clauses 3 and 16 agreed to on division.

On Clause 4—Amounts receivable in respect of services, etc., rendered

Mr. Blenkarn: Dealing with Clause 4, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Cosgrove: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. At the beginning of these proceedings in Committee of the Whole deliberations on Bill C-139, I indicated that there were a number of technical amendments, most of which were relieving in nature. Before the Hon. Member for Mississauga South rises to speak on Clause 4 which is before us, no doubt he would want me to provide Hon. Members with the technical amendments to the Clause.

There are two such technical amendments. I know that it is usual procedure to introduce one and to have it debated. I would suggest again that in order to assist Hon. Members opposite, the two technical amendments to Clause 4 should be introduced at this time so that Hon. Members would have an opportunity to look at them. I would propose, with the concurrence of Hon. Members opposite, that these amendments be introduced at this time and be dealt with as we deal with Clause 4, with a vote at the end of our deliberations.

Mr. Blenkarn: Would the Minister introduce at this time the amendments to Clause 4? Might we suggest to him that the reasonable way to proceed with technical amendments is to circulate them to the Opposition Parties and to those in his own Party who are interested prior to the debate, so that there will not be any delay in the debate while Members are looking them over.

I make that suggestion to the Minister in an effort by this Party to move this Bill forward as quickly as we can, yet at the same time making sure that there is ample time for discussion.

Mr. Cosgrove: I offered that and I asked for the consent—

Mr. Blenkarn: You did not.

Mr. Cosgrove: —of all Members opposite to accept the technical amendments which we have, as read and moved. Those were my opening comments in Committee deliberation on this Bill. If the Hon. Member is now indicating that he will consent to that—

Mr. Blenkarn: No.

Mr. Cosgrove: He is not consenting. What can I do? He asked me to introduce them but will not give consent to having them read. Without knowing how Hon. Members opposite intend to treat of amendments as they are introduced, I do not know if it would be in the interest of expediting the Bill that I should indicate the intention without getting agreement that they be received as read into the record.

• (1120)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, to make the point clear to the Minister, the original position he presented was to table the technical amendments to the entire Bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: He wanted to introduce them and move them.

Mr. Riis: Yes, he wanted to introduce them and move them. We felt that a more appropriate step would be to circulate the technical amendments—and we have no qualms about introducing them quickly—so that we would be familiar with them after looking at them and studying them prior to dealing with that Clause. Then we could move them with haste. As the Hon. Member for Mississauga South stated, we are interested in getting this Bill through as quickly as possible.

Mr. Cosgrove: Then give us consent.

Mr. Riis: We are interested in getting to some of the more controversial clauses as quickly as possible. Rather than spend needless time in this kind of fruitless discussion, it seems to me that a way to facilitate it would be for the Minister to circulate his technical amendments to all Members present. This would enable us to study them so that the minute we come to that particular Clause we could move their introduction and deal with them very effectively.

In the spirit of co-operation and in the spirit of moving this legislation through as quickly as possible, would the Minister consent to circulating all technical amendments so that Hon. Members opposite and Members of his own back bench will have a chance to study them? Then we could deal with them, Clause by Clause, as we come to them in the deliberations.

Mr. Cosgrove: Obviously, Mr. Chairman, we are no further ahead than we were in my first offer to have the amendments accepted as moved. Therefore, I have no option but to move the two amendments to Clause 4, and I would like to move them in order. It is moved by myself and seconded by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance:

That subclause 4(8) of Bill C-139 be amended by striking out lines 19 to 22 on page 12 and substituting the following:

"terest in a prescribed debt obligation, an amount determined in prescribed manner shall be deemed to accrue to the taxpayer as interest on the obligation in each taxation year during which he held the interest in the obligation."

Second, it is moved by myself and seconded by the Parliamentary Secretary:

That subclause 4(12) of Bill C-139 be amended by striking out lines 37 and 38 on page 13 and substituting the following:

"(12) Subsection (4) is applicable in respect of amounts that became receivable after December 31, 1982 in respect of the period after that date."

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. So that the Committee may proceed in an orderly fashion, the Chair will put the first amendment moved by the Minister to the House.

Mr. Lambert: When we get to it.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: When we get to it. Therefore, the debate is now on Clause 4.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the Minister, may I suggest that we deal with some matters that can be cleaned up relatively quickly. From our side's point of view with respect to Clause 4, we are prepared to let pass Subclause 4(1).

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I apologize to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, but the Chair should read the amendment moved by the Hon. Minister, put it to the Committee at this time, so that debate can proceed in an orderly fashion. Is the Hon. Member for Edmonton West rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I find that the Minister's idea of procedure in Committee of the Whole varies a great deal from the practice of the House.

Mr. Cosgrove: No.

Mr. Lambert: All right, he knows better. May I suggest that we take Clause 4(1), 4(2) and 4(3), and if there is to be an amendment to Subclause (4), then the Minister propose his amendment. But to slide in three or four amendments and have the Minister of State for Finance put them is not acceptable to us until time for debate. Therefore, why put them? The Chair finds itself out of order.

• (1125)

With the greatest of respect, my suggestion, is a lot easier. I think the Minister of State for Finance could find another Minister to propose the amendments—I see he has one now—because the practice here is not for a Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary to propose amendments, but another Minister. Let us get that squared away, too.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, one Member from the Opposition rose and asked that I produce the material so Hon. Members could have it to look at in advance while debating the Clause. I offered it to Members to look at while debating Subclause (1), Subclause (2) and Subclause (3) before getting to Subclause (4) and (12). That is exactly what is asked for. Now another Hon. Member has risen and said "Don't do that."

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, the Minister is insisting on moving. I do not think he has the right to move the amendment since he is piloting the Bill. He has to hold the amendments until it is reached. My colleague from Mississauga South said distribute them. Distribution of amendments has been done here since time immemorial. No matter whether you are in a standing committee or in Committee of the Whole, you put out the amendments and, therefore, have a chance beforehand to look at them. The Minister shakes his head. I will bow to his superior wisdom of membership in this House of two or three years.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. First, I would like to thank Hon. Members for their comments. There would be two ways to proceed but I sense following Members' comments that it would be wise to proceed with debate on Clause 4. When the question is put on the individual Clauses or Subclauses, at that point we could properly put to the House the motions to amend and dispose of them at that time. Unless Hon. Members wish to go immediately to those Clauses, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Mississauga South on Clause 4.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I would like to expedite things here. From this Party's point of view, we are prepared to pass Clause 4(1), (2), (3), (4) and (5) without debate.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, am I to assume that includes Subclause (4) and amended, or is it Subclause (8) which is the first amendment?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, if the Minister would follow me, I said we would pass without debate Clause 4(1), (2), (3), (4) and (5).

Mr. Cosgrove: We are in agreement.

Mr. Blenkarn: His amendments deal with Clause 4(8) and Clause 4(12). If the Government is in agreement with that, would the Government also be prepared to group the balance of Clause 4 together with all of Clause 5, together with Clause 21(11) and Clause 54(3), in one debating period?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, could the Hon. Member give us the numbers again?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the balance of Clause 4, which would be Subclause (6) onward, all of Clause 5, Subclause (11) of Clause 22 and Subclause (3) of Clause 54. I say that because those particular Clauses deal with annuities and insurance. They also deal with the whole hideous concept of accrual of interest not yet paid and treating it as income in the hands of individuals and corporations. Be that as it may, the same principles essentially apply in those Clauses. I suggest that we proceed in that fashion.

• (1130)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, indeed there is logic in the proposal suggested by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. We believe that there is a relationship between the Clauses that he has touched upon.

There are two difficulties. The first one is with respect to the question of technical amendments. We have indicated that we have amendments to Clause 4 which I have already alerted Hon. Members to. In addition, we have amendments to Clause 5 and Clause 54. I submit that logically we should place those amendments before Hon. Members to assist them in debate.

Second, I would be interested in the Hon. Member's comments as to how we should finally dispose of the items. Is the Hon. Member proposing that when the House votes on Clause 4, the results of that vote on Clause 4 with the Subsections that have been accepted would also apply to Clauses 5, 21 and 54 as amended?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the latter question is yes. We would say that there would be one vote on the balance of Clause 4, all of Clause 5, Clause 21(11) and Clause 54(3). We would be prepared to accept, and treat as read and moved, the amendments to Clause 54, Clause 4(8) and Clause 4(12), although they are obviously subject to debate.

We suggest that the debate range through each of these specific provisions as we proceed, because they are all interrelated. The defeat of one Subclause would throw the whole matter out. We should deal with them all together because, if not, it would be a hideous package.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I certainly agree to proceed in that fashion. In an effort to move through this Bill as quickly as possible, am I correct that the Minister indicated that he has an amendment to Clause 54 that he wants to present as well which is of a technical nature?

Mr. Cosgrove: Clause 5 as well, Mr. Chairman. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South did not touch upon the amendment to Clause 5.

Mr. Riis: I am very encouraged by the way we seem to be able to begin grouping Clauses in an effort to move this through. I want to remind the Minister that we would be facilitated in our efforts to group the various Clauses and Subclauses if we had his list of proposed amendments. We would then have an idea of where those amendments are. I would ask the Minister, in an effort to expedite these proceedings, if he would circulate all of these so-called technical amendments that he will be introducing so we may peruse them.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, when I first rose in the House on deliberation of the Bill, I offered to do that for the very reasons that are apparent today. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South said no. He said that they would not agree to have them treated as moved. The Hon. Member has now offered to treat all of the amendments to Clause 4, Clause 5 and Clause 54(3) as moved. What difficulty do Hon. Members opposite have in treating all of the technical amendments in the same way? I can produce them.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I would indicate to the Minister that backbenchers spend a lot of time in committee. It is common practice in committee for the Government to circulate proposed amendments without moving them. Occasionally, an Opposition or Government backbencher suggest improvements to Government amendments that can be improved. Those improvements can actually be made before the amendment is moved. That facilitates the process. It facilitates the argument and the movement of a Bill through the House and committee.

Circulation of amendments is very different from moving them. Once an amendment is moved, it must be disposed of. When it is circulated, it can be reviewed and suggestions can be made. It can be changed before it is moved.

Surely that is the way to facilitate the procedure. It is common practice in every committee of the House. This is the first time I have ever seen a Minister being obstinate about circulating proposed amendments before they were moved. I do not understand why he is doing it and why he wants to delay the Bill.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, in order to assist the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, I would bring to his attention that officials have indicated to me that there are three additional Clauses that deal with life insurance or annuities. They are Clause 22, Clause 102 and Clause 26(4). As we begin discussion, perhaps he could consider whether he wishes those to be included as well.

In response to the Hon. Member for Calgary West, I am indeed attempting to follow the practices and precedents of the House. The procedure that was followed on the last occasion when major changes of this ilk were brought to the House was that the amendments were put, accepted as introduced, read and moved. They were then distributed. That is not my experience because I was not in the House in 1971, although perhaps the Hon. Member was. That is the advice I have from my officials and that is what I was trying to do. I was attempting to observe the practice and precedent of the House.

Mr. Lambert: It is my recollection that it was handled in the same way that my colleague from Mississauga South is attempting to do it now. The point is that until an amendment is reached, it is not moved. I am sure the Minister will agree that we have proceeded with amendments in recent years in that way. The Bank Act is an example. Both the Opposition and the Government can show the proposed amendments. Discussions then take place through the usual channels. Suggestions can be made for improving amendments. But there is no formal moving. I do not know why the Minister insists upon that. What he has just disclosed to my colleague does not help at all. We would like to see them and this can simply be done by circulating them. At the appropriate time the amendments are moved.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member is renowned for his memory. It is my brief experience in the House that Hon. Members look to senior Members of the House for their experience and comments on former practice. Perhaps the Hon. Member could assist me by producing a record of the approach that was taken when this type of amendment to the Income Tax Act was last before the House.

My information on the record of the proceedings of the House, which is what I am acting upon, is that the tax reform Bill, C-259 in 1971, was dealt with in the way that I proposed at the outset. That is, the Government's intention is obviously not known until the Government takes the step to move the amendment. Otherwise, they are not amendments; they are ideas or thoughts. We could be back to where we started three years ago in terms of looking at amendments to the Bill.

Our proposal is to give them the validity of the intention of the Government. We would move them and, as was the case in 1971, unanimous consent is given that they be accepted as the intention of the Government by way of amendments. Hon. Members opposite will look at them and if they have suggestions to make in the Committee of the Whole, we would be more than pleased to consider them.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, briefly reviewing the Minister's suggestion about adding further groups, we would have some difficulty with Clause 22. However, we certainly could add Clause 102 to the grouping. If the Minister will leave us some time to determine the exact relationship, we may well be able to accommodate him by adding a Subclause of Clause 22 and the Subclause of Clause 26. However, we would like to consider that for a moment.

• (1140)

In any event, if we could deal with the balance of Clause 4, all of Clause 5, all of Clause 102, Subclause 21(11) and Subclause 54(3), that would be satisfactory at this point. However, as I said, we would reserve the right to co-operate with the Minister even further by adding further Subclause as might be appropriate after we have an opportunity to consider the matter in more detail. Is that satisfactory to the Minister?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair has attentively listened to comments of Hon. Members. The Chair must be concerned with the orderly procedure of the work of the committee. It may be one thing for Hon. Members to agree to circulate among themselves amendments before they are formally put to the House, but it is another matter for the Chair to be considerate of Hon. Members' rights in putting those motions to move amendments in their proper order as debate takes place on each of the Clauses. There is some incipient difficulty involved in the way in which Hon. Members seem to want to agree to proceed. The Chair should remind Hon. Members that it may be one thing to agree to debate the subject matter coming under a number of various Clauses, but it is quite another matter to dispose of them.

The Chair should remind Hon. Members, for example, that if we were to group together Clause 21 and Clause 54 for debate and then for disposal, it would not be possible at a further stage of debate to come back and reopen those Clauses unless there was unanimous consent. That may be a difficulty of which the Chair should warn Hon. Members.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, in conversation with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, we have determined that there should be one short change to our recommendation. We should be dealing with Subclause 21(11) instead of Subclause 22(11).

Mr. Blenkarn: That is right.

Mr. Riis: I just make that comment for clarification.

Mr. Fisher: Yes, I wondered about that.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Let us understand each other. We are grouping these various proposals for debate, but the Chair will place them before the House for their disposal as we reach consideration of the individual Clauses. That is the Chair's understanding of the procedure by which we will be guided over the course of the next few hours. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It was agreed earlier that we follow the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South and deal next with Clause 4(6).

Mr. Blenkarn: Clause 4(6), yes.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: First of all—

Mr. Blenkarn: Well, Clause 4.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: —let me put before the House the following question for its consideration: Shall Subclause 4(1) carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Subclause 4(2) carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Subclause 4(3) carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Subclause 4(4) carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Subclause 4(5) carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: We will now hear debate on Subclause 4(6).

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, we have grouped together a number of amendments to the tax Bill. One of the major consequences if this particular group is accepted is that it will become more difficult from many Canadians to prepare for their own retirement. In other words, it is an attempt through the tax system to remove the flexibility of individual Canadians in preparing for their retirement. Future generations of taxpayers will have to assume an obligation to assist people in retirement, because the tax legislation under discussion today would make it more difficult for them to prepare for their own future.

First, could the Minister tell us why the Government believes we should penalize Canadians who want to prepare for their own retirement? Why is the Government moving in that direction when it is already known that retirement problems are likely to be more horrendous in an economic sense down the road?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the Hon. Member. He has hit on a core question here, one which will undoubtedly be discussed at length. In September we heard the very useful comments of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West and the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre in the Finance Committee concerning these precise issues.

The Hon. Member is really asking us about the whole question of deferral of taxation, of using accrual rules to measure income and thereby to measure tax liability. I suggest to him, as a general answer in reply to his general question, that from our point of view accrual is the fairest way of measuring income and, thereby, of measuring tax liability.

If we were to allow open-ended deferrals, then people would end up taking advantage of those open-ended deferrals ad infinitum and defer their tax forever instead of paying it at some self-determined date. I suggest that the Hon. Member has entered into a very ripe area of debate and that, if he wants to deal with this question, he would find that transcripts of the discussion of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West and the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre at the committee hearings in September would be very useful guides to him.

Mr. Smith: Enlightening.

Mr. Hawkes: Sometimes Governments do things without recognizing the consequences to all sectors of society.

Mr. Smith: Not us! Heaven forbid!

Mr. Hawkes: I would like to begin by raising the issue involving charitable foundations. One of the time-honoured methods whereby individual Canadians may contribute to charities is through the purchase of some type of life insurance policy which would come due at some date in the future. The benefits of such a policy then go to a charitable foundation. A Canadian may designate a charity as the beneficiary of a policy and contribute to the policy for 20 or 30 years, let us say, with the view in mind that at the end of that time the charity will benefit. However, if this legislation passes, then every three years throughout that 30-year period, or ten times, the charity will receive a tax bill. The charity will be poorer.

Mr. Lambert: Not the charity.

Mr. Hawkes: If the charity is the named beneficiary, will the charity have to pay a tax bill at any time?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the implication in the question of the Hon. Member for Calgary West is that all forms of life insurance policies will be subject to the three-year accounting for income purposes. While that was a proposal in the section that was first introduced in the budget of November, 1981, there were subsequent amendments in June. As well, there were extensive consultations between the representatives of the life insurance industry, the Canadian Health and Life Insurance Association, and the Association of Life Underwriters, not to mention, as I am reminded, Members on both sides of the House, on the implications of the changes. The result of that was by way of an amendment to the definition of an exempt policy, which takes the policy totally outside of the rule that calls for the three-year accounting. I am led to believe by members of the life insurance industry that 90 to 95 per cent of all life policies sold henceforth would be exempt.

• (1150)

The answer to the question regarding a charitable organization or any Canadian looking for two things, protection and whatever investment opportunities they see in the life insurance policy—and that is for the individual purchaser to determine—is that the option would be to purchase a vehicle that is exempt and outside the rule that requires the three-year accounting. The rule and definition for such a policy is that it is a policy paid over a 20-year payment period. The answer is to look to the insurance representatives to find an insurance vehicle that is not subject to the provision, that is designed to look at long-term tax deferral.

I might indicate that it was after months of discussion with Hon. Members on both sides of the House and representatives of the industry that this kind of approach was worked out, recognizing that the insurance industry for years has had a preferred place in terms of offering protection to Canadians. In addition to that, of course, it offers to some Canadians financial protection or investment.

The decision by the Minister to amend so as to provide this exempt class, as I say, is in the Bill before us or in the amendments which we will move, Mr. Chairman, when you tell us we should move them. I would like to buttress my observations by assuring the Hon. Member that I have, for example, the concurrence of the Chairman of the Canadian Health and Life Insurance Association as to its final accommodation between the Government and the industry, as represented both by CHLIA and LUAC. I am referring to a communication dated February 14, 1983 from the Canadian Health and Life Insurance Association, Mr. Ian D. Mair. He says in part: "As a result of these amendments and others dealing with the health insurance capital dividend account that have been agreed to by your officials and the association, our concerns with Bill C-139 have been resolved. We share the view that the consultative process that has taken place over the past year has been very useful and we have no doubt that there will continue to be close co-operation with your officials in discussions on the draft regulations dealing with the taxation of life insurance policies."

The representatives of the Canadian Health and Life Insurance Association are in agreement with the amendment. Looking at the specific case raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary West, the Chairman and Chief Executive officer of the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada similarly says in a letter dated February 10, 1983: "Thank you for your letter of February 10 in which you state your intention to present to Parliament a number of technical amendments related to the taxation of life insurance policies acquired before December 2, 1982. These amendments to Bill C-139 further clarify the grandfathering, the so-called anti-abuse rule, for existing life insurance policies. They represent the combined effort of your officials and representatives of CHLIA and LUAC and our association is very satisfied with the amendments agreed upon. We also agreed with your officials on amendments to the draft regulation. These amendments will complement the above amendments. We are satisfied with the progress made and only some drafting by your officials remains to be finalized."

The short answer is that pre-1982 policies are not involved. They are not affected. There is a large exemption now by way of amendment to exclude, I am told, 95 per cent of business done by life insurance companies. The option to a person who is concerned about the three-year accrual basis is to inquire which policies permit the exemption category and thus do not attract the rule that calls for an accounting on a three-year basis of interest accumulation and life policies.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, will the Minister read into the record a letter he has from any charitable group that is happy with this?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I do not have any specific letter. There were submissions. There was discussion with the charitable organizations. If their choice is simply as I indicated, that they can buy policy A or policy B, and policy A makes them exempt while policy B gives them a problem, what problem do they have? They can make the choice to opt for the policy that exempts them from the implications of the rule. I would say that any life insurance agent in Canada would be able to assist any charitable organization in that identification.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, the basic pattern evolving for charities was ten-year, single premium and right to borrow against it. Are they excluded or do they have to change their whole method of funding?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, we would have to know whether the Hon. Member is referring to examples of existing policies or whether he is addressing the situation where the charitable organization is looking to make an investment, committing funds to the purchase of a policy for the future. As I have indicated, the rule for exemption is 20-pay life. I am told by the industry that that covers 95 per cent of their anticipated business for the future. Therefore, the charitable organization would look to the acquisition of that kind of policy so as to take advantage of the exemption.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I think we finally have it on the table. What the Minister is telling the charities of this country and people who want to contribute to them is that they should change their pattern. A 10-year pattern is not acceptable, a 20-year pattern might be. We have heard a lot about the satisfaction of the life insurance industry. But the issue here is the patterns which charities and charitable foundations in this country were evolving, developing and working hard on, patterns in which they invested considerable time and dollars, and this tax Bill will hurt them. I commend to the Minister a conversation with some charitable foundations to find out if what I say is correct or not.

• (1200)

I believe we have identified the problem with the charities, so I would like to move to the issue of matrimonial law, which is under provincial jurisdiction and is changing rapidly across the country. The Minister will know that today a report was released from Statistics Canada which indicates that the probability of a marriage ending in divorce has gone up to 40 per cent in a very brief period of time. It was 30 per cent. Matrimonial law requires the splitting of assets in more and more jurisdictions and has been interpreted that way by the courts. These Clauses are dealing with investments for retirement, and I would like to ask whether or not the Government has considered the tax implications in the court system, what the courts may order taxpayers to do with respect to splitting these assets? If the court could so order those assets split, are those two people going to have a tax liability which they neither anticipated nor need at that particular juncture in their lives? What are the courts going to decide taxpayers must do with these kinds of assets? Then, what is the tax collector going to do? Is he going to take money away from those two people?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member prefaced his question by saying he realized that this was a matter of provincial jurisdiction, that is, the issue of settlement of property rights. The law itself, the legislative authority, is, first of all, a matter of provincial jurisdiction and, as we know, that law varies. The legislation itself pertaining to the respective rights of spouses varies from one Province to another right across this country.

Second, the court, the Bench which rules and interprets the law, is under provincial jurisdiction. Therefore, this House does not have any authority over what the law will be nor, indeed, can we try to guess in advance how a court in any particular Province would interpret the legislation of the various Provinces. Without having a specific Section, Clause or case before us, it would be very difficult to guess what a court would do. And I do not believe that the proceedings of this Committee, or of this House, would really be advanced in that exercise. I do not believe we can try to guess what any court, whether it is a court which is interpreting implications of tax legislation inter-spouse for company purposes, for personal purposes, for relationships, or any kind of relationship. It is not useful for us to try to hypothesize what court rulings will be.

Mr. Hawkes: I do not believe it is a particularly complex question, Mr. Chairman. Let us assume that one spouse in a marriage has a whole-life policy which has accumulated quite a bit in an assets sense. The court orders them dividend into two policies. At that moment in time, when that occurs, are those two people liable for tax which they would not be liable for if the plan had been allowed to continue over the 20 years?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, if the policy was purchased pre-1982, and I assume so from the question, it is not affected by the law. If the policy is an exempt policy, it is not affected by the accumulation. So it is very difficult, without putting some specifics on it, to guess what a judge would do, or what kind of situation he would be presented with. However, again we are told by the life insurance industry that the majority of policies are presently exempt and will be exempt in the future, so that in the majority of cases the question would not even arise.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few comments and direct a question to the Minister. I suppose I should at this point declare a conflict of interest, as I have had a life insurance contract to sell life insurance since 1938. Therefore, I am reasonably interested in Bill C-139 and, of course, the many ramifications with respect to life insurance.

I was interested to hear the Minister read letters from the heads of the life insurance industry and also from the Life Insurance Association. I have been in touch with, and received letters from, these people, naturally not recently, but I presume the letters will start coming in now that this Bill is back in the House.

I believe the predecessor of the present Minister of Finance, when I questioned him in the House, stated that the problems had been solved. As a result of that I immediately wrote to the President of one of the major life insurance companies and asked him if, indeed, the problems were solved. His answer came back to me in words to this effect: "Mr. Darling, if you had been condemned to be executed and then had a reprieve and were told that you were not to be executed but you would have one arm and one leg cut off, you would certainly consider that a very good alternative." That is one thing which I would like the Minister to comment on.

There is another matter which I would like the Minister to comment on. This insurance clause, Clause 5, affects, I suppose, Mr. Chairman, a minimal number of people. I believe only 13 million people approximately are policyholders who are vitally interested in this Clause. I know that many Hon. Members on both sides of the House have received letters from life insurance agents in their ridings raising this question and are presumably very worried about it. I am wondering if the Minister could come up with some reasonable figure with respect to the question raised recently in the House as to how much money is going to be received from this.

I am aware that the present Government is so hard up for money it would probably "skin a louse for its tallow", and they are going to use every angle possible. I believe it was on the work in progress issue that one of the Members asked the Minister how much money the Government was going to derive from that, and, of course, the officials there went through the books and came up with a figure of, I believe, $20 million on one angle and $20 million on another angle. That is $40 million. I am curious whether the Minister's officials would go through their books and tell us how much the Government expects to take out of the life insurance policyholders across Canada by even considering taxing life insurance.

The present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, when he was the Minister of Finance, brought in this very same measure and all hell broke loose. I suppose it was bombarded from every angle. As a result, in his wisdom the Minister withdrew it. The Hon. Member for St. John's West, when he was Minister of Finance, brought in a budget which did not please the Canadian people, although I am sure they would now be delighted to welcome it with open arms.

Mr. Cullen: We will see.

Mr. Darling: You bet your life you will see. Of course, when the present Secretary of State for External Affairs brought in his budget, his high-priced help again sneaked this measure in and he got it through. We know, of course, what happened there. That was back in November, 1981. There then was a sort of a changing or relaxing on June 28, 1982. The present Minister of Finance then made revisions in his so-called statement or budget of October, 1982.

I am wondering how much the Government is going to get out of this and how is it going to police it with the millions of policies across the country which have cash values attached. The policyholders themselves do not even know what the cash value of their policies is. How much does the Government feel it is going to get out of this, compared with all the hassle and problems, the lost votes and probably a good many lost seats in the next election? I believe the Government would be well advised to withdraw this provision.

• (1210)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I thank the Hon. Member for disclosing his professional expertise. I do not consider it a conflict of interest in dealing with this issue. After all, presumably all Members have the confidence of their electors to assume responsibility as a Member of the House because they have expertise in some area or the other. The Hon. Member is not alone, of course, in his expertise in dealing with life insurance. The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon, for example, is a man who has somewhat the same background and is able to draw on his practical experience and make representations to the Department and the Government. Obviously the Government was assisted by Members who, although they may not be licensed agents, represent those areas and constituencies that we all recognize contain the home office of many life insurance companies. I am thinking, for example, of the Members from Kitchener or London East and London West who have the advantage of getting first-hand reaction to the budget proposals and who made representations to the Government. All these Members did what we expect from Hon. Members, and that is to bring their own particular background to bear on Government proposals and make recommendations for improvement or change. Secondly, they acted as good Members in their constituencies and acted to bring the representations of their constituents to the Government in considering the implication of this legislation in so far as it affects life insurance policies and annuities.

I did not have the advantage, Mr. Chairman, of listening to the conversation between the Hon. Member and the president or executive officer of the life insurance company referred to by the Hon. Member, but I really cannot do any more than introduce to the House the letter written to me by the President of the Canadian Life Underwriters or the Canadian Health and Life Insurance Association representatives who have made submissions. We did have a great amount of dialogue. There was a discussion between Members of Government and industry representatives. I think all Members received representations from their constituents.

The Government recognized the special role that the life insurance industry plays in the bigger scheme of things, and it recognizes that Canadians look after their own responsibilities by the purchase of life protection. This provision deals not only with life insurance policies but with annuities, and you have to bear that in mind. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South asked that we combine these because there is a philosophy that runs through the whole piece. We have to keep in mind that a number of these financial instruments serve different purposes. However, in recognition of the social value of the life insurance policies providing protection to the individual, paid for out of his own pocket without relying on Government, we moved to the definition of an exempt policy, the 20-pay life which we are told by the industry in effect exempts the vast majority of policies that will be sold in the future.

In recognition of some of the further difficulties and other submissions that were made, we went a step further. For example, even in those cases of life insurance beyond the exempt definition—in regonition, for example, of the fact that Canadians look to life insurance policies for loans at a time of financial difficulty—we said that withdrawals through loans will be exempt. All policies prior to 1982 are exempt to begin with, but for Canadians bying a non-exempt policy in the future and who look to that policy for cash purposes in times of financial difficulty, we said we will further extend the exemption in those cases.

Moreover, we all recognize that a disabled person, or someone who becomes disabled through an accident and looks to the accumulated cash available to them, should be able to call on the cash value of those policies without the imposition of the three-year accrual on income build-up. They would be able to annuitize immediately without attracting tax which would otherwise apply.

To recap, we think we have dealt fairly with the industry and policyholders generally by not touching policies purchased prior to 1982. Many letters which I received, and I am sure which many other Members have received, were from people who had purchased policies prior to 1982 and who thought that they would have to account on the three-year accrual basis, but it does not apply. Prior to 1982, whatever the kind of policy the new changes do not apply.

In addition, I am told that the companies were moving towards the marketing of policies which by and large fall into the exempt category in any event, so the vast majority of the business of the life insurance companies will not be affected. For the 10 per cent or so of policies which are affected by the three-year accrual analysis and imposition of tax, we have exempted anyone looking to cash surrender value because of a financial crisis; and anyone who becomes disabled and for that reason has to fall upon the cash value of the policies is also exempt.

Finally, the question of annuities was the most difficult issue because we found that the purchase of annuities was becoming a tax haven.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Cosgrove: It was becoming a tax haven for those Canadians who have the ability to employ professionals to give them financial advice on how to defer income over a longer term. It was quickly seen that if we projected the value of the haven for the purchase of annuities and the use of deferred annuities as a way of avoiding or deferring tax over the long haul, our analysis was that over two years it was worth a recapture of approximately $75 million by the Government to assist it in meeting its obligations.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, the figure the Minister has come up with is $75 million. That is the difficulty. There is one other thing that I want to emphasize—and I must say that I agree with the Minister on this—and that is that no policies that have been in effect prior to December 2, 1982 will be affected.

• (1220)

I have sold a lot of insurance over the years. The Minister mentioned 20-pay life, which was suitable for a small family. A great majority of people bought straight or whole life insurance—"pay till you die". In that case, even after a number of years the cash value will never equal the amount of premiums paid in. I own policies which are probably 30 or 35 years old and are worth a few thousand dollars, but I have paid more than that into them. I know that they are home free anyway.

People are approaching life insurance differently these days, Mr. Chairman. I wonder why the Minister's officials have been using the rubber hose on him and on his predecessors to get them to include this life insurance provision in the Bill. There will be little or nothing invested in new policies because the people who are buying insurance today are buying term insurance for protection. Anyone is an idiot to buy a life insurance policy for an investment—and I represent a life insurance company—with the great deals that are around today, even with lower interest rates. No one is going to pay $48 or $49 per year for 20 years for a $1,000 endowment, as they used to do for investment or for education or whatever. People who want pensions are saving for their old age with annuities. As Members of Parliament we get a real break, much more than anyone else, even with the annuities that the Minister says are tax dodges—or words to that effect.

I am trying to get down to brass tacks, Mr. Chairman. I suppose the Minister's officials will not concede that this provision is not going to be worth the money that will be spent trying to enforce it. There are certain laws which the Government in its stupidity, brings in and then, in its wisdom, realizes it cannot enforce. The Minister of Communications finally threw up his hands on the problem of dishes for TV reception. Regulations could not be enforced.

The Minister is not dealing with individual policy-holders who have $1,000 or $5,000 insurance policies, but with millions across the country. It might be possible to check a multimillionaire but he would not have insurance policies that the Government could get its claws on even if they were taken out after December, 1982. The multimillionaire would be buying protection insurance or investing in real estate and other things that give a better return on investment and can be easily liquidated.

I wonder why the Minister wants to continue with this. I have a couple of hundred letters from policyholders and about 50 letters from insurance agents whose livelihood depends upon this activity. Of course, they are screaming blue murder, and the Minister has softened things a little in order that they may continue in business.

I should like the experts to tell us what percentage of policies will be subject to tax from December, 1982 onwards. How much money will they produce and when is the Government going to get it? The policies did not go into effect on December 2, 1982. It will be 10 years before they have any cash value. Even policies that will have a reasonably high return will not have it in the early years. They will certainly not wipe out the deficit. I do not know how many years will go by before they produce five cents.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that as a matter of principle I wonder why the Government introduced this particular motion. We all know that in the normal course of events a great deal of life insurance was bought with cash-paid dollars, or savings. To that extent only, the earnings of the policy could be taxed. In the case mentioned by the Hon. Member for Calgary West, there was no deferral of tax unless the entire premium was claimed as a donation to a charity, and then there was only a partial allowance.

The Minister has been at pains to show, in derogation of the November 12 budget, that in December of that year the Minister of Finance made a switch because the original budget proposal covered all insurance. All existing insurance was going to be subject to the three-year accrual rule. Policyholders would pay tax on money they would never see. That is unjust.

Then there was a change that grandfathered all present policies. There were further changes as well. The Parliamentary Secretary will know that last August and September, when representatives of the insurance industry appeared before a subcommittee of the Finance Committee which was hearing representations on the then Ways and Means motions, they were most exercised and protested vigorously.

Now the Minister is proud to read into the record letters from the Life Insurance Association and the Life Underwriters association stating that the problems have been resolved. Perhaps I could agree with the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka that the industry was prepared to lose half an arm. The industry will not lose, of course, but policyholders will because it is they who will be taxed, not the industry.

If 95 per cent of business that is to be written in the future is going to be in the exempt categories, what is the purpose of this exercise? Will that 5 per cent yield $74 million? That is utter tripe. There is not that much life insurance written yearly. Will 5 per cent written since December, 1982 produce taxable revenue? And not only taxable revenue, but revenue? I cannot see that an individual buying an annuity, even on a 20-year or whatever is a non-exempt basis at the present time, is going to be eligible for a deferral of tax.

• (1230)

If I make payments into an annuity plan, I make them with tax-paid dollars. The income earned on that investment shoud not be taxed. It is not received by the individual. There are many instances, as the Hon. Member for Calgary West indicated, where there are court ordered divisions of annuity plans as a result of divorce or judicial separation. We must ask who has paid it, who is being taxed and who has been taxed.

I will repeat one of the big complaints, and that is the complexity of the Income Tax Act, as well as the cost and difficulty of compliance. Now, in order to aim at a wee sparrow or even a smaller bird, there is trotted out a legislative blunderbuss. They are very complicated provisions. Either the individual requires the help of a good insurance agent who will have gone through quite a period of indoctrination in order to know just what is what or he or she may unwittingly step into a tax position. For what purpose? I suggest that the proposal was disreputable in the first instance; it was disreputable to start. There is nothing which legitimizes its antecedents. Now we have page after page of amendments by the Government which are incomprehensible to 99 out of 100 people. The Government is insisting that they be included in this particular Bill. Why? I am wondering whether the Government is reduced to the position where it has to go out and sweep the streets in order to collect some horse droppings as a possible substitute for fuel; perhaps it will be a source of biomass.

The tax system is incomprehensible. The Minister was not at the Committee this last summer. I do not like to refer to the officials who are before him because they are part of the system, but they were not present this summer either when group after group complained about the complexity of the income tax law. Frankly, one can no longer assess oneself outside of the fact that one would be drawing a salary, would have a wife and no other dependants; then if one had no income from other sources, one might be able to complete a return. Anything beyond that and the individual has to go to an accountant for tax services. If one is in business, owns property or is a farmer, then he or she definitely has to seek expensive tax advice.

That defeats our system. The very complexity encourages evasion. I am not referring to avoidance; I am referring to evasion, such as people working at a second job and saying: "No pay cheques; pay me in cash once a week". These could be service jobs such as plumbing, paper-hanging or painting done after hours outside regular employment. There is a total subterranean, shall we say, industry right across the country.

I know Hon. Members on the Government side are not interested in this. Perhaps they are engaging in some of it themselves. Some of them may be moonlighting. Money from moonlighting is never accounted for. But it arises either because the rates of tax are too high or tax reporting is too complex. These are the only reasons for moonlighting, aside from the funds gained, of course. Surely Hon. Members opposite, whether they are new here or have had some exposure to the income tax provisions, know this. I do not like this particular provision and I intend to vote against it. It is simple; we do not delete, we just vote against.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member raised a question concerning the rationale for the amendments to the Act which deal with annuities and life insurance and concerning the reason for the changes. Albeit that we may be adding to the length of the Income Tax Act, it is designed to serve Canadians by putting a tax on income. In fairness to all Canadians, all sources of income should be considered as legitimate ways for the Government to realize resources to meet its obligations. It was an analysis of where income was realized by people, how it was generated, and whether the pre-1980 tax system which is presently in place treated all sources of income fairly and therefore all Canadians fairly.

Before 1981, annuities were taxed only as the income was received by the recipient annuitant in payments. This resulted in taxes being paid roughly at the same time as receipt or accrual. We know that in some deferred annuities payments are put off until some time in the future to give the person the advantage of not paying tax on the income earned by that invested money in the interim. Therefore, such deferred annuities were put in an advantaged position. There was no tax payable until some time in the future; and if one deferred the tax long enough into the future, no tax was payable. Therefore, people who took advantage of it were not contributing toward the revenues of Government to serve all Canadians, themselves included. Thus they had an advantage.

Let me give a specific example of the tax advantage. Perhaps it did not matter when interest rates were 5 per cent and is indicative of why the Government is now moving at this time. Let me take the example of $100 being put into a bank account for 20 years and compare it with the same amount being put into an annuity for the same period of time. The bank account would accumulate interest annually for 20 years. For the $164 deferred annuity the after-tax cash would be less than $20 more. While interest rates were at 5 per cent, there was not much advantage in the deferral scheme on annuities, a little advantage but not much.

• (1240)

Let us take a look at interest rates at 10 per cent and interest rates above 10 per cent that we have seen in the last few years which change that situation dramatically. Take the same amount in the same period. I am looking at after-tax cash in the bank account of $100 at 10 per cent, which is $265. But for the deferred annuity, the advantage for the same period of time becomes $125 more. That is a comparison of the two options for investment and shows the inequity.

Mr. Darling: You cannot get the annuity money out.

Mr. Cosgrove: It shows that for the annuity $125 more is realized, on which there is no tax levied. Therefore, there are no resources to the Government, as I say, during that period of time. The person who uses the bank account is at a disadvantage to those people who use professionals and the device of deferred annuities.

What does that mean in terms of revenue drain if we look at the actual experience in those years in which interest rates were remarkably higher than our previous experience in this country? The revenue drain becomes significant—horse droppings possibly to the Hon. Member opposite but to the tax system it is $75 million.

Mr. Lambert: Nonsense.

Mr. Blenkarn: Nonsense. All you have done is ruined the capital markets. Wake up! It is never $75 million.

Mr. Cosgrove: That can be used to great advantage by the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: This I have illustrated. I have given you the $100 unit and shown how that difference is accounted for. I have given you the best analysis of the Government as to the result according to our best calculation for over a year, producing a revenue drain of $75 million.

Mr. Lambert: To a socialist, that makes sense.

Mr. Cosgrove: We got into this discussion on equity and fairness. If the tax system for all Canadians is to be fair, it should treat all Canadians in the same or parallel manner in terms of the way in which they invest money.

Mr. Lambert: That is the socialist way.

Mr. Cosgrove: There is no fair treatment if, for example, you treat deposits, GICs, or bank accounts differently from the deferred annuity, which was becoming very popular. It was a way of extending the Government's program. The provisions of the Act passed by this Parliament, allowing a deduction of $5,500 on the RRSP contribution was designed to be available to all Canadians. In fairness, we said if that plan is available to all Canadians, that is a way in which we can give a break and an incentive to Canadians to provide for their own retirement. But then people began adding the deferred annuity to the plan. They were getting around that provision and taking unfair advantage by, in effect, extending the RRSP deductions by the vehicle of the deferred annuity. But that is only available to those Canadians who have the resources to add on to the $5,500 deduction and to those financial institutions that are in the business of annuities. It was for that reason, to treat all Canadians fairly and all sectors in the economy, financial institutions and businesses in the same way under tax law, that the changes were introduced. That is the basis. First, fairness to Canadians who are in receipt of income. Second, fairness to all different types of financial institutions so that they, in the marketing of their products, are treated equitably and, in other words, comparably, by the income tax system.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is absolutely stupid.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, now we are getting down to the philosophy behind those changes. With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, it is pure socialism this Minister is going after, straightforward socialism. He talks about taxpayers having an advantage. It is the same as was proposed last summer by the officials, that the owner of a small business should be in the same position as a man on salary. There is no difference as far as the income tax return is concerned. That is why there was a proposed increase in tax on the small business dividend. But the Minister and his officials have lost sight of the reason why we had deferred annuities and annuity plans. People were saving up, people were denying current spending. In other words, they were not living right up to the collar so they would have a greater income after retirement or when they needed it. I know that today, in the eyes of a lot of people that is a strange philosophy. One is supposed to come to the state with holes in one's trousers, pockets empty, and say: "Here I am. I have drunk it. I have spent it. Now keep me."

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I must inform the Hon. Member that the 20 minutes allotted to him have expired.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I will object to that. I have not spoken for 20 minutes. Speaking is not cumulative. Speaking is at each interval. If I am interrupted or I yield the floor to another Hon. Member, I get another 20 minutes. My time is not cumulative at any one time on any one Clause. Therefore, I have been speaking for about three minutes only at this particular time.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I fully appreciate the Hon. Member's comments and concern for his speaking time, but it has been the practice in the House in Committee of the whole, I am informed going back to 1975, that Hon. Members' time is calculated on the basis of comments they wish to make, the Minister's response and debate continuing for a period of 20 minutes each.

The point raised by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West is quite valid strictly speaking according to the Standing Orders. But the Chair in this instance is being guided by the ongoing practice since 1975. Of course, I would not want to treat an Hon. Member differently from another Hon. Member. It would be sheer pandemonium if I were to give one Hon. Member more time than is accorded by the practice in place in recent years and treat another Member differently, guiding myself strictly by the provisions of the Standing Orders. We are in Committee. Members may wish to indicate in which fashion they prefer to proceed. This morning and in recent days the Chair has been guided by the practice put in place since 1975.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, while I take some exception to my hon. colleague's introductory remarks, I do feel he is pursuing a very valid point. Knowing from his past performances that he would likely respect a short extension in order to allow him to complete his remarks, our Party is quite prepared to give him our share of the unanimous consent so that he can finish his remarks.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I would agree with that sentiment. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West has long experience in the House. I think we would be advantaged if he continued the point he is making. I would go further than that. The Hon. Member said that he thinks now the discussion is linking up. He believes he has identified the difference between the approach of the philosophy of the Government and that of himself. I would appreciate his concluding his remarks on that issue by addressing the point made in the Financial Post of July 4, 1981. It is not known to be a socialist or communist rag.

• (1250)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The Minister is no longer on a point of order, he is now debating. There being unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Edmonton West to continue his remarks, the floor should go to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West at this time.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, while I do not want to create a precedent because I wish to come back to the point, I want to thank Hon. Members for their consideration. At this time I will abide by that interpretation, Mr. Chairman, but I suggest that you are wrong. Otherwise, I can ask a question lasting one minute and the Minister can take 19 minutes to reply and thereby exhaust my 20-minute period. I suggest that that is totally and utterly wrong.

Having said that, I will come back to my earlier comments. An investment in an annuity or any other plan is a saving for the future. When that investment is made, the money is then available for investment by the insurance company or others who hold the contract with regard to the annuity. Now, however, the idea is that the difference in income averaging contracts, annuity contracts and forward averaging will be paid to the Government. The Government says that that money must go to it.

The participating beneficiary of an annuity contract does not draw anything until the contract matures. The original inducement for a person to save was that his or her tax rate would be lower because of their reduced income. The Government now says that all taxpayers are not being treated alike. Everyone is free to buy an annuity contract if they wish to save money. It only depends upon what a person wishes to spend. Now there is every disincentive to save as a result of the Income Tax Act as proposed not only in this Clause but all through the Bill. The individual begins to rely more on a state-operated plan such as the Canada Pension Plan and Old Age Security. That is what drives up the demand for higher Old Age Security and has created the demand for the Guaranteed Income Supplement. It all comes from the state.

The Minister says that the state requires this interim taxation on life insurance contracts every three years because it needs the money. Why does the state need the money? It wants to have everyone dependent on it. Governments at the provincial level as well as the federal level take great pride in implementing programs and telling people how they will benefit from them. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is a classic example of this. There are many other examples as well. These same Ministers who start these programs turn around the following year to ask for more money and therefore more taxes. The Government needs the money. However, it is only those Ministers who put spending programs into place who say the Government needs the money.

Mr. Lang: Why did you go against restraint?

Mr. Lambert: I will oppose that in this particular instance. The Hon. Member for Kitchener made some unintelligible comment about why did I vote against the restraint program.

Mr. Lang: Restraining the OAS.

Mr. Lambert: I voted against restraint on the OAS because people had been put into that position at the Government's insistence. I voted in favour of six and five. However, I believe to take it out on the backs of senior citizens is wrong because they will be hit twice. It is clearly in the Bill that the indexing of allowances will go to six and five. This comes ten years after the great white knight, John Turner, introduced the OAS. Now, the Hon. Member's Government will cut it back.

To return to my comment, this difference in philosophy is where I have parted company with the Government over the years. The Hon. Member from Sarnia knows this very well. That is why I am a Conservative. I contend that the individual who wants to save money should be allowed to do so. That money then becomes available for investment elsewhere. The reason there are shortages of capital is that the Government will be borrowing another $20 billion to clean up the market. There will not be any money left for industry or other Governments. I find this incomprehensible.

I apologize to my hon. friend for Kamloops-Shuswap when I say that this is pure socialism. He is not a pure socialist and, to that extent, he feels somewhat offended. This is part and parcel of the philosophy of Carter, which is that a buck is a buck is a buck. This so-called theory of equity, even though Parliament rejected it, has been shoved back into the system at every opportunity.

This situation reminds me of that of many years ago, which the Minister may not remember. The initial conferences that were held prior to the war with regard to sharing revenues and other programs heard many proposals at that time. The Provinces did not like the way they would be implemented and turned them down. Beginning immediately after the war, one proposal was shoved in by the bureaucrats, then another and another. To that extent, the pre-1940 plan was implemented. We are now seeing the piecemeal implementation of the Carter philosophy. This House roundly rejected it 13 years ago. Now Hon. Members opposite who were not here then take these proposals like candy offered by a doting parent. They think that this tax legislation that has been put forward is from Heaven and divinely inspired. They do not question it.

I part company with the Government over the philosophy that is behind this feature and others in the Bill. It is for that reason that I have spoken for this length of time, and I am glad that I have.

TRADE

EXPORTS OF CANADIAN LUMBER TO UNITED STATES— POSSIBILITY OF AVOIDING SURTAX

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to inform the House and the Canadian public that, thanks to constant efforts by the industry and the Canadian Government and the negotiations conducted by our colleague, the Minister of State (International Trade) (Mr. Regan), this morning at 9:30, the U.S. Department of Commerce made a preliminary decision to the effect that it did not consider there were sufficient grounds to levy a surtax on Canadian lumber exports to the United States. This preliminary decision is to be reviewed on May 23, when a final decision will be made, and we have every reason to believe that the initial decision will not be reversed. Otherwise, Madam Speaker, some 70,000 Canadians would be in danger of losing their jobs. There is therefore reason to rejoice.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

EMPHASIS ON THEME: "WOMEN AS SURVIVORS"

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Today is International Women's Day, a day when women in cities across Canada and most western countries commemorate women's struggle for economic equality. The theme for this year's commemoration is "Women as Survivors", Madam Speaker. This theme is most appropriate when we examine the plight of working women in Canada. Over 50 per cent of all women, single or married, are in the paid labour force, 67 per cent of all women under 45 years of age.

From January, 1982, to January, 1983, the unemployment rate among women rose by 43.4 per cent for a total of 605,000 Canadian women. To the problems posed by the current economic devastation in Canada, we must add the tremendous threat which the impending high technology revolution poses for women. Because women are concentrated in the clerical and sales occupations which are most likely to be affected by the new technology, as many as one million jobs presently performed by women may disappear by 1990. Of course the new technology promises to bring with it new jobs, but the skills gap between the old jobs and the new ones is often too great to be bridged by on the job training and personal initiative alone.

The Government must begin to put in place retraining programs which are specifically targeted at the groups most affected by the high tech change. As I have indicated, one of the hardest hit groups will be women. Lest the Government not be overly concerned about the effects of massive unemployment among women, let me point out that if all of the women in two-income earning families lost their jobs—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: —the number of Canadian families—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Do it again. It might have been all right.

Mr. Nielsen: Cut off at the pass.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

FEDERAL PROGRAMS AND SERVICES FOR WOMEN

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel): Madam Speaker, in New York City on March 8, 1908, women working in the garment industry took to the streets to demand abolition of the working conditions that had caused the death of 128 workers at the Triangle Shirtwaist factory in New York City.

In 1911, delegates to an international conference in Copenhagen proposed that March 8 be set aside as the day on which the demonstration would be commemorated.

Eighteen years before Canada recognized women as persons, women workers throughout the world were meeting on this date to mark their contribution to the labour market.

Today, on the 72nd International Women's Day, the Federal Government has published a brochure called The Government of Canada and Women. It is a guide to all federal programs and services offered to women. The brochure is available from the Canadian Unity Information Office, by whom it was prepared.

The Federal Government has always defended the principle of equal rights for women, and by publishing this brochure, it hopes that women will become aware and take advantage of the many services, programs and studies the Government has initiated in order to provide a better service to the majority of the people of this country.

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

USE OF FUNDS

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I am concerned with the Government's promise last November to create 60,000 new jobs under the NEED Program which, to date, has in reality only created a maximum of 4,300 new jobs in Canada—another Liberal promise broken.

In my riding of Leeds-Grenville there are approximately 4,000 people without work, yet only 40 new jobs have been initiated to date. Even this number is actually misleading in that three of these positions are for jobs which would normally be done by federal Government term employees. In fact federal Government Departments are utilizing the NEED Program to fund projects which they would normally undertake to fund from their own departmental budgets, thus creating the impression that these budgets are keeping pace with inflation and are well within the six and five guidelines. What we have here is a sham, a redistribution of funds from departmental budgets into the NEED Program, and the illusion of job creation.

In real terms, the nearly two million unemployed people of this country will not be beneficiaries of the $200 million in job creation. In my opinion these funds are not being used for the purpose for which they were intended, the creation of new jobs to put people back to work. Once again we find it difficult to believe in the credibility of the Government which promises to help those in need when, in actual fact, it is just juggling figures to make itself look good.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

SPECIAL RECOGNITION OF CONTRIBUTION MADE BY FARM WOMEN

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Today, Madam Speaker, is International Women's Day, which provides opportunity for us to recognize the tremendous contribution made by women to our society and to reaffirm the necessity of allowing them the opportunity to work and to receive compensation for their work in whatever way they choose. Farm women, in particular, are part of an economic team which is most often a family, yet these women must fight for the smallest compensation and are still among one of the most under recognized groups in our society.

As an example, recent census data state that only 4.3 per cent of the Saskatchewan female labour force actually worked on family farms or businesses for no pay. Unfortunately, either a bias crept into the questionnaire in its administration, or the men filling out the forms did not recognize the contribution of their wives, mothers, daughters, and sisters.

The true cost of producing food is not currently reflected by the prices farm families receive for their products. Society should and must pay just compensation for farm families so that fair wages can be paid for all work on the farms. Only then can farm women, along with farm men, receive a return for their labour, contribute to pension plans, and achieve the sort of financial independence and security taken for granted by many men and women in our society.

ENERGY

CALL FOR MAINTENANCE OF DOMESTIC OIL PRICE STABILITY

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, there can no longer be any doubt that the most beautiful and talented young ladies live in Edmonton, as was again evidenced last night by the results with respect to the Miss Teen Canada Pageant. Both this year and last year the award has been won by a young lady from Edmonton.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Yurko: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, while appearing before a committee several months ago, advised that the new Government direction in the energy sector is "stability and decisiveness", and that he would not be recommending any new taxes on the oil and gas sector in the forthcoming budget. This sector of the economy is suffering from instability. World oil prices are being subjected to severe buffeting and fluctuations.

In Canada the formula for setting domestic oil prices contained in the September, 1981, Canada-Alberta Oil Agreement is redundant. It is imperative that domestic oil price stability be maintained for the next several years to assist in the economic recovery of the nation. Therefore I ask the Government to follow its new directions in the energy sector and act with decisiveness to impose stability by fixing the domestic price of old oil at $29.75 per barrel until this price reaches the world price, and then keep it there.

STATUS OF WOMEN

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF SENATOR BIRD

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Madam Speaker, this past year has been a particularly significant one for Canadian women. We saw the Charter of Rights and Freedoms entrenched in our new Constitution. We saw the first woman appointed as a Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, and the first ever federal-provincial conference of Ministers responsible for the status of women. We saw significant changes to the laws with regard to sexual assault, and increased awareness and debate on wife battering, divorce, pensions, sexual stereotyping in media, pornography, microtechnology, and part-time work.

• (1410)

I would like to pay tribute on this International Women's Day to all Canadian women. Especially I would like to pay tribute to one Canadian woman who has been so instrumental in furthering women's rights, the retiring Senator Florence Bird. Women owe Senator Bird a great debt for her pioneering work as Chairman of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women and for her continuing efforts toward the principle of equality.

It is my concern, however, that much of the progress in the past year has been as a result of consultation and action on the part of this Liberal Government, and so much of what needs to be done lies within the domain of the Provinces. For instance, just yesterday the Conservative Government in Saskatchewan announced the abolition of the women's bureau in their Labour Department. Can this be the same political party that federally is trying so hard to con Canadian women into thinking they are concerned about them? I ask women—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON SIZE OF GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I could not help but note the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) over the weekend in which he proposed to play the federal deficit or the people of Canada—it was not absolutely clear which—like an accordion.

When it comes to his musical ability, methinks the Minister is much too modest. He is a veritable one-man band. Not only is there his one-way accordion, which always expands but never has to contract in order to be able to expand again, but there is also the bagpipes at which the Minister is adept. He blows and blows to keep the bag full of hot air, and hopes the rest of us will be impressed with his fingering. Of course there is his harp, which makes wonderful music as long as we listen to it with our eyes closed. It is only if we open them suddenly that we notice that the strings are being pulled by former Members of the Liberal Cabinet.

INTERNATIONAL WOMEN'S DAY

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleagues on International Women's Day to urge the Government to implement two key recommendations of the Canadian Human Rights Commission of particular concern to women. First, the Canadian Human Rights Act should be amended to clarify that discrimination on the basis of sex includes discrimination on the basis of pregnancy or childbirth. As well, the Act should make very clear that sexual harassment, a serious and widespread problem in the workplace, will not be tolerated. Canadian women would thus be ensured that unfavourable treatment resulting from a refusal of sexual attentions, as well as the unwanted and unsought reception of sexual advances, would be prohibited under the Act.

While the recently tabled amendments to the Act did include these long overdue changes, other provisions in that Bill, in particular the offensive reference in proposed Section 14(2) to the possibility that a person may "behave or is likely to behave in an unduly disruptive manner unacceptable in the individual's environment" have jeopardized passage of the Bill.

It is the strong and unanimous view of representatives of the disabled community as well as national women's groups and many others that this Section opens a dangerous loophole which allows people's attitudes and beliefs toward minority groups and women to be legitimized as bona fide job requirements rather than constituting discrimination. While Clauses 9(3) and 25 remain problems, if the Government removes this dangerous Clause 14(2), we will support speedy passage of the Bill to extend the rights of the physically and mentally disabled and ensure that women are protected from discrimination on the grounds of pregnancy, child birth, and sexual harassment.

Madam Speaker: Order.

STATUS OF WOMEN

PROPOSED APPLICATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS ON INDIAN WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): Madam Speaker, International Women's Day is dedicated to women's struggle for equality throughout the world. It is a day of hope, on which one of the main objectives being promoted is to achieve greater social justice. Against this background, Madam Speaker, I invite my Opposition colleagues to join the Government's team in implementing the report submitted to the House by the Committee on Indian Women's Rights and to proceed fortwith to amend the Indian Act by restoring all their rights as soon as possible to Indian women by amending Section 12.1(b), thus restoring their fundamental rights to Indian women and their descendants.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES FOR HEALTH AND EDUCATION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Minister proposed to his provincial counterparts that the six and five formula be applied to the federal cash transfer payments for health and post-secondary education, in other words, a cutback of almost $700 million from what these payments would otherwise have been. This in effect would amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act which was passed just a year ago. Will the Minister assure the House that no change will be made in the fiscal arrangements for health and post-secondary education unless it is in the form of an amendment to the Fiscal Arrangements Act to be brought before the House and debated separately?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to inform the hon. lady that she is misinformed. At no time was there any discussion about modifying, in any way, shape, or form the payment formula for health expenditures. Contributions by the federal Government under the health programs will continue exactly as before. In that regard, whoever informed her was misinformed. I am happy to clear up this situation quite categorically. The discussion between the Ministers of Health will continue on this program, discussions that were undertaken in the last year. As far as the formula payments are concerned, they are going to continue exactly as they are.

As far as the payments for post-secondary education by the federal Government are concerned, the Hon. Member knows that many Provinces have set very strict limits to any increases in their payments to post-secondary education. I have indicated that I am considering the possibility of increasing our payments for post-secondary education by 6 and 5 per cent over the next two years. This would represent, next year, an increase of $256 million in the payments that the federal Government would make to the Provinces. In addition, the federal Government is also considering reallocating resources so that there will be more funds going to young people in all areas, particularly in the area of training, in order that they will be better equipped to deal with the job market in the next decade.

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON AMENDING LEGISLATION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the question that I put to the Minister of Finance has still not been answered. I asked whether he would assure the House that any change to the Fiscal Arrangements Act would come before the House by way of amendments to that Act and be debated as a separate measure. That was the question I asked.

May I ask him at the same time, since he indicated that there will be cutbacks in post-secondary payments to the Provinces, from what they otherwise would have been, to assure us specifically that no change in the fiscal arrangements relating to that program will be made that will result in unequal per capita transfer payments being made to any of the Provinces?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am sorry if I did not answer the first question by the hon. lady, but there were several points that were wrong in her preamble. I took too much time answering the preamble and forgot the final question.

Miss MacDonald: I understand you forget a lot.

Mr. Lalonde: If the hon. lady would put a straight question, she would get an immediate answer. If she would not go around beating the bush, putting all kinds of wrong information in her questions, she would get answers to her questions.

Mr. Nielsen: You did it to the Prime Minister. You misled all of us.

Mr. Lalonde: I want to tell the hon. lady that if the payments for post-secondary education were to be increased by only 6 and 5 per cent, this would imply a change in the Fiscal Arrangements Act. Obviously no such thing would take place without coming before Parliament and having the Act amended accordingly.

As far as the second question that she raised is concerned, the formula is based on the per capita grants. I have not heard any suggestion that the system of per capita grants would be modified. No consideration is being given to changing the payment per capita formula that exists at the present time.

As I indicated, discussions took place with the provincial Finance Ministers concerning the advisability of increasing the payments for post-secondary education to the Provinces by 6 and 5 per cent over the next two years.

• (1420)

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON EDUCATION GRANTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Minister understands that the per capita payments are in fact based on a process of equalization between the tax points and the cash payments. Therefore, if there is a straight six and five cutback to the Provinces in the cash payments, it could result in an unequal payment to the "have not Provinces". That is what I wanted him to make sure he dealt with, so that that would not happen as far as the have not Provinces are concerned.

I would also like the Minister to tell us why, at a time when enrolments are increasing in universities, and when many young people are being forced back into the universities because of the high unemployment rate, the Government is taking the unusual step of reducing what would have been its payments in post-secondary education, causing tremendous hardship in this field.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, again there are so many wrong statements in the hon. lady's question that I will have to take them one by one. There is no question of a cutback by six and five per cent. What is being discussed is an increase of six and five per cent in the payments to the Provinces under post-secondary education payments by the federal Government.

I remind the hon. lady that several Conservative Provinces have planned increases in post-secondary education of less than six and five per cent. She should bear this in mind.

Second, the payments are going to be made under the formula which has been traditionally in operation. The only difference is that they would be increased by six and five per cent. There is no reason to believe that this would lead to unequal increases between Provinces.

I would remind the hon. lady that if we were to reach any such conclusion—and I have discussed this with my colleagues—it would be on the basis also of an increase over and above what was paid this year, when there was, indeed, a very large increase in enrolment in post-secondary education. In this case, there is a very large base from which to start.

Also, I would like to point out to the hon. lady that the federal Government has also increased substantially the amount it is allocating to young people, particularly students, whether it is in the form of summer jobs, where we have increased the amount of money going to young people this summer from $120 million to $170 million. The moneys allocated under the National Training Program have also been increased very substantially, so our young people will be better equipped to cope with the job market in the years to come.

FUNDING OF HEALTH CARE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that we have had an increase of 4 per cent in the unemployment rate in the last year. That kind of unemployment rate increase is accompanied by an increase in the demand on the health care system. Stress related illnesses have grown by approximately 20 per cent in the last year, and those illnesses include heart attacks, ulcers, and alcoholism.

The Minister indicated that he has no plans for an increase in payments for health care. Does he believe that that statement is justified when in fact demands on the health care system are growing? Should he not be considering, with other First Ministers, an increase in money for the health care system, and should that not be substantial?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker, and this is exactly what we are going to do. I do not know whether the Hon. Member was in the House when the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands asked a question about health payments. I indicated then that our payments under health care program will increase very substantially next year, and that the existing arrangements which we have with the Provinces are going to continue without any change at all next year. Therefore, our contribution to health care in this country is going to continue to be very, very significant, indeed, in the billions of dollars every year. That is what is taking place at the present time and will continue next year. No change is planned.

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, to be too precise sometimes is to attempt to mislead the House. The planned increases, according to Bill C-97, are to take care of inflation. I am speaking about an increase in demand which is caused by the Government's bad economic policy. Demand goes up as well as inflation. I am asking whether or not there will be any consideration by Cabinet, those backbenchers over there, which will provide an increased amount of money to the health care system in real dollars, not just inflationary dollars? Will you meet that demand with money?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I shall try answering in French, since the Hon. Member seems to have misunderstood the answer I gave in English. I pointed out that the Government of Canada is spending billions of dollars on contributions to health care in Canada. Under our agreements with the provinces, the amounts are increased each year according to a formula that ensures the provinces are receiving an annual and very substantial increase in the funds they receive for health services. Under this formula, which will be maintained, the amounts received by the provinces in the coming year will be even greater than what they received in previous years. Therefore, the Canadian Government's contribution to health care for Canadians, including hospital services and medical care, will continue to increase in the years to come.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION OF BELGIAN PARLIAMENTARIANS

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

EDUCATIONAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance as well. It concerns his acknowledgement that the Government is now going to apply its six and five program to post-secondary spending. At a time when not only young people, but adults who have not been able to get a job, are returning to universities and community colleges in increasing numbers, and at a time when many Provinces, if not a majority, have a greater need for money, how could the Minister justify the Government's plan to apply the six and five guidelines to post-secondary spending, when he knows that what is involved is really a cutback in the amount of money which would otherwise have gone to this sector, and at a time, in particular, when such spending is labour intensive and would be creating more jobs?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is probably aware that many provinces have restricted increases in spending on the post-secondary sector to less than 6 per cent. In fact, some provinces intend to maintain the status quo next year, without any increases in spending at all. However, the decision on how much money is to be earmarked for post-secondary education rests with the provincial authorities. As far as the Federal contribution for next year is concerned, if we apply the 6 and 5 formula it will increase by $256 million over what will be paid this year, in other words, next year, the Canadian Government will be contributing nearly $3.9 billion to post-secondary education in Canada. I may point out that this is a very substantial sum.

Second, I may remind the Hon. Member that the Government of Canada is also spending hundreds of millions of dollars on youth training through training programs provided by the Department of Employment and Immigration. The Canadian Government also has a student assistance program which provides loans and also a summer employment program with a budget of $170 million, compared to $120 million for last summer. These are real contributions the Canadian Government is making to help young Canadians, while ensuring that the money will go directly to young people.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Minister answered about ten questions I did not ask. Because Conservative provincial Governments are taking socially regressive and economically foolish steps in cutting back on post-secondary education is no reason the federal Government should follow suit. That is the important point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

EFFECT ON WOMEN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, since today is being celebrated around the world as International Women's Day, is the Minister aware that, in this sector where he is about to make cutbacks, well over 50 per cent of the people affected by job losses are women? How can he justify that to the women of Canada, particularly today?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I find it strange that the Hon. Member is talking about cutbacks when we are going to increase payments to Provinces by $256 million, and when he himself says there is no guarantee that that money will go to post-secondary education. The basis for that is his own argument that the Provinces are not necessarily allocating that money to post-secondary education. He knows this is the case in many Provinces.

Mr. Broadbent: Bring in a Bill and make them do it.

Mr. Lalonde: Even so, we are increasing significantly the amount of money going to that sector.

I have also indicated the other things we are doing to ensure that the young women as well as the young men of this country are going to benefit directly from federal programs in the areas of training, student loans, and summer jobs. These are things we are doing, and we are going to continue, Madam Speaker. I think the record of the Government of Canada in that regard stands up very well when you look at it objectively.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON STATUS OF WOMEN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, we in this House should be aware of precisely what is involved. So far the Government has applied its six and five program to pensions, and over 54 per cent of pension recipients are women. It has applied six and five to family allowances where the vast majority of recipients are women. It is now going to apply it to the education field where the vast majority of working people are women. As applied by this Government, the six and five program is nothing less than an anti-women program.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister is smiling at this, but I know lots of women will not find it funny. I ask the Minister how he can take a step that will affect disadvantageously those trying to get higher education at a reasonable cost, and at the same time take a whack at the ordinary woman in this country precisely at a time when she needs more assistance, not less?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the arguments of the Leader of the New Democratic Party are so far-fetched that quite frankly, I find it difficult to keep a straight face. Anyone who uses arguments like these must be really short of ammunition to defend his case. In any event, I am very happy to see that the Leader of the New Democratic Party found out that today was International Women's Day. I may remind the Hon. Member that the Government concerned itself with the status of women well before the Hon. Member started to take an interest in the problem, and that the policies implemented by this Government during the last fifteen years with respect to the status of women are innovative policies that compare favourably with those developed by any other country in the world. I would ask my hon. colleague to look at any other country in the world, including those being governed by a socialist government. He will realize that the Government of Canada is definitely in the forefront as far as the status of women is concerned.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DECISION ON CANADIAN LUMBER EXPORTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister responsible for International Trade. The Minister will join with hundreds of thousands of Canadians who work in our forest industry who are relieved to learn that the United States does not plan on levying countervailing duties on our lumber exports to the U.S. However, as he knows, today's decision is an interim ruling only, and it can be appealed and possibly reversed when the final decision comes down in May. What assurances can he give the House that the Government will pursue every effort and every avenue to ensure that duties will not be imposed and Canadian jobs lost?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, certainly the news we had from the United States today is of the best possible quality. I thought for a moment that the Hon. Member was going to try to make bad news out of it.

What has happened is that the U.S. Department of Commerce has made a preliminary finding that there are no subsidies on the export of Canadian softwood products to the U.S. market. Those exports have a value of more than $2 billion, and until we found other markets at least 40,000 jobs would have been lost in this country if the U.S. had decided to levy countervailing duties.

I am very happy about the fact that the provincial Governments, the industry, and the Government of Canada worked closely together to see that the claims were fully rebutted. I think the decision today is a great victory for that co-operation. It is true that it is a preliminary finding, but the process that leads to a final determination on May 23 is merely one of verifying the accuracy of the facts placed before the U.S. officials. So I am extremely confident that we are well on the way to a final victory in this matter.

May I also say to the Hon. Member, through you, Madam Speaker, that the reason she can be confident about the future is the fact that the Governments involved have worked together with the industry, without politics playing any part, to see to it that the Canadian interest was protected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the Minister that, when it comes to economic policy, our Party does not have to make bad news; his Government is quite able to do that itself.

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF GRANTS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister is ignoring the fact that there are hearings scheduled on April 14, he is ignoring the fact that there are teams of U.S. investigators who will come to Canada to confer with the industry about this finding, and he is ignoring the fact that there could be some reversal of this ruling. Will the Government act to remove those irritants which do exist, specifically some of the DREE grants and loan programs which were found to be a form of subsidy, and thereby remove any basis of appeal by U.S. lumber interests?

Mr. Cullen: You are being very helpful.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member shows a lack of understanding of the process and what is involved here. First of all, while the finding was that there was an insignificant amount of subsidy in the existence of some tax advantages and DREE grants, these were not at a level sufficient to warrant a countervailing duty. I would hardly see a very strong argument for doing away with something which is not in breach of the American regulations, if it results in creating Canadian jobs.

Mr. Lalonde: Typical Tory.

Mr. Regan: The Hon. Member does not realize that the fact that this finding has been made is an indication that the U.S. Government has withstood political pressures and made a proper factual finding, which is a good indication of the fact that we have the best relations with the United States we have had in a long time.

FINANCE

STATUS OF FEDERAL AGREEMENT ON ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Finance and concerns the status of the federal agreement on established programs. Today's newspapers report that the Minister of Finance of Ontario made the following statement yesterday after the federal-provincial conference: "The Federal Government seems prepared to maintain the existing financing formula for health programs, but wants to change the calculations for postsecondary education grants, while at the same time seeking wider control over college and university curricula." Can the Minister comment whether the Minister of Finance of Ontario did make that statement to the effect that the Federal Government wants to interfere in a provincial jurisdiction through wider control over education?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I would say to the Hon. Member that that statement is totally unfounded. In the course of numerous meetings with my provincial colleagues in the past five months, it has always been agreed that any discussion pertaining to the funding of established programs would have to do exclusively with taxation issues and that it would not have any impact on the orientation to be taken by high schools and universities, in keeping with our Constitution which acknowledges full provincial jurisdiction in the field of education.

STATUS OF WOMEN

POSITION OF ELDERLY

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Statistics Canada reports that 40 per cent of marriages end in divorce, leaving more and more women alone in later years. I should like the Minister to comment on what older women told the NDP Task Force on Older Women. They said such things as, "My only hope is to die young so I won't be a burden on society in my later years"; "I'm terrified of being unemployed and alone", or "I feel like a second-class citizen since my husband's death."

● (1440)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Will the Hon. Member please ask her question.

Mrs. Mitchell: What does the Government intend to do for such women in their middle and older years, who are the most deprived of our citizens?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I would not want us, especially us women in this House to amuse ourselves at the expense of women on this International Women's Day. If the Hon. Member for Vancouver East is now trying to help a woman who says she has a problem of loneliness in her old age, she is not doing so. On the contrary, she is laughing at this problem because the truth of the matter is . . . I am not trying to say that the Government has done great things, but for many years, we have been making steady progress to guarantee that senior citizens, especially those who live alone, three quarters of whom are women, will have pensions which will bring them above the poverty line. The Hon. Member is well aware that we still have to find some funds to make the final step across this line and that it is not so easy at the present time. However, she forgets what we have been doing regularly to ensure that these women, who do not receive a pension at the age of 64 or 61 because the age of eligibility for the federal program is set at 65, and therefore had to rely on provincial welfare payments, which were much lower than—

Madam Speaker: Order! Order!

[English]

Mrs. Mitchell: I can assure the Minister that I am very serious about this problem, Madam Speaker.

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH STANDING COMMITTEE

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for the status of women. Yesterday the Minister claimed that a standing committee on the status of women requested by both Opposition Parties would ghettoize women and be regressive. I should like to ask the Minister why such a committee would be regressive when it would deal with all women's issues, would be a focal point for action, would require all Government legislation and programs to be studied, and would be a reference point for women's organizations?

Will the Minister consult with women's organizations to obtain their views on this matter and, if they agree, will she then press for a standing committee on the status of women?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I could not take the motion put forward yesterday very seriously since it was a non votable motion and since there were very, very few Members of the Opposition present to participate in the debate.

One of the reasons why I do not prefer to have such a committee is that the issues that affect women are not issues that affect women alone, they are societal issues that must be studied in the broadest possible way by every Member of the House and by all Canadians. What the Hon. Member for Vancouver East is suggesting is that we ghettoize the problems of women. Is divorce a women's problem? Is child care a women's problem? Are pensions women's problems? No, they are problems in which we must all participate.

Oral Questions

INDUSTRY

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—REQUEST FOR INCREASED ASSISTANCE

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, because I do not want him to feel left out today.

The United States and Japan both spend twice the percentage of their Gross National Product on research and development that this country does. This enables them, and has enabled them, to take a great many important orders away from Canadian producers, because of lower prices, better quality and design, and it has enabled them to increase their share of the Canadian market from 19 per cent 15 years ago, when the Prime Minister took over, to 31 per cent today.

Is the Government giving any consideration and, if not, will it give consideration to offering the same incentives to Canadian industry to increase its research and development as are offered in the United States and Japan, so that our industry can do a great deal more research and development and, in so doing, become more competitive and win more orders and more jobs for Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am happy that the Hon. Member is showing interest in this particular subject. Perhaps he realizes that he is not talking of spending by the federal Government in terms of percentages compared to the Government of Japan. He is looking at just one aspect of this. No doubt his remarks are addressed mainly to the private sector and to the university sector. The university sector, of course, is being assisted by the federal Government through some research grants.

The figures the Hon. Member is quoting are quite misleading because they seem to indicate misinformation on his part, that there is only one source of R and D, whereas there are many in a country.

Mr. Hees: Madam Speaker, I can assure the Prime Minister that the figures I have given come right from Statistics Canada and are accurate figures. They show that those countries have increased their share of our market from 19 per cent, when he first took over as Prime Minister, to 31 per cent today. That is very serious.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister if he would stop putting this matter aside, as he always does, take it seriously, and start to do something about it while he is still in office. I can assure him that it is later than he thinks.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that I am not challenging his figures. When he talks about twice the percentage of GNP, is he talking of the percentage by the federal Government as opposed to the national Government of Japan, the percentage spent by the universities, or by the private sector? If he says his figures are accurate, perhaps he can enlighten me on that.

Mr. Hees: I am talking about the total.

INCOME TAX

TIMING OF REFUND PAYMENTS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Yesterday in reply to a question from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North, the Minister said that he expected Parliament to pass the Government's massive income tax legislation, Bill C-139, before the end of March, in which case the time allocated for issuing income tax refunds this year would be the same or about the same as last year.

If Parliament is not able to pass Bill C-139 before the end of March, will the Government withhold income tax refunds due to taxpayers across the country until the legislation is passed, which could be as late as May, or even June?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I am a bit surprised at the pessimistic assumptions made by the Hon. Member, since this morning, I attended the proceedings of the House which was sitting in Committee of the Whole, and I realized that we had made very substantial progress in the debate on Bill C-139, and I am still convinced that we shall be able to pass this legislation well before the end of March.

[English]

EXPLOITATION OF TAXPAYERS AWAITING REFUNDS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I will repeat my question. If Parliament does not pass Bill C-139 by the end of March despite the Minister's optimism, will the Government still withhold income tax refunds due Canadians?

While the Minister is answering that question, would he also answer this one. Does he know that it is the Government's foot dragging on income tax returns that is forcing desperate Canadians into the hands of fly-by-night firms that will pay on the spot cash to Canadians for their tax refunds before they are received from the Government? If he does, would he at least arrange to have processed on a priority basis the income tax returns of Canadians in desperate need in order to avoid that kind of exploitation?

● (1450)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I am surprised, and not agreeably so, at the alarmist comments the Hon. Member makes so often, and I would like to ask him to stop making assumptions that are likely to alarm Canadian citizens. He should encourage Canadians to complete their tax returns as soon as possible and to return them to the Department of National Revenue. I would ask the Hon. Member to co-operate with other Members of this House in expediting the passage of Bill C-139, and then we shall be able to mail out refunds at the same rate as we did last year. Right now, there is no reason to panic and make alarmist speeches. Instead, it would be better to ask people to complete their returns as soon as possible, and to get them back to the Department, and I think the Hon. Member himself should co-operate with other Members in this House in expediting the passage of Bill C-139.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NUMBER OF MANAGERS

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. In light of the allegations raised yesterday by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South that the Government had increased the number of managers in its top Departments by 78 per cent as a way of skirting its own six and five restraint program, would the President of the Treasury Board provide a concise and factual explanation to clarify the validity or indeed, the lack of validity of those allegations?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the figures mentioned by—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: —that Conservative Member yesterday simply reflect the bringing together into one management category of 55 various groups which were previously listed separately. All these people were previously managers, and the conversion of people into the new management category has not resulted in mass promotions. In fact the management category compensation plan is specifically referred to in Bill C-124, and all the people in question are strictly subject to the six and five guidelines.

I might add that this program was first announced in 1980 by my predecessor, and he further announced its implementation in April, 1981. I wonder where the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has been, obviously not paying attention to an obvious and self-evident program.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WAGE EQUALITY FOR WOMEN

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour who, I am sure, is aware that equal pay for work of equal value has long been one of the prime objectives of the women's movement, that is, not just to get it legislated, which we now have in the Canadian Human Rights Act, but to get it implemented. Also I am sure he is aware that, with women earning only 60 per cent on average of what men are earning, unequal pay is widespread and not merely the subject of isolated cases with which the Canadian Human Rights Commission might deal. What is the Minister's Department doing to see that their is implementation in the corporations under his jurisdiction?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that the principle of equal pay for work of equal value has been and is a principle which has guided the Liberal Government for many years. It is because of this concern that the previous Parliament passed legislation for the formation of the Canadian Human Rights Commission under which this principle is included.

In reply to the specific question of the Hon. Member, under Part III of the Code we have inspectors in the field who can file complaints with the Human Rights Commission for employees under federal jurisdiction. But let me remind the Hon. Member that 90 per cent of the work force is under provincial jurisdiction. If she looks across the country from British Columbia to Newfoundland, including the Province which is run by an NDP Government, she will not find, except for one Province, legislation for the provision of equal pay for work of equal value.

Ms. McDonald: Of course it is true that only 10 per cent of employees come under federal jurisdiction, but it does not cheer us up at all to say that, because the Provinces are not doing enough, somehow we should ignore that 10 per cent.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is not supposed to argue when asking her question. If she has a question, I will allow it.

COMPILATION OF STATISTICS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, what ammunition is the Minister of Labour prepared to provide for the trade union movement and for the women's organizations which are working for equal pay for work of equal value, by having inspections, by reporting statistics, and by providing accurate data so that year-by-year comparisons can be made? Perhaps the Minister is aware that series have been discontinued which show the widening gap. Is he prepared to re-institute them? Is he prepared to make this material available so that people who are concerned will actually see this comes about and does not really remain only a principle?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, certainly we are always preoccupied with improving the system of filing complaints with the Human Rights Commission. This is why we have Part III under the Code. But the best answer to the Hon. Member's question is the fact that last year 3,300 federal Public Service sector workers came forward and filed complaints with the Commission. The same can be said of some 500 Government librarians and registered nursing assistants who came forward and obtained a settlement in pursuance of this legislation.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is the Government planning a review of the conflict of interest guidelines? If so, could the Prime Minister assure the House that the review will take the form of a study by a parliamentary committee and not simply be an in-house review?

POSSIBILITY OF REVIEWS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, is the Prime Minister saying no to both elements of the question? Specifically, will he answer whether he is planning any form of review of the conflict of interest guidelines as a result of the Gillespie affair?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have been considering the possibility of improving those guidelines. I was certainly distressed at the way in which they have been interpreted in the past few weeks, practically treating former Ministers as non-persons. I would be happy to hear the views of the Opposition as to how we should treat its former Ministers who are lobbying the Government. We have not heard much about that. I am reflecting upon the possibility of looking at those guidelines, of considering improving them. I have made no decision as to how or when it should be done.

INQUIRY RESPECTING REPRESENTATIONS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has he received any representations from Michael Pitfield or from any of his Cabinet Ministers with respect to suggestions as to changes in those guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Madam Speaker, I could say that it is none of the Hon. Member's business, but the answer is no.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONSEQUENCES OF IMPLEMENTATION OF YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Provincial social services Ministers at a meeting recently stated that the federal Young Offenders Act will put thousands of teenagers in jail and deprive them of the chance to rehabilitate and, further, that the Act will jail youths who otherwise would be handled by social workers. Will the Minister advise that this will not be the result of the implementation of the Young Offenders Act?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the disposition of particular cases will remain in the hands of the courts and in the hands of the judges. I was surprised to read that, because the whole purpose of the Young Offenders Act is to open the door wider to community-based corrections in which young people are punished for their crimes in ways other than by incarceration. I think a number of Provinces are unduly emphasizing in their discussions with me the extent to which incarceration ought to be used for young people. My own view is that it should be reserved for crimes of violence, in particular, and for individual young people who cannot be handled in the community in any other way. It should be a last resort. I am disappointed to hear Provinces suggesting that in some cases it ought to be a first resort.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

PRACTICE OF GATING

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General about the practice of gating, mandatory supervision. The Minister will know that the Supreme Court of Ontario has said that the practice of gating is illegal, and that the Federal Court has said that it is legal. What is the Minister's view? Does he not agree that, rather than waiting a year or a year and a half for the Supreme Court of Canada to settle the question, he should bring forward legislation in this Chamber immediately to clarify whether or not gating will be permitted?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I agree that gating is a very important power that should reside within the criminal justice system so that those individuals—and there will be a very small number—who approach mandatory supervision and are easily spotted as being walking timebombs, in effect, can be kept behind bars for the whole sentence imposed upon them by the courts. But I do not think that the court's determination will take as long as the Hon. Member suggested.

• (1500)

I am glad to report to the House that yesterday leave was obtained by the law officers of the Crown to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. We intend to ask for an expeditious hearing and resolution of the matter. I would indicate that, in the meanwhile, the Parole Board is continuing to impose gating in appropriate circumstances. I have given the assurance that if the Supreme Court of Canada takes away the gating power of the Parole Board, I would move quickly to bring before this House—and I hope I will have the Hon. Member's support—some measure to restore the authority to gate in the limited cases where it is proper.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY RESPECTING NUMBERS RELEASED UNDER CONDITIONAL FREEDOM AND MANDATORY SUPERVISION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the same Minister. I do hope that, while he is waiting for the Supreme Court decision, the Minister will take full responsibility for every murder committed by inmates on parole. Madam Speaker, can the Minister tell the House how many individuals accused of murder are now either on parole or under mandatory supervision?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether I fully understood the question of the Hon. Member, but I can tell him that every day there are about 2,000 inmates under mandatory supervision and we now use gating or the power to put some of them back in jail. No inmates are now free who would still be behind bars if the Board did not use that power. I can assure the House that the Parole Board does use that power at the present time and that it will continue to do so while we are waiting for a decision from the Supreme Court of Canada.

BROADCASTING ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT ABUSIVE COMMENT ON THE BASIS OF SEX

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-675, an Act to amend the Broadcasting Act.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, my Bill is a very short one. It consists simply of a provision to incorporate into the Broadcasting Act provisions which are now in the broadcasting regulations regarding abuse on the basis of race, religion or creed. The purpose of my amendment is to add the word "sex" to the list of groups which are not be abused by comment or pictorial representation, and to see that this is part of the Broadcasting Act which gives direction to the CRTC in formulating policy and further regulations.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-143

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-143, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on that day, all proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of that stage shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, the Bill before us today can be described quite simply as a measure required by the Government for prudent financial housekeeping.

The economic statement delivered last October by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) made it clear that the extent of the borrowing authority that had already been granted to the Government for the current fiscal year was not sufficient to meet the financial requirements to the end of that period.

Let me quote from that October 27 statement the following two sentences:

I have also made it clear from the estimates I have presented that further borrowing authority will be required before the end of this fiscal year. In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-1984 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

In his meeting with the provincial Finance Ministers yesterday, the Minister of Finance repeated his intention to proceed with the budget as soon as possible, but in the interim, and during the immediate post-budget period, interim borrowing authority sought by this Bill is required.

Members opposite have feigned shock and amazement at the present Bill. They are not fooling anyone. There have been protests about the inclusion of interim borrowing authority to apply to the next fiscal year, but this is not a new procedure and the interim amount granted will be deducted from the amount to be set out for 1983-1984 financial requirements in a subsequent Bill.

In their frantic and frequent efforts of late to thwart the smooth operation of Parliament while they attempt to get their own act together, Members of the Official Opposition have added insult to the financial injury they are causing the Canadian people by stalling this and other legislation before this House. They have so little respect for the intelligence of Canadians that they would have us believe they are dragging their feet on this matter and others because they do not have sufficient information. I would draw their attention to the 6,000 pages of Main estimates material tabled two weeks ago today by my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), as ample indication of how the money will be spent.

To refresh their memories, I would point out that in tabling the Main Estimates the President of the Treasury Board indicated that almost two-thirds of these budgetary Estimates are slated for statutory expenditures based on continuing authority given by Acts of the current or previous Parliaments which determine the basis whereby individuals, businesses, provincial and other Governments become entitled to receive federal funds.

The Main Estimates show in great detail the wide variety of programs being carried on by this Government living up to its responsibilities of assisting Canadians who have been buffeted, as we all know, by the worst recession we have experienced in this country in some years.

They reflect a 21 per cent rise in cash payments under the Established Programs Financing Act whereby the federal Government contributes to the financing of hospital insurance, medicare, extended health care and post-secondary education. They indicate a $2.9 billion allocation to Unemployment Insurance as we anticipate a slow recovery in employment prospects during our gradual recovery from the recession. These funds are committed to assist in that area.

• (1510)

The Estimates show a 21 per cent increase in federal contributions to the Provinces, for example, under the Canada Assistance Plan. The federal Government pays for 50 per cent of eligible provincial and municipal expenditures for assistance payments, welfare services and certain health programs. We also cover one-half of the costs of child support services such as foster care, daycare and a broad array of other family and social support services.

If Members opposite are still in doubt as to how the money will be spent, I would mention that the Main Estimates also spell out a number of new initiatives undertaken by the Government, including the Small Business Investment Grant Program, the New Employment Expansion Development Program or the NEED Program.

I find the allegation that Parliament is being kept in the dark as to the disposition of the funding under consideration particularly ironic because I, as Minister responsible for finance in areas such as the Insurance Department, have been requested by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to answer questions on Estimates dealing with those expenditures. Other Members of the Government have been requested to substantiate the expenditures listed in the Estimates which the President of the Treasury Board has already tabled in the House.

I find it ironic and not really worth arguing with Hon. Members opposite when they say they do not have enough information to gauge what the expenditures are for. Will they not attend any of these committee meetings? Are they not going to ask questions of Ministers? I cannot believe that.

Without this interim authorization, the borrowing activities of the Government would be constrained in the early months of the new fiscal year, which is a period when all Members appreciate the Government usually faces heavy cash requirements stemming from the payment of tax refunds and from other seasonal factors.

The point that we urge upon all Members, if we have to repeat it, is that if borrowing powers are limited during that period, the Government would be precluded from prudent planning of its debt program and would not be able to take advantage of developing market situations. This could be costly not only to the Government, but could impact upon provincial Governments in their borrowing activities in the market and upon the private sector in its participation as well in the capital market. As I said, it behooves the Government and Parliament to proceed in an orderly way with the legislation before it because it comes down to the issue of good financial housekeeping.

Bill C-143 is but one of a series of measures being undertaken by the Government to provide the financial setting for the development of a national strategy for economic recovery.

There were a number of questions asked about Bill C-139 during Question Period today. That is another Bill which Hon. Members, at times, had requested the Government to proceed with quickly in order to bring about some economic stability and stability to the private sector so it would have an idea of how to plan for the future. It is in the context of bringing that improved stability to the private sector that Bill C-143 is part and parcel of the Government's program. We are reviewing priorities. We are preparing a budget and we are reviewing these matters in an attempt to proceed without adding to the deficit.

In the circumstances, proposals for future Government action involving either increased spending or revenue reduction will have to compete with a wide range of other needs as expressed to us by Canadians generally. We have made it clear that we are seeking areas where we can act in close co-operation with business and labour in order to strengthen the financial health of the private sector and its ability to expand and prosper. We have indicated that this legislation will assist the Government to deal with the market in an orderly manner.

I conclude by saying that, in the consultations that we have had with the private sector for the preparation of the budget and the prospect of financial recovery in a wider sense, I was impressed by the participating groups and their willingness to recognize that we must all set aside our differences and work together toward a sense of national purpose and a renewed spirit of co-operation. We would ask that Members opposite demonstrate a similar desire to get Canada back on the road to economic recovery. Giving this matter speedy consideration by the House would be a good first step.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to protest strongly the Government's attempt to gag debate on the borrowing Bill by introducing time allocation on Bill C-143. We feel that this Bill is far too important to be stopped before the Government can be held accountable for its spending.

I listened with sheer amazement to the Minister's comments during the presentation of his argument. I did not recognize any sense of shame or discomfort over introducing a borrowing Bill of this size. The Government has effectively asked for a blank cheque to borrow $19 billion just for the next few months. The Minister suggests that this is prudent.

I would like to put that $19 billion into perspective. That $19 billion is the size of the Government's entire budget ten years ago. It is 12 times what the Government spends on post-secondary education. It is 13 times what the Government spends on employment programs. That $19 billion of borrowed money is 15 times what the Government spends on housing. It is nearly double what the Government spends on old age pensions and is four times what the Government spends on medicare. It is eight times what it spends on Family Allowances. That amount is double what the Government is paying in Unemployment Insurance benefits. It is more than double what the Government spends on defence.

At the present time, the public debt charges represent the fastest growing envelope of expenditure. Public debt charges now amount to 21.7 per cent of all Government payments. The Government has made a nation of promise into a nation of debtors. It still will not say what it needs the money for. Despite the Minister's comments about the Estimates, he has not provided any forecasts for his spending for the next few years. The Government has not provided any forecasts for spending since 1981. What information it has provided has been grossly inadequate. It has kept delaying the presentation of its budget. It has given us no fiscal framework upon which to judge its requests. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) says that he will play the budget deficit like an accordian. He is playing some very sour notes.

In the absence of all of this information, the Government has tabled spending estimates totalling almost $90 billion. That is a 17 per cent increase over the 1982-1983 Main Estimates, despite what the Minister and his colleagues say. At the same time as the Government is asking pensioners and families to sacrifice income and abide by the six and five restraint program, its own Estimates show that Government spending continues to escalate wildly.

The Minister has spoken of the need to increase social support services. Let me relate some of the other spending increases that are planned. The public debt charge is up 10.7 per cent from last year's Main Estimates. The number of management positions has increased 78.3 per cent over the last year for the 11 largest Departments. The Estimates for the Department of Agriculture have increased 14.3 per cent over last year's Main Estimates. Accommodation costs alone for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce are scheduled to increase by 40 per cent. There is no reason given for that.

The cost of FIRA is forecast to rise 14 per cent. The total Estimates for the Department of Justice are up 10 per cent. The Main Estimates for the Department of National Defence have been increased by 11 per cent. The Main Estimates for the Department of National Health and Welfare have increased by 13 per cent, but National Revenue is increasing by 9 per cent. The total Estimates for the Solicitor General are up by 16 per cent. All of these increases are taking place in this age of six and five. All of this is in the name of social services.

Let me give some more examples of Government spending. In terms of employment, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission is now spending more on unemployment than on employment. In Transportation, subsidies to VIA Rail will increase 49.3 per cent to $755 million in spite of cutbacks in service last year. In terms of transfer payments, the Minister ignores the fact that payments to Crown corporations will jump 30 per cent, to $3.8 billion this year. Transportation and communications costs are up 16 per cent on a Main Estimates to Main Estimates basis. Professional and special services are up by 16 per cent, rental costs by 19 per cent and purchased repair and upkeep is up by 45 per cent.

This is not compassionate Government spending; this is Government spending which is out of control. How can we even trust these figures? Last year more money was added to total spending through Supplementary Estimates than through increases in the Main Estimates. All sense of Government accountability and Government responsibility has clearly been cast aside, and by gagging this debate, the Government is saying: "Trust us. Forgive us our past mistakes; we will try to do better." We cannot do that because someone must call this Government to account. Future Governments, a Conservative Government, and future generations will be paying for the present Government's mistakes, and no attempt to stop debate can cover up that fact.

The mistakes of the Government have been too horrendous to ignore. This is the Government which ran up the deficit in prosperous years and entered the recession with a $10 billion deficit. It took 113 years, from Confederation to 1980, for the net federal debt to total $68.6 billion. In four years, Ottawa will have more than doubled the net federal debt, from the $68.6 billion in 1980 to $152 billion. The Liberals will have done it.

The economy is in a very precarious state right now. According to Statistics Canada, 1982 was the worst year for the economy since 1933. As one indication in the manufacturing industry alone, the capacity utilization in the fourth quarter was at its lowest level, around 63 per cent, since Statistics Canada began keeping records more than 20 years ago. In the last quarter, real GNP dropped 2.8 per cent from 1981 on a year to year basis. It is the first time since figures were kept on a quarterly basis that GNP has dropped in six consecutive quarters.

Against this dismal background, the leading indicators show that there will be a recovery this year, but that if it occurs, it appears as though it will be a very weak one. For instance, Dominion-Ames Securities gives 50/50 odds of a 1 per cent GNP growth this year and possibly 3 per cent next year. Wood Gundy is a little more optimistic, predicting that real output will grow at a 3.6 per cent annual rate between the fourth quarter of last year and the fourth quarter of 1984. The Conference Board forecasts real growth of only 1.2 per cent this year. All of these predictions indicate that this is not an economy which can easily manage to absorb borrowing of the magnitude the Government is running up.

The key to recovery will be confidence. Consumers and investors must have confidence that there will be jobs and markets before they will begin spending and investing. By demonstrating that it is bankrupt in terms of money and policies, the Government threatens to kill confidence and choke off our fragile chance for recovery, because confidence dies when Government plays with the numbers and gives forecasts which prove to be wrong or refuses to provide any forecasts at all. It dies when Government stifles debate and refuses to explain and justify its spending and avoid accountability.

The Government must explain where it is going and what it is doing with our money. We must start reducing the deficit. We must start limiting Government spending. We must start creating a positive and open investment climate. We must start reducing the burden of Government and unnecessary regulation. There are positive measures which can be put in place. The Government is clearly not able to make those moves.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I quite frankly do not believe that we are hearing Hon. Members rise today to speak against the motion which has been introduced to allocate time for discussion of Bill C-143. I suspect that to the general public, allocating time sounds like a reasonable gesture.

Some Hon. Members: It is.

Mr. Riis: However, what it means is that the Government has decided to stop debate on the question.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Riis: It has decided to gag debate. It has decided that it has had enough at this stage of the proceedings and that it is no longer prepared to continue with this open, free parliamentary discussion.

The Liberals say: "Listen, we have spent nearly seven days discussing Bill C-143, and certainly after seven days we have heard enough". I think the Government needs to be reminded that we are discussing a Bill requesting authority to borrow $19 billion. That amounts to something like $2.7 billion a day. If the Government thinks that is enough public discussion and examination at this critical stage of principle, then I think the Government has once again shown us that it has lost touch with reality.

I could not believe the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) as he stood in his place today and said: "Listen, those people in the Opposition are feigning shock and amazement. They are bluffing. They are acting surprised when they obviously are not."

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: I would ask the Minister of State for Finance whether he has spoken to a normal person in the last six months. Has he gone out and sat in the coffee shops and gone up and down the streets of his constituency?

An Hon. Member: Yes, he has.

Mr. Riis: Has he spoken to a single normal person in this country? If he has, then he knows very well that Bill C-143 is causing everyone in the country to shake their heads in utter disbelief. Then the Minister went on to say: "But yes, they want their tax returns". What do tax returns have to do with Bill C-143? Again it demonstrates the inability of certain Hon. Members opposite to deal with and grasp the seriousness of the request which is before Parliament today.

I want to remind the Minister of State for Finance that most Canadians admire the concept of Parliament and strongly care about this institution. This is evident from one end of the country to the other. We have seen it develop over hundreds of years, but it has now progressed to a point at which the Government of Canada is making a mockery of the institution of Parliament by going against the very fundamental nature of Parliament. After all, when one considers the fundamental mandate of Parliament, one finds that it is to collect taxes and to spend those collected taxes wisely. Bill C-139 indicates that this is not being done with any sense of justice, fairness and fair play.

While certain institutions are having their marginal tax rate reduced, most Canadians are having it increased. People earning taxable incomes in excess of $133,000 will have a marginal tax rate drop of 10 percentage points.

Certain institutions in the country, and I will only name the Royal Bank of Canada as an example, will be able to use the existing tax structure to accumulate profits. Last year, 1982, which was a so-called difficult year for the banks, there were profits in excess of $320 million. How many dollars in taxes did the Royal Bank of Canada pay last year? I did not pay a single penny in income tax. That is the kind of news received by ordinary Canadians who then shake their heads in disbelief when Hon. Members opposite stand up and say: "We are abiding by the true sense of Parliament and are collecting taxes in a just, fair and equitable fashion".

How is the Government spending those taxes which have been unfairly derived, I will say, from the public of Canada? The Government then comes forward and says: "We will now spend those moneys and will ask Parliament to approve the expenditure of $19 billion, but we will not tell you how we will spend that money. We will not utter a single sentence which will give Canadians a clue as to how their moneys will be expended." That is a pig in a poke. As an Hon. Member said previously, that is like asking someone to sign a blank cheque. No one believes that that is a sensible approach to managing the country's finances.

I will say that Hon. Members opposite are doing everything possible to make a mockery of this institution. Now, today, by asking Members of Parliament to be muzzled, to stop discussing this $19 billion, by saying that it has heard enough, the Government once again shows the kind of arrogance, insensitivity and uncaring behaviour which it has come to demonstrate time and time again. I suspect that Canadians now simply shrug their shoulders in the manner of that infamous Gallic shrug of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he said: "There is nothing that can be done. These people are out of control. They have no idea as to what fiscal responsibility actually means." I remember that not many weeks ago the Prime Minister stood up and said: "We are now committing ourselves to stimulating the economy in an effort to create jobs". Then yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stood up and said: "Hold it, we have now changed our minds. We will not really stimulate in terms of job creation; we will leave it to the private sector." That man must believe in fairies and leprechauns. Anyone today who believes that the private sector will be the springboard for recovery does not understand what is going on in the Canadian economy.

With regard to the capacity existing in the plants, mines and factories of this country, it will take months and months to get back to the point where we left off. With the level of confidence that exists in the investment sector, businessmen will not fall over themselves at this point to stimulate the economy and get things going. No businessman will do that when there are two million people out of work, essentially on the dole of one kind or another, and hundreds of thousands of other Canadians are threatened with job loss, assuming they will lose their jobs, are laid off prematurely this year or are having an extended vacation period. In other words, Canadians know full well that their purchasing power is being eroded on a daily basis. They are not going to run out and stimulate the economy by making large much-needed purchases, spending their hard-earned money in an effort to get the rebound under way.

I want to dissociate the Party I represent, the New Democratic Party, from the position that the catalyst or springboard is going to be the private sector. They want to see some leadership from the federal Government before they spend their money, and so they should. Before they expand and invest their shareholders' money, they want some idea from this Government where it is going, what its policies are, what are its long and short-term programs and its economic and long-term strategies.

For Members opposite to stand up and say to the business community and the consumers of Canada "have faith in us", "have confidence in Mr. Trudeau and his Cabinet" is asking too much. There are simply too many incidents that have occurred which have proven that we cannot have faith in this Government in terms of providing economic and social leadership in this country.

I close by saying that we in the New Democratic Party feel that if there is one thing we should be doing today to take a major step in confidence-building in this country, it is not to terminate the debate on Bill C-143. It is too important a Bill. It involves too much money to have debate curtailed, to have the Opposition voices muzzled.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, some Hon. Members have been explaining why they are opposed to the Government borrowing money to stimulate the economy, and at this point I would like to point out that during the past year, the parties opposite have, in fact, been urging the Government, because of the economic recession that is affecting Canada as it has been affecting other industrialized countries, to create jobs and to put workers on the road to prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, what is astonishing here is not so much the Government's deficit as the Opposition's lact of intellectual currency. They are having trouble making any worthwhile suggestions for helping Canadians get back to work and getting this country on the way to recovery.

Mr. Speaker, if we consider the present situation, it is clear that the problems are very serious and that people are going through extremely difficult times. Both Government and Opposition Members are fully aware of these problems, but sitting in the House and making speeches and especially repeating the same thing over and over again is not going to help us find any real solutions.

Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to these speeches today, and most of them seem to demonstrate that the Opposition is completely incapable of proposing any serious solutions in the House. The Opposition has been asking: What is the Government going to do with the money it borrows in the years to come? I would like to give a few examples of what the Government is going to do with this money. However, first of all we should understand that the Canadian Government has a budget of $90 billion. Now, when loans are contracted, it is normal to check what percentage the loan is of existing funds. A $19 billion loan compared with a total budget of $90 billion is a very clear example of a situation in which proper ratios are respected.

However, Mr. Speaker, although at this time we do have a very substantial deficit that is raising highbrows in the country, it is probably advisable for the Government, in difficult times such as these, to use the money for specific projects that will be a good investment for several generations. Remember what the United States did during the depression. At that time, the Roosevelt Administration invested funds in basic infrastructures which are still being used today in 1983, and which were built in the 1930s and 1940s.

Here is one example. In Eastern Quebec, including the Gaspé area, people are awaiting the start of an economic recovery program that was announced in 1982 by the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau). Part of the funds that will be borrowed will make it possible to invest over $100 million in this area, thus giving the people that have been hardest hit by unemployment in this country a chance to have durable infrastructures and young people a real chance to set up a framework for long and prosperous development.

Often, Hon. Members tend to compare apples and oranges. If we look at Vancouver or Montreal or Toronto, we see that most of the services are in place and that the people who live there have just about everything they need for work and recreation. However, if we look at the remoter areas of this country, to the south, east and west, we see that those areas have been neglected for years, for various reasons. Nevertheless, these people are also entitled to develop their region. The Gaspé program is estimated at about $100 million, funds that will be used to build piers and airports, to stimulate the local fishing industry and make it competitive, and to offer young people a future that will be worthwhile.

There is also the Kirby Report which was tabled in the House a few weeks ago and contains 57 recommendations. In its working hypotheses it urges injecting $200 million into the fisheries in eastern Canada to make the industry competitive and thus create new jobs and access to new markets. These are very specific proposals. Furthermore, there are regions in eastern Canada that lack certain infrastructures, and that is where we are going to invest the amounts Parliament is being asked to ratify.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could consider the airport situation in the riding of Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine. For years, the Îles-de-la-Madeleine airport was abandoned. A while ago, the Department of Transport invested millions of dollars to make the airport suitable for both passengers and airlines, in order to simplify access and to stimulate economic activity in that area. The same applies to airports on the Middle and Lower North Shore, and I am thinking of the airports at Havre-St-Pierre, Chèverie and Lourdes-du-Blanc-Sablon, airports which were practically non-existent. Granted, an airport 3,500 feet long costs an average of between $4 million and $4.5 million. So at this stage, the Government needs money to build these infrastructures. Mr. Speaker, if we borrow the money, for these infrastructures, they will last for ten, fifteen or twenty years. That is what we should consider. If the money were borrowed just to pay current outstanding debts, that would be unacceptable. However, the money is going to be used for capital investment and the result will be an asset to the country.

Mr. Speaker, the same applies to piers. Both in the East and the West, there are structures that have been abandoned. The people want to participate in the country's economic recovery, and they need infrastructures. With these funds we will be able to improve existing facilities and create new ones to help vital sectors of our economy develop as they should.

As I was saying a while ago, this Parliament's greatest problem is that hon. Members opposite are bankrupt of ideas. Canadians, therefore, do not want us to hear about deficits, but would rather consider the challenges which may result from the present situation. One needs only compare that situation with that in the United States, France and also Great Britain to realize that the problems are just about the same. What really matters at this stage is for us to properly manage the negative growth, the recession, in order to come out of it with the best possible record as regards individual and corporate citizens as well as the Government.

I suggest, therefore, that if Hon. Members opposite want to act in a responsible manner, they should make an effort to offer solutions, show imagination, because imagination is exactly what is needed to start the economy moving again. For the time being, opposition Members are satisfied with rehashing the same old stories dealing with hypothetical situations, without ever coming up with worthwhile remedies. I hope the Progressive Conservative Party Leadership Convention will bring out new ideas to ensure Canada's prosperity for now and the future. When one compares our situation in Canada with that of other countries—I see a number of opposition Members who travelled abroad recently—one soon realizes that Canada is better off than other countries coming out of this crisis. It is always easy to scare people with prophecies of doom and gloom.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the worst part of the crisis is over and that we must look to the future, with the hope that the borrowing power the Government is now seeking will accomplish what the opposition parties and Hon. Members on both sides of the House really want, namely, new jobs and the economic recovery of this country.

Mr. Speaker, there are important projects on the North Shore which have been shelved for many years and which the Government wants to see moving again with this money. There are for instance the Pointe-Noire project, the fishing development in Port-Cartier, the Schefferville Recreation Center—which already has the support of the federal Government which pays its administrative costs—the Schefferville Ski Resort, and the reason the Government is stepping in is because the Iron Ore Company has stopped paying for these services. And thanks to the Canadian taxpayers the Schefferville people can enjoy these services in spite of the current hard times.

I hope, therefore, that our hon. colleagues opposite will show a greater sense of responsibility by accepting to end these discussions and dispose of this bill, which will trigger an immediate upturn in our economy, for Canadians no longer want talk but action.

[English]

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, this is the second time in a few months that I have risen to address the subject of closure. The Government continues its old practice of pushing and shoving, then using a club to get what it wishes rather than using the time-proven method of consultation, full information and then negotiation to get its legislation through. This group under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gives us little or no information, instead of full information. Instead of consulting, it tells us it knows what is best for us. Instead of negotiation, it says to the House of Commons, "Stuff it! If you do not like what we want, we'll just push it through with Standing Order 75 anyway".

Let us look at the record. This Government has used Standing Order 75, 19 times, counting this time. Is it any wonder, given this process and the process, which I will outline, of introducing this Bill, that we are questioning it? Is it any wonder, given the actions of this Government in the last few weeks—and I will just speak about the last few weeks—regarding the actions of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) in the coal project, and the money wasted there, or the payment of $800 per day to Mr. Macdonald to check into the economy? We all know what is wrong with the economy. There are many people out there unemployed who would like one-eighth of $800 per day just to keep them going. With the constant examples of waste and questionable spending, which are put before this House by the Auditor General and by Hon. Members of Parliament each and every day, is it any wonder that we, the Opposition, are questioning the Government when it puts before us a borrowing Bill of this magnitude? The Minister says, "Well, you have before you this great book of Estimates", I believe he said there were thousands of pages, I cannot remember how many.

Miss Carney: Six thousand.

Mr. Schellenberger: Yes, 6,000 pages. Open for scrutiny there are the great spending practices of the Government. Well, every Hon. Member of Parliament knows just how well you can scrutinize the Estimates by looking in that big Blue Book. It is impossible to go through it adequately without the proper staff. The Government is using this absolute power—and that is what the closure motion is, absolute power—and we are questioning the ability and the practice of this Government to use this method time after time after time. We can only hope that the Government will be remembered for what it has done and by the way it is using the power which Canadians have given to it, or which it has taken for itself.

Rather than building confidence, which is so necessary in this country at this point, this Government asks first for $5 billion, then for $14 billion, or $19 billion all in one bite, in one piece of legislation. Is it no wonder that such a deep psychological barrier exists in this country? No activity is taking place. The psychological barrier is in place and, as a result, we have a self-fulfilling predicament. We have lower than anticipated revenues. The Government tells us we need more revenue because business taxes are down. Why are business taxes down? Because businesses are going into insolvency, bankruptcy, or just trying to save themselves as we go through this recession which we have been put into. We have more unemployment, therefore there are fewer people paying taxes and, as a result, we have less consumer spending and fewer businesses which are able to survive. It is a self-fulfilling predicament which goes round and round. People who have the ability to participate in consumer spending are concerned that they may be next. As a result of this thinking they are putting their money into savings when they should be spending that money and helping the country get back on its feet.

Instead of a borrowing Bill of this magnitude, Mr. Speaker, if the Government needs some money for the next few months it should present a borrowing Bill of less magnitude and then a plan for recovery to put confidence back into the private and public sector and get us on the road to recovery. What do we have instead? We have Bills presented to us to implement budgets which have done nothing but create a lack of confidence in this country, and we have this borrowing Bill. Instead of assisting business, we have raises in taxes, increases in UIC premiums, the Provinces have increased Workmen's Compensation payments, federal Government increases of 12.5 per cent in small business taxes, a 50 per cent decrease in capital cost allowances in the first year, and limits in interest deductions for new capital expenditures. If these are the kinds of positions which are put forward to create confidence in the business section, it is just not there, Mr. Speaker. Instead, we have the largest borrowing Bill in Canadian history, a Bill which has been introduced without any formal forecast.

A few figures were thrown out by the Minister of Finance and they are supposed to be adequate for the House of Commons to accept a $19-billion borrowing Bill. No new budget was put before us as the Minister of Finance promised he would do before coming to Parliament for additional borrowing. We have the Government saying instead, "Trust us. Give us this $19 billion. We need it to start off the spring on the right foot." Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that we are debating this Bill, or trying to, that we in the Opposition are placing squarely before the Government the kind of record it has and the kind of change which we would like to see in this country through debate? We are asking for forecasts. We are asking for reasons. We are asking for logic. We are asking for some hope for the businessmen, the farmers, the workers and consumers of this country, who are desperately seeking that kind of hope and confidence for fiscal year 1983.

What can those Members of Parliament say to their constituents? They have to say, "Well, we are adding to our gross debt". It is now $134 billion. Given the musings of the Minister of Finance it will be over $160 billion next year. One in every four tax dollars goes to pay interest on that deficit. This is horrendous. When we ask the Prime Minister or his Minister of Finance to set up a committee where Members of Parliament can bring forward examples of waste and areas where expenditures can be cut, we get a great, big no. What do we get from the Minister of Finance? We get a borrowing Bill followed by closure. This country needs confidence, but in the last number of weeks we have had every kind of legislation except that which will assist this country to gain the confidence it needs to rise out of this recession.

• (1550)

We need job creation and venture capital, Mr. Speaker. But what has happened? Capital has gone elsewhere. It has gone into savings, gone to other countries, gone to pay ever increasing taxes and interest, or gone to lower business debt in order for businesses just to stay alive. Instead of programs to put this money into productive ventures, we get Government Bills to borrow more, and then debate is cut so that Members of Parliament cannot adequately discuss what is being put before them. It would be all right if the Government asked for borrowing authority and then set out a plan as to how it intends to spend the money, apart from what is shown in the Blue Books. It would be all right if the Government could in fact provide examples to show that it was spending this money productively in providing pools of venture capital for small businesses and removing the disincentives to go to work. Instead, we see that this Government is really just a great consumer of wealth, a great spender of capital; not on productive things but on the kinds of things that we have seen over and over again to be unproductive. The Government has to borrow money just to pay interest on its debt, and our financial picture continues to get worse and worse.

That is why I and other Members in this House are opposing today the use of closure. We want negotiations rather than debate being cut off.

[Translation]

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Mr. Speaker, I have been following this debate which has now been going on since February 17, or for close to the past three weeks, and what strikes me is the weakness of the points made by Hon. Members opposite, whether from the Official Opposition or from the New Democratic Party. Basically, what do we hear? Primarily we are told that the Canadian Government has lost control over its expenditures and, as far as the Opposition is concerned, there is no question of handing the Government a blank cheque by allowing this $5 billion borrowing authority for wrapping up the 1982-83 fiscal year and providing for the 1983-84 fiscal year with a $14 billion borrowing authority, when we know that the estimated deficit for the 1983-84 fiscal year could approximate $30 billion, as stated by many observers.

I would like to point out that if the Government needs $14 billion for the 1983-84 fiscal year, it is because in its capacity as a good manager it has to plan its drive on the money markets to avoid having to do so at the same time as the provinces and large private corporations.

Mr. Speaker, what are the actual facts? Is it fair to suggest to the Canadian people that the federal Government has lost control over its expenditures? Let us look at the figures, the specific and actual data giving the exact picture. Not taking into account the debt service the federal Government's expenditures in 1975-76 accounted for 20.5 percent of the Gross National Product. In 1981-82, six years later, still excluding the debt service, the percentage had decreased from 20.5 percent of the GNR to 16.2 percent. Some way say that there have been significant changes as from the 1982-83 fiscal year, and so will it be in 1983-84.

Clearly, the Government could not stay on that course, because of the horrendons economic conditions that affected not only Canada or North America but the entire world, the whole of the industralized nations, Mr. Speaker. If Hon. Members opposite would reel out of their shells and have a look at the world in which they live, if they would look beyond the limits of North America, they would realize that governments throughout the world are facing deficits. We only have to look at what is going on in the United States. Although their administration is headed by a gentleman who was elected on the commitment to balance the budget, after a few years they are facing a record deficit, the likes of which had never been seen over the years.

Mr. Speaker, how come the deficit increased that much? For the simple reason that, first, revenues have been lower than they would have been under normal economic conditions, and second, because expenditures in turn have been higher than they would normally have been had we had a six or seven percent unemployoment rate and real economic growth of 4, 5 or 6 per cent per year, when in fact we had negative growth.

Mr. Speaker, it stands to reason that during an economic recession there is more unemployment, people earn less money and pay fewer taxes. In addition, businesses record losses or reduced profits. Consequently, taxes on corporate profits are lower as well. Slower economic activities and decreasing oil prices have resulted in a sharp decline in Government tax revenues generated by the petroleum sector. As for expenditures, one does not have to be a mathematical genius to figure out that if we compare 1982-83 and 1983-84 for instance, we will have to spend $1.8 billion more for servicing the public debt in 1983-84 than we do this year. Expenditures for unemployment insurance will be almost $2 billion more next year, simply because the Government must bail out the unemployment insurance fund which cannot be self-financing when benefits paid out are unduly high. Under the Canada Assistance Plan, the Federal Government pays 50 per cent of all provincial welfare benefits, and those expenditures are expected to increase by $558 million. The Home Ownership Stimulation Plan has been so successful that we will spend $240 million more than expected this year, and that will spur the housing and construction industry. I would not say that the Government is spending money as if it were going out of style, Mr. Speaker! For established programs financing, hospital insurance, health insurance and post-secondary education, the government spent $5.4 billion in 1982-83 and will spend this year $6.6 billion, or $1.2 billion more than last year.

I would like to take this opportunity to denounce the hypocrisy of the Opposition. I recall that when we were discussing the renewal of the financial arrangements last spring, all Opposition Members criticized the Government for being too hard on the provinces and for not granting them enough fiscal transfers, which, they claimed, would enable the provinces to assume their responsibilities. If we had listened to them, we would have added billions of dollars to the budgetary deficit.

Mr. Speaker, our budgetary deficit is obviously substantial. We must not try to hide this fact and we must be honest, but it seems to me that in view of the very high level of savings in Canada—and we know that Canadians now save 13 per cent of their available personal income—and, most importantly since, as long as the process of economic recovery has not begun more fully, the private sector is not very active on the capital market, the Government is essentially only taking over for the private sector and I am convinced that the private and public sectors will not compete on the capital market to the point that it would cause interest rates to increase.

Mr. Speaker, when I say that the public sector is taking over, and I know that provincial governments must also do their share, it means for instance that over $2 billion were spent these last few months on job creation programs. Of course, this is reflected in the deficit, but would the federal government act responsibly if it left the unemployed to their fate, especially in cases where they have exhausted their benefits and must go on welfare?

Mr. Speaker, I think that there is an attempt to dramatize the budgetary deficit. In the case of Canada, between 90 and 95 per cent of the national debt, the Government debt, is owed to Canadians, which means essentially that it is owed by Canadians to themselves.

Mr. Speaker, since my time has nearly expired, I would like to invite the Government to act as quickly as possible. I believe that the Opposition Members have had quite enough time. They have had a reasonable opportunity to explain the reasons for their opposition to the bill, however unfounded they might be. In a democratic system, they have the right to explain their reasons for not agreeing and for objecting to the granting of a borrowing power to the Government. In my opinion, the time has come to take whatever means are necessary to put an end to this debate, so that we might continue to work at solving the economic problems of Canada through other legislative proposals.

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Bilingualism—(a) Special recruitment of francophones for employment in civil service (b) Effect on English-speaking Canadians; the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz)—Environmental Affairs—(a) Pollution of Niagara River—Proposed action by province of Ontario (b) Access to information on dump hazards; the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton)—Aboriginal Rights—Possible effect of Gulf Oil development in Northern Yukon.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-143

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Cosgrove:

That, in relation to Bill C-143, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, one additional sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the second reading stage of the Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on that day, all proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of that stage shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, today we are objecting not just to limiting debate but to closure on a very important matter dealing with borrowing by the Government without the information that is necessary in order to make an honest judgment on the matter. I was amazed when the Hon. Member for Montmorency-Orléans (Mr. Duclos) said that the deficit of the Government was expected to be somewhere in the neighbourhood—and I stand to be corrected—of $30 billion. I have not heard that figure from the Government benches before. I wonder if the Hon. Member has brought this to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Duclos: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Montmorency-Orléans (Mr. Duclos) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Duclos: I should like to mention to my hon. friend in the Official Opposition that many observers expected the deficit to reach $30 billion. I have never said that the government's deficit would amount to $30 billion. I think the record should be set straight.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, that is debate. The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I would be really surprised that a Member of the Government would refer to an estimate of $30 billion as having any authenticity whatsoever if there were not some justification in his mind that it is possible. He went on to say that this is a weakness in our argument when we are supposed to have known this for some time. I would remind all Hon. Members of the Government that it is not so long since the Government was talking about $10.5 billion. If it thinks that we in Opposition are the only people in Canada concerned about a possible $30 billion deficit without seeing a budget to justify not only the $5 billion it is asking for but an additional $14 billion today, then it is sadly mistaken.

The people of Canada are opposed to the likelihood of a deficit of $30 billion. It is not we who will have to pay back that debt, but our children and our grandchildren and our great grandchildren. They will have to pay back a deficit that is beyond the control of Members on this side of the House because the Government resorts to closure, to limiting debate, in order to borrow money without the necessary information to justify it. I challenge the next speaker to tell the Members on this side what business in the country could run its affairs the way the Government thinks it can run the nation.

The Minister of Finance is on record as saying there would be a new budget before more borrowing authority was sought. As reported in Hansard for October 27, 1982, he said:

> In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-84 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

At the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on May 31, 1982, the former Minister of Finance, now the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), had this to say:

> I do not think it would be appropriate to ask the House for additional borrowing authority until I have laid out in some detail an update of both the economic situation and the fiscal situation.

Surely the Government today does not treat lightly the borrowing of these billions of dollars without giving the Opposition the opportunity to examine a fiscal policy that would justify such expenditures. It is not satisfactory just to table the Main Estimates in the House because, by themselves, they are insufficient evidence of the need for additional funds. In Supplementary Estimates C there are some things that disturb the people of the country and that require more explanation. Is the pit bottomless, Mr. Speaker? Is it the understanding of the Government that for as long as it is in office it intends to come back here because it has a majority, bring in the requirements for more moneys, give them two, three or seven days of debate, never present a financial budget in the House, and expect us to accept willingly the estimates for additional funds to cover additional deficits which have never been explained in detail to Members of the House of Commons? It is totally irresponsible, it is unacceptable. I am absolutely amazed that the Government Member who just spoke would treat the matter lightly and make statements about the "weakness" of our arguments as we object to an additional $19 billion, $14 billion or $5 billion, as required by the Government, without bringing in a budget.

• (1610)

If Hon. Members opposite would like some horrendous nightmare stories such as the ones documented in the House over the period of many months and years concerning inappropriate spending of Government, I am prepared to give some examples which, with all due respect to the Government, it cannot really justify.

An Hon. Member: Let us hear a few.

Mr. Domm: All right, I will give the Hon. Member some and see what he thinks about them. When we talk about taxis and about taking the people of Canada for a ride in its request for funds, let me indicate that between March 1, 1980 and May 31, 1981, the Government paid out $3.5 million in taxi fares. The largest single bill from any Government Department was perhaps appropriately from Transport Canada for $422,000 worth of taxi bills. At current Ottawa taxi rates of $1.20 per mile, this is enough to go around the world 120 times. With no effort to control that growing budget, they come back here and ask for $19 billion.

Let us talk about telegrams for a minute. Between March 1980 and June 1981, the Government spent $16.7 million on telegrams, cables and other wireless communications. Even Canada Post does not trust its own mail, as it spent $260,000 in that period of time on telegrams.

What about hospitality? I do not know whether they are celebrating the appointment of a new Finance Minister or the appointment of a Minister in another Department who is as irresponsible as the Minister of Finance, but let us refer to the Government's treatment of hospitality. In fiscal year 1981-82, 11 Government Departments spent a total of $10.4 million on hospitality, food, booze, and authority for it, as required, was given.

If the Hon. Member opposite think that these kinds of requirements are justification for a budget, that it has seeded itself many times over since it was first introduced in this session of Parliament way back in history, then I think he is sadly mistaken. He is mistaken if he is under the impression that we should accept it without argument and that the $30 billion deficit, as projected, is justified to Canadians.

Perhaps it would be helpful in the last few minutes, having been provoked into trying to justify the inappropriateness of these required moneys, if I made a couple of observations which might bring some sanity into the spending of Government, the deficit and its cash requirements. The deficit today is equal to 28 per cent of all our expenditures. For every $4 the Government spends, it must borrow $1. There are only two ways to finance a deficit. First, we can print more money, and over the past 12 years the Bank of Canada has monetarized a total of $12 billion on the Government's financial requirements. The other way to handle the deficit is by borrowing money. In 1982, borrowing by the federal Government accounted for 51 per cent of all new security issues placed in Canada. Borrowing of that magnitude clearly must have an effect upon the supply and demand for money and thus upon interest rates which must be borne by the private sector.

The Government's October budget forecast a record deficit of $23.6 billion this year, and already the Government, with all due respect, is blabbering in the House about the possibility of a $30 billion deficit without our ever seeing another financial statement dealing with a true economic budget so that we could look at the forecast over a reasonable length of time for justification.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, when introducing the borrowing authority Bill now before us, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) drew a distinction between the financial requirements of the Government and the Government's deficit. They are different, the figures are different, but they are also clearly connected.

Obviously we have to be concerned about the deficit. With over 20 per cent of Government revenue now going to service the national debt, this is certainly a time to be prudent about Government spending, even though it must be said that Canada's national debt in the form of Canada Savings Bonds, Treasury bills and Government of Canada bonds is largely held by Canadians and, as with such a debt, repayment and interest charges represent a recycling of money within the Canadian economy.

Canadians have been saving a great deal of their incomes at rates much higher than Americans, for instance. There is a vast pool of savings to be recycled in our economy and federal borrowing requirements, although heavy, should not constrain private borrowing.

A large part of our deficit is recession-induced, a fact with which Opposition Members have not dealt in their speeches. Government spending is not out of control, to use their phrase. The deficit is high and borrowing requirements are high because of the world recession, because the world economy has been virtually stagnant for the past three years.

In Canada, revenues are down. Personal income tax is down because so many people are unemployed. Sales taxes are down because consumers are buying less. Business taxes are down because profits are low. At the same time as Government revenues are down, Government spending has increased on social programs to protect Canadians from the worst effects of recession. Unemployment Insurance payments alone have increased by 133 per cent. Payments to the Provinces under the Canada Assistance Program are also up.

We have in Canada a very good system of automatic stabilizers which goes into effect to help our citizens when times are difficult. It is a system which has been built by Liberal Governments over the years and of which we can be proud. It is interesting that in the very extensive consultations of the Minister of Finance as part of the pre-budget exercise, when he met with leading industrialists from all over the country nobody suggested that the safety net be cut from under those Canadians who are feeling the pain of recession most.

Clearly Government expenditures will be reduced, Government revenues will increase and the deficit will be reduced when the economy recovers and Canadians return to work. This is obvious, yet not one of the Opposition speeches on the borrowing authority differentiated or dealt with measures which temporarily increase the Government's borrowing needs but will result in increased revenues in coming months.

Apart from the fact that $6 billion will shortly be paid out in tax refunds—not an inconsiderable stimulus which will be injected into the economy—there were, in the last year, programs designed to stimulate the housing industry. The popular $3,000 grant to new home owners has represented a substantial expenditure of Government funds, but those expenditures created jobs for unemployed construction workers who are relatively high earners and, therefore, make a sizeable contribution in personal income taxes. Those expenditures to stimulate the housing market helped create demand for building materials, appliances and furnishings, thus creating jobs for other Canadians who, in turn, will be freed of the necessity to collect Unemployment Insurance and who will again become taxpayers. Similarly, the increased Government expenditures on direct job creation and on training are an investment in the future.

• (1620)

Throughout the discussion on this Bill the Opposition has attacked Government spending, but it has failed to put forward alternatives. One of the Conservative leadership candidates has now been quoted as saying that his Party has to stand for something other than for just replacing the Liberals. This is an interesting statement from a Member of a Party which has held three major conventions without any policy discussion.

Mr. Epp: That is not true.

Miss Nicholson: Perhaps the leadership convention will finally be the forum when Conservatives tell us what they are for. In the House of Commons they tell us only what they are against.

Mr. Epp: We had a policy convention in Toronto in May.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I did not expect the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) to end her speech so quickly, so I have been caught unawares. The point the Hon. Member gets from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that this whole situation is caused by a world recession—

Mr. Riis: Is not true.

Mr. Fennell: That is right, it is not true. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said that is not true. That is one point on which we do agree. Canada has greater opportunity than any country in this world. We should not have suffered through the recession as we did. We have all the natural resources. We have more than any other country in the world and we are doing nothing about it. I maintain it is entirely due to the incompetence of this Liberal Government that brought this country down on its heels for the last 15 years.

On borrowing Bills, the Government should give the public and Members of Parliament an explanation so that we can all understand. We keep getting every two or three months new amounts which the Government wants to borrow. Could the Government not present to the House the amount of money that is outstanding, to whom it is owed, when it will become due, and give an explanation? The Government should explain why the Government needs the additional amount. Together with that, I believe the Government should bring in the amount it estimates will be created in specie. We get a tiny, little picture on everything from the Liberal Government. We do not get a complete picture with which we can work. We get only little bits and pieces. I request the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) to discuss this point and give us a total picture so that Canadians will know the predicament which this additional borrowing will cause us.

I read through some notes on this borrowing and I find that of the total, about $2 billion will be carried over to the next year. We are talking about $5 billion and $2 billion being carried over. Then there is another $14 billion. We do not know how long that will last. Surely the Government has an over-all opinion as to how long that amount will last. The Government leaves us with such little information that we cannot assess these Bills properly and do the research required. Furthermore, we cannot the Government brings in a Bill on borrowing before we have a budget which would tell us how the Government will spend the money. This is not treating Canadians with dignity. This is not treating this House with dignity. We are not given an opportunity to discuss these Bills appropriately. We do not have all the facts.

The Estimates are wonderful if one has the sense to assess what part comes under a super Ministry and what part comes under a direct Ministry. The Estimates have hidden amounts throughout. Certain programs are tucked away in every corner. We have tried to simplify it. My friend, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), has come forward along with with one of your Members, Mr. Speaker, to present a proposal which will enable Members of Parliament to work with a real purpose and to come up with some answers. Then we will know what is happening. I do not think the Government knows what is happening. I do not think the Government knows where the money is being spent. If the Government does not know, how can we in the Opposition, lacking information, be expected to know? Why does the Government want $19 billion now when it is talking about a $90 billion budget? Does the Government know now how much of that money will be required this year, next year, and the year after? We do not have enough information to know what the debt is at the present time. We have been told various amounts. We have been told it is $122 billion at the end of 1983. I heard another comment that it was $137 billion. I do not know how many billions it is. It is beyond us. We do not have our hands on it. We talk in the House but we do not really have our hands on these amounts. That is why we are fighting closure today.

This subject of borrowing should be taken to committee. Closure should not be imposed in the House of Commons on this matter. This matter should be taken to committee so we can ask questions of the Ministers. They are responsible to the people of Canada. We are not getting the information in this House. The only place we can get it is in committee.

As an aside on that point, Mr. Speaker, I was a member of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. One day I asked exactly the same question—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the Chair sees two other Members standing and holding a conversation in the House. Out of respect for the Hon. Member who has the floor, Hon. Members should try as much as possible to hold their conversations elsewhere.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to present the apologies of my colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) and myself, to the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell).

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, as an aside, I hope perhaps those two gentlemen were having a discussion having something to do with mandatory supervision, a subject which is very close to my heart. As the Minister walks out of the House, I hope he hears those few words and takes some action.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fennell: I could get into a debate of a whole hour and a half on that subject, but I will stay with the matter under debate, that is, closure. We fight closure because we are not given the information we require. We must get this information. I accept that during the good times we built up social justice programs to such an extent that at this point we cannot cut back. The people who benefit from these programs are the ones who suffer the most. The one thing this Government is not doing is dealing with the problem. We have a fixed cost for social affairs. But we are doing nothing to build up the economy of the country to create jobs through the private sector so as to get Canada in a positive position, in view of potential that we have. The Government is not moving ahead quickly enough to encourage industry. Industry is being discouraged.

• (1630)

There was a marvelous show on the CBC last Saturday about farmers and how they got into their present situation. The story explained how bankers encouraged them to borrow money at nine per cent. When the rates went up to 25 per cent they were put out of business. It is the Government's responsibility to assist those people because they are not being treated fairly. It was the Government that was responsible for interest rates increasing to 25 per cent, not the farmers. That is my point.

The Government should be providing grants to certain industries that can, through the use of the Department of National Defence, create a high technology capability that cannot be afforded in other circumstances. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) will appreciate that the majority of the new technology that has been developed in the U.S. came from National Defence and NASA. We should be given grants to National Defence not only to build up our forces and equip them but to carry out the extremely expensive research that is required to remain competitive.

My next concern involves medium-sized industries which are trying to switch to the new technology. The Government provides for some research and development, but the critical costs which those industries incur while getting into production are so great that a tax relief should be provided. Ultimately, employment will be created.

Attention must be given to new and expanding industries. A new business which is just beginning cannot afford the full interest rate costs. Today, as a result of the SBIG, the rates are down from 16 per cent to 12 per cent. We cannot afford to capitalize as much of the interest costs as we have in the past. It makes us non-competitive with the rest of the world. In Japan, for example, consider the involvement of expanding companies that are moving into advanced technology. They receive free loans because the Japanese realize that if the interest on the capital is compounded, no company will be able to start production economically.

I repeat that I believe that the Government's management of the country is disgraceful. It is time that it told us all of the facts and gave us enough information so that Canadians can adopt a policy which can make us one of the greatest countries of the world. It was a former Liberal Prime Minister who said that the twentieth century belonged to Canada. We are in the last 17 years and we do not seem to be progressing.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on three main areas, and add some miscellaneous remarks. First, I wish to comment on the Canada-Ontario General Development Agreement as it applies to Renfrew County. Second, I will comment on the Canada-Ontario General Development Agreement as it applies to eastern Ontario, and finally, I will talk about the forestry programs.

As you know, all three of these items involve federal-provincial relations. When we become involved in federal-provincial relations on financial issues, it causes curious results. There is always a tremendous competition between the different levels of Government as they try to take credit for what is taking place. As a result of this competition, people perceive this Parliament as working in an atmosphere of confrontation, which is true. People perceive Members of Parliament as constantly fighting and the various levels of Government as not getting along with each other. Therefore, individuals have developed a certain disdain for politics.

In response to that I would say that it is the positive results that come from these debates and from the federal provincial and municipal relations that really count. Sometimes, however, those positive results become lost in the fray of confrontation in legislatures and inter-governmental relations.

An example of this was an agreement involving Renfrew County and the City of Pembroke, where plans were developed to conduct a mineral survey of the region, a survey of the forest species of the region, the introduction in the City of Pembroke of a new water filtration, sewage disposal upgrading plant, and a new industrial park. The reason for that project is clear. At the turn of the century when the forest industry had declined in the Ottawa Valley, there was nothing brought in from the private sector to replace it. AECL was brought into Chalk River, and National Defence base was enlarged. I see the Minister of National Defence in the House today and I wish to tell him that if he wishes to increase the base further, we would certainly welcome it because we appreciate having the Armed Forces base in that area.

With respect to the Renfrew County and the City of Pembroke GDA with the Province and the federal Government, which was signed on December 7, 1977, the wheels ground very slowly. The program had commenced prior to the 1979 federal election. Plans as to what would take place were well formulated. When the Conservatives came into power in 1979 and a new Minister was appointed, possible changes in policies were envisaged, and the project received a major setback. That setback came when the Mayor of Pembroke received a letter from the then Minister of DREE, the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). With regard to the three projects of the industrial park, water filtration and sewage plant, he said:

> I certainly appreciate the fact that government assistance may be needed to help expand the economic base of this slow-growth area of Ontario, and your personal concern to solicit help for the City of Pembroke. However, during this period of spending restraint by governments, my Department is hard-pressed to fund even existing programs, and therefore any new commitments can only be considered if there is a very high degree of urgency. Under these circumstances, I am not persuaded that assistance for Pembroke can be priorized until the restraint on federal spending can be eased.

People were very concerned about the water situation. He went on to say:

The interim period could be used constructively to revise and strengthen the Phase II proposal. For example—

Listen to this. This was the industrial strategy introduced by the then Minister of DREE:

—consideration for the industrial park could be strengthened if it were supported with a list of prospective tenants. Moreover, I understand there exists some confusion regarding ownership of the land on which the park is to be developed.

Does it mean that if one wants to get an industry started in the local community, one has to indicate one's desire to have that industry in the region but first an industrial park must be built if the region agrees? There could be a delay of two or three years, but it would finally get there. That was the message that was sent out.

This project was further hampered by another incident which occurred on June 21, 1980. Prior to that, on May 21, 1980, the new Minister of DREE, the present Hon. Member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. De Bané), wrote to the provincial Treasurer of Ontario and stated:

• (1640)

In the case of Pembroke, I am sympathetic to the requirement for the industrial park itself—

He went on to elaborate. Then, one month later, after receiving the letter from the federal Minister of DREE, the provincial Treasurer stood before a Conservative Party meeting in the riding and said, "We sense the federal Government has been withdrawing support for infrastructure programs, and if so, Pembroke's new industrial park could be in jeopardy". One can imagine how that hit the local press. Shortly thereafter, the federal Minister of DREE, along with two colleagues from eastern Ontario, the present Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) and the present Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), went to Toronto. The Province seemed to be absolutely astounded that there was so much support. I suppose that when the provincial Treasurer made that statement in front of that Tory meeting, he thought he would be a hero and could dump the blame on the federal Liberal Government for not doing anything. However, when he was suddenly confronted with the fact that we were taking a strong stand, that changed the whole picture. The end result was—

Mr. Lewis: Are you riding a white horse?

Mr. Hopkins: —that the Minister of DREE discussed the matter further with the Province of Ontario. Then the DREE Department submitted a plan to the Ontario Government in the summer of 1980. We never heard from the Ontario Government until late in November when the provincial Treasurer of Ontario had to bow out of the federal-provincial meeting and could not be there to discuss the situation.

Nothing else was heard from the Province until June 12 of 1981, when the provincial Treasurer wrote to the Minister of DREE requesting a meeting. Throughout this time the controversy was continuing all across the region. It was being said that the feds were dragging their feet while the Province was willing to go ahead. The provincial Treasurer even wrote a letter to the City of Pembroke saying, "We are prepared to go ahead and commit the $5.6 billion if the federal Government is willing to do likewise". Of course, this was after he had received the federal Government's proposal, about which he said nothing.

I admire Ministers who carry out these kinds of federal-provincial relations and still stick to their guns. Of course, these are the sort of squirming federal-provincial relations which should be laid out in the open so that we can make other arrangements in the future with a little more dignity and with a little more respect for each other.

The end result was the Liberal Minister of DREE approved the project. He met with the provincial Treasurer here in Ottawa and came to an agreement the first time they met thereafter. It could have happened months before, but it did not because the Province did not approach the federal Government for months after the proposal was made. This is not the way to handle federal-provincial relations, and we must adopt a more constructive approach and put a time frame on these matters thereafter.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that I must take part in a debate on a borrowing authority Bill for which closure has been sought when it concerns a request for more than $19 billion. The House has been told that there must be closure in order for the Government to carry on with its business. I want to discuss some of that business for a few moments, if I may.

It is disturbing to see the kinds of things happening in my riding, and to hear in Ottawa about the main corridor of VIA Rail and the passenger services which must be accommodated here. There have been problems involving crews on passenger trains in the West which have had to call in the RCMP to take drunk people off the trains. This is affecting their duties on the trains. There have also been cases of rape on trains. It is difficult for conductors to carry out their duties. As well, passengers have been overbooked. This has been caused by the action of the Government. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has brought in legislation without even presenting it to the House, making sweeping changes to VIA Rail, affecting transportation services to which people are entitled.

The Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) referred to job creation programs. I would like to emphasize the problem in my riding where the federal and provincial Governments have allocated almost $1 billion to develop the Northeast Coal Program. At this time, 2,000 workers in my riding are laid off for six weeks, with the possibility of being laid off for another four weeks because of stockpiling of coal going to the Japanese, the very same market for which the Government is providing extra funding. I want to say in all sincerity that if the Government is to enter into those kinds of programs, and if that is in the best interests of the country, there should be orderly marketing to protect the towns and villages involved. When I see billions of dollars being spent and the high level of deficit, and those kinds of problems being created, I want to say, "Shame, shame on the Government which would cause that to happen".

At the present time the Minister of Transport is proposing sweeping changes to the Crowsnest Agreement without even bringing them before the House for its consideration. Literally billions of dollars would be granted to the railway system, besides the changes to the Crowsnest Agreement, which could literally destroy the grain markets of the Canadian economy. The Government has made such proposals without debate of any kind in the House.

The Premier of the Province of British Columbia, on a tour of my Province, came into my area and said what a great venture it would be and how it should be carried out. I received a resolution from the municipal councils in my riding endorsing the proposed provisions in the Crowsnest Agreement. However, we have not even had the opportunity to see nor to debate those very basic changes the Government is proposing, which could create some very serious economic problems across Canada.

Those are the kinds of problems the Government is creating. I say that it is no wonder we have such a large deficit. The Government should be sincere about doing something about the deficit instead of attacking Family Allowance benefits, the cheques of senior citizens, and the pensions of public servants. It should devise a program so that there is equity in these projects for every dollar allocated to the railway system. Then, as it started to develop, the money could be paid back. We are certainly in full agreement that the transportation system must be upgraded across Canada. However, we do not agree that money should be given, for instance, to CP Rail, which has done nothing but drag its feet and take money from the Government over the years, exploiting it and using it in other areas without carrying out its commitments. It is a shame that the Government would make those kinds of changes with regard to pensions, the indexing of Family Allowances and so on.

I would like to refer to the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) who is responsible for the status of women. Her riding is Nickel Belt. I think it is appropriate to let the people hear what she has done. An editorial letter was captioned: "Sweeping statements are unfair to thousands of Canadian women." This was printed in the Sudbury Star of January 17, 1983. It reads:

• (1650)

I strongly object to your insinuation that unemployed, childless women contribute nothing to Canadian society.

I am a childless unemployed Canadian woman. My husband and I remain childless because we cannot have children of our own and because we feel we cannot personally accept adoption or unnatural conception. I am unemployed because, after 10 years of teaching elementary school, my husband was transferred to Sudbury. I oppose a viewpoint that brands me as a non-contributor in my own country. I further feel that your views on contribution to society are narrow and without thought.

That is another indication of this Government's attitude toward the Canadian people and how this country will be governed. There is no industrial strategy that will put people back to work. The deficit that we face, combined with this closure motion, is an insult to all Canadians, especially Members of Parliament who have not had an opportunity to express their views as to how this deficit may be brought under control or put to better use in order to create employment and give some future to the many unemployed who look to this Government for some direction.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is time for us to move ahead in our debate on this Bill. It is time to finish this stage of our discussion, get this Bill into committee, back from committee and passed so that the Government can proceed with the other elements in its program. This is my argument because I believe we have had plenty of time for debate on this topic. Second, we know, and every practical-thinking Canadian knows, that the money is needed. Third, we know and have demonstrated, as did the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) today, that there are efficient ways to borrow money that will save Canadians millions and millions of dollars, and the smooth passage of this Bill will help us with that efficiency.

Let us look at some of the fascinating statistics about our debate so far. We see that until this time Parliament has dedicated five full debating days to this Bill, which I am told represents some 15 hours and 41 minutes of discussion. During that time we have heard from 46 comrades in arms from the Conservative Party, 15 of our colleagues in the new Democratic Party, and ten Members of the Government, up until this morning.

Far more important than all of that, we have had a lot of debate on the basic instruments which led up to this Bill, the financial instruments that gave us some idea of the Government's sense of direction.

For example, we had ample discussion on the Minister's statement of last October. At that time he laid out the Government's program and its borrowing requirements up to the end of this current fiscal year. As we look at this borrowing authority Bill, we see clearly from the statement last October where the money will go. That is a very important point because the Opposition has regularly clouded that fact in its discussion. There is plenty of information available from the November, 1981 budget, the June budget and the October statement. There is plenty of information to indicate the direction of the Government's programs over the next few months.

Second, we had from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) a detailed set of Estimates for the fiscal year 1983-84. Equally, we have had, and every Member of this House knows it, a pledge from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to produce a budget as quickly as he can. However, he said that we must clear the decks before he bring in another budget. He made it a condition that we must clear away the Income Tax Act, straighten out the borrowing authority, and clear up the six and five legislation.

We have done much of that. The Minister views it as irresponsible, and he said this in the House and outside, for us to introduce another budget before we finish with the legislation of past budgets. That is reasonable, and I think most Canadians accept it.

We have not pulled surprises. We have clearly told Canadians the general thrust of our program, our tax policy and our spending through the Estimates for the coming year. We have had a lot more information through the pre-budget consultations, the Finance Committee hearings and the debate on Bill C-139, the Income Tax Act.

Finance matters are the focus of parliamentary activity at this time. I was astonished to hear a Member of the Opposition stand up and say that he does not get enough information about the Government's work. That Member must be on a holiday. He must be living in some kind of cave. We have done nothing but talk about finances, budgets and the Government's general financial direction since last June.

We have all kinds of other legislation to deal with, but we have not been able to pay attention to it. Why? Because the Government has made finance and our response to the recession the number one priority, and the Opposition knows it. There is no reason why any dutiful, hard-working Member on the other side would not know what we are doing.

We do not know what they are doing. I have looked at the record of what the Opposition said today. It was a little hobby to while away the hours listening to the speeches. I thought it would be interesting to tell people what we heard from the ranks opposite.

Early this morning the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), a distinguished Member of the House, told us not to tax so much. That chorus was joined in by a lot of other singers because we were discussing the Income Tax Bill. The Members were eloquent indeed about the terrible tax burden this Government supposedly is putting on the people. They said in conclusion, "Don't tax so much".

We then heard from the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney). She thinks we should cut the deficit, that we should not borrow so much. They tell us we should not tax so much and we should not borrow so much. There are several people in the Barnum and Bailey Circus running for the leadership of their Party who are saying, "Don't borrow so much". We have those two positions undeniably from the Tories.

In questions from the other side during today's Question Period we were asked why we do not spend more on health care, transfers to the Provinces, women's issues, and research and development. In one day alone we opened up billions of dollars worth of opportunity. The Tory position was made eminently clear today: Spend lots of money, but don't tax and don't borrow to get that money. Lord knows where it will come from, but it is the Tory magic program. It is a very attractive one. I would like to find out how they plan to carry it out. We look forward to the details on that.

Our friends on the left, our bosom buddies in the NDP, as they are said to be, do not have an idea at all. Their position on the borrowing authority has been completely procedural. They say they do not like the way we are going about it. They do not say anything about what we are doing, not one word. I must correct that. The Hon. Member for Kootenay-East Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) told us that he would like to see us spend a little more money to kick drunks off trains. He went on from there to give us a very good and, I thought, heartfelt dissertation on transport policy in his riding. That was a good discussion and I can remember it clearly because it was the only good discussion I have heard from his Party. We have not had any discussion from the New Democratic Party about the direction they want to follow.

• (1700)

Their Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), said a short while ago that he wanted to cut the deficit. I remember that clearly. It was shocking to all of us who felt that the deficit was one of the rocks of the NDP. We felt that they could always he counted on to support us in this debate, but, no, there was the Hon. Member for Oshawa saying, "cut the deficit". Now we do not know, any more than we know from the Tories, whether the NDP wants to cut the deficit by lowering our borrowing, lowering our taxes or lowering our spending. All we know is that they do not like the way we are going about it. We do not know where they would go or what they would do, otherwise.

In fact, we heard from the NDP spokesman on finance matters today that he dissociates himself from the view that the private sector will lead us to a recovery.

Mr. Deans: That's right.

Mr. Fisher: I hear them saying, that's right. How does that fit in with his Leader's view that we should cut the deficit? Would he like us to leave it all up to the private sector and cut the deficit, or would he like us to add some to the deficit and lay off the private sector? We would like to hear some of these opinions from him.

We would also like to hear a little less about the procedural stuff and a little more information such as we got from the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke telling us where he wants to go. We want a few ideas on principles, and a little less of this hollow procedural stuff. We will look forward, in the days to come, to some debate along that line from both sides of the House, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): I always enjoy listening to the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher). He is one of the more eloquent Members of this House. And today, Sir, not only have we had the opportunity to listen to that hon. gentleman, but we also listened to his colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). In fact, Mr. Speaker, if there has been any hijacking of Parliament done these days, it has certainly been done by the two Hon. Members from Mississauga who have just about monopolized today's debate.

What I wanted to say in this brief time which is available to me is that this imposition of closure, this use of the guillotine, is particularly unworthy of the Government. Not only is it unworthy but it is unnecessary. The House Leader of the Liberal Party had only to count the number of Hon. Members who have spoken on Bill C-143 and he would have found that there were only a handful who had not spoken. I will let him in on a secret, Mr. Speaker. There were only about two Hon. Members on this side of the House who wished yet to speak. So in fact, what the Government has done by bringing in closure has cost them another day. What would have happened had they not brought in closure is that this debate would have ended. Second reading debate on Bill C-143 would have ended after about 20 minutes. It would have gone to committee and the work of Parliament would have been expedited, instead of being delayed as it is now. We have used this afternoon, and we will presumably use another full day on this issue, before the matter gets to committee. It is indicative, Mr. Speaker, of the Government's inability to run this House, and that is not unremarkable because we realize—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,638 and 4,648.

[Text]

CNR—EMPLOYEES AT THE PAS

Question No. 4,638—Mr. Murphy:

1. How many staff, broken down by job categories (a) were situated in The Pas two years ago (b) are now situated in The Pas by the Canadian National Railways?

2. Were any of the positions transferred from The Pas to Winnipeg and, if so (a) how many (b) for what reason?

3. Were any of the positions abolished and, if so (a) how many (b) for what reason?

4. Does CNR intend to close all dispatching offices between Saskatoon, Saskatchewan and Armstrong, Ontario with the exception of the one in Winnipeg, Manitoba and, if so (a) how many transfers are projected and how many jobs will be lost (b) what is the rationale for the decision?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Tansport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. Job categories	(a) Jan. 1980	(b) Dec. 1982
Police	2	2
Clerical	31	25
Operating	88	82
Dispatching	10	10
Engineering	117	109
Total	248	228

2. No.

3. Yes. (a) 20. (b) 12 positions were eliminated because of technological change, with benefits being made available under the Job Security Agreement to those affected. In addition, eight positions were lost because of a decline in business.

4. It is CN's intention to consolidate all dispatching into Winnipeg with the transfer of The Pas dispatching on April 24, 1983. In late 1984, it is planned to transfer the dispatching function from Saskatoon to Winnipeg.

(a) The Pas

Positions transferred	—4 regular dispatchers —3 relief dispatchers

Three positions will remain at The Pas as operator positions.

Saskatoon

Positions transferred	—12 regular dispatchers —13 relief dispatchers

All 25 positions will be transferred to Winnipeg.

(b) The rationale for these changes is to provide a much improved utilization of relief train dispatchers at an annual savings in excess of $1 million, through the elimination of duplication of staffs (both supervisory and train dispatchers). In addition, maintenance costs for facilities, janitorial service and other incidental expenses will be eliminated.

METRIC COMMISSION ANNUAL REPORT

Question No. 4,648—Mr. Greenaway:

1. What was the (a) total (b) per unit cost of producing the Ninth Report of the Metric Commission of Canada for the period ending March 31, 1982?

2. Was the report printed on high-gloss paper and, if so (a) on what basis was it chosen (b) who in the Commission was responsible for the selection of the paper?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. (a) $57,552.50; (b) $4.80.

2. Yes. (a) Supplied by the printer, at no extra cost, as a substitute for the requested but unavailable low-gloss paper. (b) Not applicable.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 4,525 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 4,525—Mr. Siddon:

What are the names of all Crown corporations established under federal jurisdiction and on what date was each established?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

FILING OF OBJECTION TO REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR THE PROVINCE OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Madam Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that an objection, signed by the Hon. Members for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence), Burlington (Mr. Kempling), Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley), Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), Waterloo (Mr. McLean), and Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett), has been filed with me pursuant to Section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2, R.S.C., 1970 of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the Province of Prince Edward Island.

If the House agrees, I would suggest that we follow the past practice and print the text of the objection as an appendix to this day's Votes and Proceedings. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration in Committee of Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax—Mr. Lalonde—Mr. Francis in the chair.

On Clause 4—Amounts receivable in respect of services, etc., rendered

The Chairman: The House is in Committee of the Whole. The following Clauses have been grouped for debate: Clause 4, Subclauses (6) and (7), Subclause (8) with an amendment, Subclauses (9) and (11), Subclause (12) with an amendment, Subclauses (13) and (15), Clause 22, Subclause (11) and Clause 54, Subclause (3).

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Earlier today arrangements were made for the grouping of certain Clauses, but we have not come to a final understanding on that grouping as yet. In view of the hour, I do not think it is necessary at this point to come to that final understanding on grouping. We are working rather closely with the Parliamentary Secretary on this matter to try to come to an effective grouping of the Clauses with respect to insurance and annuities, and we pretty well have it together. May I suggest there are a number of Members who want to ask questions on the general structure of annuities and life insurance. Perhaps between now and six o'clock that might be accomplished without putting further amendments at this stage. The next day the Bill is brought forward, those amendments, with respect to the groupings that we will have determined by that time to be appropriate, can be put all at once so that we will know exactly that we are dealing with.

• (1740)

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the statement by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South reflects the working arrangements which Members opposite working in Committee of the Whole had adopted this morning. More than that, we had agreed that in addition to grouping sections dealing with life insurance and annuities together for purposes of debate—

The Chairman: Could Hon. Members currently carrying on conversations leave the House and go behind the curtains because it makes it most difficult to conduct the business of the House.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I indicated that the only intelligent way in which we can come to grips with the general policies affecting life insurance policies, annuities and taxation of insurance companies is by grouping. More than that, we had agreed there would be one vote which would incorporate all the Sections dealing with these through the 139 Sections.

I am in agreement with the proposal of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. We are still trying to come to an agreement as to which of those Sections and Subclauses they will be, and how we will deal with the amendments. I think we can sort that out before our next sitting. In the interim, I understand there is a continuation of questions and some comments by Members opposite dealing with the Sections presently before the Committee.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, may I direct a question to the Minister regarding the now assembled list, or the grouping we have before us including quite a host of amendments to the Bill? Does this list now adequately reflect all the Government's technical amendments that it plans to table relating to this Bill? To be more specific, will the Minister be bringing forward technical amendments that we will then see added to this list at a subsequent date?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the subject that really is the first item namely, Clause 4 dealing with life insurance policies and annuities, I am told by my officials that in the material I provided to the Hon. Member—I think he has a copy in hand, which is the same as mine—those items preceded by (a) are subject to intended amendments. I have made those available to Members opposite, together with explanatory notes on those items. But in so far as other Sections in the Act are concerned, there could well be other technical amendments, and as I have indicated, most of them relieving. In the absence of agreement from the Official Opposition to treating those amendments as having been moved, I cannot say with certainty that the Government will move every one of those technical amendments. If we found proceedings to be very slow and we thought that, for the sake of the common good, the Bill up to a certain point could accomplish what was intended, the Government, in trying to assess that conceivably might abandon some of those technical amendments. I would like to take the opportunity to offer to produce and table the technical amendments that we have prepared now if I had the agreement of Members opposite to treat them as if they had been actually moved.

Mr. Blenkarn: No.

Mr. Cosgrove: Then Members could have them. If we did that we could avoid the process of my making amendments available under each Section heading of the Act. I hear the Hon. Member for Mississauga South saying no. It requires unanimous consent of the Members. Therefore, I am precluded from doing that.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions for the Minister. There might be some repetition here, but because of the interest in the changes which the Minister is proposing, I want to make sure that I have everything perfectly clear for the people whom I represent. My question is with regard to annuity benefits.

Any annuity benefits prior to the last budget date should be exempted from taxation. Has the Government considered the financial position of a person who does not have a great deal of money and who is getting close to retirement? Let us say this person had accumulated $4,000 or $5,000 in a policy which he or she had taken out several years ago under the previous taxation laws, and consider that the same person was given proper advice according to those taxation rules, borrowed money from his life insurance policy and moved this money into a deferred annuity. The reason for doing so was to accumulate a better income supplement for his or her old age. This income would enable this person to be less of a burden on society and better able to care for himself in his senior years. Then the November, 1981 budget comes in and the same person must pay tax on the borrowed money. The person would have been better off leaving the money in the life insurance policy. Why is the Government discouraging personal investment?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member's understanding is correct. The example as I understand it, was the case of a couple who had utilized, first, a life insurance policy which had been taken out a number of years ago and, second, from that cash surrender value, loans were utilized to purchase an annuity to assist with retirement expenses. Presumably that was done prior to December 2, 1982, which was the date of amendments to the proposals which were first introduced in the November budget. For that reason, that situation, that policy and the income arising, the treatment of both the life insurance policy and the annuity would not be affected by the present legislation.

Mr. McKenzie: I thank the Minister for his answer, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps he can clear up something else for me. For insurance contracts issued after the June, 1982 budget owned by a corporation, the net proceeds will not be paid out tax free through the capital dividend account. Can the Minister tell me why not?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the dividends can be paid out without attracting tax. I would qualify that by saying that under certain circumstances the dividends to a certain extent would attract tax. That was a very difficult area for the Department officials and representatives of the industry, the Life Insurance Underwriters Association, and it was only after extensive consultations that the Life Underwriters agreed to those cases in which the payment would be paid out and tax would be fixed only under certain conditions.

• (1750)

I have been given the particulars. However, I do not know whether reading a whole page of those cases where they are exempted would be useful. I could make this letter available to the Hon. Member. Suffice it to say that what I have in my hand is a letter dated February 2, 1983, addressed to me. It is signed by the Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Life Underwriters' Association of Canada. In reference to the amendment which is here, he says, "The presentation of this amendment resolves to our satisfaction the concerns of the Life Underwriters' Association of Canada relating to corporate-owned life insurance and the capital dividend account issue." That is a recent development, dated February 2, but it has been settled to their satisfaction.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I would appreciate it if the Minister could provide me with a copy of that letter. Perhaps some of his technical amendments might make it more clear for us.

I have one final question. Tax shelter growth provisions, such as life insurance products, are useful to people using them to support their incomes. An example is taking out an annuity or using insurance products to meet commitments during a time of financial hardship by borrowing against their policy in order to help pay for a son's education or wedding or some other major expense. In such an instance, these individuals would be keeping their insurance policy in force at the same time. Why should these people who are trying to save more money for their future be penalized by having to pay tax on either the borrowed funds or the annuity?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to be able to repeat what I said this morning, that the old rules for policy loans continue. In effect, there is nothing in the legislation before the House that treats the policy loans differently. It was in recognition of the very case that the Hon. Member has made that that amendment was made in discussions with members of LUAC and PLIA. They have indicated their receptivity to the treatment of not only loans in cases of hardship where a policyholder wishes to take the cash down for an emergency purpose, but in all cases where disability occurs. A policyholder, no matter whether it is an exempt policy or not, is exempted, and that person can use the cash or annuitize. That is so in the case of disability. Therefore, there are two cases; loans and disability. The old rules apply, and there is nothing new.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Chairman, I believe the Minister was speaking earlier today about the annuity as well as money in the bank. He was giving the example that the money in an annuity would have a much better return for the policyholder than leaving the money in the bank. As I mentioned before, when one purchases an annuity, there is a front end loading in a great many of these annuities which pays the commission and costs. Certainly, if someone tries to cash in an annuity or an instrument similar to an annuity, such as an investor's syndicate, he or she will take a loss.

In the case of an emergency, the money in the bank at a slightly lower interest rate will give a better return. You cannot compare the two and say that the annuity is a better deal than the bank loan because it certainly is not. I would appreciate the Minister's comments on that.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Chairman, the same point was raised, I believe, by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West in responding to my comments. That is, drawing a parallel for tax purposes between a person investing in a bank account and looking at what the return would be as compared to those people who have been, during the last couple of years due to the increased interest rates, using annuities.

I believe that it is common knowledge that there is only a certain segment of the Canadian community who were taking advantage of the annuity situation. I would refer the Hon. Member to the Financial Post article dated July 4, 1981 which was entitled "Big Sums Go Into Deferred Annuities." The article points out the reason why this is troublesome to the Government, and it should alarm all Hon. Members who are concerned about equitable treatment of Canadians with respect to investment, whether bank accounts or annuities. The article begins by saying that the smart money is moving into deferred annuities, investment that earned today's high interest rates and lets income accumulate, compounded and tax-deferred for 10 to 20 years or more. The writer further suggests that the buyers are sophisticated, well-heeled investors, perhaps a little wary of the stock market, who can afford to tie up income for a long time in order to avoid paying tax on it at current high marginal rates.

The point is that the basis for tax is income. It should be income earned under whatever circumstances. We should not permit those people who are described as sophisticated, well-heeled investors to separate themselves from ordinary Canadians because their income and their interest allows them to put off tax payments for 10 to 20 years.

The logic of that is that if you have a deferred tax indefinitely, you in fact do not pay tax.

We just finished taking a vote this afternoon. The Government came to Parliament to explain that it is pressed to go to the market for additional borrowings because of the demand which is upon the Government in difficult financial times. The result of the use of these schemes by those people called sophisticated, well-heeled investors was a loss to the Treasury of an estimated $75 million annually, which is not available to meet the demands of the Government in other areas.

Mr. Darling: Perhaps I could give another example to the Minister. The tax department is after every nickel it can get. If there is a windfall profit made on the stock market, it takes 50 per cent anyway. You are not satisfied with that. You will not let the lucky person in the stock market agree to take their 50 per cent. The Government will say it will take its 50 per cent but will not let the individual buy an income averaging annuity to spread it over the rest of his life or a period of 10 years.

However, if one wants to become a real gambler and buy tickets on the sweepstake, the sweepstakes are home free. You do not put your claws on the sweepstake. At least, you have not thought of it yet, and maybe I should not give you the idea. I know that sweepstake winnings in the United States are subject to capital gains. I see the officials starting to blink their eyes.

What is the difference between a person winning a million dollars on the sweepstake and being comfortable for life and a farmer who works hard all of his life and sells his farm for a substantial amount—because they say that farmers live poor and die rich—and he sells his farm for that substantial amount of money for which he only gets a downpayment of $10,000. Suppose he gets cash.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

BILINGUALISM—SPECIAL RECRUITMENT OF FRANCOPHONES FOR EMPLOYMENT IN CIVIL SERVICE. (B) EFFECT ON ENGLISH-SPEAKING CANADIANS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, on April 23, last year, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about a Government directive establishing special recruitment teams for the purpose of searching out and hiring francophones exclusively for employment in the federal civil service. The Human Rights Commission is currently investigating the discriminatory promotion policy of the Liberal Government, although it appears that the Human Rights Commission is experiencing great difficulty in arriving at a decision on the various cases which have been brought before it with regard to preferential treatment for francophones.

The Commissioner of Official Languages, Max Yalden, stated in October 1982 that it is time that the federal Government told the country what its official language program was all about. Today I am calling on the Parliamentary Secretary to request that the Government and the Cabinet enact, as law, Paragraph 7 of the House of Commons Resolution on official languages dated June 6, 1973, or to otherwise adopt the contents of my Private Members' Bill C-666, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act, to ensure that English-speaking Canadians are protected against the discriminatory bilingualism policies of the Liberal Government.

In order to assist the Human Rights Commission in rendering a decision on the case which is presently before it concerning discriminatory practices based on nationality, preference being given to the French nationality, I request that Bill C-141, an Act to amend the Human Rights Act, be brought back for debate. This is essential so that the five amendments I have tabled may be implemented to include language as a prohibited grounds of discrimination. It is imperative that we have laws to protect English-speaking Canadians, due to the discriminatory language policy of the Liberal Government.

English speaking civil servants are being dead-ended because of this so-called bilingualism policy. As an example of public concern over this issue, I have just received the highest return ever from a questionnaire I distributed within my constituency of Winnipeg-Assiniboine and extensively throughout Ontario. The purpose of the questionnaire was to determine public sentiment pertaining to the Liberal Party's bilingualism policies and to determine general opinion on the necessity of holding an open parliamentary debate to discuss the elements of discrimination brought about by the Liberal Party's bilingualism policies. The results clearly point to the sentiment of the Canadian people. Of those responding to the polls, 98.35 per cent stated their desire for debate on these Liberal Government policies which are so blatant and discriminatory.

There have been obvious human rights violations of English-speaking Canadians employed in the Civil Service, the RCMP, the Armed Forces and Crown corporations. There is no doubt but that the merit system is being ignored and superseded by Government directives to give preferential treatment to francophones at the expense and to the detriment of anglophones employed in the public service.

In light of the Human Rights Commission being charged today in the Federal Court of Canada Trial division for the delay in rendering a decision on cases referring to discrimination based on the application of preferential treatment of francophones to the detriment of anglophones, I have in my hand a copy of a writ served on a Human Rights Commission directing the Commission to hold a hearing on a complaint which has been filed with regard to the awarding of preferential treatment to francophones in the RCMP. The application will be made to the Federal Court of Canada on March 17, 1983, under Section 18 of the Federal Court Act.

Is it the Liberal Government's policy to make Canada a French state? I ask this question in light of the statements made in Halifax by the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal). He referred to "the ambition of making Canada a French country, both inside and outside Quebec", and the task of making "Canada a French state", which he has taken on.

• (1805)

The Minister has also introduced a Bill that would force bilingualism on the private sector and which would impose fines and jail sentences for non-compliance. By reason of the statements made by the Secretary of State, and by reason of the existing circumstances of the Human Rights Commission, I am calling on the Government to hold an emergency full-scale and open parliamentary debate to discuss its discriminatory policies on bilingualism.

Incidentally, I have had questions on the Order Paper for a year in an attempt to obtain more information with regard to these hiring teams, what Provinces they are going into and what nationalities they will be hiring in their recruiting program. I hope we can have some concrete answers from the Parliamentary Secretary tonight with respect to these discriminatory practices.

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, because the Parliamentary Secretary had to make an out-of-town speech tonight, he asked me to answer on his behalf.

I would point out that in his answer to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) mentioned the reasons for this policy. On April 23, 1982, he stated that he was not aware of the particular Order in Council or directive to which the Hon. Member was referring. He speculated that this directive had been necessary because the attractions of Quebec City were very great as opposed to Ottawa, because very few qualified French Canadians knew they would be able to work in a language environment conducive to the kind of productivity of which they are capable. He pointed out that the position of the Hon. Member was in direct contradiction to the policy of his Party and his Leader.

In his question in the House that day, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine raised the matter regarding the operations of the House of Commons. The Speaker felt it necessary to answer him, pointing out that his reference to rights in the House was incorrect. Therefore, we have a number of cases where the information put forward by the Hon. Member is not as accurate as he would have us believe.

The Hon. Member cites with great flair his questionnaire. On the basis of what he said in the House, I would suggest that it was a biased questionnaire. If this were in court, he would be told by the other attorneys that he is posing leading questions. Therefore, it is not surprising he got the kind of results he did with his questions framed in that manner.

The Hon. Member made reference to statements made by the Secretary of State, and made the ludicrous assertion that it is the policy of the Government of Canada to make this country a French state. I feel that his assertions are blatantly ridiculous and ludicrous. It is not worth my effort or the time of this House to give him an answer.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER—PROPOSED ACTION BY PROVINCE OF ONTARIO. (B) ACCESS TO INFORMATION ON DUMP HAZARDS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, the Niagara area is one of the most picturesque areas in North America. With its mild climate and rich soil, it quickly became one of the most heavily populated areas of our Province. Unfortunately, people are polluters. So are the industries where they work and where the goods they require are manufactured. Thus begins the tragic story of pollution in the Niagara River.

Niagara Falls is the place to spend your honeymoon. With the sun setting over the magnificent spectacle of the cascading waters, the scene is one of awesome splendour. Yet in those beautiful turbulent waters is a most disconcerting array of toxic materials. Some of the most powerful poisons known to and created by mankind are found in those waters forming the backdrop for countless romantic encounters. How tragic it is in such a beautiful setting to find such ugly chemicals as dioxin, mirex and PCBs. Today I stand in this House to outline once again these problems of the Niagara River and the deplorable lack of action to combat them.

• (1810)

For decades, politicians and environmentalists have been aware of the intolerable pollution taking place in this watershed. Giant chemical companies, with a lot of cash, and perhaps political clout, have been steadfastly preaching cleanup while ignoring pleas to clean up their act. They have dumped their wastes in hastily prepared sites which have deteriorated to the point that the liquid poisons within them are now seeping into the Niagara River. This, of course, is in addition to the pathetically inadequate sewage treatment plants which dump virtually untreated human waste into this once magnificent water course.

Yes, the Niagara River is lovely to look at. Yet in the early 1960s it was described as the biggest open sewer in North America. At that time, Niagara Falls, New York, was dumping raw human wastes and industrial by-products directly into the River by means of a huge pipe opening into the River of all places, just below the American falls in full view of the public!

These are not the sixties, Mr. Speaker. We know better now. We only have finite quantities of water to work with. We must preserve the quality of these waters. We have provisions for protection of the environment. We have the International Joint Commission, the Committee on Great Lakes Water Quality. Why then does the pollution continue? The laws are in place. The chemicals have been identified. We know they are there in even more dangerous quantities as the yellow barrels in the Love Canal continue to rust and allow their nauseating contents to seep through the bedrock into one of the most famous rivers in Northern America.

Is it apathy or misplacement of priorities which accounts for the fact that Niagara Falls, New York, is still dumping virtually untreated waste directly into the Niagara River? The modern treatment plant continues in its state of disrepair to give only primary treatment to the 65 million gallons of sewage passing through it daily. That is to say, it takes out the lumps and then adds some chlorine.

The Ontario Ministry of the Environment is aware of these assaults on the environment in the Niagara River. In a meeting with the Minister recently I noticed just how much he is aware of the problems with chemical seepage into the River. I believe he is very concerned. The Ontario Minister of the Environment has continued since that briefing in late 1982 in his efforts to negotiate a cleanup of the Niagara River, by dealing with major chemical companies and United States environmental groups. Yet how much more effective his representations would be if the Canadian Government took a much more action-oriented approach to the problem.

The main issue concerning Ontario environmentalists is the S-Area dump, which contains a mind-boggling array of death-dealing chemicals which are finding their way into the water table and into the River. It has been alleged that Hooker Chemical knows more about the makeup of the S-Area dump than they care to voluntarily admit. This matter is of enormous importance to Canadians, perhaps even more important than coal liquefaction. We need this information to undertake remedial action. Then why does the federal Government delay in offering its help to resolve the issues raised by Ontario? Mr. Parliamentary Secretary that is one of the questions you need to answer. In all fairness, it is a federal responsibility to resolve disputes of international character such as this. Once again, I ask the question to the Minister: What effort is being made to acquire the information so desperately needed on the S-Area dump? I do not want to hear that he is not party to these negotiations, as he mentioned in January. He should be party to these negotiations as federal Minister of the Environment. I understand, in speaking today with a representative of the Ontario Minister of the Environment, that the federal Government has agreed to raise our concerns with the State Department. When is this going to happen? We are all waiting with bated breath.

• (1815)

As the Member of Parliament for a constituency bordering on the Great Lakes I have spoken out on many occasions on water quality. I have read numerous reports sent out by the International Joint Commission and the Great Lakes Water Quality Group. They use great amounts of ink and paper in analysing the chemicals being emitted by various industries, and on measuring in intricate detail the substances to be found in Great Lakes water. However, little is mentioned regarding actual procedures to nail polluters and make them comply with regulations. The solution is not to slap offenders on the wrist; they should be made to clean up the mess. Not only that, when does the Minister intend to conclude his studies of pollution and do something definite about it? If there are plans to seal the dumps and stop the polluters in their tracks, it is high time to implement those plans.

In conclusion, I implore the Minister to take appropriate steps to wipe out pollution where he has jurisdiction, that is on Canadian soil, and to immediately enter into serious negotiations to reach a bilateral accord with the United States on similar controls in that nation. To many people's health and well-being depend on such action. Rhetoric is not enough.

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) for whom I have great respect. I have so much respect for him that sometimes I think he is a Liberal.

Mr. Fretz: Never, Mr. Speaker, never.

Mr. Tousignant: I would like to thank him for the effort he brings to the solution of this very serious situation. I will reply on behalf of the Minister in French, as it is easier for me.

[Translation]

The Minister of Environment (Mr. Roberts) has informed the House that the Federal Government is bringing pressure to bear upon the United States to clean up the Niagara River. This is being done at the diplomatic, administrative and technical levels. At the administrative level, the advisory committee responsible for the Niagara River which is made up of high officials has met officially six times since last year to urge that action be taken to deal with problems such as that of the S-Area dump. Environment Canada and the Environmental Protection Agency of the United States chair jointly this committee which also includes representatives from the Ontario Department of the Environment and the Department of Environmental Conservation of New York State. Through this committee, data and technical advice exchanges have greatly increased between the two countries. However, in the case of the S-Area dump, the publication of information is restricted by a confidentiality agreement between the parties involved in the case now before the court of the New York district, namely the American organizations and Occidental Chemical Corporation. Under this agreement, the EPA cannot discuss with us the details of its negotiations with the company which might lead to a future settlement. Still, the confidential agreement does not in any way prevent us from holding discussions with the American Government, and we will continue to make representations to them regarding our concerns and our interest in a settlement. Senior officials of the Department of External Affairs and their counterparts in the American State Department are actively seeking under the terms of the agreement a mutually acceptable solution to obtain information which has been unavailable so far.

On the technical level, the provincial and American organizations have decided to co-ordinate and intensify their monitoring activities under the supervision of the Niagara River Toxic Products Committee. It is necessary to collect and analyze the scientific data to pinpoint the exact sources of the many chemical products involved, as well as to find effective remedial measures and to set priorities. The Niagara River Toxic Products Committee will publish its final report sometime in December 1983.

Some action has been taken in the case of the Niagara River. In our consultations with the United States, we are trying to find effective ways to solve the problems, and we are using every available diplomatic, administrative and technical mechanism to convince the Americans that it has become very urgent to do something to solve the Niagara River pollution problems.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—POSSIBLE EFFECT OF GULF OIL DEVELOPMENT IN NORTHERN YUKON

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question tonight concerns the possible effect of Gulf Oil development in the northern Yukon. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary is prepared to respond to some of the points that I will put on the record.

The first question concerns aboriginal rights in the northern part of the Yukon and the second concerns the impact of the intrusion of Gulf at Stokes Point or other sites on the north slope that might make a national park a nonviable option.

This is a peculiar situation, Mr. Speaker. As a result of the Berger Inquiry, the National Energy Board, many national environmental groups and native groups requested and received the endorsation of the Government of Canada for certain lands to be withdrawn. On July 6, 1978 Order in Council No. 78568 was Gazetted. This withdrew certain lands from disposition, and included such things as disallowing the location of any claims, any gold, precious metal or mineral prospecting. Clause (b) of the Order in Council stipulates as follows:

—that the lands described in the schedule are required for a national park and other conservation purposes to order the withdrawal of the said lands, including all mines and minerals, whether solid, liquid or gaseous, easements—

It is very clear that what is being pursued by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) is quite improper and is not supported by his colleague, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts).

On February 25, 1983, an article appeared in the White Horse Star under the heading "Environment boycotting Stokes Pt. meeting" and it states as follows:

Environment Canada is not participating in the study of potential port sites on the Arctic coast because it doesn't want to help make a decision to build a harbour it doesn't support.

Environment Minister John Roberts has publicly stated his opposition to any decision that would allow development along the north shore, especially on the Yukon's north slope.

Gulf Canada applied last summer for Northern Development Department permission to build a deep-water wintering harbor at Stokes Point. The company wants that site because it says it can accommodate its huge Conical Drilling Units.

According to Sandy Lewis, a policy advisor with Environment Canada, the department wants to distance itself from any actual decision making. "We don't want to embarass our minister," Lewis said, or "prejudice our view."

The Interdepartmental Environmental Review Committee is studying potential harbor sites along the Beaufort coast. The Northern Development Department is also examining Gulf's site selections, which include Roland Bay and King Point, as well as Stokes.

The article concludes as follows:

There is no reason the decision has to be made after the end of March, Lewis said.

Once it is made, he said, "we will have to live with it."

We have the National Energy Board ruling, we have the very lengthy, thorough and widely accepted Berger Inquiry, we have environmental groups and native groups which all support the exclusion of these lands. But, for years the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has been promoting Gulf's application to go ahead with Stokes Point, which I understand will be heard in Ottawa on Friday. It is interesting that not only is the impact on the national park proposal to be considered, but also the impact on aboriginal claims.

On February 25 the Native Press under the headline "Impact Statement ignores claims" ran a story by Lee Selleck. We have the erosion of good faith negotiations in relation to aboriginal title and we have the erosion of the park proposal. It is not that Gulf, Esso and others do not have other sites they could go to. On February 25 Gulf sent me a Telex which read in part as follows:

—Gulf's current proposal for a marine supply base at Stokes Point and the content of the environmental impact statement which outlines a range of long-term future options for eventual oil and gas development in the north, if and when sufficient commercial quantities are discovered.

The EIS will be dealt with more appropriately, as planned, during the course of the federal environmental assessment and review process.

• (1825)

We have a situation where Gulf, I understand under pressure from Government officials, went ahead and made an application to get Stokes Point. Their original idea was to get access to various quarries, to build a road down to join up with the Dempster, and to run pipelines down. Now all they are doing is shifting it back to a very narrow application and saying, "Don't harrass us. We just want to have a site where we can put 50 men. We will not bring in 767 jets; there will not be many helicopters. We will not do too much damage to the environment". However, by their own information, this is just the thin edge of the wedge. They want to get this limited site. They want to undermine aboriginal claims. They want to undermine the national park. Anyone in good conscience, including the Minister, has to admit that once that site is there, once Stokes Point is dredged as a deep water port, it will be a year-round facility. They will start pressuring for roads because they will say it is too foggy, that there are iceouts and whiteouts, that they cannot bring in the jet, that they must have a road. Once they get the road, they will say, "Well, we have the road; now we need the pipeline". As Dr. MacTaggart-Cowan said years ago about what is happening in the Arctic, it is destruction by insignificant increments.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will address himself to the very important application that is being made this week; Gulf is applying on Friday. The Minister's own Department claimed to have a legal opinion that Gulf can go ahead and get this kind of easement or temporary permit access to the area, without the need for a change in Order in Council which was based on reports which cost taxpayers of Canada millions of dollars, through the National Energy Board and through the Berger inquiry, to have those lands set aside. If the Minister intends to go ahead and allow Gulf to do it now, the Minister of the Environment might as well resign. He is opposed to it. His officials are opposed to it on sound environmental grounds. I urge the Parliamentary Secretary to agree with the Minister of the Environment, and to take the necessary steps to deal with this matter in an appropriate manner.

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will try to explain the situation to the Hon. Member.

Gulf Oil has submitted an application for approval-in-principle to locate a medium to deep draft marine support base at Stokes Point in the Northern Yukon to support its offshore exploration activities, including its new drilling systems, the conical drilling unit and the mobile Arctic caisson. The company has conducted an analysis of alternative sites along the Beaufort coast and determined that Stokes Point was the best site to meet its exploration support needs.

The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is not predisposed to locating a new marine supply base at Stokes Point or any other northern slope location. It is, however, obliged to assess Gulf's need for a new marine supply base during its exploration program and to respond to its application.

The Government, having granted Gulf exploration rights and specified work commitments associated therewith, cannot now impose unreasonable operating conditions and effectively limit Gulf's exercise of its rights. Consequently, departmental officials in co-operation with experts from other Departments are conducting a facilities siting study to assess a range of harbours on the entire Beaufort coast, including not only sites on the Yukon's north slope but also sites on the Northwest Territories coast, to determine both the need and the preferred location to meet Gulf's operational requirements during the exploration phase of its activities.

In this regard, Gulf has been informed that no decision can be taken until all significant factors have been analysed and weighed, that all sites must be considered in this analysis, that new sites should be kept to a minimum in order to limit potential disruptions, that such plans should be the subject of consultation with those affected, and that the provisions of the COPE agreement in principle are to be followed in all actions.

In November 1982, Gulf applied to conduct geotechnical studies at Stokes Point, Roland Bay and King Point, both onshore and offshore. Gulf has been authorized to proceed with such studies offshore, which will provide information essential to the analysis. Gulf is aware that such authorizations as it might receive for such studies should not be construed as implying that eventual Government approval of Stokes Point or any other north slope location is assured.

● (1830)

Gulf has indicated its intention to apply this week to the Department for the land use permit which it requires in order to construct facilities at Stokes Point. No such authorization will be provided until a decision has been reached, both on the need for a new facility and on an appropriate site based on the study I referred to earlier.

Before reaching a decision on a site or on the conditions which could govern the development of any chosen site, we will be consulting the territorial Governments and appropriate local communities and native groups. Department officials have already indicated to interested Parties that the result of the studies will be made public.

In conclusion, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is responsible for assessing proposals put forward by companies legitimately engaged in exploration activity in accordance with the law. Such assessments are, of course, conducted without prejudice to existing commitments and without anticipating their possible conclusions. In short, no decision has been made; no decision will be made unless and until all factors and interests have been taken into account.
