I would like to view this in terms of steps. We introduced the fourth report of the Committee, which has really been gathering dust. It received some comment, but it did not really come to much. It concerned the whole question of the method of selection of the Speakership. I do not propose to go into the substance of that issue, but it was a unanimous report which indicated that to try to do away with any inference that the Chair may be something less than impartial, we as Members should have a say in the selection of the Speaker. Also it indicated that it should not just rest with the Governor in Council, which in effect is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). As tradition has developed within our system, it has become the Prime Minister's full prerogative. With all due respect to the current Prime Minister and previous ones, we believe that the decision-making process should be opened up and in fact returned to where it was. If we look back to our heritage in the British parliamentary system, the Speaker was reluctantly dragged to the chair by Members on all sides. It was not a calling from the Prime Minister of the day; they did not have prime ministers in those times. It was a collective decision of Members of the House that that person act as the Speaker. We have brought forth this idea in our fourth report. I am not saying it cannot be refined and I am not saying it does not have weaknesses. But if we can develop the notion of complete impartiality of the Chair, and I am not faulting you, Mr. Speaker, nor any of your colleagues in the Chair, and put aside any shadow of a doubt that the Chair is somewhat less than impartial, then I think we have a start in reforming this place.

• (1600)

The next step is to do what is done in Great Britain, and that is, to allow the Speaker to select committee chairmen, as mentioned by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River, according to seniority and competence so that the best people, the most impartial people, determined by the most impartial person in the House, the Speaker of the House, preside over our committees.

I would like to work toward that end. I hear a few cheers from the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith). I think we would like to work toward this end. Then it does not bother me as a supporter of one political Party, in this case the Government, that we have Opposition chairmen. When was the last time we heard criticism about the conduct of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke)? He has not been criticized. A tradition has grown up in this House that the Chairman of that Committee should be a Member of the Official Opposition. If that procedure can work in the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and in the Standing Committee on Management and Member's Services, surely it can work in all other committees. There should be more of an even balance.

Let me get to the point of the debate, the Striking Committee. Some of us made recommendations to the Government House leader. I want to take some of the heat off the Government here because some of us who are not Parliamentary Secretaries, gave our advice and said to him, "Look, if we are trying to develop this and if we are trying to make this approach of more independence work, not only for the Speaker but for the chairmen of the respective committees, then we believe that we should have a ratio in the committees so that the chairman is never forced to break a tie."

Earlier, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) used the analogy of the Speaker and said that situation has never happened here, and if it does the rules are plain. But it will happen on every single item because of the ratio, if we accept the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Halifax West, of six, four and one. In the House of Commons we have 282 Members and we have the Government with a reasonable majority. It is not likely in this Parliament, and it has never happened to my knowledge, that the Speaker has had to break a tie vote. But in a committee made up of 11 Members, as suggested by the Hon. Member for Halifax West, it will mean that on every single item on procedural and on substantive matters the chairman will be forced to vote to break a tie. Until we change the attitude of the Party leadership, both on this side and certainly on the other side, in a majority Parliament a chairman will be from the Government benches. Therefore, that chairman will be forced into supporting the Government line. This will undermine the very thing we are trying to achieve. That is why I cannot understand the logic this afternoon of some Members on the other side. I hope this is just one further step in moving toward the development of a panel of chairmen.

I am glad members of the committee were able to travel to England early in January to see how things were there and to see that a coterie of highly respected, independently minded Members from all Parties has developed. These people have the confidence of all other Members in the House in running the House on an ongoing basis. That is what we want to achieve.

I had some experience on this matter stemming from the bell ringing incident last year. Luckily, I was away at the time. As punishment for being away at the time, I think the Government wanted me to be Chairman of the Special Energy Legislation Committee that was set up as a compromise following the bell ringing episode. I took on the chairmanship. But the membership split on that Committee was six, three and one. Who suggested that split of six, three and one? It was the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the Leader of the Opposition and former House leader of the Official Opposition. He was the gentleman who agreed to the compromise that ended the bell ringing incident breaking the omnibus Bill into eight separate Bills, and it was he who had those Bills referred to the special committee whose mandate has since expired.

It is somewhat odd that I was accused, not only by the Conservative Party but by my own colleagues, of being in favour of the "other side". The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) and the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) accused me a number of times of protecting the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Members on my own side came to me afterwards and said, "My God, you are letting those Tories run the committee."

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Obviously you are a fair man.

Mr. Collenette: I want to take the personality of the individual aside, but it does say something for the fact that if you do have this kind of split where you do not have to worry about breaking ties, that person can do the best job possible and be fair to all sides. I think the experience on that committee shows that it can be done.

I am sorry the Hon. Member for Yukon is not here this afternoon to respond to this specific point. But as House leader for the Official Opposition last year, I understand he was the one who suggested the special ten-man committee, not a 20-man committee but a special ten-man committee.

Mr. Crosby: A ten-person committee.

Mr. Collenette: I must admit it affected my judgment and my thinking on the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure in putting forward the notion of ten Members. Not everybody bought the idea of ten Members and we could not agree among ourselves, but we did agree that the membership should be reduced. We said, "All right, we do not want our lack of agreement on this one issue to spoil a unanimous report. Let us agree on the parameters of 10 Members and 15 Members for the committees and let us throw the actual numbering back to the House leaders."

I do not find it unusual that there is an impasse and that the Government has to force the issue. It is done all the time. This place does not operate with unanimity. It should not. It would be a very sterile place if it did. Every week the Opposition does not get its way, nor does the Government get its way, and where a compromise cannot be reached then someone has to take the initiative. Invariably the Government House leader will say, "I am sorry, you cannot agree on this, but we have to discharge our obligations to the House to get our package of legislation through and we will force the issue. We are responsible for the administration of business." The Government House leader says that such and such a day will be an allotted day. He tells us what business will be brought forward. He tells us when the Government will limit debate with time allocation, which I believe is now done by Standing Order 80. The Government House leader says when he will bring in closure. That is accepted in the parliamentary system. The fact that we could not unanimously agree on this particular point, or the fact that we could not agree, detracts somewhat from the spirit that was achieved by our committee and I think is really an argument we should put to rest.

I was bothered somewhat earlier by the comments made by some Members of the House, both on and off the Committee.

Perhaps I attribute this to myself, that if we cannot agree on this we will not really go anywhere in terms of more procedural reform in the House. I hope that kind of childish argument, which is not confined to one corner of the House, will not gain any credence. The fact is that, at an impasse, the Government sought a compromise. There was somewhat of a compromise put forward by the NDP. I believe the NDP proposed as a compromise a membership made up of eight, five and two on the Standing Committee on Agriculture, and on the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. I think it is a testimony to the Government that it has accepted the advice of backbenchers on its own side that we should accept a membership made up of ten Members. This will give people like myself more encouragement to press the Government further in developing the consent of a panel of chairmen from which a chairman could be chosen by the Speaker on the basis of merit. This panel could be composed of Members from both sides of the House. I am encouraged by the Government's acceptance to study this issue.

I hope this debate will not sway us away from our responsibility as Members to make this institution a better place. The experience of the Committee up to this time has been good. I believe there has been some degree of satisfaction from all sides in our third report. Perhaps improvements can be made, but I hope they can be discussed.

I can understand especially the Conservatives' position since there are only 70 committee slots presently available and they have 102 Members. Therefore, many of their Members will not be full time Members of a particular committee. However, do we as Members have the right to expect to be on a committee, regardless of any consideration? I believe Members must earn their way around here. I include Government Members because some of us cannot be on committees either. The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River is not happy with our Whip's committee choices in some cases. He will have to prove that our Whip was wrong and that he should be back on a particular committee. As well, Members of the Conservative Party will have to work hard to prove that they deserve a place on a committee.

I was concerned by the decision made in the Standing Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure to split up the committees. I believe that the 15-man committee for the Agriculture Committee is particularly unfair to Members of the Conservative Party, which draws many of its Members from western Canada who are concerned with agricultural matters. I would rather have seen two agriculture committees set up, perhaps similar to the British operation which has two agriculture committees. Perhaps one committee could study Canagrex—I hate to offend the Official Opposition with that word—and another one could study a farm support Bill. I believe two agriculture committees could deal with the problem.

I would also propose splitting the External Affairs and National Defence Committee into two separate committees. I was a regular member of that Committee and I am now an alternate. I would like to have been a full time member of that committee. This could have been achieved if we had two ten-member committees, one for External Affairs and one for National Defence.

The Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures decided that this question will require more thought. We decided to defer that issue. This debate illustrates that the Committee will have to consider the matter seriously and urgently and come back to the House so that we may have more committees, which will enable Members on both sides to participate more fully in those committees. However, no one has the right to expect to sit on a committee automatically.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members rising to ask questions?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Does the Hon. Member approve of the idea that has been advanced by Members on both sides of the House of having committees that rise and fall with pieces of legislation to consider a piece of legislation? If so, does he approve of the concept of independent chairmen for those committees?

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is, of course, referring to the current British practice, and certainly I would support that.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a short comment. The general impression that I am given from listening to the debate is that we are advancing greatly with regard to committee work. I admit that there has been some advance made, but I certainly do not see any great advance because the speech given by the Hon. Member who just sat down indicates that Party politics will still play an important part in committee work.

While it may be utopian philosophy or hope, I do not believe it should matter if a Member is Liberal, Conservative, New Democratic or Independent when dealing with a subject such as agriculture. The agricultural problem certainly must be met and the solutions do not have to rest on the particular philosophy of any one Party. That is the weakness I see in the setting up of these committees. The Government will always have its way unless Government Members are persuaded otherwise. It is difficult to change the judgment of someone who is making up his mind that he will support the Government regardless of what happens. It is difficult for the Government to persuade the Opposition if the Opposition Members make up their minds that they will do whatever their Party wants. I do not see any great advance in this at all.

I am also concerned about the fact that my Province may not even be represented on some committees. At the present time, the Government has no representation in the House from Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia. Consequently, we may not even have a voice in numerous committees. The people of Alberta have a right and expect to be heard in the committees, the same as people from any other Province. That is another area of concern.

If we do have the situation where Members are chosen for committees by the Speaker, as suggested by the Hon. Member, I hope they will not be chosen according to the criteria of that person. I believe we are sent here to represent the people who elected us, and that is what we should be doing in the House and in the committees, regardless of Party politics.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am not at all surprised that we have had unanimity in the House of Commons on parliamentary reform. Certainly, anyone who watches us on television would agree that we do need parliamentary reform. I believe that view is unanimous among all Members and all Canadians.

The question we must ask is, do we in fact have parliamentary reform or do we have something that looks like parliamentary reform but is merely tinkering that is ineffectual? Has the Government done this so it can say how productive it has been in achieving parliamentary reform?

I do not see much reform in this at all. It may be more regressive than progressive if the intent of this effort is not pure. I would like to think that the Government's intent is pure.

I enjoyed the idealism expressed by the Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) and the Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). If we are to get what they said, then I am not so concerned. However, since I do not think that is the case, I am concerned. If those Hon. Members believe it, I do not think that they have been around long enough to see the reality of how this place works. I hope they were correct, because there is a great difference between parliamentary reform and efficiency and expediency which detracts from the parliamentary process.

I suggest that this report will do one of two things: either limit the powers of Parliament or extend them. I do not see anything about extension. I see the words, "the committee wishes to ensure limiting the number of Members". It is limitation. We brought forth an amendment which calls for the extension, a slight extension, a slight increase. But no, the Government says, "We cannot accept that". It wants to limit again. I am concerned about this word "limiting", and concerned about the rhetoric and reality of what could be an excercise and abuse of power, because there really is no power being exchanged here.

Surely we are trying to increase the capacity of this democracy in which we are participating to act more effectively. We are trying to make committees more relevant and flexible to respond to changes. However, I want to know how the External Affairs Committee is, for example, more flexible, more responsive to change, more capable of acting. I want to know how my role as a Member of Parliament is enhanced, let alone whether consideration has been given to the many Members who were cut off from the External Affairs Committee, Members who have been attending regularly and participating in so many different ways.

I see the role of the External Affairs Committee changing daily. As a result of the Government prerogative in expanding Government positions, the ministry of External Affairs has now become a super ministry, and the Department of External Affairs is not just concerned with External Affairs. The Committee is now concerned with Defence, CIDA, and now Trade is added to it. We have a much larger responsibility and we are cutting our membership way down.

I am really disappointed that the Hon. Member for York East was not able to get the Committee split. That would have been a start. Not only do we need to have the Committee split, but perhaps it should be split into three. Perhaps, for example, the Trade section could be added or maybe a special section for International Development. It just boggles the mind when one sees the functions of that Committee equated with those of the Committee on Management and Members' services, so that the two are supposedly equal committees, with equivalent power, authority and so forth.

I am greatly concerned about the intent of the Government. The intent of the Government to my way of thinking, is registered by what it thinks about committees as they relate to money and ability to legislate. That is what we do here. We legislate and we spend money. We collect money, we spend money and, hopefully, we even save money sometimes. However, the committees have really no capacity to do any of these things. They really only have the capacity to hear and to recommend. I am concerned about that fact, and I am also concerned that there is not a provision for extra staffing. It is stated that they can call staff, but I see no budgetary provision or anticipation by the Government that committees shall in fact be more effective through the capacity of their staff and that they will have the funds to accomplish their work. The Government intent is suspect, right there.

I have not heard any discussion today about making these committees more accessible to the Canadian public to ensure that the public can and will in fact be heard, that the committees will travel, they will be heard, their expenses will be paid, and this type of thing. I have not heard an expression of that spirit of reform. I hear some very broad principles enunciated, but there is no spirit of reform as such.

I have been in other parliamentary jurisdictions in Canada which have enjoyed the same privileges we are granting today. However, what happened was that although there could be an automatic reference made to a committee, the automatic reference would never be made. The committee would meet one day, elect its chairman, and have a majority but would never meet again for the rest of the session. It is one thing to have a reference, but quite another to ensure that committees meet. Will they meet regularly, automatically and in good faith? We have to accept that on the strength of intent and hope, and I do not see that, because I see words like "limit" creeping in everywhere.

The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River said that the Committee wanted to enhance the role of the Private Member. I do not know how this enhances the role of 37 Hon. Members on this side who are now no longer permanent committee members. I feel that it detracts from their role as Members of Parliament and from their capacity to act. I do not see any enhancement there.

The Hon. Member said that, independent from the structure of the Party hierarchy, the Whips will have less power. The Whips have more power. In fact, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River just finished indicating that he was not happy with what his Whip had done to him because he lost his position on several committees. The Whip does not have less power, the Whip has more power. He has more power to choose because he has more people from which to choose for more seats. Instead, we will find out that it will be back to the old tradition, with the Whips appointing the ones who keep their seats the warmest, not necessarily the ones out working in External Affairs and other areas, or those who put in extra energy, and sometimes the two go together but not necessarily.

The Hon. Member also said that private Members do not want authority. Private Members do want authority, but is this accomplished? What authority have they gained? What power have I gained as a private Member? I do not see any power that I have gained as a Private Member. I see limitations, but I see no power, because there has been no power transferred, only the ability to hear and make recommendations. There is no power to legislate or real power to control money. We saw the Estimates taken out of the House of Commons, and we thought it was great and we would have more to discuss. The Estimates are a farce. The House has no control and the committee has no control over spending. It did not work. It was a nice intention, but I am afraid that will happen here, too.

This report, if adopted, will also eliminate opportunity for the newcomer. Some people have been on this side of the House for ten years but they will not sit on a committee because the cuts are 37 deep. They are no longer on committee. How can one call what happened to other persons "opportunity"? I know of one Hon. Member who came here ten years ago with some hope, but he cannot even sit on a committee now. It is absolutely disgusting to see what is being done, at least what I think is being done.

There is no authority and no power. There is only pretence. There is a pretence at democracy rather than the practice of democracy. I am very concerned that the right of private Members to act is not being enhanced here. It will depend on the intent of the Government, but every time one passes power on to the Government, one gives up the authority of the House of Commons. Authority of the House of Commons is perhaps being transferred somewhat, but that transfer may result in reduced authority, not increased authority.

The proof will be in the eating, but I think we are being had here. Let us remember that this is a one year process. This is not even necessarily a precedent, because the whole matter will be reviewed in one year. Let us have that clearly understood. One year from now, if I have not experienced more authority as a Member of the Opposition, as a private Member, and if these 37 other Hon. Members have not somehow found ways to express themselves, ways which have now been cut off, then maybe we had better look to a revision and the continuation of past practice.

Does the Government really mean what it is talking about, this reform? Will it continue with the next stage and the stage after that, or will this be it, in reality? That reality will be tested, as will the intent of the Government. I remain skeptical and doubtful, especially when the Government will not accept a simple amendment which is brought forward in good faith and which would permit a few more of our Members, not 37 Members, to have some small role to play. I cannot understand why the Government will not accept a little compromise so that a few more Hon. Members can have that right. The Government would maintain its control. It has its control because there are so few Hon. Members who are supposedly fighting for these positions. The Government does not have to worry about its quorum. They will be there now. They have to fight for their positions.

Mr. Turner: They were not there before.

Mr. Wenman: They were not there before, you are darn right, but I can tell the Hon. Member that they were there in the External Affairs Committee on the Conservative side, and we had people fighting for those spots all the time, 11 people, and we had to cut them off and decide who would get on. We do not have that problem, and it is our people who are in fact being cut. It is the power of the Opposition which is being cut, and that check and balance is being destroyed once more in another long series of chains which have come in from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the Hon. Member has admitted it here. The Prime Minister, through his prerogative, has taken authority away from here. You are darn right, it has been taken. It has been taken by the Prime Minister in the last series of reforms which, under a guise, saw the transfer of authority and power.

I regret this, and I remain skeptical. One year from now, we will evaluate this matter and it will take much more than one day, unless there is much more good intent, much more than I have seen from the Government in the last ten years.

• (1630)

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the problem we have run up against today with regard to the 10 man committees is that under the old structure of numbers which gave the Government a clear majority plus the chairman of the committee, a situation has developed where the Opposition numbers are so small that they do not have enough representation on the committee. For example, on the Finance Committee, of which I was chairman, the Government had a clear majority, plus the chairman. Those were 20 person committees. The Government had 11 members, the Official Opposition had 7 members and the NDP had 2 members. Not considering the chairman, that is a 10 to 9 ratio. The Government had a clear majority, and the chairman could be independent.

Quite frankly I would like to ask the Hon. Member if, when such questions arise, it is not his opinion that not only are these numbers correct but that the same basic structure of numbers is being maintained under the new system as was the case under the old system. Secondly, is it not his opinion that most of the chairmen, indeed any of the chairmen that I know, have tried very hard to be as impartial and independent as they possibly could be to ensure that all views were heard on committees and that committees were fairly run, from the point of view of the Opposition as well as of the Government?

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that I am objecting to the Government having a majority. We have made a recommendation that we need to have at least one more member. I am sure that if the Government needed one more member, that would be considered. We are negotiating between 10 and 15 members, which is what was unanimously agreed to. How can it be said that private Members have more authority when 37 Members have lost their jobs? Why do we not try to get a few more of these people on committees? It is a short Parliament, there is only another year left, and in that year things are going to be changed. We should not be considering the immediate period but rather considering far into the future, so let us be fair and reasonable. Let us negotiate a new kind of amendment. If we need one more Member, fine, but we should try to get some of these 37 Members on committees to give them a role to play in this House of Commons, a recognized role which would allow them really to get as involved as they want to. I do not understand how, when 37 Members are deprived of their right to participate, this helps the House of Commons.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, let me continue questions on the same theme. The Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) has indicated that they acknowledge that a majority Government should have majority on committees. Frankly, I do not understand what he means when he talks about participation. We have alternates who have been selected as well. I would assume that, if the alternates are going to be sufficiently knowledgeable, they are going to attend the committee meetings. Also we have the right, as Members of Parliament, to attend any meetings we like. Thus, if there is any trouble with any Members of the Official Opposition participating in committee, will the Member not acknowledge that the problem rests with his own side and not with our side? It is not for us to decide whether the alternates who attend committee meetings shall be allowed to participate or not. Will he not acknowledge that his problem is that his own side is shutting out not only the alternates but any other interested Members from participating?

I have been a member of a committee for some 10 years. I am no longer listed. I have been to the Clerk and I am going to be given all the matters that are sent to the Members of that committee and I will continue to participate as a Member of Parliament. The only thing I am losing is my right to vote, if there is a vote, and nothing else. Will the Hon. Member acknowledge that, please?

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, surely when the Hon. Member says, "the only thing I am losing is my right to vote", I can ask him, what did you come to Parliament for? You came here to vote and to participate. If you lose your right to vote, you do not have much left, do you? I am very sorry the Government took you off that committee because you were a good Member. This is an example which shows you how power transfers back to the Whip—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I call to the attention of the Hon. Member that his remarks should be addressed to the Chair. Are there further questions to be asked at this point?

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, my question is, how many times in the history of this House has that gentleman voted in committee?

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to vote in committee often and regularly, on and on again.

I have made it on to the committee as an alternate or a member, but at least I will have access. It is not good enough. I agree that it is not good enough, but I am fighting for the 37 Members who did not get on committee. Why do you not stand up for the 37 who did not, and help them to get on committee? Why do we not help you on? I am trying to help you and help some of your backbenchers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that his remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Wenman: But, Mr. Speaker, there are others in this House of Commons, 37 on this side, without the jobs that they had before, without their right to vote. The right to vote is a very basic right of democracy, and that has now been taken from them by this legislation. That is a limitation, not an extension of their authority and power.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to intervene, but the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) has distorted my comments. I was referring to the prerogative of the Prime Minister. It has grown with respect to the speakership, and nothing else.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to confine my remarks to a relatively small number of points. However, I will probably not have any more success in that than other Hon. Members have had this afternoon. There are two basic arguments here. One is the participation argument, which is made much of by the Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), and there is also the voting power argument.

I think that this Party would be prepared to entertain any number, and discuss any number, between 9 and 17 as far as the Committee is concerned, as long as the proportional voting power remains the same as in the House.

I think it is well known that everybody who wishes to be on a committee, and that is true whether a committee sits in camera, whether it is the Members' Services Committee or the Public Accounts Committee, can attend and participate. However, it will only be one's colleagues who happen to be named as members on that committee who will normally speak first who will prevent another Opposition member from speaking.

I think it is specious to say that there might be no one from Alberta on the Agriculture Committee and that an Alberta Member cannot participate. That is demonstrably untrue. It does not work that way today.

Another thing that I would like to point out, as other Members have noted, is that I have been around here a little while too, and I am one of those who participate in committee work, and I found precisely the opposite tendency. When something is hot, it is a really hot topic, there is a great deal of pressure in being a member of such a committee. At other times a committee cannot meet because it lacks a quorum. As a matter of fact, I have seen times when a committee is first struck when one of the first motions we pass to hear witnesses is passed without a quorum, because frequently we lack the necessary attendance. It is not that we lack opportunities to speak. Sometimes we have a workload that is so heavy, especially at certain periods of the year, that we cannot manage to attend committees and get all the things done that we are supposed to get done.

I would suggest to you that if we followed the British practice, we would not be concerned, as was the Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), with unemployed MPs running around with nothing to do and not attached to any committees. If one follows the British practice, a set of committees can be developed which are select committees. In the British House of Commons they have seven domestic committees, including the Committee on Privileges; they have three legislative committees that deal with everything from the European Common Market to the consolidation of Bills. Then they have the oversights of Government, which are called select committees but are really standing committees. But if we move to select committees to treat legislation, or legislative committees, and continue on with our departmentally oriented standing committees, plus our task forces, I am quite certain there would be more than enough for all of us to do.

Speaking of the task forces, I think they did a remarkable job. I would like to see some arrangement where the House, as someone else has said, could direct a task force to begin its work. The example that comes to mind is the nuclear issue. Why have we never had that opportunity to discuss this very important issue as Members of the House of Commons?

Mr. Wenman: How will we get it out there?

Mr. Rose: If the Speaker rules in favour of the point of order today in which the agreement between the United States and Canada, the defence agreement and those papers which were tabled today, become a subject for immediate investigation by a parliamentary committee—I suppose we would call it the External Affairs Committee—I would think that that would be a massive step forward, a massive reform and a massive improvement. I congratulate the Hon. Members of the Committee. I am on it now. I was not a member of the Committe at the time the Report was prepared, but I believe it is something of which we should all be proud. I agree with the point raised by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West that sometimes we have rather lethargic committee chairpersons, and they sometimes do not get around to calling the committees on the Estimates until just about the deadline date. I am well aware of that.

• (1640)

I would also like to say that we need to spin off a few more committees. If we are going to have unemployed Members of Parliament around here in the Conservative Party, then I suggest there may be other committees which we could develop. We could set up special committees, such as legislative committees, if the Conservative Members have all that time, or a committee on the environment, or on the status of women. Some of these committees have been mentioned.

One problem has impressed me, because I have been a victim of it as a Member of a small Party. It was very difficult to be a lone Member from a Party once the committee started spinning off subcommittees. As the only Member from my Party on the Members' Services Committee, it was extremely difficult for me to attend to all of the sub-topics which we deal with on that Committee. Similarly, it was difficult on the Alternative Energy Task Force. When I am away, as the single NDP member of that committee, the whole Party is missing, but if one Member of the Conservative Party—

An Hon. Member: That is absolutely true.

Mr. Rose: And it is true of any single Party Member on a committee. There is nothing that says you cannot vary the size of committees. I believe that was the position taken by the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon), that in the British system their select committees vary from 17 down to 6. There are a total of 217 members on these committees, appointed by a committee of Members, not by the Government. There are all kinds of models we could follow. Similarly, an Hon. Member mentioned the appointment of the Speaker. I was asked to limit my remarks, but I could go on for some time because I was impressed by the kind of things we saw at Westminster. And I am quite sure that if we examine the American committee system we might also discover there are certain things we can learn from them as well. I understand that a subcommittee of that Committee will be going down to Washington for discussions.

Let me just say that I believe the House needs to have more control. I believe the House versus Parliament should have the control of the appointment of the Commissioners of Internal Economy. I see no reason why the Commissioners all have to be from the Government side. I see no reason why the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, who is an Opposition Member, cannot be one of the members of the Committee on Internal Economy. I believe the Government has just grabbed those spots, and Parliament should have them back.

There are still a great many things I could say, but I must limit myself to the agreement because I believe there is some disposition for this debate to end at a reasonable time. Just to sum up, I will say that we should look at separating the committees on Estimates, if you like, from the legislative committees, which could be just temporary committees. I believe we should have greater use of the draft Bill so we are not locked in at the committee stage much sooner than we really need to be. After all, those of us experienced in municipal work know about provisional budgets. You do not bring out a budget in a municipality and say, "This is the budget we are going to fly with". I believe we can do all kinds of things like that to give more power to a person who is elected to this place, but I believe we have to be patient to see if the steps we have taken already are going to be helpful and are going to allay the legitimate fears which have been expressed of unfairness in many cases. Let us give it a year. Let us see what else the Committee can come up with to strengthen the power of the private Member. It it accomplishes that, then I think it will receive the approval of the House. If it does not, then we have to throw it out. We can throw it out a year from now, but let us give it a try in the meantime.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the final remarks of the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), I cannot help but wonder what the magic is in waiting a year for democracy to be restored to this House. We are witnessing a situation where the Government has given itself 50 per cent more Members on a committee than the Opposition, and we see a degree of complicity by the New Democratic Party, who will not support the amendment before the House, which would refer this matter back to the Striking Committee to ensure that fairness and equity is exercised in the determination of committee sizes. Why, Mr. Speaker? Let us look at the actual breakdown of proportional representation on the committee of ten which has been proposed. The NDP would have one member, giving them 10 per cent, the Official Opposition would have three members, giving us 30 per cent, and the Government would have 60 per cent of the representation on that committee. The NDP, Mr. Speaker, is getting proportionately a better deal than the Official Opposition because in fact we have 36 per cent of the seats in this House but we are only being given 30 per cent of the positions on committee. That is the beginning of the injustice, Mr. Speaker, and only the beginning. If we look at the proportional representations, the number of seats the NDP have in this House, we will find it represents 11 per cent of the total. And yet it is getting 10 per cent. If you look at the ratio, you will find, Mr. Speaker, that on a proportional basis, this Party is being hit more drastically than the NDP, because if you take the two 15 member committees being established, the NDP has 13.3 of its representation on those committees, and this Party has only 33 per cent. So the NDP have a good deal going for them. That is why they are guilty of complicity with the Government in this matter and are prepared to wait a whole year, while Members of the Official Opposition are deprived of their right to represent the concerns of their constituents before the standing committees of this House.

The basic injustice which has been presented this afternoon is that every Member of the Government will sit on a committee or in Cabinet, or carry the title of Parliamentary Secretary. Indeed, there will be 124 positions created for Government Members on committees. There will be doubling up in some cases. And every backbench Member of the Liberal Party will be able to go home wearing on his sleeve at least a representation on one committee of this House, whereas 40 per cent of the Members of the Official Opposition will not be given an opportunity to represent the particular interests which they bring to this place, and the particular interests of their constituents, as fully accredited members of a committee. That is where the basic injustice originates. Forty per cent of the Members of this Progressive Conservative Party will not be officially represented on committee, and I might add that ten Members of the New Democratic Party, or one-third of their Members, will not be represented on the committee structures as presented here. But every backbench Liberal Member will have a job.

I am not saying this, Mr. Speaker, because I want another job, but I believe we have all come here as equals and we should be treated as such, in the spirit of the words of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), whose judgment and sensitivity to this problem I am sure we all appreciated this afternoon. Nevertheless, there seems to be a degree of hypocrisy in his suggestion that what we are achieving today is to give more power to the backbenchers, to improve the lot of private Members, as he put it. It is a matter of status, of pride, to be able to take a position as a member of a Parliamentary Standing Committee, he told us. Yet where is the status if every Liberal Member is able to enjoy one of those positions? Where is the pride for the 37 Members of the Conservative Party, as pointed out by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), who will be deprived of the right to represent one or more of their special interests as a regular member of a standing committee?

That basic injustice, Mr. Speaker, cannot be denied. The Liberal Party has 53 per cent of the seats in this House, and they are trying to take 60 per cent of the seats on the standing committees, and that is not fair. The Liberal Members have made a great to-do about the fact the chairman would probably not vote very often, but, Mr. Speaker, if that is the case, why does the chairman need to vote at all? Perhaps a compromise could have been worked out. If, with the ten-member committee, we withdrew the right of the chairman to vote—if that is what they are trying to tell us—then we would have one NDP Member, three Conservative Members, and five Liberal Members instead of six. The sixth Member would be a totally unbiased chairman selected from any of the three Parties. He would not be able to vote because there would be no need for deciding the vote. There would be nine voting Members on that committee and there would never be a need for a tie-breaking vote. So if this is the line Government Members are taking, that the chairman would really be unbiased and would rarely vote anyway, then why would they not agree to withdraw the right of that person to vote?

I think, Mr. Speaker, there are those basic injustices. The additional point I want to make is that one would have expected the Striking Committee to look at the possibility of introducing some flexibility as to having a ten-Member committee or 15-Member committee. I do not agree with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) who said we would have to have either 9 or 17. If we were willing to give or take, and allowed the NDP a little heavier representation on some committees and the Conservative Party on others, if we looked at the workload of many of these committees, we would find that we could justify 13 and 15-Member committees in cases where there are only 10. I think in particular of the Finance Committee or the Fisheries and Forestry Committee which encompasses the three different subjects of fisheries, forestry and environment. We have had a problem there with revolving membership because the Members interested in fisheries were very often not interested in the forestry questions, and Members interested in forestry were not always interested in environment. When we look at the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee, we see the travesty of a hodge-podge of different subject matters such as Stats Canada, CBC, official languages, science and technology, Canada Post, Department of Supply and Services, Treasury Board, Auditor General, PMO and the Privy Council Office. You cannot have three Members from this Party and one Member from the NDP developing expertise in all of those areas. In one particular case, Mr. Speaker, that being science and technology, many Members of this House feel there should be one ten-member committee exclusively dedicated to that field. That would ensure that science and technology, which is at the heart of Canada's future economic development, would receive much more than lip service in this House and in the work of committees.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that the Striking Committee could be much more innovative. They could have used the latitude between 10 and 15 Member committees to be more fair to the specific interests of backbenchers and the need of their constituents by ensuring that the committee workload would be relatively equally balanced. These larger committees could be given 15 Members or 13 Members. The committees which meet less frequently need only ten. But to see the rule applied that there shall be ten Member committees except for the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence really hamstrings many Members of this Party and this Parliament who would like to have a more effective opportunity to engage in discussions and bring forward constituents' concerns before committees. I think of transport. This Party is going to have three representatives on the Transport Committee. We deal with surface transport, air transport, marine transport, and we deal with West Coast and East Coast issues, Great Lakes issues, aviation policy; in short, a wide spectrum of subject matter, and we are going to have three Members from this Party dealing with all those areas.

I think the Striking Committee should go back to the work table, with the encouragement of this House, and exercise a lot more ingenuity in adjusting these committees and even proposing to the Committee dealing with Parliamentary Reform that we restructure some of these committees, retitle them, and try to be much more fair in the balance we provide so that all Members of Parliament including the 37 Members of this Party, will have an opportunity to participate as full, regular Members in the standing committees of this House.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the Hon. Member if he will at least acknowledge that my position was not as he put it, but rather that I said I was prepared to sit down and look at any numbers that would reasonably and adequately reflect the composition of the House of Commons. I suggested the two numbers which most readily fitted were 9 at the small end and 17 at the large end. But I said I was prepared to consider any formula that would adequately represent the House of Commons.

More important, does the Hon. Member recognize also that when you speak of the Members on a committee, what you are really talking about is the voting power? As long as the voting power is in the same proportion as the numbers of Members in the House of Commons as it is composed now, then there is no Member who is excluded from taking part in the committee deliberations. However only three Conservatives are entitled to vote and only one New Democrat is entitled to vote, and at the moment there would be six Liberals, if the chairman voted, but only five Liberals on the floor of the committee entitled to vote. That is reasonable and in the same proportion as exists in the House of Commons.

Mr. Wenman: Would you agree then that we go to 17 Members?

Mr. Deans: I tried that already and could not get acceptance at the time. I offered to accept anything that will satisfy the Conservatives, and I do not think that is possible, after having listened to some of the things which have been said. But if the Conservatives would like to move an amendment that would accommodate the size of the House, the proportion of Members in each of the Parties, then I am quite happy to take a look at it over the weekend.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the flexibility indicated by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I think I heard him say he would be prepared to accept anything that the Conservatives would propose.

Mr. Deans: No, I said—

Mr. Siddon: There is an amendment before this House, and I hope he will support it.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make one brief comment here about the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon). The very fact that he can get up and ask questions, receive answers and make comments is the result of the new rules.

Mr. Siddon: I appreciate that.

Mr. Rose: So he got a little extra mouth power out of reform anyway.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Striking Committee Report

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 12(3), the division on the amendment is deferred until Monday next at 3 p.m.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There was an understanding that the debate on this matter would be completed today in a one-day debate. In the spirit of that understanding I would seek the consent of the House that an order issue that the vote on the motion of the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Turner) take place on Monday immediately following the vote on the amendment.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in reply to that point of order, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) is correct in that there was an understanding that there would be a one-day debate. We have had the debate, but we are not in a position to give unanimous consent to both votes taking place at the same time on Monday.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed from Monday, February 7, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the tax amendments in Bill C-139 are understandably of a diverse character, since taxation is no longer a simple matter of occasionally adjusting the Customs Tariff and varying the rate of excise tax.

A century ago, Gladstone recognized that budgets had, even then, become something more than a simple matter of raising revenue. "Budgets are not merely affairs of arithmetic", he observed, "but in a thousand ways go to the root of the prosperity of individuals, the relation of classes and the strength of kingdoms".

Today, taxation, or the absence of it, can profoundly affect the lives of every Canadian. Today, taxation has become one of the major tools available to Government to help shape the future. Here in Canada one need only recall the impact of a change in the manufacturers' sales tax, on the one hand, or in old age pensions on the other hand, to realize the pervasive ramifications of tax legislation. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said last year, "the tax system itself is no longer concerned with only raising revenues, but has increasingly become an important instrument in pursuing a variety of social and economic objectives of the Government. These multiple objectives contributed to the complexity of the tax system".

Since our society, including our economy, is in a permanent state of change, a permanent state of evolution, it is hardly surprising that our tax laws should be subjected to frequent review and amendment. It also follows that the rate of change in our tax system may accelerate as technological change and consumer taste alter continually what we produce and how we produce it.

The criticism has been made about the tax legislation now before us that there is too much of it, that it is too complex and that it has been too frequently altered since it was first introduced. To whatever degree there is truth in those allegations, they are all arguments, in the end, for more frequent and detailed consultation with those who are being taxed. Ultimately, the success of any taxation depends upon the consent of those taxed. Broadly speaking, this would be more forthcoming if those paying the tax understand the process of budget formulation and are certain that their views will at least be heard, if not always accepted.

In the case of the tax measures now before us, both intensive and extensive consultations followed their introduction many months ago. Interested business groups, organized labour, consumer and various community groups have all had the opportunity to make known their objections or to offer their own proposals, both in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and in several other forums. The result in part is the amended measures now finally before the House.

Not all of these measures have been modified, or at least modified to the degree some may have wished, but the consent of many is now embodied in the amended tax proposals upon which we shall soon vote.

Mr. McDermid: How soon?

Mr. MacLaren: Allow me to cite two or three examples. As Members opposite are aware, there have been significant changes to the tax treatment of life insurance first proposed in November, 1981. These changes are designed to meet the concerns of life insurance agents, companies and policy holders. It should be kept in mind, for example, that policies purchased before December 2 last year are not affected by the legislation. Moreover, this legislation will exempt from taxation accumulating income from the vast majority of policies purchased on or after December 2. Regular policies paid for over 20 years or more will also be exempt from the periodic tax.

Other permanent life insurance policies may also be exempt, including those with single-premium, paid-up additions providing additional insurance on these policies. There is no dollar limit on the amount of exempt life insurance coverage which a policy holder can have. This modification was made after extensive consultation between the Government and the life insurance industry and reflects the objective of encouraging Canadians to provide protection for their families and dependants.

One could also add to the list of tax measures that have benefited from public discussion the significant tax changes for the benefit of small business. For example, provisions for the Small Business Bond program which extends assistance to small firms in financial difficulties have been extended to the end of 1983. The program, which was to be terminated at the end of last year, reduces interest rates by almost 7 percentage points through a tax exemption to lenders.

Moreover, taxation of the work in progress of professionals has been modified to exempt, among others, physicians, dentists, lawyers, accountants and veterinarians. This legislation will allow for the lower personal income tax rates proposed in the 1981 budget for the 1982 taxation year. These rate reductions will reduce the tax of those in many income brackets and represent a total saving of approximately $1 billion annually for almost six million taxpayers.

Additionally, to aid lower and middle-income families which have only one wage earner, the federal tax reduction has been modified to $200 per taxpayer plus up to $200 for a dependent spouse. This reduction for taxpayers with dependent spouses with annual incomes up to $20,000 will mean a tax saving of $200. More than 2.5 million Canadian families will receive an additional $100 tax saving as a result of the Government's proposal to increase the value of the refundable Child Tax Credit. All these and others are examples of proposed tax changes which were modified as a result of consultation and representation.

That such changes were made should not be seen, as some have alleged, as evidence of failure on the part of the then Minister of Finance or his advisers. Rather, the modifications should be seen as a successful outcome of a process of budget consultation, however imperfect, that we increasingly need in Canada. In saying that, I do not mean that the process itself is perfect. It has been improved, but very much remains to be done. As Walter Gordon, when Minister of Finance, urged, the old established tradition according to which budgets are prepared in the Department of Finance, without consultation or discussion with other officials or outside experts, and without informing Cabinet of what is going to be proposed until a few hours before presentation to the House, is out of date and should be changed.

His immediate successor noted with equal regret, private Members of the House, and many individuals and associations outside Parliament, have expressed a desire to be given some real channel of communication on budgetary matters and that the House has also had continual difficulty with the legislative side of the budgetary process. And he added:

> We have clearly not met with complete success in our attempt to balance a need for immediate implementation of fiscal measures with the requirement for proper notice to affected taxpayers without offending against the constitutional principles surrounding budget secrecy, the privileges of the House of Commons and the financial initiative of the Crown.

His successor, the third Minister of Finance in turn, noted:

> What I would like is for the Minister of Finance to be able to present a tentative basis of his proposal to Parliament for discussion. The way it is now, the Minister of Finance has to present highly important advice from a very small group of expert advisers . . . and on this the Government stands or falls. I think this is wrong.

I have cited the identity of views among a number of successive Ministers of Finance. To ensure that there is nothing partisan detected in what I have quoted, I want to add the observation of the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who, when Minister of Finance, said:

> I hope that it will be possible in the coming session of Parliament to examine the entire process of budget-making—

Despite this unanimity of views among successive Finance Ministers extending over two decades, we still have today the continuing practice of attempting to force modern budget-making into the long-outmoded practice of another and simpler age, of an age when, as I noted earlier, budget-making largely constituted the adjustment of the Customs Tariff and varying the rate of excise tax. It is as if one expected an adult to wear a child's clothing.

The difficulties arise in two areas. Donald Macdonald, when Minister of Finance, in recalling the statements of his predecessor, said:

> Two aspects of the budgetary process require particular study. The first is a strict rule of secrecy that applies to the budget prior to its introduction. The second is the procedure for consideration of the budget proposals following their introduction in Parliament.

The first of these two problem areas, that of budget secrecy, arises from the need to ensure that no one employing advance information gains financial advantage for himself or herself. During the first decades of our Confederation, advance knowledge of a change in a customs tariff or an excise tax could indeed have provided an undue opportunity. But today, the growing complexity of budgets alone makes such abuse increasingly unlikely. There are today many areas of taxation where the canvassing of options, the public weighing of alternatives, could not in any conceivable circumstance provide anyone with an unwarranted opportunity to exploit for personal gain his or her advance knowledge.

What has gradually overtaken this anachronistic preoccupation with secrecy is the understandable misgiving that the consideration of proposals for tax change is not always carried out in the full knowledge of all their effects. These are areas where no small group of advisers, however skilful, can hope to identify all possible impacts of the proposed changes. Today, submissions are frequently made by groups or individuals in ignorance of what others might be suggesting and the Minister of Finance himself is limited, at least by tradition, in seeking public advice.

The basic problem facing those who formulate and implement a budget is that any pre-budget proposals are prepared in isolation. When budgets are being drafted, there is no public forum in which one proposal can be weighed against another and in which one interest group can offer its suggestions for discussion by others. For example, tax practitioners, among others, rightly believe that they can frequently offer useful suggestions for improvement in both the form and content of tax legislation.

There is another problem arising from the tradition of secrecy. As in the instance of the legislation now before us, a committee of the Canadian Tax Foundation has noted:

> A complicated amendment has followed a complicated amendment and the purpose and scope of certain provisions is difficult to determine. As a matter of tradition, tax changes are usually effective from the date of the budget, but the precise language of an amendment may not be known until many months later when the legislation is finally passed.

Further, the straitjacket imposed by tradition is more restrictive today than it was even a few years ago. With the introduction of the so-called "envelope system" of Government expenditure, the need for pre-budget consultation among Departments has become yet more desirable. However, even that consultation within Government is hampered by the practice of another age.

There are several solutions to these pervasive problems. Green papers, distributed well in advance of a budget could offer various options and invite comment. Preparation of such green papers and their subsequent discussion might in turn be facilitated if a permanent advisory committee on taxation were to be created by the Department of Finance, as the Department of National Revenue has done in the case of its tax advisory committee. As an alternative, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs might be invited to hold pre-budget hearings.

As both the Canadian Tax Foundation and the Minister of Finance's green paper on consultation of 1981 have suggested, the quality of budget formulation might be substantially improved if a committee of the House were to hold hearings about a range of options placed before it by the Minister of Finance. At a time when all Parties are seeking ways to make more effective the committees of this House, here is a way in which at least one committee could play a more significant role in ensuring the adoption of better legislation. The Standing Committee could provide the opportunity for those with particular viewpoints to present them publicly and for everyone to hear those various positions scrutinized and, where possible, reconciled. This would provide wide spread public benefits, not the least of which would be the reassurance given to those who will be taxed that their representations were being heard. From that could flow consent.

The second major area of difficulty identified by Mr. Macdonald when he was Minister of Finance, and also examined in the subsequent green paper, involves the consideration of budget proposals following their introduction in Parliament. Here again, either ad hoc advisory committees of experts or the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs could play a valuable part in ensuring that certain Bills or parts of Bills are given more thorough scrutiny. Under our present procedure, tax Bills are reviewed by the House in the Committee of the Whole. Since no witnesses, no experts, are permitted in the Committee of the Whole, their contributing remains unavailable to Members. As the recent green paper concluded:

> The key to more effective Parliamentary consideration of budget measures lies not so much in major reform to parliamentary procedures as in a more thorough and focused discussion at each stage, from the budget through to the passage of budget legislation. This discussion can be improved through practices such as the tabling of comprehensive notices of Ways and Means, and the provision of technical explanations. It can also be helped by the use of standing or special committees where circumstances warrant.

These cautious and even arid words mask yet a greater need in our society, the pressing need to improve consultation on economic matters among business, Government and labour. Consultation which should inform the budgetary process is important in itself. It is even more important as an expression of a wider recognition that, as public and private entrepreneurship becomes more entwined, consultation and greater understanding among business, Government and labour become an imperative for our further economic growth.

A variety of historical and other factors has contributed to the unsatisfactory situation in Canada today, where such consultation and co-ordination is so badly needed. In the past, and to a degree today, a small population spread over a vast territory has militated against effective consultation. Foreign investment of a pervasive nature has rendered it more difficult for Governments or, for that matter, labour unions to be certain that they are dealing with principals and not merely with branch managers. The existence of several levels of Government within our federal state has further complicated the consultative opportunities compared with those in a unitary state.

These and several other factors have all combined to make the desirable degree of consultation difficult to achieve. In my view, however, the real difficulty arises over the absence of a managed, continuing and formal consultation. In certain areas such consultative occasions do, happily, exist. But across the wide sweep of industry, no such continuing mechanisms are available to business, Government and labour.

In a report prepared by a Government and business task force which I chaired in 1976, we noted that a central problem was the lack of ready consultative mechanisms. Subsequently, 23 industry sector committees, each involving business, Government and labour, were created. Their recommendations were, in turn, reviewed by the cumbersomely named second-tier committee. This may strike anyone who is ardent to debate the issues themselves as a rather mechanistic approach to the question of relations among business, Government and labour, including the method of how budget preparation can be facilitated, to ensure that all those with a direct interest are given the opportunity to be heard. But it must be evident to all but the most myopic observer of the Canadian scene that a prime factor contributing to the current alienation among business, Government and labour is the absence of any process to accommodate their differences.

Our democratic system of Government is predicated on the assumption that the continuing interests of various groups in an increasingly pluralistic society can be reconciled in an approximate national consensus. For such system to be successful, provision must be made for major interest groups to consult with both the national and provincial Governments.

In recent years, largely as an expression of opposition to wage and price controls, or at least to wage controls which limited collective bargaining, organized labour has withdrawn from even the limited consultation which did exist at the national level. Unorganized workers were not, in any event, represented. For its part, business found it difficult to designate its spokesman. This is a problem which parenthetically is understandable when one considers the divergence of interests that necessarily exist among small business, or large Canadian or foreign-controlled, resource-based or high technology businesses.

These and other considerations are all in fact arguments that, if we are going to compete successfully abroad, we must work much harder to create mutual understanding among the major players in the economy by producing the mechanisms to allow that understanding to take place.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The rules of the House provide for a ten-minute period of questions and answers at this point. Are there any Hon. Members who seek to ask questions?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the Hon. Member would advise this House where he finds the rate reductions in this Bill. Could he explain to the House the imposition of the six and five program that wiped out the indexing that has been a part of our tax system for so many years, reducing the indexing this year to 6 per cent and next year to 5 per cent, no matter what inflation does; an increase in taxes effective this year, as a result of this Bill, of well over a billion dollars, and very much more than that next year as the compounding effect of the reduction in indexing this year, again compounded with next year's index reduction, takes effect in the 1983 year. Would he explain that to the House?

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) made a number of points and if I do not recollect them all, I am sure he will return to his question.

His first point was the capping of indexing of income taxation, the old age pensions and Family Allowances. The Member did note that what inflation is in 1983 will determine the degree to which the capping will limit for some Canadians the increase in those programs. The Bank of Nova Scotia, for example, recently forecast, it seems with some confidence, the rate of increase in the CPI to be 6 per cent in 1983. If that is the case, there would then be no difference between the capping of income taxation of the old age pensions and Family Allowances and the actual rate of increase of the CPI.

The Hon. Member would, of course, want to keep in mind that those who are in receipt of the Guaranteed Income Supplement and the Child Tax Credit are not affected by the capping of the two programs, and are indeed compensated for the capping of Old Age Security and Family Allowances.

The Hon. Member asked about the reduction in income tax rates, if I understood him correctly. Indeed, the Bill will bring into law the lower personal income tax rates proposed in the 1981 budget for the 1982 taxation year. This reduces the tax in many income brackets and represents a total saving of about a billion dollars for an estimated 5.8 million Canadians.

I mentioned during the course of my statement the fact that the federal tax reduction has been revised to provide a flat $200 deduction per taxpayer, plus up to $200 for a dependent spouse. Therefore, we shall see substantial tax savings for Canadians, both in terms of their marginal rates and in terms of the federal tax reduction for the taxation year 1982 and beyond.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has difficulty at this point. There are a number of Members seeking to ask questions.

Mr. Blenkarn: A short supplementary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South on a short supplementary.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Member is completely off base. He knows we are not talking about old age pensions and Family Allowances. We are talking about income tax in Bill C-139. This Bill takes away indexing from the income tax system and will increase taxes this year by well over a billion dollars and next year by nearly $2 billion. Why is he talking about a tax reduction? Why does he not make some sense?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren) gave a welcome insight into possible changes in the budgetary process. This would have been fine in a budget speech, but this is an income tax Bill. I would like to know more about what the Hon. Member is thinking with regard to the income tax changes. That is what he should have been talking about this morning.

He is a businessman and no doubt a lot of his constituents seek funds for investment in their businesses. What does he think about the turning into public coffers of all those funds which are going to be collected under the changes in IAACs and forward-averaging? I trust he understands net forward-averaging of moneys due will be paid into the Crown and then drawn back as the taxpayer requires. That places the money in the hands of the Crown. Under the IAACs, moneys were placed in the hands of trust companies or into RRSPs or an annuity contract, and were available for investment in private sources. Will the Member give us the benefit of his thinking as to whether there is preference for forward-averaging or IAACs from an industrial and commercial point of view?

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a question which is of substantial complexity and obviously has a different impact on different companies in different ways. Broadly speaking, it is fair to say that taxpayers who benefited from IAACs in the past will benefit from the reduction in the marginal rate under the new forward-averaging scheme. I believe that the Hon. Member and I would agree that, on balance, the new system is both more equitable and lessens the opportunity for—abuse is a strong word, but distortion than under the previous system. Indeed on balance, the combination of the IAAC provision and the net averaging would be of benefit to many businesses.

Mr. Lambert: The Hon. Member, perhaps unwittingly, avoided answering my question. I did not ask what benefits the individual taxpayer would have under IAAC or forward-averaging. From a philosophical point of view, the money that is paid into these provisions will go into the public coffers as against the private coffers. That is the philosophy I would like the Hon. Member to explain to me.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, under the new legislation for IAACs, previously the money could be withheld and an annuity purchased or other private arrangements made. The basic philosophy of the Government in this instance was that this gave to those taxpayers, those investing in IAACs, an opportunity which was unavailable to others. It was a system which prevented a more equitable character in our tax system. There is some argument for this change. In seeking greater equity in the tax system, which is indeed one of the major elements of the tax legislation now before us, the new system will provide for that. I support it. I think it is a positive move.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is one minute remaining. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) rises to ask a question.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the presentation by the hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren). It was well read, even if it did lack a certain verve or vigour. With the new system of budget formulation that he envisages, and he went into this in some detail and gave a list of alternatives, is it his perference that the green paper, the draft budget, should go to a standing committee, a committee of this House, or should it be debated in the House and Committee of the Whole?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member should make his question short because time is running out.

Mr. Nickerson: How long would this budget formulation process take? Would it be similar to that in the United States, with a whole year involved, or would it be less than that?

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, I shall speak with great verbal vigour. I would think that the process would last the best part of a year. We would do well to start with a green paper, which sets forth some of the options that a Minister of Finance foresees, and that the green paper be sent to a committee of this House for discussion and for witnesses to appear. I should prefer such a system rather than a committee of experts, but committees of experts are certainly a supplementary way of doing it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and answers has expired.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nickerson: That is the first time I have received applause like that!

Today I want to speak on one particular aspect of taxation, an aspect which has largely been neglected in Bill C-139. I see the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) smiling. She knows what the subject is going to be. It is going to be the question of taxation as it affects Northern Canada, Northern taxation. As a Member of Parliament for that part of the country, I receive more letters of complaint regarding taxation than letters of complaint regarding even the Post Office. Therefore, the importance of the issue to people living in the North can be seen.

The present system of taxation as it affects Northern Canada is grossly unfair and inequitable. It results in Northerners proportionately paying much greater taxes than their Southern counterparts. I will explain why this happens.

The cost of living in the North is much greater than in the South. If you look at the Government's statistics and the results of spatial surveys, you find that in the more cosmopolitan, larger areas of the North, such as Yellowknife and Whitehorse, the costs there on a raw basis exceed those in Edmonton by about 25 per cent. A little further north, say, in the Inuvik area, costs on a raw basis are again some 50 per cent greater. In all of the smaller settlements, costs can be 75 per cent or 100 per cent greater than they are is a comparable place in the South.

When one looks at these raw costs—the supermarket prices, the price of housing, electricity and so on—one finds that the costs in the North are even higher than they would appear to be from those surveys. There is a lack of alternatives in the North. In the South, if you do not want to pay the supermarket prices for eggs or strawberries, you can go out to the farms and buy them directly. You can shop around. There are a large number of secondhand stores and secondhand merchandise can be purchased. This is not the case in the North. And when you consider the cost of electricity and heating oil which are necessary to heat the houses because there is no gas or other alternatives, you find that a much greater amount of electricity is needed and a much greater quantity of oil. Also, the price of electricity might be, say, four times higher than the price in Ottawa and half as much again might be needed to heat the houses. That, of course, increases the cost of living to a great extent. Needless to say, there is greater wear and tear on vehicles because of gravel roads and the cold weather.

When you add all this up, even in the Southern parts of the North, you find the real cost of living is going to be at least 50 per cent greater than that, for instance, in Edmonton. This means, Mr. Speaker, that if you are going to enjoy the same standard of living in the North as is enjoyed in the South, more money is needed. It is that simple.

Looking at the difference between Edmonton, Yellowknife and Inuvik, a family living on an income of $30,000 in Edmonton would need in Yellowknife an income of $45,000, and in Inuvik an income of some $60,000, to achieve the same standard of living.

Now enters the tax system! In Canada we have a tax system which contains a rapidly progressive way of computing taxes. A person does not have to make too much money before his marginal tax rate, federal and provincial or federal and territorial, reaches 40 per cent or 50 per cent. Let us take the difference between Edmonton and Inuvik now. If an employer in Inuvik gave an employee an additional $30,000 a year to make his standard of living equivalent, and the marginal tax rate was 50 per cent, he would end up with only an additional $15,000 a year, giving him $45,000 in total. This would buy him the same standard of living as that of someone earning $22,500 a year in Edmonton.

We can see very easily, therefore, that the unfair tax system results in a lower standard of living for Northerners. Incidentally, you might say the same is true of corporate income taxes. This is, evidently, grossly unjust and the system needs radical adjustment. I will refer later in my presentation, Mr. Speaker, to what the nature of the adjustment should be.

The inherent unfairness of the Northern taxation system has given rise to another phenomenon. Because it is impossible for an employer properly to compensate an employee in cash or in wages because of the great tax bite, the system of various allowances and subsidies has evolved. People did not really want this sytem but it was thrust upon them because of the tax system which we have in Canada. In particular, the Government itself, the people involved in the Government offices in the North, did not want it, but it was thrust upon them by directives from Ottawa.

The most common allowance or benefit for people in the North has been the subsidization of housing. Either a house has been provided to an employee at less than market rent, which, of course, would be, perhaps, two or three times higher than here in Ottawa, or cash has been advanced to help subsidize the payment of rent.

Another very common benefit which employees have been granted in the North has been vacation travel assistance, one or two trips per year for each family, either to Montreal for people in the Eastern Arctic, or Edmonton for people in the Western Arctic.

This has been a very common system of encouraging people to take up employment in the North. This system worked reasonably well until about 1978. At that time the Department of National Revenue, through strict interpretation of the Income Tax Act—and under a strict interpretation these benefits and allowances are taxable—started making threatening noises. It threatened to disrupt the system which had grown up, a system to which Revenue Canada up to that time had turned a very sensible blind eye. In 1978-79 the debate raged, so to speak, and I remember it was a very important issue in election campaigns in the North in 1979 and 1980.

In the 1980 campaign, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who was then Leader of the Opposition, said that if he was elected he would look into the tax system in the North and bring about permanent changes. But as so very often happens, especially with the Government opposite, once the election was over and the Liberal Party had been returned to office, they forgot all about the promises which had been made during the course of the election campaign. This resulted, Mr. Speaker, in a public outcry at the betrayal which had taken place.

When the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) travelled to Yellowknife and Whitehorse, he was greeted there by people with placards complaining about the broken promises and the fact that the tax system there was to be made even more unfair. This public pressure resulted in a remission order with which most Members of this House are now familiar. The taxes which should have been collected with respect to certain housing and vacation travel allowances were to be rescinded. In a way, this was unfair because the same benefit, by different names, resulted in it either being taxable or non-taxable. Also travel benefits given for medical or educational purposes were deemed to be taxable, whereas those for vacation travel were deemed to be non-taxable. This remission order lasted from year to year and was renewed annually because of the continuing public pressure. It was renewed at the time of the last budget until the end of 1983.

The year-to-year suspense has made it very difficult for proper planning to take place. It was extremely difficult for labour negotiations to take place when they did not know whether the benefits and salaries, and all the other things which were up for negotiation at the table, were to be taxable next year or not. It was very difficult for labour negotiations to take place. In any event, after two or three years of living with this remission order we kind of got used to it. We changed some of the names of the various allowances to make them fit in with the wording of the remission order.

During 1982 the committee of public servants was established here. It had members from Treasury Board, Finance, Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Mines and a number of other Departments. It had been set up to look at the issue and try to come up with some permanent and sensible solutions. Unfortunately, not one Northerner was on the committee. There was one lady who had been born at Port Radium but who had left there when she was seven years old. All these people were from Ottawa. Policies are being made which affect people from far-flung places in Canada by people who know only Ottawa. Time and again Northerners requested permission to participate in the exercise but they were denied.

The result of the committee study was announced in a press release by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on December 2, 1982 and brought about the most bureaucratic, unintelligible system that could possibly be devised by the most twisted brains in the Department of Finance. The simple remission order was to be phased out over a period of years and was to be replaced by a complex, accountant's nightmare, containing such things as the repugnant principle of imputed rent. There was no way that the man on the street could understand what was about to hit him. Furthermore, tax accountants or tax lawyers could not compute the effect of this because regulations did not exist. All that existed was a press release from the Minister of Finance. This kind of thing is happening frequently, Mr. Speaker; we are getting Government by press release, not Government by regulation. Apparently the new system is to be implemented by a series of remission orders, not by changes to the Income Tax Act or its regulations, and so the uncertainty will continue.

The effect of the proposed system will be to drive people out of Northern Canada, including indigenous Northerners. I know a lot of people who have gone already because they can get a better deal in Southern Canada, when taxation is taken into consideration, than they can in their own area.

This move reduces industry and reduces development in the North. It puts marginal operations out of business. At Pine Point, which is suffering from low lead and zinc prices, three or four hundred people have already been laid off. If this tax threat is implemented, and I presume it will be unless there is a change of heart on the part of the Minister, it will result in another $2 or $3 million burden on the mine or on its employees. That could very well mean that the mine will never get back into production.

This measure will increase the cost of Government in the North. More people work in Government there than in anything else. It will encourage fly-in, fly-out operations. If an industry employs people who live in Edmonton and flies them in, the cost is not considered taxable; they are just going backwards and forwards to work, although the distance may be 1,000 or 1,500 miles. If people are located in the North, however, and taken out to Edmonton a few times a year for a holiday, the cost is taxable.

Not too long ago I was speaking to the chief executive officer of Echo Bay Mines. He told me that if this system is put in place, 50 people who would have been located in Yellowknife would now be located in Edmonton. About half of them would be professional and managerial people, so this provision is taking the brains out of the North and putting them in the South. Perhaps that is what the Government wants. It does not want tax revenues generated in the North to be used there as that would give rise to self-sufficiency. It would rather keep northerners dependent. It does not want people to make the North their home but wants to keep the Ottawa bureaucratic control over that part of the country.

I should like to suggest what I—and some people of all political persuasions—consider to be the real solution, Mr. Speaker. Even the few remaining Liberals in the Northwest Territories have come to the same conclusion and I am sorry that their advice has been disregarded by the Government.

Any change must be permanent and it must be made to the Income Tax Act. We cannot live from year to year with remission orders. The change must be simple and easily understood, not like the complex, five-page remission orders that would be the result of the proposal made by the Minister of Finance. All that is required is one or two additional lines on the income tax form. People living in Northern Canada must be granted an additional deduction against income for the purpose of computing tax or they could be given a tax credit. I will not argue which is better as there are points on each side. A combination of these methods could even be used. It is far and away the simplest system and the one that makes the most sense.

The Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) went into the problem in detail and produced a report. I would commend that report to Hon. Members who are interested in the subject of Northern taxation. He points out that in countries such as Denmark, Russia and Australia—which in a way are similar to Canada as most of the population lives in heavily populated areas, and then there is a sparsely populated hinterland—regardless of the respective ideologies of each country, each has adopted the same approach and there is a special taxation system for remote areas.

I believe Australia is divided into three tax zones. Perhaps 90 per cent of the population lives in the first tax zone and pays tax under the normal system. Then, depending on the remoteness and the cost of living in an area, the tax system is slightly different. I believe they use tax credits. If we were to amend the Income Tax Act in this way, we would be able to phase out the special rules that govern special allowances.

In my opinion, Government revenues would increase over a period of time if we used a sensible system of taxation. People would be encouraged to live and to remain in the North, and surely we want that.

I will not go through the few concluding remarks that I had prepared, Mr. Speaker. It was a pleasure for me to be able to speak on this most important topic today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The rules of the House provide for a period of ten minutes for questions and answers. Are there Hon. Members rising to put questions to the Hon. Member who just spoke? If not, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans).

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) on Bill C-139. One aspect interested me particularly, and that is the special problems of Northern residents as they relate to income tax, the extra cost burdens incurred by people in the North, and his plea for special tax treatment.

I was interested in his account of the kinds of special tax treatment provided in other countries such as Denmark, the Soviet Union and Australia and in the concept of tax zones. If he could provide additional information on the nature of those tax zones and some kind of solution to the difficulty we find ourselves in, I would be interested in that. Perhaps we should use the tax system in certain ways to subsidize or offset the high cost of living in various parts of the country. The concept of tax zones might very well have some appeal and could be examined more closely.

My main purpose in speaking in the debate is to try to lay a broader framework with regard to the tax system. I have become, over the years I have been in the House and during the time I have been Chairman of the Finance Committee, extremely concerned with the tax system as it now stands and with the increased complexity which has evolved in that system over the years from the time of tax reform in the early 1970s. There are certain basic principles which should underlie any tax system, especially the principles that should underlie the income tax system. There are many options which can be taken as to the kind of income tax system which one can design for implementation in a country. But once you have developed the basic principles on which your tax system will rest, one should be very, very careful and indeed reluctant to violate them in any significant way.

Violation of the basic tenets of the income tax system leads to a situation where one group can say, "We are receiving special treatment under the tax system", and another group can then come along and say, "If that group can get special consideration under the tax system and can be treated differently from other Canadians, I think I have an equally strong argument that myself or my group should be treated differently as well". That is precisely the evolution in the taxation system which has occurred at an accelerated rate since tax reform in 1970-71.

We have seen the system modified in a great many ways to take into consideration the special needs of certain groups, the necessity or perceived necessity of stimulating certain kinds of economic activity. These changes to the tax system have resulted in a system existing today which is so complex and so difficult to understand that it has virtually lost the respect of the average Canadian taxpayer. When the Canadian taxpayer no longer understands and/or respects the system of taxation imposed upon him or her, it will lead to some very serious problems with compliance, because after all we still have a voluntary compliance system wherein people declare their income and pay tax on the basis of their own personally-prepared declaration of income and expenses. It leads to problems that have arisen most recently with regard to economic activity which takes place outside the tax system. We have the problem of the underground economy which is growing very rapidly in Canada. It certainly does not approach the extent of the problem in some other countries, notably the United States, but it is certainly growing at a much more rapid rate than any of us in the House would like to see. We have problems of that nature.

Also we have the problems of special interest which flow from my earlier comments that, as certain groups or special interests see other groups receiving special consideration under the Income Tax Act, they demand—and I am certain all Members of the House have experienced these kinds of pressures from various interest groups, whether they be business groups, charitable groups, individuals or groups of individuals—to be treated somehow separately and in a special way under the provisions of that Act. This leads to even greater chaos, if I can use that term, in the public understanding of what is fair, how they are being taxed, on what basis they are being taxed, whether they are paying a fair share of the burden of public expenditure, whether they are paying too much or too little. This kind of situation leads the whole tax system into disrepute.

On a number of occasions in the House I have said that it is time we as a Parliament and as a people set out clearly among ourselves what precisely are the basic principles on which we will found our system of revenue-raising in the country and what are the things we will ask from that system. Essentially, income tax was brought in in the 1916-1917 range as a tax designed to raise revenues to finance our efforts in the First World War. It was not supposed to be a permanent tax; it was supposed to be a temporary one. But it became a permanent feature of our tax system, and various rationales have arisen over time as to why income tax is an appropriate vehicle for raising revenue.

The point is that income tax was a revenue-raising device. That is all it was, but over time we have seen the system become a number of other things. It is no longer just a revenue-raising device. It is a device which is now used to confer special privileges on certain groups by reducing their exposure to income tax. It is a device which is supposed to redistribute income and to stimulate economic growth and development. We are placing so many demands on the tax system that it is unable to achieve any of the objectives which have evolved for the system over time in any respectable way. It is being asked to do so many things that it is doing none of them well, and we will face very serious difficulties in the future with the particular system.

We have before us Bill C-139. I have heard Hon. Members in the House indicate that the Bill is very large; indeed it is. I have heard them indicate that the Bill should not be passed expeditiously by the House because it needs comprehensive and detailed study. I would have to remind my friends that the basic aspects of this legislation have been before the House for over a year now. It started with the November, 1981 budget and the modifications thereto. Subsequent to that budget, there were the June 28 budget, its subsequent modifications and the modifications which occurred in October. But the basic areas under discussion have been before the House for over a year. They have been the subject of an innumerable number of interventions. They have received detailed and close scrutiny by members of a special committee of the Progressive Conservative caucus, by Members of the New Democratic caucus, and certainly great scrutiny by Members of the Liberal caucus. These provisions are not ones with which we are unfamiliar or something which has been dropped on us from high with which we are supposed to deal in a short period of time.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) were members of the special sub-committee of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs during the month of September, at which time we received submissions, heard testimony from witnesses, prepared a draft report on the tax provisions which were available after the June 28 budget and, of course, the previous November budget, and drafted recommendations in the form of a commentary. There were no recommendations made specifically by unanimous agreement of the members of the Committee, but we drafted a report which incorporated opinions in such a way that the reader could easily deduce the opinions of the Committee as to what should be done. Indeed, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when he brought down his October financial statement incorporated a great many of the suggestions that were implicit in the report of the Standing Committee. He made modifications to the provisions as a result to reflect those views as well as the views of hundreds and hundreds of other submissions made to the current Minister and, to the previous Minister concerning impact. He looked at how they could be modified to lessen any adverse impact and how they could be made more fair and more effective in achieving the objectives the Minister of Finance wanted.

We hear the cry that these tax provisions have to be studied in great detail. I agree they have to be studied carefully. We have to ensure that the provisions in Bill C-139 achieve the objectives which the Minister has stated he wishes. I suggest these provisions in one form or another have been under study and intense scrutiny by Members of this House of Commons for a very long time. As a result, we should be able to deal with this matter expeditiously and get it behind us so that we can turn our attention to more fundamental issues dealing with taxation, namely, the structure and fairness of it which simply cannot go without attention much longer.

In the next little while we will have to make decisions as to what the base will be of our tax system. Shall we follow the current practice, which is to use the base of income as the basis for our tax system, or will we move toward a more consumption-oriented tax base? Both methods can be handled in much the same way from a practical perspective as the current income tax system is.

We have also to take a close look at another very important aspect. How shall we apply this tax structure that we will create with regard to the timing of income? One of the big debates as a result of one of the provisions in Bill C-139 is whether or not accrued income should be taxed even though that income has not actually passed into the hands of the recipient.

Mr. Nickerson: Absolutely not.

Mr. Evans: I hear the Hon. Member opposite say absolutely not. That issue was carefully scrutinized by Members of the Finance Committee in September. We came up with very serious reservations about this notion of taxing accrued income as opposed to taxing income when it finally comes into the hands of the recipient for tax purposes.

The whole question of timing should not be dealt with in an ad hoc way; it should be dealt with in a consistent way. If we are going to tax income on a pure income basis, then logic would dictate that you would do it on the basis of when income is earned, not when income is realized. Our Committee, however, indicated that we probably should not be going in that direction of taxing income when earned. Rather, we should be moving toward a system of taxing income when it is realized; that is, when the person has the money in hand.

That moves us away from what is called an income-based tax system toward what is called a consumption-based tax system. People pay tax on the basis of what they are taking out of the system; in other words, a reflection of how much they are consuming in the system and not how much they are earning in the system. Also, that kind of a consumption-based income tax system leads to a much heavier emphasis on saving and investment which, of course, are the precursors of economic growth and increased standards of living.

Those kinds of questions have not been debated to any great extent in this House, and I suggest they have to be. Not only do we have to determine on which basis we are going to tax, but we must determine the timing aspect of that income.

We have to look as well at a very serious question that has evolved over the last 50 years, the question of the progressivity of the tax system. Progressivity of the tax systems means that as your income goes up you not only pay more tax but you pay more tax at a higher percentage rate. Your marginal tax rate goes up over time, which is the difference between the proportional tax system where everyone pays a flat tax of, say, 20 per cent. A flat tax means the more you make the more you pay, but the percentage you pay does not go up. This is contrary to the system we have where the percentage you pay also goes up over time. The basic argument is that this will somehow lead to redistribution of income. It means you tax the wealthier at a much higher rate and those in lower income categories pay a lower rate.

If we look at the total tax system we have in this country, from excise taxes to sales to property taxes to income taxes to capital gains taxes, as well as the special payroll taxes of UIC, Workmen's Compensation, Canada Pension Plan—which are, in any real sense, taxes—we find prior to the introduction of the income tax that essentially we had a flat tax in this country. We had a number of excise taxes, special tariffs and special duties, a flat tax system. Everyone basically paid the same percentage of income in taxation. Income tax was introduced, but over the years the progressivity of that tax became greater and the illusion was that that would redistribute income.

The problem is that a progressive tax system also has negative incentive effects. As the progressivity increases the number of exclusions, deductions, exemptions and special treatment also increase. But if we look at the tax system today, lo and behold, what do we find? With all the complexity and all the attempts at redistributing income, we have a flat tax system again. We have gone from a flat tax system—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to him has expired. The rules provide for 2 questions and answers at this time. The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose).

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) concerning the progressivity of the tax system and how we are heading toward a flat tax system despite the best efforts of this Government. Is the Hon. Member aware that, in this proposed budget for 1982-1983, for a family made up of two parents and two children and an income of $20,000 per annum, that family would have a 21 per cent increase in federal tax, added to which is the provincial portion of another 6 per cent, making a 27 per cent tax increase? This will amount to about $125 a month extra. Has the Hon. Member considered that in comparison to a person earning $50,000 whose increase in tax is only 13 per cent? What about the person receiving an income of $150,000 who has a drop of 7.6 per cent in tax? And a person earning $500,000, there is a drop in tax of 17 per cent.

Is the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre aware of this? Does he feel that is assisting in the flattening out, and eroding the effects of a progressive system which we thought we had to redistribute income? Because we have not been redistributing income; the tax system still favours the rich.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I disagree very strongly with the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose). He will use the figures and say, for example, that tax only goes up by 13 per cent for those with a $50,000 income. In terms of dollars, that is a substantially higher contribution than that being made by others.

• (1220)

We must come to grips with the question of how progressive that tax system should be. My personal view, which I know my friends in the corner disagree with, is that the Government should never take more than 50 per cent of an additional dollar that is made. Why should individuals make an effort if the Government is to take two-thirds in taxes and leave them with one-third? Of course, this involves the incentive question versus the revenue-raising question and the income-redistribution question. We will have to discuss these issues logically and rationally.

Presently, the top marginal tax rate is 50 per cent and I strongly believe that that is as high as it should be. In fact, I think it should not be that high.

Mr. Stewart: Come on over.

Mr. Evans: The Hon. Member opposite says come on over. I suggest to him, if he looks at developments in other countries in Liberal circles, that he will find that it is not heresy for me to say that. It is, indeed, mainline Liberalism.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) has suggested that the Bill has been thoroughly debated over the entire year. Has he looked at Clauses 121 and 122 of the Bill which were never in any budget proposals or, in fact, set out anywhere? Those Clauses specifically give the Government the right to garnishee a person's money 90 days in advance. Clause 122 provides the right for the Government to seize an individual's business without a proper court order and to operate that business as if it owns it. Those Clauses were never set out in any budget or in any manner to be studied by the committee to which the Hon. Member refers.

Under those circumstances, does the Hon. Member believe that the Bill should be rushed through the House?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member did not misunderstand what I said. I did not say that the Bill should be rushed through the House; I said that we should deal with the Bill expeditiously.

The Hon. Member has certainly raised a subject that was not discussed in the Finance Committee. I have heard of those provisions but I have not seen them debated to any extent. The Hon. Member is, indeed, performing his parliamentary duty by ensuring that those issues do come before the House. I would encourage him to give us his views on those particular provisions and explain why he may or may not support them.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I am interested in this question of incentives. The argument against the public school system about 125 years ago was that poor people would not have the same incentive to educate their children. This incentive argument is of particular interest when one considers that the new tax system will raise the income tax paid by a family of four by $125 a month. How does the increase of a tax rate on families like that affect their incentives? Does the Hon. Member think that the Ian Sinclairs and the Samuel Bronfmans of Canada will have their incentives destroyed if there is a progressive tax system, even if it takes approximately 55 per cent of those million dollar a year levels?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I know exactly what the Hon. Member is saying but the figures that he is relating to us do not relate to the income tax itself. They relate to an entire range of other kinds of taxes that he has conveniently rolled into this particular discussion of the income tax. He is rolling in many other taxes including, for example, Unemployment Insurance premiums.

No one who has to pay income tax is facing an increase in tax rates. The tax rates are cut for everyone, down to an income of $11,100 under the proposals before us. No one faces an increase in income tax rates.

There are other taxes involved. The increase in UIC premiums is required by law because that is supposed to be a pay-as-you-go system. The federal Government is not supposed to pay the entire cost of Unemployment Insurance from its general revenue. The Hon. Member is distorting the facts about the income tax when he says that certain individuals are paying higher tax rates. No one is paying higher tax rates under this provision.

I agree with the Hon. Member that the tax system is excessively complex. There are too many taxes that are applied arbitrarily in many cases. The income tax system must be rationalized so that we may have a more equitable tax system that can be clearly understood by individuals. If this is done, we will no longer have the confusing statistics that have been given by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member must be aware that the federal and provincial Governments have put hundreds of millions of dollars into Northeast coal which has presently put about 2,000 workers in my riding out of work. These people also live in one-industry communities. They will be taxed on the benefits of the housing that has been provided to them.

I have brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and I have asked him to give these people the same privileges and benefits as those in the North. The Minister has not yet given me the courtesy of an answer. Will these one-industry communities that are experiencing these difficulties get the tax benefits that other communities in Northern areas receive?

Mr. Evans: As much as I would like to answer that question, I am sure it would be totally irrelevant to the Hon. Member's concern because I am not the Minister of Finance. I cannot make that decision. I suggest he ask the question of the Minister during Question Period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and answers has expired. According to Standing Order 35(2) and 35(3), speeches will now be limited to ten minutes and there will be no question period.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-139 is such a mish-mash that neither I nor most other Hon. Members even know where to start in attempting to give it a fair appraisal. For that reason, I think it is worthy to begin by observing that when the small print on insurance policies became too complex for the average buyer to absorb, public pressure forced their simplification. Similarly, when the gobble-dygook surrounding simple legal matters like uncontested divorces and title searches became too much, we saw the development of the do-it-yourself movement and the rise of the so-called para-legal people.

Not only is it desirable but I think it is imperative that the taxpaying citizens of this country be able to communicate with their elected Government in terms that they both can understand. Is that unreasonable? Yet we have here a massive, Jerry-built contraption of some 295 pages that reflects no less than four budgets, near-budgets, mini-budgets, non-budgets and what have you. This does not count the number of minor statements, adjustments, changes, modifications and just plain retreats that this monstrosity reflects. In turn, it proposes amendments to a taxation system that nearly defied logical explanation at its inception. The inevitable result of all this is that the poor individual taxpayer is so totally helpless and at sea when confronted by a taxation problem that he connot deal with it without professional help. I believe that this is wrong in principle.

A related point to this one leads me to ask just what view of the man in the street is held by the Department of Finance and Revenue Canada. I ask this seriously because I have to deal with these Departments regularly on behalf of constituents who are being harassed by someone hidden in the bowels of Government. However, I ask it particularly because of the nature of these proposed tax measures and, specifically, these measures which deal with private individuals and their investments.

I have spent a good part of my working life in the life insurance and general insurance business. Therefore, because the Bill is too ill-designed, ill-conceived and ill-constructed to be dealt with as a whole, I shall try to direct my comments to those parts of this legislative monstrosity which bear upon insurance and its proceeds.

If there is any principle which is at the heart of our free enterprise system, one which is supported by the Government and Party in power, in theory, at least, it is the right of the individual to have foresight and to prepare for his own retirement years. By all means, the state should provide a base level of income for those who are not successful at doing this for themselves, but once the Government starts penalizing those who are successful, once it begins making it difficult for them to provide for themselves without state support, then it is turning away one of the principles of our system and, indeed, from one of the principles which make possible our concept of a free society.

The original budget of November, 1981 clearly showed the Government's philosophical bent in this matter. Although it has since backed down several times on specific points which were logically untenable, there remains a clear disincentive for individuals to invest in life insurance, what has been up until now the main investment vehicle for the less advantaged among us. In other words, now people might just say: "What is the use of saving money? We might as well squander it and the state will look after us when we reach the usual retirement age of 65."

This disincentive takes two forms. First, policy holders are to be taxed on the accrued income from their policies, deferred annuities. To tax a person on hypothetical income which he or she has not received is, in every case, to force a hardship on the investor. Investors must either scrimp and save from their current incomes to pay the tax or they must liquidate some of their investments to do so. In either case, there is created a strong disincentive to invest, and that is a likelihood that one more family and one more elderly couple will be dependent on state largesse when they reach the end of their working and earning lives. The recent passage of Bill C-131 has shown us all just how secure state largesse can be.

The other manner in which this legislation acts as a disincentive to investment on the part of the small investor is by its very existence. No matter how watered down the final Act may be, it will forever be difficult for the small investor or would-be purchaser of a life insurance policy to forget its original intent. For a brief minute, the Government lowered its friendly mask, its "good guy" false-face, and let us see its real fangs.

Whatever it may say, whatever it may in the short term do, the fact remains that it has shown us that its real intent is to discourage small investment and individual independence. It has shown us where its heart is, that it is philosophically more comfortable when its subjects receive a more or less standard income, with greater dependence on it and less on their own initiatives. This is not a new idea on the world political stage, it has been with us for a long time. It has a name, but that name is not Liberalism.

The Government's attempts this direction go back to 1978, with the repeal of the investment income tax on life insurance. Hand in hand with this went an attempt at taking the savings accumulation in a life insurance policy at death. That attempt proved abortive at the time. Now we are confronted with this present mish-mash, and while we have so far succeeded in watering down the proposals as originally presented in November of 1981, the line of Government thinking still stands exposed.

If I were a would-be policy holder, if I were a would-be investor, I would hesitate. My hand would be stayed by the nagging worry in the back of my mind, "When will the Government drop the other shoe?" I remember speaking on this same legislation, and the former Minister of Finance, the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), had the good sense to back off; but his successor certainly did not.

How about the insurance agent or, for that matter, any other salesman who is the victim of the Government's ill-conceived schemes to gouge money from them in other ways? A salesman or anyone else who is dependent on a car for making a livelihood is as dependent as is the Minister on his staff, and for the same reason. He knows where he wants to go, but it is the car that carries him. The Government has declared that, by its new "half year convention", the depreciation on that car will be limited to one half the normal rate in the year in which it is purchased. What will be the inevitable effect of this measure? It will discourage his purchase of that car. That is what it will do at this time when the automative sector of the Canadian economy needs every bit of support it can get.

Can you forgive us, Mr. Speaker, if we, the public, get the impression that the Party in power has no idea of what it is doing or even what it is trying to do? However, this is not the only instance in this Bill where the blatant, anti-small investor mindset stands out. No longer will Canadians be able to deduct the interest on loans taken out by RRSPs. Nearly one million people earning less than $30,000 a year declare RRSP contributions. What, then would the proposed Bill achieve? It would seal off another avenue of investment and, thus, independence for the small investor.

I could go on if time permitted. This measure will deny registration for future deferred profit-sharing plans which allow an owner to qualify as a member of the plan. How petty can one get? Shades of Bolshevism! Perish the thought, Mr. Speaker! Should we benefit from anything? Never mind the fact that it is the small owner who provides the bulk of Canada's payrolls, and never mind the fact that the direct effect of the Bill will be to discourage such profit-sharing plans in small business.

What, then, is the inevitable result? It will mean many more Canadians reaching retirement age without resources of their own on which to fall back, and who will thus be dependent on the standardized largesse of their loving, caring Government.

I see, that Your Honour is starting to rise, and I will therefore take my seat.

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to reiterate what some of my colleagues have said with regard to the legislation before the House, that is, that there is a real need to pass the legislation, and this—

Mr. McDermid: Come on, it is a 300-page Bill. Quit ramming things through.

Mr. Masters: —as expeditiously as possible. That does not necessarily mean ramming it through, but it has been pointed out that many of these items contained in the package have been debated in one form or another, including in this House and in committee, for some time, and if we are to—

Mr. McDermid: Dictators over there.

Mr. Masters: —resolve some of the uncertainty out there, I think we must get down to the business of passing the legislation in order to get on with the business of Canada.

Mr. Cosgrove: That is what the business community wants.

Mr. Masters: There have been a great deal of changes made in the legislation over time.

Mr. McDermid: Called theft.

Mr. Masters: Most of the changes are contained in this Bill, Bill C-139. One of the good things which has come out of these changes has been something which was beginning to be lacking in this country, that is, the opportunity for honest dialogue between the Government and business in the community at large. Whatever lack there may have been in that area, it is heartening to me, as an individual Member, to see this dialogue improving. An ideal situation would be where we could sit down at the same table, discuss our mutual problems, recognize our various points of view, and then attempt to come to a consensus which is fair, not only to the industries with which we are dealing, but to all people of Canada as well.

It is a very complicated world that we live in today, as we try to be fair to each other, as we try to spread the wealth around in such a way that those who need help most receive it, while at the same time not destroying the necessary incentives within the system to allow business to expand and to prosper to the benefit to all Canadians.

Whatever the reasons, it has been a complicated time in the life of Canada as we have evolved many different ways to try to attain the objectives that I have stated. Now that we have reached this point in our history where we are maturing as a nation, we are now finding better ways to discuss our problems together and come up with solutions. The solutions that come from consensus do not necessarily or ever please all of us but I do think that once consensus has been reached, thoughtful Canadians recognize that now that we have a consensus in this area or that area, we will put that consensus to work as our guidelines and move in a common direction, instead of continuing to bicker among ourselves.

I suppose one of the most controversial items suggested in the 1981 budget had to do with life insurance, and that has been referred to on many occasions in and out of this House. I was involved not in the life insurance industry but in the general insurance industry, so I do sympathize in a philosophical sense with the problems that my former colleagues in the life insurance business had. I also have to say that I have a tremendous amount of respect for the way in which they brought forward their concerns. They rose in anger and that anger changed to very hard and heavy discussion. I think it proves the point that when things cool down where you have honest dialogue, you will have changes made for the benefit of all.

I think what happened in the life insurance area was that it appeared that a very basic premise of Canadians, and that is that we have the right and obligation to protect ourselves via life insurance and to protect those we leave behind when we pass on to our great reward, was being attacked. Life insurance has always been deemed a very responsible way to conduct one's affairs. No one argues with that and indeed that caused the greatest amount of furore in the first place was that there was the perception out there that people were somehow going to lose the right to protect themselves and pay stiff tax penalties for having in what they felt was a very responsible manner.

I think that the life insurance people were right to say: "I do not really think you guys are going in the right direction". It was only after careful and thoughtful discussion by the industry that changes were made, but I do not view that as a bad thing. I think it could have been done differently in the first instance, but hindsight is always a wonderful thing to have. I do not think that it is a bad thing that something was put on the table that had to be discussed. Somewhere along the line we had to resolve what we intended by the tax regulations concerning life insurance, or in fact anything else. We are going through a very difficult period in trying to realign our tax laws, which are cumbersome and probably unnecessarily so, and which have to be changed so that the average Canadian can understand them. It is frightening to me that even chartered accountants are having difficulties dealing with our income tax laws and the intent of the laws.

In regard to the life insurance industry, I think that once it was proven that what we were really talking about was taxing income—because that is what income tax laws are for, to tax income—there was a degree of consensus. Under the previous set of rules there were devices—and the unfortunate term "loopholes" has been used—within this system that allowed people to take advantage of the system. And that is their privilege; the whole tax system has been based on that. If one can see a way to make it work to one's advantage, by all means do so.

However, if we are going to continue to try to be fair in our taxation system to all Canadians, if we are going to ensure that we pay tax to the National Treasury in a generally equitable way among all Canadians so we can look after the needs of the country and the people in the community who are not as fortunate as others, then we have from time to time to take a look at these ways to use the system to one's advantage and ask: "Are we being fair?" This is what has happened in the case of the life insurance industry.

I am not going into all of the amendments at this time except to say that the Government, I am sure, recognizes that not everyone selling life insurance is exactly ecstatic about the changes, but that the majority of them say: "It is now in the proper perspective; it is now something we can live with; we can now sell to our clients; it has gone back to the basic of just simply taxing the income portion of life insurance".

If I may be parochial for just a moment in this matter, one of the first groups that to my knowledge came in very heavily on this subject were the life insurance people of Thunder Bay and Northwestern Ontario. These are people with whom I associated for many years and for whom I have a great deal of respect. They very properly pointed out what they felt were the deficiencies. I was able to take that message to the Government, to a Government albeit reluctant at first to listen because, after all, it is very difficult to make changes once a Bill has been put on the table. The impulse is to say there is a problem taken care of, let us go on. It takes a big man, a big Government or big thinking, to be able to say: "Wait a minute, you have had to hit me over the head perhaps, but these points that you raise are relative. We do feel that you make a strong and valid argument; we will now listen to you; we will react to your concerns and together we will be in a position to do better by you and the industry and still preserve the sanctity of trying to be fair to all Canadians."

Mr. Speaker, this is just one item that is contained in Bill C-139 but it is another reason why this Bill deserves to be passed as expeditiously as possible so that we can clarify some of the concerns that Canadians have and proceed on to bigger and better things.

Income Tax

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Bill C-139, an Act respecting the Income Tax Act.

Before I begin I would like to explain that I am not an expert on income tax and I want also to stress that I do not think there are many Canadians who are expert on income tax either. I do not think a taxpayer should have to have a five-year accounting degree in order to figure out what is going on with his taxes.

Now the Government is adding to the Income Tax Act another 300 pages, 300 pages of more complicated information for people to have to delve through and figure out. My office spends a lot of time helping people with their income tax problems, and I am sure many other Members of Parliament have many questions and concerns expressed to them by their constituents. We often have problems with our RRSPs, particularly with older people. It is one thing to sell people RRSPs but it is another thing to give them some counselling as to what kinds of benefits they provide, and what kinds of problems they will have if they do not cash them in at the right time, or if they cash them in all at once what difficulties they will be in. They are not getting that kind of counselling.

Unfortunately, the Government provides ways for them to be able to enter into these programs but in many, many cases it does not provide the follow up, so that explanations can be given to these people of what the advantages, if any, are.

Then there is taxation of small-businessmen, many of whom are going out of business. Many do not understand the income tax problem. This is a tremendous hazard for them, not only in operating their business but in having to get experts to figure out their taxation problems.

The problem with complicated taxes is that nobody understands them. When people do understand the tax system, it can be used to frighten or harass them. People are frightened and are concerned about whether they are filling out their tax forms correctly. This is what is happening to waiters and waitresses in my riding. The federal tax people have decided that waiters and waitresses are cheating on their income tax. I do not have the current figures, but according to the 1971 census a waitress earned $1,442 and a waiter earned $2,995. At that time the average income in Canada was about $5,300. In 1971, waiters and waitresses earned only half the average annual income. The same is probably true today. Thousands of these people across the country have received letters from the tax Department stating that they have under-estimated their income by hundreds of thousands of dollars. What is disturbing is that the majority of Canadians who received those letters have no background in dealing with income tax problems. They are not aware of their rights and the tax department is not quick to help. They do not belong to unions, they are not organized. The tax Department representative walks in, corners them and makes them sign documents which may be very detrimental to them. I repeat, these people earn half the average wage in Canada.

There is a man in my constituency who tries to help these people. He has been working with the tax Department for nearly 20 years. He tells me that never in all that time has he run into anything like this. The tax Department is being pretty tough on waiters and waitresses, treating them differently from those who earn a lot of money.

When the original MacEachen budget was introduced, the Government said it would close a lot of loopholes in the taxation system. Many of these loopholes have since been reopened. The tax cuts for the well-to-do which were introduced in that budget have remained. For those with a taxable income under $25,000 a year, there is no real change in their taxation under this Bill. However, if you earn a lot of money, this Bill puts you on the gravy train. Those earning $86,000 to $130,000 a year will receive a 5 per cent cut in taxes; those earning over $130,000 will receive a 9 per cent cut. That is quite a Christmas present for the rich from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde)

The rich will not have to worry about paying more in corporation taxes. In 1960, corporation taxes made up over 40 per cent of federal tax revenues. Today it is about 30 per cent. Shame, taking it out on the working people of Canada. Obviously you can do a lot better with the tax Department if you make $1 million a year and have a team of accountants working for you than if you were a waiter or waitress. If you are a waitress, the Government not only takes your money with no questions asked, but tells you how much you were supposed to have made.

With regard to Northern benefits, I asked the Parliamentary Secretary about this and he said there was no increase in taxation.

Mr. Fisher: Who said that?

Mr. Parker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) stated in his speech that there was no increase. I want to tell him that there is a very serious increase in the taxation of the benefits of housing and particularly in single-industry communities such as I represent.

Northern benefits have been changed a little to help assist Northern groups for the year ending 1983, but they are of absolutely no assistance for the single-industry communities such as I represent—those who have been laid off. Those in the logging camps will now have to pay tax on room and meal benefits and on their automobile expenses. That is a shame at this time when our logging and mining industries as well as the coal industry in my riding are in such a predicament.

The problem has been created by the federal and provincial Governments which have allowed funding in Northern British Columbia to take away jobs from those who pay taxes, those who are trying to make a living in the single-industry communities. I wrote to the Minister about these problems but I have not received an answer. Shame! A Member of Parliament cannot even get an answer from a Minister on a very important issue like this.

Then there is the matter of how fast we are being asked to pass this legislation. The Government has been sitting on this legislation for months. It came running into the House before Christmas demanding that we pass the Bill immediately. The Government will come into the House in a few days and say that in the interest of those who will be receiving money back, it has to have this legislation. The Government will say it is the Opposition that is not allowing these people to have their money. That is what this Government does with every piece of legislation that comes into this House.

This is very important legislation which requires a lot of consideration by members on all sides of the House. The Government says it will not make any income tax refunds until the Bill is passed. That will not sell. There is no difference between this Bill and the Bill to cut the Family Allowances. They cut the Family Allowances first and then passed the Bill later. We on this side said that was illegal and should not be done. The Government can take money away from those receiving Family Allowances, but cannot reimburse others until the legislation is passed. What a hypocritical move on the part of this Government! But it will not work. The Government says we must pass this Bill quickly because of the uncertainty among taxpayers. Do you know what causes that uncertainty?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair hesitates to interrupt but the time allotted to the Hon. Member has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, do you know what that uncertainty causes? You get uncertainty when Cabinet Ministers start babbling about the tax system, as the Minister of State responsible for the Status of Women did. I would like to read some excerpts from letters that appeared in our local newspaper—

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hate to say so, but I was one of the people who said no to the request that this inane diatribe continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent. The Chair did not hear it at the time. The Hon. Member for Ontario.

Mr. Fennell: In view of the time, Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

SHIPBUILDING

ANNOUNCEMENT OF MEASURES TO HELP CONSTRUCTION OF CANADIAN SHIPS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, not long ago, the Canadian Government announced a number of measures aimed at assisting Canadian shipbuilders. These measures include a broader application of Canadian Customs and Excise legislation as it concerns goods used for the purpose of resource exploration and exploitation beyond the present twelve-mile limit; maintaining subisidies to promote production in the industry and extending a production subsidy for ships finished and delivered before July 1, 1985; and adopting a coastal shipping policy to encourage greater participation by ships sailing under the Canadian flag.

I find it rather strange, however, that Opposition members suddenly seem to have dropped the subject, especially since between November 4 and December 13, 1982, they rose seven times to speak to this matter. Since the new policy was announced, the subject was brought up only once, on January 19. It must be because of the favourable reception this policy has received in shipbuilding circles.

HEALTH CARE

SUGGESTED REFERRAL OF PROPOSED BILL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, we have a conflict in the House. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has indicated that she is negotiating with the Provinces regarding the proposed Canada Health Act. Yet when we talk to provincial Ministers, they indicate they have not met with the Minister for many months.

In the meantime, Madam Speaker, concern about the contents of the Bill is growing.

People in the health care profession, labour organizations, and consumer groups, want to voice their concerns about Canada's health care system and the proposed Health Care Act. They are concerned about issues such as over-crowding in hospitals, lengthy waiting lists, and the need for trained personnel. They have asked repeatedly that the Minister meet and talk with them so they can make their views known. No such meetings are taking place.

In that context, Madam Speaker, I urge this House to urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare to refer the subject matter of the Bill to the Standing Committee so that witnesses can be heard and recommendations made to the Minister about health care in Canada.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

TRANSFER OF BLANKING PRESS FROM WINNIPEG TO LIVELY, ONT.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, it has been brought to my attention that one of three blanking presses will be moved temporarily from the Mint in Winnipeg to the Nickel Belt Riding of the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), where it will be used to fulfill a contract of Inco in Lively, Ontario.

As 45 employees of the Mint were laid off in July, 1982, the removal of a blanking press is valid cause for concern that future lay-offs are to be expected. Furthermore, the cost of moving such a machine will total tens of thousands of dollars, which increases my need to question the rationale of a temporary transfer. Therefore I would ask the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) to provide this House and the City of Winnipeg with an explanation of why this costly move is being considered when the Mint in Winnipeg is fully competent and capable of handling the task to be done in Lively, Ontario.

The employees of the Mint are truly worried that the same irrational decision making, as seen in the case of the aerospace training centre, will also prevail in their circumstances, causing Winnipeg once more to be passed over as a less logical alternative. At this time of record high unemployment the Mint employees and myself, would appreciate receiving the Minister's assurances that no further lay-offs will take place.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EL SALVADOR—AMNESTY URGED FOR POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, late last week at the United Nations Human Rights Commission in Geneva there were reports about the violations which have taken place against human rights in El Salvador during 1982. Over 4,000 people have been murdered. Actually, 4,777 were listed as having been murdered by, as the report indicated, forces of the right, many times supported by the Government.

Lask week, although I can hardly believe it, the United States Ambassador to the United Nations, Jeane Kirkpatrick, visited El Salvador, spent 18 hours there, and after leaving said that she had never seen a place in which human rights had been so well respected. In the light of that statement, I would say that the Government of Canada has to be extremely careful about following any policy of the United States in that part of the world.

I would ask that the Government of Canada be very sensitive to the sermon that Archbishop Rivera y Damas preached yesterday in the Cathedral of El Salvador, asking for amnesty for the 700 political prisoners who are now imprisoned and being tortured, as the report stated in Geneva, so that when the Holy Father visits there on March 6 there could be the beginnings of a dialogue which will bring about peace.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO PUBLIC

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, on the subject of corporate communications, the Human Resources Management Council of The Financial Times found that corporations with full line internal and external information systems in place are weathering the recession better than most. In addition, they benefit from greater Government and public acceptance of unpopular business strategies now taking place across the country. While this information environment is a new phenomenon arising from the right-to-know attitudes developing during the past two decades, those attitudes are here to stay and they call for a greater openness between business and society. The Council found that few Canadian corporations assigned adequate priorities to the need-to-know and right-to-know attitudes. Consequently, the Council concluded that the credibility of business as a whole and its ability to bring the country out of a recession have suffered serious damage. In order to ameliorate this situation, the Council made several recommendations, one of which was that each corporation appoint a director of communications, equipped with both authority and support staff to be charged with the responsibility to prepare annual information plans and to carry them out.

As a Member of this Government who supported Bill C-43, dealing with access to Government information, I would like to call upon those involved in Canadian industry to give greater opportunity to improving corporate communications and to provide factual, fair, reasonable and as complete information to the public, and to their employees, as competitive interests allow.

OPPOSITION OF HORTICULTURAL COUNCIL TO EXTENSION OF COVERAGE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): The recent decision of the Unemployment Insurance Commission to force agriculture and horticultural employers and employees to pay unemployment insurance premiums for employees receiving less than $250 a year, or where an employee is employed less than 25 working days a year, is totally unacceptable to the Canadian Horticultural Council, its membership, and in those areas where such employees are employed on a seasonal basis, to fruit growers, vegetable growers and tobacco growers, among others.

This decision shows a complete lack of understanding and lack of regard for the position of such employers, and will have a negative effect on their ability to produce labour-intensive horticultural crops. This decision is totally incompatible with the Government's objective of import labour replacement and the creation of more jobs for Canadians in the horticultural industry.

Because of the drastic downturn of our economy, everything should be done to help maintain and encourage the horticultural industry in Canada, but creating difficulties and administrative nightmares is totally negative and discouraging. I hope the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) will also see the unfairness of this whole matter and take it upon himself to revoke this regulation by reinstating Clause 16(1) of the Unemployment Insurance Regulations, which is not only totally fair and equitable, but is also imbued with that rare commodity, common sense.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

AUTOMOBILE POLLUTION CONTROL DEVICES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, Canadian cars are not now equipped with pollution-control devices to the same extent as American cars. Although standards were identical in both countries in the early 1970s, American cars are now estimated to cause only one-seventh as much pollution as Canadian cars. Traditionally, Canadians have paid more for their cars than Americans; however, our before-tax costs are now lower. There is evidence that emission-control devices do not reduce engine performance or add materially to the cost of the car.

This would seem a good time to act to protect our environment from the carbon monoxide and hydrocarbons which are spewed out by our cars. There would also be opportunity for job creation in refining and using emission-control devices. I understand Environment Canada is studying the question, and I look forward to seeing the Minister introduce this matter to the House for discussion and decision.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS AND POLICY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, at a time when unemployed Canadians number almost 1.6 million, and, when added to those who are underemployed or only able to find part-time work, the number comes to over 2 million, it is clear that the Government must start somewhere to resolve this serious problem. It is equally clear that no solution to any problem thus far solved by the Government has come without a willingness to expend the sizeable amounts of money that problem solving in Government takes.

As the well-known Chinese proverb has it, "A journey of a thousand miles begins with a single step". Accordingly, it is in the spirit of my usual bipartisanship that I extend my congratulations to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his ever-supportive caucus on their success in tackling the national unemployment problem, starting with Senator Pitfield and Donald Macdonald. May I further take the liberty of pointing out to him that should his anti-unemployment program ever expand to that degree, there is 11.6 per cent of the work force in my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka that would like to be squeezed into it as well.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

REPORT ON CANADIAN CONTENT IN TELEVISION PROGRAMMING

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, the CRTC recently released its report on Canadian content on television. Although this report contained only draft regulatory changes, it is a laudable attempt to deal with the following items: first, the relegation of Canadian programing to non prime time hours; second, the almost total absence of high quality Canadian drama on our private networks, and third, the other problems relating to the small size and fragmentation of the Canadian television market.

The CRTC, as regulator, is trying to ensure that viewers have the opportunity to watch first-rate Canadian television, but little more can be done until the Government tables legislation and policies to deal with broadcasting problems in the 80s. For a year, now, we have been entertained by stories of imminent changes and new initiatives, but each promises has been followed by a new excuse for Government inaction, and the abdication of its policy-making role.

Meanwhile, we have total confusion concerning the part that new delivery technologies, notably dishes, will play in the future of Canadian television, and we have a CBC which is powerless to meet new challenges or to plan for the future because the Government reneged on its promise to increase funding, which has decreased over the last five years.

We have no new incentives to help our private broadcasters tap the increased international market for new programs.

We lack new initiatives to help train our visual artists. The 80s are here, and we need to stimulate private sector production of better Canadian TV entertainment.

ENERGY

SUPPORT URGED FOR SOLAR INDUSTRY

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, the fate of Canada's solar industry is soon to be decided by Members of Cabinet. After reviewing the industry's present status and potential, Cabinet Ministers will have to establish the level of funding the solar industry may receive for the next five years. I strongly suggest that federal Cabinet Ministers show complete support for the solar industry and continue funding at least to equal the present level of spending.

In particular applications, solar energy can be cheaper than convention sources. The Cabinet discussion paper prepared on this topic concludes that "over a five-year period, aggressive pursuit of lower price/higher performance systems by both industry and Government can achieve commercial cost-effectiveness. This is realistic but challenging."

Price performance goals cited in the discussion paper put solar energy below the consumer price of competing energy sources such as oil, natural gas, and electricity, in most parts of Canada. The only exception is in the prairies where natural gas is less expensive.

I appeal to the federal Cabinet to show support for the solar industry by continuing funding with the intention of advancing the industry to a state of independence.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

STATUS OF WOMEN

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE TO STUDY WOMEN'S ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. One of the problems in this House seems to be in getting the Prime Minister to take an interest in those who are out of work or on welfare, particularly those living below the poverty line. According to recent figures, some 46.8 per cent of those people are single women.

In spite of his musings that the poor are getting richer, would the Prime Minister agree to establish a special committee to examine the situation of single women, and the conditions in which they find themselves, which suggest that they are totally inappropriate to Canadians in 1983. I refer particularly to those families that are headed by single women which, according to the same figures, comprise some 42 per cent of single women.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition seems to be labouring under a misapprehension. He should refer to what I said the other day. I never said that the poor were getting richer; I said the poverty line was a moving line and it was traditionally going up in Canada. Therefore, the premise of his question being wrong, I take it that I do not have to deal with the question itself.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, that answer is totally inadequate, particularly in light of the percentages of single women who are living below the poverty line and trying to put meals on the table for their children. I would point out, with respect to the Prime Minister's previous comments in this regard, that we are not speaking of average incomes but of a subsistence level beneath which the average family, living below the poverty line, cannot meet its needs, particularly those families with young children.

PLIGHT OF ELDERLY FEMALE PENSIONERS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, will the Prime Minister not establish terms of reference for a special committee to examine these matters and, at the same time, address itself to considerations of elderly female pensioners who are living in conditions that can only be described as intolerable? I can assure him that there are very few in that category who are spending their winter holidays in the Caribbean.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not know why the Leader of the Opposition takes a swipe at his predecessor, who obviously was spending the last week in the Caribbean. I do not think that is fair comment from a seatmate of the former Leader of the Opposition.

As far as a parliamentary committee is concerned, Madam Speaker, the new Leader of the Opposition has a new House Leader. He knows that questions on setting up parliamentary committees are usually discussed between House Leaders. I am sure that our House Leader would follow that course if the Hon. Member wants to follow it.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, can the Prime Minister tell us whether he has any personal objection to setting up a special committee of this House to look into specific problems of single women in this country, before he is off to St. Lucia?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No specific objections, Madam Speaker, beyond the general difficulty that House Leaders meet when there are too many special committees set up, all to deal with pressing and urgent problems; the House becomes impossible to manage in such circumstances. I am sure his new assistant as House Leader will be able to negotiate his way through some of these things with or without the help of the new Leader of the Opposition.

SINGLE PARENTHOOD

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister will know that 48.5 per cent of single-parents families headed by females are falling below the poverty line. These women have difficulty getting jobs, they have problems with child care, problems with health care, and problems that lead to suffering among the children. Does the Prime Minister have any specific objection to referring the issue of single parenthood to the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare for examination and report back to the House, with recommendations? Does he have any specific objections to that kind of plan?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, of course I have no personal objections. I am not a member of that Committee but I think that this is a matter that should be dealt with through the Chairman of the Committee and the Committee itself. I have no idea what its current agenda is. If the Hon. Member makes representation to his own Members on that Committee I am sure they can arrange things in the usual way with the Chairman of the Committee.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, there has been some obstinacy at those meetings. We do not have such a Committee at the moment.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF PERMANENT COMMITTEE ON WOMEN'S ISSUES

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, one of the issues that we thought might come out of parliamentary reform was the setting up of a few more permanent standing committees. It seems to me that the House and the women of Canada could benefit from a permanent standing committee to deal with women's issues. They have special problems in terms of the impact of high technology on their job situation, they have special problems with parenting, with retirement, health care and so on. Would the Prime Minister have any specific objection to setting up a new permanent standing committee to deal with women's issues?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is a singular request on the day when we are precisely voting on the setting up of these parliamentary committees. It is the first time in my memory that we have to vote on the creation of such committees. I am sorry that the Opposition has been dragging its feet, preventing us from getting ahead with this business to the point of calling it to a vote this afternoon.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TEST AND EVALUATION PROGRAM

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week the Minister tabled a framework agreement signed by Canada and the United States which covered or laid down certain conditions for the testing of certain weapons, including the Cruise missile, on the assumption that such tests actually take place at some point in the future. On Friday in the House the Secretary of State for External Affairs said the following:

> There is no understanding beyond what was tabled.

I would like to ask the Minister to be more precise on that today. More specifically, had the Government or the Prime Minister made a commitment in principle to test the Cruise missile prior to the reaching of the agreement which the Minister tabled last week?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker.

CABINET DECISION—MINISTERS' STATEMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in view of that very interesting reply of the Minister, I should like to ask the Prime Minister the following question. Last April 29, in reply to a motion which I moved on behalf of my colleagues in opposition to the Cruise missile, the then Secretary of State for External Affairs said in the House that President Carter had requested Canada to test the Cruise missile system. He went on to say:

> This request has been accepted by the Canadian Cabinet.

Further on the Minister of Justice added these words:

> The decision to go ahead with that has been taken. What is being held up is the implementation of the decision which has already been taken.

Who was misleading the House? Was the former Secretary of State for External Affairs misleading the House when he said that last April, or was the present Secretary of State for External Affairs misleading the House when he answered the way he did today?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs answered the question as I would have. I can assure the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party that there is no misleading of the House in that. The agreement with the United States, the request which was made of us, concerned a weapons testing agreement, the Cruise being one of the specific instances of weapons which could or could not be tested under that agreement.

In so far as President Carter's request referred to by the Leader of the New Democratic Party is concerned, I have not had time to ascertain whether he asked specifically to test the Cruise or whether he was talking about a testing weapons system generally, and whether the reference to that by the former Secretary of State for External Affairs was not based upon an inaccurate memory of what President Carter had requested. I cannot say, but I will certainly undertake to have either the Secretary of State for External Affairs or myself find out the precise terms of President Carter's request.

I know since 1980, since President Reagan has been President and since we have formed the Government, that the discussion has been, and the request of the United States has been in terms of general weapons testing.

I recognize, as I believe the Minister recognized, that in people's minds there was often an identification of the Cruise with the general umbrella agreement. But in terms of what the United States requested and in terms of what Cabinet authorized, it was a general weapons testing. Cabinet made the specific point that when the Cruise came up to be requested we would ask the Minister of National Defence to bring that specifically to Cabinet to be discussed under the umbrella agreement.

FORMER MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, something very significant is being said here because the former Secretary of State for External Affairs could not have been more categoric in his wording. He referred to a Cabinet decision. He did not refer to a weapons system test in general. He referred very specifically to the Cruise missile. The missile system referred to in my motion for debate that day included the Cruise missile.

The Minister in his speech went on to speak at some length on why Canada was an appropriate terrain for testing the Cruise missile and, I repeat, with specific reference to a Cabinet decision, the Minister of Justice said:

> Following the decision of 1979, President Carter requested some 18 months ago that we allow one of the proposed missile systems, the Cruise missile system, to be tested in Canada. It is the Carter request, which was subsequently adopted by the Reagan administration, which has been accepted by the Canadian cabinet.

Nothing could be more precise than that. Therefore I ask the Prime Minister whether he is now saying that there is no such agreement with the United States. Is he now saying it is quite possible in the future of the country that we will not be testing the Cruise missile?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the latter point, yes, it is quite possible, but that is purely hypothetical. On the specific point made by the Hon. Member, I would want to refer him to my previous answer, particularly when he quoted the former Secretary of State as saying that it was the Carter request which was subsequently adopted by the Reagan administration. With respect, I think that that is a misunderstanding or a misstatement. As far as I have been able to verify, since 1980 what the Reagan administration has been asking is a missile weapons testing agreement. In communications I have seen it has been expressed in those terms, not in terms of the Cruise.

Mr. Broadbent: Why did he go on to talk about the Cruise in his speech?

Mr. Trudeau: Because, as I said in my previous answer, for many people, once they have accepted the umbrella agreement the Cruise is the thing they fear will happen. Most of the opposition today, vocal opposition, is on the Cruise. That is the subject which is in everyone's mind.

Once again, what has been signed by the present Secretary of State for External Affairs, what has been discussed and passed in Cabinet is a weapons testing agreement. We make no effort to hide the fact that the Cruise is one of the weapons which will interest the United States and, as I said, we made specific mention in the Cabinet decision that when that request came up—therefore it was obvious that we felt it was likely to come up—the Minister of Defence should come back to Cabinet before acting under the umbrella agreement.

MINES AND MINING

FUTURE OF CYPRUS ANVIL MINE AT FARO, Y.T.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I will direct my question to the Minister of State for Mines. The Minister will know that all mining operations in Yukon are now shut down. The largest of these, the Cyprus Anvil mine at Faro, which accounts for 40 per cent of the Yukon economy, has been closed for more than eight months. The people have not only had to endure economic hardships but they have also had to contend with cruel promises from the Government which promised to help revive the mine more than five months ago. To date those promises have not been fulfilled.

On February 1 the vice-president of Cyprus Anvil said that a deal with the federal Government would be completed and mine workers would be back to work by the end of this month. Will the Minister here and today announce what deal the mining company has achieved with the Government of Canada in order to get these mine workers back to work and the economy of Yukon on the move again?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): No, Madam Speaker, and I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that negotiations have been going on for quite some time. All Government programs which are available to the unemployed in Canada, including miners, are available to miners in the Cyprus Anvil operation.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, what the Minister says is that the Federal Government is prepared to stand by and watch the economy of Yukon crumble.

GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, is the Minister now prepared to admit the error of her Government's ways and give support to an initiative which will provide improved infrastructure and lower production costs for northern mining companies, in particular by opening the road to Skagway for ore trucks, by improving power subsidies to northern mining companies, and of course by scrapping the ill-considered plan to tax northern workers on the transportation and housing allowances which they receive from their employers?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is indulging in his usual rhetoric. I remind him that those programs which are in place are putting people back to work. If he would care to look at the Cassiar situation he would see that Section 38 is working very well and those miners are working today. With a little more co-operation from the other side we would see more people back to work.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR 1982-83 FINANCIAL STATEMENT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Minister will be introducing, for first reading today, a Bill to borrow some $5 billion. Would the Minister advise this House whether on Motions today he will be giving this House a full and complete financial statement for 1982-83 and for as far as he can see into the next fiscal year? Also, will he be tabling with this House full projections of his financial requirements?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Bill is to receive first reading today. It will be debated on second reading tomorrow. At eleven o'clock tomorrow I will be making a speech in this House, and I will be very happy to provide the information to the Hon. Member concerning our financial situation for 1982-1983.

Mr. Nielsen: What about 1983-1984?

PROVISION OF INFORMATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, is the Minister saying to this House that he is asking us to accept the borrowing authority bill for $5 billion without fulfilling his promises made to this House on October 27, promises confirmed also in this House by his Minister of State for Finance on October 28, and promises confirmed to myself in the Question Period one week ago, that he would table full and complete financial information, indeed a budget, before he would ask for further borrowing authority?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I never said in my October 27 statement, or since, that there would be a budget before asking for additional financial funds. That was my hope obviously. But, as the Hon. Member knows, the Income Tax Act provisions resulting from the previous budget have not yet been passed by this House. This has delayed my plans regarding the introduction of a budget. In the meantime there will be a requirement for additional borrowing authority.

However, I indicated in my October 27 statement that I would be coming to the House before the end of the fiscal year for additional borrowing authority. This is what I am doing at the present time. As I indicated to the Hon. Member, we will have second reading on the Bill tomorrow, and I will be very happy to provide my hon. friend with the information that he needs to pass judgment on the additional borrowing authority.

PROPOSAL TO REINSTATE FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Has he received proposals regarding legislation that would try to accommodate the difficult situations that have occurred between farmers and banks and other borrowing institutions? Has the Minister received proposals to revise or reinstitute the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, or amendments to the Bankruptcy Act? If so, what is his disposition toward them?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there is a Bill before this House in the name of the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex in which there is a particular proposal. The Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex has been pressing for consideration of this Bill. Both the Minister of Agriculture and myself have indicated that the principle of trying to do something is one to which we are attracted in the current circumstances.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You have a principle of trying to do something. What about doing something?

Mr. Lalonde: But, as far as legislation by the Government is concerned, that is a matter that would be announced in due time if any such step is taken.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF AGRI-BOND PROGRAM

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Finance. He well knows that since the Liberal Government took power in February, 1980, over 900 farmers have faced bankruptcy and thousands of others are in serious difficulty. In the Minister's upcoming budget is he seriously considering including an agri-bond or other type provision that would provide some long-term low interest rate financing for agriculture so that farmers can plan their future?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, what the Hon. Member forgets to mention is that since we took office this Government has added very significantly to the financing of the Farm Credit Corporation so that it can help the farmers. A number of measures were announced by the previous Minister of Finance—

Mr. Nielsen: Name one.

Mr. Lalonde: —in support of the farmers. The Minister of Agriculture also has been proceeding with legislation in this regard. As a matter of fact there is a Bill before this House called Canagrex, which I hope will be passed by this House, which will be helpful to the farmers and which is supported very strongly by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I would like to point out to my hon. friend that there has been no shortage of measures in this House to help farmers. As far as speculation on the contents of the budget is concerned, speculation will have to remain until the budget is read in this House.

TRANSPORT

BUSINESS RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN CANADIAN NATIONAL AND CAST

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns the hearings that the Canadian Transport Commission was supposed to hold tomorrow in Halifax regarding the dispute between CN and CAST. Could the Minister inform the House why he supported CN's motion to adjourn the hearing, thus depriving the Canadian people of an opportunity to find out about the business relationship between CN and CAST?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the decision was made with the consent of the Premier of Nova Scotia an my own, and it was made because a number of discussions and negotiations are taking place at the present time which might bring about some substantial changes in this case.

FINANCE

USE OF GOVERNMENT BORROWED FUNDS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who is going to ask the House of Commons to approve additional borrowing for the Government. In the last 22 months the Government has sought and received approval to borrow $31.6 billion. Given that we have a rate of unemployment almost double what it was two years ago, and given that we have the highest rate of bankruptcy we have ever had in the history of the country outside the Great Depression, for what precisely does the Minister propose to use the additional borrowing? Is it simply to offset the high cost to the Government that has been brought about as a result of its mismanagement?

Mr. Siddon: You have just noticed it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I shall be delighted to answer the Hon. Member's question in detail when I give my speech tomorrow. Meanwhile, I would like to remind him that 72 per cent of the increase in the Government's borrowing requirements is due to a reduction in Government revenue in terms of taxes collected from individuals and also from corporations which today are not making the same profits they were making before. The remainder of this amount will be used to help unemployed Canadians, in the form of unemployment insurance benefits or through the Federal Government's contribution to welfare payments paid by the provinces but 50 per cent funded by the Government of Canada.

So it is fairly simple—72 per cent of our increased requirement is due to the fact that the Government's revenue has decreased, and the rest is needed for benefits paid to Canadians in financial difficulty. I can hardly believe that my hon. colleague should think that is a waste of money.

[English]

STIMULATION OF ECONOMY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the Minister has borne out exactly what I said. The money he needs is because of decreased revenue which resulted from a downturn in the economy which has caused record high levels of unemployment, which again results in higher payouts and lower revenues. Would it not make more sense to use some of the billions of dollars that we have borrowed to stimulate the economy and get ahead with rail redevelopment, port redevelopment, or the building of homes, the end result being that we would have some immediate benefit in job creation and long-term benefit in meeting our future needs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I wonder where the Hon. Member has been the last few months.

Mr. Deans: I have been here.

• (1440)

Mr. Lalonde: As he well knows, thanks to the measures that have been announced in the last few weeks by the Minister of Transport and myself, the railways will invest $800 million this year alone in railway improvement in the West. Total expenditures by the railways will be well over $10 billion over this decade. Those are expenditures that will have been undertaken thanks to steps initiated by this Government.

The Hon. Member talked about housing. He must also realize that the starts in January rose to an annually adjusted level of 165,000 units, which is a very significant increase compared to last year. Again, that has been the result of hundreds of millions of dollars that this Government has put into the development of housing and the expansion of housing construction. This is a result of measures taken by this Government and approved by this Parliament. The Hon. Member must have been outside the House or quite absent minded when these were considered. I do not know where he has been, frankly.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

IMPORTATION OF PORNOGRAPHIC VIDEO CASSETTES

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It concerns the importation of pornographic material to Canada. The Minister will know that at least 95 per cent of this material in Canada is imported. Recent reports indicate that video cassettes form a large portion of this. One method of getting them in is to change the labels on the cassettes so that the customs officials do not know what is in them. What action, if any, is the Minister taking to try to cut down on the importation of pornographic material into Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the importation of pornographic material is regulated by legislation, and the relevant regulations are generally known to Hon. Members. It is, of course, extremely difficult, when importation is carried out by individuals or when parcels are addressed to a specific individual, to keep a close watch on such activities especially, as the Hon. Member just pointed out, when the labelling on a video cassette, for instance, has been removed or changed. However, I can assure the Hon. Member that we are taking all necessary measures to enforce the laws of this country as strictly as possible, and I may also remind him that not long ago, the Department of National Revenue, through its Customs and Excise division, took action in this area and banned the entry of cassettes considered by a large majority of Canadians to be immoral.

APPLICATION OF TAX WRITE-OFFS—REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE AMENDED

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question for the same Minister concerns tax write-offs for films produced in Canada as outlined in the income tax form, item 28(H). Will the Minister confirm that nowhere in the Income Tax Act is there a provision that would have the effect of excluding the producers of pornographic films from claiming this write-off? Furthermore, if this is so, will the Minister assure the House that he will table amendments to the Income Tax Act that will discourage rather than encourage the production of pornographic movies in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, as far as the first part of the question is concerned, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that it is not the purpose of the Income Tax Act that its provisions should be used to judge the morality or immorality of items that may or may not be financed through the Income Tax Act itself. Furthermore, as far as amendments to the Act are concerned, I may remind the Hon. Member that matters of policy fall under the jurisdiction of the Department of Finance.

STATUS OF WOMEN

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH STANDING COMMITTEE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. Following the questions from the Member for Yukon and the Member for Calgary West, will the Minister tell us what she thinks of the idea of having a standing committee dealing with problems of women, particularly single mothers?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Frankly, Madam Speaker, I am very amused to hear that the Opposition is finally interested in the status of women.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Erola: When I suggested publicly approximately a month ago that such a study be launched, I heard no support whatever from the other side of the House.

Mr. Kilgour: In other words, the Minister does not choose to answer the question.

FINANCING OF "VIDEODROME" MOTION PICTURE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Will the Minister then tell us what she thinks about the movie "Videodrome" which is playing in Ottawa now and consists of scenes such as burning women with cigarettes, a movie financed in large part by the Canada Film Development Corporation? Does she think that the taxpayers' money should be going to finance films like this or does she think that money should be going to Family Allowances and pensions instead?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, this Government has an excellent record on this subject.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Which subject?

Mrs. Erola: May I remind him that this Government financed a definitive film on pornography called "Not a Love Story". That was financed by this Government. This Government has done more to promote the education of people on the subject of pornography. We do not spend our time going to watch the movies; we do something about them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

APPLICATION OF FILE DESTRUCTION POLICY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Late last Friday the Minister released his long awaited RCMP file destruction policy, setting out criteria with respect to the over 800,000 files opened by the Security Service on law abiding Canadians. The new policy is full of so many loopholes that, in reality, it is nothing less than a "Big Brother" privacy invasion policy, written and administered by the RCMP Security Service itself. Will the Minister tell the House approximately how many files will be destroyed pursuant to this policy and, more important, whether this same policy will form the basis for the future in terms not only of destruction of existing files but of the opening of new files by the Security Service?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I cannot indicate now precisely how many files will be destroyed, but tens of thousands and even hundreds of thousands will be destroyed. The policy is a defined one. I disagree with the Hon. Member that it leaves a great many loopholes. I would like to hear from him what sort of loopholes he perceives could indeed be filled.

The policy calls for an independent review by the Privacy Commissioner. I think that will provide an effective safeguard that the privacy of Canadians is being adequately regarded by the Security Service in its file destruction policy.

As far as opening files for the future is concerned, the statement that I made on Friday was not meant to cover that. It was addressed to file destruction. Basically, the criteria are the same for opening new files as for the destruction of files.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): The McDonald Commission itself described the criteria proposed by the Minister as "so vague and loose as to justify almost any collection program." So the Minister is really giving a licence to the RCMP Security Service to continue invading the privacy of thousands of law abiding Canadians.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, will the Minister now clarify what the provisions in the policy related to blackmail and indiscretion specifically refer to? Will they continue to apply generally to all homosexuals and lesbians in Canada? Will the Minister now agree to refer this important question to the Justice Committee for a full and comprehensive study?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I think the ridiculous characterization of this policy by the Hon. Member shows that he has not taken the opportunity of the weekend to read the policy. I would urge him to do so before making such ridiculous suggestions about what the file destruction and file opening policies of the Security Service will be.

INCOME TAX

EXPLANATION FOR INCOME FIGURES SHOWN ON TAX RETURNS

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Revenue. Since our exchange on Friday my office has been deluged with calls from Canadians complaining about the amount of information which has been made available on their income tax returns, but they have also been confused because the income which is listed under the title of AAI does not seem to explain what their three year average income has been. The question that I am hearing, as a matter of detail, is, "What does AAI stand for?"

Mr. Nielsen: Average Annual Income.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Second, how is the figure which appears in the lower right hand corner determined?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is an interesting one, and I think it will be of some help to many Canadians when they complete their tax returns. Actually, we must remember that this amount refers to the income averaging formula, and that each taxpayer receives both a T-1 form and the schedules attached to his tax return. These schedules include a section dealing with income averaging, which gives the formula used to calculate the amount. That is, we take the amounts for the last three years—

Madam Speaker, it seems the Hon. Members opposite are not really interested, and that even the new Leader of the Opposition seems to be following the lead of his predecessor, in that he is paying very little attention to the business of the House and displaying the same contempt for the business of the House as his—

Madam Speaker: Order. I think the Minister's answer is going to be rather complex, and perhaps he should concentrate on answering the Hon. Member instead of being concerned about what others are saying.

Mr. Bussières: Madam Speaker, thank you for your advice. I was therefore saying that the taxpayer's income for 1981, 1980 and 1979 is multiplied by an indexing factor which is indicated on the form, so that the average for these three years, multiplied by the indexing factor, gives the amount indicated on the form, which is supposed to help the taxpayer use the income averaging formula.

PUBLIC WORKS

RENEWAL OF CITIZENSHIP COURT LEASES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): My question is directed through you, Madam Speaker, to the Minister of Public Works. When renewing a lease for an already established citizenship court, is it customary for the Minister's Department to sign a six-month lease?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member sends me the details, I will look into this matter. That is a rather hypothetical question.

Mr. Kempling: Well, that is a hypothetical Minister.

BRAMPTON, ONT. COURT LEASE

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Maybe I can clarify it for the Minister. Could the Minister explain why a lease for the citizenship court in Brampton was just signed for six months and why an active search to move that facility to another constituency is under way? Is this the penalty that my constituents must pay for my exposure of that misguided Liberal manual which suggested the use of citizenship court judges to attract prospective Members to their Party?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I suspect that the Hon. Member's constituents are sufficiently penalized by his being here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Provencher.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question—

Mr. Rossi: You did it again, McDermid.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Epp: I notice the Hon. Member is still exercising the best part of his body.

Oral Questions

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

PAYMENT OF MANITOBA PAYROLL TAX

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether a decision has been made as to whether a provincial level of Government can in fact tax the federal Government. Has that been determined in a constitutional sense? This relates back to the Manitoba payroll tax, and he said he would give me an answer. Second, has the federal Government decided that it is in fact obligated to pay the Manitoba payroll tax?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I believe it is well established that the two levels of Government in Canada cannot tax each other. It is part of our constitutional tradition. I believe there are court decisions, as a matter of fact, to that effect. However, as the Hon. Member knows, all through the years the federal Government has agreed to pay grants in lieu of taxes, or has voluntarily agreed to pay an amount equivalent to a particular tax. This has happened, for instance, in terms of taxation at the municipal level, and there have also been reciprocal taxation agreements with the Provinces. Several Provinces have signed such an agreement. The western Provinces have not, however, reached an agreement with the federal Government, with regard to this matter as yet, most of them feeling that they would end up paying more taxes than they would be collecting, I suspect. But now that the situation seems to have been reversed, the Government of Manitoba has shown a great interest in signing a reciprocal taxation agreement, suspecting that it will be receiving more money than paying under such an arrangement. Therefore, I am considering the matter, therefore, at the present time and I will bring it to Cabinet for consideration.

POSITION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): This question has been before us for some period of time and, constitutionally, one level of Government cannot tax another. The whole justification for the tax was that the Manitoba Government would recover from the federal Government moneys which the Province did not receive, moneys which it thought it would receive under Established Programs Financing. It is a worker's tax. It has had serious and deleterious effects on the creation of employment in Manitoba. The facts remain the same, but the Minister has not answered the question. Manitobans are waiting for that money because it was part of their projected revenues. Has the federal Government now made a decision on whether or not to pay that money?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there are two Provincial Governments in this contry that have resorted to such a payroll tax, the Government of Quebec and Manitoba. I must say that this is an evolution which is a cause for concern. I have warned my provincial colleagues about this situation and I hope that we will have an opportunity to discuss this further. As far as the Government's decision is concerned, however, I hope that I will be in a position to announce a decision soon. Again, this is a matter which will be brought to my colleagues for their consideration.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TEST AND EVALUATION PROGRAM

RATIFICATION OF ARMS TESTING AGREEMENTS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question with regard to the weapons testing agreement. I would very much like to know the Prime Minister's view as to whether only the Government should ratify potential arms testing agreements with the United States, or should the Parliament of Canada ratify those agreements?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if we consider what is done in every case of which I know when Parliament considers foreign policy matters, usually the Government sign such an agreement and then it comes before Parliament. We would be happy to hear the views of the Conservative Party on the Cruise and the weapons testing agreement at any time it chooses to devote one of its opposition days to that subject.

ROLE OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, would the Prime Minister not agree that on a matter as potentially divisive and as seriously important as the Cruise test, perhaps the Parliament of Canada should deal with the matter prior to any agreements being signed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, perhaps it should and perhaps it should not. I do know that an all-Party committee has just reviewed the rules of the House of Commons and it has not chosen to insert any rule which indicated that foreign policy agreements should be ratified by Parliament before becoming operative. The Hon. Member will realize that that is the system in the United States, but it has never existed in Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not so.

Mr. Trudeau: If the Hon. Member and his colleagues are interested in this reform, maybe they should bring the matter forward when they are debating reform of the rules.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If that is your recommendation, I am prepared to give it serious consideration.

STANDING COMMITTEES

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

The House resumed, from Friday, February 11, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner that the third report of the Striking Committee, presented to the House on Monday, January 31, 1983, be concurred in; and the motion of Mr. Crosby (p. 22759).

Madam Speaker: It being three o'clock, and pursuant to Standing Order 12(3), the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the amendment to the motion to concur in the third report of the Striking Committee. May I remind Hon. Members that there will be a 15-minute bell and we will vote at the end of that time.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Crosby), which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: The motion is lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I have had consultations with the Hon. Members for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) and Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), and I think if you put the question on the main motion right away, you will get the unanimous consent of the House, and we should then be able to have the Standing Committees of the House struck without further delay.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for proceeding with the question on the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. POINT OF ORDER

MR. HEAP—A VALENTINE FOR MR. TRUDEAU

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Due to the special character of today, the people of Spadina have asked me to give a special valentine to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with 500 signatures—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members know that they are not allowed to display anything in the House of Commons. I do not see why the rules are used in this way.

PETITION

MR. BLOOMFIELD—PAY TV BROADCASTING OF PLAYBOY FILMS

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (London-Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I should like to present a petition from 342 constituents of London-Middlesex, expressing their opposition to the broadcasting of Playboy films on the Pay TV channel, First Choice.

The petitioners are deeply concerned about the detrimental effect these movies may have on our youth and believe that they severely damage the integrity and dignity of Canadian women. They also fear that this is the thin edge of the wedge and will eventually lead to the showing of hard-core pornography on Canadian television.

For the above rasons, the constituents humbly protest the airing of Playboy programs.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. ANDRE—NOTICE OF REQUIREMENT BEFORE INTRODUCTION OF BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise in regard to the next item of business which appears on the Notice Paper, respecting the intention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to ask leave to introduce a Bill requesting further borrowing authority.

Under the provisions of citation 235 of Beauchesne's a Member is entitled, in fact is bound, to bring to the Speaker's notice any instance of what he considers to be a breach of order. That is what I am doing.

Last Thursday the Government House Leader indicated the Government's intentions to the House, as reported at p. 22713 of Hansard:

> The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) also intends to give notice of a Bill to authorize the Government to borrow additional funds until the end of the financial year and the beginning of the next one.

That flies in the fact of commitments made by the Minister on October 27 last, and by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) on October 28 last. At another time I might argue that as a substantive point of order, which I think it is, but today my point of order is much more precise and clear than that on the question of notice.

I refer you to the new Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders, Madam Speaker, specifically Standing Order 47(1), previously 42(1), which reads as follows:

> Forty-eight hours' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution or address, for the appointment of any committee, or for placing a question on the Order Paper; but this rule shall not apply to bills after their introduction, or to private bills, or to the times of meeting or adjournment of the House. Such notice shall be laid on the Table before six o'clock p.m., or before five o'clock p.m. on a Friday, and be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of that day.

We had oral notice from the Government House leader last Thursday. Beauchesne clearly states, however, that oral notice in fact has no substance. The exact reference is contained in citation 395 of Beauchesne's, so it is necessary to comply with Standing Order 47(1) precisely.

I have examined Votes and Proceedings for Thursday, February 10 and for Friday, February 11, very carefully. Nowhere in Votes and Proceedings is there an indication that notice has been given of a motion for leave to introduce this Bill. In other words, nowhere in Votes and Proceedings has this item been printed. Consequently, Standing Order 47(1) has not been complied with.

I therefore submit to the Chair that it would be improper at this point on our agenda, for the Minister to ask leave to introduce a Bill for the provision of additional borrowing authority.

• (1540)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I wish to join with the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) on this point of order. We had some sort of notice during the discussion of business for next week from the Government House Leader, but when we reviewed the printed notice, as my colleague said, for Thursday of last week and when we reviewed the Votes and Proceedings for Friday of last week, nowhere was there any mention of any Government borrowing Bill.

The first official printed notice which the House had was delivered this morning under Order Paper and Notices of Monday, February 14, 1983, on page 6, at which point the following reference appears:

> February 11, 1983—The Minister of Finance—Bill intituled: "An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority".

I refer you, Madam Speaker, to page 144 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citations 399 and 400. We are not arguing that there is any question about what time it was laid on the Table; that is not the point at issue. Citation 400 reads:

> The publication of a proposed motion, once in the Notice Paper and the next day on the Order Paper, is siffucient to cover two days' notice under S.O. 42.

That is as it then was. Under Standing Order 47(1) it is very clear that the notice must be laid upon the Table and be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of that day.

As I suggested, it was not printed in the Votes and Proceedings of Friday. We submit that in order to give the required notice, today's printed notice on the Order Paper and Notices will start day one and day two will be tomorrow.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I am told—and this is confirmed by our practice in the past—that since 1969, such notices have never been printed in Votes and Proceedings, but have always appeared in the Order Paper and Notices.

In accordance with the practice established since 1969, it is obvious that the hundreds of notices which have been given since that time are not invalid. It is a question of parliamentary procedure. We did follow the rules and give proper notice. The Bill is listed on today's Order Paper and, besides, Members of the Opposition cannot claim to have been taken by surprise since I announced last Thursday that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) had indeed the intention of giving that notice Friday, which is exactly what he did. I even said that if the Bill was to be introduced today, we would begin second reading tomorrow. Therefore, first, Members opposite cannot say they were taken by surprise because they were given verbal notice and, second, the parliamentary practice since 1969 has been for that type of notice to be published in the Order Paper and Notices, but not in Votes and Proceedings. It is in the Order Paper, and today we are introducing a Bill for which proper notice was given. In my opinion, everything is in order and the Opposition is splitting hairs when it wants to delay second reading of this Bill by invoking the argument of the Hon. Member for Calgary—

[English]

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, the Government House Leader raised two points. The first was in regard to past practices. I simply remind the Chair of another situation, dollar votes in appropriations Bills and legislating through appropriations Bills, which had been a practice for many years. That did not prevent the Chair from reaching what I believe to be the most appropriate decision and saying that the fact that it was done in the past was not justification for carrying on what was an improper practice.

Second, the Government House Leader indicated that since he had given notice orally last Thursday, it was sufficient notice. I should like to refer to Citation 395 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, page 143, which reads:

Oral notices for future proceedings do not generally exist in the House of Commons.

It goes on to indicate that the only provision for oral notices to have force and effect is in regard to the then Standing Orders 33 and 75C, which were the two closure provisions, and that only in those instances do oral notices have any force or, to use the language of Beauchesne's, do they exist. They do not exist except to the extent of the former Standing Orders 33 and 75C.

For those two reasons I humbly suggest that the arguments presented by the Government House Leader have no substance. I feel the Chair is obliged to enforce the provisions of Standing Order 47(1) which are vey clear and precise.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, in his remarks the Government House Leader made reference to the comment that the notice had been printed on the Order Paper on Friday. That is the very point. It was not printed on the Order Paper on Friday. Therefore, the 48-hour notice could not start to run. It started today. We agree that it started to run today, but it certainly did not start to run on Friday.

In closing I suggest the Standing Orders of the House have been reviewed very carefully by a special committee. We have now brought them into print in the new Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders. Section 47(1) is very clear, and we ask that you enforce it.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would like to comment on the so-called counter-argument made by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). In my view, he was giving a very narrow interpretation of one of Beauchesne's citations, and furthermore, he entirely failed to understand what I said earlier. We gave written notice, and to make things absolutely clear, we gave notice before 5 p.m. on Friday. Notice was given. When the Hon. Member takes as an example the $1 votes in the Estimates, this was indeed a practice used by the Government. It was the Government that decided to put in $1 votes, but in the present situation, the practice that evolved of not publishing written notice from the Government in the Votes and Proceedings was not developed by the Government. According to my information, it was the Clerks working under your direction, Madam Speaker, who decided, in 1969, to publish such notices in the Order Paper instead of in the Votes and Proceedings. There is therefore no analogy whatsoever for and no possible comparison between the example given by the Member for Calgary Centre concerning $1 votes in the estimates and the notice in question.

The Government was supposed to give forty-eight hours' notice. We gave notice before 5 p.m. on Friday. When I referred to verbal notice, I was saying this merely to point out to the Members opposite that if they wished to feign surprise, it was not a good idea. Verbal notice was not meant as validation of a notice that was duly given in writing on Friday before 5 p.m. In the circumstances, the Hon. Member's counter-argument is futile.

Without wishing to repeat myself, I said earlier what the practice was since 1969. The Chair will therefore have to decide: Does the fact that the Government gave written notice in the form and within the time prescribed, and the Clerks, under the authority of the Chair, decided to publish such notice in one document rather than another, in any way invalidate the notice in question? That is the question you must answer, Madam Speaker. But if you answer in the affirmative, that it does invalidate our notice, I think, with due respect, that you will be destroying a practice that goes back to 1969, and that this would not be in accordance with our procedures, which are based not only on written Rules but also on Parliamentary principles and practice.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I rise very briefly on the submission with respect to the point before the Chair. It is not a question of past practices. It is not a question of substantial or partial compliance with notice requirements. It is not a question of traditional practices in the House. The whole question which the Chair has to decide is whether the Standing Orders of this House have been complied with.

• (1550)

Mr. Pinard: By whom?

Mr. Nielsen: Have the Standing Orders been complied with regarding the requirements of this item on the Order Paper?

Mr. Pinard: By whom?

Mr. Nielsen: The Government House Leader asks by whom. By the Government in submitting a Bill which the Government is attempting to bring before the House now.

Mr. Ethier: Who decides?

Mr. Nielsen: Who decides it? The Standing Orders decide whether the requirements have been met. A former Acting Speaker who was the Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House says "Oh, no." But surely, Madam Speaker, if anything guides our procedures in this House it has to be the Standing Orders. They are abundantly clear. Standing Order 47(1) stipulates:

Such notice shall be laid on the Table before six o'clock p.m., or before five o'clock p.m. on a Friday—

That part was complied with. But the Standing Order goes on as follows:

—and be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of that day.

Either those words in the Standing Order mean something or they do not. For the Chair to come to any conclusion other than that those words were not complied with nullifies that Standing Order completely.

In our submission, respectfully, it is the job of the Chair to enforce the Standing Orders. Rightly or wrongly, those words are there. Rightly or wrongly, from an oversight or for whatever reason, the printing did not occur in the Votes and Proceedings at that day, namely, last Friday. Clearly, Madam Speaker, this Standing Order, in its strictest reading, has not been complied with. The only conclusion in our submission is that the Chair must not call that order today but whenever the Government chooses to set it down under Government Orders after today.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I think the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) has put the problem very succinctly before us. It is not a matter of trust or who did what correctly or incorrectly, that does not matter. The Standing Order says quite clearly that the notice must be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of the day on which it was given to the Table.

I, like others, have had an opportunity to check that day, and I found the suggestion that that did not happen to be absolutely correct. It did not happen. I do not think the House should be put in a position of having to judge the correctness of a statement by the Government House leader. The Government House leader said he gave it to the Table. The Table apparently did not have it published. But I would be put in a very awkward position then of having to judge who made the mistake and whether or not the notice was in fact there by five o'clock, and I think that is quite unfair. The only thing we can go by is the printed word. The printed word in this instance says that it must appear. It did not appear. It makes no difference whether it was handed in or not handed in. It makes no difference whether it got there in time or did not get there in time. It makes no difference really who erred. The fact of the matter is it is not there. If it is not there, I respectfully suggest that we cannot proceed with it. If we cannot proceed with it, what we are talking about is a one-day delay.

Madam Speaker: First of all, I would like to deal with one of the arguments brought forward by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) when he referred to the matter of the appropriation Bills and said that argument applied. I just want to remain him that, in my view, it is a totally different situation when those items are accepted. It is with the agreement of the House or with the explicit agreement of the Speaker who, having reviewed the items, that items are determined to be properly put in the appropriation Bill, or the contrary. Often the Speaker rules that some of the items should be omitted. But that is not really an argument dealing with the particular matter that we are studying now.

Changes in the Standing Order need to be interpreted in the light of past practices, as we always do for any Standing Order.

Mr. Nielsen: The wording has not changed.

Madam Speaker: The Table Officers tell me that they did everything that was required according to a practice in this House, which is 15 years old.

Mr. Nielsen: This has not changed. That does not matter.

Madam Speaker: This is the argument that we have to consider. This practice is 15 years old.

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Madam Speaker: We do have a new Standing Order.

Mr. Nielsen: Not this one.

Madam Speaker: It says that the Notice should be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of that day. I want to remind Hon. Members that before we had the change in the Standing Orders—

Mr. Nielsen: That has not changed.

Madam Speaker: —this particular Standing Order dealing with notices was written in exactly the same wording. Before we made the change in the Standing Order—

Mr. Siddon: It still stands.

Madam Speaker: —that wording meant that it was sufficient to publish the notice in the Notice Paper and not in the Votes of Proceedings. That is the practice which is 15 years old. Now, the Standing Order using that wording meant that such notice was sufficient. I have to conclude that it means the same thing now that we have the new Standing Orders.

Mr. Nielsen: It is not in the Notice Paper either.

Madam Speaker: I refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Citation 400. It reads:

(1) The publication of a proposed motion, once in the Notice Paper and the next day on the Order Paper, is sufficient to cover two days' notice under S.O. 42.

That is the relevant quotation from Beauchesne. As far as I can see, and according to the advice given by the Table Officers who dealt with this particular notice and who deal with all notices, all the requirements of the Standing Order according to our practice have been fulfilled.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Ring the bells again.

Mr. Andre: I find it very surprising that the very clear language of—

Mr. Pinard: Ring the bells again.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, it is a substantive point of order that I am raising.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Allow him to raise it.

Mr. Andre: The new Standing Orders, after examination by a committee of this House for many months, state very specifically that it should be printed in the Votes and Proceedings.

You have now ruled, Madam Speaker, in spite of this language, in spite of the fact that procedure has not been followed that, in essence, the Standing Order goes out of the window. That establishes a precedent, and I would like it taken into very careful consideration as to where it will lead us in this House. There may, in fact, be a very major point of order on it. Specifically there is another part of Standing Order 47(1) which states in the first line, not the last line, the following:

Forty-eight hours' notice shall be given of a motion for leave—

You have indicated that publication in the Notice Paper has the same meaning as publication in Votes and Proceedings something which, as I indicated, we will argue on another occasion, but surely publication in today's Notice Paper does not constitute 48 hours. Surely there is at most only a few hours between the time when—

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker has ruled on that.

Mr. Nielsen: No, she has not.

Mr. Andre: —this appeared and when the Minister planned to introduce his Bill. Is the Chair going to say that past practices have eliminated the 48 hours as well? If so, this House is put into a hopeless situation. The Government House Leader had indicated the intention orally last Thursday. But I would again remind Hon. Members, Madam Speaker, of Citation 395 of Beauchesne's which reads that oral notices do not exist.

Mr. Pinard: Look at Citation No. 400 in Beauchesne.

• (1600)

Mr. Andre: If oral notices do not exist, we are in a circumstance where it is quite possible that on a Friday afternoon, at five minutes to five o'clock, a Minister may table notice of an introduction of a Bill, or some other form of notice having a very important impact. As Members of Parliament we will see that on Monday for the first time and be faced with a motion that day of who knows what kind of import. It could be very profound in its implications.

If the line of reasoning you have given in regard to the previous point of order carries over to this point of order, Madam Speaker, we will have, in effect, done away with the 48 hours' notice as well. We would be in a situation where no warning whatsoever is given.

Mr. Nielsen: Forget the warning.

Mr. Andre: It behooves the Chair to examine the responsibilities that the Chair and the Table have toward the House—not toward the Government so that it may pursue what it wants and rubber stamp everything it does—that procedures are handled properly and that we get proper notice of what the Government wants to rubber stamp before we are called upon to rubber stamp it.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would suggest that the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) is hardly in a position to defend his argument today. He is complaining about the fact that the Opposition might be taken by surprise because the notice has not been printed in Votes and Proceedings and because that notice was given Friday afternoon at 4.55. There is nothing new there, Madam Speaker. It is an old practice, as you said yourself in your ruling. I deplore the fact that he has again wasted five minutes to criticize your ruling. The Hon. Member has no right to do that. In my opinion, he is showing disrespect for Parliament, and I maintain that he has absolutely no grievance today, for the simple reason that we did give verbal notice before the written notice in the Order Paper. We did not have to do that, but simple courtesy—

[English]

I am sorry. Perhaps the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) does not hear the translation very well. Maybe he would prefer that I speak in English. I will do so.

Mr. Nielsen: Speak in French. That is all right.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Well, I will continue my remarks in French, Madam Speaker, but Hon. Members must hear me out. They have been trying to interrupt me for some time. A Member of the Opposition has shown disrespect for Parliament during five minutes when he criticized the ruling you have just made. His argument is unfounded. It has been our practice for the past 15 years and, besides, there is no precedent because, although we were not compelled to do so, we did give verbal notice last Thursday of our intention to introduce this Bill today. The only thing the Hon. Member is trying to do once again is to find an excuse to bring Parliament to a standstill one way or another, and that is—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

[English]

I will hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I will not hear any other Member.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I do not want to engage in the rhetoric of this debate but I want to make a point which I think is important when considering it. On December 22, after a debate, the House of Commons decided to adopt these Standing Orders. These Standing Orders are quite specific about dealing with the amount of notice required and the procedure to be used for the introduction of a Bill.

I would suggest that the events of December 22 are significant in consideration of this. What happened prior to December 22 is related to the Standing Orders that had been adopted in 1978. Had it been the intention of the Government, the Official Opposition, the NDP or any Member of the House of Commons to adopt or adapt the December 22 Standing Orders to conform with the procedures used prior to December 22, we would have changed the Standing Order appropriately.

The decision on December 22 was that this was an appropriate Standing Order, that these were appropriate proceedings and were therefore the proceedings that should be followed. I put it quite bluntly to the Government that if it had been its intention to move another procedure, it may well have been the one that was in fact the practice of the day, then there should have been a change to the Standing Orders of December 22. The fact that the House of Commons accepted a Standing Order in the manner it was written is a clear indication that the House of Commons intended that to be the method used for the introduction of Bills.

I therefore suggest that had there been no such thing as the December 22 debate, no such thing as the Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders that were adopted on that day, then it only would have been appropriate, and quite so, to refer back to practices carried out prior to that day.

However, this is the first occasion, to my knowledge, when this matter has risen since the implementation of the December 22 Standing Orders. The House of Commons is entitled on this first occasion to ask that the order that it approved be adhered to specifically.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: The House of Commons is entitled to ask that whatever the practice was quite clearly it was not the practice that was approved by the House on December 22. Therefore, the manner of conducting business changed as of December 22, and while the words may well be the same, it was the intention of the House that those words be adhered to and that those intentions be followed.

I put to you, Madam Speaker, that it may well be appropriate, in cases where there is ambiguity, where there are serious doubts about the meaning of certain words, to refer to Beauchesne or past practice. But as of December 22, the rules of the House of Commons were made clear. As of December 22, it is the wish of the Opposition that this particular rule be adhered to.

Madam Speaker: May I remind Hon. Members that if the notice had been published in Votes and Proceedings and had been given at five minutes to five on Friday, it would have been sufficient time for the 48 hours to expire. That argument made by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) does not particularly apply to the situation. The formal notice was given on Friday and was published on Friday.

Mr. Lewis: Where?

Madam Speaker: It was published in the Notice Paper, as is our practice.

Mr. Andre: What is the date on the Notice Paper?

Madam Speaker: February 11, 1983. That notice was given on Friday and it was published and dated February 11, 1983.

With regard to the arguments made by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre, I would remind him that I am not throwing this Standing Order out the window. I am only saying that it means the same thing as it meant before because the wording that existed before the changes regarding this particular point has not been changed.

I want to tell Hon. Members that I know that this particular point was made to the Committee. The officers who had to review these Standing Orders asked the Committee whether it should not change that particular wording in order to bring it up to the practice that we have been following for 15 years. The members of the Committee decided not to change that wording. The interpretation that we have to make from that decision and from the conversation that took place at that time is that the Standing Order should remain as it was as it concerns this particular passage. It should, therefore, be interpreted in light of our longstanding practice.

That is the interpretation that the Chair now has of that particular Standing Order. Perhaps Hon. Members want to change that. Apparently, some Members of the House do not understand that it might have meant a change in the particular procedure for notices. That is quite obvious from what the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) has been telling us.

Mr. Siddon: He is playing games.

Madam Speaker: If Hon. Members want to change that, then they should give sufficient notice to everyone concerned. Bills have been treated in that way, even since the Standing Orders have been changed. Therefore, the Chair sees no reason to change the procedure for this particular Bill. Thanks Hon. Members for their arguments, but I regret to inform them of my interpretation that the notice is in order.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I do not rise to question your ruling. However, something was said in it that caught my ear, namely, that there were discussions between the Officers, and I presume you meant the Officers at the Table, and the members of the Special Committee with respect to the interpretation of this Standing Order, and a question was raised by the Table Officers with the members of the Special Committee as to whether they wanted to change the wording of this Standing Order.

I was under the impression that any of these matters which were discussed were discussed on an all-Party basis. Indeed, we had two or three meetings on an all-Party basis where representatives of all Parties were present with Table Officers, discussing the kind of changes which would be necessary as a result of the adoption of the third report of the Special Committee. Indeed, the Table Officers had gone back to the membership of the Special Committee on two occasions of which I know. However, my point is that we were aware of those occasions on an all-Party basis.

This Standing Order was never, to my knowledge, a subject of discussions between Table Officers and the members of the Special Committee. To my recollection, which could be faulty, it was never explained to us attending those meetings of an all-Party nature to discuss the consequential changes, that this particular rule had been the subject matter of any discussions between Table Officers and the members of the Special Committee. I thought I would make that point clear so that if any decisions were reached with respect to considering any changes in Standing Order 46-47?

Mr. Lalonde: It does not matter, 47, 48.

Mr. Epp: That is how your budget deficit goes.

Mr. Nielsen: Those discussions were held completely outside the knowledge of any Member of the Official Opposition, and I believe that to be the case, also, with respect to the New Democratic Party.

Madam Speaker: I think it must be quite clear that the Chair was not involved in those discussions, but those discussions were reported to the Chair. I assume those discussions were held with representatives of all Parties. I could not imagine that any Office of the Table would be discussing matters with only Members of one Party. If it were only with one Member or two Members, I am sure that those Members were delegated by the other Members of the Committee to deal with the matter. I cannot imagine any Officer of the House discussing any changes to the Standing Orders with only one or two of the Parties involved.

It is quite clear that at that time the members or representatives of the members of the Committee on Procedure and Organization indicated that they did not want to change the wording of the Standing Orders. Therefore, our interpretation of that particular discussion is that the Standing Order should be interpreted as it has been in the last 15 years.

If the House wants to change that, the Chair is at the disposal of the House. However, until now the Chair has received no notice that the interpretation of that particular Standing Order should be different from the one which I have given just now.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I just want to emphasize the fact that there have been no discussions by the Government or by the New Democratic Party or by Table Officers or by Your Honour's office with any Member of this Party with respect to changes to Standing Order 47 at any time.

Mr. Lalonde: There have been no changes.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order. Madam Speaker, I ask for clarification of your ruling. You used the term, I believe, "once in the Notice Paper and the next day on the Order Paper." Since there is nothing in the Notice Paper for Friday, I would ask Your Honour to clarify your ruling in terms of the fact that the only time we have received notice through the Notice Paper is today. Therefore, I have difficulty in seeing how we can have notice and then notice the next day all happening on the same day.

Madam Speaker: I think that was quite clear from the reference I gave the Hon. Member. The publication of a proposed motion once in the Notice Paper and the next day on the Order Paper is sufficient to cover two days' notice under former Standing Order 42, which is now Standing Order 47. That is quite clear, and I do not see what other explanation I could give the Hon. Member.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, the point is that today is the first day it has been on the Notice Paper. It may have been tabled with the Officers at five minutes before five o'clock on February 11, last Friday, but today is the first day it has been on the Notice Paper. To follow the citation Your Honour read in order to justify not following Standing Order 47(1)—

Mr. Nielsen: She is not listening to you. Wait for her.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, as I was saying, the citation you read stated that notice is satisfied if it is published one day in the Notice Paper and the following day on the Order Paper. In fact, today is the first day it has been published in the Notice Paper.

Mr. Nielsen: Anywhere.

Mr. Andre: It is the first day it has been published anywhere. It should have been published in Votes and Proceedings, but it was not. It must be published tomorrow in the Order Paper for it to satisfy the citation that Your Honour has read, to in fact overrule the wording of Standing Order 47(1).

Mr. Deans: Absolutely. I do not always agree with you, Harve, but you are right on.

Mr. Bradley: Ring March bells again.

Mr. Lewis: Damned engineers.

Mr. Pinard: Ring the bells and go campaign.

Madam Speaker: It is now quite clear to me exactly what this means. It has always been the practice, and even if notice were given at five minutes to five o'clock on Friday afternoon and thereafter published, as it has been now, the requirements of the Standing Orders would have been followed. Therefore, I do not see why Hon. Members are raising the question now, unless they want a complete change in a practice which has been followed in the House for fifteen years.

Mr. Nielsen: Just comply with the Standing Orders.

Madam Speaker: That is the problem we have usually had with weekends. If notice had been given on a weekday, we would not have had this problem, because the Notice Paper would have been published the next day. It was given on the weekend, and every weekend has been considered to constitute the proper time for publication of notice.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, the notice is not to the Chair.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lambert: The notice is to this House. Whatever the practice of the Table Officers, whatever their administrative shorthand has been, if it has been wrong, then the attention of the House is drawn to it. Surely the Chair must comply with that.

• (1620)

In this particular case, there is a Notice Paper dated today, and it is clear, there is this item in a document dated today. There is no way that anyone can say that this is not a document dated today. There are items in here that, with the greatest of respect, bear a certain date—

An Hon. Member: If you have respect, sit down.

Mr. Epp: You are not the Chair.

Mr. Lambert: The Standing Order does not say—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert: I will not be howled down by a mob.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Respect the Chair!

Mr. Lambert: May I say that when it comes to respect to the Chair that in the chair I have faced a lot more unruliness than you chaps can put up any day.

In so far as this is concerned, and I am very serious here, this Standing Order must be complied with by the Table Officers, and there is nothing in our practices that provides for a practice for weekdays, but never on Sunday. This is a fact. There cannot be notice on Monday morning and a Minister allowed to introduce a particular piece of legislation that very afternoon, under any circumstances.

An Hon. Member: Who says that?

Mr. Lambert: The Hon. Member who is so learned in the rules asks who said that. The Chair said it, the Minister said it and the Government House Leader said it. But notice was given today to this House. There is no way that I can go down to the Clerk's Office at six o'clock and say: "All right, I want to see every notice." That has not been the practice. We do not do that. Therefore, what I am simply saying is that the language is patently clear, and I do not know by what authority, of the Chair or of anyone in this House, the language of the rules can be deliberately bypassed. Based upon soi disant précédents, you cannot do it. If we have to say mea culpa, we were wrong, that is so, but let us say that that was wrong. That is the point that I am objecting to, that one considers these rules to be written in Sanskrit or some other language that no one in this House understands.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, it becomes very obvious that one of the reasons that the rules were reconsidered was that either the rules themselves were considered inadequate to keep the House properly informed, or that precedents or some other influence on the rules had made it impossible for the House to be satisfied with the conduct of the business of the House.

If one is to revert to all the precedents of rules prior to December 22, then the exercise of the revision of the rules has been for naught.

I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that what I have to say is in no way critical of you, nor do I intend to reflect on anything you may have said or chosen to rule upon, but I do submit to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) that he is acting in extremely bad faith in trying to impose on you, as Speaker, and upon this House, his wish in spite of the very excellent rapport which existed during the procedures of that Committee. The intention of the Committee was to avoid some of the previous practices of the Government. It is because these practices were abhorred that so much time and patience was exercised to correct what was then construed to be a weakness in the rules which denied proper notice to the House and to the people of Canada.

Madam Speaker, I think that the House should apologize to you for the position in which you have been placed by this Government. The Government is trying to defy the very rules which in good faith were adopted with an intention and an interpretation by an all-Party Committee of this House, and it is now putting, you, Madam Speaker, in a very embarrassing position. The Government of this day, Madam Speaker, owes you and that Committee a heartfelt apology for its absolute neglect of the spirit and the intent of the work which was done to improve the rules, so that the House might be better informed and notified of what was going to happen.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Madam Speaker, I do not want to dwell on the comments on your ruling, but nevertheless I must say a few words about the comments made by some of my colleagues, who seem to think the House should forget its past, its precedents and its history, just because a committee sat down and revised its rules. Madam Speaker, in its report the committee indicated that its work must go on. The committee did not tinker with all the Standing Orders, and in fact, most of them were left as they were.

When the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) says that on December 21, the history of the House of Commons changed and that now the Standing Orders are set in a new mortar and is no longer flexible and that there is no longer any need or possibility for them to be interpreted by the Chair on the basis of past rulings and application of rulings I would remind the Hon. Member that it is not the first time the Standing Orders of the House have been revised, in whole or in part. In 1976, Hon. Members reached agreement on various kinds of reforms. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has been sitting in the House a little longer than I have. He has witnessed many reforms, and as a former Speaker of the House, I do not understand how he could forget that the House has provided interpretations of Standing Orders in the course of the years, and that the Chair has always been obliged to accept them and to act accordingly. For instance, Speaker Lamoureux applied the Standing Orders very strictly, on the basis of precedent. Speaker Jerome made quite a few innovations as far as interpreting the Standing Orders was concerned. Today, we are told that this Standing Order has been interpreted in this way for fifteen years. The Speaker says: If Hon. Members want it to be clarified, let them give me appropriate notice and let us get on with it. However, let us not waste our time here this afternoon with people telling us that on December 21, a group of Members—not senior, but junior Members—may have wanted to be more forward-looking. There have been others in the past who examined the Standing Orders. Well, because these junior Members submitted a report to the House which was adopted unanimously, it all means that we must realize we no longer have to refer to Beauchesne, not even for the interpretation of the slightest word, and those are the words of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Madam Speaker, I think that these Members want to take you through a dark tunnel, as it were, where you will never see the light. The future of this House is based on its history, on its part and on its precedents, and if we want to change our customs and procedures, this cannot be done at a moment's notice. Today, for example, Members are asking the Chair for an entirely new interpretation of one of the Standing Orders which during the last fifteen years, for reasons I ignore, has been given a much broader interpretation.

Madam Speaker, I think you would do well to be wary of agreeing with the interpretations given by the Members opposite with respect to dropping all our precedents and the entire history of the House of Commons.

Mr. Pinard: Allow me, Madam Speaker, to make a correction. We had at least one meeting with the Clerk of the House and the House Leaders before Christmas and I heard a while ago the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) say that no one on that side had been consulted about the drafting of clause 47. I would like to refer to that meeting and it will be noted that a new text was indeed suggested. However, it was the member for Yukon himself who had asked that such an amendment not be made and that clause 47 remain as clause 42. Under such circumstances, there is no doubt that he was mistaken when he thought that no member from his party had been consulted since he advocated the statu quo in the interpretation of that clause and this fact should be on record.

Madam Speaker: Let us be quite clear about what is taking place. Supposing that we did not have a weekend and that the notice had been given today, Monday, and the notice would have been published in the Notice Paper on Tuesday. The notice would have been printed on the Order Paper on Wednesday. Therefore, Hon. Members would have no question. That is quite clear. All the requirements of the Standing Order would have been fulfilled.

The weekend has always posed a problem for the application of this particular Standing Order because the notice that is required is not two sitting days but 48 hours. When a notice is given on Friday, when we come into the House on Monday we have had the 48 hours' notice. That is the practice against which I interpret the situation today. If Hon. Members wanted to change that, they had the chance to change it. They did not want to change it. Our interpretation is that they do not want to change it because they wanted Standing Order 47(1) to be interpreted as Standing Order 42 was interpreted, and that is what the Chair is doing.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Madam Speaker: I will not accept any more interventions on this particular situation. If the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) has another point of order, I will be glad to listen to it.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, the point of order that I would bring to your attention does not bear on this point but on the law of the land. As I understand the provisions of the Lords Day Act and the Interpretation Act, which applies to all laws and statutory provisions of every kind in Canada, they regard Sunday as a non-juridical day. They do not involve those—

Madam Speaker: Order. The practice of the House is quite different.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I rise, not to quarrel with your ruling, but merely to comment on something that you said while you were making your ruling that ought to be commented on. That is your comment about the Special Committee. The Special Committee, by not changing this particular rule, neither added to the credibility of that rule nor took away from it, because it was not even considered.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That point might be well taken when Members again meet in Committee. I would urge Members to discuss again this matter in the Committee. Obviously we cannot resolve it here in the House in these discussions. The question should be re-discussed in the Committee, and I would urge Hon. Members to do just that.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Hon. Members will understand that I have heard enough commentaries on this point of order. I have now ruled. Therefore, there cannot be any commentaries on that ruling. If the Hon. Member wants to discuss it in general, he knows that this is not the time.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, I did not bring up the Committee, you did. All right? You are the one that brought up the Committee in your ruling.

Madam Speaker: Yes, but the Chair has to give its arguments. If the Chair can, it should be explicit. I thought that it would be a good idea to be explicit on this particular point because obviously there was some confusion. Because I mentioned it, that does not mean that the Hon. Member is now entitled to make comments on the broader question of all the changes that might be brought to certain Standing Orders.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I have a question of clarification. In your Honour's ruling, you suggested that the reason for the kind of departure from the new Standing Order 47 is certain past practices. The past practices of the Table are the kind of Friday habits that the Table has got into. I think these can apply unless challenged. With the current practices, or whatever the practices are, the citation in Beauchesne, Citation 400, has to take precedence over the Friday habits of the Table.

Madam Speaker: That might happen in the future, but until the Chair is advised that that is the interpretation that is put on that particular Standing Order, the Chair has no choice but to rule as it did.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C- "An Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority."

[English]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I have a point of order with respect to the Minister's request for leave to introduce a Bill to provide the Government with supplementary borrowing authority. It is our position on this side that by attempting to introduce a borrowing authority Bill at this time the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is committing a breach of the procedures and practices of this House. Madam Speaker, since we have just had a great deal of discussion as to what the practices are, it may be helpful in your consideration of my submission.

First, it is customary for the Government to produce a fiscal statement prior to requesting borrowing authority and, second, the Minister is breaking a contract and an undertaking that he made with this House at the time he last received supplementary borrowing authority. With your indulgence, I have two arguments to make.

First, with respect to the custom of presenting a fiscal statement to Parliament prior to requesting borrowing authority, one should look at the practice followed at the time of a budget. Before seeking borrowing authority the Government lays out a detailed statement of its projected revenues and requirements. Apart from the fact that it is only by generating such projections that the Government can reasonably predict what its borrowing requirements are, such projections are prerequisites for us as an informed Opposition to have an intelligent debate in Parliament. The Government should not expect, nor should Parliament grant, borrowing authority in cases where there is not a demonstrated need for additional funds. We submit that the Government should provide those statements now, before the Bill is introduced.

This House has been consistent in its demands that the Government's borrowing not exceed the requirements that it has demonstrated to the House. That was the principle which led to the splitting of the last borrowing Bill. That was the principle that led to the Government backing off on the amount of $4 billion.

I want to refer specifically to Erskine May, page 3 where it talks about the principles of parliamentary law. I am not here to give a long lecture on the principles of parliamentary law, but I want to suggest one item to the Chair. It reads:

> The principles that lie at the basis of English parliamentary law, have always been kept steadily in view by the Canadian Parliament; these are: To protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner—

I emphasize that.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I will interrupt the Hon. Member because I do not quite understand what his point of order is. Is the Hon. Member debating the motion to put the Bill for first reading? He knows he cannot debate that. If the House does not want to accept that the motion be put, we can vote on it, but there is no discussion and no debate at this particular time.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, there will be plenty of debate once we get to it. The point I am trying to make to the Chair is that the Minister has no business asking for leave when he has not complied with the customary practices of this House which are to provide financial statements ahead of time. On a borrowing authority Bill, he cannot have his leave without presenting us with the statements upon which he is going to ask for that authority.

I referred in my submission to comments made by Ministers. I want to refer briefly to two further comments. The former Minister of Finance stated in June 1982:

> I would therefore tell the committee that I would anticipate coming back to the House to request additional borrowing authority sometime prior to the end of the fiscal year. But I would not expect the House to act upon an additional request for borrowing authority without providing it with detailed information on the economic situation and the implications of that situation on the Government's fiscal situation.

● (1640)

Briefly, the second point I wish to make is that, setting aside that argument and the undertakings which they gave, they are now coming back to us, hat in hand, asking the Chair and the House to ignore previous procedure and to consider a borrowing Bill without any economic statements. That is the point of order I make to you, Madam Speaker. We cannot entertain the motion for leave without the economic statements upon which the Minister is asking for his borrowing Bill.

Madam Speaker: As I understand it, Hon. Members do not agree that the Minister may leave to introduce his Bill at this particular time on supplementary borrowing authority. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour, please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed, please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the Members.

During the taking of the vote:

Some Hon. Members: Out.

Madam Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member may stay in the House, but I suppose since he arrived after the proceedings started, he cannot vote, but he can stay in the House.

● (1800)

And the Clerk proceeding to announce the result of the vote:

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact that the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) has entered the House after the Whips took their seats, and in view of Standing Order 15(2), I would invite the Speaker to rule as to whether or not the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's should be allowed to vote. We have no quarrel, Madam Speaker, with the fact he wears no necktie because, obviously, he is suffering some discomfort.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I regret getting here after the bell stopped ringing. With the 50 Tory backbenchers absent, at least I am here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Would the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) please tell the House whether he was in the House when the voting proceedings started.

Mr. Simmons: I was here—

An Hon. Member: You liar. You liar.

● (1805)

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I was here when the voting began.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Privilege, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I was not here—

An Hon. Member: You are a liar.

Mr. Simmons: Hold it, guys. You might learn something.

An Hon. Member: Not from you!

Mr. Simmons: I was not here when the bells stopped ringing, but I am here now, unlike 50 Tories.

Madam Speaker: That is not the question that I asked the Hon. Member. I asked the Hon. Member whether he was in the House when the voting proceedings started. In other words, did he enter the House after the question was put?

Mr. Simmons: No, Madam Speaker, I was not in the House when the question was put.

Mr. Andre: Liar!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, obviously I withdraw that remark. I misheard what the Hon. Member said.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Since the Hon. Member was not in the House at the beginning of the voting proceedings, I have to ask that his name be removed from the list of voting Members.

TRUST COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSIBILITY FOR MORTGAGE COMPANIES. (B) QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT'S ACTIONS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, on February 8 I again raised questions with respect to the Greymac Mortgage Company and Seaway Mortgage Company fiasco. This is clearly within the responsibility of the Government. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) advised the House a week ago that the Government was aware, on or before March 31, 1982, that Greymac Mortgage Company and Seaway Mortgage Company were both in default under the Loan and Trust Companies Acts, that they were not managing their affairs properly under those Acts and that the Government had put those two corporations on what he said was a short leash. Indeed, they were advised that their licences would only be extended for a two-month period and they were put under severe restrictions with respect to their investment activities.

Clearly, more had to be done than that. The Government knew that these corporations were associated with two trust companies, both licensed under the Province of Ontario, being Seaway Trust Company and Greymac Trust Company. The Government had an obligation to advise the Province of Ontario, through the loan and trust company people operating trust company affairs in that Province, of what it knew about the mortgage corporations.

I asked the Minister whether he would make a statement on motions to tell the House what he knew and what he had told his counterpart in the Province of Ontario. The Minister made fun of that suggestion. He said that somewhere along the line he had Conservatives fighting with Conservatives. I do not think there is anything funny or any fight about Conservatism with respect to the matter.

The situation is that the Government is responsible for the maintenance of a sound financial system in the country. The Government is further responsible under the management of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to ensure that member companies licensed under that arrangement comply with sound business practices and sound financial requirements under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

Clearly the Government acted as a sleeping policeman. Clearly the Government had some sort of idea that the honest principals behind Greymac and Seaway would do something right. It continued to let Greymac and Seaway operate as mortgage corporations, licensed and permitted to operate under the umbrella protection of Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. It continued to let them operate under the Loan Companies and Trust Companies Acts. It made no effort to terminate their arrangements in the Province of Ontario. Indeed, with respect to Greymac, the Government allowed the principals in Greymac to become involved in a third trust company, Crown Trust, in September 1982, without doing anything about it, without blowing the whistle, without calling a halt.

The Government stands indicted for its failure to do something. All sorts of people placed their money with Greymac and Seaway during 1982. Indeed, those corporations were touched by the Province of Ontario as being a fair place for boards of education and municipalities to put surplus funds. My own board of education, the Peel Board of Education, on January 1 of this year put $3 million with Greymac. My own municipality, the Municipality of Mississauga, in March 1982 advanced to Greymac Mortgage Corporation $1 million on a note for one year.

Somewhere along the line the Government, responsible for Greymac and responsible for Seaway, through its mortgage corporation arm, and certainly under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, had a responsibility to act. It did not act. People have suffered. Tremendous losses have been incurred. It is time for the Government to come clean.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, in my previous comments in the House during Question Period, responding generally to the observations of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), I indicated that pursuant to Section 73(1) of the Loan Companies Act, as in the case of the two federal mortgage loan companies here involved, the Superintendent makes a report to the Minister as to his concern about the ability of companies to continue business under the provisions of existing licences. Section 73(2) of the Act further provides that the Minister, upon receiving that report, shall first of all hear the principals of the company as to the information given by the Superintendent in his report, and then shall determine at that point what course of action the federal Government should follow.

I am still in the process of receiving submissions by principals of the company as represented by solicitors. As a matter of fact, as late as Tuesday of last week, further submissions were made by the company to its solicitors and principals, and the proceedings were adjourned in order for them to file even further material. Until such time as they have completed their submissions, and I have made a report on this matter bearing on the very issues raised by the Hon. Member, as I have indicated, it is not possible for me to go into some of the details which the Hon. Member has requested.

I might be able to assist the Hon. Member, if he is concerned, as he has indicated he is by indicating that provincial authorities who are responsible for the parent companies of the mortgage companies, for which there is responsibility on the part of the Superintendent of Insurance under federal legislation, and the Province of Ontario, which has a responsibility, were somewhat prejudiced in that they may have gained information from the federal Government about the subsidiaries, that they did not have, which pertained to the companies. I can put his mind to rest. There is continuous discussion and communication between the officials of both departments, and at all times officials of the Province, responsible for the parent companies, were aware of all of the actions taken by the federal Government.

INDUSTRY—LAY-OFFS IN SOUTHEAST BRITISH COLUMBIA COAL PROJECTS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay-East Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, on January 27 I raised a question with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) regarding the $1 billion which the federal and provincial Governments have provided to support a coal industry in northeastern British Columbia. This is a very important question for my riding because it deals with coal.

Coal is very important in Kootenay-East Revelstoke. It provides jobs for thousands of people and is the reason for the existence of towns such as Sparwood and Fernie. But the existence of those towns is threatened. In the community of Sparwood alone 2,000 coal miners have had temporary lay-offs. Four hundred workers have had indefinite lay-offs and this project has not yet come onstream.

That figure of 2,000 lay-offs is pretty significant. I saw the same figure when I was reading the 1982-1983 Economic Review and Outlook published by the British Columbia Ministry of Industry and Small Business Development. That review had a section on northeast coal. It stated that the development would create 2,000 new jobs at the mine site alone. That is quite a coincidence. While Governments are planning 2,000 new coal jobs in the northeast, 2,000 coal miners are being laid off in the southeastern part of British Columbia.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was careful when he answered my question to point out that the federal Government had been involved in developing northeast coal. He said he wanted it understood that the federal Government had substantially assisted the British Columbia Government in this venture. Between the two levels of government the assistance is substantial indeed. That help in the form of railways, roads, a new town site and seaport will come to about $1 billion. The coal companies will be putting up only $1.6 billion. That is quite a massive subsidy considering what some of the people from the southern coal companies have had to say.

Mr. Bob Brady of B.C. Coal said of the southeastern producers:

> We could have expanded to meet the demand and it wouldn't have cost the taxpayer a cent. The infrastructure is all there.

Mr. Jerry Joynt of Fording Coal said the same thing. The point is that the B.C. and federal Governments have spent a billion dollars of taxpayers money and the main effect will be to destroy over 2,000 jobs in one place and create those same jobs somewhere else.

These communities will be badly hurt by this; the families will suffer upheaval and unemployment. I called upon the Government to do something, by ensuring that northeast coal did not come on stream until southeast coal production was approaching its capacity. The only thing the Minister could say was that he could not decide which Governments buy coal and from whom.

However, the Government could take steps. If it was not building the infrastructure for those companies, then other countries would be more likely to use the resources already available. The Government could also work with the British Columbia Government to encourage it to set up a mechanism for the orderly marketing of coal. Similar programs were set up in Saskatchewan under the NDP Government to protect towns and jobs. This worked in Saskatchewan because the Government had the will to act.

I called upon the Government to take those two necessary steps to protect the jobs and towns of southeastern British Columbia. The Minister said, "I wish I had control over the market." I want to say that the Government has created this problem. Many railway workers are dependent upon this industry. Many communities that provide the substructure are dependent upon it. The Government has the responsibility because it created the problem. I urge the Minister to immediately request a meeting between his Department and the B.C. Government to ensure that this injustice does not take place because of the subsidies provided by the two levels of Government.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the invitation of the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker), I can say that if ever British Columbia wants to meet with Industry, Trade and Commerce officials, there will be no problem. Our doors are open and we would be happy to discuss the whole question of the coal industry both in southern and northern British Columbia.

First of all, I want to mention that Canadian coal exports began mostly in 1970, when we were able to export some 1.35 billion tons, which was the handled tonnage at that time, and that we now export 16.2 million tons per year, which represents assets of $1.03 billion. It is important to note at this stage, Mr. Speaker, that it is only since 1976 that British Columbia has had major investments in the coal industry and the planning of coal mines in the northeastern part of the province. The industry really began at that time, in 1976. Full capacity production for the first two mines, namely Quintette (Denison) and Bullmoose (Teck Corporation), is expected to be reached by 1985. We cannot say therefore that we have fallen behind. A normal schedule has been followed for planning and development.

Another important element which should be noted, Mr. Speaker, is that the Federal Government did not invest directly in the coal mines, but provided assistance for the infrastructures. It is therefore not the Federal Government which is investing in British Columbia coal mines, but the private sector. It is very important to make this distinction. When the Federal Government invests in infrastructures, it expects a cost-benefit relationship to recover the amounts invested. It is therefore only a matter of sound management. The Government of British Columbia supports those projects through massive investments in the infrastructure and by extending power lines and railway tracks to the new mines. Federal support is aimed at upgrading the CN lines between Prince George and Prince Rupert, a project which will certainly benefit a great many industries, including wheat producers and lumber mills.

Mr. Speaker, since it is rather difficult to answer such questions in three minutes, I might prefer to table the document which contains the answers I have here, so that they will appear as an appendix to Hansard. I think that would give an excellent idea of the answer to the question asked by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the current lay-offs in southeastern British Columbia have nothing to do with the northeastern projects, because the first deliveries of coal from that region are not expected before December 1983. In the meantime, the development of coal deposits in the northeastern region and the setting up of the related infrastructure provide a sizeable number of jobs for British Columbia workers. I have very interesting notes and I think that the Hon. Member might like to have them. I will pass them on to him immediately after completing my remarks. However, Mr. Speaker, if it is possible, I would like to table this document and have it appended to Hansard so that our readers will see it.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry, but I should explain to the Parliamentary Secretary that no other proceedings are permitted during the adjournment proceedings. He may want to look to another occasion when he can do that, but I noted that he offered to make it available to the Hon. Member, in any event.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL REVIEW OF HABITUAL CRIMINALS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pursue a question which I asked of the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), on February 8, last. The question related to the status of habitual criminals in Canadian penitentiaries and noted that legislation was being promised by the former Minister of Justice in 1977 to ensure that a full review would be made of all persons who were presently incarcerated as habitual criminals, in light of the new criteria which were established in the 1977 dangerous offenders legislation.

In the limited time I have this afternoon, I will cite from an excellent, very comprehensive study which was prepared by Professor Michael Jackson of the Faculty of Law, University of British Columbia, entitled "Sentences That Never End, the Report on the Habitual Criminal Study". I will also refer to the complaint which was made to the United Nations Human Rights Committee by Mr. Robert Haddock, who is currently a prisoner at Kent Penitentiary in British Columbia. He alleged that Canada is in breach of Article 15 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and failed to perform its duty under Article 2 of that Covenant.

In 1947, Canada enacted, through amendments to the Criminal Code, habitual criminal legislation. Effectively, under this legislation, a person who had been found to be a habitual criminal could be sentenced to preventive detention; in other words, an indeterminate sentence under which a person could be imprisoned for the rest of his or her life, subject to reviews by the National Parole Board. That legislation was reviewed in 1969 by the Ouimet Committee, which came to the conclusion that the habitual criminal legislation should in fact be repealed and replaced by dangerous offender legislation which focused clearly on those individuals who constituted a continuing danger to the personal safety of others, and were not simply social nuisances of some sort.

I might note that in the application of this legislation, there was great geographical inequity. In fact, of the 80 persons who were sentenced to preventive detention, 45 were sentenced in British Columbia and 39 of those 45 were sentenced in the City of Vancouver. The reason for that is well known to those who are familiar with the criminal justice system in Vancouver in the 1960s. It was the then senior Crown counsel, Mr. Steward McMorran, now a county court judge, who invoked this habitual criminal legislation, basically to deter, as much as possible, in what he called the wild west posse state of justice, criminals who might have come to British Columbia from other Provinces.

Following the recommendation of the Ouimet Committee, in 1977, some eight years after the Committee reported, its recommendations were enacted by the federal Government. The old habitual criminal legislation was replaced by new dangerous offender legislation in Part 21 of the Criminal Code.

The new dangerous offenders legislation emphasizes that the offender must have committed an indictable offence that involved the use of violence against another person, or conduct that constituted a threat to the life, safety, or physical or mental well being of other persons, punishable by a sentence of ten or more years. There are other specific criteria, as well.

At the time this legislation was implemented, the former Minister of Justice, the Hon. Ron Basford, gave a commitment to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. He stated that, as a matter of policy, all those persons sentenced under the old habitual criminal legislation would be reviewed by the Parole Board. He said:

> Then there were questions about those already in the penitentiaries as dangerous sexual offenders or habitual criminals. They are covered by the old Code, but as a matter of policy their cases will be reviewed once a year.

This is the critical portion:

> They will be reviewed on the basis by the Parole Board against the new formulation of what a dangerous offender is. That does not obviously guarantee that they will be paroled, but it does mean that their cases will be reviewed in accordance with the new standard.

That commitment made by the then Minister of Justice was never fulfilled. To this day it has not been fulfilled and it is on that basis that Mr. Robert Haddock and a number of other habitual criminals argue that their cases should in fact be reviewed.

Time does not allow me to summarize all the findings of the study conducted by Professor Jackson, but certainly I can summarize the major findings. They are, first of all, that the majority of men who were part of the study have always been regarded not as serious, dangerous offenders in terms of their propensity to commit violence, but rather as serious social nuisances. Professor Jackson came to the conclusion that none of these men could properly be regarded as dangerous offenders within the definition of the 1977 legislation, and that the parole board had not been using those criteria in conducting its reviews of the men involved. It notes as well that the length of time that has been served by these people is greatly disproportionate to the harm or damage they have done and the risk of further harm or damage they may pose to the public.

Professor Jackson argues that in fact if there is not speedy redress of their grievances that the Government will be in breach of Section 12 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms which states that everyone has the right not to be subjected to any cruel or unusual treatment or punishment.

Professor Jackson makes two key recommendations, first, that legislation should be introduced providing for judicial review of all habitual criminals to determine whether or not they are dangerous offenders within the definition of the 1977 dangerous offenders' legislation and, second, and very importantly considering the people we are dealing with and the lengthy terms of imprisonment they have served, that resources be made available on a voluntary basis to facilitate the establishment and reintegration of former habitual criminals into the community.

I was encouraged by the response of the Minister of Justice to my question on February 8. I hope that he will in fact implement the recommendations of Professor Jackson's study and once and for all redress what is obviously a very serious grievance that has led to complaints before the United Nations Human Rights Committee, and certainly an injustice with respect to the individuals involved.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, Department officials have examined Professor Jackson's report, which was referred to by the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). The Minister met with Professor Jackson in Ottawa recently concerning his report. As a result we are exploring the feasibility of various methods that might be available, both under current law and, if necessary, under new legislation, to remedy the situation, bearing in mind the need both to be fair to the individuals in question and to ensure that no dangerous individuals are released.

The Hon. Member will know that Professor Jackson's study related only to habitual offenders incarcerated in the Province of British Columbia. The facts surrounding habitual offenders incarcerated outside of British Columbia must also be examined. Particular attention must be paid to offenders who were incarcerated under the habitual offenders' provision but whose offences would qualify them for a finding as dangerous offenders under the existing Criminal Code provisions and give cause for concern over their prospective release from custody.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), and the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), are consulting with respect to the most proper and appropriate means of maintaining the delicate balance between individual rights and the welfare and protection of society as a whole.

The calls for new legislation give rise to concern, for a number of reasons. New legislation is time consuming; it imposes a potentially large burden on the courts to review cases and it does not address the pre-1977 convictions for offences that could give rise to a post-1977 application under Part XXI.

Alternatively, if an existing mechanism can be found that offers a way to review these cases in light of the need to balance the concern for fairness to the individuals involved and the concern for protecting the public against any members of the group who are dangerous, it would seem preferable to employ such a mechanism. If no such mechanism is available, then new legislation would be considered.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.35 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEWIS—ALLEGED LACK OF NOTICE OF COMMITTEE ORGANIZATION MEETINGS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have no wish to interfere with the Orders of the Day and the proceedings today, but I would like to bring to your attention at this time, in view of the fact that it is the earliest opportunity to raise a question of privilege, that the notice with respect to the organization of committees may not have been in order or may not have been delivered to Members in time.

It is our belief on this side that inadequate notice was given of the organization meetings of certain committees of the House, and that this lack of proper notice constituted a breach of order or a breach of privilege of Members of the House. I would like to reserve my right to comment further at three o'clock p.m. today.

I would also give notice that at that time other Members of the House, including other Parties of the House, may wish to address the same question of privilege.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think this notice means that more time is going to be wasted. The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) can come and see me and discuss any irregularities there may be, and we shall then see whether there is a case for taking corrective action. However, what the committees do is strictly their own business, and nothing can be done about it here in the House without a report. Aside from that, I am prepared to meet the Hon. Member, and if he has any discrepancies to report, he can point them out to me and we shall try to correct the situation. It is unfortunate, however, that he is trying, this morning, to give notice once more that he is going to waste our time. I hope it will not be necessary to waste another day, and that we will be able to settle the matter between ourselves. Instead of raising questions of privilege, all the Hon. Member has to do is to consult with his fellow house leaders.

[English]

MR. CROSBY—APPLICATION OF PERMANENT AND PROVISIONAL STANDING ORDERS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order similar to the one raised by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) in relation to the application of the new Standing Orders, in particular Standing Order 69(4)(b). My point is contrary to the one raised by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard).

The Standing Orders regulate the activities and affairs of the House of Commons. They make very clear that Members of the House of Commons are entitled to participate in committee work. By giving 24 hours' notice through their Whip they will be permitted access to committee. It is recorded in the business of the House that yesterday we approved, at approximately 3.30 p.m. o'clock, the report of the Striking Committee which established the standing committees of the House. It now being after eleven o'clock, less than 24 hours later, those very Standing Committees are meeting.

The point must be recorded in the House of Commons right now that this is a rather strange procedure if a spirit of parliamentary reform is to prevail in the Chamber. We have no alternative but to record the facts as they are taking place and to consider what is our position as individual Members and as the Official Opposition to the process which is taking place.

I join with the Hon. Member in making the same reservation and asking your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, to allow this matter to come before the House of Commons at an appropriate time.

• (1110)

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly what has just been said, the point that is to be raised at three o'clock has already been made. If it is a matter of adequate notice, is it not simply a matter that can be dealt with forthwith, and then we can get on with the business? I do not often urge upon people to do things they do not want to do, but it would seem to me that if the point just raised by the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) is the same point that the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) proposes to raise after the Question Period, then it is appropriate to raise it now, and, therefore, it must be raised at the earliest possible moment. If he is aware of it, the matter must be debated now. Let us have the discussion, let us have the ruling and let us get on.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Unlike the House Leader for the New Democratic Party, I would like to move away from all the facts and figures, but if we are pressed into it now, that is fine.

I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to this pamphlet called "A Guide to Committees of the House of Commons of Canada" published under the authority of the Speaker of the House of Commons. I refer in particular to page 6 of this pamphlet where it states:

Notices of committee hearings are sent to committee members and are printed each day as an appendix to the Votes and Proceedings—

Yesterday we had quite a bit of discussion about the question of what Votes and Proceedings means. I would like to draw your attention to page I of Votes and Proceedings for Monday, February 14, 1983. We are informed that the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure will meet, that the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee will meet and that the Public Accounts Committee will meet. Today at or about nine o'clock a.m., our Whip's office was advised that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs would meet, that the report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons for the fiscal year would be discussed in committee; and then we find that the Agriculture Committee will meet and that the Communications and Culture Committee will meet.

We are making the same point that we made yesterday, and that is that democracy rests on notice. We have no difficulty getting our people to committee meetings when we have notice of them. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that goes for all sides of this House. It is about time that the Members were informed and given plenty of notice as to what is going on. Party bias can then come into play, the Party situation and whether or not you are a Member of the Government or of the Opposition. But I suggest to you that this place has to operate on notice, Mr. Speaker. That notice was not given with respect to those committee meetings.

If we are going to be effective in committee, just as we argued yesterday that if we are going to be effective in the House, we need notice and information. Surely in committee we need and are entitled, as Members of Parliament and as suggested by the Speaker's Office itself, to proper notice. That is our point of privilege.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, in response to the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), I am prepared to state my point of privilege in very clear and unequivocal terms, if that is desired. I am prepared to make a motion in relation to that point of privilege which is that I, as a Member of the House of Commons entitled to equal rights with all other Members, did not have the opportunity to serve on standing committee meetings which were called for 9:30 a.m. and 10:30 a.m. this morning. Because I received no notification of those meetings, I was unable to be substituted as a Member of any one of those committees that met at 9:30 or 10:30 this morning. I will list them for you, Mr. Speaker. They are Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; Justice and Legal Affairs; Public Accounts; Agriculture; Communications and Culture; and Fisheries and Forestry, which I attended. I could not be substituted because there was no opportunity for my Whip to provide 24 hours' notice to the Clerk of the House to permit me to become a regular alternate Member of any one of those committees.

By way of a motion, I would suggest that it would be appropriate to refer this matter of the calling of committee meetings to an appropriate committee of the House for study in order to see that all Members have the benefit of the provision that I referred to earlier, Standing Order 69(4)(b), which gives us the right to be substituted on standing committees on 24 hours' notice. That right was unceremoniously and unilaterally taken away from us by person or persons unknown.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, having listened to the points that were made and having read the Standing Orders, I would say at the outset that it may well be a point of order that Members of the House of Commons are entitled to be given sufficient notice to allow them to attend the sittings of the House and the sessions of the committees. Since there is a rule which requires 48 hours' notice on substitution, then the same rule must surely apply to the calling of meetings. Members must be given sufficient time to substitute prior to the meeting being called to order. We were not aware that the committees were to meet this morning. It was therefore not possible for Members who were unaware to be at the meeting. Neither was it possible, under the Standing Orders, to substitute.

The issue here is the unfairness of the situation. It is quite clear that if a Member is not given adequate notice of a meeting, which is 48 hours, in order that he or she may attend, it is not possible to substitute another Member because the Standing Orders do not permit it.

I suggest it is indeed a point of order; I do not think it is a question of privilege. I suggest that the Chair should rule that meetings of committees should be preceded by adequate notice being given to each and every Member so that they can attend or arrange for a substitute to attend in their place. In order for that to occur, it follows that there must be 48 hours' notice of the calling of the meeting.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, I am willing to meet with the House Leaders within the next five minutes in my office or wherever they wish so we can clarify this situation. We do not insist on having the committees organized this morning. We thought that it was urgent for the House to be able to have its committees working, but if they do not like the idea and would prefer more notice—I am told that Tory Members attended some of those committees this morning and were very happy—and want to undo what has been done, we are willing to discuss it.

Mr. Crosby: Garbage.

An Hon. Member: Who told you?

Mr. Pinard: It was the Tory chairman, as a matter of fact.

I am saying that if the House Leaders who are here this morning are willing to meet with me, let us not waste the time of the House and proceed with debate. We will meet right now. If we cannot settle the matter, they can return with the subject whenever they want.

Mr. Lewis: Just once more, Mr. Speaker. I am not going to sit here and listen to any more comments from the Government House Leader. When we raise a question of privilege, as far as I am concerned I object to its being referred to as a waste of the time of the House. You decide that, not him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair has listened to the comments of Hon. Members. The Chair recognized the Hon. Member for Simcoe North on a point of order. Once recognized, he proceeded to submit a question of "privilege".

I would like to draw to Hon. Members' attention Standing Order 20(2) where a procedure is laid out for the giving of notice of matters of privilege other than one arising out of the proceedings in the Chamber during the course of a sitting. I think Hon. Members would be well advised to adhere to that usual procedure and give proper notice in writing, if Hon. Members cannot in the meantime resolve the matter raised under the points of order before the continuation of the sitting later on this day. In any case, I think we should proceed to Orders of the Day.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McKINNON—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF REMARKS FROM CHAIR

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Victoria rises on another point of order?

Mr. McKinnon: Yes, another one. Mr. Speaker, I am simply asking for some clarification and guidance on our future behaviour in this House concerning rising on points of order. In yesterday's debate, the Speaker pointed out in pretty firm tones, as recorded at page 22816 of Hansard, the following:

I will hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). I will not hear any other Member.

Further on, the Speaker said:

Order, please. Hon. Members will understand that I have heard enough commentaries on this point of order.

I was in the House on February 3 and raised an objection to a philosophical debate which was going on under the guise of points of order raised by two Hon. Members from two different Parties. The order of business was the Old Age Security Act, which I rather wanted to debate and proceed upon in the hopes that we could change the mind of the Government about the indexation rule which it was attempting to apply to old age pensioners. At that time the Acting Speaker said:

There is no way that the Chair can refuse to see an Hon. Member on a point of order.

At that time I asked the Acting Speaker a question as follows:

Mr. Speaker, we have a very important Bill in front of the House concerning old age pensions. I wonder if you could not see any further points of order and let us get on with that Bill.

In reply, the Acting Speaker stated:

There is no way that the Chair can refuse to see an Hon. Member on a point of order. That is not an option open to the Chair, unless, of course, the House wishes to provide a very clear-cut order to the Chair in that regard.

Now I am completely puzzled. Was the Speaker right yesterday when she said she would not see people and that she had heard enough, or was the Acting Speaker correct on February 3 when he said that there was no choice open to the Chair? Perhaps Your Honour could guide us in this matter.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) is reflecting on a decision rendered yesterday, and it is a shame that he wastes the time of the House in the way he is now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The occupant of the Chair certainly cannot comment on the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Victoria in the context in which he makes his remarks. I think the best course to follow now would be to take that matter under advisement.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed from Monday, February 14, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to discuss the Bill which is before the House today. I must discuss it in somewhat general terms because of the reduction in the time available.

In the budget and comments by the previous Minister of Finance, it was indicated that this measure was housekeeping. I would call it state control and intervention. As we all know, with regard to income tax forms it is up to the individual to understand the Act and to make out his own form, keeping his own files and determining, on his own, the amount of taxes which should be paid; and then it can be challenged by the Department of National Revenue.

The President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants for Ontario recently gave a speech wherein he stated: "Even tax professionals admit they have difficulty understanding". Before we know it, there will be a new budget, a new tax Bill.

There has been something like over 500 changes to the Income Tax Act when it was revised in 1972.

It is beyond the capability of many Hon. Members in the House to comprehend this Bill. It is not possible for many chartered accountants to understand it, other than those who specialize in tax accounting. It is becoming too cumbersome. It is at a point where the average person cannot understand it. Furthermore, there is a discrepancy in that the cost of professional help is not permitted as a deduction for the average wage earner but is only permitted for people with very high incomes who can afford to pay for it whether it is a tax deduction or not.

• (1125)

Those are some of the points I wanted to speak to in general on this Bill because I feel we are being very unfair to the Canadian public.

Since the November, 1981 budget, chaos has reigned in Canada. Thousands of small businesses have gone bankrupt. The energy industry in Alberta has fallen apart. Alberta, a successful Province, is having to borrow money at this time. This is all a direct result of the Government tax laws that have been passed since February 18, 1980.

Specifically, I would like to deal with a few points in this Bill. I come from a part of the country where the automobile industry is the life blood of my constituents. General Motors has had to lay off thousands of people. There are many other people in related service industries who have lost their businesses.

These occurrences are beyond the recession that we are suffering, which I believe has been largely the fault of this Government. The taxation measures introduced in this Bill have also damaged our automobile industry. Companies leasing cars now have to extend these deals into four or five years for their salesmen as a result of this Bill. The lifeblood of a salesman is his automobile and he can no longer get around as quickly, because a four or five year old car will obviously be in the garage some part of the time for repairs. The Government, at a time when salesmen's incomes are being reduced, are now charging them tax on the use of a vehicle that is their lifeblood. This has reduced the sale and leasing of automobiles, which has hurt the automobile industry. It has hurt all the service industries around the automobile industry and has also harmed the sales people, who are so important to this economy.

Let me go on to one other area of this Bill that I take exception to, and that is the life insurance industry. The life insurance industry has provided great amounts of money for investment in Canada through savings of individuals. Admittedly, the Government has deferred the law for a year or two down the road, but it is so greedy to grab the tax on the income when it is earned, rather than taking the opportunity it has always had to grab the tax on the income when a man needs the money, that we are discouraging people from providing for the future.

You know as well as I do, Mr. Speaker, that constituents who were employed in the forties, the fifties and the sixties and who are now retired are suffering because the money they saved is not adequate to provide them with a decent way of life. To put this provision into this Act is a disgrace. Perhaps the Government's position on this is to control all the people so that they are totally dependent on the state. I think that this is unacceptable to the people of this country.

In Canada, when we need new industry, when we need expansion of residential units in the housing industry, when we need growth to support this fine country, the Government cut out one half of the capital cost allowance. Then, to be tricky, it considered the soft costs in building as capital costs so that a developer cannot write them off. The result of that is to increase the cost of rental units to the people of this country. The cost of rental units now is so high that it is difficult to apply the old formula that no more than 25 per cent of one's income should be spent on rental of living accommodation. By pushing it up, people must spend almost 50 per cent of their income to provide housing.

The next point in the Bill I come to, which refers to small business, is the SBDB. As Members know, this was developed by our Government, proposed by our Government and then abused and torn apart by the Liberals. It was meant to encourage industry, small business, to grow in this country. It was an encouragement for people who put their money in to be able to get lower cost loans. It was not enough, I must say from a personal point of view, but it was a start.

What has this Government done? It has now presented this only for bankrupt firms. I have talked to the banks about this. A company that is in trouble needs a lot more than a 34 per cent reduction in its interest cost. If you are going to help people who are in bankruptcy, you should put a moratorium on their interest rates until they can get their cash flow back to what they require to pay their debt. This does not solve the problem of those to whom it is addressed. This is an area that this Government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) should address in the next budget.

There is one part of the Bill I am delighted with. Due to the complexities within the Act, even the Department could not remove deductibility of interest on borrowed funds. The Department could not find a way to take this Provision out. It got up to 16 pages and then had to throw in the sponge. It could not get it out of the Act. I say thank God, because it should not come out. Canadians are too inclined to keep their money in their socks rather than put it out for investment. The few entrepreneurs we have left in this country need every encouragement to invest in our industry in order to get people employed and make profits so that our industry can grow and we can be less dependent on the multinationals.

Unfortunately, the Government did find a way of getting interest deductibility under Registered Retirement Savings Plans. Those are funds that were necessary to go directly into investment in industry in this country. Is it the Government's wish to destroy private enterprise? Is it their wish not to give any encouragement to private entrepreneurs but simply to build colossal Crown corporations? I do not stand for that. It is time we help the small-businessman in this country to survive and create the employment that is so desperately required.

One further point is scientific research and development, which is so important in this day. Look at what the Japanese have done with the tremendous resources they have applied to it. The Government even cut into scientific research and development so that you cannot deduct on an accumulated capital basis.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to him has now expired.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-139 which we have before us now is the result of three budgets that have all been a disgrace to this nation and have failed miserably when in actual fact the Government introduced them in an effort to make the economy of Canada work. In my view, the Bill we are now dealing with assists only in preventing the economy of the country from working and, therefore, should be significantly amended or withdrawn.

On June 28, 1982, the then Minister of Finance announced that the mortality gain of corporate-owned life insurance will no longer be a qualified receipt of a corporation's capital dividend account and thus life insurance proceeds will be indirectly subject to a death tax of approximately 34 per cent. Many qualified individuals have begun to speak out against this latest attack on Canadian-controlled, privately-owned corporations because it violates the concept of integration of corporate and individual taxation.

If this proposal becomes law, the death benefit proceeds of a corporate-owned policy paid out to shareholders will become taxable in the hands of the shareholders. By not allowing the death benefit to be paid out tax-free to shareholders through the capital dividend account of a private corporation, the use of corporate-owned insurance for the buy-out of shares in the event of the death of a shareholder is effectively nullified.

In asking Canadians to pay tax on income that they have not yet received, the Government is once again creating a major disincentive to investment. The lifeblood of our economy will be undermined by taxing businesses and individuals to the point that Canadians will no longer be able to provide for themselves for retirement and will become totally dependent on Government support.

The free enterprise system and the higher standard of living it provides for everyone depends on the existence of incentives for people to work harder, more efficiently and more creatively. In asking Canadians to pay tax on the accrued income of whole life insurance policies, the Government is attacking the most important conveyance of investment of which many Canadians avail themselves. Despite changes since the original proposal of June, 1982, disincentives still remain for the purchase of certain types of policies, such as the exempt life policies which would be taxed if converted to annuities before the termination of the 20-year term.

Through the taxation of deferred annuities, the Government intends to deprive every taxpayer of the only safe and economically sound way of combating inflation with whatever money he or she manages to save on an after-tax basis. By introducing a similar tax on permanent life insurance, the Government intends to swell the ranks of widows who are totally dependent on welfare.

The vast majority of Canadians find it increasingly difficult to combat the ravages of inflation in trying to meet their retirement income objectives. Extraordinary efforts and sacrifices are required to make the necessary savings. Instead of discouraging these savings by tightening the tax noose around the basic retirement vehicles available, the Government should expand retirement savings opportunities by increasing RRSP and pension contribution limits and by allowing investment of tax-paid dollars in interest-sheltered deferred annuities.

The hardest hit will be low and middle-income Canadians who will gain little or nothing from the lowering of marginal tax rates and will lose proportionately more from partial deindexation. The increased taxation of employee benefits will hit hardest at those in the lower and middle-income brackets. It will encourage employees to seek higher wage settlements at a time when moderation is required.

Limitations on retiring allowances, on termination benefits and on the $1,000 pension income deduction will make it harder for Canadians to prepare for their retirement years. The taxation of accrued income on some whole life insurance policies will affect what is for many Canadians a major source of retirement savings. The non-deductibility of interest on money borrowed to purchase an RRSP will discourage personal investment.

The abolition of IAACs will hurt many small-businessmen and farmers who wish to set aside money for their retirement years, years in which their income will be considerably less. General averaging, which involved no judgment call on the part of the taxpayer as to his future income, has been abolished. In its place, this Bill will introduce a complicated measure called forward averaging. To benefit from forward averaging, the taxpayer must decide on the basis of tomorrow's "guesstimated" income whether or not he should opt for forward averaging.

In the disastrous budget brought down by the former Minister of Finance in November, 1981, dividend credit on stocks was reduced to 22⅔ per cent, replacing the 25 per cent that was originally promised by the Liberal Government. This action is very serious as far as industry is concerned. No doubt with the Government action people will leave their money in the banks. Why risk their capital and take reduced dividends? No, leave the money in the banks where it is advantageous to the investor due to Government action.

Why are you, the Liberal Government, discouraging investments in industry with your dividend reduction? We need industrial expansion, not the stagnation that is being encouraged by your policy. The one thing you have accomplished with this legislation is making financing for industry more difficult. At this time in our failing economy we need financing for industry more than ever. We certainly do not need to make it more difficult. Without well financed industry our Canadian economy is nothing.

I think one of the most important aspects of this legislation is the fact that Canadians have invested in Canadian industry, with the understanding from the Liberal Government that they would receive a 25 per cent dividend credit on their stocks. With no discussion between the Government and anyone concerned, suddenly this dividend credit is reduced to 22⅔ per cent. Can anyone in the Government say this is the incentive needed to bolster our sagging Canadian industry?

If an employee has the use of an employer-owned or leased automobile for non-business purposes, he is considered to be in receipt of a taxable benefit. The amount of the taxable benefit is based on standby charges. Prior to 1982 the standby charges were 1 per cent of the purchase price of the automobile per month if the car was employer-owned, and one-third of the lease cost if the car was leased. In June, 1982 the Government changed this to 2 per cent and two-thirds respectively. This standby fee is now an exorbitant charge. The Tax treatment of cars used in business is in the process of significant change. The implementation of minimum taxable standby benefits to employees will discourage the use by employees of company-owned or leased cars.

This excessive taxation of personal benefits from company cars will encourage employees who need to use a car on their jobs to supply their own vehicles and receive a corresponding adjustment in their remuneration. Then the employees will seek to deduct automobile ownership and operating expenses to put themselves in a better tax position. In many marginal cases the Department of National Revenue will challenge the right of an employee to deduct automobile expenses.

One of the conditions which now must be met in order for a commission salesperson to claim expenses is that the employee be "ordinarily" required to carry on the duties of his employment away from the employer's business premises. The expression "ordinarily" has for many years been interpreted by the Department of National Revenue to mean "most of the time", rather than "regularly". One such example of a marginal case is the subject of a recent decision of the Federal Court's trial division that, if not overturned on appeal, will represent an important victory for taxpayers. In this case, The Queen v. Patterson, the Department disallowed a relatively small claim for automobile expenses. The Queen's Court found the meaning of the word "ordinarily" as equivalent to "normally" as opposed to "rarely".

Because of this court case, more work will have to be done by a Committee of the Whole. The Department of National Revenue is basing all its cases on the word "ordinarily" and this has now been overruled by the Queen's Court. I believe under these circumstances that until a Committee of the Whole has investigated this aspect of the current legislation, this portion of the Income Tax Act is non-applicable.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to join in this debate today. The Bill now before us, C-139, is probably one of the most important series of tax amendments and measures to be presented in the House of Commons for some time. We should not be rushed into passing this omnibus Bill without first dissecting and analyzing what it offers Canadians and what it does to overhaul our tax system.

As has been said many times before in this House, Canada is in the middle of its worst economic crisis since the great depression. Unemployment has shot up to an unbelievable 12.4 per cent; over 1.5 million people are out of work. This does not include the thousands who have given up looking for work or those who only work part-time because they cannot find full-time employment. Bankruptcies among small businesses and farmers have reached what can only be called astronomical proportions.

A brief outline of the figures shows the extent of the damage. Small business bankruptcies hit 8,055 in 1981, up 22 per cent over 1980 and 43 per cent over 1979. In the first 11 months of 1982, 9,962 businesses went bankrupt, an increase of 37 per cent over 1981 and an incredible 65 per cent over the same period in 1980.

Our farming industry has not fared any better. In the first 11 months of 1982, 384 farms were forced to close down, a 49 per cent increase over the same period in 1981 and an 87 per cent increase over 1980. Investment in Canada has almost completely dried up. Foreign investment, acknowledged to be essential for any sustained economic growth and recovery, has concluded that the tax laws and economic policies pursued by this Government make our country a hostile environment in which to invest and do business.

A brief look at Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, shows just how complex and far reaching are the changes the Government wants to make. For example, it proposes to discourage savings for retirement through RRSPs. It does not allow for the deduction of interest costs on funds borrowed to invest in RRSPs. There is no tax incentive for Canadians to prepare for their future retirement or even to invest in Canada. For those who do not have an adequate pension plan at work, or for those who want to put a little away for a rainy day, this amendment is bad news indeed. By limiting indexation of personal income tax to the six and five program, this Government is giving itself a major stake in inflation, because as inflation stays high or goes up it receives greater revenue. This is nothing short of an underhanded tax increase. If the Government wants to increase taxes it should do so above board.

We are also opposed, Mr. Speaker, to any tax increases on employee benefits such as an automobile, retiring allowances and employee loans. To take this away is simply a tax grab. It hurts the performance of a company already facing bad times and its ability to attract the best possible talent. Any proposal to tax this area should be withdrawn.

We also oppose the replacement of income averaging annuity contracts with a system of forward averaging, and believe the current system should be maintained. Annuity contracts allow individuals to spread over a number of years the tax they pay in the event of a large increase in income from the sale of, say, a farm or small business. The difference between an IAAC and the Government's scheme is that in the former case the money is left with the private sector to invest in their choice of trust company or insurance company, to in turn invest in the private sector, while under the Government's scheme the money goes to the Government and it decides where to invest it. This point is important because we believe very strongly that this money, like all forms of investment, would be more productive if not tampered with by the Government. We believe our economy would be better off if it is left in the private sector. The Government's forward-averaging scheme is simply another attempt to get its fingers into the investment pot and take more revenue from the taxpayer.

We also object to the Government's attempt, Mr. Speaker, to tax individual insurance policies if they are rolled over into an annuity. That tax will increase anywhere from 25 per cent to 50 per cent depending on how old a person is at the time. This could hurt policyholders at the very time they can least afford it, for example in the face of an emergency.

Another change we oppose is the gutting of the Small Business Development Bond so that it no longer provides for expansion or development assistance. We believe the Government should encourage expansion to create badly needed jobs and investment. As it stands, the bond has been narrowed down to a bail-out bond.

Changes to the capital cost allowance proposed in this Bill will reduce the amount of private-sector investment in new equipment and plants, not to mention new jobs.

Hidden in another part of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that the Government proposes to end a very important and time-honoured principle of our tax system, that of confidentiality of income tax information. Under this provision, privileged information such as the name, address, occupation and the like can be given to other federal Departments for research work and analysis. This is very dangerous, Mr. Speaker. We have to ask why this measure is needed. How detailed will this available information be? And how does this square with this Government's pledge to enact freedom of information legislation and ensure personal privacy? What mechanism will the Government offer to make sure this tax information is not abused, because once in the wrong hands, this information could be used to deny services to Canadians for reasons they may not be aware of and against which they therefore cannot defend themselves.

I do not think there is any question that in order to break the never-ending and vicious circle of the recession, the Government must first restore business and consumer confidence and offer some sort of stability in the marketplace. If this is accomplished, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that the public will once again make the consumer purchases they have been putting off for so long. The bottom liner to recovery is restoring confidence, so that Canadians who are traditionally very high savers will begin to spend once again. We must also send clear signals to the business community to restore desperately needed investment and, thereby, badly needed jobs.

First, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, we should clear the way of Government overregulation to encourage the risk-taker, the entrepreneur, to invest and create jobs.

We should also reduce the deficit the Government has allowed to mushroom to approximately $24 billion from $11 billion in November, 1981.

We should put strong reins of acocuntability on our 306 runaway Crown corporations by following the clear recommendations of the Auditor General's report. We should make it a priority to bring some sense of order to Government spending and the growth of Government. When you have a problem, you simply do not throw money at it in the hope that it will disappear.

Bill C-139, simply put, is a Bill that needs a major overhaul. Instead of clarifying the tax laws, the Bill adds to the confusion. Many of the provisions, some which I have mentioned, should therefore be reconsidered.

What is really needed, Mr. Speaker, is a reduction in Government interference in the marketplace. Before it goes on dictating policy and rules of behaviour to private enterprise, the Government should first gets its own house in order. It should seriously try to reduce the size of the deficit. It is not the private section that needs to be whipped into line as much as it is the Government that needs it. Private sector inflation is roughly 8 per cent, while Government costs are nearly double that. This, obviously, is where the problem lies.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, if we want to bring about renewed economic growth and recovery the Government must lead the way by creating the proper atmosphere. This Bill does just the opposite. It creates far more problems than it solves.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have an opportunity to speak against Bill C-139, which deals with amendments to the Income Tax Act. It is very unfair in two general ways and in one particular way that concern me very strongly.

In general, what the Bill does is to lower further the taxes on the rich individual or on corporations and to raise further the taxes on people of middle income or low income, thereby further widening the gap between the rich and the poor.

Another point that I am concerned about because of the large number of immigrants living in Spadina is that it will unfairly tax money that those immigrants and immigrants in other parts of Canada send to their relatives overseas; but I will return to that point, Mr. Speaker.

In the time available to me it is not possible to go into all the detail of how the Bill will reduce taxes on people of high income. I want to quote from a booklet issued recently entitled

"The New Canadian Tax and Investment Guide", which has this to say:

—the wealthy investor will pay the same rate even if his investment income increases from, say, $200,000 to $300,000 in a given year. While the MacEachen Budget has been promoted as an attack against the rich, a close analysis of these numbers will show that the rich are virtually unaffected. For the rich and the super rich the budget provides a 10 per cent decrease in tax rates.

That point has been made several times already and I think it is indefensible. The newspaper columnist, Don McGillivray, has estimated that people earning over $25,000 per year will together be saved $1 billion in taxes as a result of this legislation.

One particular but very important example of how the Government continues to take from those who can least afford to pay is that the child care allowance remains at $1,000 even though it may cost $300 per month to put a child in daycare so that the parent can work. Compared to the generous business expense allowances contained in Bill C-139, that is shockingly low.

At a time when unemployment insurance benefits and health benefits—which are an indirect tax and are enforced directly or indirectly by federal budget cuts—have gone up by as much as 40 or 50 per cent, direct taxes on people of low-income are being raised while taxes on high-income people are being lowered. That policy has been followed almost consistently since World War II.

In 1950 individual income tax accounted for a little over 50 per cent of total taxes and corporation taxes for slightly under 50 per cent. By 1980, thirty years later, individuals were paying 76.6 per cent of the taxes, three quarters, while corporations, instead of paying half, were paying 23.3 per cent.

Members who spoke previously mentioned the terrible environment for business that has been caused by taxation yet the figures show that the amount of taxable profits taxed in wartime was 50 per cent. That has now dropped to 37.4 per cent. It seems that corporations and businessmen have far more of their taxable income to reinvest now than they had a generation ago. In fact, in 1979 over half of the corporations in this country paid no tax at all. So the situation has been very favourable to rich individuals and corporations and very unfavourable to poor and middle-income people, and this Bill makes things even worse.

The most serious thing the Bill does to make it worse for low and middle-income people is that it deindexes the exemptions. Exemptions which should have been indexed at 11 per cent are now to be indexed at only 6 per cent. That probably means that $100 or $200 will be taken out of the pocket of the average person. With 15 million taxpayers, that means that probably $2 billion or $3 billion will be lost by low and middle-income people and put into the coffers of the Government to be spent on corporations.

Two or three years ago the corporations, which together paid $11 billion in taxes, took out $15 billion in grants and tax expenditures. That is a 36 per cent rate of return, Mr. Speaker. If you are a big corporation, it meant you put in $11 and got $15 back from your friendly Government. The difference of $4 billion had to come from low and middle-income people. That is the way the Government is going to get it.

I strongly support the proposition of the Leader of my Party that people who earn over $40,000 per year, including Members of Parliament, should pay a surtax. With a reasonable surtax on high incomes we could readily get the money we need for economic development. Instead of people earning over $25,000 per year getting a tax cut; it will be people who earn under $25,000 per year will get a tax cut.

I want to turn now to the matter of the money that immigrants send to relatives overseas. Immigrants have been coming to this country ever since our ancestors were immigrants, and even longer than that. Generally speaking, they have worked hard. Often they came because it was the only way they could support their dependants in the old country. Many dreamed of bringing their dependants over here and some were able to realize that dream. Those who have not been able to, often continue to meet their obligations of supporting their dependants who live overseas. According to Clause 76 of this Bill, they will now not be able to do that with tax exemptions, except for a spouse or child. The Government has been so sure of this that this provision appears in this year's income tax forms.

The Government took a whole year to bring this legislation before Parliament. It is not really interested in whether or not the legislation is passed because it will tax the people anyway. It will take money from them which it predicted a year ago but did not bring such a measure to Parliament until the last few weeks.

I protested against this a year ago, on November 17, in a motion under Standing Order 43. I challenged the principle and pointed out that the people who were asked to do the hardest work, the people who are asked to be responsible citizens, were being tax penalized for being responsible citizens and for saving money to send to their relatives overseas. It is argued that some of them cheat. I do not deny that probably some of them do, but does that mean that Canadian-born people do not cheat on their income tax? Ridiculous! We do not cut out the huge gifts to corporations because we sometimes find a corporation or an expensively-paid professional cheating on income tax.

I should like to refer to a letter from Albert Wu, president of the Chinese Canadian National Council, directed to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), in which he gave the rationale for the opposition of his organization representing Chinese people across Canada. It reads:

The move to eliminate the tax deduction for overseas dependents would unjustly penalize recent immigrants, most of whom eke out a livelihood in Canada with poorly paid jobs, and whose parents and dependent relatives still reside in their countries of origin. They are the people who most need relief from the economic difficulties impinging on them. The proposed elimination of tax deduction for overseas dependents would only serve as evidence of the accusation that the Canadian Government treats immigrants as second-class citizens.

This was backed up by letters sent to every Member of Parliament. I am advised that at least 50 Members of Parliament have replied favourably. This was also backed up by 2,000 petitions and by another 400 which I will bring in. I urge Members of Parliament, even if they intend to pass this Bill in the clause-by-clause reading during Committee of the Whole, to vote against Clause 76 because it works a very specific injustice on the immigrants in our country.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleagues on this side to take part in the debate to draw to the attention of Members on the Government side, particularly Members of the Cabinet, the inequities in Bill C-139. It is probably the most complex that Bill presented to the House since 1971. This Bill runs to some 297 pages in length and it took the Government 389 days, or over a year, to bring it forward. Now we are limited to ten minutes of debate on a Bill which affects every Canadian taxpayer.

The Bill contains changes to the November, 1981 budget, the December 18, 1981 budget, the June 28, 1982 budget, and the October 27 budget of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I would like to take a look at some of the changes and bring to the attention of the House, in the brief time I am allowed, the condition regarding imputing rent or imputing income. We understand that there will be legislation to impute income from low-interest loans to foreign subsidiaries. I recall to the House the statement of the former minister of finance on March 19, 1982, wherein he said:

> I have attempted to allay the concern by stating categorically that the Government never had any intention, does not presently entertain any intention, nor will it entertain any intention in the future to tax imputed rent. That is the end of the matter as far as I am concerned.

We would have hoped that that was the end of the matter, but once again I draw to the attention of the House the situation faced by a constituent of mine. I brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Finance on November 23, 1982. My constituent was imputed income; he was an incorporated farmer who was assessed $9,000 imputed income from the rental of a $75,000 home. That should put it into context and alert the people of Canada to the fact that the Government is intent upon imputing income to justify its expenditures, which now run to over $26 billion more than its income.

In my part of Canada, as in other parts of Canada, Canadians are uncertain. I regognize the uncertainty of the people of Canada regarding the Income Tax Act, but it is not the fault of the Opposition that the Government has taken over a year to bring forward legislation to put into law the Bill we are now discussing.

I wrote to the Minister of Finance on October 1, 1982 concerning the present income tax regulations relating to capital gains on the transfer of farm land. The present law provides that deferrals of tax are provided on transfers of farm property by a farmer to his or her child or grandchild. I have a situation in my riding where such a transfer was made by a mother to her son, who happened to be single. The son died in a tragic accident and left the land again to his mother. Now Revenue Canada is saying that tax is payable on the capital gain assessed on the transfer back one generation. I wrote to the Minister on October 1 requesting information and a report on my constituent. I finally received a reply on January 6, 1983, in which the Minister wrote:

> While I sympathize with the circumstances of your constituent, the income tax laws must be general in their application and exceptions cannot be made in individual cases.

I was not asking for exceptions in individual cases. I was asking that the Government look at the transfer back from generation to generation when tragic circumstances deprived a family of the value of its farm, so that it is not fixed in stone. I wanted the Government to recognize that there are tragedies which happen in families so that the transfer could be returned. Most farm families in this day and age work to transfer their land from generation to generation. There are times when it must be transferred to leave the farming operation intact, so that it is not broken up or sold because of a demand put on them by Revenue Canada.

Also I should like to draw to the attention of the House the change in the income averaging annuity contracts, designed to protect capital gains over a period of years. It was just a deferral of tax, it was not a tax benefit. The tax would be paid, but when it was less harmful to the savings of individuals. Most people in my part of Canada, as well as in other parts of Canada, involved in farming and small business have as their only nest egg their farm or small business to set aside for retirement years. Also most people dispose of that asset, their small business or farm, when they are ready to retire. They use the proceeds to continue enjoying whatever years are left to them. If they do not have these proceeds, they are forced to fall back upon the Government. If the Government would allow individuals to provide for their own retirement without taxing before the retirement comes into effect, it would be less of a burden upon the Government of Canada and other taxpayers.

Before the November, 1981 budget, the farmer could claim a reserve on the taxable capital gain portion of the proceeds of his land which he had not received at the time of sale. He could bring that portion of capital gains into income when the proceeds were given to him or when he receives the proceeds.

Let us use the example of an unmortgaged farm with a 1972 Valuation Day value of $80,000 which the farmer sells for $260,000. That is a lifetime of work by a man, a woman and usually the children. He has a capital gain of $180,000, half of which, $90,000, is taxed at 50 per cent, leaving $45,000. That does not even consider recapture of capital cost allowance which could make the situation worse. Let us say this person receives $60,000 down on his farm and takes back a mortgage for 20 years, paid back in equal annual instalments of $10,000 plus interest. These payments represent the retirement income of that farmer and his wife. In the year of sale he could claim a reserve of $69,231 against the taxable capital gain of $90,000, and only $20,000 would be brought into income. The next year he receives $10,000 on his mortgage. He claims a reserve of $65,769 and must bring $3,462 of the $10,000 received into income.

Under the November, 1981 budget this farmer would be taxable on the entire $90,000 in the year of disposition, the year of sale, regardless of what he received. Considering the farmer may be taxable on the sale of his inventory and may be taxable on recapture of capital cost allowance, it is likely that $45,000 in tax would be paid on the $90,000 capital gain at 50 per cent. However, it leaves the farmer in this example with $15,000—the $60,000 downpayment that he had minus $45,000 he has to pay in tax—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I have a quick question for the Hon. Member, if he will permit it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Questions can only be put if the Hon. Member agrees to receive them in the first place.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to answer the question of the Parliamentary Secretary if he would allow me the ten minutes allotted to me. If I can continue and get finished, the Parliamentary Secretary can then ask me his question. I am told I have 30 seconds.

The farmer in my example would have only $15,000 left out of the $60,000 he had received to provide for his retirement. If the farmer had received a downpayment of only $40,000, he would have to make up $5,000 from somewhere so as to make his payment to the Government.

I see that you are rising, Mr. Speaker. This Bill is unacceptable to people who have worked all their lives in order to look after their retirement.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I will not be the first to refer to the 295 pages of this document. It is a complex tax revision document, and that is all it is. It revises the tax structure in certain respects only. The complexity of that document coming at this stage in the tax year is absolutely inexcusable conduct on the part of the Government.

We are now in the middle of February. Tax consultants and tax advisers have been writing to me, and I am sure they have been writing to the Ministers, about getting tax legislation available to them so they can advise and prepare tax returns for their clients. This Bill is composed of 295 pages of nit-picking here and nit-picking there, changes here and changes there. This is one of the most complex documents I have had the misfortune to examine in this House.

I have a suggestion for the Government which I make in all sincerity. I suggest to the Government, any government, that it provide an index for a document of this complexity so that a person can find out where you are in respect to Child Tax Credits, to RRSPs, or to changes in this part of the tax regime or the other. An Index is definitely needed.

There is one other change that I would make with reference to the preparation of Bills. No individual in his right mind or by himself can work through a document of this complexity without a great deal of help. Let me give you an example, Mr. Speaker. Open the document at page 179. I was looking for the reference made by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), which was Clause 76. I do not even know what section of the Bill page 179 deals with unless I leaf back, and it is possible that I may have to leaf back several pages. However, in this case it is only one page. But in all fairness to Members of Parliament, tax consultants and even to Ministers, at the bottom or the top of the page reference should be made to what section in being dealt with. In this case, what is it? What does it turn out to be? It is Clause 76. There are other pages like this which continue a section from a previous page or several pages earlier.

I sincerely suggest that, in order to simplify documents of this complexity, those two changes be incorporated in any other tax measure or complex Bill of this sort. I would ask that there be an index or a guide at the beginning so that anyone in his right mind—and I hope we are all in our right minds because with this document we are going out of our minds quickly—can look through the document and help people who need and want help in preparing their tax returns ten weeks down the line. Those two suggestions I toss out. They are free. I ask the Minister to take them up. First, produce an index; and second, let us have a section reference on the pages where the section itself is not mentioned.

There is one other great unfairness inherent, as far as I can see, in all our tax legislation, and that is the requirement to pay taxes before the revenue is earned. I think this is iniquitous. I am thinking of pensioners in particular. They do not have enough square cash to get into the market but they do buy something which they think is safe, and that is a Canadian Government bond. In many cases the bond interest is paid on November 1 or at some specific period during the year. Yet since they are required throughout the year to pay quarterly instalments of taxes, they are required to pay tax on revenue that is not going to be seen until November 1. When will any Government correct that stupidity? Either the revenue should be paid quarterly whereupon the tax can be paid quarterly, or the tax should be forgiven until the revenu has been received. I think it is wrong that people should have to pay a tax on revenue that they have not yet received.

Another unfairness in the system to which I would like to refer is tax-free benefits under certain forms of revenue, such as workmen's compensation benefits which are tax-free whereas unemployment insurance benefits are taxable. Why should that be? Another example is the disability insurance plan. While it may be arguable that unemployment insurance benefits are taxable, why are disability insurance plan benefits not tax-exempt? There is a disability involved, as there is a disability involved in the workmen's compensation plan. Why has that parallel not been made?

These are reforms that ought to be included in the tax structure. It may add a few pages to this document but, as has been said in the House this morning, we need a fundamental tax revision so that we do not have this nonsense of adding amendments to existing law. There should be a clean sweep and a refocusing by this Government on revenues so it can decide where taxes can best be applied.

Sick leave is another taxable benefit. This is obviously another area where there is no equity between workmen's compensation and the sick leave benefits. I believe that this area also deserves examination.

In the time I have left I would like to comment on the matter of confidence in this Government as a result of the manner in which it has conducted the affairs of the nation. I had a table prepared for me which shows for a 20-year period, from 1962 to 1982, the amount of personal savings that are sitting in savings accounts in Canada. These are personal savings, not RRSPs. I did not have this table prepared specifically for this debate, but I was interested to have this information when I learned of the reluctance people had to invest because of their lack of confidence in the Government. It was a startling revelation to me when I read this table. I thought that the amount of savings might solely be related to the interest rate that banks were paying on savings, but I think there is more to it than that.

I will relate these figures in billions of dollars. For example, in 1968, when the Government assumed office, there was $13 billion and more in savings. The next year it was $15 billion, then $16 billion, $17 billion, $19 billion, $24 billion, $29 billion and the figure for 1981 is $90 billion in savings accounts in this country. That is an indication of the lack of confidence in this Government.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate. I hope to confine my remarks to the ten minutes which I have, but to make sure that I do I will state my conclusions and suggestions first. I believe I have a couple of proposals for those Members on the other side who might be interested in hearing some positive suggestions.

An unemployed professional visited me a few weeks ago and said that he had been looking for jobs all over the world during the last year. He said that it cost him approximately $3 for every resumé that he prepared. Added to that cost were post office charges and the cost of a typewriter to type over a thousand resumés. That represents the cost of trying to find a job. He told me that it would be very helpful to him, and perhaps many others, if those costs could be considered as legitimate expenses of seeking work. These expenses would also help others such as schoolteachers who have either just been graduated or have been terminated. I believe this is a reasonable proposal to help those who face those legitimate expenses.

I also want to talk briefly about tax discounters. Beginning at approximately this time of year, there are people who desperately need money who go to tax discounters. These discounters will take a person's estimated refund and discount it up to 50 per cent. While we do not need to condone this practice, it is a reflection of how many people need the money immediately and cannot wait until their refund has been processed.

I do not think it would be very difficult to include the expected tax refund over the next five years in the new income tax forms. Why not set up a regime in which people who need this service can get it either through the banks or the credit union, the Government or the Income Tax Department, so that they can receive their tax refund when they need it? They could pay a reasonable fee, but not 50 per cent. In this way they are protected from those gougers who operate fraudulently, or at least immorally. Many people need those refunds desperately.

I would ask the Government to consider those two suggestions. One is for the provision of a public discounter; the other is to recognize the legitimate cost of seeking employment. If the Government recognizes business expenses such as martini lunches or travelling expenses for businessmen, it should also consider expenses to those who are not in that bracket.

Mr. Heap: And the legal cost of cheating OHIP.

Mr. Rose: I would like to return to my introduction. It concerns the general theory of taxation. Our Party believes that taxes should be based upon a person's or a company's ability to pay. Our general criticism has been that we do not believe taxes are based on ability to pay. We believe the present regime does not reflect that but distorts it through the various incentives such as PIP grants, give-aways to the nuclear industry or favouritism toward entrepreneurs.

A distinction is made on how incomes are made. I think all of us remember when Mr. Benson dealt with the Carter paper and the theory of a buck is a buck, and that no matter from whence it comes it should be taxed equally.

Our main criticism of the tax system is that it operates unfairly. It discriminates against those who do not have the ability to pay. Taxes should be based entirely on the ability to pay. A system should be introduced outside of the Income Tax Act which provides incentives, when needed, to an industry or a certain class of people. In other words, affirmative action to assist certain groups of people.

Mr. Cosgrove: The home buyer.

Mr. Rose: The home buyer. They can be assisted outside of the tax system. While a tax incentive could be invoked as well, I certainly hope that it will reflect need and not be available in the same proportion to people who do not need it.

In that instance, the argument might be made that higher income people buy larger houses. Therefore, they need greater incentives to buy those bigger houses. I do not know whether I can entirely agree with that one.

What concerns us is that the Bill before us now will raise the taxes for a family of four making $20,000 by $125.00 a month. I will check my figures, and someone else will if I do not, but if they are correct, that will probably amount to an increase of 27 per cent if one includes provincial taxes, and I mentioned this yesterday. The taxes of a person such as an MP, who is at the $50,000 a year income level, will rise only 13 per cent. If one wants to stretch it even further, persons earning $500,000 a year will actually have a drop in their tax rate of 17 per cent. The Government will counter by saying: "There are not very many of those people, and if you do soak them", as the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) said the other day, "you will destroy their incentive". I just wonder how much a progressive income tax would destroy the incentives of the Ian Sinclairs and Samuel Bronfmans, whose incomes are at least between $1 million and $2 million a year.

Although I do not want to debate the whole matter over again, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre said that he disagrees that the Government should take more than 50 per cent of anyone's revenues. I do not think that happens because, as mentioned by my friend, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), the effective tax rate for business, no matter what the real rate is, is really only 37 per cent. That figure is not true for all businesses. It is even less for some businesses in some years, notably for the banks. So we do not buy that one.

Again in reply to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, he disputed my figures on the basis that I was discussing the total tax and not just the rate. If that is the case, where the rate falls but the total tax bite goes up must be a perfect example of the old shell game. We know that there is a massive attack on the incomes of Canadians. Our standard of living is being savagely attacked, so the Government lowers the tax rate. I will tell you what the Government increases. It increases the cost of energy by, say, 30 per cent. It increases interest rate costs. It freezes wages. It raises health insurance premiums, cuts Family Allowances, cuts old age pensions and retirement benefits and then has the audacity to say; "Oh, but the rate went down. You have all those extra costs, but the rate went down, so how can you fault us on that one?"

I do think it takes a great deal of intelligence to find that out or perhaps I might not have discovered it, but nevertheless that is exactly what is happening and it is the perfect example of the old shell game. Lower the rate and fool around with the deindexation of pensions, and that is what you have—a massive attack on the standard of living. No matter what one says about the tax rate, it does not hide that issue at all.

This is not only true in Canada; it is true in the United States as well. This is where I have problems with the view of the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell). In the United States, the idea was that if the rate for the wealthy was lowered, that would somehow increase business activity. That was the theory, a kind of supply side economics.

Mr. Cullen: Trickle down.

Mr. Rose: I do not think it has been too successful, but that was the suggestion and it is what was done in the United States. Under the new Reagan budget, the share of tax savings of the $10,000 earner was only 33 per cent. For the $20,000 earner, savings were 21 per cent, and for those earning $100,000 or over, 17 per cent. By far the largest share of total U.S. taxes is paid by those peole who have the lowest incomes, 36 per cent.

It is not just me saying this. The Black Caucus of the United States, which represents poor peole, is also saying it. If the kind of program which favours the rich and soaks the poor is to contribute to our recovery, why is it that the Americans are now $200 billion in debt? The fact is that it has not worked.

Mr. Cosgrove: They did not adopt it.

Mr. Rose: No, but the Government has adopted something very similar to it. It is going in that direction. I have discussed this here and given some examples of how it has increased the cost of everything people buy and has then lowered their incomes. That is what the Government has done. It has frozen their incomes. That is precisely what it has done.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely amazed that on second reading of a Bill which is some 295 pages in length, which increases taxes on every Canadian who lives in this country, there are no Government Members rising to speak. This is second reading stage. This is where we are discussing the principles of—

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Our Members have spoken and I think we owe it to the Opposition to listen. We have spoken to the Bill—

Mr. Taylor: Not today.

Mr. Cullen: —in order to find out if there is anything new and different. We have not heard anything today.

Mr. Epp: All two of you.

Mr. Thacker: Not one Liberal Member has risen today to speak to this massive Bill.

Mr. Cosgrove: You were not here.

Mr. Thacker: I am the sixth Conservative to speak. In a minute, Mr. Speaker, Liberals will hear how their Party has sabotaged every farmer in this country.

Mr. Smith: Rubbish.

Mr. Thacker: If any farmer votes Liberal in the next election, he will be voting to cut his own throat, because this Bill so far as farmers are concerned is all bad. The result will be more taxes, more Government, more forms and a genuine loss of income. The Pepin proposals with respect to transport would be quite satisfactory if it were not for the fact that the Government has placed so many taxes on gas being used by farmers.

There are millions of acres of land in Western Canada which produce extra food for the world and bring this country something like $6 billion worth of foreign exchange. Every acre has to be gone over four or five times a year. The seed bed is prepared in the spring, it is then seeded, chemicals are placed on the crop as it is growing, it is swathed, harvested and then must often be worked in the fall. That amounts to six operations. It takes two hours to fly over these acres in Western Canada, yet there has been a Government tax amounting to 60 cents on every gallon of gasoline and some 40 cents on diesel fuel. The Pepin proposals would be nothing for the western farmers to absorb if it were not for these other taxes.

What are the losses? First of all, farmers have lost the right to general averaging and we now have this new forward averaging. I want to say how that is hurting the farmers. They have lost block averaging which permitted farmers to average over a five-year period. Now if they have a sale of a capital item, the block averaging is interfered with and they cannot block average during that five-year period. That will result in distortions and will cost them more for accounting fees and legal advice.

Before this legislation, a farmer almost always sold his land by way of an agreement for sale or would sell it outright and take a mortgage back. Based on the productivity of land, those agreements for sale were almost always over 15 years and in some cases were over 20 years. The fact is that, as a result of the huge Government deficit and the inflation which results, the value of land has risen much higher than the productivity of the land would justify.

Now when a farmer sells the land to the next generation or even to a stranger, and if that stranger or son or daughter cannot raise the money from some financial institution—and they certainly cannot from the Farm Credit Corporation because it does not have enough money—then the farmer who is selling it is forced to finance it. Based on the productivity of the land, the agreement must be for at least 15 years and often 20 years. Under these tax changes, if the agreement is within the family the maximum length of the agreement is ten years. If the farm is sold to someone outside of the family, the agreement can last only five years.

This means that a farmer is not free to sell to whom he might wish, either to someone within his family or perhaps the neighbour's boy who was born and raised in the community and wants to be a farmer. These farmers want to keep their communities alive. It is impossible to sell the land if there is a five-year payout deadline because the productivity of the land cannot justify it. So what happens is that it goes into the hands of large corporations or into the hands of foreigners who purchase land through trust agreements or fictitious companies.

We are also coming to a situation where the land is not as productive as it once was. I hope to make a statement in the next few days which will show that the salinity of the soil in Western Canada is increasing at dramatic rates. Within 10 or 15 years we are going to have a shortage of food in this country because the soil salinity in the western plains is increasing enormously.

I am amazed that Government Members are not speaking on this subject. I would like to hear why they feel that farmers can pay these extra taxes, because I am telling this House that they simply cannot. This is not a tax on capital gains, it is a tax on capital per se. We know from all of the evidence that huge deficits caused inflation, which caused the fair market value of land to go higher than the productivity will justify. The Government is taxing that increase, saying that it is a capital gain, but in fact it is purely an inflationary gain. If the indexing formula for the ordinary cost of living were applied to the 1971 value of the land, it would be obvious that there has been no gain and that all of the farms that are being sold now should not have any tax applied to them.

However, a tax is applied, and I have just worked out an example for an average sized farm in the drylands area, which could be about 1200 acres. That land now sells for about $600 an acre. That leads to a taxable capital gain of $250 per acre. Therefore, on the sale of a 1200-acre farm the farmer could expect to pay $124,200 in the first year because the forwarding averaging means that the farmer has to pay all the taxes as at the date of sale. Over the next five years if it is sold to a stranger, or ten years if it is sold within the family, the farmer applies for a tax credit and gets some taxes back. It is impossible to sell under an agreement for sale and to raise $124,200 tax in the first year on a small farm, a mere 1200 acres. I suppose in Ontario and Quebec a farm of 300 acres or 400 acres would be the equivalent. It simply cannot be done, and I would like to hear Liberal Members give me an example of where it is being done successfully. We are talking to farmers every day and we know that it has become an impossibility.

There is an even more serious dimension with forwarding averaging for farmers which relates to the situation of a retiring farmer who dies before the agreement is paid out. I wrote to the Parliamentary Secretary and he had his officials send me some documents on this. They did not tell me what was in this explanation, I found it on my own. I am not saying that they tried to mislead me, but they certainly were not telling me everything. Before this tax Bill came in, if a farmer had sold his land under an agreement for sale for 15 years and had the misfortune of dying after five or six or ten years, the estate could be kept going and the capital gains could continue to be spread out over the rest of the period of the agreement. The agreement could pass to a wife or children or other beneficiary, and could be carried on.

Under this new forward averaging provision, Clause 120.1(2)(b) sets out the rules that apply when a taxpayer dies at a time when he had an unclaimed accumulated averaging amount. That simply means that he was spreading out the forward averaging. He still had some tax credits to get. In the year of death the accumulated averaging amount not brought back into income in that year is taxed as if one-third of the amount thereof were added to his taxable income in each of the three years preceding the year in which he died.

That simply means that if a man sells to his son on a ten-year basis but dies after three years, all of the accumulated taxes due then are applied to the three years before he died. This means that the state, the Liberal Government, is taking a massive amount of that person's farm. That is going to result in increased cost of food, make it impossible for young farmers to carry on, and that is going to impact on us, we who live in the cities, because we will be standing in food lines.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with some individual income tax cases. One of the things that is most irritating to me and, I suppose, to hundreds of Canadians is the bureaucrats who just do not treat the people decently, and that is putting it mildly. There is too much arrogance shown in some of our Revenue offices. Some of the personnel are excellent but some are terrible. I think the Minister should know what is going on in the field. As a matter of fact, in some cases the bureaucrats are running the Government, not the Ministers.

I want to give one or two examples to show that I am not simply making a wild statement but that I can back up what I am saying. For instance, the Small Business Development Bond can provide $500,000 to an individual company. One of my constituents thought it over and figured that if he could get the money within a month he did not have to borrow the whole amount. Being considerate of others and considerate of the Government, he borrowed barely what he needed, $370,000. But that money did not arrive for several months, and by that time the interest rate had gone up and up and up. So consequently, because of inflation, rising interest rates and the delay in getting the money, the $370,000 was not enough. He then said he would like to get the balance of that $500,000 but was told that he was not allowed to because he could only have one bond, that that is the law. I checked and that is so.

I went to the Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) at the time and outlined the problem. He said that it did not seem right, that the man might lose everything if he did not receive the balance, and I agreed that that was exactly right. The Minister said he would see what he could do about it and, true to his word, he made provision for the purchase of the second bond, as long as the two bonds did not total more than $500,000, which was sensible and reasonable. He sent me a letter dated February 10, 1982, and I quote:

> This is in reply to your letter dated December 15, 1981 concerning the Small Business Development Bond (SBDB) program.
> Enclosed you will find a copy of a press release outlining new rules which will allow a qualifying corporation that is in financial difficulty to issue more than one bond provided that the total principal amount of all bonds issued by the corporation does not exceed $500,000. This proposal will enable your constituent to obtain additional funds under the SBDB program.

I was delighted when I received this letter, and so was my constituent. That was in February of 1982. My constituent immediately went to the lender of the money, and since that time he has been trying unsuccessfully to get the additional amount of $130,000. In spite of the fact that the Minister himself authorized it, the bureaucrats said no. They put up this reason, that reason and the other reason.

It is not fair to the Government or to the Minister and this is why I am bringing it to the attention of this House. I appreciate the fact that the Minister understood the problem but the bureaucrats have refused to comply. I am now dealing with another Minister who is looking into it. But surely when a Minister changes the regulations to permit this type of thing, the bureaucrats should not say no and put up obstacle after obstacle after obstacle. My constituent still does not have the $130,000. He is on the brink of collapse; that is how bad it is. As long as bureaucrats run the Government, that will happen. It is time some of these bureaucrats were told where to go. Fire them; get rid of them if they cannot obey the rules of the Minister who sets out the policy.

That is one case. I want to deal with another case that is very serious. I am sorry the Minister is not here because I previously brought this matter to his attention. In 1975 one of my constituents sent three $1,000 instalments to Revenue Canada. I have photocopies of the cheques which went through a bank in Calgary. Revenue Canada did not credit him or his partner with the money. They started to make inquiries almost right away. They went to the bank and to Revenue Canada. There were many letters back and forth. In November, 1979 the matter was brought to my attention. I went to the then Minister. On November 6, 1975 he said that the records had been destroyed. This was after five years. They go after individuals for seven years, yet Revenue Canada destroys its files before that period. In 1980 they had already been destroyed.

The Minister said that although the records had been destroyed, they did have an indication that on November 6, 1975 $2,000 was returned to the bank because the bank had not said to whom it was applicable. I cannot understand that. The names were on the cheques. I went to the bank and asked what had been done with the $2,000. The bank said their records had been destroyed. Each of these two taxpayers is out $1,000 because Revenue Canada destroyed their records and the bank destroyed theirs. Who is left holding the bag? That is $2,000 of hard-earned cash. It is not satisfactory for someone in Revenue Canada to say that they destroyed their records and wipe their hands of the case. That is not fair.

One of my constituents sent in $1,000 for which he did not receive credit. I want that man to get credit. If it is the fault of the bank, let it pay up. If it is the fault of Revenue Canada, let it pay. The money was received by Revenue Canada and Revenue Canada should look into it, not simply say they have closed their books and cannot be of any help.

A civil servant said to me: "We have closed our books, we don't want to talk about it any more". Whether he wants to talk about it or not, I am going to talk about it, because my constituent is out $1,000. It is up to Revenue Canada to find out whether the money was returned to the bank. If so, it is up to the bank to produce the $1,000. This money did not grow on trees. This farmer, his wife and his family had to work hard for it. We want this $1,000 accounted for.

I wish I had time to go into more detail. However, there are a couple of other cases I want to deal with. One was brought to my attention the other day. In 1977, a tax accounting firm opened up. It completed income tax returns for those in the community. As most farmers do not like to complete their own income tax forms and the fee was fair, they had this firm complete them. They thought it was being done by an accountant, so they signed the form, made out a cheque and sent it all to Revenue Canada.

In 1983 one of these farmers—I understand that others now face a similar situation—received a notice from Revenue Canada saying that the income tax forms were not completed properly and they wanted more money, $12,800. That is the first the farmer had heard about it since 1977. The farmer offered to re-do the 1977 return if the firm had made an error, but Revenue Canada would not accept that. They will not accept a new form. They said he was not allowed to file a new one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his speaking time has expired.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a few comments on the record respecting the income tax legislation, specifically as it relates to the case of a farmer in my riding. I am sure that other Members who represent rural ridings have been noting the number of people coming into their offices and complaining about the tax system and the manner in which the tax Department is treating individual taxpayers. I am not talking about the perennial argument of: "Why are my taxes what they are?"

There is a deep sense among a number of these people that they are being mistreated by Revenue Canada and that the tax regulations are being interpreted in favour of the tax Department rather than the taxpayer. In fact, there is a growing sense among many of them that while in Canada under the rule of law one is innocent until proven guilty through the due process of law, in tax matters the opposite is the case that you are guilty and remain so unless you can prove your innocence.

That is not an idle comment I make. Experience has dictated to many of my constituents that that is the manner in which many in Revenue Canada—it would be unfair to say everyone—treat their files. Let me give a specific example. The Income Tax Act is complicated. I do not think anyone in this House pretends to know every implication that will flow from this Act. My example involves a farmer and his wife. He was working with CP Rail in Winnipeg. They live on a small farm in my riding. His earnings with CP Rail were invested in the farm. The wife and children worked on the farm. The perennial argument developed that the expenses he incurred on the farm and the investments he made in it could not be used as a tax deduction against the income he earned with CP Rail. He argued with Revenue Canada about which expenses were legitimate and which ones were not. CP Rail eventually laid him off. He was getting unemployment insurance. Meanwhile he continued to work on the farm. He had the hope that he would be recalled by CP Rail, but his job was eventually terminated so there was no hope of recall.

Even though this man only works on the farm, he is not regarded as a farmer by Revenue Canada. I argued this with Revenue Canada. He is not working for CP Rail. He is unemployed; his job has been terminated; there is no opening; the job has been declared obsolete. He is living on the farm. How is he classified? Revenue Canada argue that he cannot be a farmer because his farm is not viable. I asked when it has ever been Revenue Canada's responsibility to decide whether an economic pursuit of a Canadian is viable or not.

I intend to continue when the Bill is again before the House.

THE CANADIAN FLAG

HISTORIC DATES

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind Hon. Members and all Canadians that today is the eighteenth anniversary of our national flag. On December 15, 1964, at about 1 a.m., the Members of this House approved the report of the Special Committee on the Canadian Flag. Twenty-one Members who took part in that historic vote are still sitting in the House today. The Senate of Canada, by a Resolution dated December 17, 1964, recommended that the new Canadian flag be adopted. The Proclamation was signed on January 28, 1965, by Her Majesty the Queen of Canada, Elizabeth II, and countersigned by the Right Hon. Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson and the Attorney General of Canada, the Hon. Guy Favreau.

Ten years ago today, the Hon. Lucien Lamoureux, Speaker of the House, proceeded to unfurl the Canadian flag in the House of Commons for the first time.

Madam Speaker, hon. colleagues, you will agree with me that those two historic events deserve to be given particular emphasis in the House today.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

SUGGESTED REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, on this day one year ago the world's largest offshore drilling rig, the Ocean Ranger, capsized and sank in a storm 195 miles East of St. John's. The entire crew of 84 was lost.

While I salute the brave men and women of the Canadian Armed Forces and the Canadian Coast Guard on carrying out their search and rescue responsibilities, it is important to note that they must discharge this responsibility over an area of 1.8 million square miles and 11,000 miles of coastline, with resources which leave them under-equipped and under-manned. This situation remains unchanged today despite the findings and recommendations of various judicial inquiries during the past 14 years. The Government's lack of action on those recommendations is emphasized by the Minister's own admission that Canada does not have a search rescue contingency plan to cope with a major marine disaster.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, I note that the Ocean Ranger disaster has been the subject of not one but three U.S. inquiries, including a Congressional inquiry, and that, while there is a federal-provincial Royal Commission, it is important that this House note that this matter has never been the subject of a parliamentary committee. I would therefore urge that the whole question of search and rescue be referred to an appropriate Standing Committee of this House in order that all major inquiries be studied, including the findings of the Cross Report and the Mahoney Inquiry into the sinking of the Arctic Explorer.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

DELIVERY OF RECORD EXPORTS

Mr. Robert Bockstael (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board is setting new export records for grain. There is no doubt Canadian grain producers can meet world demand for grain. Where there is doubt is in the area of delivery systems, grave doubts that the railway system can handle grain shipments. The western transportation initiative is aimed at providing the rail infrastructure needed to allow grain producers in western Canada and producers of other goods and commodities to take advantage of export opportunities. The expansion of the western economy to meet its potential cannot happen unless an efficient rail system exists to meet demand. The western rail system could face huge bottlenecks and delays if the western transportation initiative were not implemented.

At the mid-point of the 1982-1983 crop year, the Canadian Wheat Board has sold 13.5 million tonnes of grain. That is up from the 11.9 million tonnes sold at the same time last year. At the end of the 1981-1982 crop year Canada set a record for exports of about 25 million tonnes. For Canadian grain exports to grow there must be certainty among buyers that Canada can deliver. For western producers to expand their activities there must be certainty that grain will be delivered. Expansion of the western rail system will mean both producers and buyers can be certain the grain will get through.

The Government of Canada will spend $3.7 billion over the next four years as part of the transport initiative.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

THE ECONOMY

RATIO BETWEEN GOVERNMENT DEFICIT AND UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, a review of the data reveals a distinct correlation between the Government's annual deficit and the rate of unemployment. In direct contravention of the outdated Liberal-NDP Keynesian economic doctrine, the relationship is directly proportional instead of indirectly proportional. For instance, in that fateful year 1968 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first took office, the deficit was $500 million with 350,000 unemployed. In 1975 the deficit was $5.5 billion and unemployment 700,000. In 1981 the deficit was $13.5 billion and unemployment 900,000. Now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is proposing a $26 billion deficit, which means unemployment, misery, and the threat of breadlines for over 2 million Canadians.

On December 8 last year Iona Campagnolo, President of the Liberal Party, stated in Charlottetown, "The time for public hatred of the Liberal Party has passed as Canadians adapt to their decline in affluence." Let me warn the Liberal Government that unless its members change their disastrous financial policies and reduce their obscene deficit, and consequent unemployment and human hardship, the decline in affluence witnessed to date will be benign in comparison with that yet to come.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ABANDONMENT OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAIL LINES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, recently the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has been making a big deal out of all the jobs which will flow out of the new railway investment to be made possible by the proposed changes in the Crow rate. Yet, only days after he announced his proposals, the CN hastened to announce that the massive lay-offs scheduled for May 1, 1983, were not going to be cancelled and that the Crow rate had nothing to do with the lay-offs.

Yesterday the CN was successful in obtaining permission from the CTC to abandon 20 per cent of its rail line in Prince Edward Island—another victory for the so-called "rationalization" of services, and a defeat for the real needs of real people and real communities. One is reminded of the false promises made in July, 1981, by the same Minister of Transport about the glorious new investment in transcontinental passenger equipment that the VIA cutbacks would make possible. Instead, existing transcontinental passenger equipment and service have been allowed to deteriorate, and no new investment in this kind of equipment has been made. VIA continues to preside over the death of passenger train service.

One can only hope, Madam Speaker, that it is not too late for the Government to show some enlightened leadership for a change when it comes to rail policy. The Minister could redeem himself by cancelling the lay-offs, by cancelling the abandonment of lines in P.E.I., by keeping the promises he made about transcontinental passenger service in 1981, and by adopting the NDP proposals on the Crow which would give us even more jobs without making an already struggling farm community pay for them, and without endangering a way of life on the Prairies.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

LOCKAGE FEES IMPOSED ON SMALL COMMERCIAL VESSELS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the very existence of 40 or more communities having ports on the shores of the Great Lakes and which cannot be serviced by full-sized vessels is being jeopardized. The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority initiated a policy to discourage the use of smaller ships using the Welland Canal, and imposed a lockage fee for such smaller commercial vessels which amounted to five times the rate for full-sized ships. This lockage fee, initiated in 1982 and doubled for the 1983 season, will, as the Seaway Authority intends, add an additional $3,500 to the round-trip cost of using the Welland Canal, and put many commercial shipping interests out of business.

Many shippers using larger vessels are dependent on the supply delivery of these small commercial vessels, and one port after another which cannot handle such larger vessels will close down, throwing more people out of work, and allowing ships and facilities to rot and depreciate—all of this following a disastroius shipping season when every advantage and opportunity is required, and when there is no pressing demand to increase the capacity of the Welland Canal. Maybe the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) will encourage the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority to take a second look at this unwarranted surcharge.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, an article in today's Globe and Mail states that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) has distributed a speech to residents of his constituency in which he endorses remarks made by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington). In a constituency report he repeats a statement made by the Hon. Member for Capilano, which says:

> Has it occurred to you that the capitalist system is being buried under the advancing forces of world socialism; that world leaders of these socialist forces are in control of the Canadian Government; that the hangman's knot for Uncle Sam's neck is being made in Canada—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I think it is important to point out to the Leader of the Opposition that surely we have reached the time where we have sufficient political maturity in this country that we can have our differences without making such misleading statements, which are divisive and untrue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, we on this side of the House believe in social justice within a free enterprise system; we believe in initiative and the work ethic; and we will stand up for it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DELAYS IN MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, recently I read a report from the Post Office outlining how great their service was and what a large percentage of letters get through on time. It is interesting that there was a flurry of advertising and reports indicating how well Canada Post was performing, just before the postage increases today.

Coincidentally, I received several letters from constituents which dampened my enthusiasm. In one letter from Fort Erie, a woman pointed out the amount of time letters took to arrive from various destinations to her home. A letter from Japan arrived in only eight days, while a letter from Buffalo, N.Y., just five miles away, took ten days, and a letter from Montreal took 19 days. In another letter a gentleman from Smithville pointed out to me that a cheque for a considerable sum had been mailed from Nova Scotia 21 days before its arrival in that town. In the interim, the payee lost over $400 interest.

I submit that, in the light of the current cost of mailing a letter, the postal administration must endeavour to provide more efficient service and to eliminate costly and useless advertising.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

COMPLAINTS ABOUT STANDARDS AND COST OF SERVICE

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, in an address given a year ago this month Mr. Michael Warren stated that the threefold objective of Canada Post was to attain financial self-sufficiency, better management-employee relations, and his number one priority, improved postal service.

Today we have a two-cent increase for mailing a letter in Canada, almost doubling the 17 cent rate in effect but 14 months ago, and a 6 per cent rise in the cost of mailing newspapers, advertising, and small parcels. The head of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers is calling for the postponement of these increases until management-employee relations improve, and service is maintained and expanded.

So what, then, has happened during the intervening year? As far as Dauphin riding is concerned, I have received an absolutely astounding series of complaints from constituents on every conceivable aspect of their so-called postal service. I have letters concerning postal rate increases, letters protesting the shortage of rental boxes, the withdrawal of Saturday rural route service, the systematic reduction of post office operating hours, threats of outright closure, and letters about possible forced retirement.

I have a resolution protesting present regulations pertaining to utility bills, petitions calling for the reinstatement of withdrawn postal facilities, and letters from municipal councils voicing the sentiments of just about every Canadian when they ask me just what exactly is Canada Post's present service policy? The response that my constituents and I—

MARINE TRANSPORT

NECESSITY FOR BRIDGE ABUTMENT PROTECTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, the day after the collapse of a bridge spanning a shipping lane in Halifax, on the St. Lawrence, or in Vancouver, families of those who will assuredly suffer the loss of loved ones will not ask why it was that the federal authority would not accept primary responsibility for bridge abutment protection; they will ask why it was not done.

Five bridges in Canada have been identified as "high risk", requiring protection against collision. To date no agreement to resolve this potentially disastrous situation is apparent. Tragic consequences of bridge collapses from Sweden to Japan, from Canada to Australia, from U.S. to India, are too well known for us to continue to ignore remedying this problem.

Already we have learned of the difficulties the Halifax-Dartmouth Bridge Commission experienced this year in obtaining full insurance coverage for Halifax's two harbour bridges, pier protection being cited as the principal reason. We know that 70 per cent of such accidents can be linked to human error. Ship traffic passing under the MacKay and MacDonald bridges in Halifax will increase this year to upwards of 1,800 transits.

I say to the Government, resolve this problem before God takes the matter out of our hands. Having said that, I appreciate the progress that has been made—

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

FINANCE

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON SEEKING ADDITIONAL BORROWING AUTHORITY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Will the Minister confirm that he said that in this House on October 27, as reported at page 20081 of Hansard:

> In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year, set out estimates for 1983-84 and future fiscal years, and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

Did the Minister say those words, did he mean those words, and will he now keep his promise?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, indeed I indicated my intention in that statement on October 27. That was my intention at the time. As the Hon. Member knows, however, his Party has been dragging its feet on passing the necessary legislation to deal with income tax amendments resulting from previous budgets. In the meantime, even though this Income Tax Bill has not been passed, it is important that the Government be provided with the necessary borrowing authority to fulfil its obligations. That is what I have done. It is not the first time that a very good intention has been sidetracked by Opposition tactics that delay adoption of good measures for the people of Canada. I hope that the measures will be passed soon by Parliament and then I will be able to introduce my budget.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that the Income Tax Bill has been before the House for only three and a half days since it was introduced on December 7. The Government has been dragging its feet. The Government has been producing and pushing forward legislation that has nothing to do with the problems of the country.

PROVISION OF FINANCIAL STATEMENT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister why only last week, when he was asked about the fiscal position of the country, he said that he would be coming in with an additional borrowing bill and at that time would give up to date figures? Did he mean what he said a week ago? If so, why has he changed his mind? When will the Minister come clean with Canada?

Mr. Crosbie: The answer is never.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if ridicule killed, there would be a lot of dead bodies on the Tory benches.

What I indicated was that if and when the borrowing authority bill is introduced, I will make a full financial statement as to the situation of the Government for 1982-83. I have said that. It is the Conservatives who yesterday prevented the adoption of the Bill on first reading and prevented me from doing it at eleven o'clock this morning as I would have if we had followed normal procedure.

If we can get to the borrowing authority Bill I will be very happy to come forward, at that time. I will be the first speaker on that Bill before anybody else is required to speak. I will give all information as to the excellent financial situation of the Government.

As far as the premise of the Hon. Member's question is concerned, I would remind him that the income tax Bill was introduced early in December, and then other very urgent legislation was presented to Parliament having to do with the six and five program. Again the Opposition filibustered those Bills day after day and we had to resort to time allocation to get them passed. The Hon. Member cannot take refuge in his argument. If the income tax Bill has not been considered more often, that is his Party's fault, and he should realize that.

DELAY IN PASSAGE OF INCOME TAX BILL

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that the Government controls House business. If it was important to get the income tax Bill through, why did he not bring it in for debate? The answer really is that, as a Parliament, we cannot be expected to deal with a borrowing authority bill unless we have received written projections of where we stand this year and where we are going next year, what the revenues are, what the expenses are, and what the national deficit amounts to.

An Hon. Member: What is your question?

Mr. Blenkarn: What is the deficit? Is $26 billion borrowing required or is it not? Where are we going?

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member said that Government controls the business of the House. The Government House Leader yesterday tried to get first reading of a Bill, which the Opposition prevented us from considering by resorting to all kinds of tactics, including challenging the rulings of Madam Speaker for two hours. That is on the record. It is quite obvious what the Opposition can do in the House to prevent it from dealing with the urgent affairs of the country. We had a very good example of this yesterday.

As far as the income tax Bill is concerned, I remind my hon. friend that for several months last summer the Parliamentary committee had the draft income tax Bill, which he himself participated a great deal in reviewing. The parliamentary Committee considered this Bill for several weeks, heard witnesses and made recommendations. I have taken most of them into account. Parliament has had plenty of opportunity to consider that legislation. Again, the Opposition should blame only itself it we are not further advanced.

As far as the last point raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, I have indicated that, as soon as we can get consideration of the borrowing authority Bill, I will be very happy to come forward with whatever figures I can in terms of fiscal year 1982-83. As far as fiscal year 1983-84 is concerned, I have to remind my hon. friend that I expect to be able to present a budget in which all the estimates for 1983-84 will be put forward.

CALL FOR INCREASED GASOLINE TAX

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday in a speech the President of Petro-Canada called for a tax increase through an increase in the price of gasoline. This morning on "Canada AM" the Minister suggested that a tax increase might be appropriate to control the size of his enormous budget. Would the Minister explain how these threats of tax increases will give Canadians any confidence whatsoever to go out to buy a new refrigerator, a new stove, or a new house?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the threats of tax increases do not come from me. The Hon. Member referred to a speech made by Mr. Hooper, I believe. I indicated that I have received many representations and suggestions, including some having to do with tax increases. At the same time I have to say—and this is what I indicated this morning—that we have to look at alternatives. If we do not want to increase the deficit, obviously we have to look at the possibility of increasing revenues. We cannot do like the Tories are trying to do all the time, having their pie and eating it too; is that the expression?

Some Hon. Members: Cake.

Mr. Lalonde: Having their cake and eating it too. Very simply, we are looking at reallocating expenditures, even compressing some expenditures if necessary. We did this last October, for instance, to the tune of $1.1 billion. Another alternative is to borrow the money to finance all programs necessary for the people of Canada, and the third one is to raise taxes. These are the three options. None have been eliminated and none are being retained particularly at the present time. I am working on the preparation of my budget. I am consulting very extensively with the people of Canada, I think more than has ever been done in the past. I hope that out of those consultations will develop a broad consensus on a budget my friend will be able to support.

Mr. Wilson: The Minister said this morning that he was thinking seriously of increasing taxes. Surely he has not heard that from the consultations he has gone through over the past few months. Surely the Minister knows that a tax increase will reduce jobs, will force lay-offs and more bankruptcies.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, since the reason Canadians are not spending money today is because they fear they will lose their jobs, how can the Minister justify his lack of understanding of the economic consequences of a tax increase just as we are coming out of the recession? Just when we need it least, he talks about it.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is not a problem of lack of understanding on my part. I suspect that it is a lack of hearing on the part of the Hon. Member. He tried to report what I said this morning—

Mr. Wilson: I saw it.

Mr. Lalonde: He says that he saw it. I advise him to listen rather than only see.

Mr. Wilson: I have listened too.

Mr. Lalonde: If he had listened he would have heard what I said. Frankly, if it pleases him, I could tell him that I am seriously considering a tax increase, seriously considering a tax decrease, seriously considering maintaining the deficit where it is, seriously considering increasing it, and seriously considering decreasing it. He can have his choice.

Mr. Andre: Talk about having your cake and eating it too.

Mr. Lalonde: When the budget comes, he will know which options I have retained.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I hope the Minister will seriously consider creating a few jobs for Canadians.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

INTERIM AGREEMENT WITH JAPAN ON LEVEL OF EXPORTS TO CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question on the same subject matter for the Minister of State for International Trade. Would he confirm a report out of Tokyo today that he has reached an agreement with Japanese auto producers, which incredibly involves two points? On the one hand, it will permit the Japanese to increase their export for cars into Canada by 16,000 more during the next six months than they exported into Canada in the last six months. On the other hand, the Minister has failed completely to get a Canadian content provision comparable to what the Americans achieved and announced yesterday in the United States, which will guarantee that one Japanese car company along will produce an additional 12,000 jobs for American workers.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I find the Hon. Member's interpretation of the results of our discussions in Japan to be rather unique.

Mr. Broadbent: And accurate.

Mr. Regan: Let me tell him why they are not accurate. First of all, we have obtained an interim agreement with the Japanese with reference to their forecast of shipments of cars to Canada for the first six months of this year. That is established at a figure which is 11,000 less than for the first six-month period of last year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: And it is without any prejudice to either side in our negotiations for the entire year.

Let me say secondly to the Hon. Member that the timing of my visit to Japan related to the quadrilateral meeting of the trade ministers of the European Community, of the United States, Canada, and Japan. But we felt in this country that it was important to have a six-month interim agreement with the Japanese while they were carrying on their negotiations with the Americans, because of the fact that otherwise there would be no check on how many cars would be coming in while the negotiations continued. To make the interim agreement was in the best interests of Canada. The one we have made is advantageous. Indeed, whereas what they are proposing to do with the Americans is to remove merely the numbers they had for the last fiscal years, ours is the more highly advantageous arrangement.

ACCESS TO CANADIAN MARKET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, first of all the Minister should know that in the auto industry they compare trends. I have pointed out to him that he has just permitted the Japanese to export 16,000 more cars in the coming six months than they exported to Canada in the last six months. If the Minister wants to do a year-over-year comparison he also knows that his agreement will permit them to export year-over-year many thousands more in the coming year compared with last year. I would like him to deny that.

Will he confirm that he has just agreed with the Japanese that they can have guaranteed access to 22 per cent of the Canadian market and that he has not obtained what the Americans obtained, a guarantee for production in Canada? Did the Minister not go to the Japanese and say to them, "If you want access to the Canadian market, that is fine; but if you are to sell to Canadians, you have to produce jobs for Canadians just like you do in the United States"?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, considering the home town and the city the Hon. Member represents, I would have thought that he would have a little better idea of trends in the automobile industry than he does. He referred to trends. If he wants to refer to the trends he will find that imports and shipment of cars in the first half of the year have always been greater than in the last half of the year. He should take his time to check on that and ask me on another day, if he wants.

Let me next say that he is applying some sort of new math of which we have not heard yet, when he tries to say that the agreement we entered into would mean more cars coming in during the year. We have made an agreement for the six-month period which is statistically for 11,000 less than for the same six-month period last year, the time of year that has always been the heaviest for shipments. Let him put that in his pipe and smoke it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Regan: Let me also say to the Hon. Member that this is an interim agreement. We wanted an interim agreement because the former agreement had expired on December 31. We are carrying on discussions with the Japanese in relation to industrial co-operation. We are most anxious to try to arrange to have a greater amount of manufacturing in the country. Let me point out that Toyota has already agreed to a wheel factory in B.C.—

• (1430)

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Regan: —but we are seeking much more.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, it will not be the first time that Liberals have applauded ignorance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: There are 14,000 auto workers on lay-off in Windsor, in Oakville, in Oshawa, in Toronto and in Quebec. They will not be amused by what the Minister has just agreed to in Japan.

PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, why was it that the Americans were able to get production agreements in the past for cars, production agreements in the past for trucks, and as recently as yesterday, and I repeat, just one firm alone, Toyota, has agreed to produce, in a joint venture with General Motors, 12,000 additional jobs, while the Minister goes to Tokyo and for all his talk comes back with zip all for Canadian workers?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, as I have said to the Hon. Member, we already have an agreement with the Japanese to establish a wheel factory in British Columbia. We do not consider that anything other than a beginning.

There is no question but that all Canadians must place a high priority on working out areas of industrial co-operation with the Japanese because they have shown themselves to be pretty successful in the automobile market. There is no question that the United States, with a market ten times as large as the Canadian market, has been able thus far with its muscle to achieve some movement, but not in relation to numbers—if you like to compare the numbers going into the American market.

Let me say in relation to the car workers who are laid off in this country that that they would be far more satisfied with the concerned effort I am making to bring down the number of cars imported than they are with the empty rhetoric which the Hon. Member is using.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETRO-CANADA

CHAIRMAN'S SPEECH ON ENERGY POLICY

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday in a speech in Toronto the Chairman of Petro-Canada recommended that the Government tear up its energy policy and move to world prices for crude oil. Given that Petro-Canada is a multi-billion dollar window on the industry as well as an instrument of public policy for the Government, can the Minister indicate whether the Chairman of Petro-Canada cleared his speech with the Government prior to giving it? If not, could the Minister tell the House what purpose was served by this speech since the Chairman of Petro-Canada surely could pick up the phone and pass on his views to the Government?

Was the Chairman of Petro-Canada flying a trial balloon for the Government or was he trying to initiate a change in public opinion so that the Government could abandon its election promises without suffering any of the fallout that might otherwise be the case?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can certify that the Chairman of Petro-Canada did not clear his speech with the Minister of Finance and, as far as I know, with no other Minister or Department.

Mr. Crosbie: He is a "hopper" of his own.

Mr. Lalonde: Petro-Canada is a Crown Corporation. It is operating at arm's length from the Government, and the Chairman of Petro-Canada is free to speak his mind on many subjects and he has done this in the past. There is nothing new there. Mr. Hopper came up with a suggestion. I said I would put it in in the "hopper" of suggestions I have received.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, the multi-billion dollar window on the industry does not seem to be serving that purpose. We know that the former Vice-President of Petro-Canada, Joel Bell, had a hand in writing the energy policy. It is safe to assume that the Chairman of Petro-Canada may have a hand in unwriting it.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF ENERGY TAX CREDIT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. With the exception of areas where a current price war exists, Canadian consumers are paying more at the pump for gasoline than are American consumers, even though American consumers are supposed to be paying world price. Will the Minister commit to this House that, should we adopt this suggestion from the billion-dollar-window on the industry to move to world prices, he will, simultaneously, being in an energy tax credit along the lines of that contained in the Crosbie budget of December, 1979, to ensure that low-income Canadians will not have to face the added burden of this increase in crude oil prices on top of the already excessive taxes, including, of course, the tax for Petro-Canada's empire building?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is still indulging in the same old rhetoric, and I am sorry to say that as time goes by, he does not seem to be getting any wiser. I can inform the House Member that his suggestion will be filed with all the other suggestions I have received and it will receive the same serious attention. When the time comes to bring down a budget in this House, the Hon. Member will see how I intend to deal with the matter he has raised.

DISASTERS

SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER"—MEASURES TO AVOID REPETITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. A year ago today the Ocean Ranger sank off the East Coast of Canada. Last Wednesday in this House when the Minister was asked by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants whether he could assure the House that the deficiencies found to be part of the cause of the tragedy had been corrected, that the proper safety procedures are being followed, and that the proper equipment for the men on oil rigs is available, the Minister said this:

> Madam Speaker, I cannot, and I am sorry about that.

Is that answer of the Minister correct, or can the Minister assure the House that proper safety procedures are being taken, that proper equipment for the men on oil rigs is available, and that the Government has taken steps to avert any repetition of this tragedy?

The answer given in the House last week is an indictment of the Government and of the Minister and, as a result, thousands of people are concerned about the fact that apparently nothing has been done in the last year. What is the Minister's response now? Could he tell the House what has been done, and can the people now rest easy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, may I tell my hon. friend that the responsibility for rigs comes under the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I think he is aware of that. Would he accept the proposition that I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to answer the question, because he has been following the matter very closely?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, no one doubts the seriousness of the subject matter to which the Hon. Member refers, and as a result of the seriousness of such a situation, the Government of Canada has taken very, very strong action with the co-operation of the Government of Newfoundland. As you are probably well aware, Madam Speaker, the Hickman Commission was set up. I might add that Mr. Justice Hickman is the Chief Justice of the Trial Division of the Newfoundland Supreme Court. They have those matters under consideration at the present time.

With regard to the report that was released in the United States, I think it premature for me to make comments on a report that is an interim one which will not be delivered to Canada for some three to four weeks.

REGULATIONS AND INSPECTION PROCEDURES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Last week the Minister of Transport did not say he knew nothing about the subject. He said on behalf of the Government that there were no proper safety procedures now being followed, there was no proper equipment for men on the rigs, and he could give no assurances. Now the Parliamentary Secretary gives us some historical kind of answer.

Can the Prime Minister or his Government give assurance that in the last year steps have been taken to change the regulations, to change the inspection procedures to ensure that safety comes first on the offshore, that the Government is now taking better inspection procedures, that more inspectors have been appointed, and will he have his Minister come before a House of Commons Committee to explain what the Government has done, or have 12 months passed—

Mr. Lalonde: It was on CBC this morning.

Mr. Crosbie: —with nothing done to protect people who work on the offshore?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I find it somewhat ironic that the Hon. Member for St. John's West would wait for a year to go by before raising this particular subject matter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: If he had a real interest at heart he would have come before the Standing Committee on Natural Resources and Public Works and made that question known to the Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: What is the answer, you turkey?

Mr. Dingwall: To be very brief, the answer is yes.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TEST AND EVALUATION PROGRAM

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The former Secretary of State for External Affairs, now Minister of Justice, confirmed on several occasions last year both in the House—notably on March 18 and April 29—and in the Standing Committee on March 24, that Canada had agreed in principle to the testing of the U.S. air launched Cruise missile. Although the former Minister regretted it had become public knowledge when he said in Committee that he was "indeed disturbed at the leak of this matter", he still did confirm the agreement. Can the Prime Minister assure the House that Canada can get out of this Cruise testing deal with the U.S., thereby bringing hope to millions of Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not want to fall into the trap of words that the Hon. Member may be unintentionally setting. It is not a matter of getting out of the agreement to test the Cruise. There has been no agreement to test the Cruise.

Since yesterday's exchange with the Hon. Member's Leader I have had the documents verified, the Cabinet decision verified and the exchange with the U.S. verified. Indeed, we have talked of weapons systems testing. I concede, and I did yesterday, that people know, we assume, and Cabinet Ministers assume, that the United States will ask us to test the Cruise. But the purpose of the Cabinet decision was to make it a two-stage process so that we would have an umbrella agreement on the testing of weapons systems, so that we would be able to refer to the umbrella agreement in the future to ensure that certain conditions were met, such as Canadian knowledge, Canadian participation in the scientific knowledge of any tests, Canadian ability to control or interrupt the testing, and so on.

I repeat yesterday's answer. After verification, I can only find an agreement in Cabinet to authorize the Secretary of State for External Affairs to enter into negotiations for a weapons system testing, and the statements of the then Secretary of State, if looked at carefully, indicate that he was talking of a process and that there is a second stage, which is the Cruise. That second stage has not been reached in Cabinet decisions.

Miss Jewett: Either the Prime Minister is being disingenuous or he is saying that his former Secretary of State for External Affairs was constantly misleading the House and the Standing Committee. It is either one or the other. Time and again he confirmed the existence of the agreement.

REQUEST THAT TESTING NOT PROCEED

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, the former Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie, said on April 29, 1982, as reported at page 16751 of Hansard:

Are we to break our agreement with the U.S. on testing of the Cruise missile in Canada?

They have all said that there was an agreement. I ask the Prime Minister now is it possible for the Government of Canada to call this deal off? Is it possible to call off the deal and, as I said, thereby give hope to so many Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can only repeat my previous answer to the Hon. Member. There has been no cabinet decision to test the Cruise. There has been a Cabinet decision to authorize the Secretary of State to negotiate a weapons system testing.

Miss Jewett: No.

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. lady says no. She knows more about Cabinet decisions than I.

Miss Jewett: I believe MacGuigan.

Mr. Trudeau: Then, if she believes MacGuigan, we will wait until he enters the House and the hon. lady can ask him her question.

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET BRITISH COLUMBIA DELEGATION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He will be aware that there is a delegation of responsible fishermen from the West Coast representing the PTA and the Federation. They have been seeking a meeting with him and I hope that the Minister will be able to see them before they leave. They came here at their own expense.

One of the questions they want to ask him concerns the relationship between the Pearse Report, the buy-back program in the Pearse Report, and the restructuring and rationalization of the fleet as proposed in the Cruikshank Report. Is he prepared to make any comment in the House today on that particular aspect of the matter?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I met with the Pacific Fishery Advisory Council, and all the different associations were present. They gave me their views and asked me for some time to study the whole implication of that Report before making their position known. I readily agreed to their offer.

My Deputy Minister met with them about two weeks ago. I will be in B.C. myself for a few days, beginning next Friday, hopefully to meet with the Advisory Council to get their views on that issue and other issues that are major topics in the Pearse Report. I will be there within a few days.

With respect to the Hon. Member's question about the delegation, I will certainly study that matter.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The Minister will know that they have been seeking a meeting with him. They came at their own expense. He has already been in trouble in British Columbia and I am sure that he does not want to get into that sort of trouble again. It is much better that he meet the peole who come to see him than having to go out to see them.

REQUEST THAT CANADA-UNITED STATES SALMON FISHERY AGREEMENT BE TABLED

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Perhaps the Minister would be prepared to make some comment on the bilateral agreement between Canada and the United States on the salmon fisheries question. Will he agree to have that particular agreement tabled and examined in the parliamentary committee?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I do not know to what incident the Hon. Member is referring. If he is referring to a specific incident, I should be grateful if he would let me know what his own position would have been, instead of making insinuations. As far as the salmon treaty with the United States is concerned, I am pleased to report that negotiators for our two countries have already initialled the agreement to be submitted to both governments some time during the next few months. At that time, the two governments will, of course, have to take a position on the matter. As far as Canada is concerned, I can inform the House that the initialled document seems to be fair to both parties, and I have already said as much to the United States Ambassador. I also hope this stage of the confirmation of the agreement will be submitted to Cabinet some time during the next few months.

HOUSING

REPORT OF MINISTER'S ALLEGED STATEMENT ON RENTAL LEVELS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. Last week, in one of his musings, the Minister publicly suggested that rents should be based on 25 per cent to 30 per cent of gross income—income before taxes. The Minister can deny that he said it, but it was reported in the press.

Given the fact that 40 per cent of householders in the country are renters and that the average rent in Canada today is approximately 17 per cent to 18 per cent of gross income, this would mean a massive rent increase. More important, it would discriminate against low income families because the Minister mentioned nothing about shelter allowance. Was the Minister correctly quoted, and perhaps he can give us the advantages of his musings in the House?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as a former journalist perhaps I have the humility of saying that there are times when journalists get their writing garbled and, in fact, misrepresent what someone has said in a rather lengthy interview. This was the case.

• (1450)

Under no circumstances did I advocate that people should pay rent on the basis of their income. There was discussion on the issue of availability of rental units, and I did reflect to the journalist those reasons which the industry had given me for not going ahead and building as many rental units as we might need in the country. We then went on to discuss rent control, and I indicated very clearly that this was a provincial jurisdiction, that it was not my judgment to make, but that surely there could be a way to help people concerning affordability of housing, that is, to help those who perhaps were paying more than 30 per cent of their income, as we had done in the mortgage renewal plan that my predecessor brought in some time ago.

I flatly denied in Vancouver having advocated what the Hon. Member represents in his question. I flatly deny it again, and I am simply saying that we will try to give Canadians as many houses and apartments that are affordable as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I was merely quoting from a story in the Toronto Star, which is not in the habit of misquoting Government Ministers.

Some Hon. Members: Since when?

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

INCREASE IN DIRECTORS' FEES

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, concerning the subject of low-income families, the Minister just voted in this House on a provision to hold Family Allowances and Old Age Pensions to the six and five formula. How can he reconcile that with a 200 per cent increase in directors' fees for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation? Directors' fees have now risen from $150 a day to $450 a day.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: How can the Minister reconcile that with a Government policy which would hold families and old age pensioners in this country to an iniquitous six and five formula?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, on the first question, I checked the tape of the interview and I can assure the Hon. Member that there were no gaps of 18 minutes or less on the tape that I checked. So, I very clearly stand by the statement that I made concerning the whole rent control issue.

Concerning the other matter, the new fee schedule was submitted in April of 1982, on April 28 to be precise. I might say to Hon. Members that the directors of CMHC have not received any kind of increase in their fees since 1946. I suspect that Hon. Members of his House have seen substantial increases in their own salaries over a period of 37 years.

I might say that the limited number of directors on this board, dealing with very large amounts of money, make them entitled to the normal fees of officers of other Crown corporations who, I suspect, in many cases discharge less responsibilities than these directors do. It was a matter of judgment, but I also think—and in this I appeal to all Members of the House—that it may very well have been a matter of fairness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

WEST COAST HERRING ROE FISHERY

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Government is proposing a scheme on the West Coast which will allow one seine vessel to fish two areas under the herring roe fishery this coming March. The effect of that proposal will be to throw 200 fishermen, crewmen on those seine vessels, out of work.

In view of the representation by the Native Brotherhood of B.C. and the UFAWU, both organizations representing crewmen on those same vessels, will the Minister reject proposals coming up through his Department and, indeed, protect those 200 jobs in a Province which already sees 250,000 people out of work? Will the Minister protect those jobs, or is this the first phase of implementing the Pearse Report which calls for a reduction by 50 per cent in the number of fishermen in the B.C. fishing industry?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I will certainly very carefully study the representations of the Hon. Member, but surely he should realize that when we shorten the fishing season or reduce the number of entrants, participants in the fishing industry, it is precisely in order to manage the resource in a responsible fashion. Sure, we could allow as many fishermen to fish as he would like, but next year I could not perform miracles and make the species reproduce, and then, of course, we would have to face the consequences.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): This is the parable of the loaves and the fishes.

Mr. De Bané: We are to manage the resources in the most responsible fashion possible, and I try to have input from every user group, every participating group.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF TRIBAL COUNCILS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I am sure the Minister is aware of the memo released earlier this month which was approved by the Prime Minister, recommending that the Liberal strategy be to "reduce native expectation, particularly as it relates to the Constitution conference". Examples of this policy abound, ranging from the termination of the megaproject impact fund to the termination of the $345 million for Canadian economic development.

With the Constitutional conference just a month from today, I wonder if the Minister would explain why yesterday, at the parliamentary hearings into Indian self-government, evidence was brought forth that the Minister plans and fully intends to reduce, if not eliminate, funds to tribal councils. Would he explain why he is doing that at this time? Would he also explain the policy of the Government concerning the Constitutional conference? Is it completely to undermine it, and the confidence of native people in this country, before it happens?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the answer is no to both questions. There is no intention to obliterate funding for tribal councils. As the Hon. Member should know, having spoken with some of the Indian leadership, and certainly the head of the AFN, we are adopting a positive attitude toward the Constitutional conference and, in fact, Indian leaders who were present at the ministerial conference have stated so publicly. Maybe the Hon. Member has chosen to ignore those statements.

IDENTIFICATION OF DIRECTORS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question directed by the Hon. Member for St. John's East to the Minister of Public Works. Can he confirm to the House that among those Members of the Board of Directors of CMHC who have come in for this Liberal largesse, based on the new Liberal math, in which 6 per cent and 5 per cent equal 200 per cent, are included Frank J. Callaghan, President of the Liberal Association of Prince Edward Island; Sylvia Sutherland, a defeated Liberal candidate in Peterborough during the 1980 election; Christine McKee from the University of Manitoba, ombudswoman and associate of the Minister of Employment and Immigration when he taught in Winnipeg; and, rounding out the list, Jacques Plante, President of the Quebec City Chamber of Commerce, and Ben Wosk, a furniture dealer in Vancouver, prominent contributors to the Liberal Party of Canada? Are those the recipients of the Liberal largesse, a 200 per cent increase, despite the Government's six and five program which the Cabinet stated on repeated occasions would be applicable to all Crown corporations and agencies?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I again underline the fact that the submission was on April 28, 1982, which was before the six and five program was initiated.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. LeBlanc: Madam Speaker, I have sufficient respect for people who support the other side not to think that just being Members of that Party or contributing to it—although I question the wisdom of that—should disqualify such people. I have met the members of the board and I know that they are very hard working. I know that they are devoted to working for housing. I make no apologies for that fact.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: An interpretation of that answer is a confirmation that all of the five individuals named by me are devoted Members of the Liberal Party of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Does that exclude them?

Mr. Nielsen: No, it certainly does not exclude them, but I suggest to Hon. Members opposite that the trough is getting pretty full.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRAVELLING EXPENSES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, does this same Liberal approach—

Mr. Crosbie: Headed by "Oinker" Macdonald.

Mr. Nielsen: —attempt to justify expenses of $250 for travelling three hours or less, and $450 for three hours or more? Is that a fringe benefit to the new math of the Liberal Party?

• (1500)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, as I said before, the salaries of the members of the board had not been increased since 1946. The Hon. Member, the Acting Leader of the Opposition, has seen more increases in his last 37 years. What the Hon. Member forgets to point out in his long question is that, in their own right, members of this board are qualified Canadians and, frankly, I do not see why having one political faith or another should disqualify deserving and competent Canadians.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CROSBY—APPLICATION OF PERMANENT AND PROVISIONAL STANDING ORDERS

Madam Speaker: I have a question of privilege in the name of the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby).

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, as you know and as I indicated to you in my letter, the question of privilege relates to the notice required for the summoning of meetings of standing committees. Since I raised the question originally in this House this morning I have spoken with our House Leader, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), who indicates that some arrangements are being made that may resolve this problem. If I could, I wish to defer the question of privilege to a later date, or if you require I could withdraw it altogether.

Madam Speaker: I would not require it. It is up to the Member to judge whether he needs to raise his question of privilege now that some arrangement has been set up by the different Parties. As a matter of fact, I think that is the better resolution to that particular problem as far as I can see from the notice which the Hon. Member had the courtesy to send me.

CANNES FILM FESTIVAL

Question No. 1,325—Mr. Friesen:

1. (a) What individuals went to the Cannes Film Festival in 1980 at the expense of the Canadian taxpayer (b) for what purpose were they sent (c) what were their personal allowable expenses per day?

2. What was the total cost to the taxpayer of Canadian participation at the Festival and how was the money spent?

3. Did Mr. Michael McCabe attend the Festival and, if so (a) what were his (i) personal allowances (ii) other allowable executive expenses (b) what was the total amount spent by Mr. McCabe?

4. (a) What is the name of Mr. McCabe's accountant (b) did he attend the Festival at the expense of the taxpayer and, if so (i) for what reason (ii) what was the cost?

5. (a) On what date was Mr. McCabe employed by CFDC as Executive Director (b) how many weeks of paid holiday did he receive annually (c) since his appointment as Executive Director, how many weeks was he away from his office and not on official business?

6. What credit cards were issued to Mr. McCabe in the name of CFDC and what were the credit limits?

7. Was Mr. McCabe asked to tender his resignation as Executive Director of CFDC and, if so, by whom?

8. What is the agreed cost of Mr. McCabe's severance pay?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of the Secretary of State, the Canadian Film Development Corporation and the National Film Board as follows:

In so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned:

1. (a) Mr. Ian McLaren—Director of the Cultural Industries Division: Mr. Jean Lefebvre—Chief of the Film Festivals

Bureau of the above-mentioned division; Mrs. Jacqueline Brodie—assistant-chief of the Film Festivals Bureau.

Under contract to the Film Festivals Bureau: Mr. Gilles Carle, director; Ms. Carole Laure and Mr. Lewis Furey, stars of the Canadian film in competition; Ms. Micheline Lanctôt, director of the Canadian Film selected for screening in the Director's Fortnight; Ms. Darcy Dunton, press officer assistant; Mr. Michael Spencer, Canadian member of the Cannes jury.

(b) (i) Mr. McLaren to meet foreign government officials involved in film and film policy, and to negotiate a possible film co-production agreement with Australia.

(ii) Mr. Lefebvre, Mrs. Brodie to co-ordinate the Canadian presence at the festival events, to meet with film festival directors from around the world, to do cultural promotion for Canadian film productions, to organize and manage the participation of the Canadian films selected for showing by the festival and to help promote these films through the various events connected with the official screenings of the Canadian films in the festival, to promote Canadian films with the (approximately) 1,000 members of the world film press in attendance.

(iii) Mr. Carle, Ms. Lanctôt, Ms. Laure and Mr. Furey were brought to Cannes to help promote their respective films. It should be noted here that the Festivals Bureau provides this service as a matter of policy, only for Canadian films which are selected for showing by major film festivals. The bureau deals exclusively with these films, and with films which are entered in the film market. (Participation in any film market is on an inscription basis. Anyone can participate. But participation in festivals per se, is only possible after a complex selection process by the festival organizers and overseen by the Festivals Bureau.)

Ms. Dunton worked under contract for the Bureau as press assistant.

The Bureau paid the travel expenses (Montreal-Cannes, return) of Mr. Spencer. The festival paid his expenses at Cannes.

(c) Department of the Secretary of State employees' per diem at Cannes were those allowed by Treasury Board Travel Directives for Government employees on travel status in France, 150 francs per day (approximately $40), plus ¼ of this amount for incidentals.

Contractees were paid their travel (economy class) to Cannes. (For Mr. Carle, Ms. Laure and Mr. Furey, only the Paris-Cannes, return portion was paid), plus five days at government travel per diem rates, plus their hotel rooms, if they accepted to stay at a government-rented hotel, Ms. Dunton was paid a flat fee of $3,000, covering her travel, her expenses and her salary. Hotel rooms were rented by the Bureau in December and were paid for by the Bureau.

2. It should be noted that governmental costs at Cannes were shared by the Film Festivals Bureau (which handled the participation of Canadian films in the festival) and the CFDC (which handled the marketing and sales promotion of Canadian films).

Total cost to the Film Festivals Bureau was $117,950 which breaks down as follows:

(1)	Selection process:	$25,246
(2)	Promotion and publicity:	59,281
(3)	Travel (staff & contractees):	13,001
(4)	Administration, rentals, shipping, etc.	20,422

On the date this question was asked, all costs on this exercise have not yet been received nor processed by Finance. Costs stated here, however, are true costs as evaluated by the Cannes administrator.

3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8. To be answered elsewhere.

In so far as the Canadian Film Development Corporation is concerned:

1. (a) and (b) The following people went to Cannes at the Corporation's expense:

Michel Vennat, Chairman (first week)
Michael McCabe, Director
Pierre Thibeault, Acting Director (second week)
Jacques Dick, Administrative Director
Ken Rosenberg, Artistic Director (first week)
Mireille Gousse, secretary
Nicole Boisvert, secretary
David Novek, advertising and public relations officer.

All these people attended the festival as representatives of the Corporation to promote the dissemination and sale of Canadian films and direct CINEMA CANADA operations. The Corporation's chief administrative officer, Mr. Jacques Dick, went to Cannes to administer the Film Festivals Bureau's and CFDC's budgets.

(c) For support staff: $75 per day. Officers are reimbursed on presentation of vouchers.

N.B. Cannes is not a film festival; it is four world-class film events taking place together. Each of these events functions autonomously and is directed by separate organizations.

The four Cannes events are:

(1) The Festival competition and the "Un certain regard Section";
(2) The Directors' Fortnight;
(3) The Critics' Film Week;
(4) The Film Market.

These four separate events constitute the Cannes Festival. It is attended by 30,000 to 40,000 film professionals (producers, distributors, exhibitors, directors, film press, actors) from around the world. Among these are approximately 2,000 film press persons, sent there by their newspapers, magazines, radio and TV stations. The Cannes Film Festival is the annual film convention of the World.

Cannes is the first event in the festival year. Many of the preparation costs (especially those attached to the selection and pre-selection costs) serve all through the year. These costs are charged to Cannes because they are initiated in time for Cannes.

For the first time ever, in 1980, a Canadian feature film was selected to open the Festival. Producers and countries of the film selected to open or close the Festival must "host" and therefore pay the cost of the Festival's opening or closing reception. The Film Festivals Bureau obtained Treasury Board approval (No. 770954, May 20, 1980) to pay its share of this extraordinary expense.

2. The Corporation's expenses totalled $230,945 broken down as follows:

Rental of stands, equipment and so forth	$ 36,245
Travel and shipment of goods	46,700
Promotion and advertising	145,000
Rental of a cinema	3,000
	$230,945

3. (a) (i) and (ii) $2,500 (meals and room), $5,000 (hospitality expenses). (b) $7,500.

4. (a) Not known to the Corporation, (b) not at the expense of the Corporation.

5. (a) June 1, 1978, (b) four weeks per year, (c) To be consistent with the provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act Part IV we are not providing personal information.

6. Visa-Chargex. Credit limit: $3,000.

7 and 8. See Part 5 (c) above.

In so far as the National Film Board is concerned:

1. (a) F. Macerola—Deputy Government Film Commissioner, A. Lafond—Area Representative, Europe (Paris). (b) Promotion. (c) Canadian Government Travel Allowances for Paris plus necessary hospitality.

2. For transportation, meals, accommodation, representation, hospitality, advertising, shipping of promotional material, etc.—$12,120.

3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8. To be answered elsewhere.

CANADA-POLAND BILATERAL AGREEMENTS

Question No. 3,363—Mr. Kushner:

1. During the past five years, how many bilateral and multilateral agreements were reached in which both the Canadian and Polish Governments were signatories and, in each case (a) what was the nature and duration of the agreement (b) which departments and/or agencies were involved in both Governments (c) what was the cost to the Government?

2. During the past two years, what was the total quantity and value of (a) food (b) clothing (c) medical supplies that were sent to Poland by both the Government and other groups and organizations to alleviate shortages of such goods there?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) and (b) During the period 1976 to 1982, Poland and Canada were signatories to the following agreements:

Bilateral

1.	Air Transport Agreement	May 14, 1976 (Transport Canada)
2.	Long Term Grain Agreement	November 25, 1976 (Canadian Wheat Board)
3.	Long Term Grain Agreement	April 19, 1977 (Canadian Wheat Board)
4.	Long Term Grain Agreement	October 4, 1979 (Canadian Wheat Board)
5.	Agreement on Mutual Fisheries Relations	May 14, 1976 (Fisheries & Oceans Canada)
6.	Agreement on Mutual Fisheries Relations	May 14, 1982 (Fisheries & Oceans Canada)

Multilateral

A.	Convention on the Prohibition of Military or any other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques	December 10, 1976 (External Affairs)
B.	Geneva (1979) Protocol to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade	June 30, 1979 (External Affairs)

(c) It would be impossible to calculate the cost (if any) of the multilateral agreements and the air transport agreement.

The fisheries treaties give allocations of fish in Canadian waters to Polish vessels in return for purchases by Poland of Canadian fish products. As a result of Poland's current economic difficulties, it is unable to buy the amount of fish products which both sides would prefer. However, in 1982 Poland was obligated to buy products worth $1,000,000.

As for the long term grain agreements, the 1979 treaty expired at the end of 1982. It provided government-guaranteed credit for the purchase of up to 1.5 million tons of grain during each of the three years of the agreement.

2. The Government of Canada has made a contribution of $500,000 to the International Red Cross in response to its appeal for food, medicine and clothing for Poland and has also provided two grants totalling $300,000 to the Canadian-Polish Congress to assist its relief efforts. Unfortunately, the Government has no way of knowing the total quantity and value of food, clothing and medical supplies sent to Poland by private organizations and groups.

EDC ALLOCATION TO CESKOSLOVENSKA OBCHODNI BANKA OF PRAGUE

Question No. 4,285—Mr. MacKay:

1. What amount was allocated to the Ceskoslovenska Obchodni Banka of Prague, Czechoslovakia by the Export Development Corporation in (a) 1981 (b) 1982?

2. What products were sold to Czechoslovakia by Canadian firms under this allocation and, in each case, what were the amounts involved?

3. What sales to Czechoslovakia were made by Velan Inc. of Montreal in (a) 1981 (b) 1982 and what were the products and the dollar values?

4. In (a) 1981 (b) 1982, did Velan Inc. sell any valves to Strojexport of Prague, Czechoslovakia and, if so (i) what kind (ii) what are the valves customarily used for (iii) were the same kind of valves or similar valves manufactured in the past by Velan Inc. for the benefit of the United States Navy?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): 1. EDC allocations to the Ceskoslovenska Obchodni Banka of Prague totalled $3.013 million in 1981 and $178,691 to date in 1982.

2. In 1981, a gravimatic casting system (EDC financing—$1.586 million) and valves ($1.427 million) were sold to Czechoslovakia. This year, add-on financing to the same valve transaction was concluded ($178,691).

3. Velan Inc. was the company involved in the above mentioned EDC valve transactions. The dollar value of the contract is a commercial confidential matter that is obtainable only with direct permission from the firm.

4. Valves were involved, but their end use is unknown. A technical comparison between the type of valves sold to Czechoslovakia and to the United States is a matter to be dealt with by the makers of the product.

EDC FINANCING ASSISTANCE TO VELAN INC.

Question No. 4,341—Mr. MacKay:

Since 1967, was the Government involved in any way in sales to Communist countries of products manufactured by Velan Inc. of Montreal and, if so, in each case, what was the (a) nature of the involvement (b) value of each sale (c) country of destination of the products (d) nature of the products and what were the products customarily used for?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): In addition to providing its customary trade development assistance to Velan Inc., the Export Development Corporation (EDC) has provided financing as follows:

Date	Amount	Country
May, 1977	3,876,935	U.S.S.R.
April, 1978	5,706,900	U.S.S.R.
March, 1979	7,757,612	U.S.S.R.
September, 1981	1,427,000	Czechoslovakia
February, 1982	178,691	Czechoslovakia
June, 1982	4,700,000	Hungary
July, 1982	1,800,000	Czechoslovakia

There was no EDC financing prior to 1977 for sales to Eastern Europe.

In all instances the products exported were valves. There is no information regarding the end use to which the valves were put.

PERSONS EMPLOYED BY CBC NEWS

Question No. 4,637—Mr. Beatty:

1. How many persons are employed full time by CBC news within Canada?

2. How many of these persons are not Canadian citizens and, of these, how many are not landed immigrants?

3. What are the descriptions of the jobs filled within CBC news by persons who are neither Canadian citizens nor landed immigrants?

4. What is the policy of CBC news covering the hiring of persons who were not Canadian citizens nor landed immigrants prior to their employment?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. English Services Division: 548
French Services Division: 289
Ottawa Area: 30

2. Ten of these employees are not Canadian citizens. All ten are landed immigrants.

3. Not applicable. See answer to Part 2 above.

4. The Corporation's policy, covering those occasions when qualified persons are hired who are not Canadian citizens, is to ensure that the provisions of the Immigration Act are respected.

INVESTIGATION OF AUTO ACCIDENT IN MOSCOW

Question No. 4,653—Mr. MacKay:

1. Was there an independent investigation by Canadian authorities of the alleged automobile accident of December 4, 1982 in Moscow in which an employee of the Canadian Embassy, Mr. Michel Leroux, had died and, if so, what was the result?

2. Who was the owner of the automobile involved in the accident?

3. Did the Canadian Embassy request the Soviet authorities to have access to the automobile after the accident for the purpose of an examination and, if so, what was the response received?

4. Was the automobile examined by Canadian authorities after the accident and, if so, what was the result of the examination?

5. What was the title of Mr. Leroux's job in Moscow and what were the duties involved?

6. Was an autopsy performed on Mr. Leroux and, if so (a) by whom (b) what was the cause of death?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes Investigation of the accident was undertaken by officials of the Canadian Embassy, Moscow. Witnesses to the accident were interviewed, conditions of the road at the time of the accident were surveyed and an examination of the car was undertaken by competent Canadian officials. The finding of the investigation was that Mr. Leroux's death was the result of an accident.

2. Mr. Michel Leroux.

3. Yes. Soviet authorities complied with this request allowing the Canadian mechanic at our Embassy in Moscow to carry out a thorough examination of the vehicle in question.

4. Yes. The vehicle was examined on a number of occasions by Canadian officials. While damage to the vehicle as a result of the accident was extensive, the car was found to be mechanically sound. It was determined that the accident occurred as the result of icy conditions on the road where the accident took place.

5. Mr. Leroux was a clerk with a diplomatic designation as attaché. He worked in the consular section of the Canadian Embassy and was performing clerical duties associated with the family reunification program between Canada and the U.S.S.R.

6. Yes. (a) The Canadian Embassy doctor, who is a British physician attached to the British Embassy, examined Mr. Leroux immediately following the accident and confirmed his death. An autopsy was subsequently carried out by a Soviet pathologist. (b) The finding was that Michel Leroux died instantly as the result of injuries sustained in the car accident.

MAHARISHI MAHESH YOGI

Question No. 4,674—Mr. Friesen:

Did the Government provide any assistance to the World Plan for Creative Intelligence, the Transcendental Meditation Movement or any other group under the direct or indirect authority of the Maharishi Mahesh Yogi and, if so (a) what was the nature of the assistance and on what date was it given (b) what were the names and addresses of the groups which received assistance?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): In so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned: No. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, prior to the lunch break I was making the point that I had a constituent who had been employed by CP Rail and also had a farm. When his employment ended at CP Rail we were still not able to convince Revenue Canada that in fact his vocation was farming only. I think it is important for the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières)—and I wish he were here—to understand that there are judgments being made by Revenue Canada personnel, judgments which I believe have nothing to do with the Income Tax Act.

For instance, this person whose only income now is farming was told by Revenue Canada that, because his farm was not viable, he therefore was not a farmer; but they agreed that he had no other income other than from farming. They asked me the question: If the farm is not viable, how could he remain on the farm? I told them that if they understood anything about farming in previous years they would know that he and his family had invested in the farm and obviously had not needed the farm income to support themselves on a day by day basis, but now that the only income they had was from farming, they obviously would invest less in the farm and have to take more of the profit for their day to day expenses. That, to me, seems a rather obvious approach, but to this day Revenue Canada officials have not accepted that approach.

In fact, I think there is a real concern when auditors go into these places to audit. I contact the auditor and the auditor says: "I do not have to speak to you; you have to speak to someone else in the Department." I suggest when Members of Parliament phone on behalf of their constituents, having been authorized to do so by their constituents, that that is not the approach that people who are getting paid by the public purse should take. Yet that is the attitude they do take.

I am sure that every Member in this House knows of cases where a spirit of decency and fairness has not been shown by Revenue Canada personnel. The regulations are now so complicated that average, ordinary Canadians who cannot expend large sums on tax preparation are concerned that the tax Department as such is seen more as confiscatory; that is, confiscating income and investments that people have rather than be fair to them.

I had another case concerning a gentleman who had sold a small service station and had to repossess it, and then subsequently sold it again. He was taxed on the capital gain from the service station that he had to repossess and then re-billed, because after he had sold the service station a second time, when he got the cash he bought averaging annuities, RRSPs, but did not do so after the first sale because he had no cash. He had not received any cash as the buyer defaulted. Yet Revenue Canada levied tax on a capital gain from the first sale although no revenues were realized.

What I am saying is that there has to be a different approach. I am not saying that people should not pay their taxes, but I am saying that many of the Revenue Canada people operate on the basis that a taxpayer must prove his innocence rather than they must prove the case that their assessment is correct. I believe it is true that many of them operate on that basis.

While we can argue about details and regulations and legislation, back on the farm and on the street where average Canadians are trying to make a living people have today a fear of the manner in which Revenue Canada assesses taxes on income earned. It seems to be very quick to add income and very slow to look at legitimate expenses. That raises this question. I wonder to what extent Revenue Canada has reveived instructions from this Government to try to recover whatever money it can because of the national deficit. As I speak to Revenue Canada people, their attitude to my mind is one not of being fair to the taxpayer but rather that it is seen much more as a collection agency against the taxpayer.

• (1510)

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, as you know, at this stage of the debate on second reading of Bill C-139 to amend the Income Tax Act we have but ten minutes to indicate our views on the legislation and all its ramifications for the people of Canada. It is no wonder that with that kind of time limitation we are accused by people like J. Lyman MacInnis, President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario, of being less than thorough in our review of legislation as individual Members of this House of Commons. In fact, in speaking to a group in Toronto—where else would it be—the gentleman said this:

> The greater tragedy is this. There are 284—

He does not even know how many Members of Parliament are elected in Canada.

> —284 men and women sitting in the House of Commons in Ottawa who continue to enact this kind of legislation.

He is referring to the Income Tax Act of Canada.

> Don't try to tell me that these people understand what they're passing. My guess is there aren't more than a handful who have any idea what the real effect is of the income tax laws they enact. We obviously had one Minister of Finance who didn't know.

I think we all know he is talking about the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) and his disastrous November 12, 1981 budget. The fact is that all of us in this House of Commons are tarred with the same brush, this brush of not caring, not studying the laws we enact and not taking action to prevent the passing in this Chamber of laws that will have unfortunate ramifications for the people of Canada.

I say that because that situation is entirely unfair. Members on the Opposition side do not have the opportunity for briefings from Government officials. They do not have the background material and support, the statistical analyses that are given to Members of the Government when they present Bills, but we all have to share in the blame. That is why we stand on this side of the House of Commons, speaker after speaker, and protest the manner in which this legislation is being run through the House of Commons and the manner in which it will be implemented later on by a bunch of uncaring bureaucrats in the Department of National Revenue, who will see this not as a method to finance the massive undertakings of the Government of Canada, but simply as a method to extract money from the people of Canada. There will be no humanity to it. There will be no philosophy to it. It will simply be the mechanical process of taking the money out of the hands of the Canadian people. That is why I want to dwell very briefly on the philosophy of this legislation.

In income tax laws and laws that extract revenue from the taxpayers, there is no philosophy. That is a mistake that the then Minister of Finance made in this House in his budget speech in November, 1981. He talked of equity. You do not talk of equity in relation to tax measures. There is no equity. Equity would indicate that no money should be taken from the people of Canada in the form of taxation. The money should be raised in other ways that do not require individuals to contribute in a direct way.

The fact of the matter is that we need money to finance necessary and essential programs. That is what is called into question in these budgets every day in this House of Commons. The Government of Canada is extracting money from the people of Canada to pay for programs that are not necessary. It is extracting money from the people of Canada to pay for programs that are unessential and designed and intended simply to keep the Government of Canada in power. They are programs that the people of Canada do not need and cannot afford. The tax process goes on and on and there is no philosophy, no principle, involved in it.

The Minister of Finance in November, 1981 tried to pretend that there was a principle involved. He said that he was going to bring equity into the tax system. I have already explained that it is simply a method of getting dollar bills into the national treasury. It has no connection with equity.

Maybe in employing the system one should be fair among those persons who have to pay the taxed amounts, but there is no way that you can come up with a concept of equity. We found that out in the month that followed November, 1981. We found that the Minister's attempts at equity were ill-advised and did not result from any consultative process with the people and organizations involved.

That was the disaster, the disaster that is reflected in Bill C-139 today—because the tax measures that are contained in Bill C-139 flow from that November, 1981 budget. They flow from the program introduced by the same Minister in June, 1982 when he introduced the six and five program. They flow from the measures his successor introduced in the House of Commons in October, 1982 in an attempt to remedy and resolve some of the problems created by his predecessor.

What we have to do is call the attention of the people of Canada to this kind of incompetence, this kind of fiscal mismanagement that results in the need to tax and tax, and tax again, the people of Canada. You cannot attack these provisions one by one as the President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants said, because you have to characterize them as all bad. There is no real reason for them. The only reason is that the Government is spending vast amounts of money.

In November, 1981 the Minister forecast a budget deficit of $11 billion. In June, 1982 the budget deficit had risen by several million dollars. In October, 1982 the prognostication was $19 billion. It then went up to $22 billion. Now, this very day in the House of Commons, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) tells us the budget deficit is $26 billion. If you do not think that has anything to do with taxation, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you what does have to do with taxation. When you divide the number of wage earners in Canada, which number around 10 or 11 million, into $26 billion, in addition to the other amounts that are recovered by the tax system, you realize the financial burden that Canadians face.

What does it have to do with other matters like inflation? Every taxpayer in Canada who lines up at a bank for a loan has to realize that the Government of Canada has been there before, paying for its budget deficit, to borrow $26 billion from financial institutions in Canada and abroad in order to finance this massive deficit. That is why the interest rate goes up and the ordinary Canadian taxpayer has no chance in the face of this fiscal mismanagement. There are millions of these taxpayers. We do not want to forget that there are 14.7 million Canadians who filed tax returns in 1980 and 15.1 million who filed in 1981.

The ramifications of the changes in the tax system are of extreme magnitude and affect virtually every person in Canada. The end result is that those people who are faced with inflation, which although it may be on the decrease now in the face of unrestricted Government spending is bound to increase in the future, are the victims, as well as the millions of jobless in Canada. We have 1.6 million people who are unemployed and still looking for work and we have another one million people who have given up looking for work. There are over three million people in Canada who have unemployment problems. They are the victims of this fiscal mismanagement.

All we can do is spend more money and increase taxes in order to solve the problem which the Government has created. There are many activities and actions that the Government has failed to take over the years in relation to the tax system and revenue-gathering processes in Canada. I have a statement referring to a report about underground money transactions. Do Hon. Members realize that experts have indicated that underground financial transactions in Canada amount to almost one-quarter of the total economic activity? There is something in the area of $53 billion involved in so-called underground transactions. What is the Government going to do about that? Is it going out to find out who these people are who do not respond to the tax system, who ignore our tax system? No. It goes down to Nova Scotia, seeking out a few fishermen who risk their lives every day to go on the high seas. The tax officials are hitting them with assessments, going back over their tax returns and extracting money from them.

They are doing the same thing with people who want to run a small farm to support their family. They are going back and saying: "We are not going to allow you any expenditures, Mr. Farmer, because we think you are an employed person and you are not going to benefit from the tax system". Why don't they go after the criminals? Why don't they go after the drug dealers? Why don't they bring in these billions of dollars in revenues from the underground money transactions that are now taking place in Canada and that have been established by scientific reports?

I want to speak about one item in the tax Bill. That is all I have time for. It is the Government's treatment of pensioners. I asked the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons in December, 1981 whether he would recant on his taxation provision that would deprive senior citizens in Canada of the benefit of the $1,000 exemption in respect of pension income. I thought he indicated at the time that he would. He has been battling back and forth with that ever since. It has been raised in comments, newspapers, tax reviews and so on.

When I look at Clause 67 of this Bill, I do not see where the Minister of Finance has recanted from that onerous provision at all. I want to raise that objection because when the question was put to him in front of the people of Canada he expressed great sympathy for senior citizens who were trying to provide for their old age. I know of no more onerous provision in this entire Bill C-139 than that which deprives senior citizens of a $1,000 income tax exemption if they are involved in another registered retirement savings plan.

If that is the attitude of the Government towards our senior citizens, then I have real concern for the future of Canada. If the Government thinks the Canadian people want to extract money from our senior citizens merely to fatten the Government so it can spend money on Dome Petroleum or help Bombardier and all those other activities it is engaged in, then we are in a sorry state in this country.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this Bill demands that we take a few minutes to remind Canadians how controversial this Government's administration has been. The Bill before the House today is more or less a reflection of the four budgets that were brought down since 1981. After all the corrections, amendments, and mistakes corrected twice over, we finally have here a thick slab of legislation which accountants and especially taxpayers will have a lot of trouble understanding. In any case, it is our duty on this occasion to criticize the Government roundly for poor management, poor planning, for commitments it failed to meet and, of course, for the promises it made to Canadians in order to try and win their support. If we consider all the changes that were made, we realize to what lengths the Government is prepared to go to obtain the support of the Canadian people.

I am referring to the four budgets brought down since 1981. They include a host of amendments which are sometimes very harmful, particularly to the poor. This legislation will not affect the rich but it will affect people on very low incomes who are least able to absorb some of the reductions and changes that affect Canadians directly. However, what is really incredible, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that since November 1981, starting with the predecessor of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), we have had 48 changes in the budget forecasts, while the present incumbent who was appointed last October had already made incredible mistakes, and I am referring to his miscalculation of the Government's deficits, borrowing requirements and projected borrowing requirements.

Mr. Speaker, to the Canadian people, to Canadians watching us, it was clear that for several months, after the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) got rid of the former Minister of Finance who is now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), it was thought that his successor might prove to be better at financial forecasting. There was also the consideration that it was perhaps embarrassing for the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada to ask the then Minister of Finance to resign because his budget, his budgetary forecasts and his general administration had proved to be a complete failure. However, I would have thought that the present Minister of Finance would come up with sounder proposals and better planning so that Canadians in general and businessmen in particular would have some idea of where the Government is going.

There has been no improvement, however. Today, some pertinent questions were asked about Petro-Canada which is once more about to make the Government renege on its promises regarding oil prices and the world market price. Yesterday, the Minister of Finance announced he was very disappointed that the deficit would be even greater than expected, that he would have to borrow, several more billion dollars, and so, that government spending is increasing more and more. And today, the Minister of Finance is telling us once more that he will have to find new sources of revenue. Where is he going to find them? According to him, he has no choice. He was unable to accept some of the cuts in Government spending.

To err is human, I understand that. On the weekend I read in the paper that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) refused to recognize and, in fact, disclaimed any responsibility for a mistake which is costing his own department a million dollars because of commitments made to certain employees. As I see it, Canadians will not be able to tolerate that sort of thing much longer. I think it is important to remind Canadians of the mistakes being made in various departments, the mistakes made by the Minister of Finance and the changes he was obliged to make, not because the Government was reluctant to introduce these new taxes, but because the Opposition did its job, and because on this side of the House, we fiercely defended the interests of Canadians, who in turn helped us by their response to various surveys which indicated that this Government's popularity was declining. Of course, some Liberal Members, although secretly and never in the House, expressed their concern about the Minister of Finance and finally forced the Prime Minister of Canada to get rid of the Minister who is now Secretary of State for External Affairs. That did not help matters, Mr. Speaker. It did not improve the situation very much, it has not reassured Canadians, and today, the present Minister of Finance is already demonstrating an incredible lack of direction. I agree with the Auditor General that this Government has lost control over its spending, and I think it is absolutely necessary to bring out all these facts and to show the Canadian people the unmitigated mess this Government is making of governing the country.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear from this piece of legislation that the Government is again going to rob the poor, Canadians who are looking for work and who are waiting for the Government's miracle policies to create jobs and give hope to the unemployed and especially to young Canadians who are getting desperate in a way they have never been before, because of rising unemployment. The Bill before the House today, and I want to make this quite clear, clearly reflects the Government's poor administration, its erroneous forecasts and the truly incredible mistakes made by people who are supposed to be running the country and give Canadians a set of positive economic policies.

However, there are no such policies, and instead, we have had forty-eight so-called remedies. I think it is important to remember that in less than three years, the Government has had to introduce forty-eight changes in its four last budgets, because they contained incredible mistakes—mistakes that were made by the present Minister of Finance's Cabinet colleagues and which he has had to correct, and worst of all, Mr. Speaker, the present Minister of Finance was a party to these forecasts and mistakes when he was responsible for Energy, Mines and Resources. In Cabinet, he endorsed so many erroneous decisions that would seem incredible to the average businessman who must be wondering about the manner in which we are being governed. Mr. Speaker, you know as well as I do that administrators with this record of incompetence, and I think the word is rightly chosen, would be hard-pressed to find a job in the private sector today. Mr. Speaker, that is why we are demanding more and more room for the private sector, but unfortunately, that is not the philosophy of this Government. Through the measures before the House today, this Government is directly competing with the private sector, which has demonstrated that it can provide far more effective management than the Government has been able to produce to this day. In the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to remind Canadians about the poor management and government this country is getting, and to express the hope that Canadians will soon be asked to pass judgment on this Government, and I sincerely hope that this will happen, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, one of the handicaps of the new Rules as they apply to speeches in the House is that within a brief period of ten minutes, a topic of the kind confronting us today, namely an examination of the provisions of Bill C-139, must be discussed. Even general comments are difficult in connection with this extensive piece of legislation which is 292½ pages long and covers a statute which, with its accompanying explanatory notes, as some of my colleagues on the other side would recognize, would stand in the CCH compilation, two feet high. It would require the steady attention, I submit, of a Member of this House who wished to understand the provisions of the Income Tax Act, during a two-year sabbatical from this place spent in a monastery where he was not confronted with any kind of distraction.

On a number of occasions I have dealt with one of the great problems of the Income Tax Act and that is, its inscrutability. This piece of legislation has become so complex over the years that the average citizen cannot hope, under any circumstances, to understand and to cope with its provisions. It has become so difficult that it is a labyrinth through which few people can find their way. For those unfortunates who happen to be caught in its pernicious clutches, it is a quagmire which, in many cases, has strangled many Canadian taxpayers.

The circumstances that confront us today are that rather than deal in any fashion with a simplification process, the Government has chosen to pile amendment upon amendment—to add, not subtract, from the great bulk of the wretched statute itself. We are confronted, I submit, with a bureaucratic plan to choke off the freedoms and rights to retain property and income that should be well recognized as pertaining to all Canadian citizens. What has happened is that over the years we have seen a gradual erosion in the base left in the hands of the taxpayer, which he can claim to be his own.

Some time ago when the first income tax was introduced in 1917, to become effective in 1918 as a temporary wartime measure, the concept of taxing income was very simple. It involved a process whereby an individual or business collected a certain sum of money, and a portion of that money was allocated to taxes. In the early years, that portion was relatively small. It became apparent to those intent upon collecting more revenue, that it would expedite the receipt of the funds required by Government for its plans, some of them foolhardy and some of them necessary, if they might extract the tax before the money was actually in the hands of the taxpayer. The concept of payment on an accrual basis developed, so that corporations and individuals who fell into certain categories were taxed on the basis of having established an arrangement which entitled them to receipt of income, even though they had not in fact, received that income. The results of the process were simple. The Government collected its money and maybe—just maybe—the taxpayer collected the income on which the tax had already been paid.

In this Bill we find a further and most interesting refinement. We are not now concerned only with collecting tax before the income has been received, a circumstance from which the business community and the individuals have suffered for some time. We are now caught in the predicament where the taxpayer in certain professions, is to be taxed on the basis of the work he has done with respect to which no account has been rendered. The concept is that if there is work in progress undertaken by a professional taxpayer, of the kind categorized by the Act, that taxpayer must pay a portion, not of the bill he has rendered, not of the income he has received, but of the work he has done. The whole purpose of this scheme is to put money in the hands of the Government before the citizen has had a chance to put in his pocket the income upon which the tax is based.

I suspect that the next move to expedite the early return to the revenue of a fund generated as a consequence of the work of Canadians, is to contemplate a tax on the basis of an idea that is conceived in the mind of a taxpayer which later gives rise to work in progress which, in turn, gives rise to the dispatch of an account. The mere concept that I might do work for someone should give rise, I suspect, at a later date, to the belief that, having thought of doing some work, I should pay tax to the Government with respect to the profit I might generate in the event that the work were ever undertaken.

One of the problems with respect to this new development is that there will be a determination of the fair market value of the work that is done, prior to the dispatch of the account. This, I submit, will involve individual taxpayers in the professions caught by the provisions of this amendment, with an obligation to retain advisers who can value the work which has been done. There will be a constant badgering by the officers of the Department of National Revenue who will argue that the value placed upon the work is not high enough. I fully recognize that the reserve for doubtful accounts, assuming that an account is ultimately rendered, will still apply. These provisions have long proved to be a mechanical problem confronted by taxpayers who have any desire to regiment properly the way in which they plan their tax affairs.

Let me say what in my view the provisions of the Bill should include. In today's circumstances they should obviously make provision for tax reductions and not tax increases. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has stood in the House and proclaimed the great benefits which are to befall taxpayers as a result of the passage of the legislation. Let me remind the Minister and the House that the Bill contains a deindexing provision which will automatically have the effect of increasing taxes for Canadians generally. For that reason it is offensive, because it has the effect of increasing the true rate of tax that has to be paid.

Inflationary pressures creating illusory—I say illusory and not real—assumptions of income increases ought not to give rise to payment of tax at a higher rate. They ought not to give rise to a diminution of the real value of the deductions which are permitted under the provisions of the Act prior to the introduction of the Bill and the computation of income. Those benefits enjoyed by Canadians will disappear by the passage of this legislation, and Canadians should be aware of that.

May I say one final thing with respect to the Bill as it relates to the inclusion in income of an element of whole life insurance policies. The provisions can be found in Clause 5(1), and I will direct my attention to them in Committee of the Whole. Unfortunately, they leave the right to determine how those amounts are fixed to the Governor in Council, and not to the House of Commons. I submit that is objectionable.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, like the Hon. Member who just spoke, I find myself locked in to a ten-minute speech when there are many things I want to say with respect to the specifics of this Bill. I look forward to Committee of the Whole hearings when we can deal with the specifics, but at this time I should like to make some general comments.

• (1540)

In a speech within the last two weeks, a senior partner of Touche Ross and Company of Toronto, Mr. J. Lyman MacInnis, who is also President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario, said:

The Canadian Income Tax Act is an unmitigated mess!

Every chartered accountant, every tax lawyer, every tax consultant and every taxpayer of Canada would agree with that statement. He went on to say in his address:

—for decades it's been a well-established rule or jurisprudence that income tax laws be written in clear, unmistakable language. This is so because it is a self-assessing system. The most quoted statement by a court in this respcect says:

"It is not enough to attain a degree of precision which a person reading in good faith can understand, but it is necessary to attain, if possible, a degree of precision which a person reading in bad faith cannot misunderstand. It is all the better if he cannot pretend to misunderstand it".

The present Income Tax Act, the amendments over the years and this Bill are incomprehensible. I would suggest that they are incomprehensible to everyone except those academics in the ivory tower who draft legislation. Those people, if forced to live in the real world, would not survive because they could not make a living; they would starve to death because they do not understand business, either small or large, and they do not understand people.

Several years ago in the House, during consideration in Committee of the Whole, the then Minister of Finance agreed to a minor amendment to the Income Tax Act. It was an amendment which every Member of the House and I suspected, when it came in, would constitute one paragraph. When the amendment finally came in, it consisted of two full pages of sections and subsections. I pointed out the absurdity of such an amendment, which could have been simple, to the very man who had the responsibility of drafting the particular amendment. He said to me, "You really do not understand the problems in drafting legislation, despite the fact that you are a lawyer". He went on to say, "We are now computerized. This legislation is designed for the computer, not for the taxpayer". Mr. Speaker, the computer does not pay the taxes; the taxpayer pays the taxes.

Thus we have confusion, confusion not only in the Department, but confusion in the minds of taxpayers. They are left in a real quandry. What can the taxpayer do when he runs into a problem, if he cannot afford or does not necessarily want to hire a chartered accountant to help him with his return, a fairly simple T-1 return? He can call a toll-free number. Every district taxation office has a toll-free number. What happens if a taxpayer phones and poses the following question: "I have a problem with my income tax return; what is the answer?" First of all he discovers that the response of the Department is not binding on the Department. If he follows the advice he receives, he has no certainty that when he files his return it will be accepted. Also I suspect that all district taxation offices are the same. If one phoned and asked the same question on more than one occasion, quite frequently one would receive different answers as a result of the phone calls, different answers to the same question. Not only that, in the last two or three years, with the confusion which has existed because of budgets and no income tax amendments before us, taxpayers have come into my office and told me that they have phoned the toll-free number and the voice at the other end said, "We do not know what the answer is; go and see your Member of Parliament." Then the individuals came to me thinking that I had all the answers to their problems, yet these people in the Department who are answering the telephones are supposedly the experts.

Another route which the taxpayer can take is the interpretation or information bulletin route. He can go through the whole list and find a particular interpretation bulletin that fits his case, that is, if he can find the list of the interpretation bulletins. Having picked up the interpretation bulletin, he has to sit down and try to figure out what it indicates. That can be a very interesting exercise. I say this because one discovers that what is contained in the bulletin is sometimes different from what is contained in the tax guide accompanying the tax return itself.

I recall a recent case where one of my constituents filed a return claiming a deduction for registered retirement savings plan contributions he made. He made the deduction based upon his earned income. It was quite clear in the guide and in his return. After several months he received an assessment notice from the income tax Department advising him that he was not entitled to the deduction. But it did not say why. Nowadays these assessments come out and one cannot tell what they say or what they mean. It used to be that 15 or 20 years ago, when the income tax Department re-assessed a person he could look at the document and know where he had gone wrong or know where the Department had gone wrong in re-assessing him. This does not happen nowadays because the computer does it, that all-wise machine.

Finally, after several months my constituent discovered that while he had a substantial amount of earned income, he had claimed a loss on rental income which was deducted from his earned income and he was not entitled to the deduction. I could go on at length citing examples, but I see my time is up. Simply, I would like to say that I think the time has come when it is very important—as a matter of fact it is vital—that the Government take the necessary steps to set up a committee, not comprised of people from the ivory tower, but of people who have day-to-day knowledge of the Income Tax Act and of individuals who have to prepare their own income tax returns, so that there will be a comprehensible Act which people can understand without having to spend money and hours of argument with the Department over their taxes.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-139 which I have here in my hands, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax. This is a rather large and heavy piece of legislation. It is very complex. In fact, it is so complex that it was necessary for the Government to put out a smaller version of the Act which was called "Explanatory Notes to Bill Amending the Income Tax Act." The Explanatory Notes are also quite lengthy. I mention this to point out that income tax legislation in Canada has become most complex. These 300 pages contained in Bill C-139 that are being added to the existing Income Tax Act, already 700 pages or so long, really just piles complexity upon complexity. This means that it is very difficult for an individual to fill out his or her income tax form and very difficult for an individual to understand the nature of the tax system as it exists today. It is very difficult for an individual to evaluate the income tax system and, therefore, to pass judgment on what the Government is doing.

Simplicity would better serve the level of information which the public should have. Simplicity would also better serve justice.

I will attempt to give some meaning to this most complex document in the few minutes I have. I have examined the document to the best of my ability. The document impresses me in terms of legislation as being unfair and as being a sleight of hand, because it implements part of the six and five program. It is a sleight of hand as it affects inflation, and this document is here with us today as a result of the last three budgets which the Government brought down, that of November, 1981, the budget of June, and then the economic statement given by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). This document is here as an economic statement, and as an economic statement, it is totally inadequate.

One does not need to peruse the document to realize that any citizen living and working in Canada, particularly those who do not have the opportunity to work, does understand that the last three bugets have had no real impact upon the economic situation in this country. These amendments are unfair. Let me illustrate by pointing to the tax rates in this country. I have two points in this regard. First, the November budget lowered tax rates for upper-income Canadians in return for what is to be the taking away of certain exemptions allowed under the income Tax Act. Therefore, the move was supposed to be fair. But while the Government lowered tax rates for upper-income Canadians and backed down on the closing of loopholes that existed before, it has left us with a very unfair tax system.

I have the taxable income table before me. In terms of taxable income—and keeping in mind that taxable income is probably three-quarters of a person's income—if a person was earning anything from zero taxable income up to $24,464, with the exception of one category in which there was a small decrease of one per cent, there was no decrease in the taxable rate of income. In other words, for anyone earning up to $24,000 of taxable income, which may mean something like $30,000 to $32,000 of real income, there is no tax break flowing from this document. However, if you earn more than that, you get a two or three percentage point break in the marginal tax rate. But what is most interesting is that if you have taxable income of $86,000 up to $133,000, your tax rate drops by 5 per cent, and if you are earning more than $133,000, your tax rate drops by 9 per cent. Therefore, if you are in the upper-income salary group, you get a significant decrease in your tax rate.

To make that point once more, let me quote from a book entitled "The New Canadian Tax and Investment Guide" which stresses this point. It reads:

> —the wealthy investor will pay the same rate even if his investment income increases from, say $200,000 to $300,000 in a given year. While the MacEachen Budget has been promoted as an attack against the rich, a close analysis of these numbers will show that the rich are virtually unaffected. For the rich and the super rich, the Budget provides a 10 per cent decrease in tax rates.

These tax amendments are unfair. They continue to add to the unfairness of the tax system by giving very high tax rate gifts to the very rich in this country while giving nothing to those in the lower income group. In fact, those in the lower income brackets are penalized. They are given a tax increase by virtue of the fact that the indexation of tax exemptions is capped by the Government. Lower income people get a tax increase without a matching tax decrease.

I want to mention also that over a number of years the burden of taxation has fallen more specifically upon individuals than upon corporations. I have a couple of figures to illustrate this. In 1952, 53.7 per cent of tax revenues came from corporations and 46.3 per cent came from individuals. The latest statistics for 1980 show that 30.5 per cent of tax revenues came from corporations and 69.4 per cent came from individuals. In other words, as far back as 1952, corporations paid over 50 per cent of the tax revenues of Government, but today they are paying some 30 per cent. A major shift has occurred in the tax burden. It has shifted from corporations to individuals. This reflects an attitude prevalent in the United States. For example, President Reagan had the courage of his convictions when he said that he found it difficult to justify the existence of a corporate tax. As Canadians we understand that corporations are citizens. If they are going to be good citizens, they have to pay their way and pay a fair share of the cost of running this country.

What this Liberal Government across the way has done, as well as past Conservative Governments because the statistics I quote go back to 1952, is while talking a good line about justice and fairness and including those words in its budgets, not recognizing that its actions speak louder than its words. It has reduced the burden on corporations and increased it on individuals. While President Reagan has the courage of his convictions when he says he does not believe in corporate tax, the actions of this Government indicate that it no more believes in corporations paying their fair share than the American Government does. That is unfair and unjust.

Mr. Cosgrove: He withdrew that comment.

Mr. Keeper: He should have withdrawn that comment. This Government should withdraw the legislation before this House which is continuing the trend of leaving the burden of paying for Government in this country upon individuals while letting the corporate sector off with only a very light share of the cost of running this country.

• (1600)

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words about Bill C-139. Ten minutes is hardly enough time to discuss a Bill that has some 133 changes in it.

In the 1980-81 period, there were 350 changes made to the Income Tax Act. Those changes have not all been digested by the business people in Canada until now. We now have another 133 changes to add to those. The result is confusion or, as my colleague said when quoting Lyman MacInnis, "The Income Tax Act is an unmitigated mess".

I do not intend to talk at length about the corporate side since it has the ability to hire tax accountants, tax lawyers and experts to interpret the Act and have them plead their case to National Revenue and solve their problems in that manner. I am more concerned about the average citizen. In the eyes of most Canadians, National Revenue is a Government unto itself. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, from listening to people who come to my office, that National Revenue is feared more than most police forces. I think it is deplorable to have that condition exist in this country. They have the power to put a small businessman into receivership at whim, and have done so on a number of occasions. They can put one's job in jeopardy by threatening to garnishee wages.

As we know, many payrolls today are computerized. A program does not exist to accommodate the garnisheeing of wages. Consequently, most employees who are faced with this problem find themselves in their employers' offices being told that if they do not settle the matter perhaps there will not be a job for them. The employer does not want to go through the reprogramming of the payroll and other procedures to accommodate the employee. In many cases, the taxpayer has a legitimate reason for not paying the taxes but has no real avenue of appeal.

National Revenue has the power to harass Canadians. It can harass a person into submission, and I suggest that this happens every day. A number of people have come to my office to tell me of harassment of one type or another by National Revenue. They will send a notice which says that if they do not hear from an individual in 30 days, they will take certain action. In many cases it involves obtaining records and information to satisfy National Revenue, which takes longer than 30 days. However, National Revenue says that if they do not hear a response within 30 days they will garnishee wages or seize assets and sell them. This is the type of harassment that occurs. The horror stories that are told to Members of Parliament about the harassment from National Revenue would fill many volumes.

I raised the question in the House of the centralization of the income tax records in several centres remote from large population areas with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières). As a result of this centralization, many people have difficulty having records returned to their local taxation centre to be adjudicated locally.

A major difficulty is that one cannot simply read the Income Tax Act and understand it. It is incomprehensible. For instance, if National Revenue refers to a certain section of the Act, the average Canadian, who will go to the library to read that section, is unable to understand it. As a result, individuals feel absolutely frustrated.

I have had representations from many business people on the changes in the capital cost allowance. At a time when businesses are pressed for cash and their cash flows are in difficulty, at a time when the Government is urging them to invest capital, expand their plants and hire more people, they are hit with a capital cost allowance that is really unrealistic.

I am sure that every Member has had representations made to him by salesmen who drive company-owned vehicles. The treatment they are receiving leaves a lot to be desired. Many salesmen have told me that it is fair if National Revenue wants to make changes, but they should be given time to adapt. Many of these salesmen are working on term leases for their automobiles. They would like to have a year or two to effect this change. But this provision was just dropped on them, and many will suffer severe financial loss as a result.

I said that many people feared National Revenue more than the police. Is it any wonder? One simply has to look at Bill C-139 and read almost any page. For example, I will read some of Section 65, and you can tell me if you really understand this, Mr. Speaker. I think I know what the answer will be. Section 65 states:

> (1) All that portion of paragraph 110(1)(a) of the said Act preceding subparagraph (i) thereof is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> '(a) the aggregate of gifts made by the taxpayer in the year (and in the five immediately preceding taxation years to the extent of the amount thereof that was not deductible in computing the taxable income of the taxpayer for any preceding taxation year) to'
> (2) Paragraphs 110(1)(b) and (b.1) of the said Act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> '(b) the aggregate of gifts made by the taxpayer in the year (and in the five immediately preceding taxation years, to the extent of the amount thereof that was not deductible in computing the taxable income of the taxpayer for any preceding taxation year) to Her Majesty in right of Canada and Her Majesty in right of the provinces, not exceeding the amount remaining, if any, when the amount deductible for the year under paragraph (a) is deducted from the income of the taxpayer for the year, if payment of the amounts given is proven by filing receipts with the Minister that contain prescribed information;
> (b.1) the aggregate of gifts of objects that the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board has determined meet all of the criteria set out in paragraphs 23(3)(b) and (c) of the Cultural Property Export and Import Act, which gifts were not deducted under paragraph (a) or (b) and were made by the taxpayer in the year (and in the five immediately preceding taxation years . . .

And on it goes. I defy anyone to interpret that. If one went to the best tax lawyer or chartered accountant in the country to ask them to interpret some of these sections, one would find that they do not know. All they can do is to take the case, put it to National Revenue, rely on their response and perhaps plead the case if they do not like the response. Business depends on knowing where it is going. It has to know what the tax laws are, what the market is and what price they can charge. They just cannot understand or comprehend what is in the Act.

I believe that it is time that we put a stop to the changes in the Income Tax Act and reassessed the situation. Having done that, perhaps we can have the entire Act revised.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—National Parks—Quality of Banff waters supply, b) Implementation of study's recommendations; the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)—Disasters—Training of crews—regulatory changes b) Appearance of Ministers before committee; the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Trade—Request for imposition of surtax on imported potatoes, b) Effect of imports on Fraser Valley farms.

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2) be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks regarding Bill C-139 in an attempt to impress upon the Government, even at this late stage, the representations that I know every Member of the House is receiving from dozens of constituents and businesses. I am sure that Your Honour's mail, like mine, continues to contain complaints about the anti-investment attack, which is still continued in the Income Tax Act amendments originating in the November 1981 budget. It is, simply put, a tragedy. The Government of this country continues to press forward with an income tax proposal, the basic attempt, purpose and thrust of which is to squeeze every nickel and dime out of every Canadian taxpayer that it can find, at a time when what is needed in the Canadian economy is a recognition at long last that there is no recovery possible in the country from taking more from Canadians and spending it through Government.

Canadians witnessed the six and five program and are now witnessing an attempt, according to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to try to justify an ever greater deficit. Presumably, we will see income tax amendments following his next budget which will attempt to pay for those increased deficits or ameliorate those deficits in some way by squeezing more taxes out of an ever shrinking Canadian pie. This tragedy can perhaps be no better expressed, in my personal experience in my own riding, than by two cases with which I am currently dealing with regard to the Department of National Revenue, which will have the responsibility of implementing this Act.

A young man in my riding is struggling to work as a photographer. Despite perhaps wiser counsel, he set himself up in business last year. As most Canadians would know, that took incredible courage in these times. He discovered at the end of the year that the Department believed and claimed that he owed sales tax to the tune of approximately $3,000 for materials that he had used, money he did not have because his business had just barely started. In fact, he had no way to pay the money. When he went to discuss that matter with the Department of National Revenue in the beginning, it arranged to allow him to pay on a limited basis, perhaps $100 a month. Because he had no business—most Canadians are finding throughout the country today that there is very little business to do—he was in default for one month. The answer of the Department of National Revenue was to tell him where the bankruptcy branch was, upstairs. He called me, and it was only under threat of raising the issue in the House of Commons that the Department chose not to put another Canadian small-businessman into bankruptcy, another on top of the thousands of individual Canadians and small businesses that have gone bankrupt today as a result of the economic policies writ large in the Bill.

I might say that I guess it depends on the mind of the Department of Revenue how much money one owes. In another case in my riding, the Department has issued a third party notice to the tenants in a small building, instructing them, because of an arrears case involving the building's owner, that in the future the tenants are to pay their rent to the Department of National Revenue. Those are interesting notices, third party notices, because they set out the size of the indebtedness which the tenant or the Canadian taxpayer owes, so that the tenants, in this case, will know that they do not have to pay more than that particular gentleman owes. Interestingly enough, the amount that particular gentleman owes the Department of National Revenue is $4 million some odd dollars and 86 cents. It fascinates me that when someone owes $4 million, the Department recognizes that perhaps it is best to keep that person in business, but when someone owes $3,000, it does everything it can to put that person out of business. It is almost as though it were part of a concerted policy from Ottawa to drive everyone into being an employee or a liability of the Government of Canada.

Much has been made of the changes since the November budget, and there have been dozens of changes, many of them forced by this Party. However, the Bill still does contain some of the worst anti-investment provisions the country has ever seen. For the ordinary Canadian, for example, a very sensible right which encouraged Canadians to borrow for their retirement years in order to invest their money in Registered Retirement Savings Plans, has been taken away. Why, is beyond me. Why a Canadian, one who is prepared to invest in his or her future, should be penalized by the Government, is totally beyond me.

Capital cost allowance remains, despite protestations to the contrary, restricted to 50 per cent of its previous value. That will have an incredibly damaging effect on any potential for coming out of the recession. In fact, in my own area of policy interest, which is cultural policy, we are confronted with a most interesting anomaly concerning this particular question. The Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) travels the length and breadth of the country and says in every speech that the continuance of 100 per cent capital cost allowance is absolutely essential to the survival and development of the cultural industries of Canada while, the Government continues with its plan, contained in the Bill, to cut the capital cost allowance to 50 per cent. We therefore hear the Government saying to those who are trying to make jobs and protect our cultural integrity and development—

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Deputy Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

• (1620)

And being returned:

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Honour the Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General in the Senate chamber, His Honour was pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

Bill C-672, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Dauphin—Chapter 137.

Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2)—Chapter 138.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I will continue for the few minutes that are left on Bill C-139. Before we adjourned, I was reminding the House that capital cost allowance provisions have been, in effect, publicly attacked by the Minister of Communications, and that I hope at some point that the Government, either that Minister or other Ministers affected, will indicate clearly to those in the cultural industries in Canada what the long-term plan for that provision is.

Let me say, for my part, that the protection and development of Canada's cultural industries, both for their job creating potential and for the development of our cultural integrity, is far too important to be arbitrarily and unilaterally cut in half by an income tax amendment. I might say that those involved in those industries have been pressing the Government since 1977 for the adoption of the recommendations of the Disney report, which would have had the effect of strengthening and encouraging the ability of individual Canadians to play an active role in the development of our culture. It fascinates me that income tax time after income tax time and budget after budget the Government has done nothing with those recommendations, and effectively this Government's single income tax measure with regard to cultural development in Canada in the last five years since the Disney report has been to adopt the capital cost allowance provisions and to attack those industries. That is clear to those industries, and it is tragic that it is not clear to the Government.

One other matter that deeply concerns me, in particular, is the continuation of the attack on small businesses, notably, such matters as the fact that the Government continues to stick with the small business dividend distribution tax. This is hardly a time to say to the small businesses which are in deep trouble that if they should be making any profits during this period of time and wished to distribute them to their investors—in many cases they are family-owned operations—there will be a new special tax placed on those distributions. That is very unfortunate. Right now, in my own community of Toronto, every week more small businesses collapse. At at time when we need to encourage people to invest and develop through the small business sector, we are debating an income tax Bill whose cumulative effect, because of that change, the decrease in the dividend tax credit, the changes in the automobile depreciation allowance and the effect that is going to have and so on, to make sure by tax policy that more small businesses will collapse and that it will be more difficult for people to begin a small business. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the discouragement for people to invest anywhere in Canada grows.

Equally, for example, prior to the November 1981 budget, Canadians were beginning to discover the advantages to them, as employees, of taking loans from their employers to buy shares in their business, and that is something that some of us in the business sector use in order to encourage employees to do that. It is a shame that the Government chooses to destroy one of the few remaining sources of capital for small businesses.

Finally, let me deal with one large measure, if I may, that affects a great number of my constituents, and that is, the continued attack on the life insurance industry. Admittedly, there have been some changes and some of the worst parts of the measures have been withdrawn, but it is clear to those in the industry that a continuing and unfair tax on a preferred form of tax investment is being made in this Bill.

In conclusion let me remind those who watch this that today we heard one of the Ministers protesting that we are never going to see a future income tax amendment, based on their income, to tax those who live in apartments. That was in Question Period today. I wish to remind all those affected by this Bill that it was when it was first brought in we saw the first introduction of an intent by the Government, which I am sure will be in the next one, to put a tax on those who own homes.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, as a farmer and a businessman I consider it a privilege to speak in this House on Bill C-139 on the general direction of the income tax Department. It has caused a great deal of problems in terms of people being able to project their business operations and look ahead into the future with some optimism because they do not know where they are headed.

The Bill before us today contains some 130 changes. It is a clear indication of the direction in which this Department is going. This is very frustrating for the taxpayers of Canada. If there is anything that should be straightened out in this country, it is that some clear-cut direction should be given to people so that they can understand what the taxman requires of them. All you have to do is to look at this Bill to see how complex it is. The average citizen does not understand it.

There is a major problem plaguing the farm circle and business circle. The Government is circulating volumes and volumes of paper. It takes a tax lawyer and an accountant to understand them. I suggest that many times they do not even understand. It will take two to three years to iron out the whole direction because of the changes brought in this past year by the former Minister of Finance.

The accountants in my riding are confused. They continually phone my office about the problem and ask whether there is any solution. We look forward to a budget in April that will be even more confusing to the taxpayer, more confusing than any in the history of this country.

This is a very serious situation. The Government set up a Royal Commission. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I was not aware there was to be a change in the Speaker's chair. I thought you were cautioning me.

The Government has set up a Royal commission to inquire into the economy. One of the greatest problems we face in terms of the economy is that business people and farmers do not know in what direction they are heading. They cannot plan their business affairs. If this Government is going to be put on a sound economic footing, it must begin by writing the rules in a clear and simple fashion which people can understand. I would like to single out some specific areas.

Since 1971 the Income Tax Act and the matter of addressing the capital cost allowance and capital gains tax for farmers and businessmen has been battered around. I do not remember an election in which the Liberal Government did not promise it would address the problem of capital gains on farms. I suggest the problem is just as severe for small-businessmen. On many farms the tax has been paid by three generations. Even though the tax has been paid by one generation and the next generation, when it is passed to the third generation, it must be paid again. We have a system in this country which is counter-productive. It has reached the point where the Government has almost taxed people out of business. The taxes now being brought in are so restrictive that they are counter-productive to the country's welfare. If there is to be an inquiry or Royal commission into an area of the economy, it should first study the Income Tax Act. If we are to have the type of incentive that is needed for production, we must address this very serious situation.

What about the incentives for the small-businessman? Once you tax to the point where you must pay out $1 for every dollar that goes into your pocket, you question whether it is worth-while. In all the years I have been in business, I have been hiring men for my farm operation and my business operation. There is very little incentive for a man to work overtime. Once he is earning a reasonable wage, if he wants to earn an extra dollar in overtime, the biggest part of it will go to the taxman. Why should he worry and bust his back working a few extra hours just to make an extra dollar?

The whole system is backwards. There might be a good argument made for a tax system that goes in some other direction. There should be an inquiry into the very serious problem that exists with regard to taxation.

I would like to deal now with the capital gains tax on the farmer and the misuse of that. In 1971, the average quarter section in my area was worth about $10,000 to $12,000. Today it is worth approximately $60,000 to $80,000 a quarter section. The farmer paid tax on every dollar that went into buying and then maintaining the farm throughout the years. Today when the land is being passed from one generation to the other, especially in cases where the farmer cannot afford to give it away and must sell it, the taxman wants 50 per cent of every dollar for taxes.

Let us take the example of someone with an annual income of $20,000. The tax on the quarter section of land on top of that $60,000 means an additional $30,000 taxable. Therefore, tax must be paid on $50,000. The tax is very high. It is $25,000. What is happening is that the Government moves in and takes that person's quarter section of land. The farmer finds himself in a position where he cannot retire. What did the former Minister of Finance, the Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen) do for the farmer?

I receive call after call from farmers who have built up a small herd of cattle and want to roll over their land to the son. They want to sell the cattle and retire on the income they receive. That was the only retirement savings plan the farmer had.

I received a call from a farmer in a small town north of where I live. He said "Len, what do I do? I have hired the auctioneer. I have made arrangements over 20 years to build up a retirement plan and the Government is putting me right out of business. What should I do? Should I cancel the auctioneer? Should I send out notices saying that the sale is cancelled?" There must be some long-term planning if businessmen in this country are to be productive. I ask that the Government and the Department look into this very seriously and change some of these directions which have such a massive effect on our economy.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the changes to the Income Tax Act brought in with Bill C-139. These changes have accumulated because of the several budgets and financial statements presented to this House since November, 1981. In effect, it is a catching up of old business which has been before this House for more than two years. I want to discuss a few of the things in this Bill which will affect taxpayers in my riding and, to quite an extent, taxpayers right across the country. Because my riding is generally a rural riding, I want to deal with a couple of items which affect farmers as well as a great many small-businessmen.

First of all, one of the major changes proposed in the November budget was the elimination of the income averaging annuity contract, to be replaced by a system of forward averaging. As a result of the initial budget there were a great many people across Canada, small-businessmen and farmers, caught in the unhappy position of being suddenly forced to pay tax on the total sale price of their farm or small business even though the purchase price was being paid over time. A great many of these people found themselves in the position of owing more money to the tax Department than they had received as a down payment for the farm or business. Some of those provisions were changed in subsequent announcements. I was pleased to see that, because I had risen in this House in December, 1980 to point out in some detail the kinds of problems being created for farmers in my part of the country, and in eastern Canada as well, by that particular change. I think the forward averaging proposal deals in part with the difficulty, but I have great difficulty in understanding why it has to be an "either or" kind of proposal. I do not see why people who already had an IAAC could not continue, or those considering selling out could not use that method if they were more comfortable with it instead of going into the forward averaging method proposed in this Bill.

Another item which people will become aware of, if they are not already, when they do their income tax is the change to the capital cost allowance. As anyone who has started to fill out his income tax for us already knows, any equipment, farm or otherwise, bought in 1982 is eligible for only a 15 per cent capital cost allowance, rather than 30 per cent. This has created a great many problems, not only for farmers in my area but for machinery dealers as well. Farm equipment is still being sold, farmers still have to buy, because equipment does wear out. However, the tax incentives have been considerably lessened with the halving of the capital cost allowance in the first year. Granted, new machinery is still eligible for the machinery tax credit, which has the same effect as pre-paying your income tax, so to speak. That in itself has got the attention of a great many people in rural Canada. Farm machinery dealers from across Canada were lobbying just two months ago in Ottawa, asking the Government to make that investment tax credit available on the difference between the value of the new machine and the value of the old machine, and have it apply to used machinery as well as to new machinery. They made a very persuasive argument, which I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) will have noted. The proposal is more equitable and provides some assistance to people who are dealing in farm machinery. It will make it easier for them to sell the used equipment taken in trade.

The one major omission in this Bill has been alluded to several times today in the House, that is, the lack of any changes to the capital gains tax as it affects farmers and small-businessmen. In spite of the fact this Government was elected on a promise—one of the few made with regard to agriculture—to change the capital gains tax and move the valuation day from the end of 1971 to the end of 1974 and index it thereafter, we have not seen it in this budget. Perhaps the next budget this Government offers will deal effectively with the program as promised. However, we think that does not go far enough. We think there is a great deal to be said for an exemption for the first $100,000 of capital gains. As is done in the Province of Saskatchewan under the NDP, this would put farmers and small-businessmen on a comparable basis to home owners in large cities. They would have an equivalent amount of tax-free retirement income, so to speak, just as people in large cities who retire have the home they have paid for during their lifetime free of tax so they can sell it and move into an apartment in their retirement years. We think that should apply to farmers and small-businessmen as well.

Looking at the over-all proposal before us, we note, as will all taxpayers if they use their calculators when they receive their pre-printed tax forms, that the indexing of the spousal and child exemptions will be at 6 and 5 per cent instead of the real rate of inflation. They will also note when they start looking at the tax tables that for the bulk of people in my constituency, as is the case across Canada, who have taxable incomes below $24,000 there is no tax saving. However, there are tax savings for the 25 per cent of the population who earn net taxable income in excess of $25,000.

So the tax cut which was touted by the Minister of Finance in November, 1981 is effectively a tax cut only for the top 25 per cent of the income earners in this country. I think that indicates the Government is continuing to pursue its policy of increasing taxes on middle and lower income people and lowering taxes for the upper income people and larger corporations. I think we only have to look back at the record to see that in 1960 income tax in Canada rose from 59 per cent to 69 per cent in 1980. The share of income tax that corporations paid fell in the same period from 42 per cent to 31 per cent. The force of the tax law is falling more heavily on the 75 per cent of our population that has a net taxable income of less than $24,000. I think we should all object to this in the hope that the Government will react in the next budget to provide a tax break for those people.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-139 represents the final misguided attempt to incorporate the provisions of the November, 1981 budget. Thrown in with them is a grab bag of provisions emanating from the June and October budgets as well. I do not think there is any question that the November, 1981 budget was the most anti-investment, anti-business, anti-growth, anti-farm, anti-individual and, indeed, anti-confidence budget that the country has seen in 50 years. It generated a tremendous amount of opposition. Something in the order of 45 changes have been adopted since it was brought in, and we see the remnants of that budget being incorporated now in Bill C-139. It makes one wonder why, in the face of widespread opposition from all sectors of Canadian society, the Government would embark upon the implementation of such an ill-conceived measure.

The November 1981 budget was a disaster, not only in terms of its contents but because of the fact that it broke the bond of co-operation by the governments' unilateral action, without the customary consultation. It was obviously written by bureaucrats who had not considered how its implementation would affect the average taxpayer and businessman. For one thing, it incorporated retroactivity. The immediate effect of the changes was a great deal of uncertainty, and they further contributed to destroying the climate of confidence in the country. I do not think any of us can recall a time when major tax reform was implemented in a similar manner.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) indicated that the changes are positive steps in the right direction and that it is only common sense to incorporate a better system. We welcome the changes that have been made but I wonder about my friends opposite who voted en masse for the 1981 budget. They should hang their heads in shame, Mr. Speaker. The former Minister of Finance has been totally repudiated by the present Minister, and he should have the decency and the integrity to resign. All Hon. Members opposite voted for the budget knowing very well of its negative implications for the Canadian economy. They should consider whether they put the interests of their country ahead of the interests of the political survival of the Minister or of the Government. They should hang their heads in shame about that too. It is nonsense for them to talk about a stable tax environment now when they have already contributed to the uncertainty and instability that face us.

I should like to read some very quotable quotes from remarks made earlier by the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) when he held another portfolio. On November 16, 1981, as reported at p. 12787 in Hansard, he said:

> The budget that was tabled by my colleague the Minister of Finance on November 12, is a very important step in that process of tax reform, a step which I hope will be pursued in successive budgets.

He went on to say:

> —this budget—will contribute to productivity, economic growth, job creation and reduced inflation.

That is what he said the budget would do. The country, the business community, Members of this House, upon notice, realized that such was not the case, and the Minister had to withdraw the guts of his remarks. He went on to say, as reported at p. 12790 in Hansard:

> My colleagues and I congratulate the Minister of Finance for responding so directly to the plight of those Canadians who are suffering from high interest rates, for the thrust of restraint and deficit reduction and for the very creative steps toward long overdue tax reform.

On December 18, 1981, the then Minister of Finance, speaking of the budget, as reported as p. 14236 of Hansard, said the following:

> —is a strategy for creating permanent jobs and growth, not just for this month and next month, but for next year and the years after that. I am convinced that is the right strategy and the one we must continue to follow.

What a laugh, Mr. Speaker! What nonsense! What hypocrisy! My goodness gracious, imagine a Minister of the Crown making that kind of proclamation when today we are faced with an unemployment rate in excess of 13 per cent, which means probably 2 million people unemployed. That is the situation in the country—it is lacking in confidence, lacking in growth. There is sheer despair and anxiety out there.

Previous speakers spoke about the contents of Bill C-139, saying that it is one of the most complex Bills ever introduced in the House. That is so; it is probably the most complex since the reform measures that were introduced in 1971. Speaker after speaker alluded to the fact that what we need is not another 300-page tax Bill, but a simplication of the current tax system to make it more readily understood by the people who foot the bill.

There is universal condemnation in the House and throughout the country about the need for tax reform directed toward simplication, not the kind of document that is before us and which is going to add to the complexity of the Income Tax Act.

In its submission to the Standing Committee on December 14, 1982, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce stated as follows:

Income tax legislation, especially as it relates to Canadian-controlled private corporations, is becoming so complex that it is all but incomprehensible to the businessmen who are paying the taxes.

But what about the private taxpayer, the ordinary individual who may have some investment income? He cannot rely upon his own expertise to decipher this garbled document in the way that would assist him to file his tax return. Over the years we have accumulated a tax system that has hindered economic growth, hindered investment, hindered the average individual from participating in the productive growth and enterprise of the country. The Bill before us only adds to that complexity.

Some Members told us about their experiences with the Department of National Revenue and the difficulties they encountered trying to determine what legislation applied to certain cases. If we do not clean up our act, Mr. Speaker, what is at stake is the total integrity of the tax system. It must be understood and supported and have the confidence of the people, otherwise the whole system will break down.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in this debate on the revisions of the Income Tax Act, Bill C-139, as it gives me an opportunity to intervene on behalf of some of my constituents and some taxpayers of Canada. Under the present regime, two Departments of Government perform a giant pincer movement as the armies did during World War II. One army goes around in one direction and the other goes the other way in an effort to trap as many people in the centre as they can. On the one hand we have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) doing his work as one arm of the pincer movement and on the other the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) through the income tax Department moving in the other direction to cut off as many taxpayers as possible and to garner as much as they can into the coffers of Government.

What is remarkable about the debate is that the Liberals are not debating it. I have sat here for two hours this afternoon during the debating part of this session, and not one Liberal spoke. I sat here during this morning's session for an hour and a half, and not one Liberal spoke. When the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) presented his budget as Minister of Finance, I remember there were Government backbenchers going around the country saying that it was a bad budget. I remember the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) saying that the provisions regarding the tax structure for life insurance were bad, but he came back to the House and voted for the measures. We have that spectacle recurring time and time again with Government Members on the one hand privately opposing everything the Government does—philosophically they might be opposed to it—but on the other hand coming into the House and voting for Government measures. Somewhere along the line they know that in the future there will be parliamentary secretaryships available to them. When they leave the Chamber, there might be a commission, they might be appointed to a board, or perhaps they will be citizenship court judges, but some kind of favour will be bestowed on them if they stay in line as long as they are members of their caucus. Thus they vote; but today they are not speaking. The Government can willy-nilly do pretty well what it wants with measures like this.

I think we have before us a Bill which underscores the perspective of the Government that all money in the country belongs to the Government, except that which it allows taxpayers to have through its gratuities. This is underscored through the language of the former Minister of Finance when he first made some of the proposals on which we have now seen some backtracking.

During the fateful budget debate of November 1981, the House will recall that the Minister was then talking about loopholes. That concept indicates that everything current belongs to the Government but that some sneaky taxpayers have found ways around what really belongs to the Government, and that now we have to close off the loopholes. Those loopholes were called provisions by previous Ministers of Finance, or some other innocuous term. They were specifically designed to provide an incentive to the taxpayer so that he could keep as much money as possible and reinvest it in the economy, because that was the productive centre of Canada.

But the good Member from Cape Breton decided that the Government was more productive and needed the money more than the taxpayer, and suddenly they were loopholes. As the bottom of that lies the perspective that everything belongs to Government except that which, through the kindness of its heart, it allows taxpayers to have. Because of this concept, the Canadian taxpayer feels overtaxed. It has become an onerous burden to him. I believe that every taxpayer knows that the Government is entitled to a fair share of the income of Canada in order to run programs. There is a fair share, and somehow there is a kind of subconscious line for the taxpayer which he knows is legitimate for the Government to take, but he also has a kind of intangible sense of rightness and, when that is violated by the Government, the taxpayer becomes incensed and feels he has been wrong.

After that happens, the taxpayer can easily justify finding ways around it. He will look for ways to dodge the tax Department and the provisions within the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Thacker: The underground economy.

Mr. Friesen: As the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) says, we get an underground economy. We have the spectacle of the Government creating a nation of potential tax dodgers. With it comes a kind of subtle load of potential guilt for the taxpayer because he has broken the law. Historically the Canadian citizen does not want to be a lawbreaker. He wants to obey the law, but the onerous burden of tax creates potentially a nation of lawbreakers with the concomitant guilt.

Let me illustrate what the Government has done. I do not mind saying that I am not a total illiterate in language. I am a burnt-out English teacher, so I do not think I am totally illiterate. I want to read what the tax law says regarding reasonable standby charge for the minimum amount. The jargon reads:

—where the employer or the person related to the employer owned the automobile at any time in the year, an amount in respect of its cost to the employer equal to the percentage thereof obtained when 2 per cent is multiplied by the quotient obtained when such of the aggregate number days hereinbefore referred to as were days during which the employer or the person related to the employer owned the automobile is divided by 30 (except that if the quotient so obtained is not a full number and exceeds one it shall be taken to the nearest full number or, if there is no nearest full number, then to the full number next below it), or—

Then comes the next Clause. As I say, I am not a total illiterate in the English language, but I cannot understand that. It is supposed to be an attack on employee benefits so that an employee can no longer use this dodge or an employer cannot provide for an employee a dodge regarding the use of an automobile.

Mr. Thacker: That is called an incentive.

Mr. Friesen: Yes, that was the incentive. One thing is sure. Most taxpayers in Canada will not understand that if they read it. They do not know what are their rights. They do not know what are legitimate deductions for them. Thus they are confused and have to find accountants who in turn, find a whole barrage of accountants to help them interpret it, and all of them will disagree. The Government has created a whole new cottage industry for Canada; it is no longer a cottage industry, it is actually a major industry in Canada. This was all in the name of ensuring that the Government could get everything it could. It was written in that obscure language for fear that some guy would slip through the net.

The bottom line is that the tax law now indicates that the taxes on a car will be always adjudged to be new; it will never depreciate. If I could find a car made in North America which never depreciates, I would like to get one. I think I would pay above market value for it. The tax Department does not see the car as depreciating, so the person who gets that benefit or incentive from the employer is punished for taking it, because he will now be taxed for several years on a car which is old. Who would be crazy enough to do that? The whole thing is based on the fact that the taxpayer has no rights; it all belongs to the Government except—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen). I want to tell him that of course the Government never intended that he or anyone else should understand the language of this Bill. I am particularly pleased to follow the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who dealt with some of the complexities of this piece of legislation. As a matter of fact, for a moment, since we had not discussed it, I thought he might have headed off in the direction which I intend to take with regard to Bill C-139.

The area with which I want to deal is a complex one, that is, the impact of this piece of legislation on the air transport industry. I would like to begin by saying very bluntly that the viability of the Canadian airline industry will be jeopardized by the imposition of further economic constraint as proposed by amendments in Bill C-139. Specifically, I want to point out that Clause 38, Sub-sections 2, 3 and 5 and Clauses 123 and 125 of the Bill, in conjunction with the National Energy Board Act and the Energy Administration Act, are of particular concern. The House will recall the ill considered provisions of the transportation fuel compensation recovery charge provision of the October, 1980 budget which applied during the period from May 1, 1981 to January 1, 1982. One stated reason for the imposition was to protect cheap domestic oil resources from being tankered by foreign carriers. That charge was rescinded in order to avoid arbitration under Canada's bilateral air agreements to establish that it was a breach of such treaty obligations. Money collected was repaid to foreign air carriers initially. Later, in recognition of the difficult financial situation of the Canadian air transport industry, that industry was also forgiven the levy.

I understand that this Bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole. This will specifically exclude any representatives from the air transportation industry from having any input into the deliberations on the Bill. It is possible, because of the complex interrelationship with the National Energy Board Act, as I have pointed out, and the Energy Administration Act, that without a thorough examination of these amendments as they apply to the airline industry, the adverse effects may go unnoted during the debate.

The urgency for passage of the Bill for every tax paying Canadian is very clear. This, however, cannot contribute to derogation of the duty to protect the Canadian public from the significantly adverse effect of the proposed clauses about which I am talking. I am convinced that the public interest will be served only if the offending clauses, none of which directly affect the public, are referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs where a thorough hearing can include the opportunity for spokesmen from the Canadian airline industry to document the detrimental effects of the legislation as proposed.

During the Committee of the Whole I will attempt to have those few clauses withdrawn and referred.

We now have the situation where the Government seeks to put in place a new system of tax, clearly identified as such by the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in this House on November 8, 1982, to continue the inequities of the compensation recovery charge, which I mentioned a moment ago. The Canadian air transport industry is in more difficult circumstances now than it was then. It is in no position to assume an additional financial burden. Newspapers are full of ads of airlines selling seats at discount rates in an attempt to keep some manner of business. We know that airlines have dropped certain cities from their itineraries. We know the pinch is being felt by all in the Canadian air transport industry. Furthermore, the need to protect Canadian resources no longer exists as world oil prices have not risen as anticipated, and indeed may fall still lower.

As was the case with the recovery charge, a new taxation system is clearly in breach of Canada's bilateral agreements. It invites a request for arbitration or price retaliation against Canadian airlines. The tax measure is seriously flawed in logic and in law. It has already been challenged, as the House may well know, in federal court. As yet there has not been a decision in that case. It will be challenged further, as a constitutional issue that is, as being interference by the federal Government in a marketplace under provincial jurisdiction.

The convoluted measures to extract a tax, so discriminatory against the air mode of transportation, are highly suspect as to their effectiveness. All depends on the assumption that oil suppliers will be in the 50 percent tax bracket in order that the Government may reap tax revenue. Such an assumption in these times is merely very poorly founded. What will be created is a windfall revenue for the oil companies and a further blow at the corporate health of all air carriers.

I intend to ask when we get to the Committee of the Whole portion of the discussion of this Bill that those clauses I have enumerated be referred to a separate committee to see if we can deal with them in some particular depth, and ask the Government to come to its senses and change them. The Government has been through this once before. Surely it is not new. The Government has had to retract before. The Government had to pay the refunds then, and surely logic would indicate that the Government will have to do it again.

This is a very short dissertation on one very important part of this Bill to a very important industry in Canada. I would like to take more time and attack some of the other clauses in the Bill, but I know my colleagues have done an extremely effective job on that, and I will conclude on this particular point by asking the Chair to give this every consideration.

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Mr. Speaker, we have been waiting 15 months for Bill C-139, which contains amendments to the Income Tax Act. It is something that started one evening in November, 1981. I can remember that evening very clearly when the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) defended that great budget of the then Minister of Finance. He and I were debating the budget on a local radio station in Brampton. He was extolling the virtues of that budget, a budget which has been changed some 45 times. If the then Minister of Finance had an ounce of honour in him at all and believed in the tradition of parliamentary democracy he would have been long gone from this Cabinet.

Mr. Mazankowski: And so would the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. McDermid: The debate that evening in November on Radio Station CKNW in Brampton proved one thing. It was clearly won by the Progressive Conservatives that night because most of the things defended by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher)—how he ever got there, Heaven knows—

Mr. Crosby: That is why.

Mr. McDermid: Yes, that is why. He defended the indefensible. As I said, most of the things defended by the now Parliamentary Secretary have been taken out of the budget. It shows that there is no honour over there at all, not even in the Government's appointments. I cannot believe that he is there.

I have a couple of things I want to discuss here this evening. The first is the very excellent speech given recently in Ottawa by J. Lyman MacInnis, President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario. This speech has been referred to earlier in the House. The contents of his speech pointed out very clearly the problem we have in the House of Commons in taking a look at a document which includes a number of amendments and is 300 pages long. We are asked to discuss this intelligently in the House of Commons and, in fact, pass the Bill rather quickly.

I watched the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on "Canada AM" this morning with great interest. I watched and listened carefully to him yesterday and today in Question Period. The main theme of what he was saying is that the Opposition is delaying this Bill. I believe this is the fourth day of debate on this Bill, which was originally introduced on December 7 of last year. It represents a compilation of three budgets that this great country of Canada has had to suffer through. The Minister of Finance is now telling us that we are holding the Bill up and, as a result, holding up the business of the House because he cannot bring in another budget. It did not prevent the Government from bringing in budgets before. It brought them in so fast that Canadians did not know where they were.

I listen quite often to J. Lyman MacInnis on radio station CFRB in Toronto. He spends a great deal of time studying the tax laws, and he spoke about this Bill. I believe it is worthwhile giving one example of what we as Parliamentarians who are not trained in the law have to put up with. I will read from paragraph 56(1)(s) of the Act.

Mr. Cosgrove: That should take up four minutes.

Mr. McDermid: The Minister of whatever it is now—they keep moving him around—says that I am taking up four minutes. I think it is important to put this on the record. The Minister takes up far too much time in the House as it is. He has no right to criticize any other Member of Parliament in the House of Commons for taking up time.

Let me quote from Section 56. It reads:

Without restricting the generality of Section 3—

We have to go back to Section 3. It reads:

—there shall be included in computing the income of a taxpayer for a taxation year, the amount of any grant received in the year under a prescribed program of the Government of Canada relating to home insulation or energy conservation by the taxpayer, other than a married taxpayer who resided with his spouse at the time the grant was received and whose income for the year is less than his spouse's income for the year, or the spouse of the taxpayer with whom he resided at the time the grant was received, if the spouse's income for the year is less than the taxpayer's income for the year to the extent that the amount is not required by paragraph 12(1)(u) to be included in computing his or his spouse's income for the year or a subsequent year.

I see one of the Hon. Members from Montreal looking puzzled, asking what I am saying.

Mr. Tousignant: I am listening.

Mr. McDermid: What did it say? That was Mr. MacInnis' and our point exactly. I will give him the translation, for his benefit as well as mine. It means that if you receive a home insulation or energy conservation grant you have to include it in income. Unless your spouse has higher income, then he or she has to report it. That is all that it says.

Would it not be so much simpler for the poor taxpayer and the poor Member of Parliament who has to try to wade through this monster if it were put into that kind of language? When the Government begins to play with the tax law, I challenge it to take the tax law that it has now and put it into some semblance of order so that the individual at home who has to fill out the tax form can understand what he or she is doing. It is becoming increasingly complicated for Canadians to pay tax.

While we are discussing the tax Bill, I would also like to comment on the Department of Revenue. I have with me a file from a case that involves a reassessment of an individual who started a full time horse-breeding operation. The Ministry of Revenue forced him into bankruptcy, and I mean forced into bankruptcy. They have probably the most effective collection agency in the world.

I am not sure of the experience of other Hon. Members, but for some reason there has been an inordinate amount of bullying by the Ministry of Revenue in the last year. There has also been an inordinate number of rebates for which my office has taken considerable time in attempting to locate. Most of them, quite coincidentally, are over $1,000. It makes one wonder if they are not holding back those funds as long as possible because the Government is shy of cash over there. Obviously, it is shy of cash because we will be debating shortly its request to borrow $5 billion. It has already borrowed approximately $31 billion in the last 20 months. And we will be debating about another $5 billion.

I want to conclude my brief remarks by saying that there are about 12 sections in Bill C-139 that we feel are wrong and on which I will be concentrating once the Bill goes through committee. Those sections need correction before the Bill is passed.

The Government has caused uncertainty about the economy of this country to every Canadian, including airline employees and even those with life insurance policies. The three budgets have affected absolutely everyone in the country in a negative way. They have caused a great deal of uncertainty. Once the Bill goes to committee, there are a number of items which we think should be withdrawn, and we ask the Government to give careful consideration to those changes.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, anyone who has been listening to this debate on income tax amendments will have detected a theme which is quite significant. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who was the first speaker on this side of the House on the amendment, pointed out that the cause of all the trouble was that the philosophy of those who enforce the Income Tax Act was wrong. That philosophy is that the money belongs to the tax collector and not to the individual who earned it. This philosophy, that the individual has to prove his right to his own money, is the cause of the problem. This is true whether it applies to businessmen, farmers or other individuals.

We heard the same theme from the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil). Hardworking people simply do not understand that philosophy.

After the Benson reforms came in nearly a decade ago, schools were opened for accountants all across the country to study them. Every accountant who attended those schools has confessed to me that he is still unable to understand the system even after attending such a school. Yet they are the people from whom we have to seek help to fill out a simple income tax statement. The point originally made by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West is still true.

Years ago, newspapermen used to sit in the gallery and listen to the debates. One journalist in particular made a living as a humourist as a sideline. His humour took the form of reading the instructions in the telephone book on how to operate the telephone. It was the most humorous dialogue on a serious matter that one would want to hear. Eventually, Bell Telephone amended the directions to make them more understandable.

That is the advice that we are giving the Government. This has gone beyond a joke. We have heard two examples in the House today from Members who read sections of the Income Tax Act. The humour is there. Even a self-confessed schoolteacher cannot understand it. Even the son of a Minister cannot understand it.

My point is obvious. The remarks that were made by the accountant, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid), were that no more changes should be made. His conclusion on the whole matter was, "Please do not make any more changes or amendments until we learn to understand what has already been done". However, his second proposal, which was not referred to by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown, is that what we must do during the next two years is to have someone rewrite the Income Tax Act in English.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Bell Telephone manages to do it, the insurance companies now produce policies in English, and rather than being a subject of humour, let the matter be handled on the assumption that the ordinary person should be able to understand what he is being asked to fill out.

This subject is as old as our history. Ever since the Normans came into England and took around the Doomsday Book and recorded every little thing in one's house or cottage which was then taxed, people have been fighting tax collectors. I have seen a nation ruined trying to fight tax collectors. We are not far behind in Canada. The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) intimated what the danger was. France is a nation on its knees, economically, because it has developed as a nation which has been able to beat the tax laws, and we are very rapidly moving into that position in Canada. In order that we survive that ruin must be dissolved in the long run.

I want to make a positive suggestion which applies not only to the Bill but also to what I hope comes forth in the next month or two in the new budget. I think that every Party in the House would like to see the nation move more and more toward the most reliable form of energy that we have, namely, renewable energy. As I consider the budgets and programs of the Government over the last number of years in trying to carry this philosophy out, supported by all Parties, it has been ruined in every case by the language when it is put into law, ruined by the regulations which come out to administer the law, and then triply ruined by the forms one must fill in to gain use of these particular programs.

My suggestion is very simple. Let us write our regulations in the budget paper on renewable energy very simply. Let us simply say in the budget issued in the spring that we have been trying for years to use renewable energy in preference to non-renewable energy for the safety of the nation and also because in many cases it is cheaper, cleaner, and in our interest to do it. There should simply be a resolution which says, in English, that all the tax laws applying to renewable energy companies and individuals who utilize renewable energy are the same for the people who use the energy as for the mining industry and for the oil and gas industry. That simple clause should be written in clear, Anglo-Saxon English, and then it should be ensured that the regulations speak just as frankly. We should get this renewable energy industry going. Since the Government is—

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order. Briefly, I just wonder if the Hon. Member might indicate whether he would also include it in French.

Mr. Stewart: Yes, and in Portuguese too?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member displays an unhappy characteristic. He is a barrack room lawyer, and if he does not understand what that means, he should join the Army.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I know exactly what it means. I am just tired of the lecture.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada, for their economic and security interests, want to shift from one form of energy to another. It is cheaper, cleaner and safer. The Government wants it. The Opposition wants it. We have had task forces and reports, yet because of the very nature of the language in which we draft our laws, most of the Income Tax Act, the regulations and then the forms one must fill out, the program flows to a dead halt. All the Government can do is to offer grants, and if the grants are unobtainable because of the complexity of the forms, the program stops there, too.

I make that suggestion seriously because I see hundreds of individuals across this country and smaller companies going out to do their level best to translate the research of scientists into a provable operation of manufacturing in Canada. Developments in the field of renewable energy are of use to us and I see the tremendous potential. One can understand the feelings that I have when I speak on this subject.

The Minister knows that I have been speaking in this manner ever since I came here. One of my opening remarks as a new Member 26 years ago was that there is more money in trees than in grass, and I am not referring to marijuana. I am referring to grass used to produce grains or anything else. Everyone laughed at that time. It was great for the cartoonists across the country, showing me as Johnny Appleseed. I did not have the figures then which I have compiled in the last 20 years.

At this very time I am holding in my hand the most recent report of the University of Saskatchewan, which has done something which we have known about for 25 years. It has taken the ordinary aspen poplar tree and, on a continuous basis, is harvesting 42 pounds of oil from every 100 pounds of sawdust from the aspen tree.

The people of Ontario are on their posteriors economically, and the people of Quebec are sitting in the same spot. People are unemployed all over the place, in the Maritimes, all through the northern Prairies and all through British Columbia. Here a group of university people have demonstrated what the scientists said years ago was possible, that one could take 42 pounds of oil from a common poplar tree. We know from the American work that we can take 90 pounds of oil from 100 pounds of pine tree. I am simply asking, what stops us from moving in and using it? It is the way in which the tax laws are framed and the regulations come out. Instead of the so-called marginal farmers of Ontario trying to get along on an income of $30 or $50 per acre of production, that same acre, growing trees, could serve a useful purpose and provide 500 gallons of oil every year. This would be sulphur-free, cleaner, safer and, of course, much cheaper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If Hon. Members of the Official Opposition are interested in debating the second reading stage of the Bill even longer, I would confirm that we on this side are willing to give the unanimous consent required to sit beyond normal hours. I would like to believe that the Opposition is not intending to filibuster, and I therefore seek unanimous consent to sit beyond six o'clock tonight in order to complete the second reading stage of the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Filibuster.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, we have heard comments by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), and I would like to comment, before I go any further, on one of the very striking points he made. He said, "Please put our legislation in a language that the layman can understand". I have heard this plea ever since I have been a Member of this House. It seems to me that when the Government drafts a Bill, the more it can confuse the people of the land, the happier it is. The Government does not want the people to know what is in the Bill or to understand it. Nobody can argue that. Consider the metric system. There was no better way to inflate prices and confuse people than through the implementation of the metric system.

When Bill C-139 first came before the House I contacted a group of chartered accountants in my constituency, well before Christmas. I asked them what their opinion of this Bill was. They said it was very confusing and was discrimination against the small businessman and the small farmer because it forced them to hire chartered accountants that specialized in their field to make out their forms. They no longer could cope with this at home around the kitchen table. This does not just apply to the small businessman and to the farmer; this applies to the rank and file.

The new rules, they said, would require them to re-evaluate the structure of their business and probably re-organize, and that such a re-organization would be too costly for the small income businesses which would have to absorb any additional costs of the new set-up. They said that intermediate and larger companies would be forced to evaluate the cost value of re-organization before the end of the year, and the question was whether or not the cost of a re-organization would be offset by the benefits reaped by adjusting to the new laws. They said that big businesses that could readily absorb accountants' charges for finding loopholes in the new legislation are the only ones which easily benefit from this Bill and, again, this Government has discriminated against the farmer, the small businessman, and the labourers in our society.

On a point by point basis, these are some of the comments that this firm of chartered accountants made to me. On the use of employer's automobile and imputed interest benefits, they said:

> Computation of these benefits will be more time consuming and therefore compliance becomes more expensive from an information return preparer's point of view.

Shortly after Christmas, I received a letter from a constituent who had been forced to close his business for the reasons that:

> A small business or farmer who is paying 14 to 16 per cent interest for inventory or equipment capital cannot be competitive with larger organizations.

He said that a small business or farmer does not have the high volume turnover to enable him to pay for these costs, coupled with the high interest rates of 14 to 16 per cent, which he is paying.

He also said that:

> A small business or farmer is a self-employed individual and cannot support through his own labour a 14 to 16 per cent interst rate.

He cannot support this interest rate, plus the cost of the bookkeeping involved.

Concerning the reason why Government laws and policies cause small businesses to fail or close their doors, the reason given was:

> A small business does not have the resources to comply with every Government law and/or policy which can amount to as many as 20 separate agencies or departments.
> A small business or farmer does not have the time or capabilities to keep abreast of new, changed or violations of all Government laws and/or policies.
> A small business or farmer does not have the impact to alter or formulate Government laws and/or policies that may upset or jeopardize their future.

As to the reason why the economic and competitive forces have reduced the ability of the small business or farmer to survive, he said:

> Big business and big Government limits the choice of self direction.
> Big business and big Government thwarts the small business and farmer from maintaining a competitive pricing policy.
> Big business and big Government create laws and policies that control the initiative and ingenuity of small businesses and farmers.
> Big business and big Government tax the small business and farmer beyond their will to survive.

In conclusion, he recommended:

> I have devoted a lot of time to putting these thoughts on paper. They reflect not just our situation but many others across the length and breadth of this country. Any advice or help that you can give to assist us in our financial hardship would be most appreciated.

I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), what can I tell that gentleman? Telling him that he is but one of many in the same situation will not solve his problem. How can I say that it is not the Government's intention to regulate or to tax the small-businessmen out of business when Bill C-139, which increases the regulations and the taxes imposed is being discussed? How can I tell a farmer that Bill C-139 will not hurt him when the Bill limits the payment period of capital gains tax to five years if the property is sold outside the family, and ten years if it is sold or transferred to the children? He will have to pay taxes on money not yet received.

The point made by this constituent's letter is quite clear. Recovery in this country will not take place until this Government realizes that it must get off the backs of the small businesses, farmers and the private sector in general. The Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen has been co-operating constructively with the Minister of Finance in an attempt to make him realize this. This Bill is a backward step in this process. I urge the Government to reconsider.

Another thing I want to draw to the attention of the House is this. Last year they moved, for a portion of my constituency, the postal address and postal station for income tax. It was taken to Sudbury. I think we have a very effective Minister in Sudbury and probably 500 employees look very nice in his community, but my people, which number many thousands, were always used to sending their income tax returns to Belleville. Why was this done? Was this a cost sharing program by the Government or was it some more of this rank patronage that exists within the ranks of this Government here today? This is just another case where dollars and cents could have been saved and a small portion would have been withdrawn from the backs of the taxpayers, the small-businessmen, the labour community and the farmers within our country. But this goes on. How can we have any sympathy for a Government which carries on practices like this? It is time that the people of Canada woke up and said, "We have had enough of this."

I hope that the Minister will pay some attention to these remarks coming from this side of the House. I notice that it is the Members of the Conservative Party who are standing up here and preaching for the people in need today. We do not hear too much from the other Parties, only the odd interjection. This is what is taking time and costing the Government money. Let us get on with the business of the country and bring out sane and sound legislation.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, just now, I made an offer to the Opposition parties to find out whether they were acting in good faith and whether they were really interested in working productively in Parliament, and also whether they were prepared to give unanimous consent for the House to work a little harder than usual by sitting after six o'clock—under the New Standing Orders, we are not obliged to sit evenings—because the Bill now before the House is particularly important and urgent. A number of Progressive Conservative Members have already spoken, in turn, to the Bill, and if they were really anxious to have this legislation passed, they would agree to sit a little later than six o'clock to have the second reading stage concurred in. In the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, if Hon. Members are prepared to listen to my offer to the Progressive Conservative Party, and if they are really anxious to see Parliament function ... Mr. Speaker, I think I should be given an opportunity to speak. The Opposition Whip is baying like a bloodhound to stop me from having my say.

• (1750)

I may, if the Hon. Member wants to hear me, express myself in his language.

[Translation]

Here is my proposal to the Opposition, Mr. Speaker. I do not intend to present a motion. I do not intend to oblige Hon. Members to muster twenty-five votes against a motion I could present under the new Standing Orders. I am asking them to show the Canadian people whether they really want tax refunds to be made as soon as possible, and they can speed up the process by accepting—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. President of the Privy Council intend to present a motion? What does he intend to do right now?

Mr. Pinard: An interesting question, Mr. Speaker, and I am going to answer it right away. I intend to repeat what I have just said. Before you asked the question, I had just finished explaining that I did not intend to present a motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall repeat the question. Is the Hon. Minister raising a point of order?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part in the debate. I believe I am entitled to ten minutes, and if I am not allowed to speak, I shall sit down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In that case, the Hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. Pinard: First of all, on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the unanimous consent of the House to sit after six o'clock, in order to give Progressive Conservative Members an opportunity to continue debate on second reading and subsequently refer the Bill to a Committee of the Whole House.

I am therefore asking formally, on a point of order, for the unanimous consent of the House to sit after the usual time of adjournment and complete second reading of the Bill this evening, so that Canadians can receive their tax refunds as soon as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The President of the Privy Council has asked for the unanimous consent of the House to sit after six o'clock this evening.

Is there unanimous consent, yes or no?

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in reply to a suggestion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard). I would point out that we have organized our debate to have speakers here today. We have other Members who may wish to speak on the next occasion the President of the Privy Council deems to call this Bill, which he claims we are stalling. We have the speakers. Those opposite do not seem prepared to support the Bill at this stage. I am afraid we cannot give unanimous consent.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, there are one or two points that I want to deal with during the course of the debate. One has to do with the lack of provision—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, could you call for order. One point I want to make in a very short submission has to do with the lack of provision in this Bill to allow for tax incentives for the renovation of heritage properties in Canada. While we had a great many reservations about the November 1981 budget, many of us were pleased to see a provision which got rid of one of the incentives for destroying heritage property in this country. For the sake of those Members and for Canadians who were concerned about the preservation of our long-standing structures and the labour of love over the past century which has gone into the creation and then the maintenance of these, we were pleased to see that provision in November 1981.

The community of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and my own of Nelson, B.C. have a great deal at stake in the maintenance of the programs of the Heritage Canada Foundation. I live in what is probably one of the oldest communities in western Canada. It is not just a few people on a committee but a host of citizens across this country who feel very strongly about our heritage and about these buildings, which have been part of the history not only of our own families but of those we have worked with and known over the years.

We do not want a series of strip cities across Canada. We do not want to see repeated in this country Chicken-Little joints stretching for miles on end, where one end of the country begins to look exactly like the other. We all have our own individual history. This makes us unique and special.

Surely it is not too much to ask that the Government give special consideration to the representations it has received from myself, other Members, communities and cities across the country asking it to go the second step. In November 1981 it dealt with the former incentive to the destruction of heritage buildings. It could now decide in a general or in a specific way to deal with heritage sites in terms of certain dates of construction and give special tax incentives. This would help save what is left of the cores and the history of various communities.

When our heritage buildings are destroyed, a little of each of us and a little of this country dies. I ask, on behalf of thousands of Canadians and hundreds of communities vitally concerned, that at the appropriate time the Government give consideration to putting in place such measures.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, if only I could give to the House Leader quick and easy passage of a Bill that he says is somehow for the benefit of Canadians. I wonder how this Doomsday Book, which is in fact the Income Tax Act, will benefit Canadians by its passage. It will not benefit them. It will hurt the very productive generator that could give us recovery. Instead of its being packed with possibilities of creating recovery for this economy—

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to welcome back the Hon. Member. However, I wish he would speak to the Bill. We would be glad to listen to his speech for once.

Mr. Wenman: I wish it were not drawing so close to six o'clock. I could give a bit of information about the damage this income tax Bill is doing and the damage this Government is doing to the small business community in my riding. When I get a small-businessman that has been taken down one, two, three, four, the whole community starts collapsing as a result of a repressive Government which demands too much of the productivity of this nation. I want to talk about this, not for one minute or half a minute, but for ten minutes today and ten minutes the day after and every other chance I get. The economy of this nation is in trouble right now.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL PARKS—QUALITY OF BANFF WATER SUPPLY. (B) IMPLEMENTATION OF STUDY'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, for over a year now, the people of Banff and the tourists who visit Banff have been plagued with a disease called "Giardia". A Public Health Notice is placed in most hotels and restaurants and other public places which reads:

> Due to the presence of Giardia in the Banff water supply, until further notice, all residents and visitors are advised to boil water (for five minutes) prior to drinking, and use boiled water for cleaning teeth, washing of fresh vegetables, food and other non-cooked food.
> Parks Canada, March 29th, 1982

Giardia is an organism which exists in two forms: first, as a free-living trophocyte—the reproductive stage; second, as an encapsulated cyst which is the most commonly found form outside the host organism. Only the cystic form is infectious to man. The trophocyte is destroyed during passage through the early stages of the digestive process while the cyst survives the initial stages of digestion until it reaches the small intestine where environmental conditions support the emergence of the trophocyte form.

The effect of Giardia on people includes diarrhea, abdominal cramps and weight loss, with recovery in two to six weeks; a small percentage of those suffering from Giardiasis may have severe disease.

Authorities who have had experience with the Giardia cyst, advise that there are two methods to eliminate Giardia cysts from water. One consists of removal by filtration and the other entails the use of chemical treatment such as chlorine or iodine. One authority states that 99 per cent of all cysts introduced into a water treatment plant can be removed by the processes of coagulation, flocculation, sedimentation, and dual-media filtration.

From what I have already said everyone can understand the concern of the people of Banff, those who have already contracted the disease and those who must live with the possibility of doing so. If the water is not treated within a reasonable time, it will mean a reduced number of tourists for Banff and tourism is the life blood of Banff. The Banff water system now has no facilities except chlorination to control the Giardia lamblia cysts, and chlorination becomes less effective at temperatures below 5 degrees Centigrade. It is therefore evident that the only way to really purify the Banff water supply is through a filtration water system.

Parks Canada engaged a well-known engineering firm in Calgary to study the situation and a report was issued in July, 1982. The firm of engineers state:

> Current knowledge of treatment processes used to control these cysts indicates that only a relatively sophisticated treatment plant would provide removal with an acceptable level of risk. At the same time such a plant would produce water meeting the drinking water standards all year round. This system, generally known as a 'conventional water treatment plant', would use coagulation, sedimentation, filtration, and disinfection processes.

The engineers recommended six alternatives, the preferred one involving the Bow River gravels aquifer only. The initial cost of Phase I of this would be $10.2 million. This involves the development of the gravels in the Bow River including collector wells and a pump station, construction of a direct filtration water treatment plant on Tunnel Mountain, relocation of the existing heating plant to Tunnel Mountain, construction of raw water transmission main connecting the water intake of the water treatment plant and construction of a treated water storage reservoir relocating the present system to standby.

From the above it should be noted that the cost will be substantial, but the Department has been taking more than $6 million out of Banff each year and the water supply is a basic requirement. Every possible step should be taken to eliminate this parasite from the water of Banff at the earliest possible time.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly nice to see at least one Tory who wants to sit beyond six o'clock.

Mr. Mitges: How many have you got?

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has shown continuing interest in the problem of Giardia Lamblia which has been causing discomfort to the residents of Banff. He has asked when the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) will authorize a water filtration plant in Banff to eliminate the possibility of the water supply being a source of the parasite.

[Translation]

As the Minister explained to the Hon. Member in the House on February 8 of this year, Environment Canada asked a firm of consulting engineers, Stanley Associated Limited, to prepare a study to determine how the problem could be corrected.

• (1805)

[English]

The Department is now following the recommendations of that study, recommendations which will lead Banff to a parasite-free water supply.

Of all the options presented in the engineering study, each included the construction of a storage reservoir for the water. A contract for the construction of this reservoir has been prepared, and it is expected that the reservoir will be ready for use by the fall of 1983.

The Hon. Member knows that because of the efforts of Parks Canada staff in drilling wells and bringing water into the system the incidence of Giardia has already been much reduced. The consultants recommended wells as the best source of Giardia-free water. This is why Parks Canada proceeded with the drilling of the wells immediately. Only in the event that volume from the wells was not sufficient would treatment of surface water by filtration become necessary. If these measures are proved to be ineffective, then installing the most expensive option, that of a water filtration plant, would be the next consideration.

I am happy, however, to report that the results of very recent test drilling have indicated that more than sufficient volume of well water is available to meet the requirements of the town.

The Minister understands the Member's sense of urgency in having this problem dealt with as speedily as possible. Once the new source is brought on stream with the existing wells this year, and after the reservoir has been constructed, the possibility of the town water being a source of Giardia lamblia infection should be eliminated.

DISASTERS—TRAINING OF CREWS—REGULATORY CHANGES. (B) APPEARANCE OF MINISTERS BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, a year ago today one of the worst marine tragedies in the history of Canada occurred on the east coast when the Ocean Ranger, an oil drilling rig, foundered and capsized in a bad storm with the loss of 84 lives. Many of those people had lived in my district of St. John's West.

A week ago we questioned the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) in the House, in light of the report that had been made in the United States by a national board of that Government. It found that the tragedy was due to the failure of the management of the oil drilling rig to properly train the crew. It found that the crew was not properly trained in the operation of the ballast system of the rig. It found that they were not properly trained how to manually operate the ballast control system if anything happened to the electrical system. It found that there was no proper safety equipment and the like available.

There have been no findings by any Government agency in Canada. The Government of Canada has never come before this House or before a committee of this House to tell us what, in its view, happened, or to tell us what it is doing to see that this does not happen again.

Last week the Minister was asked if he could assure the House that the deficiencies the board in the United States found to be the cause of the tragedy had been corrected. He was asked if he could assure the House that proper safety procedures are being followed and that proper equipment for the men on the oil rigs is available? His astounding answer is recorded at p. 22649 of Hansard as follows:

Madam Speaker, I cannot, and I am sorry about that.

Hundreds of thousands of people are sorry about that, Mr. Speaker. How could a Minister stand in this House a year after the tragedy and not be able to assure the people of Canada that proper safety procedures are now being followed, that proper equipment is now being used on the oil rigs and that the deficiencies have been corrected?

Today when I had a chance to question the Minister again, he frankly admitted that he knew nothing about it and asked me to direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall). He knew nothing about it. When given an opportunity to say that steps have been taken by the Government, the parliamentary secretary said nothing, he knew nothing, he acted like a know-nothing and, in fact, he said that I had never raised the issue before. If he goes into the files in his Department he will see the letters that I wrote to the Minister of the day, that fugitive from energy who is now in finance. I wrote on May 4 last year, on June 3 last year, on July 28 last year, asking him to refer these matters to the proper parliamentary committee so that he could bring the public and Parliament up to date on what steps the Government had taken to change the regulations and the inspection procedures: has he appointed more inspectors; are they now ensuring that ballast training is being given? The Minister wrote me on September 9 and coolly refused to do that. He said it might invite partisan wrangling in the House. He said a Royal Commission had been appointed to look into the matters. We are not interested in waiting another two or three years for a Royal Commission report while everybody has gone to sleep, with perhaps another tragedy occurring, Mr. Speaker.

We want to know from the Government now what regulations it has changed and how. Is COGLA negligent or not negligent? What inspection procedures has it changed or how? What training courses is the Government now insisting on? I am told that there is still no course required for ballast control operators—there is still no course required by the Government. They are supposed to take a two-week stability course, but there are no written guidelines for such a course. The officials cannot say whether rig personnel might have to undergo a certification program similar to the requirements of the Department of Transport. They require ship officers to have at least a two-year program in ballast control when they go on ships. What kind of administration is this? It is criminal negligence.

The people who have brothers and fathers working on oil rigs are entitled to know from the Government what steps it has taken in the last year to change the situation. The Government claimed to have jurisdiction. The Minister of Transport, who deals with maritime matters, the sea and marine matters, rose in the House last week pretending he knew everything, but giving us no assurances; and this week he rose to say that it is not his jurisdiction, that it is the jurisdiction of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. What do they know in the Department of Energy about marine stability and ballast controls? Surely that is the province of the Ministry of Transport.

When the Parliamentary Secretary answers me today, I implore him to tell the House that the answer of the Minister of Transport of last Wednesday was incorrect, that the Government can and will give assurances that proper safety procedures are now being followed, and give assurance on behalf of the Government that proper equipment is now available on oil rigs and that the deficiencies of the National Transportation Board have now been corrected. That is his duty. If he cannot do that, then he and the Minister of Transport should resign because they should not have the effrontery or the gall to stand in the House one year later and not be able to give those assurances when there are hundreds of men out on the rigs today.

We had a storm just two days ago in Newfoundland. It was not as bad as the one last year. We will have more storms this year. This Government which claims jurisdiction cannot give Canadian people the assurance that it has made changes.

We are in the shameful situation where the United States, a foreign Government agency, gives a report and we get nothing; when the Members of the sovereign House cannot get Ministers to come before committees to answer. The Minister has said that he will come before the Committee. He cannot do that too soon. He must do so next week.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked what changes in procedures have been implemented to prevent a recurrence of what we all know as the Ocean Ranger tragedy. I am pleased to advise the Hon. Member on this matter and to reassure workers who are employed in offshore operations of the safety measures which are in force.

All workers on offshore drillships and related equipment have been provided with survival suits. Rescue boat equipment has been upgraded. Marine emergency training has been accelerated. These types of measures will ensure survival in the unlikely event of an accident.

The qualifications of all supervisory personnel employed in offshore operations have been reviewed and assessed. This is an ongoing procedure to ensure that all persons in control of an operation are thoroughly trained in all of its phases.

Operators of offshore drilling rigs are required to ensure the safety of their equipment through thorough inspections and a certification process. The inspections are carried out by certification societies and by the Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration. The inspection societies include: the American Bureau of Shipping, Lloyds of London Register of Shipping, and the Norwegian shipping authority.

The responsibility of these agencies is to certify that a drilling vessel which is about to be moved to a drilling location is safe and fully operational, and to perform follow-up inspections to maintain the high operational standards required for ocean drilling. In other words, the operator must keep its certification valid.

The Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration makes its own inspections in addition to those carried out by international shipping authorities.

After the loss of the Ocean Ranger, all drilling vessels were immediately checked for recertification. The Canada Oil and Gas Lands Administration in particular has required that oil companies ensure that ballast control systems can be operated by emergency power and that instructions are clearly understood by every crew member.

The co-operation of industry is indicated by the fact that a joint task force of the East Coast Petroleum Operators Association and the Arctic Petroleum Operators Association is conducting a study of operational standards and will be reporting to the Government soon. This recommendation will further assist in the certification process.

• (1815)

The actions which I have briefly reviewed provide assurance that safety of operation is a matter of most importance in the development of Canada's oil and gas resources in offshore areas. As this development proceeds, with its great potential for regional and national benefits, safety will remain the first requirement.

TRADE—REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF SURTAX ON IMPORTED POTATOES. (B) EFFECT OF IMPORTS ON FRASER VALLEY FARMS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, at a time when the small business community has been beaten to its knees and is fighting for its life, the Department of National Revenue has displayed a new level of aggressiveness, a new zeal for efficiency in collecting past taxes. That is why I rose in the House two weeks ago to ask the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) about this new brand of zealousness which displays itself in National Revenue garnishee 100 per cent of the income of small businesses on accounts outstanding. This matter came to my attention some weeks ago. Since that time, and since I raised it in the House, I have realized to my shock that this seems to be a kind of epidemic across Canada in which all National Revenue offices seem to be engaged.

I want to put on the record some of the things that have been going on in the name of National Revenue. One taxpayer told me that officials send notice by registered mail to the clients of a company whose accounts are outstanding, but the company is notified by regular mail. Company officials face the embarrassment of having someone with an account receivable phone up and ask, "Is your company still solvent? Is it in trouble with the Government?" This procedure has been confirmed by officials from National Revenue.

The company in question asked the tax people, "What happens if you take all of my income, because I will not be able to pay my employees?" Revenue officials replied "That's your trouble. You can go to the Labour Relations Board", a hearing of which would be six months down the road. When asked, "When will I be notified?" National Revenue replied, "You will get that notice in a day or three". That was a nice flippant response. When the owner of the company indicated that payment was coming, the official—and I have this confirmed in a letter from National Revenue—not only wanted to know when the money was coming but from where the taxpayer was going to get it; as though it was any business of National Revenue where the money was coming from.

Those are just some of the things that are going on.

I want to read into the record a letter from National Revenue to this person.

In reference to the Revenue Official, the letter reads in part:

—agrees that he inquired about the source of the funds, but advises that his interest related to the facts that there would be additional monies due for the month of November 1982 remittance and on your personal tax account.

That does not matter, Mr. Speaker; it is none of the Department's business.

I have a letter here from Revenue Canada Taxation to an accounting firm. I want you to notice, Mr. Speaker, the kind of language that is being used. This letter reads in part:

—I do not expect my collection staff to be satisfied with partial payments or tentative arrangements. Had details of accounts receivable not been given by telephone, it would have been—duty to attend the company's offices and obtain this information from the books and records for the purpose of issuing demands on third parties.

I further fully support the refusal to withdraw such demands until payment has been received. This follows the department's policy set out in paragraph 11 of Information Circular 75-16R—

I wish National Revenue was that careful following regulations outlined in some of its other pamphlets.

Another notice came to me just today. A constituent spoke to officials regarding a return going back to 1977-1978. He thought he had worked out the problem by agreeing to have correct RHOP receipts issued by the bank to the Department, as well as providing receipts for expenses incurred against commission. The Department claims he owes them $9,506.

What did Revenue do? It got in touch with the bank in question, through a third party notice. As a result, the Registered Home Ownership Plan has been terminated. The $9,506.99 has gone to the Receiver General and the balance has been given to the taxpayer. This is all taxable income for 1983, which raises his income level. Therefore, he will be taxed at a higher rate. In addition, he will never be able to open another RHOP, since only one can be issued to an individual in his lifetime. That was the conduct of National Revenue.

Finally, I have a letter from a distraught mother of a young businessman. She says:

> My son is in business for himself, until this recession making a decent, honest living for himself, his wife and three small children, as a fireplace builder and bricklayer.
> Several times in the past year he has done jobs for people, who have been unable to pay him, either the work he has done or the materials he has used, thus making him unable to meet some of his debts.
> Last October the income tax people got on to him for what he owed them. They wanted to know what he was doing about it. He told what and where he was working, and that he hoped to be able to pay his taxes from his earnings for that job. They instantly, the same day, garnisheed his payments from the firm he was working for, so that he had to scrimp to pay for the materials used.
> This past week, the income tax people have phoned again, to say that the aforementioned firm had gone bankrupt, so that they—the income tax—had not been able to get the garnisheed money from them. So, back to my son again, $6,000 plus the interest which has accumulated since October. I think that this is monstrous! My son might as well be on welfare, has worked himself to death for people who will not or cannot pay, and the Government.

This is the kind of attitude the Government displays when businessmen are on their knees.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether my answer is altogether relevant to the Hon. Member's question. I am a little embarrassed, but nevertheless, I shall give the House the details I have here.

The Hon. Member is probably aware that as a result of favourable growing and harvesting conditions in 1982, the potato harvest in Canada and the United States was very abundant. Prices paid to producers throughout Canada, and not only in British Columbia, are low. However, because of increased imports of potatoes in Western Canada, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) asked last November that a surcharge be placed on all eating potatoes imported in the Thunder Bay and Western customs regions.

After examining this request, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) concluded that a surcharge was not the best way to deal with the situation. The reasons for his decision were forwarded to associations representing the interests of British Columbia's potato producers.

The Hon. Member is probably aware that the authority to impose a surcharge lies with the Minister of Finance, pursuant to Section 8(2) of the Customs Tariff. Consequently, the Minister of Agriculture has no authority to impose the surcharge. It should also be pointed out that potatoes coming from the U.S. are not dumped on the Vancouver market, as might be implied by the Hon. Member's question. By definition, dumping is a practice that consists in selling goods on foreign markets at prices that are lower than those set for the domestic market. Since the price in the United States is the same, there is no question of dumping in the strictly legal sense of the term.

INDUSTRY

PETITION RESPECTING FUTURE OF PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I rise to remind the House of the fact that I recently tabled in the House of Commons a petition containing 11,000 names, which petition is an indication of the concern of people for the future of the petrochemical industry.

True to the generosity of spirit of the people who signed such petition, they were not seeking short and long-term assistance for the oil based petrochemical industry alone, but for the petrochemical industry as a whole. These people are also realistic enough to appreciate that a Government decision based on the task force report will take some time because there is not unanimity of approach, and any such decision must take into account the views expressed by the oil based and gas based petrochemical industries, plus the concerns of Quebec, Ontario, and Alberta, and the fact that inappropriate action could lead to countervailing measures from the United States.

The people concerned and the people employed in this industry, however, have a right to expect an early decision, and hopefully one that provides for short-term and long-term assistance.

BALTIC EVENING

CALL FOR RECOGNITION OF HONORARY CONSULS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, prior to the changing of the Standing Orders there was a Motion under Standing Order 43 last year which was joined in by the Member for London West (Mr. Burghardt), and the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky), which read in these terms:

> That this House, in recognition of the contribution to Canada of Canadians of Latvian, Lithuanian and Estonian descent, welcome their honorary consul and representatives of the respective communities to the Tenth Annual Baltic Evening on Parliament Hill.

That motion was accepted unanimously at that time by the House. It is no longer possible for us to move such a Motion, but it is appropriate that, on the occasion of the Eleventh Annual Baltic Evening on Parliament Hill, all Members of Parliament commemorate the contribution to Canada of Canadians of Latvian, Lithuanian, and Estonian descent, and on their behalf I make this request.

For many years it has been the wish of countless Canadians that the Honorary Consuls of Estonia and Latvia join the Honorary Consul of Lithuania and be recognized in the diplomatic corps publications of the Government of Canada. I know that this request is supported by Members of all Parties in this House as a simple yet profound method of honouring those Canadians who walk among us as living reminders of the importance of our rights and freedoms as Canadians.

AGRICULTURE

SUPPORT FOR CANAGREX LEGISLATION

Mr. Maurice Bossy (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, the farmers of my constituency of Kent, joining their brothers and sisters across the country, wish to express their support once again for Bill C-85, an Act to create Canagrex, and to urge the Government to put this Crown export agency in place as soon as possible.

Since this piece of legislation was introduced into the House over a year ago, the support for Canagrex has become more and more evident. Recently, in convention, the 200,000 strong membership of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture once again expressed their support for an agricultural products export agency and its immediate need. The farmers of this country feel, as I do, that agriculture is the industry which can help put our economy back on its feet. The time has come to give the people of Canada an export mechanism to do just that and give this nation an opportunity to expand its agri-food international trade market.

This piece of legislation has been before the House for almost 14 months now. It has spent four months before the Standing Committee on Agriculture where it received 14 amendments. Bill C-85 has been talked about enough; it is now time to act. The farmers of the country look forward to its immediate passage.

PHILOSOPHY OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) belittled remarks by the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) which accurately outlined the consequences of the Government's embrace of socialism. He said:

> We on this side of the House believe in social justice within a free enterprise system.

What a joke! He had not been paying attention to the philosophy of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who stated:

> We have not been able to make it work, the free enterprise system ... that means the Government is going to take a larger role in running institutions.

And it has been. When asked by a group of students what type of society he would choose—socialist or capitalist, this was the Prime Minister's reply:

> Labour Party socialism, or Cuban socialism, or Chinese socialism—

Socialism is nothing more than state control, something abhorrent to Canadians, and we are getting it in spades—state withholding of property rights; state control of communications; state control of energy; state control of culture, state control of agriculture, with closure on the Canagrex Bill, and state destruction of transport and the Armed Forces.

We of the Progressive Conservative Party are the only opposition to this type of control by the state.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council may naively believe that all this, coupled with repressive taxation, the proliferation of non-audited Crown Corporations, arbitrary metric and bilingualism, equates with his espousal yesterday of "social justice within a free enterprise system". It is not ours. Loss of economic freedom means loss of individual freedom. His constituents and other Canadians recognize the Government's slippery slide to socialism. He obviously does not.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky).

MULTICULTURALISM

SUGGESTED REVISION OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, this day is of special significance to the Canadian Lithuanian Community as they are remembering the founding of Lithuania on February 16, 1918. The first recorded Lithuanian immigrants to Canada arrived at the beginning of the nineteenth century. Lithuanians will be pleased to see that the second edition of the Languages of the World map has been revised to include language groups such as the Lithuanians. This is to the credit of several multicultural groups who drew this matter to the attention of the Commissioner of Official Languages.

With the official recognition of Canada's multicultural heritage in Section 27 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, it is now time to revise Section 38 of the Official Languages Act. This Section, which refers to language groups other than English or French in a negative fashion, should be rewritten in the positive style found in Section 27 of the Charter.

The role of the Commissioner of Official Languages should be expanded to include the area of multiculturalism, with the Commissioner becoming the Commissioner of Official Languages and Multiculturalism. Furthermore, a conference on bilingualism and multiculturalism should be convened in the near future to re-examine these areas of national significance, and I know that Dauphin would be delighted to host such a conference.

BALTIC EVENING

CONTRIBUTION OF BALTIC PEOPLES TO CANADA

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I would like to add my remarks to those made by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on the subject of Canadians of Baltic heritage.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I must remind all Hon. Members that this opportunity cannot be taken to congratulate groups or offer wishes on the occasion of a national celebration.

We will keep strictly to the purpose of these statements. I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton. I think he barely smuggled in somethinng that was acceptable under the Standing Order. That is where we have to draw the line. I am just reminding Hon. Members.

Mr. Flis: Thank you for the reminder, Madam Speaker. As you know, I always obey the Standing Orders of the House.

To the Government of Canada, multiculturalism is the expression of differing views, traditions and backgrounds of Canadians. It is important to recognize the great contribution that various ethnocultural groups have made to Canada. Many of these people, while able to express their views and traditions freely in this country, are unable to do so in their own homelands. I am speaking today specifically with regard to the Baltic nations, and the Estonians, Latvians, and Lithuanians, a group who have attempted to preserve their culture and heritage in Canada while unable to do so in their countries of origin.

Canada does not recognize de jure the forcible occupation of the Baltic states. It is fitting on the day of the Baltic Evening, and on the day of the sixty-fifth anniversary of the Declaration of the Independence of Lithuania, to remember the contribution that these people have made to Canada.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

FIRING OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER OF LABOUR

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I am not going to congratulate anyone. This is going to be strictly according to the rules. Last week, a Montreal newspaper reported a million-dollar mistake for which the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) must take the responsibility. It all started when Assistant Deputy Minister André Déom, who was hired by the Department of Labour in January 1981, was fired in May 1982. After a dispute with the Deputy Minister, the Government made a private arrangement with Mr. Déom, who since the first of October last year has been receiving $6,700 per month tax free, and will do so for a period of two years, which adds up to a grand total of $160,800 or $280,000 before taxes. Since the Minister of Labour has indicated that it was not his responsibility, that he would have nothing to do with it and that his deputy minister was responsible for managing the Department, and considering the Minister's irresponsibility or incompetence, today I wish to ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), to preserve the credibility of his own government and to immediately remove this Minister who is refusing to discharge his responsibilities.

MEDICAL CARE

STATUS OF PROPOSED CANADA HEALTH ACT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, recently there has been much confusion about the status of the proposed Canada Health Act and the negotiations between the federal Government and the Provinces, and about the nature of this new Act which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) indicated last year she would like to see enacted.

On previous occasions in the House I have asked the Minister whether she would be prepared to table any drafts of the Act which might be in existence. Failing this, it seems to me that she should be prepared to table any subsequent drafts that are developed as improvements to the draft that the Canadian Medical Association is circulating at this point in time. She should also be prepared to refer the whole matter to the Health and Welfare Committee. Canadians who are concerned about the Canada Health Act and want to have an opinion on it before it actually comes to the House could then have a chance to express their views and, no doubt, lend support to any intention of the Government to eliminate extra billing and other ways in which user pay mechanisms are eating away at the principles of medicare.

But, the Minister must do one more thing. She should put some money back on the table, if she wants to recover the moral edge in the medicare debate and have leverage over Progressive Conservative provincial Governments that are hostile to the principles of medicare. She must reverse the cutbacks in federal transfer payments and then seek the support of the Canadian people for a Canada Health Act that will firmly re-establish the five founding principles of medicare.

THE ADMINISTRATION

SIGNING OF CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, the answer to which might well affect his capacity to continue to act as a Minister of the Crown. When he was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did he, on June 30, 1981, sign an agreement between Alastair Gillespie Associates, the federal Government of Canada, and the Government of Nova Scotia, concerning a plan to turn Cape Breton coal into liquid fuel on a commercial basis for use in transportation?

• (1415)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not know whether, under the rules, this question should not be addressed to the current Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, rather than to myself.

An Hon. Member: He is back from Florida.

Mr. Lalonde: I think the questions concerning responsibilities in the administration of different Departments are answered by the Ministers currently in charge.

Mr. Crosbie: Answer the question, Marc.

REASON FOR QUESTIONING MINISTER

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): One of the reasons for which I carefully prefaced my question—

An Hon. Member: Liberal patronage.

Mr. Nielsen: —is explanation enough for directing it to the Minister. I said that the answers to my questions might well affect his capacity to continue to act as a Minister of the Crown.

Did the Minister sign, on June 30, 1981, an agreement between the Government of Canada, the Government of Nova Scotia, and Alastair Gillespie Associates, with respect to a plan to turn Cape Breton coal into liquid fuel on a commercial basis for use in transportation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Again, Madam Speaker, I think the Minister responsible for the Department is in a position to answer that.

Mr. Crosbie: Come on! Stop stalling!

Mr. La Salle: Do you remember?

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, I have the answer to this, and I can immediately tell the Hon. Member that if it were a question of my capacity to fulfil my functions, he does not have to worry. I am able to reach these decisions quite well, and the Prime Minister, also. But as far as the answer to the question is concerned, the question should be addressed to the Minister responsible for the Department.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Very weak applause.

Mr. Nielsen: It is precisely—

Mr. Crosbie: What are you hiding?

Mr. Nielsen: It is precisely, Madam Speaker, the Minister's exercise of judgment that may affect his capacity to continue. However, since, he refuses to answer the question, may I direct the question to the—

Mr. Trudeau: Not since he refused.

Mr. Nielsen: I am sorry, I did not hear the Prime Minister's interjection.

Mr. Trudeau: I said, not since he refused. It is because you misdirected it.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. No debate across the floor, please.

Some Hon. Members: Go get him.

Mr. Trudeau: Right.

Some Hon. Members: We want Joe.

Mr. Nielsen: If the Prime Minister is patient, I will have a question to ask him, to wind up.

Mr. Trudeau: Thank you.

SIGNATORY TO AGREEMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): May I direct this question to the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? Did his predecessor, on behalf of the Government of Canada, on June 30, 1981, sign an agreement between the Government of Canada, the Government of Nova Scotia, and Alastair Gillespie Associates, for the purpose of implementing a plan to turn Cape Breton Coal into liquid fuel on a commercial basis for use in transportation?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am aware of this project. I think it is a project that is a very valid one.

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Chrétien: It involves the development in Cape Breton of some economic activities which are very much needed, and of course I know that Mr. Gillespie is involved. He has been out of the Cabinet for a long time. He is an expert in the field.

Mr. Crosbie: Not long enough.

Mr. Chrétien: I am sure people involved in that project are happy to have an expert working with them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: A translation, Madam Speaker, of that rather weasely answer—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —is an admission that that agreement described by me was in fact signed by his predecessor on behalf of the Government of Canada, involving, as it did, funds ranging from seed money of some $900,000 by three Crown corporations, and a joint investment of $1 million between the federal Government and the Nova Scotia Government—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Nielsen: —to capital put up by Mr. Gillespie and Associates of $25,000.

• (1420)

I want to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to the guidelines that he issued on April 28—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Madam Speaker: Order. I think the Hon. Member could now ask a question about the guidelines, but I feel it would further prolong the question, which was already long, if he quoted from the guidelines. He may ask a question about them, of course.

MINISTERIAL CONDUCT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, on April 28, 1980, the Prime Minister issued guidelines to his Ministers. Mr. Gillespie ceased being a Minister on June 4, 1979. One of those guidelines stipulates, and I read from Appendix 2, paragraph 2 as follows:

In any official dealings with former office holders—

That is Mr. Gillespie.

—Ministers—

That is the Minister of Finance.

—must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

Has the Prime Minister examined the conduct of his previous Minister of Energy, now the Minister of Finance, in order to determine whether there has been compliance with that guideline?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would not think that the guidelines in this instance would refer to the present Minister of Finance; it would refer to the conduct of former Ministers who have—

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Trudeau: If Hon. Members of the Opposition will let me finish—

Mr. Forrestall: You are finished!

An Hon. Member: Dream on.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I know I will never finish dealing with this bunch of fools over here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I take it that calling them a bunch of fools is not unparliamentary. I hear no points of order.

Mr. Crosbie: It is just not true.

An Hon. Member: It is sick.

Madam Speaker: I think we have to make a distinction here. When it is applied to one person in particular it has a different interpretation. I would just remind Hon. Members that this day starts with a "W".

APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister is going to answer that question. Before he does, I would point out that the guidelines I quoted are guidelines for sitting Ministers—Ministers now, Ministers in 1981, and Ministers in 1980.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that the point is whether the transaction was justified and whether it was honourable. If it was, I take it that the Hon. Member has nothing against the Government of Nova Scotia signing this. I take it he has nothing against the former Minister, Mr. Gillespie, signing this, because he is not asking about him.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes I do. There is a guideline covering that, too.

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore, if the people who signed this agreement are honourable, why would the former Minister be dishonourable because he signed an honourable deal?

REQUEST FOR ENFORCEMENT OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have read to the Prime Minister his own guidelines, verbatim, which in effect prohibit a sitting Minister, as he then was—the Minister of Finance as Minister of Energy—from having any dealings with former office holders which provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

The kind of treatment accorded to Mr. Gillespie, where he puts up $25,000 and gets in exchange almost $1.9 million, seems to me to fall within the definition of a form of preferential treatment. Is the Prime Minister going to enforce his own guidelines and call for the resignation of the Minister?

• (1425)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order. Is the Leader of the Opposition seeking the floor for another question?

Mr. Nielsen: Same question.

Madam Speaker: No Minister or the Prime Minister is obligated to answer a question. There is nothing the Chair can do about that.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Prime Minister does not need anyone to run interference for him. Will he answer the question and enforce his own guidelines with respect to the action of his Minister of Finance, which has obviously been improper?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I just want to point out that the reason I did not answer the question was that, in the first phrasing of it, there was no question. It was when the Hon. Member stood again and asked his question. That is why I did not rise, not because I did not want to answer a non-question. The Hon. Member quoted from the guidelines "provide grounds of suspicion or of favour", whatever the words are.

Mr. Nielsen: Preferential treatment.

Mr. Trudeau: That is the issue. Did the conduct of the Minister provide grounds, or was there any grounds in this particular case or particular reason to feel it was dishonourable? That is the question I raise. If there is no allegation that the Government of Nova Scotia or Mr. Gillespie acted improperly, why would the Minister who signed with him act improperly?

Mr. Nielsen: He acted improperly.

Mr. Trudeau: I should like to know the reason there, Madam Speaker. If we talk about providing grounds of improper conduct, surely we must see what those grounds are and how we test them. It is not in the mind of the Hon. Member or in my mind. It is an objective test whether they are doing something wrong or not. If they are doing something which, as the present Minister of Energy says, even in the opinion of the Conservative Government of Nova Scotia provides jobs and is a useful expenditure of public funds, why would the Government Minister be acting dishonourably in a deal which is judged honourable?

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

CANADA-UNITED STATES TEST AND EVALUATION PROGRAM

TELEPHONE CONVERSATION WITH MINISTER IN SRI LANKA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister that also concerns ministerial behaviour. Just an hour ago I talked to the Minister of Justice in Sri Lanka concerning claims made by the Prime Minister in recent days in the House that, when that Minister was Secretary of State for External Affairs, he had made a statement in the House on April 29. The question I put to the Minister of Justice was as follows: does he agree with the Prime Minister that he inadvertently misled the House on April 29? The Minister of Justice refused to answer that question. What he did say was the following, which is interesting, and I quote: "The Prime Minister is the person who determines Government policy."

How does the Prime Minister interpret the refusal by his Minister of Justice to confirm the assertion that he misled the House last April?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can certainly understand the Minister of Justice, being in Sri Lanka on Government business, if he gets a phone call from the Leader of the New Democratic Party concerning some discussion in the House of Commons. I would suspect there would be some trap there and I would not want to answer that kind of question. I would say, "Ed, wait until I come back. I will look at the record and discuss it with you, but what are you phoning me here for?" He is not in a parliamentary forum over there.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, what the Prime Minister had to say, if it pertained to all the facts, would be entirely reasonable. However, the Minister of Justice made it clear to me that he had been briefed on the exchange that had taken place in the House in the past couple of days. He knew in short what the facts of the past two days were all about. I would like to ask the Prime Minister this. Is it not a little unusual that a Minister who is responsible to him, when confronted with the claim made by his Prime Minister that he had inadvertently misled the House last April, refuses to confirm that? Then he goes on to add that it is the Prime Minister who determines policy. The implication of that would seem to me to be that he, Mr. MacGuigan, stands by what he said, and is implying that the Prime Minister is doing some swift changing of history in terms of what transpired between last April and the present. Would the Prime Minister comment on that?

• (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, to be perfectly blunt, if I received a phone call like that from the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party, when I was half way around the world, about something which is going on in Parliament and apparently showed a contradiction between Ministers, I would tell him to "drop dead". I would tell him that I would be back in a few days and would be able to deal with the question then. If the Leader of the New Democratic Party is asking for my comment, that is it. But if he really wants to get to the substance of the issue, as his seatmate did yesterday, I would give the same answers, Madam Speaker.

I would concede from the outset that the Government had been contemplating the possibility of testing the Cruise. We knew that this was at the back of the mind of the American administration when it was asking for a weapons-testing system. In that sense whether the former Secretary of State for External Affairs used exactly the right words or not, I am not prepared to say. I am anxious to hear his own explanation.

As to the intent of the former Secretary of State for External Affairs, Madam Speaker, I have no quarrel with it. We all know that the Cruise is at the end of the road. That is what is worrying so many Members of the New Democratic Party. That will be the big test. It will not be firing some 303 rifle. It will be whether we allow the Cruise testing or not. That was in Cabinet's mind when we discussed this whole subject.

What I say, what I will repeat, and what I have even said in a letter to the Hon. Member's seatmate sometime last March, is that in fact Cabinet has made no decision on the Cruise. It has made a decision on weapons-testing systems, an umbrella agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The Cruise, we know—well—

An Hon. Member: Malarkey.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister does not seem to recognize that the point at issue here, among others, is that the former Secretary of State for External Affairs has said, not once, but if I remember correctly, three times, that the Government had made a decision in principle to test the Cruise. And it is the Prime Minister in this House who stood up on Monday and said that is not the case. If the Prime Minister stands by that, if the Prime Minister is saying that since last April the Government has not been committed in principle to testing the Cruise, I ask him how in God's name could a Government let ten months go by without correcting the record? Surely, the people of Canada have the right to know clearly what the policy is. Surely, the Government has an obligation to correct some misinformation which the Secretary of State for External Affairs left on the books some ten months ago?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is making an argument, I believe, on phraseology, not on substance. As to the substance, I have conceded that the Cruise is what is at the back of this matter. When the Hon. Members opposite want to argue and ask questions about whether we should eventually test the Cruise, I am prepared to engage in debate on that subject. Whether the debate should have started sooner, for instance, when the Minister said this, I am prepared to say that maybe it should have, but maybe it was the NDP who were not attentive enough to what the Minister said then.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Well, if they were, Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. We are really entering into debate, and we can do that another time.

APPLICATION OF MINISTERIAL CONDUCT GUIDELINES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, a supplementary to those asked by the Leader of the Opposition. The Prime Minister indicated in answer to the Leader of the Opposition that the behaviour of Mr. Gillespie was honourable. I would like to read to the Prime Minister very briefly from his guidelines of April 28, 1980, which apply to former Ministers. Within a period of two years after leaving office Ministers should not, "lobby for or on behalf of any person or commercial corporation before any Department or agency for which they were responsible on an on-going basis during the last two years of their participation in the Ministry."

Given that Mr. Gillespie clearly was in violation of these guidelines, does the Prime Minister want to reconsider his answer to the Leader of the Opposition respecting the propriety of the current Minister of Finance when, in his role as Minister of Energy, he violated the guidelines for on-going Ministers in signing this deal with a former Minister who, himself, was not behaving according to the guidelines set down as minimal acceptable behaviour for former Ministers of the Crown? Would the Prime Minister care to answer that question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, with respect, to the current Leader of the Opposition, I suggest that that is a more relevant question. Let us see when the contract was signed and when the Minister resigned. If it was a period of more than two years—

Mr. Nielsen: June 30, 1980.

Mr. Trudeau: June 30th?

Mr. Nielsen: 1980.

Mr. Trudeau: 1980?

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. Hon. Members today on both sides of the House are speaking to each other. This is not what is to take place in the course of the Question Period—questions, brief; and answers, brief. The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre.

QUERY RESPECTING RATIONALE FOR SIGNING CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): I will accept the Prime Minister's indication that he intends to examine this transaction in view of this obvious violation of the guidelines.

Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister is aware that this agreement provides for Alastair Gillespie and Associates to make a profit of $750,000, three-quarters of a million dollars, on a $25,000 investment. He is also aware that his own officials in the Department advised against this deal on a technical basis as a waste of money. Forgetting about the conflict of interest guidelines in dealing with a Minister who should not have been out there lobbying on his own behalf, and signing deals with that particular individual, in view of that advice from his officials, and in view of this extraordinary profit for a lobbying effort, influence peddling, almost—perhaps it is—could the Minister indicate what rationale other than being kind to your friends led to the Government signing this agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in the preamble to his question the Hon. Member said I undertook to examine this. I believe we should get the answer on the record right now. The Hon. Member quoted a guideline which indicates a two-year period during which Ministers would not deal with matters of their former portfolios. Was it two years or not? If I am reminded correctly with the figures given by the Leader of the Opposition, the deal was signed June 30, not 1980 as he just said, but 1981. The Minister stopped being a Minister at the beginning of June, 1979. Therefore, it is more than two years, Madam Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Two years and a couple of days.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I can see them all laughing, Madam Speaker. So what are they going to do, take the guidelines and say they were followed, "but we in the Opposition do not like the way the calendar works against us"? It is two years or it ain't two years. And in this case it was two years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF PRESENT MINISTERS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the guidelines which have been recited by my Leader and by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre indicate the whole process of lobbying for a contract is part of the prohibition in the guidelines. That contract may have been signed a few days after the two years, but certainly there had to be a preliminary amount of lobbying on the part of Mr. Gillespie. We have had Mr. Donald Macdonald, we have had Mr. Judd Buchanan, and now we have Mr. Alastair Gillespie, former Cabinet colleagues, all involved in special preferential deals. What I would like to know on the question of the morality of the Government, is whether or not it is going to take any action against present Members of its Cabinet who have violated those particular guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, we now have the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West allegating that there was a violation—allegating there was a violation of guidelines, when I have just demonstrated that there was no violation of the guidelines. So what is he talking about?

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): I will tell the Prime Minister what I am talking about, Madam Speaker. I am talking about a memorandum of understanding which was signed in October, 1980. Is that good enough for the Prime Minister? I will tell the Prime Minister that the question the people of Canada are asking is, is there any morality left in this Cabinet? Is the Prime Minister going to take any action against the Minister of Finance for violating conflict of interest guidelines?

• (1440)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, while the people of Canada are asking that question, they should also ask themselves if there is any morality left in the Opposition benches where, so long as I have been around here, they have been making allegations that they have never been able to substantiate. Now, if this is a serious allegation, if there is a memorandum of understanding, I would like to know about it.

Mr. Nielsen: Table it.

Mr. Trudeau: But I have—table it? I did not even know it exists, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Well, you know now.

Mr. Trudeau: Great laughs over there. It is obviously something which the Member from Saskatoon West knows something about. Why doesn't he make his case, then I will be able to judge? But I cannot know everything which has happened with former Ministers over the years. If he has an allegation to make, let him make it. Then the people will see our answer, they will know what the allegations are, and we will know if the people over there are just making mischief or whether they are serious about governing the country.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister cannot flim flam this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He knows that the guidelines are clear. In each instance where we bring up a question of conflict of interest by former Cabinet Ministers, nothing happens.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, in the spirit of the new rules I want to know whether the Prime Minister has the courage to have this matter investigated by a parliamentary Committee so that the facts can come out in an orderly manner rather than the stonewalling we get from the Prime Minister every time we raise one of these questions?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, surely I am not stonewalling this. I am inviting the Hon. Member to state the facts.

Mr. Nielsen: Table the agreement.

Mr. Trudeau: Why wait for a committee which might take some time to set up? Why don't we hear the facts? The Member talks about a memorandum of understanding dated some unspecified date. Let us hear about it.

Some Hon. Members: October, 1980.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, let us see it and hear about it. Why wait for a committee, Madam Speaker?

Some Hon. Members: Table it.

Mr. Trudeau: Who is doing the stonewalling?

Mr. Nielsen: It is your agreement.

Mr. Trudeau: They are playing some hiding game over there and I do not know what it is, but I wish they would be frank and stop covering up their own tracks.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

INDUSTRY

BIDDING ON STEEL FOR MANUFACTURE OF HOPPER CARS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I wonder if someone—

An Hon. Member: Let them off the hook.

Mr. de Jong: —from the Government benches could bring in the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Nystrom: There he is.

Mr. Crosbie: Come on, Lumley; take your lumps.

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, in the past Interprovincial Steel and Pipe Corporation has never been given the opportunity to bid on the steel being used in the construction of hopper cars. Can the Minister give us an assurance today that the manufacturer of the 1,280 hopper cars ordered by the Government will allow all steel mills, including Ipsco, to bid on the steel necessary to build these cars?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, we will do everything we can to encourage the ultimate manufacturer of those hopper cars, which has not been decided yet, to buy Canadian steel. My colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, yesterday, for example, was speaking to the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association where he put a real pitch in for them to buy Canadian steel for all ships they build. So obviously, Madam Speaker, this would be a priority for us.

Madam Speaker: Before I recognize another Member I would just like to say to the House that I very much resent the remark that I heard that I got someone off the hook. At twenty to three every day of Question Period it is time to go to the NDP. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

WATER POLLUTION CAUSED BY U.S. LOVE CANAL DUMP SITE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. As he knows, yesterday a Canada-U.S. task force issued a report on toxic pollution in the Niagara River. The report said that international water quality standards are being violated. It also said that some of the chemicals in drinking water can cause cancer, birth defects, mutations and nerve damage, to name only a few areas of concern. Certainly Members of this Party have told the Minister over the last year about the dangers to the Niagara River.

Tomorrow, Madam Speaker, a joint committee of the New York State Assembly is holding public hearings on what to do about the Love Canal dump site. Could the Minister tell us whether the Government of Canada intends to appear before that committee and make representations on behalf of Canadian interests, particularly when it is well known that the Love Canal is about the most dangerous site on the U.S. border?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I have explained frequently, most recently in the Opposition day debate on environmental matters a few days ago, what the position of the Canadian Government is on making appearances before American courts. We have examined that question and came to the conclusion that, while indeed it might be welcome and we would endorse and support other levels of Government or public interest groups in appearing before American courts, it would be counterproductive for the Canadian Government to do so. The reason for that is that in opting to appear before the American court system we would likely foreclose other means of redress we would otherwise have.

In other words, if we decide to commit ourselves to the court process, there is a real danger that American governmental authorities would say, in effect, "You have chosen to go that route, you must live with the consequences. Therefore, we will not respond to you until the court process has dealt with the representations you have made." Since that could be a very lengthy process we are unwilling to cut ourselves off from other options of redress, which access to the court process on behalf of the federal Government might imply.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I draw the Prime Minister's attention to the dispatch in the Canadian Press today which reads as follows:

> A memorandum of understanding between Gillespie and his partners—Petro-Canada, Nova, an Alberta Corporation, Nova Scotia Resources Ltd. and Gulf Canada Products Co.—was signed in October, 1980.

Will the Prime Minister undertake to table in the House of Commons today a copy of that October, 1980, memorandum of understanding, and also the June, 1981, agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have just been talking to the Minister of Energy and he has said that he will investigate this matter, find out if there was a memorandum of understanding, find out the date, find out whether the guidelines were violated, and we will report to the House. We are learning by bits and drabs some suspicions over there. If they want to know about them, we will inquire, Madam Speaker. That is the position I have taken all afternoon. I did not happen to read the Canadian Press dispatch from which the Hon. Member is quoting.

REQUEST THAT DOCUMENTS BE TABLED

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, it is not good enough to have an in-house investigation by Members of the Cabinet. What this side wants to know is whether or not the Prime Minister will himself, on his own authority, undertake to table in this House of Commons any agreement and memorandum of understanding that he finds?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if I understood the Hon. Member correctly in his reading of the press report, I did not understand it was a memorandum of understanding concluded with the Government of Canada.

Mr. Beatty: It is so.

Mr. Trudeau: Maybe we do not have that memorandum. It is? Well, I understood it was signed between some private parties, not the Government of Canada.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And the Government.

Mr. Trudeau: If it is in the Government of Canada's possession, we will be able to find it very quickly.

ROLE OF PETRO-CANADA

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, Petro-Canada is a Crown corporation, an agent of Her Majesty, and its powers can be exercised only as an agent of Her Majesty. The agreement was signed with Petro-Canada, among others.

Will the Prime Minister now give the undertaking that that memorandum of understanding, if it is in Petro-Canada's possession, will be tabled in the House of Commons at the earliest opportunity?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, for all I know the memorandum of understanding may, if it exists, contain a lot of things which are not pertinent to this question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I will see. What the Hon. Members are allegating is a conflict of interest. If we find some, we will report on it, Madam Speaker. When we see the dates.

Mr. Stewart: Limber up the shredders.

INDUSTRIAL SAFETY AND HEALTH

DUST HAZARD IN GRAIN ELEVATORS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that grain dust has long been considered a cause of serious lung disease, and that efforts over the past ten years to persuade grain elevator operators to indroduce adequate controls have failed, will the Minister tell us what action he is planning to protect the health and safety of Canadian workers in this industry?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, we are very concerned with the situation in this particular industry because it has been deteriorating over the years. While compliance with our regulations in 1980 was some 40 per cent, it fell to 25 per cent in 1981 and to less than 20 per cent last year. Therefore we have informed the industry in Winnipeg that we intend to inquire of each employer as to the situation at the present time to show cause why they have not implemented the safety regulations as they should have done. We will, of course, use every reasonable means at our disposal to look after and protect the health of the workers involved. This applies not only to dust inhalation but also to fire and explosive hazards.

BANKS AND BANKING

RESCHEDULING OF LOANS TO SMALL BUSINESSES AND FARMERS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I would like to direct a question his way to allow him to get on the good side of the Prime Minister once again. It concerns Canada's chartered banks that have been enthusiastic in their efforts to reschedule Dome's outstanding debts. They have certainly not demonstrated the same willingness to reschedule loans to farmers and small businesses. We learned today that Canada's largest bank, the Royal Bank of Canada, is suing a farmer who at present is unable to meet his financial obligations to the bank and, I am sure by no coincidence, who happens to be the spokesman for a farm advocacy group opposing the bank's jackboot tactics by forcing premature foreclosure and property sales.

Is the Minister of Finance prepared to sit down and meet with the presidents of the major chartered banks of Canada to ask them if they would not provide the same service and the same enthusiasm for rescheduling loans for small-businessmen and the farmers of Canada as they are showing in their willingness to assist Dome Petroleum?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I must say first of all that I have already sat down with the presidents of Canadian banks about this very subject. I have raised it with the banks individually and I have raised it with the Canadian Bankers' Association in the course of my pre-budget consultations. I drew to their attention a number of representations I have received in that regard, and I received a commitment on their part that they would investigate any allegation of inappropriate or unfair behaviour. Since then, every time I have received specific representations I have drawn them to the attention of the Inspector General of Banks who then raises them with the banks concerned.

If the Hon. Member has a specific case, and if he wishes to make the details available to me, I will make sure that it is picked up with the proper bank. However, I might take this opportunity to point out to the Hon. Member that I know of thousands of cases where banks have agreed to reschedule the debts of small businesses and farmers. I do not think the Hon. Member is representing the situation quite accurately.

In addition, I think he should welcome the reduction of the prime rate by the Royal Bank to 11.5 per cent on Friday. I hope the other banks will follow suit and that we will continue to see a reduction of interest rates.

AVIATION INDUSTRY

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF CAE AIRCRAFT LIMITED IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Today in Winnipeg CAE Aircraft Limited announced it is closing, with a loss of 80 jobs in that city. In 1969 when the Government of Canada moved repair work out of Winnipeg, it guaranteed alternative employment, including 700 jobs. In 1974 the Prime Minister promised aircraft repair work for Winnipeg, in that year's election campaign.

The aerospace industry in Winnipeg, the Manitoba Government and the people of Manitoba want to know whether the Minister is prepared to enforce the agreement to provide aircraft work in Manitoba, particularly in light of this closing today?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think, if the Hon. Member would like to look at the record over the years since 1969, he would realize that the Government has directed a large number of job opportunities toward the aerospace industry in Manitoba, that Companies have been able to tender on a number of contracts that were available, and that there has been a number of expansions of programs in companies and firms in the City of Winnipeg.

As far as CAE is concerned, over the past year and a half my own Department has worked very closely with them on the development of a work-sharing program and other support. Finally it came to a point in time when they were unable to secure work comparable with the kind of equipment facilities they could offer. As I have said before, we cannot replace those kinds of judgments for the marketplace, although we have done our utmost in trying to support CAE in the work they have done and in trying to keep their workforce together. My Department will continue to work to make sure that the workers displaced under that lay-off or closing will find alternative employment.

ALLEGED EXISTENCE OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I would like to get back to the first question put to the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada. At first, the Prime Minister was hesitant about giving the House the information requested by Hon. Members on the possibility of a conflict of interest, not the evidence thereof. In the circumstances, could the Prime Minister now inform the House, in the light of the questions that have been asked, whether he is willing to table in the House all information available, that is, all documentation of initial negotiations that took place between the Federal Government and Petro-Canada—documentation that is as wide-ranging as possible, and that has not been screened by the Prime Minister—to find out whether there was a conflict of interest.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I just answered this question, and I said that I was not aware that such documents existed. I did not know what the Hon. Member was talking about. I first would have to check whether there are such documents and whether their contents were relevant, and I would then report to the House as soon as I have this information. Meanwhile, if Opposition Members have any relevant facts, it is their duty and certainly their privilege to do so. However, I have heard only insinuations and questions and suggestions that conflict of interest guidelines have been violated, although the dates mentioned by the Opposition show that there was no such violation. Therefore, until I receive evidence to the contrary, all I can say now is that I shall look into the matter, Madam Speaker.

Mr. La Salle: I have a supplementary, Madam Speaker. If I understand correctly, the Prime Minister is now asking us to prove there was a conflict of interest. I think that in view of the fact that the person concerned, namely Mr. Gillespie, is a former Minister, the Prime Minister should be prepared to table all documents pertinent to this matter, starting with the initial discussions between the Crown corporation, the Government, Mr. Gillespie and others. That is all we are asking in order to provide some clarification to the public on this important transaction. Furthermore, if there was no conflict of interest, the Prime Minister should be more than willing to table the documents. Why the hesitation? That is the question. Why is the Prime Minister taking this attitude today? Why is he so hesitant about publishing documents which are a public matter?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking me why I am hesitant. The explanation is simple. It is because of the questions put by his leader and by the energy critic, alleging that there was a conflict of interest because the former Minister had acted within a two-year period. The fact is that if we check the dates mentioned by the Minister and by the Leader of the Opposition, it seems that the transaction took place more than two years later. I am therefore hesitant to accept allegations of dishonest or dubious behaviour. Apparently, when we look at the dates mentioned by the Opposition, there does not seem to have been any violation of the conflict of interest guidelines. Therefore, the Opposition should get organized and at least ask questions that clearly demonstrate that conflict of interest guidelines have been violated. These guidelines are public documents, read to us by the Leader of the Opposition, which prescribe that a former Minister is prohibited from doing such and such a thing within a two-year period, and it seems that according to the Opposition's figures, the transaction took place more than two years later.

Mr. La Salle: When did he start negotiating?

An Hon. Member: Why do you not listen, La Salle!

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Madam Speaker, I can hear other dates being quoted on the opposite side, and I wish they would table them. This is the first time I have heard about it. Why does the Hon. Member not get up and ask supplementary questions instead of staying in his seat and smirking and shouting?

DATE OF NEGOTIATIONS BEGUN BY ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Right Hon. Prime Minister is trying to prove that the signing of this agreement does not violate criteria which he himself established. In that case, I wish to ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to make enquiries and let us know when Mr. Gillespie started lobbying and negotiating with the Government or Petro-Canada. The public might be interested.

Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member did not have to go to all that trouble, because I just informed his colleague that we are going to make those enquiries.

An Hon. Member: He does not understand English.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, that is not his problem. His problem is that he does not pay attention to what Members on his side are saying. If he did, he would know that I said quite clearly that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who has just gone to make those enquiries—

Mr. La Salle: If you think there is a conflict of interest—

Mr. Trudeau: Well, there—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am going to end the question period. It is three o'clock, in any case, but I also want to remind Hon. Members that they should not talk across the House.

The Hon. Member for Rosemont, on a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. LACHANCE—ALLEGED MISAPPLICATION OF S.O. 21

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to the wording of Standing Order 21, and my point of order arises from the statement under the provisions of S.O. 21 made by the Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) this afternoon.

Standing Order 21 prescribes that the Speaker may order a Member to resume his or her seat if, in the opinion of the Speaker, improper use is made of this Standing Order.

Madam Speaker, today, you called to order an Hon. Member who was extending a message of congratulations. As a Member of the Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures, and therefore as one who participated in the drafting of Standing Order 21, I would like to draw your attention to page 7:19 of the proceedings of the Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. There we find that the Chair would have the discretion to call to order any Member who sought to use this opportunity to convey congratulatory messages or for frivolous purposes.

Madam Speaker, I read the blues showing the statement made by the Member for Joliette, and I shall quote from them.

. . . considering the Minister's irresponsibility or incompetence,

He is referring to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia),

. . . I wish to ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada to immediately remove this Minister who is refusing to discharge his responsibilities.

Madam Speaker, my point of order is strictly concerned with the form of this statement. I think that if congratulatory messages are taboo, this should certainly apply to personal attacks under this Standing Order, which is being tried on an experimental basis. I would therefore suggest that perhaps the Chair might wish to look into this matter.

Madam Speaker: No, I do not think so. As I understand the manner in which statements made by Members may be interpreted, I thought the statement by the Hon. Member for Joliette met the conditions of the Standing Order. I think it is quite acceptable for Members on all sides of the House to launch verbal attacks at each other, and I do not think the statement by the Member for Joliette in any way breached the conditions set in the Standing Order.

MR. SKELLY—OFFSHORE DRILLING ACTIVITIES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition in light of the tragic events surrounding the sinking of the Ocean Ranger. Basically, the petition asks that a committee of the House of Commons be struck to monitor and provide appropriate information to legislators and to the public on activities relating to the exploration and development of offshore drilling that will take place over the next two decades in Canada.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—TABLING OF EXCHANGE OF NOTES BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES—RULING OF MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: I see the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is still in his seat and I am now in a position to rule on the point of order he raised last Friday concerning the fact that a document tabled the Thursday, February 10, 1983 by the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) was not deemed referred to a Committee of the House.

Standing Order 46(1) stipulates that returns, reports or other papers can be laid before the House in accordance with an Act of Parliament or in pursuance of any resolution or Standing Order of this House.

In addition, Standing Order 46(2) provides that a Minister may table any report or other paper dealing with a matter coming within the administrative responsibilities of the Government. As stated in Citation 379(2) of Beauchesne, these papers may be laid before the House voluntarily.

Let me now quote Standing Order 46(4) as follows:

> Reports, returns or other papers laid before the House in accordance with an Act of Parliament shall thereupon be deemed to have been permanently referred to the Committee designated by the Member tabling the report, return or paper.

During the debate on this point of order I indicated how I would read that paragraph but I decided to read it again privately and meditate on it. The key words are "in accordance with an Act of Parliament".

In the case before us, the tabling of the document was not required by an Act of Parliament, but it was tabled on the initiative of the Minister as provided in Standing Order 46(2). I must rule that the document in question does not come under the purview of Standing Order 46(4) and, therefore, there is no point of order.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, thank you for clarifying the matter. I see that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) is still in the House. He will recall he indicated that, notwithstanding whatever ruling was made by the Chair, the Chair having reserved, he was going to speak with the Government House Leader to see whether or not, as a matter of policy, those documents would be referred. Has the Deputy Prime Minister done that, and can he report to the House now?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker, I regret I have not had an opportunity to have the kind of discussion I would like to have with the Government House Leader, but I will do so very soon.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is simply this. On Monday last leave to introduce this particular Bill was sought and given. Why, then, did we need to have leave to introduce the Bill sought and given the second time?

Madam Speaker: The division was on first reading. There are two motions when a Bill is brought into the House, one for leave to introduce it, and one for first reading. That is the reason for the two votes.

Mr. Trudeau: Why didn't you find out before voting?

RECRUITMENT FOR CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 4,554—Mr. Stewart:

1. What yearly quota was set in the Rimouski district office for the recruitment of (a) English language (b) French language applicants for service in the Canadian Armed Forces?

2. Between January and September, 1982, how many (a) English language (b) French language applicants were admitted into the Forces at the office?

3. In the past 12 months, have any English language applicants from the Gaspé Peninsula applied for admittance through the office at Bathurst, New Brunswick and, if so, how many have (a) applied (b) been admitted?

4. At the Rimouski district office, are the English language applications held in abeyance until a certain number of others have been received before initial processing begins and, if so, what number has been set?

5. What are the recruitment quotas for (a) English language (b) French language applicants at each of the recruitment centres across Canada?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. The quota system applicable to all regions and districts is as follows: Officer classifications and skilled other ranks are held at National Defence Headquarters. Unskilled other ranks are distributed on a regional basis and a selection board determines which are the most highly qualified applicants. These applicants are given the first opportunity to fill vacancies for which they qualify. The remaining vacancies are then distributed to the recruiting centres to be filled on a competitive basis.

The quota for the Rimouski district for 1982 was: (a) two; (b) 97.

Note: A five-year statistical moving average is used to ensure that changing demographic circumstances are reflected in the allocation of quotas. During the past five years, 1977/78 to 1981/82, 4.69 per cent of the unskilled other ranks Anglophone enrolments were in Quebec. This percentage varied from a high of 5.5 per cent in fiscal year 1977/78 to a low of 3.7 per cent in fiscal year 1981/82. It is projected that 4.5 per cent to 5 per cent of the unskilled other ranks Anglophone quota will be allocated to the Quebec recruiting zone during the current fiscal year.

2. Unskilled other ranks enrolment at Rimouski for the period January to September, 1982 was: (a) one; (b) 96.

3. Yes. (a) ten; (b) zero (four are on a waiting list, one is temporarily medically unfit, five have withdrawn their applications).

4. No.

5. Recruiting quotas for unskilled other ranks January to October (incl.), 1982 are as follows:

Unit	Anglo	Franco
St. John's	134	0
Corner Brook	94	0

EXPULSION OF SOVIET NATIONALS FROM UNITED KINGDOM

Question No. 4,654—Mr. MacKay:

1. Were 105 Soviet intelligence agents expelled from the United Kingdom in 1971 and, if so, subsequent to the expulsion, were Canadian authorities notified by British authorities of the identities of those KGB agents?

2. Were any of the individuals, since their expulsion from the United Kingdom, accepted by the Canadian Government as accredited diplomats of the Soviet Union and, if so, in each case (a) what was his/her name and official function (b) what period of time was covered by his/her posting in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. In 1971 the British Government announced that 105 nationals of the U.S.S.R. were persona non grata in Britain. The identities of the 105 persons were communicated to the Canadian authorities.

2. None of these were subsequently posted in Canada.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE INCREASE IN CANDIDATES' DEPOSIT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South) moved that Bill C-583, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act (deposit), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Madam Speaker, Bill C-583 has been in my mind and in the minds of a number of people who have assisted me in elections for some considerable period of time. The Bill involves the matter of the deposit that a candidate in an election must place with the returning officer in the riding in order to be a candidate.

The deposit under Section 23(2)(j) of the Canada Elections Act has been the princely sum of $200 since 1882. The purpose of my Bill is to increase that figure of 1882 to a more realistic figure in light of today's economic conditions namely to the sum of $2,000.

Over a hundred years ago a deposit of $200 was a great deal of money. Indeed, a lot of people who worked a whole year did not earn $200. It was a very significant sum. It was real honest money that people put up in order to be a candidate in an election. Until very recently, unless a candidate got half the winner's vote he lost or forfeited his deposit. The concept of the deposit was to ensure that those who honestly wanted to run for the House of Commons were prepared to put up some earnest money and to compensate the Crown for the cost of the election. If they did not get a realistic number of votes, they would lose that money.

The sum of $200 has now become a pretty nominal sum. The average industrial wage today is in the area of $385 per week. Therefore, $200 represents just slightly more than half a week's wages for the average industrial wager earner. It is not really earnest deposit money; it is nothing but a shell in the total organization of an election.

For very little money, someone can be a candidate in a federal election. Some do this for personal reasons, wanting to have their name before the public, advertising their name, if you like. For $200 you can have your name spread before the City of Mississauga for 60 days or more. The Government will print your name on ballots for some 80,000 electors. You will be publicized in the newspapers. This is all at the expense of the Government of Canada. What a wonderful way to get your name across to the public if you have some kook idea!

You can force your way into every all-candidates meeting in the constituency. I have had that experience. People run honest, all-candidates meetings in my constituency. They try to ensure that the point of view of those seriously running for election is made known to those constituents who are interested. Time and again we have candidates who really have no interest and no possibility of winning. They make no personal effort to win other than to appear at the meeting to make a speech, using up the time of the meeting. Because of this the rest of the community cannot get at the issues they want to discuss.

The $200 deposit has made it possible for people to make a joke of our election system. For a very nominal sum, you are entitled to expenses that, according to the Chief Electoral Officer, cost the Government of Canada an additional $1,000 for every candidate beyond three who runs for election. In other words, if a ballot contains three names, it would cost on average $1,000 to put on an additional name. For $200 a person puts the Government to the expense of $1,000. For that $200 the candidate is entitled to ten copies of the voters' list to do with as he or she wants. You receive the names and addresses, the detail of where every single person who has the right to vote in the federal election lives within a constituency. Not only that, you are entitled to demand from the returning officer an election key and election map. What a wonderful amount of material! The material itself, on a straight paper basis, is worth more than $200.

It really is not a question of being unfair when I ask to raise the deposit level. It is really a question of saying to those who honestly want to run in an election: "Pay your own costs". Is it going to deprive anyone who has a chance of winning? I say it is not.

Under the present Canada Elections Act, if a person receives 15 per cent of the vote or better, that $200 is now returned. Indeed, not only is the $200 returned, but, as we know, under the Elections Expenses Act, virtually all the expenses of the candidate are paid for by the Crown. Therefore, if you are a serious candidate and can get 15 per cent of the votes cast, there is enough money there not only to run your election campaign and get your deposit back, but everything is the way it should be.

To allow people, however, to enter a federal election who have really no intention of winning or have really no intention of properly presenting issues to the people of Canada which should be presented, and which should be presented in the riding, thus taking advantage of the system, is wrong. It is an abrogation of democracy and of our electoral system. It hurts the communication of those ideas which are properly before the public.

I say to you, sir, that the way to handle this is to do what we originally did in our Canada Elections Act back in 1882. We increased the deposit from $50 then to $200. Today is the day, Mr. Speaker, when we should put the deposit to $2,000 and get it back to where it was intended to be, a realistic contribution by someone who wants to run for office, so that if they did not win or if they did not get 15 per cent of the vote, they would at least compensate the Crown for the costs to which they put the Crown for running the election in the first place.

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). Election law is one of my hobbies and I have spent the last ten years serving on the Chief Electoral Officer's ad hoc committee on election law, particularly focusing on the elections expenses legislation as well as the Canada Elections Act itself. We have tried to deal with part of the dilemma which the Hon. Member for Mississauga South has put forward. That is, how can we provide through the taxpayer a significant amount of money and resources to candidates in an election campaign, and make sure the taxpayer receives a proper and just return on the expenditures he makes on behalf of the election campaign itself? We have been dealing, not on the basis of the $200 deposit, but rather looking at it from the point of view of the resources which are turned over to candidates who may or may not be legitimately in front of the Canadian electorate.

Our dilemma is that it is very difficult to tell who is a legitimate candidate before the electorate at a given point in time. Although you and I may have our opinion, Mr. Speaker, I believe we have to recognize that the Social Credit Party, which was represented in this House for a significant number of years, the New Democratic Party, the progressive party which preceded it, the election from time to time of Independents, are all people who have come here legitimately through the electoral system. Any kind of a system which we put in place, it seems to me, should not be designed to cut off legitimate dissent from a Party which may at the particular time hold a majority of the seats in the House of Commons. Rather, the system should be designed to make sure that the people's representatives get elected to the House of Commons no matter what Party they may belong to and no matter whether they choose to run within the political Party system or outside of it. The dilemma which we have is to try to balance off the requirements for an open electoral system against the kind of thing which the Hon. Member for Mississauga South quite properly pointed out, particularly in the urban areas, of having maybe ten or 11 candidates running, when the general public may be really interested in only three, four or five.

How do we separate, if you will, the sheep from the goats? How do we make sure the electorate is able to have the choice it wishes? It is true, as the Hon. Member pointed out, that the $200 fee has become an anachronism. It no longer has the effect it was designed to have. It was originally designed to have the effect of weeding out on a financial basis the sheep from the goats. In terms of those of us who are here, by and large that sum, whether it be $200 or $2,000, could be met by our constituency organizations, but it might be a barrier to people having a legitimate point of view to get across.

An election is not only about electing individuals to the House of Commons, or selecting Parties to govern; it is also about issues, ideas, and about the debate of those issues and ideas. We would, I believe, be hard put to disentangle from the complexity and carnival atmosphere, in an election campaign, just where personality, party, issues and local ideas are intermixed, Mr. Speaker, and how the individual elector makes his determination as to whom he will vote for on the basis of that. There is no question, however, that the ability in the olden days to put a financial barrier up to prevent people from running was an important one at a time when political Parties were far less organized than they are now.

As Sir John A. Macdonald used to put it, there was an enormous number of loose fish out there to be netted in order for him to be able to carry on his Government. In those days, the Party system was not as rigid as it is today. It was a much looser form of shifting coalitions. Members had far more independence. They represented regional interests in a much more precise and direct way than they do today. Our system has a different kind of structure. We have Parties now which are much more imbedded in the fabric of our society. We have people who belong to those Parties and are prepared to come into the House of Commons, to accept the Party Whip, more or less, of the Party whose banner they ran under. There is a fair amount of freedom in our system still because Parties run for office without a very clear manifesto or a very clear idea of what it is they want to do, as contrasted, for example, with Great Britain, where there is a very precise manifesto. Therefore, the electoral system we deal with is quite different from the system which developed the $50 and then the $200 limit.

I approach the problem from a different perspective than the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. I tend to look at it from the point of view of protecting the interests of the Canadian taxpayer and the Canadian electorate. Obviously, there has to be at some point a balance between having everyone and his uncle running as candidates and providing a selection of candidates which is wide enough to give the electorate an appropriate choice; and, as well, to make sure that appropriate views on policy options and opinions are properly heard so the electorate can vote effectively. In order to do that it needs to have a selection of Parties, individuals, ideas and ideologies.

When a person is nominated as a candidate from a recognized political Party, which may be a Party which is represented in the House of Commons and it may well be one that is not, that person receives a number of benefits which the taxpayer gives to him. He has a certain status in law. In addition, the taxpayers say they will pay the cost of one mailing to all of his constituents. That is a substantial amount of money. It is also a substantial amount of power.

In addition to that, and perhaps more impressive, all candidates receive tax credit forms. We all know the system. If someone gives to my campaign $100, I give him a tax receipt for $75. There are restrictions on how these may be used but they are difficult to enforce. So there is no question that is a very powerful economic tool in the hands of a candidate.

Secondly, there is the problem of what happens to surplus funds. A fringe candidate may be able to collect more money than he cares to spend. What do you do with the surplus funds? That is also an important question because those are basically taxpayers' funds. They do not belong to the candidate; they are given by the taxpayers of Canada to allow him to run an appropriate electoral campaign.

Let us look at the situation of new Parties. The tax credit is made available on a year-round basis to political Parties that meet certain qualifications. That again is an important political tool. There is status in law which also provides certain privileges. What we are dealing with is a very complex series of rules laid down in the Canada Elections Act, which also includes what we used to call the Canada Election Expenses Act. There are penalties and obligations which have to be lived up to.

The question we have been trying to wrestle with in the ad hoc committee is, what is the judicious balance between allowing anyone who chooses to stand as a candidate and being able to provide the necessary protection for the taxpayer? The question raised by my hon. friend from Mississauga is, how do we deal with a number of parties and candidates so that the elector can make sense of what is going on?

I confess that the committee has spent a great deal of time trying to determine some specific guidelines, and we have come to some general conclusions. These conclusions have been forwarded to the Government, which we hope will bring them down as a legislative package. But the problem is that we were unable to come up with any hard and fast rules.

All of us agree that there could not be a rule which could be interpreted so as to prohibit or inhibit the information of additional political Parties. We could not say that you can only have so many candidates running at a given point in a given riding, because out of the candidates running there may emerge another political Party; an Independent may well be more representative of his constituents than the candidate put forward by the various political Parties. So we did not want to restrict the ability of a constituency to choose whom they wanted to be their representative. Therefore, we have come to a very delicate situation.

We looked a little bit at raising the $200 limit but came to the conclusion that with the financial advantages that are there, an effective increase would not really be acceptable to Canadians. Even $2,000 in today's economy is not what $200 was in 1882; it is far less in relative value. So it does not make much sense to go about limiting the number of people who can run by raising the $200 fee. By and large, our conclusion was that the $200 was a very modest obstacle. It was an appropriate token to show that one at least was semi-serious and therefore we should not really look any further at it. Instead, what we have done is try to look at other ways of dealing with this phenomenon.

For example, we have tried to make the petition signed by the constituents a much more important part of the process. Right now, as you know, we have to forward a petition signed by 25 people along with the $200. We looked at increasing that number to perhaps 100, 150 or 200. We thought that for serious candidates that would not be a problem. We then came across the problem the Table has had in the last session: how do you justify the petition? How can you tell whether the names on the petition are valid names, particularly in an urban constituency where you may have 200 names from the city but you may have a number of ridings? How do you prove that the 200 names, for example, are actually from the constituency the Member seeks to run in?

We looked at the problem of trying to find another way of proving one's bona fides. We looked at the cost, the petition, we looked at being able to demonstrate that a person was a serious candidate by actually taking the money he is entitled to and spending it. In other words, if one comes into the system and is eligible to have one piece of literature mailed to every household in the projected constituency, then the money is not given to that candidate unless it is actually spent. In other words, they have to come in with the receipt. Right now it is not clear. You have to prove you spent the money, but the process is somewhat open-ended. We have been struggling to close that gap with some administrative rules to make sure that there was proof the money was spent. We did not want people to come in and present ideas and use the money made available through the generosity of the taxpayer in trying to communicate with the taxpayer. I believe we have been able to deal with that particular problem in a relatively acceptable way.

While I have no precise solutions to offer to the problem which I think was legitimately raised by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, the fact that we are getting a large number of spurious candidates, who are recognized as such by the electorate, means that there has to be some way of being able to winnow the candidates down to the serious ones, not the ones who are there for a good time. We have to be able to do that with some delicacy because we do not want accidentally to stomp out a legitimate public movement or those who are running legitimately as Independents to push a particular idea.

We want to make sure the electoral system is available and easy to understand.

It seems to me the way we should approach this problem of electoral reform is to have one principle paramount in our minds. What we are trying to do is not make life better for ourselves; we are trying to make sure that the system reinforces the elector's right to choose whomever he or she wants to represent them. We should not be looking at it as an inconvenience to ourselves to have these people around; we should be looking at it from the point of view of the elector who should have available to him the broadest choice of tools he wants to govern his country.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to be able to speak on Bill C-583, which seeks to increase the amount of the deposit which a candidate has to pay to contest an election from $200 to $2,000. I would like to say at the outset that I think it is important for us to realize that under the Canada Elections Act not only is a deposit of $200 required when you run federally, but also there is to be a nomination paper signed by at least 25 electors in the particular district.

Now, to address ourselves to what the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) indicates is the problem, I really question whether it is as great a problem as the Hon. Member seems to think. I know in his particular constituency in the last election there were some seven candidates. I know there were a couple of independents running and I could see where that could present a little bit of a problem. But on the humorous side, I wonder whether he should really squawk too loudly, because the plurality he had in the 1980 election was only about 403 votes and one of the so-called fringe candidates had 405 votes. So I am just wondering whether he should be complaining too loudly about that.

In more serious vein, I would just like to say that there are several issues at stake here. I think some of them really revolve around the whole question of democracy. What are we really doing if we eliminate the opportunity for anyone who wants to run, regardless of political Party?

Every region of the country is not as well loaded, might I say, as the constituency of Mississauga or perhaps some of the central Canada constituencies where $2,000 may not seem to be that much. In rural ridings, some of the western and northern ridings, $2,000 is actually a considerable amount. It could present a bit of a problem to any person who wants to run because not all Parties are funded by various private corporations.

An Hon. Member: Get it from the union.

Mr. Lewycky: I hear an Hon. Member interjecting "Get it from the union". All we have to do is take a look at some of the returns given to the Chief Electoral Officer in the thirty-second general election, and we will find tons of constituencies in which there were no contributions from unions or others.

Let us take a look at the return for the thirty-second election. Referring to a couple of constituencies, such as the one of the Hon. Member who presented the Bill, it is very interesting that there were some 46 private corporations which contributed $14,683 toward his election campaign. The Liberals had some 13 private corporations that contributed $2,750 to their campaign; the New Democratic Party did not have any.

Turning to the constituency of Dauphin, my home riding, I notice that the Progressive Conservative Party had 36 private corporations that contributed some $3,930, which obviously was not as substantial as the sum of $14,000 contributed in the Hon. Member's riding.

I raise this issue for Hon. Members of the House because the return of the Chief Electoral Officer is a very thick book and they may not have had occasion to look at it. I think it is worth while because the Hon. Member would not want to discriminate in various parts of Canada. I appreciate the problem in certain parts of urban Canada. But when I look at the whole question of democracy, one of my favourite authors, a past President of the United States, Abraham Lincoln, spoke of democracy as being "the Government of the people, by the people, for the people". Whether it be the Inuit, other aboriginal people or poor people in various parts of the country who make only subsistence livings, I do not feel they should be restricted from running simply because they cannot think of putting down the $2,000 deposit.

It is important to think of the whole question of what we really mean by democracy. Are we trying to bring about disincentives when they are really not necessary? It is really important to think along these lines. Some people may ask whether we have solutions or what exactly we would suggest as an alternative to disincentives. The only oasis of a truly democratic Government is in the Province of Manitoba. Manitoba has had to come to grips with the problem. I refer Hon. Members to the Manitoba Election Act from which the requirement for a deposit has been removed altogether. That is the way it should be.

In fact, I would have been very happy to support the Hon. Member for Mississauga South if he would have decided to remove the deposit altogether. That would have been more in keeping with the whole area of democratic opportunity for any person to run. In Manitoba there is a simple requirement for the nomination papers that 100 or more eligible voters in an electoral division nominate the candidate. That is the way we in Manitoba have dealt with this problem. Therefore, there is opportunity for anyone who is a serious candidate to run. If such a suggestion were made, I am sure some of the problems in Mississauga or other constituencies where there is such a plurality of candidates as seven would be eliminated.

I return to the whole question of a perceived problem in setting up financial barriers for people who may have limited resources. It is important to emphasize this because there is regional disparity in various parts of the country. If one happens to come from a certain area of the country with incomes that range from very modest to some of the highest, then naturally one's perception of the economic means and abilities of those who will be running as candidates will be drastically different from one who comes from a different region of the country. The setting up of two categories of people—those who would be able to run and those who would not be able to run as candidates—is something we would not want to see in the Parliament of Canada.

At one time Abraham Lincoln said:

As I would not be a slave, so I would not be a master. This expresses my idea of democracy.

To paraphrase what Abraham Lincoln was saying in different words, the minute we set up masters and slaves categories we take away the whole notion of democracy in Canada. Even if a person does not have the ability to set aside $2,000 from his ordinary livelihood which is used to provide food, clothing and shelter to run in an election, we feel that he or she may have something to offer the country.

I am reminded of what Harry Emerson Fosdick said when he talked about democracy:

Democracy is based upon the conviction that there are extraordinary possibilities in ordinary people.

I think this is our conviction, that there are extraordinary possibilities in ordinary people, people who come from various working classes or various ethnic groups in society. We must realize that that type of mix is important in the House of Commons and that we should not have any kind of disincentive to prohibit such people from running for the highest office in the land.

Also it is important to stress what we in the New Democratic Party feel. There should be opportunity for true equality, which implies true equality in terms of the opportunity to run for elected office. Thomas Jefferson said:

The mass of mankind has not been born with saddles on their backs, nor a favoured few booted and spurred, ready to ride them legitimately, by the grace of God.

We do not feel that there should be inequality or that there should be this barrier of $2,000 established so that people who legitimately feel they could run or want to run are not able to do so.

If there is a contest even for nomination, the people who run for it have to expend money for the nomination convention. Such things are not covered. There is an investment of time and other investments which have to be made. I think we would want to uphold this.

This Bill runs counter to the United Nations' Declaration of Human Rights, Article 1, which says the following:

All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights.

We ought to maintain that right in Canada so that anyone who wants to and is prepared to run for elected office is supported. In this country we ought to maintain the right that anyone who wants to run for elected office who is prepared to and who is supported by other people should have that right. I think there are enough disincentives. The rebate was mentioned. A person must obtain 15 per cent of the votes. If we wanted to eliminate some of the less serious candidates, or those we perceive to be less serious, then there are opportunities to increase the number of voters who would be placed on a nomination list. That would be one way to deal with that.

• (1620)

We know that in this country there is enough financial inequality. All one has to do is take a look at the way political wheels are greased to see where and to which party the big bucks go.

I think it is important that we do not accept the suggestion made but, rather, that we defeat this Bill and follow the example in Manitoba. In other words, increase the number of eligible nominators. By doing that we would deal with the problem fairly and in a way that does not deprive us of our democracy, yet at the same time dealing with it in a way that addresses the question of equality and fairness.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, Clause 3 of the Canadian Charter of Rights reads:

Every citizen of Canada has the right to vote in an election of members of the House of Commons or of a legislative assembly and to be qualified for membership therein.

In the explanatory notes in the little red book the Government has published along with the Charter, I find this:

The tradition of democratic rights in Canada is specifically guaranteed by the Charter. Citizens will have a constitutionally enshrined right to vote in elections for Members of the House of Commons or a legislative assembly and to seek election to either of those houses.

There is the standard. Whenever we see a Bill of this sort we must measure the Bill against that standard. We must ask ourselves whether the Bill directly or indirectly hinders the spirit of that Clause. I contend that this Bill very directly takes a run at the right of some citizens to seek public office. As such this Bill should be rejected.

I agree with the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) who has quoted from a variety of sources to back up that sentiment. I congratulate him for doing so.

I think this Bill reacts to a perceived inconvenience. Its intent is to erect a barrier to prevent people who somebody somewhere thinks are not serious from running for office. I do not believe that we have the right to decide whether one candidate is a serious candidate and another is not. I believe we should be removing these barriers to people's participation in elections. I do not think we should be raising new ones.

I can sympathize with the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I was at an all-candidates meeting in his riding in 1980. About eight or ten of us were there. There were many people who worked for various parties. After the election I took a look at the results both in the Hon. Member's riding and in my riding. We went through this inconvenience of many candidates on the ballot, but after the election the people said it differently than we did. People did not think it was an inconvenience to have numerous candidates.

In the riding of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South 624 people voted for those who could otherwise be designated as not serious. In my riding another 380 people voted for these independent candidates. In our city that meant 1,000 people voted for non-traditional candidates. Who are these non-traditional candidates? There were two Marxist-Leninists, two Libertarians and two Independents. Each one of those candidates had something to say to people in each of our ridings. They had good messages. I did not agree with them, but they had a message they wanted to communicate to the residents of Mississauga, and I think they should be entitled to do that.

Some of those people would see a $2,000 deposit as a genuine barrier against their participation in an election. I do not think we should be putting up that kind of a barrier, certainly not when 1,000 people in my city vote for these candidates.

Even if only one person in my city wanted to vote for one of these candidates, I would still say they are entitled to do that.

Running as a candidate in an election campaign is a viable platform for an ordinary citizen. It is not one that we should be whittling down to a few elite members of the New Democratic Party, the Conservative Party and the Liberal Party. We should be opening up this platform and letting in some of those other ideas.

Anyone who wants to be impressed by this process can take a look American presidential elections. They are perhaps the perfect example. We always look at the two major candidates in American elections, one Democrat and one Republican, but we fail to realize that there are scores of other candidates. We do not hear Americans telling us that these other candidates are an inconvenience or are not serious. But in many respects the Americans are more limited than we are and these people have more rights than our candidates. They have access to TV time, time in public meetings, space in newspapers and so on. The Americans permit this and encourage it. Theirs is a good model for us to follow. These people bring in new ideas and a new perspective into campaigns.

I listened to the concerns of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). It seems to me that that Member was bringing us practical concerns and mixing up the principle of democratically operated elections with administrative concerns on such matters as excess funds, excess donations and tax credits. Those things are currently handled in law. If the law is inadequate, let us change the law so that the administration of these practical matters is more carefully handled.

We do not need to keep people out of an election campaign just because they give out tax credits or because they collect donations from other Canadians. We govern these concerns now. If the governing of them is inadequate, let us tighten up the administration. As I said, we should not be mixing up the principle of a democratic society and a democratic election with administrative concerns on matters of this nature.

The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River also said that candidates have to prove one's bona fides. I do not know what that means, but that sentiment also ran through the discussion of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. Somehow there are candidates who have bona fides and candidates who do not have bona fides, or there are candidates who are serious and others who are not serious. I do not know how you distinguish that. One of my colleagues suggests that citizenship should be the standard. I agree with him. That is the only standard applied in the Charter of Rights and that should be the only standard that we apply. We should not be putting up a barrier in the form of extra deposits or longer lists of nominators or any other administrative device.

We should see that anybody who is serious is taken seriously by the voters. Anybody who is not serious will not be taken seriously by the voters. But let the voters decide. Do not put up a barrier that prevents a candidate's name from going on to the ballot, itself. When the candidate's name is on the ballot, then the true test comes of proving to your fellow citizens that you are serious. Who is going to decide that somebody is a nuisance or is serious? That is where we get into difficulties. We should be looking at the relative advantages and disadvantages that already exist in our system.

The big three Parties begin election campaigns with enormous advantages. They get all the media attention, nationally, locally and regionally. A local candidate can be confident in the knowledge that he has scores and perhaps hundreds of volunteers helping to distribute pamphlets, erect signs, make phone calls and write letters and engage in all those traditional electioneering tactics. Candidates for the big three Parties have all those advantages for making their views known. The small independent candidate who decides to run on his own because he is concerned about something, cannot call upon the national press or hundreds of local volunteers.

There is one exception that I think is a constant reminder to all of us. That exception involves the independent candidate who recently ran in Broadview-Greenwood. I believe he originally ran for the Tory nomination but was then walloped by the Tory establishment and kicked out of the Tory Party. He decided not to stand for that Party and ran as an Independent candidate. He was able to attract national media attention and collect scores of volunteers and approximately twice as many votes as the official Tory candidate in that byelection.

Who would have originally decided whether he was serious or had bona fides? If we had taken the attitude of the Tory Party, that candidate, Mr. Worthington, would have been thrown out and not treated seriously as someone with bona fides.

Mr. Kempling: Tell the truth now.

Mr. Fisher: In fact, their behaviour toward him subsequently has indicated that they see him not as a man who should be taken seriously but as one who should be kept out.

I do not believe that politics like that should decide whether an individual should put his name on a ballot. I do not think that we have any business making that kind of decision. If someone wants to follow the model of Mr. Worthington in Broadview-Greenwood, they should be encouraged.

Mr. Kempling: If you want him, you can have him.

Mr. Fisher: The Hon. Member says if we want him, we can have him. The Liberal Party is a democratic institution and we would be more than happy to listen to more voices than just those officially sanctioned. We would be quite happy to have him. If he wants to join us, he has to pay his membership fees and prove that he is a member in good standing. That is all he has to do, because we are more than happy to open our doors to the world to attract people, rather than shutting them.

We are not afraid of a man who may have a divergent point of view. We welcome that because we find that it refreshes the Government and our Party. Mr. Worthington can come and talk to us. We were impressed by his character and perseverance. I must say that we were impressed by the fact that he is ready to carry his case right to the people and be so persuasive.

I would not want to discourage any such person who might be interested in joining us. I believe Mr. Worthington said the other day that he would consider becoming a Liberal. If John Turner ever came back to the Liberal Party, then Mr. Worthington would become a Liberal. That is fine; we are anxious to broaden our Party.

Mr. Blaikie: I would not be that anxious, if I were you.

Mr. Fisher: I have diverged from my theme which concerns the point raised by both the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). Their point was that a candidate must somehow prove that he or she is serious and has bona fides. I do not believe that that is an appropriate prerequisite. I believe that a candidate must simply put his or her name forward and then let his her fellow citizens decide whether he or she should be a Member of Parliament. That should be the only test. It is not at all appropriate for us to invent new ways to slow those types of candidates down.

In whose view are these people not serious or a nuisance? Who decides this issue? I realize that some can cause problems for those who organize the all-candidate meetings. I know that they can be a nuisance to other local candidates who must wait their turn to answer a question during a meeting since there are so many candidates. I am aware that election organizers find some of these people to be a nuisance. So what?

Mr. Smith: That is democracy.

Mr. Fisher: That is right. That is democracy. The Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith), a democrat of the first order, recognizes that principle. He has just articulated it very well.

I must say that it disturbs me when Members start deciding these questions in the House of Commons. It smacks of a great deal of self interest. We should be careful that we are not perceived to be putting up barriers in order to protect our own positions and privileges. We should ensure that these laws welcome newcomers rather than eliminating opportunities for them. I certainly do not believe that we want to be in a position where Canadians feel that we have either protected ourselves or somehow lined our pockets and added to our privileges. Instead, we should proceed in a way that encourages trust in this institution and in our electoral system. I do not believe a $2,000 nomination barrier will pass the test of trustworthiness.

The Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewicky) indicated what the impact of such a barrier would have in lower income areas. Beyond that, even in affluent areas such as the one in which the Hon. Member for Mississauga South lives, it would be seen as an attempt to protect the establishment and keep out newcomers. We cannot afford to give that perception of ourselves. We should be building up confidence that this is a vigorous system that welcomes everyone, including Independent Member like the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Yurko) or the candidate who ran in Broadview-Greenwood. We should not put up barriers to their involvement. Nor should we block the public's perception of our openness.

I understand the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. I know why he has raised this question. I was with him in that crowded and excited church gymnasium when Marxist Leninists were saying, "Make the rich pay" and Libertarians were telling everyone to get off the ordinary citizen's back, and when two Independent candidates had ideas that no one could understand. Perhaps they were a nuisance that night. I know that the Member for Mississauga South had a message that he wanted to convey because I did as well. But we had to share our time with these other people. We had to compete for the audience's attention. But we were the better for it. He won his election and I won mine. Obviously, the Independents did not prove their case well enough or we would not be here.

I can understand that he was annoyed by the inconvenience he faced on his path to victory. But those others are entitled to be in his way and propose alternatives in an attempt to trip him up to see if he is good enough to be a Member of Parliament. They have the right to challenge him for that job.

I began by referring to the Charter of Rights. All of us in the House discussed and debated the Charter of Rights. We put into Clause 3 the statement that every citizen of Canada has the right to qualify for membership in the House of Commons. That is in our Charter of Rights, and I do not believe that we want to put forward ideas, seriously or flippantly, that will impede the spirit of that legislation and that great Charter.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I had not really anticipated speaking in this debate but the words of the previous speaker so inspired and excited me and raised my interest in this subject that I feel obliged to make a few comments.

On numerous occasions I have been tempted to have a similar opinion as that of the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) that it might be advantageous if we did not have a system that lent itself to the existence of frivolous candidates. The first time I ever ran for office during an election was in 1972, and I managed to win that municipal election. However, there were 12 other candidates. I happened to be running against a fellow who was a Nazi leader, and there were a few other very unusual candidates, to say the least. It was very frustrating to attend an all-candidates meeting, having to share time equally with 12 candidates, three-quarters of whom were not in fact what I would consider to be serious candidates.

The temptation is always there to put in place a system which would discourage people from coming forward and running, taking their chances at being elected. The problem, as has already been pointed out by several Hon. Members here today, is that in the final analysis, a truly democratic system is one which somehow strikes a balance between leaving the door open to frivolity and at the same time not making the requirements so stringent that the average Canadian, the ordinary citizen, is unable to run because he simply does not have the money to do it.

As we know, it costs money to run an election these days. We now have in place a system which provides subsidies to candidates who are able to obtain a certain percentage of the vote. However, many candidates are not in fact able to obtain a certain percentage of the vote, and therefore they do not find themselves receiving any public moneys which would be applied toward their campaign. Because of that, they are hard pressed for funds. If, in addition to the demands of their campaign costs, they must also put up a very expensive deposit along the lines which this Private Members' Bill suggests, and I believe it is $2,000, that would indeed work a hardship upon them. I think we would find that many people who would otherwise run, who might otherwise be prepared to participate in the democratic process and take their chances, would in fact be inhibited from taking their chances and putting their names and ideas before the public so that the public can make its judgment. It is a very basic reason as to why I find the Bill, although it is tempting, would not, in the final analysis, be particularly democratic.

What are some of the other considerations which would discourage non-serious candidates from running? I happen to live in an urban area which one can travel around fairly easily because of the short distances involved. However, some ridings in this country are spread out over a very large geographical territory. There are a couple of ridings in the far North, in particular, and one can travel for about 1,500 milles or 2,000 miles and still be in the same riding. We all know how expensive air travel is these days. If a candidate wants to travel around to various parts of the riding and meet all of his would-be constituents, if he has to cover the sort of expenses which would be forced upon him by virtue of the far-flung geography of such very large ridings, and if he must also come up with $2,000 in addition, this would be a very inhibiting factor. It would simply make it impossible for many average Canadians to participate in the democratic process as candidates.

Many ridings have many different towns, and each one of these towns has a newspaper. A candidate might feel obliged to place an ad in each one of these newspapers. That can be a very expensive endeavour. Just start adding up the costs. I remember that several months after an election in which I ran, I received a bill for $5,000. An enthusiastic supporter of mine had placed many ads in ethnic newspapers on my behalf, but he had not quite bothered to tell me that he had done this, and he had also not paid for them. Suddenly, I received a bill for $5,000 which I was not expecting. My wife was not too happy when I told her about it. We managed to sort it out, but it is the sort of expense which can be a tremendous financial burden to a candidate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Smith: I have many more points to make, Mr. Speaker, but I see that my allotted time has expired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings. Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceeding Item No. 271 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING REDEMPTION OF MORTGAGE

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved that Bill C-471, to amend the Interest Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill was introduced by me for first reading on May 2, 1980, almost three years ago. I want to say right at the outset that I would probably not introduce a Bill in precisely the same wording at the present time. First, let me put on the record what I was attempting to achieve back in May of 1980. If I could simply read from the Bill, which is contained in just one paragraph, it asks that the Interest Act be amended after Section 10 by adding the words, "Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or any other Act, a mortgagor may, during the term of the mortgage, redeem the mortgage for the amount of principal and interest then due, plus three months further interest".

I will explain the slight difference because of what has happened in the intervening three years, but the objective then, which is similar to my interest today, was to ensure that a person, for reasons not anticipated when the mortgage was signed, would be able, with a suitable penalty, to pay off the mortgage and either refinance the house or move to another house or another type of accommodation. People would have that amount of freedom.

The circumstances today are not essentially changed. Persons sign for five years and sometimes—and my office is concerned with such a case at the present time—there is what is called a three-month cancellation clause in the agreement.

However, in the fine print, in the case in question, it states that the three-month cancellation clause cannot come into effect during the first three years of the life of the mortgage. Thus, for good reasons, the occupant of the house is unable to refinance because, obviously, the penalty is the interest for the remaining period.

At that time it seemed to me to be unfair. Sometimes we are accused of trying to protect the consumer too much, but it must be recognized that when a person signs a legal document, there are often many pages of small print, and we cannot expect all persons to be fully aware of all the implications. I therefore thought it would be worth-while to have it written into law so that it would be possible when the circumstances required it, no matter what was written in the contract document, for a person, with a reasonable penalty, to either pay off the mortgage or refinance in many cases, and perhaps even possibly to increase the mortgage.

At that time I had a few pieces of information at my disposal which I want to place on the record. I noted, for example, in answers which I received to questions placed on the Order Paper, that the percentage of residential mortgage loans approved by our chartered banks had been increasing steadily through the early seventies. I do not know what the current figure is today, but it is certainly in excess of 30 per cent. I also noticed that amongst persons who owned single, detached dwellings, some 45 per cent had mortgages. I will correct that, Mr. Speaker. Some 53 per cent had a mortgage, of which 7.7 per cent had more than one mortgage. In other words, 47 per cent of single detached dwelling home owners had no mortgage.

• (1650)

Another interesting fact comes from Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and I find it rather astonishing. I put the following question:

> What is the average delay period per housing unit between the initial default of the owner and the final acquisition by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation of properties that have insured mortgages financed by the chartered banks?

I find the answer, with respect to the last 12 month period, for which it had information, rather surprising. It was as follows:

> With respect to claims paid to chartered banks . . . the average time lag from the date a borrower defaults on payment until title is conveyed to CMHC under the terms of the mortgage loan insurance policies, is 414 calendar days.

That is approximately 15 months. I find that information rather incredible. Of course, in the meantime the bank is fully protected. It knows that the mortgage is insured and that it is going to be fully paid. In my opinion, the bank, then has no real interest in cleaning up this matter because eventually the amount is going to be paid to it by, of all people, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

What annoys me about this is that while Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation may be a Crown corporation, public funds are involved. I feel we should have some means by which these things could be wound up more quickly. Obviously, if a person who wants to walk away from a difficult financial situation is unable, because of an agreement, to either refinance or pay off a mortgage through refinancing, then in the final analysis they have little choice but to walk away. It is the taxpayer, the person who put money in Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, who has to pick up the tab.

I feel that every mortgage that is insured by CMHC should have clearly spelled out options in it. I realize—and I know that this is going to be the defence—that only when moneys are lent for a long period at certain fixed interest rates, can the banks also pay high interest rates to those who are willing to lend their money and lock it in for a long period of time.

As a case in point, I happened to note this—quite unconsciously on my part—when I re-arranged my Registered Retirement Savings Plan some five years ago this month. At the time, I thought the best thing to do was to put the money into something at fixed interest rates, and I did so. Of course, within a couple of years the rates started to go up. I inquired then about a penalty in order to put the moneys into some other plan, only to find out, to my chagrin, that the money was locked in. As a matter of fact, those moneys only became free this month, five years after the date I put them into the plan and, of course, the rates have come down again.

The other side of the coin is that last summer when I had some cash available to me I was able to go to the bank when rates were very high and place those moneys at very high interest rates and lock them in for a year. That is a very nice situation and, of course, the banks were only able to give me high interest rates for five years because, in return, they were able to lend the moneys out at a fixed rate over that period of five years to someone else who was perhaps a house owner.

Despite the fact that I have both suffered and benefited from this locked-in feature, in any agreement, whether it be a RRSP or a mortgage, there should be alternatives which allow a person to assess the best way to proceed. Certainly, I feel that it is very unfair in the housing market that any home owner should be locked in for a period of five years with no alternative but to pay the full penalty, in other words, to have to pay the interest for the five year period in order to get out of the mortgage. I feel that is quite unfair. It is something that is often forced upon the poor home owner because he is not able to shop around in the ordinary sense. Very few people go from bank to bank inquiring about rates. They are very much the same no matter which bank you deal with. A lot of this is done on good faith, and when the deal is finally signed with the notary, the people are often not made aware of the full implications.

I have chosen to deal with single, detached dwellings because they serve the argument, and the figures for multi-dwellings and so on are not substantially different and would only complicate the issue. An answer to a question that I put to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation showed that for single detached dwellings, 38 per cent of mortgages are for $10,000 or less; 37 per cent of mortgages are for mortgages between $10,000 and $20,000; and 17 per cent are for mortgages between $20,000 and $30,000. Those figures are quite interesting, because they indicate that a lot of home owners have mortgages—some 75 per cent—of $20,000 or less. With the present value of housing it is quite apparent that many of those home owners could refinance.

Because of the situation we have found ourselves in within the last year, I would consider it highly desirable, in some circumstances, that the homeowner should be able to refinance without substantial penalty. Take, for example, someone who has become unemployed, and that has happened to too many people in the last short while. If he had, say, a $20,000 mortgage on a house valued between $50,000 and $70,000, and was able to go to the bank and refinance, the extra money might carry him through this difficult period. There are many other reasons why a person might want to refinance a mortgage but if the penalty is the balance of the five years at whatever interest rate he is paying, then obviously he has no choice. Under those circumstances he has to find his moneys from some other source. As everyone is aware, if he goes to a bank he is likely to pay 3 or 4 or 5 points above prime rate, and so will pay a very high interest rate indeed. As well, he has a much shorter repayment term. In other words, in difficult times such as we had last year, I would consider it highly desirable that home owners have easy access to the equity in their homes. If they have built that equity up over the years, they should have access to it through taking out another mortgage. I do not mean a second mortgage because the interest rates on them are too high. I mean access by refinancing.

Earlier I spoke of a case with a three month cancellation clause. I estimated that the penalty would amount to a certain sum and that by adding this penalty to the amount of the principal outstanding and then adding the amount of the moneys necessary for the refinancing of other debts, the total package at current interest rates would result in a monthly payment which was hardly different from the amount presently being paid, but with all the problems of financing for different reasons put into one package. In other words, it would be a lot more convenient.

Because the arrangement to speak on this Bill today was discussed last week, I have not had time to draft the kind of Bill I would like to submit in the new session. It would be worded somewhat differently. I recognize that if interest rates for a period of five years are going to be paid to persons who have cash available, obviously those moneys will have to be lent at secured rates for long periods.

Nevertheless, I do not think that we here should be worried about trying to solve the problems of our chartered banks. Let them adjust to the circumstances and let them not do it at the expense of the home owner. While in detail there may be some omissions in this Bill because it is now some three years since I first submitted it, I submit that the intent is clear. I somehow doubt whether this Bill will go into committee for study, but if it should, any difficulties that one might have because of the changed situation today could be looked after by amendments. The principle remains the same. There should be an option in all mortgages insured by CMHC allowing a home owner to refinance with a reasonable penalty. My suggestion is that that should be three months' interest.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my contribution will not be long. However, there are two or three matters I want to deal with in connection with this Bill. First, all mortgages, certainly those that are insured by Crown corporations, should have an escape clause whereby a person can pay off the mortgage at any time without penalty. I do not understand why a person who has the money should be penalized. If he borrowed $100,000 one or two years earlier and he has paid the interest during that time; if he suddenly has enough money to pay off the mortgage, why should there be a penalty? He is giving back the whole principal plus the interest, which he has already paid. I cannot follow this penalty business. Every mortgage should have an escape clause so that it can be paid off without a penalty.

Second, this Bill may help some people. The Hon. Member mentioned one case. However, it will be used rarely. I have no objection to the Bill, but I wish it had tackled some of the real problems of interest today, those that worry the home owners, farmers and businessmen. There is no end to what could have been put into the Bill.

We recently had a visit from Ontario farmers belonging to the Canadian Farm Survival Group. A farmer and his wife visited my office. They told me the bank had taken over their farm. In fact, the bank was considering whether to allow them to continue living there. Although the bank had sold some of their chattels, it would not give a report on how much it made. It was complete arrogance. When a bank exercises its rights under a chattel mortgage or similar instrument, it should be required by law to show that that money has been applied to the principal and how much.

I was delighted to read of a number of farmers in Ontario who are fed up with the high-handedness of some banks. One man's chattels were being sold. I do not know whether they included cattle, but they did include his machinery, whatever he needed to make a living. The other farmers bid ridiculously low prices, such as $2 or $3 for a tractor, combine or seeder, and then turned it back to the farmer. That is being real neighbourly. I do not see anything wrong with it. They were endeavouring to give that man back the instruments he required.

If the bank takes away the farmer's means of livelihood, how can he possibly pay off his mortgage? The banks are simply confiscating these farms. After a lot of hard work and worry, this man is losing his equity. That is not fair to the farmer.

When I was a teacher in a rural district during the early thirties, I recall an insurance company taking over a farm. One day the youngsters came to school crying because they had been ordered to get out of the house. The insurance company did not care where they went. They simply told them to get out and leave everything the way it was.

I looked into that case. In the latter part of the war, the farmer had borrowed money. His wife had tuberculosis. In those days free treatment was not available. Money was not as important as saving his wife's life. Therefore, he borrowed money to take her to doctors for treatment. She could not be cured; she died.

At the time the farmer borrowed the money he thought he would be able to repay it bushel for bushel. When he was kicked off the farm, he had already repaid the debt three times, but still owed as much as he had originally borrowed. Can anyone tell me that is fair? That is completely unfair.

At that time there was a Social Credit Government—I was not a member—headed by the late Premier Eberhart. He established a moratorium so that people would have time to pay their debts. As well, he established the debt adjustment board. In about 1934, federal legislation was introduced by the Bennett Government whereby an independent referee could review loans and payments. If the referee determined that there was good faith on the part of the farmer, the farm was not to be taken away. In fact, under the Alberta legislation, the Creditors' Arrangements Act, it could reduce the sum. Unfortunately, that was a year or two too late for the farmer I have been talking about. After having repaid the debt two and one-half or three times over he was kicked off the farm.

What did the farmer do? He took a granary on skids and moved it to another farmer's property. He could not take any of his equipment. After a lifetime of work, everything was taken from him. He was ruthlessly kicked off his farm. The insurance company had the gall to threaten him with a lawsuit if he did not take the granary back. They were vicious about it. Thank goodness legislation was introduced after that which saved others from a similar situation. Scores of farmers with viable farm operations in Alberta would have lost their farms had the legislation not been introduced at that time. The Farmers' Creditors' Arrangement Act and the debt adjustment legislation in the Province of Alberta and the moratorium saved their farms and they were able to get a proper settlement. In some cases it was reduced, and there were some cases where the farmer had not played the game, and the Debt Adjustment Board knew what to do with these farmers also. But most of them had played the game in economic conditions over which they had no control. When you have a system which is going to make you pay your debt two and three times over and still owe as much as you borrow, how can any ordinary person overcome that?

I would like to say to the Hon. Member that I wish something like that had been put in the Bankruptcy Act which we have before us. It is useless to anyone who is in difficulty today. We need the Farmers' Creditors' Arrangement Bill, or something to that effect, attached to it so that it would have some teeth in it, some way of settling these matters in a fair and equitable way. These are the things which are worrying me. Farmers are being kicked off their farms and losing their entire equity.

We may think it is a joke and say that the farmers brought it on themselves. Well, the farmers in many, many cases did not bring it on themselves. It was brought about by economic conditions over which they have no control. For instance, the sudden rise of interest rates a short time ago completely changed the picture. People who had bought homes and had to renew the mortgage at a rate which was way beyond their wages, the farmer whose farm cost him far beyond the produce which he could sell, the picture was changed for them. The banks did not play very fair, either. A farmer from Ontario, well educated in agriculture, expanded his operations just before the interest rates started to climb. He wanted to have something for his family, and he bought an old farm. And then the interest rates went up. The banker had said to him when he mortgaged the property. "Don't worry, we'll see you through on this. We'll give you time if there is a rise in interest rates. We'll play fair with you." The bank manager was then moved away and the new bank manager had no heart at all, no interest except in getting that land or getting that money, without any fairness at all attached to it.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, we had some legislation to protect these people. They need protection. That is what we should be doing in this country, protecting our farmers who have equity in the land who are playing the game. We need to have our homes protected so we are not kicked out on the street so that the money lenders can receive their full supply of money. Certainly, we want to be fair to those who are caught in the trap. Let us not give all our sympathies to the people who have all the money and forget about those having tough times because of conditions which they had no part in bringing about.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, we could have some changes like that, then I could get enthusiastic about this Bill. I cannot now get enthusiastic about it. I suppose the Government will talk it out anyway innocuous as it is. However, I am not going to worry about that on this Bill. I will worry about it with some other Bills. But if this Bill had some teeth in it to help those having a tough time meeting their payments, then I would be very, very concerned.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it is always stimulating to listen to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) who, this afternoon, was retreating, and I welcome this retreat, into the views which he must have held in his earlier days as a Social Creditor in Alberta. I am always pleased to listen to the Hon. Member for Bow River go after the banks, because the more he talks, the more he sounds like one of that great socialist horde upon which he heaps so much abuse in so many of his other speeches in the House. Unfortunately, we do not have full opportunity to go into it, but I wonder how the Hon. Member for Bow River fits his view of the banks into his general philosophy of free enterprise and into the general conspiracy theory about world socialism, which so many of his colleagues subscribe to. It would be interesting if at some time the Hon. Member would expand on that for us.

I was certainly moved by the sympathy which the Hon. Member displayed for farmers who are the victims of certain economic circumstances beyond their control. What is unfortunate is that the Hon. Member, and many others of the political tradition which he represents, have not been able to muster the same sympathy for workers who are the victims of economic circumstances which are beyond their control. When seen through the Conservative mind, there is something noble about farmers rebelling against economic circumstances which have been imposed upon them. I agree. I believe it is noble and I believe it is called for, but yet through the minds of the farmers, there seems to be something ignoble about workers rebelling against the economic circumstances which have been imposed upon them from beyond, whether it be from the metropolis to the hinterland, whether it is the banks moving in on them, or whatever the circumstances might be.

I believe this is one of the unfortunate divisions within the country, that so often a distinction has been made between the economic problems of the agricultural community and the economic problems of workers in industry in our cities. This is the gap which the political tradition, out of which I consider myself to come, tried to bridge, and, indeed, did bridge in many respects in 1933 through a coalition of farmers and workers and, of course others, in the formation of the CCF. That Party wanted to overcome the false distinction between the problems which farmers faced as a result of economic decisions made from afar, and the problems that workers faced as a result of economic decisions made from afar. I just wanted to say to the Hon. Member for Bow River.

I, like others, support the principle of the Bill. Certainly, people should have more opportunity to get out of mortgages which they signed at a time of high interest rates, now that interest rates have gone down. It seems to me to be absolutely criminal, Mr. Speaker, that these people are in the position in which they are, that all their disposable income, and indeed in some cases more income than they actually have, has to go toward paying interest, and they end up after the period of time is over having paid only a very minimal sum on the principal. I, myself, had the good fortune in 1978 to sign a five-year mortgage. I am only paying, I believe, 10¼ per cent or 10½ per cent, and am amazed at how little I have paid on the principal in the last four and a half years.

This is something, Mr. Speaker, which I believe is at the root of the problems in our economic system, that people must pay out so much for so little. I believe it is a sign of a complete breakdown of economic morality in this country. And I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) and the Hon. Member for Bow River that the New Democratic Party moved amendments to the Bank Act in the summer of 1980 which would have had the effect of doing what both these Hon. Members have stood up in this House and said they support. But we did not receive the support of those Hon. Members at that time. Indeed, if you will recall that debate, the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party together voted many, many times against NDP amendments, one of which would have had the effect of outlawing penalties on prepayment of loans and preventing the banks from calculating interest in such a way as to assure them of a windfall in the event of early payment.

These are the kinds of things we tried to bring in at the time we were reconsidering the Bank Act. And that is not something we get to do very often. The Bank Act only comes up for amendment once every ten years if we are lucky, and my Liberal and Conservative colleagues blew it at that time. They co-operated to vote against our amendments, I wanted to bring that to the attention of the House and all those who are interested in this issue. Whether the Hon. Member for Bow River likes it or not, when it comes to the Bank Act and banking in this country, the Liberals and the Conservatives are of one mind. They demonstrated this on some 20 to 30 votes at that time, if my memory serves me correctly. That is something to keep in mind.

While we are talking about high interest rates, another thing to keep in mind is that the Liberals and the Conservatives, if what I am told is correct and I believe it to be correct, again co-operated back in 1966 when we saw the beginning of this problem. The Liberals and Conservatives allowed themselves to be fooled by the argument that if they took off the 6 per cent limit, the competitive market place, which Members to my right are always foaming at the mouth about, would provide lower interest rates. The banks would be competing with each other in the money markets, interest rates would go down, and what a wonderful thing this new deregulation of interest rates would be. What a wonderful economic gift to the Canadian people it would be. Well, we all know what happened, Mr. Speaker. You can hardly say the control which a small number of banks in this country exercise over the economy is a sort of laboratory of free enterprise.

So what happened, Mr. Speaker? Interest rates climbed and climbed and climbed. At that time we opposed the fundamental and far reaching change in credit policy which I am referring to. At the request of the chartered banks which were seeking to break into the mortgage lending, consumer loans and credit card business, usury laws were abolished. I think that was a big mistake, not just economically but also conceptually. I tend to have perhaps an old-fashioned view of this. I take the view that the notion of usury should have been maintained and that we have gone too far down the road toward morally neutralizing various things like interest rates.

Mr. Evans: The Small Loans Act was there until 1980.

Mr. Blaikie: So in 1966, for the first time in Canadian history, there was no statutory limit on the rate of interest which could be charged on bank loans. Now, we said at that time that a more sensitive and socially responsible alternative would have been, if you are going to do that, to impose limits on all lending institutions rather than eliminating them completely. But we were not listened to. There have been many occasions over the years when we have not been listened to in the House, when we predicted something was going to happen if you did this, and everybody said: You are wrong. But we turned out to be right. This is one of the many cases where we have turned out to be right. No one can get up and deny that since 1966 interest rates have risen dramatically. The cost of money has risen dramatically. The kind of competition envisaged at that time did not materialize and the Canadian people have not benefited from that change.

Mr. Evans: You voted to repeal the Small Loans Act in 1980, which took interest rate ceilings off credit unions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Members should not interrupt the Member who has the floor, and Members should only speak from their seat.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the reasons I did not bother to answer the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), because he was not in his seat. But he does refer to what was done in 1980 with regard to the Small Loans Act, and I know the reason why and he knows the reason why. It is because the credit unions were being hurt by high interest rates. I make no apologies for our support for that change. It does not take away from the substance of my argument in the least.

What we need to do at this time, Mr. Speaker, is to look behind the problem of whether or not people can get out of these mortgages, to the whole financial system in this country and the need for more regulation of the banks in the public interest. That is the kind of direction in which we tried to move this Parliament in the summer of 1980. We believed then that the Act as it was proposed did nothing to protect consumers and small businessmen. It enhanced corporate concentration. It was an Act written to benefit the banks, not the people of Canada. We suggested some amendments, and I would just like to go over them for the record before I sit down so the Government can have the pleasure of talking out this Bill.

We suggested that the Minister of Finance be given the responsibility to monitor the fairness of all interest rates and charges and roll back any unjustifiable increases and charges of any kind by a bank, including credit cards. We opposed the introduction of foreign banks into Canada. We wanted complete information on the cost of loans to consumers and any other bank customers. We wanted to outlaw, as I said before, any penalties on prepayment of loans and prevent the banks from calculating interest in such a way as to ensure them a windfall in the event of an early payment. We wanted to provide for a complete code of financial disclosure and accountability by the banks. We wanted to stop the banks from taking over certain areas of small business such as car leasing and computer data processing. We wanted to give protection to many farmers and cattlemen in the event of a customer being unable to pay for produce. Finally, we said, either we make the banks accountable to the public or we give them a blank cheque to control large sections of the economy. That blank cheque is exactly what Liberal and Conservative Members who spoke today, and their respective caucuses signed in the summer of 1980 when they co-operated against the NDP to pass that Bank Act without the NDP amendments offered at that time.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put on the record that those amendments to the Bank Act regarding the protection of produce in transit where the purchaser has been taken over by the bank were proposed and passed by the Government, and it was Government Members, along with other Members of the committee, who turned back the banks from getting involved in consumer leasing. I must say, though, that I am quite disappointed after hearing these remarks from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) that his Party did not see fit to have someone attend the meetings which are held during the month of September in the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. We heard witnesses from across Canada, and a lot of these ideas were discussed at that time.

However, I want to get back to the Private Members' Bill we are discussing here tonight. I want to commend the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) on bringing forward his proposal. I do not believe, however, he goes far enough. I fully realize that there are two sides to such an issue and that two parties have to get together to sign an agreement or to sign a mortgage—the borrower and the lender. Just yesterday I received a letter from a businessman in my area who took out a $200,000 mortgage a couple of years ago at 18.25 per cent interest. Now he has found funds at a lower interest rate and the lender wants a $20,000 prepayment penalty to pay off the mortgage. He cannot possibly raise that amount of money at the present time. Therefore, he is faced with either going into receivership or trying to sell off some of his assets to pay the prepayment penalty in order to remortgage at a lower rate.

I can well understand the frustration which faces someone like this, but I believe that there is a responsibility on both sides. Rather than having a maximum three-month penalty on prepayment, perhaps there should be something related to the interest rate on the Small Business Bond. Perhaps the banks could accept a three-month penalty at half the bank prime rate plus 2 per cent, which would cut the penalty being asked of this particular gentleman to about $4,500 instead of $20,000. We must realize that when the particular trust company made the mortgage, it was investing someone's fund. In turn, it was committed to a five-year term certificate or some certificate tied to a fixed interest rate. Consequently, it could not very well get off the hook without some form of compensation. I believe that both sides should contribute and suffer the loss.

I would like to go further than just this particular area. I believe we have to re-examine what is happening in the business sector, particularly in the small business and agricultural sectors about which we have heard so much in the last few days. I should like to refer to the series of meetings which took place in September when the Canadian Chamber of Commerce appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. It made a proposal that if we were to look at the adjustments to the capital gains tax structure as such, perhaps we should look at the length of tenure or ownership and relate taxes on that basis. This would catch the windfall speculator and give a break to those people who have invested their lifetime savings back into a particular business or farm. That is one alternative which I believe is very practical and workable.

The other alternative is to apply indexation to capital gains tax. At the present time farm values have decreased between 25 per cent and 30 per cent over the last year or year and a half. Perhaps it is an opportune time to take a look at the possibility of applying indexation to capital gains tax so that we are not taxing away a person's retirement fund but are keeping pace with inflation and protecting the investment for which he worked so hard over the years and which he put back into his operation.

Another area at which we should take a look in these difficult times was mentioned before in the House—the fact that Canadians are regarded as great savers. In 1981 they salted away something like $17 billion worth of personal savings. It is required in today's economy; it is required for small-businessmen and farmers. We should take a look at what could be done with that money if we ensured that it was well secured for the investor. Normally when a businessman or farmer sells, he tries to reinvest the funds in guaranteed term certificates or something that he knows will give him security in his retirement years and allow him the freedom and type of pleasures which perhaps he did not enjoy during his lifetime of labour.

In this particular area we should look at the possibility of investment incentives to private individuals investing in fixed capital assets. There is no reason that a businessman who sells out to his son could not take back a mortgage. I remember that was the way it was when I started farming. A private individual gave me a mortgage, and if I could not make a payment on principal the first year, he was lenient and said, "You will have a better year next year; give me the money when you can". We did this, but in those days we did not have the huge investments of today, although we had tough times.

We should look at the private investor and bear in mind that when a businessman goes to the bank for a small-business loan, or a farmer goes for a farm improvement loan, it is Government guaranteed. We should do the same for private investors on fixed capital assets. For example, if a son wanted to take over a farm from his father, the father could take back a mortgage and know that his investment was secure. I realize that there would have to be some mechanism to protect the public interest and to ensure that the Government was not loaded up with a bunch of bad debts. We have that mechanism in the field at the present time. We have it through the CASE workers in the Federal Business Development Bank. They are experienced businessmen, most of them retired, and they know a good investment when they see it. Also, we have that mechanism through Farm Credit Corporation supervisors. This is a vehicle through which we could enhance the investment climate for the small investor who would like to assist a son, a daughter or another member of the family to become established in business. This is only one additional step at which we could look. We could go even further. For example, if they are willing to take back mortgages at interest rates lower than the prevailing rate, we should also look at the possibility of giving them a break on income tax payable on interest earned.

We should bear in mind that we are doing this for the banks through the Small Business Bond. They are paying half the bank prime rate plus 2 per cent or 3 per cent. Why should it not be available to the private investor, if it would help a young person to get started with his farm or small business? I believe such an opportunity would bring out a lot of that investment capital which we sorely need in today's economy.

These are the areas at which we have to look, in addition to the proposal of the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil. I wish to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) for his comments on the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and the amendments incorporated in Bill C-653. I tried to incorporate a prepayment penalty ceiling which I believed was fair and reasonable to both borrowers and lenders.

Consequently, as we look at these various measures, I think mechanisms can be put in place to help those in need, particularly those in the small-business, farming and fisheries sectors. In way of a brief recap, I am talking about readjusting the prepayment penalties to a more reasonable level; changes in the capital gains tax structure, either those suggested by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce or through indexation; investment incentives to private investors, small businesses and agricultural operations on fixed capital assets; and assisting young people to become established in businesses of their choice.

These measures alone are not sufficient. We have come through a severe period of high interest rates, low commodity prices, and a recession which has gripped most countries of the western world. In view of the fact that commodity prices are very low at the present time, these measures alone, which we have discussed so far, will not solve the problem and give the long-term security required in this sector. Look at the opportunities available to us. Other countries view Canada as a stable nation, a nation to be trusted which is not one of the super powers. There is a feeling in other parts of the world of wanting to deal with Canada. Many nations do not want to become obligated to one of the super powers.

In this context, I want to point to the various farm organizations and the type of security they enjoy when the economy is booming. It reflects back to other sectors of the small business world, to the allied industries that supply their equipment and other needs of the farming sector. If we are going to bring that type of stability into this area, then we need to have other mechanisms in place. I am referring here to a piece of legislation that is before the House at the present time a waiting report stage and third reading. Bill C-85 will provide a mechanism that has been asked for by the farm organizations of Canada. It will open up new markets for Canada and it will open the way for long-term contractual arrangements with other countries, that will in turn lead to the stability required in the world today. Other countries are looking for long-term security in terms of food supply. We as Canadians, through the farm organizations that we have, can supply it to them and bring about the security and the cash flow required in these operations that are so severely affected today.

I want to commend the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) on the intentions behind his Bill. I do not think it goes far enough and if we can take it further through some amendments it will be a Bill that will provide us the type of security needed today.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate Hon. Members on this side who have spoken so clearly on issues involving home owners and farmers. These issues bother all of us. We all want to find the answers they have been seeking. However, a great deal of the problem is being solved because we see interest rates dropping so dramatically. Interest rates are dropping to a great extent, in response to the confidence created by the Government's six and five program.

Mr. Nickerson: You have to be joking.

Mr. Fisher: The six and five program is working. That has to be good news for every home owner, every farmer, every senior citizen and every businessman. Everyone has to be happy that interest rates are coming down, that inflation is coming down and that the six and five program is beginning to have a real impact in this country. That is good news for all of us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fisher: Let us take a look at some specifics. Mortgage rates are now less than 12 per cent. In fact, they are almost down to 11 per cent. The prime rate today fell to the lowest level it has been since 1978. The prime rate is now 11.5 per cent. Newspaper writers are telling us that that rate will continue to drop, that this is just one sign of more good news.

Mr. Smith: Happy days are here again.

Mr. Kempling: With two million people unemployed you are saying happy days are here again?

Mr. Fisher: We are seeing Canada's trade balance continue on a very strong level. We are seeing our dollar respected and held up at high levels on the international market. We are seeing renewed strength coming back in retail sales, a sign that consumer confidence is being rebuilt. These are all indicators of a coming recovery, a recovery that was first started by the Government's six and five program.

An Hon. Member: How can you believe that?

Mr. Fisher: The key to all of this good news is that inflation is coming down. We have seen inflation drop more than 2 per cent since the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) gave his economic statement.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. It is my duty to interrupt the proceedings, pursuant to Standing Order 24(2). Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding No. 137 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERAL TRANSPORT COMMISSION OF INQUIRY ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East) moved that Bill C-337, to provide for the constitution of a Federal Transport Commission of Inquiry (impartial investigation of transport accidents), be read the second time and be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

He said: Mr. Speaker, what a delight it is to see so many Hon. Members sitting there on the other side.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: I am pleased to see you here. What a way to attract an audience.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: The matter that I had the privilege to introduce for the tenth time in the House is no small matter.

An Hon. Member: Let's hear it.

Mr. Forrestall: Look at you bumbling idiots. You should be out to dinner.

An Hon. Member: They are out to lunch.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member should address his remarks to the Chair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Forrestall: We know why you are here, Mr. Speaker. I wonder why there are so many of them over there.

This is a very serious matter. This is the tenth time that I have introduced the House a measure that would have the effect of removing every semblance of the appearance of conflict of interest in the broad question of accident investigation in this country. In the western world Canada remains one of the few countries which has not long ago taken the prudent step of separating from those agencies responsible for the promulgation of regulations the responsibility for investigating accidents that occur within the ambit of these very regulations.

We have seen conflict. We have felt the consequences of that conflict. Yesterday in St. John's, Newfoundland, a memorial service was held for the men who lost their lives on the Ocean Ranger. Let me suggest at the outset that had the concept of my Bill, currently Bill C-337, been accepted by Government when it was introduced some ten years ago, the conflict that exists today would never have occurred. There would have been jurisprudence. There would have been a basis from which to proceed with a legally constituted inquiry. We all know what the difficulties are.

Let me review the situation for a moment so that Hon. Members over there will be aware. Going back to the days when the present Speaker of the other place was Minister of Transport, he agreed in principle to the establishment of a multi-model, independent, impartial commission of investigation. In those days we linked it as well to the principles of an impartial safety board. Without going into the events in great detail, I will put this on the record. I suggest Members read the debates surrounding Bill C-66. As well, there were Bills C-85, C-33, C-226, C-109, C-344, C-40, C-473 and presently Bill C-337. We are given to understand that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) will shortly bring before the House his own version that will apply to aviation accidents. If we are to believe that the Government followed the recommendations of Justice Dubin's Report, the Board to be established will ensure impartiality with respect to safety and particularly with respect to investigation. That Board will report to this Chamber through a Minister other than the Minister of Transport. Therefore, since I have no reason to believe otherwise, I trust that the Minister's piece of legislation will, in fact, be impartial.

If Members read Justice Dubin's first volume, which was written as a result of the findings of the Commission that was established by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) when he was Minister of Transport three years ago, and compare it with the subject matter of Bill C-337, they will find them to be essentially identical. In other words, it involves the commonsense principle, which was agreed to by a succession of Ministers of Transport, starting with the Hon. Jean Marchand, now Speaker of the Senate, up to and including the present Minister of Transport, that what is good for air safety is good for the marine mode, the surface mode, pipelines and every form of transportation in this country that falls within the ambit of federal regulations.

It is shortsighted to establish a board that deals with only one mode of transportation. It is a waste of time of the House. Beyond that, it constitutes a further delay in ridding the image of conflict of interest in Canada. When we see the legislation we will know how the Government will pursue evidence from across the border relating to that. We will understand quite clearly what the Government is doing. It began this procedure in 1968. We are now in 1983. Why do we have this delay? Why do we permit ourselves to be viewed with mistrust and suspicion by countries like Britain, United States, Australia, West Germany, Japan, New Zealand and Norway because of the conflict that we continue to permit to surround the investigation of transportaiton accidents in our country?

My Bill is straightforward and seizes itself with the necessity of eliminating that conflict. It comes as a result of an expressed concern throughout the transportation industry in Canada, including aviation, marine, rail, interprovincial pipelines and interprovincial trucking. It flowed from a concern expressed by those interested communities that this Parliament should take some time to review the situation and produce legislation which would eliminate that appearance of conflict of interest.

We have not seen that legislation. As I said, we would not even have had Justice Dubin's recommendations had it not been for the distinguished Member for Vegreville during his tenure as Minister of Transport. When we did get Justice Dubin's Report all that we saw done was the setting up of an ad hoc committee to study it. I would remind Hon. Members that one of the people named to that committee was the then Air Administrator, Mr. Walter McCleish, who in fact was the very subject of an extraordinary amount of criticism by Mr. Justice Dubin in his first and second volumes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I apologize for interrupting the Hon. Member. The noise level in the House has risen to quite some degree. I wonder if Hon. Members would hold their conversations somewhere else so we can listen to the Hon. Member who has the floor.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I do not blame them when they are over there wondering what in the name of the Lord they are doing here when they all have other things they would sooner be doing, except that if they are out of here they know what I will do to them in three minutes' time. They will sit there and yack among themselves—

An Hon. Member: What are you going to do?

Mr. Forrestall: —and not listen to one of the most important principles that has been in front of the House for 15 years and concerns the whole field of transportation. Do they want to continue this conflict of interest? Do you think it is right, Mr. Speaker, to remove the appearance of conflict of interest with regard to air transportation and let it remain with marine transportation, surface transportation, rails and pipelines? Is that correct? They very principles that we have from Justice Dubin are applicable to all these other areas. Why are we not doing the same thing for marine transportation?

Mr. Chénier: You are laughing.

Mr. Forrestall: Listen young man, I am not laughing about this. I have spent 12 years of my life being involved in this issue. Why do you not get up and promote something worthwhile for this country?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Forrestall: Get your Minister to do something worthwhile in this Chamber. You have neither the intelligence nor the character to do it.

Mr. Chénier: Have some respect for the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mr. Forrestall: Do not tell me that I am laughing at my own work, young man.

An Hon. Member: Sit down, blabbermouth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) has the floor. Our standing orders provide that when a Member has been recognized to make a speech, he should not be interrupted. The Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, not one of them over there can stand up in the Chamber and point to one single thing that they have ever done. I have been promoting a good idea for 12 years. Do you want to know why it has been rejected over those years? Do you want to know why it continues to be rejected today? It is because it is a good idea and makes common sense. It will help the transportation industry and help the public image of Canada. It was rejected because it came from the Conservative side of the House. We thought of it first, so they do not want to implement it.

Simply because those Members appear to be interested at last, perhaps I will move a motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 8(4)(a) I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby):

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment for the purpose of continuing consideration of Bill C-337, an Act to provide for the constitution of a Federal Transport Commission of Inquiry, on the second reading stage.

I commend that motion to Members of the House. Let us see them put their money where their mouth is.

An Hon. Member: Sit down, blabblermouth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those who oppose the motion will please rise.

And more than 25 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Pursuant to Standing Order 8(4)(b), the motion is deemed to have been negatived.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, perhaps it could be noted that the Hon. Members on the Tory side are ready to stay and fool around tonight, but they were not ready to talk about the Income Tax Act last night.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, upon my appointment as Minister of Finance I said that one of my basic tenets would be fully to inform the Canadian people fully of the economic situation as I saw it. I have done this repeatedly and consistently since my appointment as Minister of Finance, and I will continue to do this today and in the future. Not only is it a right for the Canadian people to know of the economic situation in the country, but I also believe it is essential for the confidence and solidarity that will ensure economic recovery.

I am pleased to open debate on the borrowing authority Bill which is before us today. This Bill is one in a series of necessary steps being taken to deal with the extremely difficult economic situation facing this country. The Bill is a reflection of the massive financial support that the Government of Canada is providing to the economy and particularly to the victims of the recession. It reflects the severity of the recession itself.

The need for a borrowing Bill before the end of this fiscal year on April 1 was spelled out in my economic statement of October 27. At that time, the Government reaffirmed its commitment to help those who need it the most through the Unemployment Insurance Program, the Canada Assistance Plan and a number of other initiatives such as direct job creation.

This help was given at the very time when revenues were falling rapidly because of the recession. The inevitable effect of this humane and vital provision of economic support is an increase in the deficit and in the borrowing requirements of the Government. I laid it all out in October and I appreciated the wide support for this approach from Members of the House and individuals and groups all across Canada.

In fact, the need for this Bill at this time was one of the few sure things on which we could depend in an inherently volatile economic situation. If any Hon. Member is surprised by this Bill, then he or she was not paying attention to the real world outside.

After I assumed the Finance portfolio almost five months ago, I was asked how long I would need to settle into the job. My reply was to the effect that I was not sure how much time I would need, but I already knew how much time was available; that is, virtually none. Looking back, I now realize how fortunate I was not to have had a lot of time to settle in. The economic and financial ground on which we were treading had all the less desirable qualities of quicksand. The last thing any of us would have wanted to do, indeed, would be to settle in.

Clearly, the economic situation is starting to show more positive developments. There are more and more signs of an emerging recovery. However, it would be premature to say today that the economic and financial footing has completely stabilized. The risks remain high, but they will diminish considerably if we all work together in a determined effort to pull this country through. We in this House should be vigorously supporting the emerging new economic momentum, and that means getting on with the business at hand.

The Bill is just one in a series of important steps following the October statement. Another major step was the introduction of the income tax legislation which would provide certainty by clearing up unresolved tax issues dating back to November, 1981, and which includes adjustments announced in my October statement.

Miss MacDonald: And more.

Mr. Lalonde: At the same time, extensive pre-budget consultations have been going forward vigorously, toward the goal of presenting a new budget before the end of this fiscal year, if the parliamentary schedule allows.

Before looking in some detail at the Bill before us, I want to provide a brief update to the economic and fiscal situation. In my October statement to Parliament, I indicated that the real Gross National Product was expected to fall by 4.4 per cent in 1982, and that unemployment was expected to decline very slowly through 1983.

Mr. Epp: And then what happened?

Mr. Lalonde: Indications are that the recovery did not commence in the late months of 1982, as I hoped it would, and

I now estimate that the decline in the real GNP last year was close to 5 per cent.

One of the victims of this recession, among others—

Mr. Epp: Is the Liberal Government.

Mr. Lalonde: —has been the art of economic forecasting. As one forecaster for Chase Econometrics in the United States described it, "the year 1982 will go down as probably the worst year in memory for economic forescasters".

Mr. Epp: And Finance Ministers.

Miss MacDonald: For two million unemployed as well.

Mr. Lalonde: For example, in the summary of forecast prepared by the Conference Board of Canada, the average forecast of some 15 private sector groups last summer was for a decline in real GNP of 0.7 per cent. That is a long way from the likely outcome of minus 5 per cent at the moment.

Of course, there is some good news.

Mr. Blenkarn: Like what? Face an election.

Mr. Lalonde: Sure. The Hon. Member asks like what.

Mr. Epp: You are resigning! Tell us.

Mr. Lalonde: I ask the Hon. Member to listen very patiently, to consider the reality, and he might learn a few things. Inflation has moderated quite rapidly since the six and five program was put in place last June, very rapidly indeed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The 12-month increase in the Consumer Price Index to December was 9.3 per cent, well down from the 13 per cent peak reached in the summer of 1981.

Miss MacDonald: And unemployment was up.

Mr. Lalonde: There has been a 7.2 per cent average annual increase in the Consumer Price Index since last June. That trend appears to be continuing downward so that we can indeed look forward to reaching a 6 per cent range in the course of 1983. Also, and in parallel, interest rates have fallen very substantially, and it is now possible to obtain a one-year home mortgage for under 12 per cent and a five-year mortgage for 13.5 per cent.

Mr. Lewis: If you have a job.

Mr. Lalonde: These, at least, are encouraging signs. I might once again point out to the Hon. Member opposite that tomorrow, for instance, the largest Canadian bank will lower its prime lending rate to 11.5 per cent. One would have to go back several years to find as low a rate of interest in the Canadian economy.

• (1115)

Mr. Fisher: 1978.

Mr. Lalonde: As my Parliamentary Secretary indicates, the interest rates have not been as low as they will be tomorrow since 1978.

Many forecasters have recently again revised down their expectations for this year. If I may quote Chairman Mao, "Those who forecast should forecast frequently".

Mr. Epp: Look what happened to him!

Mr. Lalonde: Most of the private sector forecasts which I have recently seen have projected real GNP growth for 1983 to be in the 1 per cent to 2 per cent range. I plan to outline the Government's own projections for 1983 and the years beyond in my forthcoming budget speech.

As I have already indicated, the delay in the economic recovery has had the effect of further reducing federal revenues and increasing financial requirements. Under the Financial Administration Act, statutory borrowing authority must be obtained from Parliament in order for the Government to increase its outstanding debt. The Bill currently before the House seeks new borrowing authority of $19 billion. This amount is made up of $5 billion supplementary borrowing authority for 1982-83 and $14 billion interim borrowing authority for 1983-84.

Mr. Epp: Why?

Mr. Lalonde: As Hon. Members will recall, so far this fiscal year the Government has obtained borrowing authority amounting to $21.1 billion. This amount is made up of $3.5 billion of unused borrowing authority carried forward from earlier years; $6.6 billion for 1982-83 provided by Bill C-111; $7 billion provided by Bill C-125 and a further $4 billion provided by Bill C-128.

As a matter of interest to Hon. Members, I would like to set out the Government's debt program so far in the current fiscal year and the amount of borrowing authority that has been used to date. To February 11, 1983, a total of $20.6 billion of borrowing authority had been used of the $21.1 billion authorized. The use of borrowing authority is made up of $0.9 billion as a result of foreign borrowing and about $19.7 billion as a result of the domestic debt program. The main component of the foreign borrowing was the borrowing of $750 million U.S. in the Eurobond market last June. The domestic debt program comprised approximately $7.1 billion raised through the net issue of treasury bills; $4.5 billion through the net issue of marketable bonds; and after taking the net redemptions into account, $8.1 billion through Canada Savings Bonds.

Hon. Members will note that the amount of borrowing power already obtained for 1982-83 is smaller than the $22.2 billion financial requirements forecast last October in my statement in this House. The latest projections now forecast financial requirements at $26.1 billion for 1982-83. The upward revision of $3.9 billion of financial requirements since October reflects a downward adjustment of $2.5 billion to the revenue forecast, an upward revision of $1.2 billion to projected total outlays and a $0.2 billion change to estimated annual budgetary transactions.

The projected budgetary deficit for the current fiscal year rises to $27.2 billion, up from $23.6 billion since the October statement. The increase in the deficit is slightly less than the increase for financial requirements because of the non-budgetary component of the latter which I have mentioned.

From the press reports of the past two days, it appears that some have been confusing the financial requirements of the Government with the Government's deficit. This is somewhat surprising since over the years the two numbers have not been identical. As I just mentioned, the figures as of October 27 were $22.2 billion for financial requirements and $23.6 billion for the deficit. The deficit, of course, reflects the same economic pressures that have increased our financial requirements since October. It equally reflects the Government's commitment to ease the impact of the recession on individual Canadians and the economy as a whole.

Revenues from the corporate income tax, the personal income tax and the petroleum and gas revenue tax have all been falling short of previously anticipated levels. The increase in total outlays is primarily the result of non-discretionary cost increases for statutory programs, most notably public debt charges, Government contributions to Unemployment Insurance extended benefits, equalization, Established Programs Financing and veterans' pensions.

It also includes a $240 million adjustment to cover anticipated additional requirements under the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program. As of January, 1983 a total of 158,900 grants worth $476 million had been issued under this program, which obviously has been a great success. Finally, non-budgetary transactions are now expected to provide a somewhat smaller net source of funds than forecast earlier because of further widening in the Unemployment Insurance account deficit.

In summary, about 72 per cent of the increase in the estimated financial requirements for 1982-83 since the updated projections in October, 1982 reflects revenue losses and higher than expected debt charges as a result of the delay in the start of the economic recovery. Another 28 per cent consists of a variety of recession-related expenditures such as those required under established income support programs. Increases in Unemployment Insurance payments account for almost one-third of these expenditures.

In light of the estimated financial requirements for 1982-83 which I have just outlined, Part I of this Bill requests additional borrowing authority for this fiscal year of $5 billion. This amount of borrowing authority, in addition to the amounts already available for this fiscal year, will result in total authorized borrowing authority equal to the financial requirements for 1982-83.

Members will note that in Part I of this Bill, as in Bill C-125 and other previous borrowing authority Bills, some portion of the authority is to be non-lapsing. In the case of the present Bill, the non-lapsing amount will be $2 billion. The need for the non-lapsing authority rises from the uncertainty of the date of the passage of this Bill and the desire to tailor the Government's borrowing operations to financial market conditions. Thus, it may be that some of this year's financial requirements will be temporarily met by a rundown in cash balances. Nonetheless, the financial requirements must ultimately be met by borrowing and the non-lapsing amount in the authority provides a basis for such borrowing after March 31 of this year.

Concerning fiscal year 1983-84, it is still too early to forecast what the total financial requirements will be. They will, of course, depend upon the measures to be included in the budget. They will also depend upon the course of economic developments through 1983 and 1984, and my officials and myself are still reviewing the economic outlook. The results of this review will be outlined in the budget which I will present to the House.

However, I would like to announce at this time that the Government has reviewed the expenditure framework for 1983-84, and for planning purposes has agreed on a total outlay target of $88.9 billion for 1983-84. This represents an increase of 9.6 per cent relative to total outlays in the current fiscal year.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) will be providing Parliament with detailed expenditure Estimates for 1983-84 on February 22, when he tables the Main Estimates, and I will be providing Parliament with full information on the Government's expenditure plan, including any changes the Government may make for the current fiscal year, at the time of my budget.

I intend to introduce a Bill covering all of the borrowing authority needed for fiscal year 1983-84 after providing Parliament with the necessary information in my budget. This Bill will also take into account the interim borrowing authority to be granted on the basis of the Bill now before the House.

It is desirable that Parliament have adequate time to study and debate the budget as well as the new borrowing authority. At the same time, it is necessary for the Government to carry out its debt program in an orderly, efficient manner, and this will require borrowing authority. Our request in Part II of the Bill for $14 billion borrowing authority for part of 1983-84 is based on both these considerations I have mentioned.

Financial requirements in 1983-84 will continue to be high. The amount of interim authority requested, however, is sufficient to last into the summer, and this will provide a stable basis for debt operation while Parliament is considering the budget and the related borrowing authority Bill. I might note that the first fiscal quarter is a period of particularly heavy seasonal cash requirements because of tax reforms which amount to roughly $6 billion and other factors. It is, therefore, of particular importance that borrowing operations not be hindered by borrowing authority constraints.

Let me now explain in more detail why passage of this bill and provision of interim borrowing authority for 1983-84 is important.

As members are probably aware, Government of Canada securities currently outstanding amount to more than $113 billion, and financial requirements are such that they will require that the outstanding debt increase by an average of about $2 billion every month. In addition, previously issued debt is coming due and must be re-financed. For example, something in the neighbourhood of $1.25 billion worth of Treasury bills must be re-financed each week and there are significant maturities in the bond market.

• (1130)

Clearly, given the size of the financial operations which I have just described, even a savings of a small fraction of one per cent can imply significant dollar amounts. Since the major objective of debt management is to minimize public debt charges it is important that the borrowing program can be planned and operated in an orderly and efficient manner and that the Government have the flexibility to respond to attractive financing opportunities. Clearly, adequate borrowing authority is necessary for this to be achieved.

Another important objective of debt management is compatibility with the smooth and efficient operation of the financial markets. Besides being cost-effective, this helps to ensure that federal borrowing operations do not interfere with borrowing activities by other levels of government or the private sector. Adequate borrowing authority is essential for the type of planning and flexible response to changing financial market conditions which ensure that the financial markets are not disrupted by government borrowing.

There is an additional need for ensuring adequate borrowing authority which has been mentioned in previous debates—that is the impact of exchange market operations. The estimated financial requirements which I have been discussing do not take into account any possible impact from exchange operations. When the Canadian dollar is firm, as it has been in recent months, exchange reserves will increase. To finance this increase, Canadian dollar must be borrowed and charged against the borrowing authority. On the other hand, in periods when the Canadian dollar is under heavy pressure and our U.S. dollar working balances are low, these U.S. dollar balances are supplemented by drawing on the standby credits which the government has with the Canadian and international banks.

Thus, if the government is to carry out its responsibilities under the Currency and Exchange Act in an efficient and cost-effective manner, borrowing authority must be in place to accommodate exchange market pressures.

To sum up, dealing with this bill in a business-like and responsible manner and providing adequate interim borrowing authority will benefit the taxpayer by helping to minimize public debt charges. It is also in the interest of other public and private sector borrowers who could be affected if government borrowing operations were distorted, and will assist government policies to support the continuing smooth functioning of both the financial and the exchange markets. As some members may know, Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act permits the Government to raise funds with terms to maturity not to exceed six months if, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, there will be insufficient funds to meet disbursements.

In the event that Section 39 is used, I would not wish that its use result in authority to borrow more than I am requesting in the bill currently before this House. Therefore, I would be prepared to amend the bill at committee stage to deduct from the $5 billion sought for this year any amounts borrowed under Section 39. In any case, Section 39 is an emergency-measure and is not designed for long-term use. The Government would be extremely limited in its debt operations since it would be able to raise new funds only through the issue of three- and six-month Treasury bills.

The sale of one-year Treasury bills and bonds has been and will continue to be a major source of funds for the Government. Use of these sources is not possible under Section 39.

While I have put considerable emphasis on the need to carry out the government's borrowing operations in a business-like and cost-effective manner, I would not wish to leave members with the impression that I lack confidence in the strength and flexibility of Canada's financial markets. The people working in the Canadian financial markets are among the most skilled and resourceful in the world. Our financial markets have in the past shown a great ability to adapt to meet changing demands placed upon them. This view of the financial markets has been confirmed in my consultations with business and financial people when I have asked for their advice on the risks of crowding out in the debt markets because of the high government borrowings. Canada continues to have an extremely high savings rate—13 per cent of disposable income—which supports the view that our capital markets are equal to the task. One might add that the best evidence to date for this view is that interest rates have fallen dramatically even during a period of heavy government borrowing. Let me emphasize again, however, that any disruption in the Government's debt program caused by delay in passing this legislation will risk unnecessary public debt charges and inconvenience for other public and private sector borrowers.

As I have made clear, government has a responsibility to provide support to economic activity through the deficit in times such as these. But government has an equal responsibility not to impede the private sector from playing its role as the main engine of economic growth in the recovery period that lies ahead.

So, while Honourable Members may share my concern about the government's debt program, an even greater concern is the health and vitality of the private sector. It is of course impossible to link the funds borrowed by government to specific expenditures. However, I have already outlined the major causes of the increased financial requirements, and they are part and parcel of the impact of the recession which the deficit has served to cushion. Likewise, in the next few months, the Government faces heavy spending commitments arising out of measures designed to ease that impact. In addition, in the next few months the Government will have to pay out more than $6 billion in tax refunds—a source of considerable immediate stimulus to the economy in its own right. I would remind Honourable Members that timely payment of refunds depends on approval of the income tax legislation which I mentioned earlier as one of the vital steps to economic stability. There is thus added urgency in getting on with the task at hand over and above the need for orderly and efficient management of the debt program.

Before closing, I want to emphasize that financial requirements have risen because of unexpectedly harsh cyclical forces. The Government of Canada remains committed to its longer term goal of systematic restraint of its expenditures as a proportion of the GNP, and to systematic reduction of the deficit as well. It is important to recognize that substantial reductions in the deficit were achieved in fiscal years 1979-80, 1980-81 and 1981-82, as illustrated by the fact that the Government's financial requirements dropped from a level equivalent to 4.8 per cent of GNP in 1978-79 to only 2.5 per cent of GNP in 1981-82. The weak economic situation at the present time has seriously eroded Government revenues and inflated Government expenditures; a strong recovery would obviously have the opposite effect.

Canada has suffered an extremely severe recession. Tax bases have fallen and unemployment has risen. The fiscal position is very sensitive to economic conditions and has been dramatically affected by these developments. We must keep these matters in proper perspective when interpreting the present deficit level.

I might add that in my consultations during recent months, there has been strong support from a wide range of groups for continued restraint by Government, particularly as exemplified by the six and five program. Yet while there has been widely shared concern about the deficit, no one has asked me to cut away the safety nets for those truly in need. Nor was I asked to increase greatly the burden of taxation at this time. There is wide agreement that the best way to reduce the deficit is to support the economy through this difficult period and return as quickly as possible to economic growth.

Our plans have been dealt a severe blow—no question about it. So have those of virtually all Canadians. The temporary increase in the deficit to help those who need help the most is playing a vital role in maintaining the strength needed to provide a base for economic recovery. It is time for all of us to play our part in building up that strength and that recovery in the months and years ahead.

I therefore invite Hon. Members to address this Bill at long last on second reading. We will have an opportunity to debate it in the House and to consider it at committee stage. There will be opportunity for full debate on the Income Tax Act, which has been before the House for some time and has already been the subject not only of extensive consideration by a parliamentary committee for many weeks since last fall but has also been examined by the House for several days, on second reading.

I have indicated the importance of addressing this issue in a responsible and expeditious way in order to ensure that we will have a debt management program that will be efficient, will involve the least possible cost to the taxpayer and cause the least possible disruption of financial markets.

The money required for the rest of this year has been fully explained. I have indicated why the money is required, what the financial situation of the Government is for 1982-83, and that the additional amount of $14 billion for 1983-84 is required as an interim payment. After my budget, I intend to introduce another borrowing authority Bill which will cover the full 1983-84 period. At that time Parliament will have a full opportunity to examine the total requirement of the Government in 1983-84 in light of the budget that I will present and the Estimates that will be presented to the House on February 22. Parliament will, therefore, have before it all the facts that it needs to make a decision in the full knowledge of the implications of the various decisions that are required.

As far as the Bill is concerned, it is quite clear. I do not think I need add much to what I have already said.

[Translation]

I therefore invite the House to give serious consideration to and expedite the passage of a Bill that is of vital importance to ensure that our country's economic recovery, which has now started, will continue, to prevent problems on the financial market and to provide for sound and effective management of the public debt. The funds borrowed by the Government will benefit Canadians. As I said before, these funds are mainly borrowed on the domestic market and are used to finance Government programs aimed mainly at easing the impact of the recession on many Canadians, especially on those drawing unemployment insurance benefits, those on welfare and those benefiting from the Government's direct job creation programs. These sums are also necessary because as a result of the recession, both individuals and corporations are paying less in taxes than they were paying when wages and corporate profits were higher.

I hope now that economic recovery has started it will continue throughout 1983. According to our projections, inflation will continue to drop, and economic growth is expected to accelerate in the course of the year as incomes of private citizens and corporations increase. When this happens, government revenues, and the Canadian Government's revenues in particular, will increase as well, making it easier for the Government to reduce the deficit and the substantial financial requirements it cannot avoid at the present time if it is to take at all seriously its responsibility as a Government, during a recession as serious as the one we have experienced.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister would answer a few questions before I commence my remarks. There are some things about which he has left us in the dark and perhaps he would answer some questions first.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I want to make it clear to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) that the new system of ten minutes for questions, answers and comments referred to in the Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders does not apply to the presentation of a bill.

If there is unanimous consent to an exchange of questions and answers, that automatically implies that the Minister would accept them. The House may wish to proceed in that fashion, but there is nothing in the Provisional Standing Orders that would permit an exchange of questions and answers.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, Members of this Party would agree to giving unanimous consent at this time to allow the Minister to answer a few questions.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the Bill is going to committee and I will appear before the committee, when there will be plenty of opportunity to answer any questions put by Members on this side of the House or on the other side. I do not think we should change the rules of the House at this time. If the Hon. Member has any questions he will have plenty of opportunity to ask them then. As a matter of fact, I am very eager to hear what he has to say—if he has anything to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of sadness and distress that I address the House today. That sadness and distress is more explicit because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is afraid or unwilling, or both, to give to the House the financial projection that it is entitled to receive. We have received no tables, no statements, no projections with respect to unemployment, with respect to the deficit in the Unemployment Insurance Fund or with respect to what is happening with the Established Programs Financing Act which he says is paying out more money. That Act is somehow tied to a floating GNP rate.

• (1150)

We have no idea why the Minister wants a $2 billion non-lapsing borrowing authority for next year. He pulls out of the air a need for $5 billion, which he says he will have to borrow within six weeks because the year end is March 31. Yet he refuses to explain himself. He refuses to answer questions. But what does he say to this House and to the people of Canada? He says: "Trust us."

Yesterday we found out how we should trust the Liberals, and this Minister who signs agreements that make sure a friend of his gets a fee of $600 a day. The Minister has told us about the people who are unemployed. He has told us about the employment programs of this Government. What about the $800 a day for a former Minister? What about $450 a day for a former candidate? These are the very important employment programs?

The Minister said he did not have time to settle in because of the quicksand, but he has settled this country in quicksand, and he knows it.

Mr. Lambert: Don't forget the National Energy Program.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Minister said Chairman Mao was concerned about forecasting. I thought that remark in his speech, comparing his activities to the activities of Chairman Mao was rather interesting. The forecast cannot be given to us because it is Chairman Mao's operation perhaps that is running this Government.

We do not have any figures, sir. We are asked, because of the condition of the financial markets, to rubberstamp a Bill which, in total, gives the Government of Canada the authority to borrow an amount of $19 billion against the credit of Canada. We have a Minister who refuses to stand up in this House and answer questions. That is unforgivable.

Mr. Cosgrove: That is not what he said.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is totally wrong and it is not the kind of thing that we should expect from any Government.

Let me remind the Minister of what his predecessor said to the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in May, 1982. I shall now read his statement into the record. The then Minister of Finance said this:

> I would not expect the House to act upon an additional request for borrowing authority without providing it with detailed information on the economic situation and the implications of that situation on the government's fiscal situation. I do not think it would be appropriate to ask the House for additional borrowing authority until I have laid out in some detail an update of both the economic situation and the fiscal situation, and I certainly will be doing that before I would come back to the House for additional borrowing authority.

That has been the pattern of all responsible Governments, all responsible Ministers, until now, until yesterday, until today. We have a Minister who says: "Trust us; we want $19 billion, trust us". But every projection and everything he has said to date leaves us with no ground whatsoever on which to trust him.

Canadians are pretty concerned because the Minister says the only thing that is holding up the country is Bill C-139, and somewhere along the line the passage of that income tax Bill, which significantly increases taxes, will somehow make it possible for this whole problem of borrowing to go away. That does not make sense.

If you have a situation where both the economy and business in the country are turned off, how would you expect to turn them on again by increasing small business taxes by 12.5 per cent, by reducing capital cost allowances in the first year by 50 per cent and by limiting interest deductions for new capital expenditure? Indeed, how would you expect any businessman to want to go ahead and expand when facing him is Bill C-139, a most destructive Bill, a most disincentive-minded Bill, one that is anti-entrepreneurial, anti-growth and anti-business? Yet this Minister talks about the private economy being the engine of growth, and he asks us to trust him.

The Minister has taken us down a garden path which is a garden path over quicksand, Mr. Speaker. He has talked about quicksand. Let us talk about the quicksand in which he has put this country.

First, the amount of this borrowing Bill will destroy confidence in this country. There is no question that this Government is now asking us to approve borrowings, presumably unlimited borrowings, because $19 billion, he says, will only last him until this summer. The Minister is asking us to approve borrowings that amount to nearly $1 billion a week from now until the end of June. He says that will give us confidence to build the country, to make it grow.

He also says he is not going to crowd out the business field. Let us examine that. On a current basis, the personal savings this year are somewhere around $31 billion per annum. That is not $19 billion between now and the end of June; that is $31 billion for the whole year. Between now and the end of June personal savings are nowhere close to the amount required by this Government.

The Government has been helped recently because there have been some corporate savings as a result of a depression in the corporate field. Business has been turned off; inventories have been depressed. Therefore, some savings have been generated from the lessening of business activities in the country. But that is not likely to continue. Indeed, if it does, if the business community continues its net savings, heaven help our opportunities for employment in the country.

This Bill and the Government's borrowing requirements, on top of Government borrowing requirements from all Provinces—and I remind the House that even the Province of Alberta, previously a Province which generated huge surpluses, is now out in the market looking for money—will, in fact, crowd out business and people who want to borrow to expand, to build homes, to build plants and to provide jobs. This Bill is the expropriation of virtually all the savings in the country to finance Government. It would be all right if the Government were using money in a productive fashion, but we all know that this Government is really a great consumer, a great spender for consumption, rather than the spender for the creation of capital, new work, new buildings and new projects. This country's savings are being taken by the Government and spent on consumption. If we allow this to happen, it will prevent any recovery from this depression. I say depression, not recession, because that is our situation today. The Government has failed to devise any program or give any direction to ameliorate the depression in any way or give us any hope or confidence for the future.

• (1200)

Some say that Government spending and borrowing is stimulative. I would remind the House that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was first elected in 1968, the Government deficit was $497 million. There were 358,000 people unemployed. The Minister has told us today that his deficit for this year will be very close to $27.5 billion, or $27,500 million. Unemployment today is at 1.6 million or 1.7 million. How many people are discouraged or really are not working? How many are involved in worksharing or are on training programs? Those people are not working either. Therefore, what is the real unemployment figure? Perhaps it is 2 million or 2.5 million. The Government said unemployment is at 1.6 million, but what is the real figure?

Has the Government's borrowing been in any way stimulative? The answer is no. In fact, it has been one of the main factors that has led to the destruction of employment and the destruction of the hopes and dreams of Canadians.

We must remember that interest must be paid on money that is borrowed. If $5 billion is borrowed at 12 per cent interest, it means that $10 billion is needed to pay back in five years. This borrowing Bill which asks for $19 billion means that $38 billion will be paid in five years, if it is paid back by then. If it is not, it doubles in the next five years and doubles again in the five years after that. That is where the Government is headed when it introduces one borrowing Bill after another.

We now see the introduction of borrowing Bills that do not give us any projections. We do not see any projections because, if the Government projected its future borrowing requirements and the interest it would have to pay on that money without any possibility of paying it back, Canadians would rise up and throw the Government out. I say that Canadians will rise up and throw the Government out. We must throw the Government out because it has destroyed our system. It has destroyed our business sector and has destroyed the hopes and dreams of many Canadians. It is now in the process of destroying our financial system completely. Our financial system cannot realistically support the debt which the Government is asking us to approve.

We are often asked what we would do if we were in Government.

Mr. Cosgrove: We know. That is why you left.

Mr. Malone: Oh shut up, Cosgrove.

Mr. Blenkarn: A year ago we told the Government that it was about time that a committee of the House was formed to seriously set the priorities for Government spending, to eliminate all but the most absolutely essential expenditures. That view was echoed by the Auditor General in his Report to the House last fall. It was further echoed in a proposal made by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in their pre-budget submissions to the Minister.

The fact of the matter is that the situation has become most serious. The Minister says that his revenues are down and that 72 per cent of his problems are a result of decreasing revenue. The answer to those problems is that we must set our priorities straight and at some point come to grips with whether our priorities are for old age pensions or VIA Rail. We may have to come to grips with whether it is parks or payments made to people under the Canada Assistance Plan. We are getting to the point where we can no longer finance the budget with these kinds of requirements.

There is no question that it is acceptable to borrow money over a short period if one is able to pay it back. However, money cannot be borrowed year after year when there is no possibility of paying it back. There is no hope to pay back the money being asked for in this borrowing Bill.

We are told that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) will produce his Estimates on February 22. I suggest it is about time that he did so. I hope those Estimates will effectively reduce some of the Government's costs. I hope those Estimates will eliminate some of those troughs from which money is drawn by program after program to pay for more administrators, more forms and more patronage jobs—the CHIP, the NIP, the DIP and a host of others. There is a volume of programs that requires administrators and people to review those programs that, when analyzed, may be desirable but not totally necessary. The House of Commons must come to grips with our spending to keep it more in line with our ability and the ability of the country to meet those expenditures. Until we accomplish that, people will not be employed again, Canadians will not be able to own their own homes and the confidence in our country will not be restored. Our nation will not be built. We should be talking here about building our nation.

A nation cannot be built by trying to borrow itself rich. No one has ever borrowed themselves rich. You do not print yourself rich either.

Mr. Evans: It depends what you do with it.

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) says that it depends on what you do with the borrowing. Let us examine what is done with the borrowing. It is mostly spent on the interest from previous borrowings. The Government has to borrow more money all the time just to pay the interest. The last projection we saw included $17 billion in interest. We do not know what the current projection is because we do not get one. We do not get a projection because the Minister is afraid to give it to us.

As we proceed with this borrowing Bill, we see a further erosion of the tax base in the country. The Minister said in his press release that his tax receipts are down. He says that he will therefore have to borrow the money to make up for that reduction. In any business, if one's income is down one does not go to the banker and say: "Because my income is down I have to borrow more money". Bankers will throw you out. That is what we have to do with the Government. We have to throw it out. The Government cannot tell us that its revenue is down and therefore, since it cannot possibly cut its spending, it must borrow the money for its expenditures. That is just incredible. There must be some relationship between borrowing and the ability to pay it back. Payback of this borrowing is impossible.

What we really have here is a Government which no longer has the support of the people of Canada. Forty-nine per cent of the people of Canada replying to a Gallup poll indicated that they do not want this Government. They want another Government, a Government composed of people from this side of the House. The Government and the Minister of Finance know that. However, rather than let the people of Canada have their way in a general election, which the people of Canada now want and need because of the Government's profligate waste, it has entered a scorched earth policy. With its tax measures, its bureaucracy, its regulation and its control, it is destroying businesses. With its attitudes—the way in which it looks after its friends and runs a fat trough, the way it operates without giving any projections or basis for sound economic belief, management and leadership, which it should be supplying—it destroys public confidence. Now with this Bill and its management of the economy of the country, it is destroying the very financial system itself. Its attitude seems to be that, if it cannot govern, no one else will govern because there will be no country left to govern. That is the way it goes about it. That attitude is what we must stop, and we must stop it in this House of Commons now.

Mr. Cosgrove: Blenkarn for leader.

Mr. Thacker: Cosgrove for dog catcher.

Mr. Blenkarn: We could go on to discuss some of the things which I think will disturb the financial markets more than anything. The Minister spoke of the fact that his financial requirements will be exceptionally heavy for the first quarter of the next coming year. That is why he said that for the spring quarter he has a borrowing requirement of $14 billion. He may need more than that. He said that he may not spend all of the $5 billion he wants between now and March 31, so he may want to use some of that money in the first quarter as well.

A capital market account written by Hugh Anderson for yesterday's Financial Times, of Canada, indicated the following:

> It's one thing to talk glibly about financing $30 billion deficits, but it is another thing to actually see it done. We're looking at a federal issue every three or four weeks, which means the provinces will have to rush in somewhere between, whenever the market seems firm enough.

What this means is that anybody who wants to buy bonds this year will have plenty to choose from. There will be no need to chase a rising market. As they say about the bus you just missed, there'll be another one along in a minute.

It is a rush-hour all right. It is a rush-hour for the Minister to go out to the markets of this country to borrow the kind of money he is talking about in the Bill. It is that very rush-hour attitude toward borrowing that we on this side cannot tolerate.

Imagine the nerve in saying to the House of Commons, "Here is a Bill for $19 billion. I do not have any projections, fellas. Maybe I will make a budget, maybe I will give you some projections then, but in the meantime, trust me and ram it through in a hurry, because if you do not, you will upset the financial requirements of the country and will make me use Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act, and perhaps somewhere along the line we will have to pay more for our money than we would otherwise."

That is not believable. On the very face of it, it is incredible. The Government, by presenting the Bill in the fashion it has, has lost the moral right to govern.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is with very little pleasure that I rise to speak to Bill C-143 today. We have just witnessed a spectacle in the House of Commons today with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) standing and asking the people of Canada, through the Members of this House, to approve the borrowing of another $19 billion.

I am afraid that the Government, most recently through the Minister of Finance, has presented us with a horror story and has turned the House of Commons into a house of horrors. He has turned Parliament into a horror house and, quite frankly—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: —the people of Canada will find out from newscasts later today that the Minister of Finance is asking for additional borrowing authority which will push the deficit projection up to $27.2 billion, up 16 per cent from October. That is a 16 per cent error in four months. If there is anything that clearly demonstrates to the people of Canada that the Government is completely out of control when it comes to fiscal management, a 16 per cent error in four months must certainly do so.

To add insult to injury, the Minister tells us in his statement that next year the Government will abandon its six and five program. It has spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in fancy brochures sent to every person who would consider picking one up, and many people who would not even consider it, saying that it wants everyone in the country to follow the six and five restraint program. It has passed Bills in the House providing that Family Allowances will be restricted to 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year so that the mothers and children of Canada will have their expected incomes restricted to 6 per cent. Senior citizens receiving Old Age Security will not receive an increase reflecting the rate of inflation, keeping their measly pensions at the existing level. The Government will restrict those increases to 6 per cent and 5 per cent. The same is true concerning retired Armed Forces and RCMP personnel as well as retired civil servants.

The Minister of Finance came into the House of Commons today and said: "Folks, we have great news for Canadians. We will jack the deficit up now by an additional 16 per cent from what we thought back in October, up to $27.2 billion, and next year our expected expenditures will be in excess of 9.6 per cent. Abandon six and five. Our revenues will be up by at least 9.6 per cent." Mark my words, Mr. Speaker. Based on the ability to project which has been demonstrated by Hon. Members opposite with their senior civil servants advising them, if they say that it is expected that expenditures will be up by 9.6 per cent next year, we know that that is an error, virtually by definition.

Yes, the Government has created a horror House of Commons. I have listened to the Minister of Finance representing the Government and saying: "I want Hon. Members opposite to listen carefully to me because they might learn a few things". Can one imagine a more unlikely instructor, teacher, professor or guru than the Minister of Finance, who has been telling Hon. Members opposite to listen carefully, to learn about fiscal management? My goodness! That is like asking Jesse James to advise on banking or Clifford Olson to advise on parenting skills. This man opposite, masquerading as Minister of Finance, has turned this place into a theatre of the absurd.

The people of Canada are going to be out there today listening to what is coming out of this House on the Government side, shaking their heads in disbelief and saying that they cannot believe that this Government is adding $5 billion more without saying a single word about how it is going to spend those funds. Then it says it has another great idea; it is going to ask for an extra $14 billion. $14 billion, $15 billion, $25 billion, who cares?

I remember when not six months ago the then Minister of Finance stood in his place and projected a deficit of up to $23 billion plus. At that time I said I would not be a bit surprised if, when the final results come in on this deficit raise, it will be closer to $30 billion. Members opposite howled and laughed and scoffed and said: "What a dreamer; what an unbelievable projection that is!" Yet we have the Minister of Finance rising today and saying that the best guesstimate of the Government at this time is $27.2 billion. Mr. Speaker, we know that the deficit is going to be higher than that. We know absolutely that it is going to be higher than that.

Let me talk positively for a moment about the Minister's speech. He spoke for 45 minutes and when I listened to those 45 minutes of delivery I identified two statements that I thought were of a positive nature.

Mr. Ogle: He had the day right.

Mr. Riis: He had the day right, my colleague for Saskatoon East Mr. Ogle says. He did not have his figures correct because, as he admitted, he has been so far out in any projections and virtually all of the projection houses have been so far out that we can ignore them, and he said he was going to predict that next year things were going to get better anyway. I think that his credibility and the Government's credibility has gone the way of the dodo bird. It is no longer here.

However, to give credit where credit is due, the Minister of Finance said that the deficit would be used for contributions to Unemployment Insurance extended benefits. We in this Party say that is a positive move. It is a desperate move but it is positive. It is going to ease the pain for literally hundreds of thousands of Canadians—one could almost say millions of Canadians. Almost 2 million Canadians will listen to this news with some glee. Also he said that this deficit that he is asking us to support in principle today includes a $240 million adjustment to cover anticipated additional requirements under the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program. We say that that is positive as well. Apart from those two statements in 45 minutes of delivery, that is it. I cannot think of another positive thing to say about what the Minister of Finance has said in this House this morning.

Not only is this situation in which Canadians find themselves today a fiscal disaster but it is a human disaster, a human calamity. We hear all kinds of things about $14 billion here, $5 billion there, the need to strengthen the dollar and so on. In other words, a total delivery using numbers in terms that 90 per cent of Canadians do not understand. But I notice that he did not once refer to the people of Canada. He did not once refer to the hardships that millions of people in this country are experiencing today. He did not refer to the pain of people sitting at home who have been unemployed for months and months and know that they are about to go on welfare unless something happens, so they listen to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) today to see what is going to happen. And what does he tell us? He does not tell us a single thing about what is going to happen. He just says: "Give us more money, that is all that I ask for".

That is like my young son, who is 12 years old, saying to his father: "Dad, I want to borrow $200". I would say: "That is interesting, son, but what are you going to use that $200 for? Are you trying a little business venture? Are you going to do some investing? Do you want to purchase something?" He replies: "Dad, I am not telling; just give me $200. I am not going to tell you what I am going to use it for. Trust me." I trust my son but I would have a little reluctance in falling over myself to give my son $200 to spend as he deems appropriate, without some discussion.

Can you imagine a small businessman, a farmer or fisherman going to his bank or credit union and saying: "I want to borrow $200,000. I need this money. Please, let us sign the papers." Of course, the banker or the financier would ask: "What is this money going to be used for? How are you going to invest it? What is your cash flow? What is your marketing strategy? What is your track record? How many people are employed? How are you going to approach the sales?" If that businessman said: "I am not going to tell you anything. I have no idea how I am going to spend $200,000 but I sure would like it", the banker would say to that small businessman, farmer or fisherman what we are saying to the Minister of Finance—"Forget it, because we are not going to give you authority to spend taxpayers' money"—

Mr. Cosgrove: Yesterday you wanted to double the deficit.

Mr. Riis: —"to go out and borrow $14 billion plus $5 billion without telling us a single thing about how it is going to be spent".

Do Government Members think we are dodos over here, that we are going to stand here and give them authority to do that? I am looking forward to their speeches a little later, to listen to how on earth they are going to explain to the people of Canada why the Government is going to ask for $19 billion without telling us how it is going to spend it.

Perhaps it will say that it will rely on its track record. If a small businessman used that approach when seeking money and said: "Just look at my track record; I have been a dismal failure for the last decade", again we will respond as that banker would respond. We will say that that is not good enough, that we are not prepared to give that kind of support today and we are not prepared to give that kind of support tomorrow.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that this was not only the beginning of a fiscal calamity or disaster, it is a human disaster. There is an old Hindu proverb that says: "Where there is no dream, the people perish". That Canadian dream has now become a Canadian nightmare and the people are perishing. Canadians are despairing from one end of this country to the other. It can be seen in their eyes. When one visits a hard-pressed part of the Third World, as my colleague for Saskatoon East has many times, and walks the streets talking to groups of people, there is a sense often of despair in the people's eyes. They have struggled for 40 years of their lives trying to raise their families, only to find that the corruption in those countries often makes it impossible for them to succeed. They eventually get that hollow look in their eyes, that depressed look, that sad look, that look of "I have given up".

One can look at pictures of people during the 1930s in our country, during the depth of the Depression, and see that same hollow look in their eyes. One sees in pictures of refugee camps today that same hopeless look in their eyes, that emptiness. That is what we are seeing in Canada today.

I think the most disappointing experience I have had in the last few weeks was when I was visiting a number of secondary schools in my constituency to talk to the graduating classes, only to find that those young people are saying: "What is the use? Why should I continue to study hard and go on to a post-secondary education when almost everyone I know is either out of work or will be shortly? Why should I study hard in my schooling? What is the hope of struggling and going on? What is the purpose? My father has worked 20 years in a plant and is now laid off; he is 54 years of age and likely will not get a job again. My brother who has completed university is driving cabs because he cannot find a job in the computer industry."

That is the kind of weight, Mr. Speaker, that is coming down on the shoulders of Canadians; but, most important, it is coming down on the shoulders of Canada's youth. In Canada's youth is Canada's future, and that depression, that weight and despair are pulling down that group at the age when they should be full of zest, life and vitality. Exactly the opposite is happening. I emphasize that part of the reason is the actions of this Government and the kind of statement it is making to the people of Canada through Bill C-143.

The people of Canada have been losing faith in their elected representatives and in their Governments. I suspect that if the popularity level of many politicians today was to be evaluated, they would be at the bottom of the heap along with child molesters, tax collectors and the like. Why is that? What is happening? When we look at the record of this Government, it becomes very clear.

We have two million people out of work. We have thousands and thousands more going on welfare because their Unemployment Insurance benefits are terminating. Employees are under incredible stress because of cutbacks and the resultant additional workload. People are experiencing burn-out and overwork more than ever before. They are struggling to make ends meet. Single parents are attempting to raise children on an income of $9,000 a year. By and large, the senior citizens of this country live below the poverty level in spite of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says about the floating poverty line.

With this kind of situation, with people tense and concerned about the future for themselves and their children, the Prime Minister says: "Shucks, all Canadians are skiing or down in the Caribbean on beaches". What does that tell us about the Prime Minister? He has not only lost touch with the people of Canada but with reality. If he thinks that Canadians are doing one of two things, either skiing or on beaches in the Caribbean, any psychiatrist will tell you that is a clear indication that this man, who is presumably leading our land, has lost touch with the real world. There are not many people from the constituency of Kamloops-Shuswap who have money to spend on the ski slopes or on holidays on Caribbean beaches. Virtually no one there is in either of those two categories.

This is the same man who thinks it is a good idea to limit the income of pensioners, to limit the income of families through Family Allowance restrictions, and to give the chairman of the task force looking into the state of the economy $800 a day, plus expenses. When travelling across the country, he will get much more than that. The Prime Minister thinks that is appropriate. That is more than senior citizens get to live on for an entire month. The Prime Minister thinks it is appropriate in these times of restraint and difficulty to give that individual $800 a day plus.

It is very clear that our Prime Minister never goes door-knocking in his constituency or those of others. He never sits in coffee shops and talks to normal folk. He does not sit in pubs and talk to those who work in the mines, plants and offices of this country. He does not talk to normal people.

The Prime Minister of Canada does not speak to normal Canadians. He speaks to the high-powered group of advisers around him, the senior lobbyists, senior mandarins, people who are not struggling and are not threatened by job loss, the Ian Sinclairs of the world. That man is quite prepared to take a 6 per cent restriction of his increase, which will be in excess of $50,000 for the next year.

It is a dark day for Canada when we have to look to an individual to provide leadership during these very difficult times who has lost touch with reality. One begins to wonder whether that same loss of touch has not rubbed off on other members of his Cabinet when we find the Minister of Finance standing in his place and asking us to push through post-haste $19 billion so that they can get on with the job. Some job he wants to get on with!

The people of Canada are having a difficult time supporting with enthusiasm this present Government. Government Members have criss-crossed Canada asking people to restrain, introducing monetary policies that force people to restrain. Now they have changed their minds and are criss-crossing the country asking people to spend, invest and expand. You cannot go out one day and ask people to cut back and restrain, and then get on the next plane and ask them to spend, borrow and expand.

In his darkest moments before going to sleep at night, I am sure the Minister of Finance wonders why the people of Canada are not expanding their plants, factories and firms. The reason is that they have lost faith in the political leadership of this country. There is only one way to change that. In order to bolster and build confidence in the future of this country, we have a big task at hand, namely to change the leadership of this country. I want to say that it is time for a new vision.

Mr. Whelan: Diefenbaker said that years ago.

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Diefenbaker said that years ago. J. S. Woodsworth said it years ago as well. They said we need a vision for the people of Canada, we need a dream, we need to give some hope. In order to accomplish that, we have to give some direction. We have to send a clear message to Canadians in every part of this land that this is the economic plan that we wish to see for this country. This should be done after a great deal of consultation with all levels of Government—federal, provincial, regional, local—and proper consultations between management and labour. That would provide the people of this country with a vision of what Canada should and could be.

Canadians know in their hearts that they live in the richest country on earth, a country with more natural resources per capita than any country on the face of this globe. Here we are struggling and stumbling over ourselves as the Government lurches from crisis to crisis. The Official Opposition are running at each other with swords trying to impale and disembowel each other. We wonder why people have lost confidence. I suggest that we consider an alternative. I wonder if it would be proper for me to move a motion at this point regarding the Bill before us. I would move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker):

That this Bill be not read the second time until after February 22, when we have had time to examine the tabling of the Main Estimates for the fiscal year 1983-84.

I have indicated very clearly that it is time in this country for a new vision. Canadians in their hearts and souls know what this country can be. It is time to put fear and uncertainty behind us and take steps to see what Canada can be and ought to be. It is time we faced the future head on with a bold innovative and creative program for the future of our country.

One of the guideposts, Mr. Speaker, which we must include in such a vision is a commitment in this country to full employment. With the small population which Canada has and its abundant resources in both natural, human and financial terms, there is no reason why we cannot set as a realistic goal full employment for Canada.

We are at a very critical point in our economic history right now, Mr. Speaker, where we are either going to advance or retreat, and, unfortunately, we have to look to the Members opposite to give us either the direction to advance or to bring in policies which will guarantee a collapse of the economy in this country.

I heard the Minister of Finance earlier talk about the future and I remembered distinctly reading in Hansard the comments which the various Ministers were making in 1930. It seemed like déjà vu, Mr. Speaker. In 1930 Government Members were standing up and saying: "Things are about to turn around. We are optimistic. Indicators point to an economic upturn. We have confidence in the future. We are not going to do anything, but we have confidence."

Unfortunately, that is exactly the point at which Canadians find themselves today. We must now launch an energetic program of recovery which will have full employment as part of its mandate. It will involve the co-operation of all regions of Canada, as well as the various sectors of the economy, both in economic terms as well as political. We must make a commitment to retain the existing social programs which are in place and to build and improve on them. We must no longer allow ourselves to be an appendage to the economy of some other country.

We realize that to accomplish these goals there will be costs which Canadians are going to be asked to share. There will be some very difficult times in accomplishing these goals. But the sacrifices, Mr. Speaker, must be made on the basis of equality. Fighting a war on inflation or building a recovery program must not be done on the backs of Canada's unemployed. It must not be done on the backs of Canada's women or Canada's minority groups, as the present Government is doing at this time. It must be done on an equal basis, and that means we must continue to oppose Bill C-139, a Bill to amend the Income Tax Act, because it perpetrates an injustice in this country. That Bill is telling Canadians that taxes will be increased for low and middle-income groups but will be decreased for the wealthy, and that is something, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Members of this House must oppose until their dying breath. That kind of injustice will make economic recovery impossible in this country.

Another factor which will make economic recovery in this country impossible is that there are two million people out of work. This figure is growing by the week and, by the Minister of Finance's own admission, will continue to grow during 1983. It is impossible to have economic recovery in this country with the albatross of two million unemployed around the neck of our economy, and it will be impossible until the Government addresses that problem head on.

The Government's priorities in the upcoming budget must be three-fold—jobs, jobs and more jobs. It will be a clear signal to Canadians that this Government means business and that it is going to get the economy moving once again when it deals, along with its recovery package, with the serious unemployment situation.

We in the New Democratic Party have a concern about this deficit. We see it as an unproductive deficit because it is unplanned. I remember the previous Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party supporting something he called, I believe, a "stimulative" deficit. We would like to see the Minister of Finance stand up and clearly demonstrate how this increased deficit will eventually result in a reduced deficit. I would like to hear the Minister of Finance say: "If we are going to go into a deficit situation, this is our recovery plan. This is the way we are investing these borrowed funds to result in an eventual return to the people of Canada." But he does not say that, Mr. Speaker, and we know that this money is not being invested in economic recovery infrastructure. This deficit is just continuing more frivolous Government spending, by and large.

If it is not, then I would beg the Hon. Members opposite to stand in their places and explain how this additional $19 billion of borrowing is going to result in eventual economic return to Canadians. A deficit per se is not necessarily a disaster. Every businessman knows it is sound business practice to borrow money and invest it in order to get a return. That is what the New Democratic Party has been saying for some time, that if we are going to borrow money, let us ensure it is wisely invested, at least.

In terms of planning for a deficit, I believe it is critical that we, as Parliamentarians, realize that our economy in this country is at a crucial turning point, that where our economy went down in a recession or depression, most of it is going to be coming back in a different location. The economy of the 1980s and 1990s will be significantly different from the economy of the 1960s and 1970s.

I ask Hon. Members opposite whether they realize the incredible economic transition and revolution which is going on in this country at this point, because I see no evidence that they do. During this excellent opportunity for the Minister of Finance to give the people of Canada a demonstration that the Government understands the significance of this economic turmoil and is prepared to deal with it, for him not to utter a single phrase, which would indicate the Government understands what is happening to the Canadian economy, I think is tragic. It is unforgivable. If the people of Canada had a thread of hope and the Government had a thread of credibility left, it has been ripped apart today.

It is interesting, Mr. Speaker—now that the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) has arrived—to find that we have just completed a so-called agreement with the Japanese auto industry. I want to say to the Minister that a small country like Trinidad, which welcomes the import of automobiles because it does not make any of its own, said to the Japanese companies: "You can sell all the Japanese vehicles, including trucks, in our country that you like, but you have to assemble not 20 per cent, not 50 per cent but 100 per cent of those vehicles in our country. We want to create employment for our people in Trinidad."

The Japanese companies went along with this, Mr. Speaker. That is a country with a population of 1.2 million people. Here in Canada we have 24 million people, the seventh major trading country of the world for the Japanese auto industry, and we do not have them assemble a single automobile in Canada. What kind of negotiating, what kind of planning, is that?

In summary, let me say that the Minister of Finance missed a golden opportunity today to present the Government's game plan strategy to the people of Canada, to tell the people of Canada how the Government would be using this borrowed money for their benefit. He said nothing. My closing comment, Mr. Speaker, is that we have been asked to buy a pig in a poke and we are not buying it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has presented a motion, a reasoned amendment, which asks that the Bill not be read a second time now but rather be read only on certain conditions. I am not clear from his motion whether it is two conditions or one, but it seems to imply it ought to be either after February 22 or after the presentation of the Main Estimates, or both. However, both of those are conditions.

It is brought to my attention that the motion as an amendment may suffer from a lack of relevance to the principle of the Bill, and I underline the word "principle". However, I want to rely, in ruling on the admissibility of the motion, on the attaching of conditions. In that regard I refer the Hon. Member to Erskine May, Nineteenth Edition, page 500, subparagraph (2)(k), which reads:

—nor is it permissible to propose merely the addition of words to the question, that the Bill be now read a second time, as such words must, by implication, attach conditions to the second reading.

That is the intent of the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, and with regret I have to find that it is out of order.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, we have before us today a request by the Government to borrow an unprecedented amount of money to pay unspecified bills for programs which are not yet clearly identified. The $19 billion which the Government is seeking to borrow represents a Government which is bankrupt in terms of revenue, bankrupt in terms of ideas and policies, and bankrupt in terms of moral authority to impose this kind of burden on the Canadian taxpayer.

This blank cheque which we have before us, and which we are asked to authorize, represents nothing more than an unwanted legacy for the next Government of Canada, which will be a Conservative Government. It is an attempt by the Government to put off to the future the difficult task of paying for the debts run up by a Government which has proved itself incapable of managing the country's economic affairs.

Taxpayers should clearly understand that borrowings of this size represent a deferred tax increase on them, a tax increase that taxpayers will inevitably have to assume. It represents a constraint on this Government's ability to govern and on future Governments' ability to set national priorities for years to come. It represents the legacy of a Government which has clearly washed its hands of any attempt to manage the economy in a credible manner, and instead is dumping the entire responsibility for the economic problems facing this country on to the backs of the overburdened taxpayer in the future.

Finance Minister Lalonde insists that this huge borrowing authority is required to underwrite the costs borne by the recession. His assumption is clearly that borrowings on such a huge scale, which amount to claims on Canada's economic future, will help resolve the economic problems facing us. If that were in fact the case, we would be much more receptive to his demands. But Mr. Lalonde—

Mr. Fisher: Order.

Miss Carney: —does not make this case based on any evidence. I recently completed a trip through the interior of my home Province, British Columbia. It was a sombre experience in the sombre season of mid-winter. In the towns I visited the lumber mills are silent, the mines are shut down, the motels and restaurants are nearly empty. "For sale" signs and foreclosure notices sprout forlornly along the streets which are subdued and quiet. There is an uneasy absence of activity. Now, we would like to think that these billions sought by the Government will help restore some life to these centres. However, there is little indication they will.

Like other MPs, I continually deal with the problems of the unemployed who stop us in supermarkets, on the streets, in the coffee shops, asking for advice. They want to know what to do when their Unemployment Insurance benefits run out. They want to know how to survive until their welfare cheques are processed. Most of all, they want to know when there will be an end to all this economic stress. But again, there is no indication when faced with this Bill that it contains any answers except to borrow, borrow and borrow again.

All across the country the silent plants, the business failures, the fire sales, equipment auctions and the half-excavated apartment sites are mute testimony to the failure of this Government to address the real problems faced by the economy. These real problems stem from deep structural changes. These changes include the probability that some of the mines of this country will never reopen. Half the labour force in the mining industry is out of work. There is a grim realization in the construction and forest industries that many of the people who are now out of work will never return to their jobs. There is a growing fear that many of our young people may spend the best part of their youth looking for job opportunities which are simply not there. None of these problems is addressed in this Bill seeking the authority to borrow $19 billion.

Any creditor who went to any financial institution in this country seeking this kind of credit or financial borrowing without giving more details on how the money will be spent, and more importantly how the money will be repaid, would be refused by any responsible financial institution. Yet this Government is asking for its second borrowing authority Bill in three and a half months. It is asking for $5 billion in supplementary borrowing authority for the current fiscal year which ends in six weeks' time, and for $14 billion in interim borrowing authority for the next fiscal year, 1983-84, which the Minister suggests might last him until mid-summer. It is asking for this scale of borrowing at a time when many small businessmen in this country have had their lines of credit slashed and which face the mercenary practices of the Department of National Revenue, which is squeezing every dime out of every pocket, out of every bank account, out of every receivable it can lay its hands on.

The irresponsibility shown by this Government and its arrogance in seeking this kind of borrowing authority without specifying a clear and sufficient reason for doing so merely adds to the rage of Canadians who are frustrated, who are seeking a job to support their families, who are trying to keep their own businesses afloat, or who have had to shelve their own plans for developments or planned expansion because they simply do not have the money or the credit facilities to do so.

We would be much more willing to debate and pass this Bill if we knew what the money was needed for, when it is needed, how reliable the Minister's information is, and how much of this borrowing authority is requested because of the Government's mismanagement of public debt. We would also be much more confident if the Government's performance over the last few years had been more credible. But this Government has shown no inclination to reduce its expenditures, nor have we seen much benefit accruing from its high rate of spending for the past few years.

I would like to consider these two points in more detail. First of all, I would like to deal with the issue of credibility and accountability. The Government seeking this incredible borrowing authority has a track record of wildly inaccurate forecasts. In his November, 1981 budget, Mr. MacEachen, then the Finance Minister, said the budget deficit would be $10.5 billion for 1982-83. Seven months later the unfortunate Mr. MacEachen revised that figure upwards to $19.6 billion. By October of the same year the budget deficit had risen still higher, to $23.6 billion and still climbing. Today the Minister indicates that the current forecast of the budget deficit for the current fiscal year will be in the order of $27 billion.

I would remind the House that this is the Government which thought its financial requirements for this year would be $6.6 billion. That figure again was adjusted upwards to $17.1 billion, and then $22.2 billion. Today the Government is asking for another $5 billion on top of these amounts.

Given that track record, how can we believe any figures the Government gives us now? How can we believe these figures when the Finance Minister indicates he will be back before this House, possibly as early as mid-summer, to seek even more borrowing authority?

It is now one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I leave the chair, I wonder if I might draw to the attention of Hon. Members that the practice is to refer to Members or Ministers by their title or their riding rather than by their names. Personally, I hope Members may some day choose to refer to one another by their surnames rather than by riding title, but in the meantime that is the rule.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

NEW GRAIN TRANSPORTATION POLICY—EFFECT ON QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise today under the provisions of Standing Order 21 to speak about the new grain transportation policy.

Last week, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture held a meeting in Ottawa and delegates from the Province of Quebec were in attendance. Along with a few ministers, we had the opportunity to meet with the Quebec delegation, particularly the President of the Agricultural Producers' Union of Quebec, permanent APU member Jacques Proulx, Federated Co-Operative President Mario Dumais, Mr. Paul-Emile Saint-Pierre, a Federated Co-operative official, as Mr. Dumais is for the APU, and Mr. André Bergevin. We had discussions on the impact of the new grain transportation policy.

This policy has been the main topic of conversation, particularly in Quebec. I should like to tell the people of my riding, Quebecers in general, and especially the farmers in Quebec that we reached two agreements at that meeting. First of all, Madam Speaker, APU and Federated Co-operative officials will get together with Agriculture Canada and Transport Canada officials to talk about the various figures which have been mentioned in the Province of Quebec about the cost of transportation and other production costs, and as a result of those talks it has been agreed that we would meet with the people who are responsible for that matter here in Ottawa and with the Quebec caucus Members who are directly concerned with this question, with a view to airing the different opinions we might have and calmly considering all possible solutions, if any.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF BIOTECHNOLOGY CENTRE AT BROCK UNIVERSITY

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, Canadians are proud of their country. Yet, when they think of their future, and read reports such as that recently released by the Conference Board of Canada predicting that the recession-ravaged Province of Ontario will suffer yet another loss of 25,000 jobs, putting that many more or that same number out or work, they wonder about their future as well as that of their country.

We have a labour pool of skills and a wide range of educational facilities. Yet we as a nation spend comparatively few dollars on research and development, science and technology.

Recently the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) announced that Canada would not host the building of the International Centre for Generic Engineering and Biotechnology. At the same time he recognizes the need for such a centre here in Canada. Brock University has ready and available a fully equipped laboratory suitable for that purpose, and in the interest of both present and future Canadians I urge the Minister to plan accordingly.

FINANCE

SIZE OF GOVERNMENT DEFICIT

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) addressed this House earlier today on the borrowing requirements of the Government and briefly on the fiscal state of the nation. It was not a comforting scenario that he presented.

The projected Government deficit for the current year has exceeded $27 billion, an astronomical amount equivalent to $1,125 per person in Canada, or in excess of $3,000 per working Canadian. He announced that the 1983-84 federal Government expenditure framework is targeted at $88.9 billion, up almost 10 per cent over the current fiscal year. He also advised that revenues from corporate income tax, personal income tax, and petroleum and gas revenues have fallen substantially. This suggests a massive deficit for the 1983-84 fiscal year. He concluded that Canada has suffered a severe recession. Tax bases have fallen and unemployment has risen.

An economic crisis exists in the land, Madam Speaker, and a First Ministers' conference should be scheduled immediately to plan the road to recovery co-operatively.

SPORTS

PHYSICAL DANGERS OF KICK BOXING

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, kick boxing is a form of martial art that is growing in popularity both in Canada and abroad. In kick boxing, both the hands and feet are used by the opponents to strike blows to the head of each when they meet in a ring to engage in competition.

What is unknown at this time, however, is how dangerous kick boxing can be. According to a spokesman for the Ontario Athletic Commission, there have been reports of severe facial injuries, including facial fractures, especially among youngsters who take up the sport. The impression of one Toronto neurologist, who is considered an expert on boxing injuries, is that kick boxing is a dangerous sport that should be looked at closely by the Ontario Commission.

Reports such as these have led the Ontario Government to ban kick boxing pending a government study into the possibility of serious head injuries to those participating in the sport. The Government of Ontario is to be complimented for taking the initiative in planning the study. I strongly urge the Department of National Health and Welfare and all provincial Ministers of Health to follow the example being set by the Ontario Government and initiate a full scale investigation into the sport of kick boxing, to co-ordinate their investigations and studies to control the serious body damage that this sport can generate, and to implement adequate regulations.

METRIC CONVERSION

APPLICATION TO DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I have in my possession an internal memo from the Metric Commission in which a bureaucrat wrote and explained to a leading Canadian company president that metric conversion was a voluntary process. This will come as news to a great many Canadians.

S.O. 21

The latest victim of the forced march toward metric is the dairy industry. The three-quart pouch packs and jugs will go metric next April, and the President of the Ontario Dairy Council estimates the new milk packages will probably cost about 40 cents more. The President of Dominion Dairies is on the record as stating "We're at a time when we should be avoiding increased costs. There is no doubt in my mind that increased costs will be passed on to consumers."

There are no indications that, once packaging new metric containers has been paid for, prices will be reduced. There are no benefits to be derived from the conversion of milk. To the contrary—it is the view of one of Canada's largest milk retailers that the industry and consumers are being "cheated and ripped off" by the unnecessary and expensive conversion costs. It is idiotic and unfair for a Government to put an unnecessary extra burden on the consumer at this time.

HUMAN RIGHTS

RENEWAL OF CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, yesterday at a United Nations meeting on human rights in Geneva a report was delivered which indicated that two million people throughout the world have been executed in the last 15 years without trial, without appeal, and without lawyers. I should like to go on record today as indicating that the people who have been executed are human beings like you and me—men, women, people politically involved, people not politically involved, rich, poor—a cross section of humanity. Thirty-seven countries were listed as being involved in the event.

The person who made the statement to the United Nations Commission yesterday is Amos Wako, a Kenyan lawyer. He asked that the world community monitor this taking of human life. I think the House of Commons and the Government of Canada should be aware that this injustice is taking place around the world.

I would ask the Government to think seriously about forming an all-party standing committee on human rights to monitor, to publish, to condemn but, most important, to be a parliamentary group that would advise the Government about this abuse as it relates to the whole section of activity that takes place between countries.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I want to emphasize that the Canada Community Development Programs sponsored by the Department of Manpower and Immigration are very important in my region. Thanks to those programs, we have made significant achievements in cooperation with other Departments.

Last week, I met with some people who are working within those programs, and I would like to ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) whether it might not be advisable next year to look into the scale of salaries paid under these programs and to make a distinction between people who have a family to support and others who have fewer responsibilities, because they are all paid the same salary. I wish the Department would examine this matter and review the salary scale since, under this program, there are men and women who have heavier responsibilities and might be paid more.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I would urge the Minister to take this matter under consideration because, in my opinion, it is essential that we continue to work in cooperation with the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, Transport Canada, and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to create temporary jobs. Our only difficulty stems from the salary scale, and I think that could be improved very quickly.

FROST DAMAGE TO APPLE AND CHERRY ORCHARDS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, on Thursday last in answer to a question by my colleague from York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) regarding severe frost damage to Eastern Canada apple producers, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) indicated that he was aware of requests from both Ontario and Quebec. To use his words, "Quebec's damage is in the order of $62 million." Recently the Ontario Apple Marketing Commission went on record as requesting assistance for the apple growers in Eastern Ontario whose trees had been destroyed. My understanding is that the Eastern Ontario figure is close to the Quebec figure. The interesting part is that the better producing orchards were hardest hit.

In the few minutes I have I would like to add to the mix a problem which I have mentioned to the Minister many times in the past. It has to do with damage to sour cherry trees. One orchard in my riding has lost 8,000 trees as a result of the cumulative effect of frosts in 1980-1981. There is a market for this product, and the initial cost of replacing the trees is perhaps not beyond the reach of the owner. However, to pay the interest rate necessary to support such a loan for the five to seven years before the trees begin to bear fruit is just not possible. I want to use this time to urge the Minister of Agriculture as strongly as possible to take whatever action he can to help in this matter of great importance to area farmers.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

CREATION OF ADVOCACY AGENCIES URGED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, we all know about the situation of Pat Albert of Sudbury who was to have his unemployment insurance benefits cut off for a day because he had attended the funeral of his wife. It is not the first time this kind of injustice under the rule has taken place. Thank goodness the Government is bowing to public pressure and Pat Albert will not have this one day's benefit taken from him, and a 48-hour policy directive for funerals will be issued.

But the problem is bigger than this individual case. What we have here is a situation of David and Goliath. The unemployment insurance system is Goliath. It has the power of information, the knowledge of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the knowledge of the regulations and administrative directives, and the power to change those directives. Poor David is the individual Canadian unemployed for the first time who is faced with this administrative machinery. We have to give David a slingshot.

We have to create advocacy agencies for unemployment insurance claimants, funded by the Department of Justice. This would give professional knowledge to individual citizens when they have to deal with the unemployment insurance bureaucracy and would make it possible that, once in a while, the rules would work for the individual and not just for the bureaucracy. David could then slay Goliath once in a while.

HARBOURS

SILTING AT RUSTICO, P.E.I.—NEED FOR STUDY

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I would like to address the very serious problem of silting in Rustico harbour, which is presently harming the fishing industry in Prince Edward Island. This problem could eventually affect the existence of the Village of North Rustico which depends heavily on the livelihood of its local fishermen.

The channel in Rustico has been dredged on a regular basis since 1966, and every year since 1976. The cost for dredging in 1981-1982 alone amounted to three-quarters of a million dollars. Little has been done to solve this problem, as dredging is merely a band-aid approach to a more serious problem. The dredge spent the best part of 1981 dredging the harbour channel. In 1982 the channel filled in again and was worse than the fishermen had seen in years.

The people of North Rustico wrote to the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Hon. Roméo LeBlanc, on the problem, but no action has been taken. I pursued the issue in the House on November 18, 1982, and I have written letters to both the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) and to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) but have not received a reply from either Minister.

This issue has been raised many times and we are expecting that action will be taken, as the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has indicated the need for improved facilities in small craft harbours, as stated in the Kirby Task Force Report released today. In view of this I urge that a study be conducted of the Rustico harbour situation. Once this information is obtained, measures could be taken to rectify the problem on a permanent basis. This is a very serious problem on which immediate action should be taken.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—ACTION TAKEN BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister by now will have had an opportunity to review all the documents dealing with the Scotia Synfuels Coal Project, particularly the memorandum of understanding of October, 1980, and the agreement of June, 1981. He will have had an opportunity to satisfy himself that, in fact, his current Minister of Finance, then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, acted in violation of the guidelines.

Has the Prime Minister obtained on a voluntary basis or has he asked for the resignation of the Minister of Finance? What action has he undertaken with regard to this very important matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the action I took was quite simple and direct. I discussed the matter with the Minister of Finance and I obtained from him the information that the first knowledge he had to this arrangement was on September 3, 1981. That seems to confirm the point I was making yesterday that the Minister of Finance, at that time the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, was dealing with parties in an open fashion—

Mr. Crosbie: Very open. Certainly open sesame.

Mr. Trudeau: —that the so-called laundering period of the former Minister, Mr. Gillespie, had elapsed.

An Hon. Member: They should all go to the laundry.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not even know whether the Minister ascertained that, but obviously he was dealing in an open way with honourable parties, a former Minister who had respected the guidelines in terms of a two-year period. I saw no indication for me to ask for his resignation. On the contrary, I congratulated him for ensuring that the public interest, particularly that of the people of Nova Scotia and of the workers, was being advanced by this deal which we had entered into, I think formally, on September 25, 1981. In those circumstances indeed the Minister had acted not only honourably but very directly in the public interest by signing that proposal which was put to him by a consortium.

MINISTERIAL CONDUCT GUIDELINES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister might clear up some uncertainties by tabling the documents in question since we have it that the agreement between the Government of Canada and the consortium was signed on June 30, 1981. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was a signatory on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada, which is in clear conflict with what the Prime Minister has just told this House. Can the Prime Minister assure this House that none of his Ministers have acted in any way in violation, and I quote from his guidelines, Appendix II; for current Ministers serving:

> In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

Will the Prime Minister assure this House that none of his Ministers, the current Minister of Finance, the Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister who was responsible for regional economic expansion during that period, acted in violation of those guidelines? If he cannot give that assurance, or if subsequent facts show that assurance is not valid, will he insist on the resignations of the Ministers in question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the first point raised by the Hon. Member concerning the date, after having verified the matter, I see that there was a memorandum to the Treasury Board dated September 3, 1981. I ascertained from the Minister information to the effect that he only saw that memorandum at the beginning of September, 1981. Presumably it may have been on his desk a few weeks prior to that. I would imagine that the month of August was one when he did not see it. He saw it early September and he signed the memorandum to Treasury Board a few days later, and the agreement with the consortium was signed, as I said, on September 25, 1981, retroactive to the end of June, 1981. That is how the date of June 30 appears. The agreement between the consortium and the Government of Canada became effective on June 30, but the agreement was signed on September 25.

• (1420)

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROJECT AT NOVA SCOTIA PRESS CONFERENCE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the memorandum of understanding of the consortium was signed in October, 1980. The parties to that agreement were Petro-Canada and Devco, two Crown corporations.

The Prime Minister's guidelines clearly state that Ministers' behaviour extends to Crown corporations. That is violation No. 1. The memorandum of October, 1980, contemplates, and I quote " . . . that the consortium will be able to obtain, directly or indirectly, a contribution or grant of 40 per cent of the Study Project Costs, up to $1 million from the Oil Substitution Fund and/or from other sources of Government funding". Clearly they had discussions with the Government in regard to that. The agreement of June 30, 1981, includes this memorandum of October, 1980, as part of its whole. Therefore, the effective date is October, 1980.

Finally, last night on television we saw the Deputy Prime Minister—the current Secretary of State for External Affairs—with Mr. Gillespie at a press conference in Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, announcing to his constituents the jobs that will come out of this project. Is the Prime Minister trying to tell the House that none of his Ministers knew anything about this until September, 1981, when the Deputy Prime Minister was announcing it to his constituents in April of 1981? How can the Prime Ministrer reconcile what he has just told the House with those facts?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not, to use the words of the Hon. Member, trying to tell the House that none of my Ministers knew. In fact, as the Hon. Member just said, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs announced the project in the spring of 1981, along with Premier Buchanan. Obviously he knew.

What we do know is that there was no agreement signed. There was no formal authority.

Mr. Crosbie: So what?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, I am standing here ready to answer supplementary questions. It is a matter of fact and a matter of law that the agreement was signed on September 25, several months after the announcement had been made.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Play your little games.

Mr. Trudeau: How the announcement was made earlier is, I think, a matter for political conjecture. But knowing how politics are played in the Province of Nova Scotia, I guess it was a matter for both the Government of Nova Scotia and the federal Minister in Nova Scotia wanting to make sure that the other level of Government did not get credit for this project, which everybody was happy to be associated with, before the other got credit for it.

The fact remains that the then Minister of Energy who signed the agreement on behalf of the Government of Canada only knew about it in September of 1981.

Mr. Crosbie: So what?

Miss MacDonald: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I hear some groans from the Member for Kingston and the Islands. If she wants to elaborate on that groan and contradict this assertion, and assert that the Minister of Energy knew of it in some way before that date, she is free to make that accusation. She is welcome to make it.

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF FINANCE MINISTER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister's answer can only be described as incredible. We have the three-monkey proposition in terms of ministerial responsibility: hear no evil, speak no evil, see no evil. The three monkeys are sitting in the front benches of the Liberal Party right now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: To suggest that the Minister of Finance, the then Minister of Energy, had no knowledge of anything that went on in his Department with respect to this project when the Deputy Prime Minister was down there announcing it to the whole world on national television, just simply will not be bought by any reasonable Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: In view of the fact that this is a question of ministerial responsibility—which has deteriorated while he has been Prime Minister to the point where you almost have to have an Abscam situation, or be seen in full colour pictures with your hand in the till before you are asked to resign in that outfit—when will the Prime Minister ask for the resignation of the Minister of Finance? When will he do it? I suggest that he do it right now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, you will have noted that I do not always take advice, particularly that preferred by the Hon. Member. I do not plan to take it in this particular case. He is saying that it was public knowledge. No doubt it was in Nova Scotia. I can assert that—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Well, if the Hon. Members opposite seem to intimate that they knew about it before, why did they wait until yesterday to ask the question? Presumably it took the despatch from the Canadian Press that was alluded to yesterday for them to be aware of it.

Mr. Crosby: This January 25.

Mr. Trudeau: If we were all supposed to be aware, why were they not aware since there was a public announcement? Therefore, I repeat my assertion that there was obviously some political posturing in Nova Scotia in the spring of 1981.

All I say is that the matter was not known by Cabinet. It was not signed by Cabinet. It was not authorized by the Treasury Board until the month of September, 1981.

Mr. Crosbie: The fix is in.

Mr. Trudeau: Once again I ask the Opposition, who will stand up over there to say that they knew all about it, that it was public knowledge? I did not hear that allegation until yesterday, as I say, which presumably means that they did not know about it either.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Once again the Prime Minister is wrong because the matter was raised by my colleague from Halifax West in January of this year with the Minister of Energy, who boasted about what a wonderful project this was.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEEK MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I will ask the Prime Minister one question. The guidelines are clear. They simply prohibit, absolutely and categorically, any lobbying on the part of Ministers within two years from the giving up of the portfolios of their former Departments. They also provide very clearly that any Minister who contravenes the spirit of the other guideline with respect to giving preferential treatment to former colleagues commits a breach of the guidelines. I suggest to the Prime Minister that the only sanction that is appropriate in these circumstances is to ask for and obtain the resignation of that Minister. In any other parliamentary democracy there would not even have been a question on the floor of the House of Commons. I ask the Prime Minister again: will he do the honourable thing in the House and ask for the resignation of the Minister of Finance?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, let me attempt to follow the train of thought of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Crosbie: Do the right thing. Never mind that specious reasoning.

Mr. Trudeau: First he says that this agreement was public knowledge and that everyone knew about it. I indicated that they obviously did not know about it until yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I listened to the questions opposite. I wish they would listen to the answers and be a bit more courteous.

I said that certainly the Cabinet did not know about it as a Cabinet until September, 1981. The Hon. Member says that I am wrong. To prove that I am wrong, he says that it was raised in the House two weeks ago, in January, 1983. I would point out to him that January, 1983, is some considerable time after September, 1981. There is a year and a half lapse between those dates. It seems to me that his assertion about what happened two weeks ago—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are finished, you know.

Mr. Trudeau: —is, as most of his questions, completely irrelevant.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are rotten. The whole crowd of you are just rotten.

Mr. Chrétien: Get up and challenge him.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Challenge, my ass. You should be ashamed of yourselves.

An Hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton asks that we challenge his ass. I do not know what his ass has to do with it, but I know that he is behaving like one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order.

FINANCE

BORROWING AUTHORITY BILL C-143—ROLE OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, Canadians are proud that we are governed by a parliamentary form of government. It is a form of government that has been with us for centuries, and a form of government whose first order of business is the raising of taxes and the responsible spending of taxpayers' money.

• (1430)

Today the Minister of Finance introduced a borrowing Bill which asks Parliament to approve the borrowing of $19 billion, with absolutely no explanation of how those funds would be expended.

Does the Minister of Finance not agree that to proceed at this time with this $19 billion borrowing authority would essentially violate the very tradition of parliamentary democracy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that we began a debate this morning on this very Bill, and that the $19 billion is divided in two pieces, $5 billion to finance the operations of the Government between now and April 1, and $14 billion to meet interim financial requirements for the beginning of 1983-84.

This morning I spoke in the House for 45 minutes, giving the House all the relevant information on why this money was required and what it would be used for. I also indicated that, once the general debate has taken place on second reading, the Bill will go to committee, and that I would be very pleased to appear before the committee with my officials and go into all the details and questions which Hon. Members may want to raise concerning the use of those funds.

So, far from trying to get parliamentary approbation of expenditures without providing any figures or information, on the contrary, as I said, I took three-quarters of an hour this morning to provide that information. Moreover, I will be happy to appear before the committee and go into even more details if my hon. friend wishes to have more information. This is what Parliament is all about, this floor in the House of Commons, and parliamentary committees. Indeed, this is how Parliament works in a democracy.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I, too, was in the House when the Minister spoke, and I listened to his speech for 45 minutes. If he explained how the Government would expend $19 billion, I must have my hearing checked, because I certainly did not hear those details at all. I also suspect that businessmen in Canada would love to hear what the Minister has had to say. It would be interesting if, in fact, when they went to their bankers, their bankers would say, "Yes, we will loan you the money without your telling us what you will be using it for". It would be rather unique to twentieth century banking practices.

REQUEST THAT CONSIDERATION OF PART II BE POSTPONED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. He explained that the Bill before us is in fact a two-part Bill, the first part requiring the expending of $5 billion and the second part concerned with future expenditures of $14 billion. In light of what the Minister has just said, would he be prepared to postpone any further consideration of Part II of the Bill until after next Tuesday, when the Estimates will be tabled in the House of Commons and parliamentarians can have an opportunity to see just what it is the Government is planning to do in the year ahead?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I indicated in my speech this morning that next week, on February 22, the President of the Treasury Board would table the Estimates for 1983-84 in the House and that those Estimates would include expenditures to the sum of $88.9 billion, representing an increase of 9.1 per cent, I believe—

An Hon. Member: Nine point six per cent.

Mr. Lalonde: —9.6 per cent over the expenditures of 1982-83. My friend already has the figure of expenditures forecast for 1983-84. He knows fully well that the Government will need to borrow large additional sums of money to finance the deficit next year. As I have indicated, $14 billion will take us into the summer. I indicated that right after my budget I would table additional borrowing authority legislation.

As far as the specific question raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, I would indicate to him that we are only proceeding with second reading of this particular Bill at the present time. Today is Thursday, I believe.

An Hon. Member: Close.

Mr. Lalonde: The House Leader will take his representation into account, but one thing is certain. The Bill will not go into committee before the Estimates have been tabled. By then, my friend will have all the information and again more details than he may want to have about the expenditure plans of the Government for 1983-84. I want to assure my friend that the House will have all the information it needs to consider this very important issue, because I feel that Hon. Members of the House are indeed entitled to know what the funds will be used for.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—COLLECTIVE RESPONSIBILITY OF CABINET

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my questions to the Prime Minister, and they are questions to follow up those asked by my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre and the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

The Prime Minister has established that the Deputy Prime Minister knew about this deal, and the Deputy Prime Minister is nodding his head in assent.

Mr. Nielsen: He announced it.

Mr. Epp: He announced it. Therefore, if the Deputy Prime Minister knew about this deal, the Government knew about this deal. There is a concept of collective Cabinet responsibility, and the Prime Minister cannot say that because he or his Minister of Finance might have a faulty memory, the Government, therefore, did not know. The Deputy Prime Minister knew, and I would therefore like to ask the Prime Minister how he can possibly say, in view of the fact that the person sitting beside him knew, that the Government did not know and therefore has no responsibility.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there are agreements being signed all the time between the Government of Canada and various Provinces and public and private bodies. These agreements are going on all the time. They do not come before Cabinet. What comes before Cabinet is a general policy and, in that sense, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in the later seventies, had conceived a policy of oil substitution. That was approved at the time and is part of our energy policy, but an agreement made between the Government of Canada and the Government of a Province—of every Province, except for Quebec, I believe—is something which is made under that policy, which does not come back to Cabinet every time there is to be agreement.

This oil substitution policy, as I hear it now, entitled the Government of Nova Scotia to receive some $7 millon from the Government of Canada to invest in projects which it judged to be worthy of oil substitution. It is such a project which this consortium was proposing to the Government of Nova Scotia, essentially, as they are the ones that have the funds in the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Nova Scotia.

An Hon. Member: Not true.

Mr. Trudeau: It is something which was to take place in the Province of Nova Scotia. To my memory, it never came before Cabinet at all. All I know is that it came before a committee of Cabinet in early September, 1981, that committee being the Treasury Board. That is how the matter was authorized in terms of federal participation in this agreement.

However, it is certainly a misunderstanding of the rules of Parliament and the Government to assume that every agreement is known by every Minister. The important thing is that they be authorized by law of this Parliament and that they be authorized by the Minister responsible for signing such agreement under the terms of the law which creates that Ministry. This is presumably what happened in that case. As I say, I have no memory of it having come to Cabinet. There is no reason most of other colleagues would have known of that agreement. Those who knew of it, presumably, were the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister responsible for Nova Scotia, the lead Minister for Nova Scotia.

Mr. McGrath: The Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: The Deputy Prime Minister. Therefore I fail to see the logic whereby the Hon. Member says that the Deputy Prime Minister knew of it and therefore everyone knew of it. That is not the case.

Mr. Nielsen: The Government knew about it.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, the Hon. Member for Yukon said that the Government knew about it.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid, that answer was long enough.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, I agree.

POSITION OF FINANCE MINISTER

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): My supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister knew. The Prime Minister likes to give us all kinds of theories and concepts about parliamentary Government but he also knows that the concept of collective responsibility remains. The Government is responsible because one of its members knew. Additionally, the Prime Minister has now just said that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources knew.

As I understand the conflict of interest guidelines, there is not to be any inducement. What happened under this agreement about which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources knew, and which he signed on behalf of the Government, and therefore the Government is responsible, is that there was an arrangement in the agreement whereby a former Minister could in fact hold the people of Canada responsible for a great deal of money and he could personally profit.

Therefore I ask the Prime Minister, in his logic, as he tries to come to the ethical question, did he ever consider, as he works this thing through in his own mind, that on the basis of this knowledge and responsibility the Minister of Finance in fact should tender his resignation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to the concept of Government solidarity and collective responsibility. Yes, Madam Speaker, we are collectively responsible for the policies of this Government, and the policy of oil substitution is one for which we are all collectively responsible and informed about.

But a particular agreement signed maybe by the Minister of Employment and Immigration or by the Minister for Northern Affairs, which he is doing under his authority with funds which are authorized by the estimates passed by this Parliament—they do not all come before Cabinet. The Hon. Member was a Cabinet Minister, and he should know that. It just happens that this one did not come before Cabinet. It was signed in September. I made the point that the Minister of Energy knew, yes, he knew, as I said, at the very beginning of September, 1981. I have not heard arguments from the opposite side yet how that would induce me to ask for his resignation. He knew of an honourable deal, above board—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Groans again from the Opposition, Madam Speaker. Are they now saying that the deal is dishonourable?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Crosbie: Exactly.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I will then make sure that the Government of Nova Scotia is informed about that. I will make sure that they are informed that Premier Buchanan should not have been involved in such a dishonourable deal. All I know is that he was involved a long time before we were, since our Minister was only involved in the month of September, and the Premier of Nova Scotia had been involved presumably for nine months.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I guess I will return to my train of thought, Madam Speaker. The Government as a whole is not collectively responsible for some individual agreement—the Hon. Member shakes his head—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, why do you not sit him down and get him out of his misery?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Those are the things you will be remembered by.

EMPLOYMENT

SUMMER PROGRAM FOR STUDENTS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In light of the seriousness of the unemployment situation amongst the youth and the approaching summer and the need for jobs by students, I wonder if the Minister is aware that there is still vital information missing with regard to the Summer Canada program. For example, with regard to community projects we still do not know what constituency allocations will be available, whether they will be up over last year, in light of the increase in unemployment.

With regard to internship for students, his advertisements in the papers indicate there will be public sector internships but there is no indication of the fact that there will also be private sector internships. Does he not recognize the need of all private businesses to be aware of the fact that there will be private sector internships, so they can have equal access to those funds for students jobs? With the deadline—

Madam Speaker: Order. Would the Hon. Member please ask a question immediately, with no more preamble.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, my question is this. When will the Minister make available the information for constituency allocations since the application deadline is March 4 and we need that information? It is only a couple of weeks away. Also, will he be advertising the fact that there are private sector internships so that all businesses across the country can have equal access to those funds for student employment?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member may or may not know, Members of this caucus have been working very actively over the past several weeks to develop a number of initiatives that will be designed to help young people to gain employment and training. Obviously the summer youth employment package is one of those. So what we want to do is to make sure that we have a fully balanced approach, so the funding of that program must be related to the over-all set of priorities we want to establish to help young people in a variety of different circumstances.

As far as information is concerned about the program, I simply draw the Hon. Member's attention to the fact that over the past week a number of specific advertisements have appeared in newspapers putting forward the information which he requires.

FISHERIES

KIRBY TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS—PRESENTATION OF GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Today the Minister tabled the response to the Kirby Commission as well as the Kirby Commission Report on the Atlantic coast fisheries.

In view of the fact that the most critical situation in the industry, that is the financing and restructuring of it, has been delayed another two months before any comment will be given on that subject, and in view of the fact that quality, marketing and fishermen's incomes have been deferred for more study, how can the Minister justify the length of time since the document was placed before Cabinet in October until now, four months' delay, before the response of the Government, which is inadequate at best, has been placed before Parliament and the Atlantic fisheries?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has touched upon several questions and he has failed to report exactly what I have said and what was said in the lock-up this morning.

On the question of restructuring, we are in the final stages of that very important question. On the question of marketing, I have already announced several decisions of Cabinet relating to the dock-side grading; that we want a price differential; that we are going to have a licence for exports for everything, interprovincial or international trade; but as for the particular mechanism, because there are a lot of diversions used, we would like to have more consultation with the different participants.

Regarding the income of fishermen, I have announced several things this morning, and I hope that I will have the support of the Hon. Member as the Government of Canada is asking all the Provinces which do not have collective bargaining legislation to enact that very soon to help our fishermen.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SECURE EQUITY IN EAST COAST FISH PLANTS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I would like to suggest to the Minister that maybe one of the problems that he has with the restructuring aspect is that there is a difficulty in the Liberal benches in terms of trying to determine whether this could be a major bail-out, in terms of simply a subsidy or a bail-out to the banks and to the fishing companies, or whether indeed the Minister and the Government will take the initiative and demand some Canadian equity in those processing plants. Will they include within that equity some kind of a marketing strategy so that fishermen can be guaranteed a good income for the fish that they produce and that we can market good quality products around the world?

Will the Minister give us some commitment that we are not simply going to be giving money to companies which have mismanaged their operations and mismanaged their resources, but that Canadians and employers of those companies and people in those communities will have some say in the management of the Atlantic fisheries, finally?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member is more familiar with the Pacific fisheries than the Atlantic fisheries. I am on record since at least three months ago that the Government is not considering any bail-outs to the present shareholders. What we are interested in is devising a policy which is going to give 25 per cent of all the workers in the Atlantic Provinces, 1,300 communities, a system that will bring stability and decent and reasonable income to those people. For that, every segment, whether the processors, the fishermen, the plant workers, the Governments, all of us will have to work together to implement that new system which expects from each participant his own effort, if we want to make it a profitable and viable sector, as it should be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—ORGANIZATION OF NOVA SCOTIA PRESS CONFERENCE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has a weird concept of parliamentary democracy, and an even weirder—

Mr. Whelan: Ask the question.

Mr. Nielsen: The question will be coming, I assure the Minister of Agriculture—an even weirder idea of the standard of moral conduct expected from his Ministers.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Nielsen: There is no doubt that the Government is fixed by reason of its collective responsibility for the acts of any of its Ministers. The Minister of Communications has proven that. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has proven that—

• (1450)

Mr. Nielsen: —Bud Drury has proven that, and Walter Gordon, all whom resigned on far less grounds than exist here.

The facts are that the Government knew of an immoral arrangement between the Government of Canada and a former Minister of the Crown. No weaseling around that can get the Minister off the hook, nor the Deputy Prime Minister.

Madam Speaker: Order please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Leader of the Opposition, but he knows that, just as every other Member has to do, he must ask a question and not make a statement of that length. His questions are welcome, but no statements please.

Mr. Nielsen: I was simply following the precedent set by the Prime Minister which was found acceptable to the Chair.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I do not know what that comment suggests, but when the Hon. Member looks in Hansard he will see that the length of the questions and the answers are pretty much the same. I am only urging Members to be shorter in their questions. A question is supposed to be short. It is absolutely normal that some answers have to be longer. That goes without saying. However, questions must be short.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I assure you that the questions will be just as short as the answers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I will put this question, if the herd behind the Prime Minister will be silent for a while. He says that when his now Minister of Finance was Minister of Energy, he knew nothing about this deal until September, 1981. Can he tell me then why it is that the now Minister of Finance, when he was Minister of Energy, had his own press secretary, that is the press secretary to the now Minister of Finance, organize the trip to Port Hawkesbury in order to enable his Deputy Prime Minister to announce this project?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, having heard the conduct of the Hon. Member for Yukon for some 15 years, I would want to say that I do not mind being judged by a man like that because his standards of morality are so low that a judgment of someone else as to their morality, to me means absolutely nothing. If the Hon. Member had higher standards of morality himself, then maybe he could sit in judgment against other people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: As to the matter of the press secretary, the press conference and the arrangements, I would find it rather preposterous that the Minister from Nova Scotia would only go to a press conference in his own riding under arrangements arrived at by the press secretary of some other Minister. Therefore, I take the suggestion by the Hon. Member for Yukon with a big lump of salt.

PRESS SECRETARY'S ROLE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I will stack my standards against the Prime Minister's—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: And I will do that chronologically going back to 1942.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The conduct of these Ministers is so rotten as to make any decent parliamentarian and any decent Canadian regurgitate.

Let the Prime Minister answer the question I put to him. He tells us that his former Minister of Energy, now Minister of Finance, knew nothing of this arrangement until September, 1981. How can he explain the press secretary to that Minister of Energy organizing the arrangements for the announcement by the Deputy Prime Minister in Port Hawkesbury in April, 1981?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the standing ovation that the Hon. Member for Yukon just got from Members of his own Party indicates that their standards of morality must be equal to his, which is not very high.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You don't see anybody standing over there.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I would want the Hon. Members to remind themselves who raised the question of morality in this House. I didn't. It is the Member over there. Why the howls of indignation since I used the same language as their own Leader? As to the press arrangements, I know nothing of them.

Mr. Nielsen: He did.

Mr. Trudeau: That is another thing I do not do—I do not look at each Minister's press secretary to see what arrangements they are making. I am happy to make inquiries. I will answer questions in the House the next time it sits. If the Hon. Member for Yukon wants me to inquire about that, I will be happy to do so.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

MAINTENANCE OF FILES ON COUNTRY'S PRIME MINISTERS

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I am really concerned that late on Friday the Solicitor General released a policy statement that emphasizes the destruction of RCMP files on individuals, because nothing will defeat the concept of the freedom of information legislation more than if there are no files to produce when one feels wronged or, in later years, no files are available to indicate why public policy evolved as it did. As an example of some of the problems, can the Minister indicate if the files on the activities of Prime Ministers, both past and present, have been or will be destroyed and, if not, under which of the four exceptions that he has made, will they fall?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I do not know if the Security Service has files on former Prime Ministers. As I indicated in the policy statement that I put out, the destruction will be subject to a review by the Dominion Archivist. I would imagine that if there are files that contain material of historic interest, as the mandate of the Dominion Archivist provides, those files would be retained. On the other hand, I am astonished not to have the support of the Hon. Member for a policy which I believe is widely supported by Canadians, of having the Security Service, under the direction of a committee in pursuance of the guidelines which I have established, prepare for the destruction of hundreds of thousands of files on Canadians which were not justified to be opened in the first place and which do not relate to the mandate of the Security Service. I would hope he would support that policy.

CONTENTS OF FILES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I really would like to get the Solicitor General on record on this. Is he flatly saying that he has no knowledge of the existence or the contents of files relating to the present Prime Minister? Does this mean, and perhaps the Prime Minister could answer this, that the originals of those files may have already been destroyed?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, no files of the Security Service have been destroyed since the time that the McDonald Commission was established. I can give the Hon. Member that assurance. I indicated in my earlier answer the basis on which files would be processed and approved for destruction pursuant to the policy that I laid out. So far as my own interest is concerned, I occasionally review files of the Security Service, but I only do it when I feel it is necessary for me to do so in relation to an operational matter or policy decision or policy review relating to the Security Service. I do not know what policy the Hon. Member opposite followed. My policy is to look into these files which touch the privacy of individuals only when absolutely necessary.

ENERGY

NEWFOUNDLAND COURT DECISION ON OWNERSHIP OF OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. In view of the fact that the Newfoundland Supreme Court today brought down a rather momentous decision with regard to the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland, would the Minister comment specifically on what negotiations, if any, will take place, now that that Supreme Court decision has come forth, with regard to negotiations over offshore oil in Newfoundland?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there was a decision this morning by the Appeal Court of Newfoundland, which was unanimous, giving jurisdiction over the offshore to the federal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: But I would not want to make any further comment because next week the Supreme Court of Canada will take under advisement the reference which we, ourselves, made to the Supreme Court. That case will be heard in front of the Supreme Court next week. Therefore, I do not want to make any commitment at this time. I am quite pleased that the legal advice which I gave to the House as Minister of Justice has been recognized by the Appeal Court of Newfoundland, the same court which Premier Peckford praised so much in the case on the Constitution.

PETITION

MR. SKELLY—OFFSHORE DRILLING ACTIVITIES

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the three hundred and ninety-fourth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) on Wednesday, February 16, 1983, and finds that the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Order as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, today being Thursday, I wonder if I might ask the Government House Leader to give the House some indication as to the business of the House for tomorrow and next week.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as indicated yesterday, tomorrow is an Opposition day.

[Translation]

As far as the business of the House for next week is concerned, Madam Speaker, on Monday we shall resume debate on the second reading stage of Bill C-139, to amend the Income Tax Act, and depending on the progress achieved that day, we could determine the order of business for Tuesday and Thursday. On Tuesday, we could very likely resume debate on Bill C-143, to provide the government with supplementary borrowing authority.

I have made some suggestions to the Progressive Conservative Party, and depending on their response, we might soon manage to complete the third reading stage of three urgently needed bills, first, Bill C-95, concerning events pools, the purpose of which is to provide large sums of money for the Olympic Games in Calgary; second Bill C-130, a very urgent one, to authorize continuing financial assistance to be provided to certain international financial institutions, and finally, Bill C-136, dealing with Small Business Investment Grants.

Should the Progressive Conservative Party's response concerning these three bills be favourable, we could complete on Tuesday the debate on the last stage, and on Thursday, we could consider the legislation on the borrowing authority, namely, Bill C-143.

What is sure, for the time being, is that we will deal on Monday with Bill C-139, and I will decide what will be the business for Tuesday on the basis of the Progressive Party House Leader's response and of course on the progress made with regard to the bill to amend the statute law relating to income tax.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Government House Leader would comment on a trend which seems to be taking place. The Government House Leader indicated yesterday, and again today, that he is going to allot tomorrow, which is a Friday, as an Opposition day. Tomorrow will be the fourth allotted day in this period. Of those four days, three of them have been on a Friday. In other words, a short day.

I am sure that the Government House Leader is aware that, by allotting short days, the Government is cutting down on the debating time which is allowed to the Opposition. If in fact all of the allotted days were to be Fridays, a total of 25 hours, or 20 per cent of the debating time, would be taken away by the Government. What we really have, Madam Speaker, is closure by allotment. I ask the Government House Leader to assure us that, in allotting the rest of those days, a fairer treatment will be given to the Opposition in order that we can deal with these matters that way, rather than a long debate on a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, since we started our parliamentary reform experiment, we have had no more short days, because now, there is no private members' hour on Friday, and thus Fridays are much longer now than they used to be. Furthermore, I can assure the Hon. Member that we shall not use the kind of tricks they like to use on days set aside for Government Orders or shorten Opposition days by letting the bells ring indefinitely, nor do we intend to indulge in dilatory tactics to prevent them from considering private member's business.

That being said, I am certainly not going to schedule Opposition days on Friday as a matter of course. The schedule will of course depend on the progress of the business of the House and consideration by the House of certain Bills. I can assure the Hon. Member that I shall seriously consider his suggestion with respect to future Opposition days. However, I would like to point out that if we look at the time spent on the business of Parliament on a given day, on average, the House spends far more time on Opposition days, even on Fridays, compared to the amount of time spent on Government business on other days of the week, and that is due to the dilatory tactics used by the Opposition party in recent weeks.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Just to correct an impression which may have been left with the House, Madam Speaker, on a Friday we cannot have much more than from twelve o'clock to one o'clock and from two o'clock to five o'clock, which is four hours; but on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, we can have four and three-quarters hours. That is exactly the point which I was making to the House and to the Government House Leader.

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, in response to the business of the House for next week, I did not attend the meeting of the House Leaders and our Acting House Leader is not present at the moment, but I received some word from his Executive Assistant that, as far as our Party is concerned—and we are well aware that the Government calls the business of the week—we are not particularly pleased or impressed with the suggested calling of the three Bills mentioned earlier by the Government House Leader, since I do not believe this was discussed at the previous meeting. I would just like to put on the record that reservation about the business for next week.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would rather not comment on the topics discussed at the meeting of the House Leaders, but I can assure the Hon. Member that a proposal was made regarding the three Bills I mentioned before, and that I do not intend to call them within the next few days without a favourable reply from his party and from the Progressive Conservative Party.

[English]

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, my point of order refers to House business. I would like to ask, first of all, whether the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans will be in the House tomorrow to answer questions on the Kirby report.

My second question stems from the press conference which the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans held today. Is the Minister not going to come before this House and make a statement with respect to the Kirby report and those policy options which the Government is prepared to accept, so that that can be answered by the respective critics in the Opposition and there can be some discussion of it in the House of Commons? With respect, Madam Speaker, given the importance of this issue to Atlantic Canada, it seems a perfectly appropriate thing to suggest that the Minister do appear in front of this House and speak on motions.

Mr. De Bané: Madam Speaker, I am a little distressed because I have already accepted an appointment tomorrow in Vancouver, British Columbia, to meet with the Fishery Advisory Council to the Minister. I have also several appointments in Prince Rupert and other areas of B.C. tomorrow, Saturday and Sunday. As soon as I return I will be ready to meet with the Hon. Member.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, I understand the Minister's difficulties with respect to tomorrow. Naturally, coming from the West Coast I am not critical of those arrangements. But can the Minister tell the House whether he will be in the House for sure on Monday, and whether or not he is prepared to make a statement which would be answered by the Opposition critics?

Mr. De Bané: Madam Speaker, of course, I can give a commitment to the Hon. Member. The moment I return from B.C., it is my duty to be in the House to answer questions. I believe that my return is scheduled for later Monday night, so on Tuesday, of course, I will be here.

• (1510)

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, can the Minister confirm that he will be making a statement in the House at the earliest possible time next week? I am not just talking about questions.

Mr. De Bané: No. On that question, Madam Speaker, that is under the authority of the Government House Leader. I thought the process I followed was the right one, and that is to have my Deputy Minister give an information briefing session this morning to all Members opposite interested in the matter, rather than my giving a press conference. Of course, if the Opposition would like to use one of their days to have a full debate, that will be welcome too.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, I appreciate, as did the other Hon. Members, the briefing given by the Deputy Minister. The Minister will not mind my saying that we would have appreciated the briefing perhaps as early as some of the leaks of documents had been distributed throughout the country. But I must say, through you, Madam Speaker, that I believe it is appropriate, on a matter of this magnitude to Atlantic Canada, that the Minister make a statement in the House. I ask that he consult with his House Leader and be prepared to come back and make that statement early next week.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, all I can say is that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) was in the House today during question period. If the matter was as important as all that, questions could have been put to the Minister, instead of having the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) indulge nasty remarks throughout question period.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, some weeks ago the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion released a report in the House which would see changes in Canada's shipbuilding policy. He indicated at that time that if the Opposition Parties were agreeable, the legislation could be moved quickly through the House. He chastised us to some degree, saying that we should co-operate, at that time my sense of the House was that both Opposition Parties would be willing to co-operate with speedy passage of that legislation.

With the new turn of events and the current situation in Newfoundland and developments offshore, we may lose a lot of the advantages available through the new policy if the Government does not move quickly. Could the Government House leader give us an indication whether the Minister was serious when he was asking for the co-operation of the House in putting that legislation forward, or were we just being treated to a kind of interim handing out of a report and then a long delay before action?

Mr. Pinard: I want to assure the Hon. Member that all Ministers are very serious.

Mr. Skelly: It is unfortunate, Madam Speaker. I wonder if the House Leader might be in a position to deal with the substance of the shipbuilding policy because I do believe the Minister was serious when he put this forward. Certainly the Opposition Parties, indicated their co-operation, and were also serious in trying to put these people back to work and maybe put the industry in a little better position. As the Hon. Member knows, many shipyards are on the verge of closing in Vancouver and eastern Canada, with some very short-term work available and then nothing on the Order Paper.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I just indicated that all Ministers are serious and then the Hon. Member said "it is unfortunate". I do not understand his point, except that I will be glad to discuss the matter with his House Leader. If he is serious, he will raise the matter with his own House Leader and when we have a meeting we will discuss it.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, do I understand that the House leader has given an undertaking to consult with the Minister to determine whether or not this House would be able to assist all Canadians in business in that particular field of endeavour? Was he making a commitment to check with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and report back to the House?

Mr. Pinard: Well, by reading Hansard tomorrow the Hon. Member will realize that he misunderstood a little bit.

Mr. Hawkes: I have a question for the Government House Leader. On Monday of this week he would have heard the Prime Minister indicate on behalf of the Government that the Standing Committee on Health, Wealth and Social Affairs was free to examine the issue of single parents. This morning Government Members refused to come into the committee room. The House Leader will know there are only four Opposition members of the committee but it takes six to form a quorum in a standing committee, and if the Liberal members of the committee refuse to come into the room we cannot get started and deal with that kind of problem.

Can he assure the House that he will use his good offices to make sure that Liberal members come to committee meetings so that we can get started, or is he telling us that the Liberals intend to boycott the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs in the future?

Mr. Pinard: No, Madam Speaker. On the contrary, I have encouraged all Hon. Members to make it possible to organize committees as early as possible. As a matter of fact, that organization process had begun last Tuesday, but due to the request of the Hon. Member's own Party we agreed to start all over again today because of insufficient notice in some instances.

The Hon. Member refers to the meeting of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs this morning. I do not know if there were one or two members sick or what reasons they had; I will inquire. But I want to assure him that it was not planned nor intended to delay the formation of any committee.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, there were four Opposition members and one Liberal who came to the meeting. There were two Liberals outside the door for the better part of a half hour who refused to come into the room and form a quorum. It looked very much to the Opposition as if it were a deliberate strategy so that we could not get started. If they had not been physically present, I would accept that explanation. I guess I have brought to the House Leader's attention something he knew nothing about, but I think it is a very serious situation.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KEEPER—RESPONSE OF MR. AXWORTHY DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege arising out of Question Period. I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) how much money there would be in each constituency and, when that information was going to be available, in light of the fact that the application deadline is on March 4. He indicated this information was available in advertisements in the newspapers.

That information is not available—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member may raise a question of privilege which follows the debate, but I am afraid the Hon. Member is now continuing the debate. That is not allowed under the guise of a question of privilege. If the Hon. Member wants supplementary information about the question he asked of the Hon. Minister, he can do that on another occasion, but he cannot use this particular time to debate that question.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, perhaps you can clarify the situation for me. What I am wondering is whether the Minister had breached my privileges by, maybe unintentionally, misleading the House in saying the information I was asking for was available in advertisements when in fact the information is not available anywhere.

Madam Speaker: No, I can tell the Hon. Member that the Minister, in the circumstances described by the Hon. Member, has not breached his privileges. If the Hon. Member wants supplementary information or clarification, he can ask for it; but he cannot say he has a question of privilege.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. CROSBY—REQUEST KIRBY REPORT BE TABLED AND REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a point of order relating to remarks made in the House by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané). He has since left the House but with your leave I would like to record my concern.

The report to which the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans made reference in his remarks, the so-called Kirby report, which is actually the report of the committee inquiring into the Atlantic fishery, is a report that could be tabled in the House by the Minister. If he did, he could, pursuant to the new Standing Order 46(4), refer that report to a committee, in this case the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

I would like to ask the Minister whether he intends at some future date, hopefully in the very near future, to table the so-called Kirby report in the House of Commons, and if he will at that time at least refer the report to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, so that it can examine the contents of the report and give the public an opportunity to consider its provisions.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I imagine the wording of the Standing Order you read to the House yesterday is still fresh in you mind. Clearly, the Minister is not required by an Act of Parliament to table this document, but he may do so voluntarily, according to the Standing Order. Whether he will or not is a matter for the Minister to decide. However, he has informed me that he is certainly not able to give a reply today.

[English]

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, I realize we are dealing with legal interpretations at this point, but I would point out to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) that I understand the inquiry, which became known as the Kirby Commission, was an internal inquiry pursuant to the Inquiries Act. That is a Statute of the Parliament of Canada, and a report made by that commission of inquiry is pursuant to an Act of the Parliament of Canada. Therefore, I do not know why it could not be regarded as such for the purposes of Standing Order 46(4).

PETITIONS

MR. DE JONG—RELOCATION OF CNR RAIL LINES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by 2,400 residents of the Uplands area in the City of Regina. The residents are petitioning Parliament in an attempt to prevent the Canadian National Railways from relocating its rail lines and marshaling yards to within two miles of existing or proposed residential subdivisions of the City of Regina. The residents are very concerned that the noise and air pollution from the proposed marshalling yards will destroy their residential community.

They hope that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the proper authorities will become aware of their very grave and very real concern.

MR. COOPER—BROADCASTING OF PORNOGRAPHY ON PAY TV

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the constituents of Peace River which relates to pornography and particularly to pornography on Pay TV. They are very concerned about the effects this will have on the increase of pornography in the country.

The petition calls on Parliament to take whatever action is necessary to prevent the showing of pornography on Canadian TV.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,340, 4,490 and 4,623.

[Text]

WHEAT SALES TO U.S.S.R.

Question No. 3,340—Mr. Bosley:

1. Is the price charged in the sale of wheat by Canada to the U.S.S.R. far below the price paid by Canadians for the same product and, if so, does this mean that Canadians are subsidizing the U.S.S.R. in the purchase?

2. Does Canada loan money to the U.S.S.R. to facilitate any purchase and, if so (a) what rate of interest is charged (b) does the U.S.S.R. pay the interest on such loans and has repayment been made on the loans?

3. To what extent does the sale of Russian products in Canada, such as cars and machinery, offset the amount of the loans owed to Canada or are Russian sales in Canada cash moneys earned?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canadian Wheat Board and the Export Development Corporation as follows:

1. No. Within the floor and ceiling range of $5-$7 per bushel on wheat for human consumption in Canada, domestic and export prices are the same. Export prices in fact exceeded the ceiling in the November, 1980 through March, 1981 period.

2. The Export Development Corporation does make financing available to the U.S.S.R. to facilitate the purchase of Canadian capital equipment and services.

(a) As a matter of general policy the EDC does not disclose details of transactions such as that which is of the subject of the present request. As to the rate of interest, in view of the intense competition that prevails among countries in foreign trade, it is not in the public interest for the EDC to discuss its participation in export transactions or proposed export transactions. Such information would assist an exporter's competitors both foreign and domestic. Since information on bids, participation or negotiations is given by companies to EDC in confidence, the Corporation, to respect that confidence, refrains until the sale arrangements are final, from discussing a deal or even from indicating that it has been approached in a transaction. EDC makes public its participation in direct lending transactions when the financing agreement therefore is signed and, on request, in credits and foreign investment insurance cases where the exporter or investor consents to publication. If the exporter or investor has not given its consent the reply will so state. When EDC makes public its participation in direct lending transactions it does not, because of the intense competition above-mentioned, publish the rate of interest, for the reasons mentioned.

(b) Yes.

See also question No. 2,481 answered July 7, 1981.

Note: All Soviet wheat purchases are for cash.

3. Sales of Soviet goods in Canada are transacted on a cash basis.

Order Paper Questions

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Question No. 4,490—Mr. Siddon:

1. What amount did the Canada Development Corporation spend for advertising in the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82?

2. What amount did the Corporation budget for advertising in the fiscal year 1982-83?

3. What percentage of the Corporation's fiscal year 1982-83 advertising will be devoted to (a) newspapers and magazines (b) radio (c) television (d) trade show or convention exhibits (e) any other?

4. Did the Corporation declare a deficit in the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82 and, if so, what was the extent of that deficit?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): The Canada Development Corporation is a corporation in which the Government of Canada, along with more than 35,000 other shareholders, holds an equity interest. The Corporation is neither a Crown corporation nor an agent of Her Majesty, and the Government does not have any official knowledge of the Corporation or its subsidiaries which is not publicly available from the corporate secretary.

CANADA HEALTH ACT

Question No. 4,623—Mr. Hawkes:

1. Did the Minister of National Health and Welfare contact any provincial health ministers in November, 1982 regarding the Canada Health Act and, if so (a) on what date (b) which ministers did she contact (c) what form did the contact take?

2. Did the Minister meet with any of the provincial health ministers in November, 1982 regarding the Act and, if so (a) which ministers did she meet (b) on which date or dates (c) in which cities?

3. Does the Minister plan to meet with all the provincial health ministers before the Act is approved by Cabinet and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, does she intend to present drafts of the legislation to the provincial health ministers?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1, 2 and 3. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is in contact with provincial health ministers on a regular, continuing basis. This question, however, relates to matters dealing with federal-provincial relations, and until negotiations are completed, it would be inappropriate to comment on this subject.

*ENVIRONMENTAL STUDY OF INDIAN BAY AND SHOAL LAKE

Question No. 4,641—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Will the Government be launching a comprehensive environmental study to determine the effects on the water quality of Indian Bay and Shoal Lake in the event that the proposed 350 cottage lots on the northwest corner of Shoal Lake in Manitoba are developed and, if so (a) what will be the starting date (b) on what date will it be completed (c) will it determine the degree of risk of increased algae production, oil spills or other major forms of pollution (d) will it include an examination of the effects of using the sewage lagoon located across from Winnipeg's drinking water intake on the shore of Indian Bay?

2. Will the government permit the use of motorboats for recreational purposes on Indian Bay?

[English]

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the answer is as follows.

1. Yes, the Government has begun a comprehensive examination of the cottage lot development proposed by Shoal Lake Indian Band 40. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development requested that a formal public review of this proposal be undertaken by an Environmental Assessment Panel. The Minister of the Environment appointed a Panel in January, 1981 to undertake this task. The Panel issued guidelines for the preparation of an environmental impact statement to the Band in March, 1981. Since that time the Band and the City of Winnipeg have held discussions in an attempt to overcome concerns related to the proposed development. It was recently agreed, and the Minister of the Environment has just received confirmation from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, that the Band and the City wish to continue with the environmental assessment review. He has therefore issued new instructions to the Panel to allow it to resume its review. (a) The Panel announced a resumption of the review February 9. (b) The completion date for the review is dependent on when the environmental impact statement is submitted to the Panel and on the quality of the information presented. A completion date therefore cannot be determined at present. (c) Yes, the review will primarily focus on the potential effects of the proposed development on water quality and will examine subjects listed in question 1 (c). (d) The review will not specifically examine the present waste disposal systems from the existing Indian community. It will, however, examine any sources of pollution to the lake. Environment Canada officials are presently advising the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on this matter.

2. The federal Government has no jurisdiction with regard to the use of motor boats for recreational purposes on Indian Bay.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the recess I was describing how the Government is seeking to borrow an unprecedented amount of money to pay unspecified bills for programs not yet clearly identified. I explained how this huge borrowing represents a deferred tax on taxpayers in the future and how it constrains the action of the present and future Governments. I also detailed how the Government's record of forecasting has been wildly inaccurate and how in this Bill the Government fails to address the real problems in the economy, the deep, structural shifts which have closed our plants, our mills and our mines and which cloud the future of the unemployed in Canada, particularly the young.

I said we would be much more willing to debate and pass this Bill if we knew what the money was needed for, when it is needed and how reliable the Minister's information is and that we would be much more confident if the Government's performance over the last few years had been more credible.

I should like to continue by asking how the Government feels that it can properly and responsibly ask Parliament to approve this borrowing when it has refused to provide economic and fiscal projections beyond the current year in the last two budgets? How can the Minister seek this kind of spending authority when he refuses to answer any of our questions? Why should we approve this Bill when the Government is vague about the uses to which it will be put and when the Minister can give us no idea about the projected size of the deficit in the next fiscal year? What will next year's deficit be? The idea of picking a number between $20 billion and $30 billion is not the sort of game that Parliament should be asked to play.

Clearly, the Government is withholding information from Parliament. It claims it needs this additional money because revenues have fallen due to the recession and because of the additional cost of servicing the public debt, which, of course, represents interest charges on money borrowed in the past. But in fact, the Minister is cooking the books again in his statement to the House today. He attempts to justify his horrendously increasing deficit by arguing that substantial reductions in the deficit were achieved in three previous fiscal years.

This morning the Minister argued that the Government's financial requirements dropped from a level equivalent to 4.8 per cent of GNP in 1978-79 to only 2.5 per cent of GNP in 1981-82. He failed to note that, using his own figures, the Government's financial requirements for the current fiscal year of $26.1 billion will amount to 7.5 per cent of nominal GNP, an increase of 200 per cent on a year-over-year basis. That is cooking the books by anyone's definition, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister also ignores the fact that, in terms of revenue, we must expect that the worst is yet to come because of the time lag in collecting revenue. We would not expect the full impact of the decline in economic activity and Government revenues until later this year when companies and individuals file their tax returns and pay any taxes due on their activities during the past year.

So much for the Government's credibility. Let us look at its performance now. As I said earlier, we would be more willing to approve this Bill if the Government's performance in managing the economy were better. Unfortunately, its performance has been abysmal. It has shown no signs of moderating its expenditures, nor has its chronically high rate of spending been of benefit to the economy, as the two million unemployed will testify.

It is particularly ironic that this request for borrowing $19 billion comes on the eve of the anniversary of the Government's election in 1980. At that time the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said this:

> We will hold the line on Government expenditure growth to under the rate of G.N.P.—
> The deficit will be reduced in a phased and orderly fashion ... any new expenditure programs to meet the evolving needs and requirements of Canadians will be financed by reallocating existing expenditures or by increases in revenue.

In reality, since 1980 the Government has increased its spending at twice the rate of GNP, adjusted for inflation. Since 1980, the deficit has more than doubled. So much for the promises of the Prime Minister.

Since the Government took office in February, 1980, Government spending has increased by 66 per cent compared with an increase in the CPI of 38 per cent and compared to nominal GNP growth of 30 per cent. Clearly, the Prime Minister and the Government have been unable to come close to keeping his election promises.

As a matter of fact, it is interesting to look at the impact of Government spending and its relationship to the unemployment figures. In 1970-71 when the deficit was around $370 million, the unemployment rate was 5.7 per cent; in 1975-76 when the deficit was $5.4 billion, the unemployment rate was nearly 7 per cent. But today when the deficit is up to $26 billion, the unemployment rate is well over 12 per cent. The only conclusion is that the more the Government borrows, the higher the rate of unemployment.

This record is not confined to the present Minister of Finance and his unhappy predecessor; it has continued through the record of Finance Ministers of Liberal persuasion in the past. When John Turner was Finance Minister, inflation doubled from less than 5 per cent to more than 10 per cent. When Donald Macdonald was Finance Minister, unemployment rose from 7 per cent to 8 per cent and the deficit increased from nearly $5 billion to more than $8 billion. This kind of legacy, of course, has been outlined by the Auditor General in his reports.

We must look at this record of deficits, and of irresponsible borrowing in light of the current situation when we have the twin evils of a recessionary economy aggravated by Government mismanagement. For Canada as a whole our real GNP fell by 1 per cent in the third quarter of 1982 which is the fifth consecutive quarter of decline. Real GNP has now fallen by 6.9 per cent since the second quarter of 1981. In the third quarter of 1982 manufacturing was operating at only 68 per cent of capacity, which is the lowest level since records were first kept in 1961. Canada needs 210,000 housing units each year to meet demand. In 1982 only 125,000 units were built.

According to the OECD, Canada's economic decline in 1982 was the worst of any of the 24 members of the OECD. According to the September 1982 issue of Euromoney, the over-all performance of the Canadian economy since 1974 ranks us fortieth in the world.

Over the past few years, our industrial productivity has been rising at the slowest rate of any major industrial nation. Of course, the impact on some of the Provinces, such as my home Province of British Columbia, has been very great. In B.C. the people are exhausting their unemployment insurance benefits at the rate of 9,000 per month. Welfare cases in the Province have jumped by more than 51 per cent since last year. Business bankruptcies in B.C. last year have more than doubled.

This is a dreary record created in part by a dishonest Government which augurs a dismal future for Canadians, who are paying the costs and will pay the costs for years to come. The Government's billowing debt threatens to throttle the fragile recovery which may emerge later this year.

The current Conference Board forecast shows a slow recovery from the recession starting this year with a modest growth in GNP, improving in 1984, but the unemployment rate is still expected to stay well above double-digit numbers. The cruellest impact of the Government's failure to develop the promise of Canada is evidenced by the rising numbers of Canadians who have lost their jobs.

When we look at alternative policies, Mr. Speaker, we have to look at the policies put forward by the NDP. I was amused this morning to note that the NDP finance critic noted his concern about the deficit. He said that he was deeply concerned about the size of the deficit. That is not what he has been saying. In a recent letter to The Globe and Mail, the finance critic for the NDP wrote:

> In the reality of today, not all Government deficit is wrong ... clearly, the Government has a responsibility to borrow in order to stimulate the economy at a critical time such as now.

The NDP has also proposed economic policies which include emphasis on Government planning and increasing the corporate tax rate. In essence, the NDP is saying that more state planning is good for Canada. But this philosophy requires the Government to pick the winners and losers in the economic system. It is the same kind of thinking that spawned the National Energy Program and the 1981 MacEachen budget, which have proved to be such disasters.

We believe in the Conservative Party that these choices should be left to the marketplace. Our position is quite clear on this. We feel the only way to achieve a sustained and solid recovery is to restore stability to the Canadian economy. But stability can only emerge in a favourable climate or environment created within the framework of clearly defined Government policies. This environment must encourage the inflow of capital from other countries to augment Canada's own scarce capital resources and must encourage Canadians to conserve and expand our own capital base. Without such incentives, Canadians will not be able to create the job opportunities which are required before they can go back to work. Those who are lucky enough to be employed will not spend their hard-earned dollars on consumer purchases if they find themselves worried about their job situation. I am sorry that the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) finds that so amusing.

Similarly, we need to assist small businesses in particular to keep operating by helping them to husband their cash flow. Over and over again I am told by small-businessmen that they need such assistance as John Crosbie's Small Business Development Bond, which was a cash flow bond which enabled them to keep operating.

Over and over again I am told that small-businessmen need financial instruments to enable them to plan ahead, that they need simpler taxation measures.

Over and over again I am told by small-businessmen that the accounting costs of calculating tax advantages under the existing mish-mash of small business regulations and registration far exceeds any financial advantage to them.

For both large and small companies the need to improve their liquidity is very great, one of the biggest concerns in this country.

Over and over again I am told we need training programs that are not the inflexible training programs devised by this Government which limits the businessman's opportunity to use the people employed. We might consider specific incentives, such as a graduated capital gains tax or training incentives which account for management's time in training. Instead of positive, specific programs we have before us only borrowing Bills, the current one for $19 billion.

What is $19 billion? I would like to refer to this morning's The Globe and Mail. The editorial column has an assessment of what $19 billion is. Let me put it on the record:

> What's $19 billion? This is how much it is. It is the size of the federal Government's entire budget in 1973-74: revenues were $19.3 billion that year, expenditures $20.04 billion. It is the size of the entire net debt of the country, the accumulated over all deficit since Confederation, as recently as 1974-75—
> Indeed, the ever-increasing size of Liberal Government deficits since the mid-seventies has brought us to the point where, not our debt but the mere interest payments on our debt have become greater than total budgetary expenditures were when Pierre Trudeau came to power.

That is $19 billion, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is aware that the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) stands to be recognized. In the ordinary course of events I would have to alternate between my left and my right, which means that I would recognize the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier. However, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) is here and also seeks the floor. I think in the circumstances the only way the Chair can proceed is to enquire of the House whether or not it may wish to extend its courtesy to the Leader of the Opposition. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher).

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I think the normal rules would be to allow the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) to speak. I know she has an important message that she wants to give to us and I would ask the House to listen to that Member now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There was implicit in my comments a search for unanimous consent. Obviously, there is not. Therefore, the Chair is obligated to recognize the Hon. Member for Mercier.

[Translation]

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with a problem which is of major concern in my constituency, a problem which I have been facing for several weeks involving the whole question of unemployment in Canada as well as the bill now under consideration.

We know that a supplementary authority bill was introduced as a possible solution but, because of the economic slowdown and the resulting decrease in fiscal revenue and increase in unemployment insurance or welfare payments, the Liberal government is in my view acting as a responsible and more importantly as a reliable government by providing the people of Quebec with at least the basic necessities of life.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to a problem which was raised during the debate on Bill S-31 dealing specifically with investments by the Caisse de dépôt et placement du Québec into companies involved in interprovincial transportation.

However, Mr. Speaker, I believe the principle which was applied to the Caisse de dépôt should be extended in practice. In my constituency, a building material plant owned by Domtar has just closed down and I disagree with this decision which put laid-off employees on unemployment insurance even though the plant still lead an operating capacity. Mr. Speaker, Domtar was acquired by the Caisse de dépôt, which now owns 46 percent of all shares in the company. Through the appointment of nine members on the board of directors and the chairmanship of Mr. Yves Pratte, a former constitutional advisor to the Quebec government the Caisse de dépôt has been able to gain full control of Domtar. Mr. Speaker, when a Quebec institution such as the Caisse de dépôt, whose responsibility it is to invest the pension funds of workers has its own staff on unemployment insurance, I believe there is ground for concern, and I want to thank the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for getting the money he needs through this borrowing bill; however, I am still concerned by Domtar's decision.

This company decided to close down its Quebec plant in the middle of its negotiations with its employees, after only 11 meetings. The workers had graciously accepted the 6 and 5 federal program and during the negotiations on the normative clauses, they were told they were now without a job. Mr. Speaker, 21 of these workers had served at least 30 years, a dozen had been working for the company for 20 years or more and twelve for over ten years, which means most of these workers now find themselves on unemployment insurance at 45, 50 or 55 years of age with little chance of finding another job because of the compounding effect of a bad economic situation and a dwindling labour market. Consequently, unskilled labourers or plant workers without specific technical training will have either to face a difficult retraining period to get back into the labour market or go on welfare when their unemployment insurance has run out. And in my view this is a palliative that seems to be the only way out at this point and that I cannot approve.

I am asking that corporation a question for the simple reason that their operations as a Quebec-based multinational company owned by Quebecers, through the Caisse de Dépôt, in other words the pension fund of those very workers, are being transferred to Ontario. This I consider an arbitrary decision, Mr. Speaker. Economic recovery is around the corner, interest rates are lower, construction is about to resume in Quebec, and this company manufactures gypsum boards that have always been of high quality, that have been part of the Eastern market. Those gypsum boards made in Montreal, in the riding of Mercier, were sold not only in Quebec, but also in the Maritimes and in New York state. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the fact that we are compelled at this point to borrow in order to finance such a move by a company owned by Quebecers and financed by the Caisse de Dépôt, whose workers will have to live off unemployment benefits, and the fact that we are compelled to borrow while such high-handed decisions are being taken, cause me to rise and ask questions from a corporation which I regard as irresponsible.

If a Government such as ours is forced at this point in time to go out and get some money either by way of borrowing or through this country's consolidated revenue—although currently we are short of revenues due to the increased number of people that are drawing unemployment insurance benefits—I feel they should be concerned with the lack of social awareness of some corporations. We have a federal work-sharing program that not only has helped most people to save their jobs but also is most compassionate by its very nature. Admittedly, Mr. Speaker, it must be financed through contributions obtained from the Unemployment Insurance Fund. It provides for two things: first, companies are allowed to keep their qualified workers, and second, those workers are assured of keeping their morale high and the work skills they have developed while waiting for an economic recovery.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel that everyone has to make a contribution, and private enterprise also must do its share. Under the current conditions, the private business sector is controlled by the Quebec government. The workers went to see

Mr. Parizeau, who simply told them he was not getting involved. He only gets involved when it suits him. Apparently, the matter lies on Mr. Biron's and Mr. Landry's desks, and finally on the desks of all Quebec ministers and former ministers. They are unable to deal with the matter of a company with 90 employees. Some may say that 90 employees drawing unemployment benefits is not a major problem. But we must remember that decisions like those are made and repeated many times, and especially by companies such as this one who should be aware of their social responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, in Quebec in 1976, the unemployment rate was less than 10 per cent. It has now gone up to 15 per cent or more, and we have an incredible number of people on the welfare rolls. Through its programs, the Federal Government is helping many Quebec families but it cannot be said that any substantial assistance has been received from the provincial authorities. In the process of taking controlling interest in corporations such as Domtar, the provincial authorities are forgetting that the workers concerned have in fact worked most of their lives. After a while, their productivity goes down, and they are no longer as young as they were. As a result of collective agreements and seniority and the number of weeks of leave to which they are entitled, they have become to expensive to "keep up", and so they are treated like obsolete equipment that can be simply got rid of, and put on unemployment insurance.

Mr. Speaker, I think that even if our Government is discharging its responsibilities through the kind of borrowing measures the House is considering today, it is not up to the Federal Government alone to bear this burden. On the other hand, I think that this borrowing measure will help us to uphold the principles supported by a Liberal Government, namely, the universality of programs such as Family Allowances and Old Age Security. Mr. Speaker, anyone who is familiar with the financial administration of the Federal Government will realize that these programs require very substantial funds. I feel, however, that in a recession, at a time of great financial difficulty, we must not forget those people who would otherwise become the victims of the situation as has happened in the United States, as a result of the conservative policies of the Reagan Government, which decided to resolve its economic problems by cutting social programs.

Furthermore, I think that a responsible government, like the Liberal Government, understands where its responsibilities lie and has the requisite compassion for these people who are having to face such difficult times. Mr. Speaker, as Canadians, we have no choice but to draw from our national wealth. Economic recovery is imminent. Mr. Speaker, at the present time, we have both the capability and the need to borrow. I believe that people who will be receiving money from the Federal Government which is now experiencing a drop in revenue and of course, an increase in payments, I believe that these people will now be able to bridge the gap between economic recovery and the present recession.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, to get back to the situation in my riding, at Domtar, I urgently request the officials of that company and the federal authorities to drop their adjustment committee and to use programs such as the time-sharing agreement. There is still time to get this plant operating again. There is still time to manufacture gypsum board in Montreal, because, and the Minister's statistics are eloquent, construction is starting up again across Canada, and especially in Quebec. I must say that my riding is particularly well-suited to providing the kind of residential construction we all need.

Mr. Speaker, I have a riding that is developing steadily, with a growing population. We have land available and all the programs and infrastructures necessary to get ahead. We have the demand, and then we have a company that is simply shutting down.

Mr. Speaker, I am merely repeating what the workers have told me, workers I represent in the House of Commons. I am therefore asking the company and the Government of Quebec to act responsibly as the Federal Government has done, in these difficult times, and to enable these workers to keep their jobs.

Mr. Speaker, finally, I would like to point out that we must realize that the situation is very serious. Certainly, we are borrowing funds to help a group of people who need help, but in Quebec, the situation is almost hopeless as far as the Charter of Rights is concerned. The Province of Quebec is now going through difficult and sad times, and I simply want to appeal to the solidarity of the people of Montreal-Mercier and of all Quebecers. It is not a problem between English- and French-speaking Canadians, it is not a problem between the rich and the poor, it is not a question of knowing who will get what from the Federal or the Provincial Government. No, it is a problem of solidarity, of mutual respect, and of our common future.

Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today reflects the seriousness of the situation, and I hope that my colleagues opposite will understand that a fair share of that money is earmarked for Quebec and that they should support the Bill. It is true that Quebec's unemployment rate is unprecedented. I suggest that now is the time for the Opposition parties to show solidarity and support the Bill so that Quebecers will continue to have faith in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I have been defending that position in the House of Commons ever since I became a Member. Our financial capacity and credibility may have been jeopardized by an irresponsible Government in Quebec, but at least we in Ottawa can be proud to have a Minister of Finance who hails from Quebec, a Minister of Finance who is sensitive, who can take his responsibilities and who will channel enough funds through unemployment insurance and other social programs to enable Quebecers to get over this difficult crisis.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard just about every remark on the relevance or irrelevance of this borrowing Bill, and in my opinion it is simply a matter of decency and sharing. If we really want Quebecers to feel at home in Canada, we must realize that it is in difficult times that we need the help of others. Mr. Speaker, the best way for us in the House to show that we can take our responsibilities is to support the Minister of Finance and this new Bill.

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: I thank the Hon. Member for a very detailed and full statement on the borrowing Bill. I was wondering if she, as a key spokeswoman for the Government, could give us the estimated public debt charges for the year 1982-83, since she has a full understanding and felt it was important to make her presentation and so prevent the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) from speaking.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, I think we have the right to speak in this House, and I just—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: —I just exercised my right to speak. We are going through great suffering. We had plant closures, such as those of Texaco, BP, Domtar and many others in my riding. I think I am entitled to raise these matters as much as is the Leader of the Opposition. In regard to knowing what is the deficit in this country, there is a conservative country just beyond our border where the borrowing authority will be well over $200 billion.

Mr. Kempling: What does that have to do with this place?

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: There is a conservative philosophy in that country and it will have to borrow much more than this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kempling: What a red herring.

Mr. Blenkarn: Since the Hon. Member is not quite familiar with the expenses, I was wondering if, in view of six and five, she could justify an over-all increase in Government expenses at 9.6 per cent, and whether she could tell us where the Government of Quebec might borrow the money since the Government will now crowd out everyone, including private borrowers from the marketplace.

Mr. Fisher: With record saving rates?

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am quite aware of the amount of borrowing being carried out by our Government and the issue concerning whether or not we have the capacity to borrow that amount of money. In fact, I think that if we consider the actual interest rate of the Bank of Canada, it is usually a sign of whether the Government is borrowing too much or too little. The actual interest rate has been going down for four months, and I just think that it is a sign that the capacity of the Canadian Government to borrow on the market is certainly there.

Mr. Kempling: In anticipation that you are going to ask for $19 billion.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Today I have not seen any signs of the interest rate going up because the Government tabled the Bill requesting more money.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kempling: Scattered applause.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, I find myself a little bit surprised, like my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) would be so unconscious—

Mr. Kempling: Uncouth.

Mr. Lambert: —of standard rules of behaviour in the House. Regardless of the merits of the case put forward involving a constituency problem by the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette), and there is no question that they were well stated, yet the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) has priority, as does the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The Parliamentary Secretary, with a little bit more experience, will learn some of the unwritten rules of the House.

As far as the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) is concerned, she made a plea for the people of Domtar. I say to her—

—I will tell her bluntly that as a result of the National Energy Program and the budget of November 12, 1981, one petroleum industry in my city which had 2,500 people on its payroll was also forced to close shop. The Hon. Member made a plea for a few hundred employees, but I think it would have been preferable if she had taken up the cause of many other workers. They were the economic strength of the country, but they have been choked like a bunch of chickens because of a deliberate program of the Federal Government, a program regarding our national energy launched by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Therefore, she will not arouse much sympathy in that respect.

[English]

In so far as Bill C-143 is concerned, which involves the borrowing of some $19 billion, it is in essence, an omnibus Bill, and is totally superflous. We are asked to authorize a further $5 billion to cover the period to the midsummer. Then $14 billion will be required for some indeterminate period in the balance of the fiscal year 1983-84. Never should we have been asked for this in light of the performance of the Minister of Finance this morning. He did not give us one iota of information on the financial conditions which had been promised by the former Minister of Finance. Although he was the most incompetent Minister of Finance we have seen come down the pike in a quarter century, the present Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) at least recognized the traditions and obligations of any Minister of Finance who, seeking borrowing authority, gives a full projection of Government revenues, Government requirements for cash and the estimate of the spending program of the Government. But we have not received that.

I have a copy of the Minister's notes for his 45 minute intervention this morning. It was 45 minutes, yes, because there was a lot of political riff-raff in it. But there was no hard information with regard to why we should have this fantastic borrowing program, where the requirement to pay interest on a public debt of now $140 billion or more is the biggest single item in any of the Estimates of any Ministry. Years ago National Defence was the biggest spender of all Departments, followed by National Health and Welfare. National Health and Welfare was responsible for Old Age Security, Family Allowances, hospital and diagnostic services and Medicare, but even that great program of social services is now overtaken by the cost of servicing the public debt. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South indicated, when we considered the saving ability of the Canadian public—and, much was made of the fact that most of this borrowing would be done in Canada, and therefore there would be savings to Canadian taxpayers, individuals as well as corporations—it absorbs more than the ability to save on the basis of the level of economic activity. Therefore, according to both the Bill and the Minister's statements, the Government may have to go outside of the country to raise some of these funds. So you borrow to pay interest on your debt. That is the shortest and the straightest line to bankruptcy. If any private individual or any corporate entity in this country had to go out on a regular basis to borrow money, and I do not mean $100 or $1,000 but rather hundreds of millions of dollars, does anyone here realize that we have here a request to borrow $19 thousand million? For how long, and what is a million dollars? What is a million dollars?

If a man who had a million dollars said to his wife, "I will give you a million dollars on the condition that you spend $1,000 a day, and when you have spent the one million dollars you can come back", how long would she be gone? She would be gone two years and nine months. That is what a million dollars is. If you want to translate it into simple one plus one terms, if you take it in one dollar bills, I would suggest to you that you would have a 38 storey building made up of a perpendicular stack of one dollar bills. We are now asking for $19 thousand million, so you would have 19,000 38-storey buildings. North America does not have that many.

But that is what we are dealing with when we get $19 billion. But that is not what is going to be required for the deficit. Canada is going to have to absorb the shock for something around $26 billion, an increase of a further 33.33 per cent.

Canada is in this mess primarily because there has been fiscal and monetary incompetence, rotten incompetence in this Ministry for the past several years. We saw a relatively healthy Canadian economy zapped, absolutely cut to the bone in 1980 by the introduction of the National Energy Program and, secondly, that nefarious budget of November 12, 1981, followed by incompetence again multiplied by the June 28 performance, I believe it was, or June 24 of 1982.

Then they decided they were going to change the pilot. We were asked by the Minister this morning to pass rather rapidly Bill C-139. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South talked about the absolute hammer blows that the Canadian economy is suffering as a result of those remaining budgetary proposals. Some have been wiped out, those that were causing the Government more concern from the voters than had any actual worth in the program, but the Government is gathering unto itself in its centralizing policies more and more. There is the elimination of the IAACs, income averaging annuity contracts, into forward averaging where the money has to be paid to the Crown and then claimed back; and is not paid into an RRSP or into an annuity contract, which is available to private industry for investment. No, it goes to the Government, that much, and how far it goes, how far it goes!

Then there is the 12.5 per cent tax on small business dividends. The former Parliamentary Secretary will have his opportunity to speak. He may mumble in his beard or through his mustache all he wants but I will be pleased to hear him. I want him, before he speaks, to read an article signed this morning by Dominique Clift, as it appears on page 5 or page 7 of The Globe and Mail, as to the state of the economy. I know he reads The Globe and Mail. He can read, Dominique Clift, a well known writer, and he will see the similarity between the state of the nation, fiscal and otherwise, in the Province of Quebec and what is also present in the Government of Canada, that great centralizing welfare state that has been gradually added on—Big Brother knows better! These are the people who are the chief architects. They are quite candid about it. The NEP was part of it as well as the tax system.

This past summer we had officials from the Department who went through the philosophy of the proposals. It was strictly the scrapings off the Carter Report which had either been picked up off the floor or some dusty shelf and reintroduced. The then Minister of Finance did not know what he was bringing in and could not have cared less. However, the effect on the country has been remarkable. The damage has been done.

Some things remain, such as the taxation of earnings on insurance policies. This causes the policyholder to pay the tax every three years on something he or she will never see. It will be the beneficiaries who benefit. Why does the state claim the right to tax those earnings? The state simply says it has a right to tax all earnings in this country. It will allow individuals so much for living expenses, a certain amount for charity, capital gains, child care allowances or travel allowances. It then has the blessed gall to say those are tax expenditures, that the Government is spending that money. If the Government is spending that money, it means it had a right to all the earnings in the first place.

That is the type of philosophy that is prevalent in this administration in so far as the tax system is concerned. Of course, it applies to the NDP as well.

We are told that under the handicap of Bill C-139, businessmen will be hit left, right and front centre by further and further taxes. For those who are out for development, the soft costs will be gone as an expense. All sorts of things that are normal are gone.

I can see the tax Department now. A commission salesman of automobiles is deemed to have to stay in the showroom to sell automobiles. If he dares use his car to go to see customers, to demonstrate to them or help them out, he is denied a claim for expenses for that automobile.

Mr. Mazankowski: You will never sell a car that way.

Mr. Lambert: The theory that applies in both Finance and National Revenue is crazy. We are now trying to fight that.

Mr. Mazankowski: These guys buy it.

Mr. Lambert: Of course they do. They are a bunch of sheep when it comes to income tax. They do not understand it. Probably the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) has a little more knowledge than some of the others. To be fair, he is not bad.

Mr. Evans: There is one on each side.

Mr. Lambert: What he knows, averaged out among the rest of the caucus, would not measure a thimblefull. This is one of the most cruel things imposed on the Canadian people, the income tax Bills. The majority of Members are unknowing, uncritical and simply stand up and say, "Aye, ready" on any and all occasions when it comes to something they do not understand.

In 1981 the then Minister of Finance did not understand. We will see whether this Minister understands or whether he has a more facile way of slipping in the knife between the ribs of the Canadian public as he takes their money. Possibly he has more gall. We will see whether he has as much sense after today's disclosure, and I guess more openings later on.

In closing, I object to this Bill, particularly in that it is an omnibus Bill. I would accept the first part, but not the second part. Part II is for the next fiscal year. That should only be done after the disclosures of a full budget and the Estimates. I urge my colleagues—I cannot urge many Members opposite because very few are listening—that they give this Bill a very much more critical look and vote against it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, answers, comments. Before recognizing the next Member for the purpose of entering the debate, may I deal with some other matters.

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) did not imply that if one were not an income tax expert, one would automatically be a second-class Parliamentarian. I submit that if we are to be truly representative of the Canadian people, it is not necessary to be an income tax expert. I would say that it is very necessary to understand people, to understand their needs and aspirations and, more than anything, to have what is regularly known as a certain amount of common sense. Unfortunately, it is not as common as its name would imply. One would wish at times we had more of it, even in this august Chamber.

Dealing with the borrowing authority Bill, the first point to be made is that the need for the Bill should not come as a surprise to anybody. I do not think I have heard anyone say that they are surprised. Perhaps they were alarmed or overwhelmed, and many other words could be used depending on which side of the House you speak from. They may have been alarmed at the amount.

I believe the first point to be made is that no one was really surprised that the Government needed to borrow money to tide it over to the end of this fiscal year. Why? Let us look at it in a common sense way which, as I have already said, is unfortunately not common enough. We have to look first at the global situation. Everyone who has read a newspaper, watched TV or listened to a radio has witnessed a recession, the magnitude of which we have not seen since the early 1930s, and it has been global. We have witnessed high unemployment, record levels of unemployment, in all the industrialized countries. We have witnessed tremendous uncertainty among OPEC countries. We still have that uncertainty with us. Perhaps another week or so will give us a better picture of how we are going to project our own budget for the coming year. We cannot be immune to these situations which occur in other countries. They do affect us. At home we have had two drastically high unemployment periods, which means not only human suffering and misery but, more practically, record levels of payment out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

There are those of us, and I count myself among them, who thank God that we have an unemployment insurance plan which gives a safety net to those people who, through no fault of their own, lose their jobs. We do have an Unemployment Insurance Fund but it has been depleted. Many of our constituents have even depleted what benefits they were getting from the Unemployment Insurance Fund and have had to go on municipal welfare or, worse still, provincial welfare, because that means a longer term. Obviously, the coffers have been depleted because fewer people have been working, because the oil prices have not risen as one year ago it seemed they would rise. The Government receives less revenue. High interest rates, which are coming down now, were also added to the national debt. We had to pay more money to service the national debt. But these things are improving, Mr. Speaker. The global situation now is much healthier than it was even a few short weeks ago. We now have rapidly falling interest rates, as a result of which the Government's debt will be more easily borne by Canadian taxpayers. Hopefully, interest rates will continue to go down. The economic indices are good. Things are going to improve.

However, let me say again, no thoughtful Canadian should be surprised at this stage that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) needs more money to tide him over to the end of the fiscal year. No one should be surprised at that, nor can anyone blame him. However, once we have reached the end of the fiscal year, the Minister has already spoken about interim financing toward June. What is he going to do with that money? That is what I would like to direct my remarks to, Mr. Speaker. It is the main theme of my presentation today in the House. What is the Minister going to do with that money? How is it that he cannot wait until later, after the budget, to get money in order to put forward his programs? I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the very fact that the budget has not been brought down, nor will it be for another few weeks, at least, explains in part why the Minister must have the authority to borrow money now and not when it is too late. Let me explain. We have read in today's press that the budget will probably be brought down sometime in April. No one knows the exact date, not even the Minister of Finance himself. In that budget the Minister will announce specific projects. We in this Chamber know how long legislation takes, how long debate takes. We should be the first to understand the lead time which will be necessary in order for these programs to be implemented.

Let me focus my remarks on my particular wishes for the programs of the future. I refer to the youth constituency, Mr. Speaker, because irrespective of the upturn in the economy which will come, irrespective of the tremendous growth which will come, we have to be realistic and understand that when employers start re-hiring, they will re-hire the skilled and trained workers. The youth component will be very, very low on the totem pole. The youth are the ones who will be hired last and, unfortunately, will be the first fired. I do not believe, being realistic, that the private sector will turn its attention in the immediate future to the youth of this country. The Government must look after the youth component. They are our future. The Government will need money now before it can even start formulating the programs for our youth. What kind of programs am I suggesting? First of all, I believe that in discussing youth needs we should be very careful, Mr. Speaker, not to generalize. We women would be very upset if people generalized about our aspirations and needs. The men would also resent any kind of generalization. We cannot generalize about youth. There are various categories with various needs, just as with the adult constituency.

In order to make our approach simpler, I believe we, as legislators, and, hopefully, the public, should have at least three broad categories for youth who this summer, just a few weeks from now, will desperately need our hlep. In the first category, very broadly, are the youth who have finished their formal education. They have left school. They have a certain amount of formal education but not very much practical experience. They will need full-time jobs. The proposal which grew from this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, refers primarily to that category. It is not, and I repeat, it is not a panacea for all the ills of Canadian youth, for all the needs of Canadian youth, but it is at least a firm proposal by which a certain number of Canadian youth, who so wish, will be absorbed for a short period of time into the Armed Forces. That is a full-time job.

The second category of youth, I would submit, is the university students who will be coming out of school, perhaps, as soon as May, just a few months from now. Many of these young people have stayed in university longer than they originally planned to do at the beginning. Perhaps some of them would have been happy with just a simple BA, but now because of the economic situation they have fears that they will not get a job, and those fears are well founded. They cannot get a job now in our society as it is. Therefore, they have chosen to stay in university, perhaps at some financial sacrifice to themselves and to their families. I am sure society as a whole will benefit from this in the long run because the future generation will be more educated than the preceding one. However, we must help those university students to continue to pay for their tuition by finding them summer jobs. As I said before, I doubt very much that the private sector can supply jobs in the numbers needed for these students. But I hope any jobs we do find them will be jobs that will help them in their career aspirations, not just make-work jobs, but jobs which would give them on-the-job experience they will need when they eventually go into the private sector and ask for work.

I would suggest, therefore, that perhaps the universities, the laboratories, could be given extra grants in order to hire the students who need summer jobs and, therefore, give them the practical expertise during the summer which they are learning in theory during the winter months. It is only a suggestion, I do not know if it will be accepted.

The other category is the high school students. Here again we now know that enrolment last year was much higher all over the country than it has been for many years. Why? Again, the kids decided to stay at school rather than go on unemployment insurance or face a job market where there were no jobs for them. Here again there was a financial sacrifice particularly on the part of those students' families. We have to help them. These students, in their hundreds, will be coming into the summer job market, perhaps in the middle or at end of June. What is going to happen to them? I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it would be unwise, to say the least, perhaps irresponsible, on the part of Government to even place advertisements, such as it did in today's newspapers, offering them summer jobs if the Government itself is not sure it would have the means of providing for the payment of those programs. I suggest that is the kind of thing the Minister of Finance meant this morning when he said that our job was to provide for the needs of those who need help most.

In my submission, we have to be prepared in the coming months to face the tremendous number of young people who are going to be turning not to the private sector but to all of us in this Chamber and begging for help. I do not think they need to beg. We should not make them do so. We should be preparing them now and saying "Look, there is hope".

Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is embarrassing for any Government to have to ask permission to borrow money. But do you not think it would be morally reprehensible if we were not to ask for that money to spend it on worth-while programs such as those I just mentioned? I believe, Mr. Speaker, that our first duty is to the people of Canada, to help them when they need help most, when there is no one else to do it for them. Therefore, I would say yes, we are facing a deficit. No one is very comfortable about it, but we are using the money for worth-while purposes, and I think that Canada's youth will thank us for it in the end.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It was my intention to recognize next the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), but as the House will have noted, I had to ask him to consult with the Chair for a moment. In the meantime I will remind Hon. Members that there is a period for questions, answers and comments.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) whether the Government is intending to spend $19 billion on young people as the result of this borrowing request?

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member was joking. I really do. I have asked that the Government be humane, not irresponsible. I have already pointed to the various needs the Government is facing to replenish the depleted unemployment insurance coffers and service the debt. I have not for one instant mentioned or even thought that all the money the Government needs now has to go to youth. However, I would hope very much that a large section does.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, we need not be told about the question of irresponsibility of the Government. The Canadian people already know that. I want to ask the Hon. Member for York South-Weston how much money will be spent on youth?

Mrs. Appolloni: The rules of the House forbid us to impute motives to any member who is speaking and I would just hope en passant that by his questions the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) is not implying that he does not give a damn what happens to Canadian youth. However, when he asks me specifically how much money will be spent on youth I have to answer in all honesty and seriousness that I am not the Minister of Finance, nor am I privy to his calculations. Obviously, I do not know. However, I do know that our present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) does his damnedest to help Canadian youth, and he will get every darn penny he can to help them.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, there are two questions I would like to put to the previous speaker concerning youth employment. I agree that it is a very serious problem. However, I am concerned that the Government would not identify maximum benefits to youth employment, and I wonder if she might comment on this. For example, consider reforestation. The basic degradation of the forest resource industry in Canada is a desperate problem and seems to be one of the factors which has driven forest companies out of Canada. Disease-kill, fire-kill, and over-logging, especially in high-grade areas, has meant a loss of much of our forest base.

Would it not pay the country to use the youth, of which there is an enormous capable force available, to get heavily involved in reforestation programs, salmon enhancement programs and rehabilitation of Indian communities rather than putting them into the Armed Forces? Has she given any consideration to what would be a double pay-off for the dollars spent where, first, it would employ youth and, second, it would make a permanent contribution to the resource base and future of this country?

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that question. In fact, I have followed that line of reasoning myself, particularly as far as reforestation is concerned, with the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Many of the particular proposals to which the Hon. Member referred would have, shall we say, a short life expectancy in as much as they would be seasonal. Now, I did point out that the proposal to put the young people in the Armed Forces is not a panacea, nor is it the answer to all the problems concerning youth unemployment. It is aimed primarily at those who have already been accepted into the Armed Forces, those who wanted to join and have been accepted. But that would be for a full-time job.

Now, what I think the Hon. Member is getting at, and I agree with him, is that reforestation can be done, particularly under such programs as the Community Development Program. For instance, if in the Hon. Member's constituency there is an area which needs reforestation, I cannot see why the Hon. Member himself would not communicate with the Minister, as I have done regarding my own constituency, and say that we need a particular program and we need to employ youth. I also happen to know that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has spent something like $100 million in 1982 for youth employment alone, and he has already asked for more. This is in reply again to the Hon. Member, who is not interested in youth but just likes to ask silly questions, even though he did ask how much is of this money going to go for youth. I can tell you it is going to be more than it was last year.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, the devotion of the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) to youth employment is well known in our caucus. In her remarks she alluded to two programs which I would like to hear a little more about. One is the program which had to do with youth helping older people in her particular riding, and the second was the proposal put forward in discussions with U.S. Congressmen. She alluded to these in her talk and I would like more information, as I am sure most Hon. Members would. So if she can address herself to those two programs, I would be most appreciative.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member. There are several programs now in place in individual ridings. We have not hidden the models. As a matter of fact, on several occasions I have invited my colleagues who are interested in youth proposals to get in touch with me, and we would give them the model.

• (1640)

In my riding, under the Community Development Program, we managed to hire nine people, of whom six were youngsters, usually high school drop-outs, and the three others were unemployed skilled workers—a carpenter, a painter and a general handyman. They taught their skills to the six youths. Once the kids learned the skills we sent them out into the community to help low-income people. In a year and a half we trained 21 kids up to apprenticeship standard. Two of them have started their own business and are now employing others, several have been employed by other people in the private sector and some have gone for further training. The beauty of this is, that at the same time, 87 homes of low-income people, usually senior citizens, were renovated. They only had to bear the cost of materials, not labour. This can be done in any riding with the same characteristics as mine.

The other program was a high school drop-out program, to encourage the individual kids to return to school. As far as the conservation program is concerned, I would invite all Hon. Members who are interested in youth to get in touch with the Kennedy Memorial Institute in Boston, which has adopted some of our programs.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, what we have established from the remarks of the Hon. Member for York South-Weston (Mrs. Appolloni) is that she is willing to borrow $19 billion. She lists subject areas which no Member of any political Party would doubt are good areas in which to spend money, but she does not have any idea how much money is required.

I want to ask the Hon. Member if she could name one bank that would give a loan of at least $1,000 to a company or person if that bank did not know what the money was to be used for.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, if I were to give a factual and detailed answer to that question, the Minister of Finance would indeed deserve to lose his job because he would have broken Cabinet secrecy. I have been careful to say from the beginning that I am not privy to his calculations. All I can do as a responsible MP is to put forward suggestions, not to sit and beef constantly about unemployment, but to give him some concrete suggestions about how to get over the problem. I wish, and I am sure the people of Canada wish, that certain Members of this Chamber would spend less time on partisan jibes but would do their homework and help their constituents. Perhaps if we all did that there would be less unemployment and less need to borrow in the first place.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to propose the following amendment to the Bill before us:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that", and substituting therefore the following words:

—Bill C-143, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof, particularly the subject matter of the clauses pertaining to borrowing authority for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs which is instructed to consider the impact of the subject matter of the said clauses on unemployment in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair would like to express its gratitude to the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) who was so kind as to advise the Table officers and myself before putting that amendment. That has given us time to examine the precedents and rulings relevant to this case.

I should like to refer the Hon. Member to Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice, Nineteenth Edition, at p. 517 where the following passage appears:

In the case of bills referred to standing or select committees, an instruction can be moved as soon as the bill has been committed, or subsequently.

The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River will recognize the difficulty, which is that the amendment he proposes adds certain instructions to the Committee. According to our precedents, those instructions cannot be given to a committee until such time as second reading stage has been completed.

Again I thank the Hon. Member for taking the trouble to consult with the Table officers and the Chair. In order to facilitate his consideration of an amendment, perhaps I could be of assistance, although it is obviously up to the Hon. Member to decide what he wants to do. I could suggest to him that if he were to simply drop the last phrase beginning with the word "which is instructed to consider" et cetera, then the amendment could be found to be in order.

Mr. Skelly: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the intent of the advance notice was to determine whether the phrase at the end of the amendment was acceptable. I am more than willing to delete that particular phrase so that the amendment would end with the words "—to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In that case I will put the motion to the House in that fashion. It is moved by Mr. Skelly and seconded by Mr. Young (Beaches):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that", and substituting therefore the following words:

—Bill C-143, an Act to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be not now read a second time but that the subject matter thereof, particularly the subject matter of the clauses pertaining to borrowing authority for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984, be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The proposed amendment is found to be in order and is open for debate.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, presentation of the Bill before us which seeks authority to borrow a substantial amount of money, is a very common procedure in the House of Commons. It is almost a knee-jerk reaction in which we find the House being presented with a blank cheque. Sometimes the Government makes certain gestures toward the provision of information about the need for borrowing. In each case that we have been faced with, the amounts are larger and larger while the information is scarcer and scarcer each time the Bill comes before us.

I recall that when the last Bill was before us we engaged in a very intensive debate about the matter. At that time the other Party with whom we share the Opposition benches informed the Canadian people that they had won a great victory by not signing the blank cheque right away. Eventually, however, they did sign half the cheque, and after a couple of days of debate they signed the last half of the cheque.

What we have now is a situation where debate in the House of Commons winds up being largely a matter of knee-jerk reaction. Many Members of the House believe that this is a very substantial amount of money to be borrowed and that certainly, prior to giving support in principle at second reading stage, it would be better if we were to refer the question of borrowing to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I hope that this amendment will be accepted by the majority of Members in the House.

There have been allusions to the causes of the economic dilemma that faces us today. I think it is fairly clear why the Government has to borrow. We are in a very severe recession in which Government revenues have definitely dropped, Government programs have been strained to the nth degree in an attempt to support individuals in difficult times. These programs have not been doing a great job in supporting those individuals, given the unemployment figures, bankruptcy figures, the erosion of the social institutions mentioned by the previous speaker such as the university community and technical schools which are all faced with very severe cutbacks in teaching staff, increase in pupil-teacher ratios, class size and lack of material.

Let me just digress for a moment. I would point out that a Dean of an Engineering Faculty to whom I was speaking, responsible at the time for instruction of post-graduate students in electrical engineering, told me that recently his class sizes had risen to the point where he found it very difficult to teach. He was in a fairly lucky position with tenure and a fairly reasonable salary. He found himself well above the other members of the faculty, especially the new ones, in terms of security and salary. At the time the university was increasing class sizes dramatically. The university was refusing to provide appropriate equipment to keep its post-graduate students on the leading edge of technology which would enable them to leave as competent, trained engineers. The junior faculty was being siphoned off quickly into industry where the benefits and salaries were much higher and where the opportunities to improve and develop their professional capacity was much greater. Largely through federal Government and provincial Governments' restraint activities the university faculties were being gutted. Once we have caused harm to the students it will have a life-long effect on those individuals. If we gut our universities now it will be a decade or more before they can recover.

The motion before us this afternoon proposes that we take a serious look at the implications of this borrowing Bill. Maybe we can determine some of the directions in which we should be moving to spend that money when we determine what amount of money is appropriate. There is an enormous failure on the part of the Government today. There is enormous incompetence on the part of the Government today. No one argues that we have not been drawn into a deep world-wide recession, from which Canada cannot be excluded. But unfortunately the negative, social and economic impacts on this country have been compounded by an incompetent Liberal Government.

Let me outline one example of the complete incompetence of this Government as it relates to the National Energy Program. In 1980, during the election, the subject of energy and the cost of energy was widely talked about. We heard how we were going to develop security of supply and how we were going to be protected from high price energy. These were made the topics of the election campaign. Certain commitments were made by this Liberal Government on those topics. Basically, Government revenues were to be enhanced, the price of fuel was going to be controlled and ultimately the megaprojects would be the economic salvation of this country. All of that was embodied in what was called the National Energy Program in 1980. We heard the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who was then the Minister of Energy, making firm commitments in the House of Commons about the benefits that Canadians would receive. We heard that the megaprojects would put us back to work. The NEP would be the engine which fuelled the economy, supported other businesses, created employment and took away regional disparity. The promises went on and on. The National Energy Program was also to be the salvation of what had been in the past incompetent Liberal Governments. These Liberal Governments wound up with enormous deficits and eroded the strength of Government programs. Ultimately, the National Energy Program was to be an enormous cash grab by the federal Government shared with the Provinces and the producing companies, which would solve all our economic problems. The revenue figure used by the Government was $65 billion. It is very difficult to get one's head around that amount of money. It certainly pales the deficit.

We also talked about the possibility of Atlantic Canada becoming financially secure, energy self-sufficient and spinning off the results of industrial and economic development into the twenty-first century. We were told that all this would create opportunities in areas of the country that traditionally had great difficulties.

It was not too long after that that Bill C-48, the legislative vehicle that implemented the National Energy policy, was rammed through this House by closure. It was rammed through committee. It was a very difficult and complicated piece of legislation. The Minister told us, "We do not want to spell out the details. We want you, legislators, to give me, the Minister of Energy, discretionary power," and the amount of discretion in that Bill was enormous. We saw the Government ram that legislation through the House. It put the National Energy Program into place. It was hardly implemented when its collapse became evident to most people.

Ultimately, we wound up in 1982 with what was called the National Energy Program Update. It became obvious that the original projections, the megaprojects, had collapsed. That engine to fire the economy to assist us in recovery from recession, collapsed because of the incompetence of the Government.

The Government had made a quick snatch at revenue in the amount of $65 billion. But in the 1982 Energy Update it changed its projections. The projections became an amount between $25 billion and $30 billion. The Government wound up again confounded with problems of assistance to regional developments because of the collapse of particular projects or the delaying of them.

Again, we come to face what we have today, a request to borrow $19 billion. One of the reasons we are faced with this borrowing, the particular depth of recession and the harm caused by it, is the incompetence of the Government. What is that incompetence? The Government took a terrible risk. It risked the industrial and economic future of this country in one economic sector. The Government threw the dice on one particular sector, that of energy. The Government made a snatch at a goose it thought was going to lay a golden egg. But eventually it found there was nothing there. Instead, the Government placed Canadians and the whole economy of our nation in the hands of OPEC, a cartel which was controlling the world supply of oil and its price. Unfortunately for the Government of Canada, the OPEC cartel collapsed. OPEC was not a platform upon which this Government could build a sound economy in Canada. But that is very traditional with the Liberals. Liberal Governments in this country have looked for the economic salvation of Canada in the export of raw, unprocessed natural resources. At one time it was coal and unprocessed base metals that were being shipped to the Japanese, and other world markets. In the future it looks as though we may be shipping unprocessed forest products to the United States. The same will be true of the export of raw energy resources, natural gas and oil. We talked about 900 years of natural gas and 900 years of oil around a decade ago. Suddenly that wheel turned back and Canada has a shortage of supply. But now we are being told again that we have a very heavy surplus. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, we have been put through this exercise one too many times.

It is interesting to note that the National Energy Program collapsed. This was the industrial sell-out for raw materials in Canada. The Update has collapsed. The most recent events in the collapse of the National Energy Program Update were seen in the total collapse of the megaprojects. There are no jobs to be created in that area nor any stimulus for Canadian business.

We look to the collapse of the Canada-Newfoundland Energy Agreement. We can take no comfort in the fact that the Appeal Court of Newfoundland has ruled in favour of the the federal Government of Canada. At some point in time officials of this federal Government will have to sit down with officials of the Province of Newfoundland, play fair ball and bargain in good faith. Unless this Government is prepared to give the Government of Newfoundland a fair and even partnership in the development of that resource, we will see the same kinds of economic problems emerge. Fairness was preached about so much in the National Energy Program. That fairness will be put off for decades. The Government of Newfoundland simply asks for an opportunity to manage that resource in such a way that a portion of the $100 billion projected from Hibernia will stay in Newfoundland. But the only way that can occur is if the people of Newfoundland have some say in the management, the development and the opportunity to pace that development so that industries in Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada are to share in the benefits of resource development.

History is very clear. What happened to the majority of jobs created by the North Sea oil? They wound up in the United States. The collapse of the megaprojects is one thing. It is time the federal Government came back to the table with Newfoundland, put aside the matter of who owns the resource and looked at how we as Canadians will share the benefits, thus providing an opportunity for the people of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada to pull themselves out of economic dilemmas they have faced for so much of their history. It could also provide an industrial and an economic base that will support them after the oil is gone.

We look at the collapse of revenue. The National Energy Program Update dealt with certain recovery measures that were meant to get the federal Government into an acceptable revenue position. Perhaps we could look here for some of the funds for programs for young people that the previous speaker spoke of, as well as for some programs for the unemployed that would help get some economic initiatives rekindled.

Unfortunately, that Update to the National Energy Program has collapsed again. We have seen the price of energy on the international market fall to the point where oil will likely replace natural gas. The Government is trying to sell enormous volumes of natural gas. The National Energy Board provided for the sale of enormous volumes of natural gas into the United States. In order to stick to the Government's promise to keep the domestic price of gas at 65 per cent of the equivalent price of oil, the Government has dropped $300 million in revenue. From this type of poor planning we have seen a drop in projected revenues from $65 billion to $30 billion on the first update. We have seen a drop of $300 million in natural gas earnings alone. There has been a tremendous loss in projected revenues ever since the National Energy Program Update in 1982. This brings us back to the collapse of the energy projects and the collapse of the Canada-Newfoundland energy agreement. Now we have the collapse of the revenue projections.

We talked a great deal about fairness throughout both of those phoney energy policy reports. There were errors in Government judgment in regard to the economic and industrial recovery for Canada.

As recently as last Thursday, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) stated in Vancouver that one of the Government's main commitments was to build pipelines to allow the people of Atlantic Canada to capitalize on natural gas as an alternative energy source to oil and to allow the people of Vancouver Island to have natural gas as an alternative. There are no developed alternatives to oil on Vancouver Island at present. There was a commitment of $150 million to build that pipeline and pay the conversion costs on Vancouver Island. Last Thursday, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources appeared to have scrapped that plan. I and many Canadians would appreciate it, in a spirit of fair play, hearing from Minister in the House for the sake of the people of Vancouver Island whether that gas pipeline is to go ahead. He indicated that it would not because a review of the costs proved them to be exorbitant.

The National Energy Board came out with a proposal about a week and a half ago to increase the export of natural gas primarily to the United States market. It represents an enormous increase in volume. I believe the rationale behind that decision is unacceptable. There are certainly problems with it. But the federal Government has left itself open to blackmail from the industry which tells the Government to either sell the gas or they will shut down. On the other hand, the Americans are pushing us by saying they will not take our gas unless the Government drives down the prices, substantially. We are faced with the prospect of Canadians paying billions in incentives to drill for gas. The companies pay about six cents, and the Canadian taxpayer pays about 94 cents on the dollar for the risk of exploring for that new and expensive oil and gas. Yet the Government is prepared to sell enormous volumes of cheaper gas to the American market which cannot even absorb that volume. Canadians will find themselves further behind the eight-ball as a result of paying these enormous incentive grants, while the Government's revenues from energy are greatly reduced on sales of a very valuable resource which the Government is prepared to give to the United States at sale prices.

Let us consider the economic logic of this plan in which the Americans end up with cheap energy to produce cheaper goods that will compete with our high priced goods in a very competitive world market. The economic logic behind the cheap gas export fails completely. The failed logic of the National Energy Program has caused the Government to push cheap supplies of energy into the United States that will displace our manufacturers and our goods on the world market.

Probably the most amazing aspect of the National Energy Board decisions was the Dome Petroleum proposal to sell liquefied natural gas to the Japanese. This is an incredible situation in which a Canadian Board and the Canadian Government would allow a company like Dome to feed natural gas into the Japanese market. The Japanese market which is going soft. The Japanese are cutting back on orders of coal and natural gas. The formula by which Dome is to sell that gas to the Japanese is based on the U.S. prices. If the Government caves in to the demands of the United States to lower the price of our export gas sales, then our gas to the Japanese could easily go down. The price is already so low that when one takes into account the cost of delivering the gas from Prince Rupert, the liquefication, the transfer to Japan, and the regasification the return to Canadians will make the exercise uneconomical. In reality, we may discover that Dome will have to be bailed out from another misguided project.

There are serious concerns, even concerns expressed by the National Energy Board. I think it is time for the Cabinet to step in and put a stop to these illogical projects. We must develop a much more sound approach to the management of our economy and the development of energy as a rational, integrated part of industrial and economic development in Canada. Instead, the Government's approach has simply been to try to snatch at a goose that they thought was laying a golden egg.

These problems originally began when the Government's National Energy Program of 1980 failed miserably to develop an economic strategy for Canada. That program was patterned after the same miserable failures of past Liberal Governments' proposals to export our unprocessed resources. This is what the Liberal Government has traditionally depended upon. It has failed to develop an effective and broadly based industrial strategy with a firm foundation that is developed by Canadians and will provide employment opportunities.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources should come to the House and give us a new update to the National Energy Program. Furthermore, when we come to deal with the budget of the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, perhaps we will find some direction which will show that the Government has finally become aware of the real problems that confront this country and its economy. The Government should go back to square one, develop an industrial strategy that will put Canadians back to work, and that will not suffer from the ups and downs of an OPEC-managed world energy market.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, this is a most unusual piece of legislation that we are now discussing. The only reason that the Government of Canada is even able to contemplate this kind of barehanded effrontery, this raid on the Treasury of the people of Canada, is for reasons that we can see here when we look around us today. In this House of Commons Chamber we do not have one reporter in the gallery. Apparently they do not care about what is to be said about an attempt by the Government to borrow $19 billion, which is the largest amount for which any Government ever attempted to get borrowing authority. They do not seem to care that only $5 billion of that money is for the fiscal year we are in now and that $14 billion is a barefaced grab without any adequate explanation of what it will be needed for next year.

We see on the benches opposite us that Members are so concerned and worried that we have a total representation here of nine, half of whom are Cabinet Ministers. Of course, they are the ones who organized and initiated this grab. They are the ones who are responsible for what we see before us.

What is this all about? We have an admission, again by the Government, the Department of Finance and the Minister, that they are totally and utterly incompetent. On November 12, 1981, just 15 months ago, we were told that the deficit for this year, which ends at the end of March, would be $10.5 billion. That was to be our deficit. All the economists in the Government gave this as their best estimate for this year.

We are now just 15 months past the date of that estimate and the deficit, we are now told, is $27.2 billion. That is two and one-half times what we were told 15 months ago.

The predecessor to the present Minister came to the House on June 28, 1982, just eight months ago, and revised his figure. He said the deficit would be $19.6 billion for this year. That estimate was only eight months ago and he was wrong by $7.6 billion, so far, as compared with the estimate made eight months ago. The present Minister of Finance came to the House on October 27, just four months ago, and told us the deficit would be $23.6 billion. Four months later he is just as uninformed or as deliberately dishonest as his predecessor when he gives us his estimate of a $27.2 billion deficit in the year ending on March 31.

The same Minister has made equally inaccurate statements concerning borrowing requirements, what are called the financial requirements, most of which the Government must borrow. Fifteen months ago, the Government said it would be $6.6 billion. Eight months ago, it changed that to $17.1 billion. Then, four months ago, it changed it to $22.2 billion, and today it is telling the House that the financial requirements this year amount to $26.1 billion. That is four times what it estimated just 15 months ago.

In the whole history of Canada, such incompetence or monumental dishonesty has never been exhibited by the people who are responsible for guarding the funds of Canada. However, there are hundreds and thousands of economists. Are we to believe that this is the best kind of job they could have done over the last 15 months? This Minister has no credibility, none. He is just as bad if not worse than his predecessor.

What has the Government said about those deficits during all this course of time? On November 12, 1981, the former Minister of Finance, who is now the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), said that the deficit for the fiscal year 1981-82 would be lower than the $9.8 billion he projected a year before. In fact, the deficit last year turned out to be $13.6 billion. He was $3.8 billion wrong when he gave the estimate on November 12, 1981, for the fiscal year which was to end four months later. Such incompetence is unbelievable.

Then the former Minister, in regard to the Government's policy, said, "I believe we must reduce our deficit and our borrowing requirements substantially". That is what this prevaricator said was the policy of the Government on November 12, 1981. He said, "We must reduce our deficit and our borrowing requirements substantially", but instead of that, the deficit has tripled and the borrowing requirements have quadrupled. Despite that statement of policy, the Government is either completely and utterly dishonest or completely and utterly incompetent. Never in the history of this country has such incompetence been seen—

Mr. Blenkarn: Or both.

Mr. Crosbie: —or dishonesty, or both, been seen. Then we heard his statement of June 28, 1982. Listen to this, Mr. Speaker, in light of the background I have given. He said:

> The Government cannot responsibly add to the deficit. It has to reallocate resources. The action plan will therefore be carried out within the framework of current monetary and fiscal policy.

He said that at a time when he estimated the deficit to be $19.6 billion, and it has now risen $7.6 billion. He said, "The Government cannot responsibly add to the deficit", but it has added $7.6 billion to it now. The Government is condemned by its own words, put in writing and printed just eight months ago.

He said:

> My purpose tonight is to offer Canadians a way to end the recession and to speed our progress toward recovery through immediate action.

What a joke! Tell that to the 1,600,000 Canadians who are now unemployed. I want to compare that with the statement of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) today, that creature who refused to demonstrate any sense of moral responsibility by resigning because of the patronage deal into which he entered with Mr. Gillespie, as we found out in the last several days. Concerning the fiscal year 1983-84, which begins in one and a half months, or six weeks, he said:

> —it is too early at this stage to forecast what the financial requirements will be.

This Minister cannot forecast, a month and a half before the fiscal year starts, what the deficit might be, yet he comes into the House and blindly asks us to approve a $14 billion increase in borrowing authority. Can it be creditable, that he would attempt that? He can only attempt it because there is no interest. No one cares. No one gives a damn about our financial position. No one understands what a deficit is. No one appears to worry, and the press are off, of course, chasing rainbows or moths or some other diversion, and are not following the course of debate in the House. We in the House might as well be eliminated, done away with, come in here and go through the Question Period for one hour a day and close down the rest of the nonsense that we are in the process of going through now.

Mr. Malone: That is because Trudeau killed Parliament.

Mr. Crosbie: I showed Hon. Members what his predecessor said in June, and today the Minister of Finance said this, and I quote from page 11:

> The Government of Canada remains committed to its longer term goal of systematic restraint of its expenditures as a proportion of the GNP—

Do Hon. Members know what the Government is up to now? It is now spending 26 per cent of the Gross National Product.

Let me say to you Canadians out there who create the goods and the services and the wealth, that they are taking and spending 26 per cent on you. That is what they are up to, yet they have the gall to tell you that their goal is systematic restraint of its expenditures as a proportion of the GNP.

The Minister went on to say, "We remain committed to the systematic reduction of the deficit as well".

What a tissue of lies. The Government is not dedicated to the systematic reduction of the deficit. It is not committed to any reduction of the deficit. It has risen from $10.5 billion 15 months ago to $27.2 billion today.

What is one of the main reasons we have been in this mess over the last several years when we know that there has been a recession and depression? The fact is that we had nothing behind us. The Government had trapped itself, had its hands tied, because for all of the previous years it had prepared deficits. So at a time when Canada really needed deficit financing, these fools, these charlatans, these scoundrels, had spent away our substance. So the deficits could no longer be stimulated.

I have in my hand a table which shows what our deficits have been for the last 10 or 12 years. Beginning with 1972-73, when the great genius, John Turner, was Minister of Finance, there was a deficit of $999 million. Every year the deficit became worse, until the end of March, 1982, when it was $13.6 billion. Over those ten years, when things were relatively not too bad in Canada, the Government incurred $77 billion in deficits. Therefore, when we came to the part of the financial cycle where deficit financing was needed, the Government had already wrecked our system. It could no longer stimulate. Now that we are up to $27 billion, we are receiving no stimulation from that $27 billion. The Government is even suggesting that the deficit might be higher than that next year. In terms of the United States, which is ten times larger than our country, it would amount to a deficit of $270 odd billion. Those are the kind of straits we are in.

Anyone interested in the deficit discussion should read the book by Michael Walker of the Fraser Institute on balancing the budget. First, I refer to page 18, which states:

> The consequences of Government deficits, therefore, depend on how the Government chooses to finance the shortfall. If it creates an excessive money supply, it will promote inflation. If it opts for the alternative of issuing debt (borrowing), it will raise interest rates above the level they would otherwise have achieved and, in the process, crowd out private expenditures. The consequences of the latter effect are likely to be deep and long lasting. The reason is because of the nature of private and public expenditures.

The only way the Government can finance these fantastic deficits is by having an excessive money supply which we all know leads to inflation, by issuing its own bonds or by borrowing, and this will drive up interest rates and crowd out the private sector which should be encouraged today. Our only hope lies in the private sector.

What is the Government doing? It is asking us to authorize the borrowing of $19 billion. On page 20 it states:

When a Government issues a bond, it merely defers taxes or the printing of money. In the end, the deficit must be paid for either by taxing or money creation.

Now let me tell you Canadians who are listening to me out there, there is $19 billion, but the Government wants us to authorize today—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member should address his remarks to the Chair, please.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I do not mind addressing my remarks to you, but frankly, I am not talking to you. I am talking to the Canadian people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Standing Orders provide that Hon. Members who are recognized for the purpose of making a speech must address their remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Crosbie: You had better believe it, Mr. Speaker. That is what I am doing, directing my remarks to you, but I hope the people of Canada are listening because I do not expect you or anyone else from the Government side to really pay any attention.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Would the Hon. Member resume his seat, please. The Chair has called the Hon. Member for St. John's West to order. Surely the Hon. Member should not comment on that ruling, which is substantiated by Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

• (1720)

Mr. Crosbie: Quite right, Mr. Speaker. When the Government asks us to authorize the borrowing of $19 billion it is asking us to authorize the Government to issue bonds. All we are doing is to defer $19 billion in taxes because the Canadian people will have to pay back this $19 billion through the Government. The Government can only pay it back in the future by taxing the public for $19 billion. So what we are doing now is to defer taxing the Canadian people today and taking $19 billion from them today, which we are going to put off on them or on their children for five years or ten years' time. That is all we are doing. We are deferring taxes, or we are printing money. If the Government does it by printing money then we are into an inflationary spiral that will never end which is going to finish this country, and its productive resources. This deficit can only be paid for by taxing or creating money.

Then the Government goes on to say this:

For this reason it is most useful to regard Government deficits simply as deferred taxes.

The Government deficit is simply a deferred tax. It has to be paid back. The deficit of $27.2 billion that this Government has so far this year has to be paid back by the Canadians who are out there in this great country, and we hope some of them are watching this debate. The taxpayers have to pay it back or their children have to pay it back, plus interest. The situation today is that one of every four dollars that this Government spends is now being spent on interest payments, not for anything productive but for the debts that they have incurred in the last 10 or 12 years. One of every three dollars of the revenue they are taking in, your taxes and mine, is going out in interest payments. One of three of the revenue dollars is for interest payments and one of four of expenditure dollars is for interest payments. The difference is made up by their borrowing. Does no one care? Do they not see where this leads to? This may get the Government through another year or two, or four or five years, but this country is going to hell in a hand basket and it is a Liberal hand basket, and they are getting us there much faster than anybody ever thought would have been possible just a few years ago.

This Minister of Finance a few months ago said—and this shows how good a forecaster he is—that unemployment would decline and reach a level slightly above 11 per cent of the labour force by the end of the year. In fact, the rate was 12.8 per cent. We have 1,598,000 people out of work. When he brings his budget in, Mr. Speaker, we cannot believe a word he says. We cannot put any credence in the estimates he gives. The record of the last three years is unbelievable. The Government has abandoned any strategy of deficit management, it has lost control of the spending and its revenue, it cannot predict from month to month what the deficit might be, it cannot give us any kind of a reliable or meaningful forecast, and it now asks us to give it a blank cheque for another borrowing of $19 billion.

The Minister is stalling on his budget. He was going to have a budget in January, then in February and then in March, and now he is not going to have it until April. He says it is because we will not approve his tax Bills that are in the House. It is not for that reason. It is because he does not know what to do. He has no strategy, the Government has no strategy. It does not know what to do to bring about an economic recovery. There is a slight one coming, but not because of this Government. We had got down as far as we could go. He does not know how to reduce unemployment, except perhaps for some frashy little scheme, a temporary job creation on which he might spend a billion or two.

He is drifting, waiting for someone to help him. This Minister of Finance is the great anti-American who brought in the National Energy Program and who is so much against the Americans, this big, tough guy who does not care about the United States of America. He is going to show them where to get off in his energy policy. Why, he is waiting for the United States of America to save him. The only thing that can save him is Ronald Reagan. The only thing that could save the economy here in Canada is a big expansion and economic recovery in the United States led by Ronald Reagan. That is how tough he is, and that is the sagacity that this Cabinet Minister has.

Mr. Speaker, I for one am going to vote against this Bill. It is an atrocity to bring this before the House of Commons. I was struck today by two points made in an editorial in the Globe and Mail. They say that the amount that the Government is now asking us to give them borrowing authority for, $19 billion, is the size of the entire budget of the Government of Canada in 1973-74. The Government of Canada only spent a total of $19.3 billion nine years ago. Today they want from us authorization to borrow in one fell swoop more than they spent in the whole period of 1973-74. They want us to give them the right to borrow $19 billion now, which was the entire net debt of this country from Confederation to 1974-75. From Sir John A. MacDonald to the great Trudeau, we only had a debt of $19.2 billion, and now the great Trudeau wants us to authorize the Government to borrow more than we had in the total net debt of this country from 1867 to 1973-74.

It is no wonder that we are going to balk at that. It is no wonder that we are going to do everything we can to defeat this. There is no salvation for Canada in greater and greater deficits, none. That is the way to totally bankrupt this country and take away any chance we have of recovery. We have another two years before this bunch of poltroons and cowards calls an election. They still have time, unfortunately, to wreck our economy completely, and the road to greater deficit is the road to ruination for this country. The deficit is already far, far larger than anyone ever thought that we could handle.

So the Government who does not know how big its deficit is going to be next year, according to the Minister, who does not know what they are going to have to borrow next year but just wants us to give him a simple $14 billion authorization that might carry him over until the early summer, he says.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Government has lost all credibility—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, order.

Mr. Crosbie: My time is coming to an end. We are going to oppose this Bill which is the worst Bill, filled with nothing but—

Mr. Flis: You have no respect for the Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: I have no respect for the Government or anyone who sits with it, who have put forward the most rotten—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, order. Questions and comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Vegreville.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure—

Mr. Crosbie: Come on, stand up and ask a question.

An Hon. Member: Is he running for the leadership or not?

Mr. Crosbie: You poor devils are wishing you had the chance, that is all.

Mr. Fisher: We should all switch and join the ranks of the—

Mr. Crosbie: There is not enough room for you in this Party. We are not taking any rotten apples over here.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, as I said, it is always a pleasure to follow my good colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). I think it is quite clear that had the economic and financial levers been under his control this country would be in a lot better shape today, there is no question about that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cosgrove: Thank God for the voters.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Bill that we are dealing with here, Bill C-143, represents a clear example of this Government's failure to manage in a competent and effective fashion. There is no question about that. My friend, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) smiles and snickers. He does not mind the imposition of a $19 billion tax load on the poor people of Canada. There is no question, their whole approach to this is unbelievable and the consequences are unbearable.

It is the largest borrowing Bill in the history of Canada. Nineteen billion dollars equals, as my colleague indicated, the total amount of federal Government spending in the year 1973-74. When I came to this House in 1968, the total Government spending at that time was something in the order of $12 billion. Today, in the next fiscal year, it is going to be something in the order of $88 billion. When you look at this $19 billion borrowing for a period of six months, it is $3 billion a month, over $100 million a day. When we look at that, we see the Government is spending in excess of $10 million an hour. If we look at it in terms of the 1979-80 period, Government spending has increased by 66 per cent since then. The Government is sinking into a muskeg, something we have a bit of in the northern part of our Province. That is where a good portion of our oil and minerals are found. It is in a quagmire of muskeg and will never bail itself out. It shows no leadership. It asks Canadians to practise restraint.

• (1730)

Mr. Cosgrove: Look who is talking about leadership.

Mr. Mazankowski: There is certainly no leadership over there and certainly no morality, judging by the performance of the front bench opposite today and on previous occasions. People expect moral and honest leadership from a Government, not the kind of sleazy leadership we are getting from that Minister and other Ministers. They ask the old age pensioners and families with small children to exercise restraint while they spend money as if it were going out of style.

What is alarming is not only that the Government has been overcome with a deficit psychology but that it has convinced many of its Liberal friends in the business community that there is nothing wrong with the perpetuation of continuing high deficits.

Their good friend, Ian Sinclair, the former chairman of CP, was put to work on the six and five program. It is interesting to note that he advocates an increase in the deficit, spending our way out of our difficulties. I find that alarming. If we really face the consequences of the kind of deficit we are dealing with today, we would have to increase taxes by roughly 40 per cent in order to balance the budget. That is impossible. It is irresponsible for a Government which has continually escalated a deficit.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West went through the itemized performance. Since 1968 we have had one balanced budget. In the year 1969-70, there was a $493 million surplus. Since that time we have had escalations of deficit financing, to the point where our gross debt is now in the order of $135 billion to $140 billion and interest costs alone are $17 billion annually. What a tremendous imposition that is upon the productive capacity of this nation.

In order to finance the deficit we either have to borrow or print more money. We are selling out Canada and putting an imposition on future generations. The young people of this country will be faced with the burden of servicing the debt and, hopefully, paying it off some day. Quite frankly, we are spending beyond our means, and have been doing so for some time.

Massive Government borrowing on the scale of $19 billion has very serious consequences in terms of our whole economic environment. It will threaten the recovery and has the potential of fueling inflationary expectations, which can cause interest rates to rise again. There is a clear possibility that we could repeat the cycle of 1981-82 which was an economic disaster.

We face the prospect of crowding out the private sector. The Government now takes 60 per cent of the long-term capital needs generated in this country. That has the effect of crowding out the private sector which we hope will be the main engine of economic recovery. The Government will need to borrow in order to create the economic activity and jobs that we need.

In 1982 the federal Government accounted for 61 per cent of the net of new security issues. If that is not crowding out the private sector, I do not know what is. We seem to be compounding the errors of the seventies. We are on the road to repeating the trends we followed in the seventies. If we analyze the last ten years and look at some of the structural defects and our failure to recognize and deal with them, we see that we failed to read the signals of low productivity. We failed to encourage modernization, re-tooling, individual equity investment, improved labour relations, improved skilled trades and co-ordinating the skilled trades with job demands. We fail to encourage new and successful ventures.

Mr. Axworthy: That's nonsense.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is not nonsense. You need only pick up a newspaper to see that the jobs going begging are for skilled trades. This Minister and his predecessor did not address that issue. What he says is balderdash and he knows it.

Over the last ten years we failed to recognize the winners and to support new ventures. Rather, we have been propping up the losers. Through successive Government intervention we have either killed the enterprise spirit or lulled it into a false sense of security. In the course of that, the private sector was discouraged. We relied upon borrowing and spending our way out of our difficulties. The results were high deficits, debased currency, high interest rates, outflow of investment dollars and shattered confidence. We now have an economy that rates 24 out of the 24 OECD countries.

When we look at the trends that are developing in terms of the amounts that all Goverments are taking as a percentage of the GNP, it is frightening. Well in excess of 50 per cent of all goods and services produced in this country is now being expended on some level of Government. When that happens, we not only lose our economic freedom, but our political freedom is threatened as well.

Looking at the reality of the situation, we must address some of the problems facing us today. We must cut back on Government spending. We cannot reduce social assistance programs under the current crisis. Naturally, we cannot reduce the transfer payments. There are some serious structural problems in the economy. We know that we cannot reduce the deficit overnight, but we must be determined. We must develop a psychology of working toward reducing the deficit.

There are many ways in which the extravagance and excessive spending of this Government could be reduced. Let us look at this Government's record in terms of how it treats its friends, such as newly appointed Senator Pitfield. We learned the horrendous revelations of the former Minister of Energy in the sweetheart deal arranged for him. With a $25,000 investment, he has the potential of picking up a $750,000 profit, a $30,000 a year salary, plus $600 a day. That is a real sweetheart deal.

We now have the ridiculous Royal commission, which will cost Canadian taxpayers $5,000 a day, of which the chairman will receive up to $925 per day, plus expenses. It is heartening to note that even some Liberal backbenchers find this difficult to smallow. Then we have the 200 per cent increase for CMHC directors, all good, card-carrying Liberals, no question about that. The Government is spending on advertising something in the order of $230 million. While everyone else has been asked to abide by the Government's six and five guidelines, the administrative costs in Government are soaring; 17 per cent over-all between 1981-82 and 1982-83. The administrative costs of the Department of Employment and Immigration increased by 40 per cent, Health and Welfare by 32 per cent, Transport by 20 per cent, and the Department of Supply and Services by 15 per cent. And with respect to the scores of advisory boards, Mr. Speaker, it is rather interesting to look at these boards which have been appointed by this Government with 9, 10, 12 members, some of whom never meet, and some of whom meet once in a while. They are all on some sort of an honorarium—another political pork barrel.

These are some examples of the waste and extravagance and pork barrelling which could be reduced. The Government could then lead and demonstrate by example rather than by its double standard in suggesting to the old age pensioners and the families with small children to bear the brunt of the restraint program.

On the economic side, as well, Mr. Speaker, I believe there are a number of things which have to be done, and have to be done soon. This Government is possessed with its massive intervention in the economic welfare of the country. I believe that we in this country must make a commitment toward a more market-oriented economy. I believe this would do more to restore confidence in the economic domain than anything that has occurred over the last two years. It is the reality of the world, particularly in our new industrialized nations, that we will have to recognize that the free market forces are going to have a greater play in the future.

Second, we should make it very clear to Canadians, and to people throughout the world, that we in Canada are ready and open for business, by removing the obstacles and restraints to investments, both from domestic and foreign sources. There is no question that this country needs capital to create jobs. We should become a haven for investment, rather than a country which is hostile to it. Third, as I said in my speech on the tax Bill the other day, we must simplify our complex, costly and counterproductive tax system. It is regressive. I have not found anyone in Canada who believes we have a good tax system, and if people do not believe we have a good tax system, it should be changed. If it is not changed, the whole integrity of the system can break down. We have regulation piled upon regulation, which does nothing more than frustrate business and individuals. There is clearly an opportunity to engage in a massive regulatory housecleaning. That has to be done in concert with the Provinces, of course. We have the study by the Economic Council of Canada which introduced some 66 recommendations, 25 of which were directed at the transportation industry, but nothing has really been done in that area. I believe we have to face the facts, Mr. Speaker, that surely we have disproven and discredited that utopian ideal that we can plan and regulate everything to perfection. Let us get on with the job. Let us unleash the entrepreneurial spirit in this country. The enterprising spirit, Mr. Speaker, will be the main engine of growth in this country.

Fourth, I am sure that we can remove duplication and reduce the level of Government take, in concert, again, with the Provinces. The former Auditor General of Canada said that he could identify some $5 million-worth of savings just in the area of reducing duplication. That could be done over a three-year period in concert with the two levels of Government. And when you look at the implications of that, you find it would not only save money, but I believe would avoid a lot of frustration and free up the system.

Fifth, rather than picking the winners and the losers through grants and subsidies—and I see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) here. He is a very powerful Cabinet Minister. He can decide which industry goes and which fails, and in what region. He has that power. I hope he uses it with some discretion—surely we should be looking at programs which would allow for the kind of incentive which would allow industries to develop across the board, which would be rewarded for innovation, for advanced technology, for R and D. One-half per cent increase in the level of research and development in this country would produce some 400,000 jobs and would have a tremendous impact upon the industrial heartland of Ontario, in particular. It is the industrial, manufacturing heartland which is really hurting in terms of jobs. There are clearly ways, therefore, in which that can be overcome, through a tax system which would provide tax shelters, incentives, such as the Canadian Stock Ownership Plan, which we introduced, or the Registered Shareholder's Investment Plan.

Sixth, and I have talked about this many times in the House, we have failed to turn our energy advantage in this country into an economic advantage. The National Energy Program has been a disaster. There can be no question about that. It has been proven time and time again. We must move toward oil self-sufficiency as quickly as possible, and we all know that that problem is not as urgent as it was a little earlier. In connection with the energy industry, we have to do something about the petrochemical industry. We have some $6 billion worth of projects on hold in Western Canada. We have a petrochemical industry in Eastern Canada which is probably weeks away from collapsing. That is part and parcel of the whole energy program which must be addressed.

Seventh, we must improve our labour-management relations, and as I said earlier, synchronize and coordinate our skills to mesh more directly with job demands.

Eighth, we must remove those impediments which discourage the enterprising spirit of Canadians. We must encourage individual initiative. We must encourage individual ownership. We must provide incentives to build. We must restore the profit motive. We must revitalize the productive sector and encourage growth and development based upon our natural strength.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, what we must do once again is to renew our commitment towards an economic and political union in this country. Through the National Energy Program and through the constitutional debate, there has been some deep division and disharmony which has been generated throughout this country. We must get Governments working together rather than against each other and against the private sector. We must do this for the common good. We must create a climate where we are building through co-operation rather than frustrating and destroying through confrontation. This country has tremendous potential, Mr. Speaker. It can once again be a proud and vibrant nation. But we must harness the creative and entrepreneurial spirit of our people. I submit to you, Sir, that the key to building this country and setting it on its proper course, is to allow people to be set free, allow them to be free to grow and to build in a climate where Government serves the people rather than people serving the Government.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the words of my hon. friend, as I always am. I find his words carry rationality with them. However, in a good part of his speech, the framework of his speech seemed to be that the free market system should be allowed to move forward under its own driving force, with which I have a great deal of sympathy. There were some parts in his speech, however, which, I believe, tended to contradict that, and I wondered if he would like to comment on two particular aspects. First, with respect to the energy industry, the words used were, "We have to coordinate the energy industry to make sure that the petrochemical industry and the oil industry are all coordinated and running well together." Is the word "we" in reference to Government and, if so, does that not say there is some kind of central planning of the entire petrochemical and petroleum industry? The next statement was that we have to co-ordinate and manage the manpower skills and needs of the country. Is he not saying that we, the Government, have to determine which skills are important and which needs are going to be met? If so, does that not fly in the face of the whole free market philosophy he puts forward?

• (1750)

Mr. Mazankowski: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. If I used the word "co-ordinate" or "manage" I left the wrong impression, because the fact of the matter is that before the National Energy Program we had a healthy oil and petrochemical industry in this country. Since the NEP, we have neither. What I am saying is that the effect of the NEP not only destroyed the oil industry as we know it, but it is also playing havoc with the petrochemical industry. What is really happening is the heavy up-front taxes—well, I will wait until the Member is prompted by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who should have this problem resolved by now rather than sitting on it.

The fact of the matter is that because of the heavy up-front taxes on the feedstock of petrochemicals, we now find ourselves in a situation where we are non-competitive in world markets.

As to manpower policies, the federal Government is the main author of economic policy and immigration policy, so it is in a better position to determine what the needs are, what the skills are, and the number of people coming to major centres like Toronto or Montreal. So I am suggesting it has a better opportunity to provide leadership and direction than any other level of Government. It is the author of economic policy, of immigration policy. Well, I may be treading in the provincial domain, but I think there has to be better co-operation and co-ordination in matching the skills with the demands.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the oil and petrochemical industry, what role would the Hon. member say is played by the fact that in the free market system oil prices have fallen rather than risen, and what impact has that had on the oil industry? Is it all the fact of the NEP, or indeed has the free market mechanism itself undermined the viability of the oil industry and the petrochemical industry not only here, Mr. Speaker, but in the United States and in the oil-producing, under-developed countries? Has the free market not done a great deal of damage to the industry the Hon. Member has been referring to?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, certainly not. As a matter of fact, the oil consuming countries played into the hands of the OPEC countries because, rather than facing the prospect of accepting high prices for energy, countries like Canada chose to cushion the effect of the high energy costs. What we did is simply to perpetuate the high prices. Since the United States has deregulated and since there has been conservation and cutbacks in consumption, plus new supplies coming on, the OPEC cartel is crumbling. As a result, it is the marketplace which is really forcing the price of oil down. All we have done, by trying to protect our consumers by putting a very heavy burden on the Treasury, is to protect high prices, and the author of those high prices was OPEC.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to take the opportunity to pose to the Hon. Member some questions. I was surprised during the course of his speech that he demonstrated a singular lack of information or knowledge about what has already taken place. Let me pose these questions partly in a rhetorical way because I am surprised at someone who poses as being so knowledgeable about so many things and yet has so many gaps in his information.

For example, is the Hon. Member aware in his demand for more co-ordination on the manpower side that there is already in place a new system called COPS, which is based on full provincial, business and labour co-operation to designate national occupations based on information from all sources, and that the model has already been developed, a conference held and the system going into place?

I would expect that when the Member speaks he should at least try to base his conclusions on some information, although I know it is the habit of Hon. Members on the other side not to get confused by the facts.

When the Hon. Member makes a ringing call for additional manpower programs, is he aware that his own caucus voted last year for a new National Training Act which has pumped an additional 20 per cent into manpower training programs this year alone. Does he know that just this past month we have put something like $2.5 billion into New Brunswick for a Cadcam system, and other money into the Province of Ontario for Ryerson and 14 other community colleges? Does he know we have put money into the Holland College on Prince Edward Island, and $14 million into the Province of British Columbia, including the riding of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) to provide for new computer technology? In one year's time we have been able to shift the level of high skill training from 25 per cent to 30 per cent in one year under that new National Training Act.

It seemed to me, Mr. Speaker, that it would be interesting to know if the Hon. Member, in making these claims, is simply repeating the words written for him by some Tory caucus speechwriter who is basing his information upon obviously obsolescent and irrelevant material. Or would he like to have the opportunity, which I would be glad to offer him, to have a full briefing on the way in which we have placed manpower policy at the centre of our industrial restructuring, and how we are miles ahead of anything the Tory caucus Research Bureau has ever dreamed of?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it is no wonder this country is in sad shape. The fact of the matter is that this guy over here spots a problem, throws some money at it and walks away. That is the problem. Really, we have more damn programs than we need.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: His alphabetical litany is screwed up as much as the mind of the Minister. You are as stupid as you look.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fisher: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke to give us some idea of how he defines sweetheart deals. I would like to ask him, in light of his own experience with the Grange inquiry, what standards did he use to appoint the counsel and assistant counsel to that Commission? What political Parties did they belong to and how much money did they earn?

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, in the case of the Grange Commission, as in the case of the Dubin Commission, and I think both Commissions did tremendous service to the country, and indeed to the transportation sector, I simply followed the guidelines put in place by the former Liberal administration.

Mr. Fisher: Madam Speaker, then I wonder whether the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) would confirm that the standards used by the prior Liberal Government were acceptable to him, and were high enough in their moral standards so that he would lend his name to them.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Adjournment Debate

Madam Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned:

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House did attend His Honour the Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, His Honour was pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following bill:

Bill C-132, An Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973—Chapter 139.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL REVENUE—GARNISHEEING OF SMALL BUSINESS ACCOUNTS. (B) GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, ten days ago I rose in my place to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I asked him why he would not make a recommendation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to impose a surtax on American potatoes, coming into the market in the lower Fraser Valley and the Greater Vancouver area. From his reply I deduced that there has been a trade-off made between the Canadian and American Governments. The Minister of Agriculture replied that we have problems in trade with the United States. I assume as a result of the problems we have with the United States that the Minister of Agriculture, maybe together with the Minister of Finance, has decided the Canadian producer in Eastern Canada cannot be put in jeopardy with the American market. Therefore, the Government is now willing to sacrifice the potato growers in the Fraser Valley of British Columbia and will let them be destroyed in order to save the eastern potato producer.

The potato product coming in from the United States is of high quality. It is produced, on an economic scale at a ratio of probably ten to one. The land costs are far below Canadian land costs and taxes are lower. Above all, labour costs are substantially lower. As a result the Canadian producer cannot produce a product competitive with the U.S. product. This means the American producer can now import and market potatoes in Canada at probably 50 per cent of the cost of Canadian production. Therefore, the Canadian potato farmer in the Lower Fraser Valley will not be able to exist.

I suggested to the Minister of Agriculture—that great friend of the farmer, the best Minister of Agriculture the world has ever seen—that as a result farmers will lose their farms, or they will have to divide their land and sell it to light industry in order to make a living. In other words, if farmers do not make a living from their product, they will have to go out of business.

Somehow the Minister of Agriculture does not appreciate the domino effect, the cause and effect relationship of his policies on farmers in the Fraser Valley. If farmers cannot make expenses, and if they have to go out of business—they have to make a living somehow—this means they will have their farms rezoned. But the Minister of Agriculture says zoning is a provincial problem, that is not a problem of the Minister of Agriculture. The clueless Minister of Agriculture does not see that relationship. Sooner or later these farmers will have to rezone their farms in order to gain some capital, and then invest it in some way.

The net result will be that those corporate farms in the State of Washington will capture the entire Canadian market, because there will be no Canadian suppliers. If the Minister of Agriculture is at all interested in the consumer, he ought to work for the protection of the farmer in Canada so that the consumer will not be victimized by the one sole source of supply, which will be the State of Washington. If he cares at all for the Canadian consumer, he will do everything in his power to preserve the Canadian farmer.

Under present policies he has made this trade-off and is willing to sacrifice the farmer in the Fraser Valley to preserve the farmer in eastern Canada. I do not fault him for trying to preserve the eastern farmer, but in a matter of years he will find that there are no Canadian farms in the Fraser Valley. It will all be industrial land. We will be at the mercy of the corporate farms in the United States. At that point they will be able to charge whatever price they want. They will be able to scalp the Canadian consumer because there will be no other source of supply.

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that this Minister of Agriculture is sacrificing, first the farmer and then the consumer, and we will pay for it in the future.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the situation is somewhat unusual in that there has been some confusion with regard to this question and the question the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) asked on Tuesday, February 15. This evening, I am answering the question asked last Tuesday evening, dealing with a revenue problem.

The collection policy of the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, is best described as patient but firm, becoming increasingly more firm if the taxpayer concerned attempts to escape responsibility.

When the moneys owing are income taxes, the taxpayer is first sent an assessment notice which says that by law the taxes owing must be paid within 30 days. If the payment is not made, a reminder in the form of a resquest for payment is mailed to the taxpayer. If this second notice is not heeded, a third one is sent to inform the taxpayer that legal action may result if payment or satisfactory arrangements are not made within 15 days.

Finally, when the taxpayer has been approached three times, the Department proceeds to apply the collection powers that Parliament has given it. These are the powers of garnishee of wages or other forms of remuneration, the garnishee of bank deposits or the seizure and sale of assets. These measures may seem harsh, but the citizen who does not pay his taxes is acting contrary to the interests of fellow citizens who have paid theirs.

If the amounts owing are source deductions, the matter is even more serious. These source deductions are trust funds. The employer is withholding amounts to pay the employee's income tax, his Canada Pension Plan contributions and his unemployment insurance premiums. This is the employee's money and not the employer's, and if it were not required by law to be withheld and remitted to the Government the employer would have had to pay it to the employee.

Therefore, when the Department detects by audit or other means that an employer has failed to remit source deductions, it demands immediate payment. By that time, he would be in arrears by at least 30 days. The payroll auditor would request the money and caution the employer that failure to pay may result in legal action. I would be very surprised if any employer did not already know this.

That legal action is once again garnishment, applied, where appropriate, to accounts receivable of the business. The Department would have some knowledge of the customers of the business and would file notice with one or more of these customers that amounts they would otherwise pay to the business in default of source deductions must be paid to the Department. Of course, the garnishee notice states the amount that the business is deficient and the customer is required to divert all payments up to that amount to the Department.

I cannot see why the Hon. Member is critical of these actions. The businessman has taken trust funds and funds that were not his and has not remitted them as the law requires. The Department takes action to recover these funds in the way Parliament has provided. It is as simple as that.

THE ADMINISTRATION—POSITION OF PRESENT MINISTERS. (B) REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER TAKE ACTION. (C) REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, in the matter of Alastair Gillespie today, we witnessed in the House one of the most incredible performances ever made by a Prime Minister of our country. We are a parliamentary democracy which is based on the British tradition.

• (1815)

The pinnacle of our system is responsible Government. A Minister, upon joining the Government, becomes responsible for the actions within his Department, and the actions of an agency of that Department, which is under his control. If he errs in judgment in a serious way, if a major mistake is made in his Department or if one of his agencies transgresses the rules, the Minister must assume full responsibility. This, above all, is important in cases involving morality. Concerning questions of basic honesty and honourable dealings, the correct and proper course must not only be taken, but it must also be seen to have been taken.

The post-employment guidelines set forth by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) clearly stipulate as follows:

In any official dealings with the former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privilege of access or preferential treatment.

Former Ministers must not:

—act for or on behalf of any person or commercial corporation in connection with a transaction to which the Government of Canada is a party and in which they had a personal and substantial involvement during the last two years of their participation in the ministry within two years of leaving office.

Neither can they lobby for or on behalf of any person or corporation within that Department for which they were responsible.

What are the facts here? We know that the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Alastair Gillespie, entered into a memorandum of understanding with two Crown corporations, Petro-Canada and the Cape Breton Development Corporation, 16 months after leaving his ministry. These were the financing arrangements to set up the Scotia Coals Synfuels Project. We have seen television footage of Mr. Gillespie and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) announcing this project in Nova Scotia in April of 1981, six months after the signing of this particular memorandum of understanding. The press conference had national exposure and was arranged by the Press Secretary and other officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

These events were grossly improper and constitute a massive breach of the conflict of interest guidelines. Mr. Gillespie should not have been dealing with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources or any Crown corporation on an energy-related matter, according to the guidelines.

What is equally serious is that the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who was then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, should not have had dealings with Mr. Gillespie, at least until after June, 1981, again according to the guidelines set down by the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister tries to protect his Minister by saying that his Minister had no personal knowledge of the arrangement until September of 1981, when the final agreement was signed between the Government of Canada and Mr. Gillespie. However, that simply cannot be accurate. Even more important, it is not of great relevance, in my submission.

It is clear that the Minister's Department and agencies were involved in this highly suspect arrangement for some time. The Deputy Prime Minister, the second highest elected official in the country, knew all about it, attended a press conference and must have been fully aware of the conflicts which were involved.

When a system of Cabinet and Ministerial responsibility is so grossly infringed, it is incumbent on a Minister to tender his resignation. Let us face it, Mr. Speaker, Alastair Gillespie had dickered on this deal for a long time before September, 1981, or even June of that year.

Mr. Smith: Says who?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was the subject of a memorandum of understanding and a press conference with the Deputy Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister suggested that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did not even have knowledge of the matter, who was he trying to kid?

Moreover, where is the success of our system? How can he be so ignorant of the traditions upon which this institution and our democratic system are based? What of the Deputy Prime Minister? He, too, must bear responsibility here. He is second only to the Prime Minister. His face was depicted all over the television screens along with Alastair Gillespie, at least two months before Mr. Gillespie was supposed to have any dealings whatsoever with his former Department. In the words of the Prime Minister, "There is no way that Mr. Gillespie was laundered by April of 1981".

This is not a mistake. This is not an innocent omission. This was a deliberate flaunting of the guidelines conceived and set forth by the present Prime Minister. There could be no more blatant a case of public immorality. Not only has a political friend been given a special sweetheart deal, but he has also received that deal in the face of the Prime Minister's own explicit directives.

I now call upon the Prime Minister to accept his responsibilities. His Ministers have been caught contravening the conflict of interest guidelines.

• (1820)

If American legislators were guilty of misconduct in Abscam, as was clearly demonstrated on videotape, so was the Deputy Prime Minister caught on television announcing this particular project some time before the expiry of two years from the time Mr. Gillespie left the ministry.

If Lord Carrington in the United Kingdom was responsible, even though he had no knowledge of the items which led to the invasion of the Falklands, he as a matter of principle and honour under the parliamentary system felt obligated to tender his resignation, because something had happened in a department over which he had responsibility.

The admission of responsibility is fundamental. The Prime Minister must act immediately, swiftly, and ask for the resignation of the Minister of Finance.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, since this matter was first raised in this House yesterday by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) we have had a series of allegations of conflict of interest, preferential treatment, etc., raised against members of this Government, as well as a previous Minister of the Crown.

The Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has been accused of violating the conflict of interest guidelines during the period when he was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Hon. Alastair Gillespie has been accused of violating the post-employment guidelines applied to former holders of public office. We have yet to be told what guidelines have been contravened by the Ministers of the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia, a Tory Government, I might add, as a result of that Province's participation in the agreement which has generated this tempest, which is certainly a tempest in a teapot.

I think at this time it is appropriate to review the genesis and purpose of these conflict of interest and post-employment guidelines. The first comprehensive sets of guidelines for Ministers in these areas were established by Liberal Governments under this Prime Minister, in 1973 in the case of conflict of interest guidelines, and in 1978 in the case of post-employment guidelines. The most recent guidelines were introduced by the Prime Minister in 1980.

These guidelines were established to protect the interests of the public, and the reputations of individual Ministers and office holders. In this debate, Members of the Opposition have attacked the reputations of present and past Members of the Government, with vague innuendoes that the public interest has not been well served.

I will quote the relevant section of the conflict of interest guidelines applied to Ministers:

(1) Current and former holders of public office must ensure by their actions that the objectivity and impartiality of Government service are not cast in doubt and that the people of Canada are given no cause to believe that preferential treatment is being or will be unduly accorded to any person or organization.

(2) Current and former holders of public office must ensure by their actions that there is no reasonable ground for belief that it is possible to have privileged access to Government personnel or services.

(3) Current and former holders of public office must exercise care in the management of their private affairs so as not to benefit, or to appear to benefit, from the use or communication of confidential information acquired in the course of their official duties.

The Minister of Finance cannot in any way be said to have contravened the guidelines and to have given "preferential treatment" to any person or organization. His only contact with Mr. Gillespie would have been on September 25, 1981 when he signed, on behalf of Her Majesty in right of Canada, a tripartite agreement between the Government of Nova Scotia, the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project, a consortium consisting of Petro-Canada, Cape Breton Development Corp., and Nova Scotia Resources Ltd., which is provincial Crown corporation, and Mr. Gillespie and his partners, and Her Majesty in Right of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Smith: Time? Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Send me the rest of that speech. You have not answered anything.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

• (1825)

GRAIN—TIMING OF CHANGE OF CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATE—EFFECT ON EXPORTS. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE STUDIES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, on February 10 I rose in the House to ask questions of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), who speaks for the Government on matters relating to grain exports and the Canadian Wheat Board since the Senator in charge is not in this House, and of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I asked them both to comment on the policy moves the Government was making with regard to abandoning the Crow rate.

In my question to the Minister of Transport I tried to establish the fact that all competing countries were increasing subsidies to enable their producers to export, while at the same time we were reducing one of the few subsidies that exist for the export of grain for this country.

I then turned to the Minister of Agriculture, who has been arguing that both the East and West will benefit from the disruption of the Crow rate. I asked a very straight forward question. I asked where, in his analysis, the increased production that will occur in the East and West will take place, how it will take place, where it could be sold and, more important, at what price. I asked the Minister to table the studies that must have been made in these areas of economic research.

The Minister replied, in typical ministerial fashion, as follows:

If there are and if these are working documents that have not been made public they will be because I think that even a blind economist on a galloping horse could see that what we are saying is true.

I have no doubt that what the studies say is true, as far as it goes. It is what they do not say that is of most importance to agriculturalists and farmers in this country. They do not state the assumptions upon which the studies were based and the direction in which the research was told to move.

We know the assumptions behind some of the studies as we go through the results. For example, we know that farmers in both the East and the West are very upset with the proposals put forward and the studies that have been made public. The Minister of Transport has been quoted numerous times in the press as saying "In the East they are talking about the survival of agriculture. In the West they are talking about the survival of agriculture."

Farmers are upset because they understand the elements of agriculture more than the researchers who have been doing the work for the Ministers of Transport and Agriculture. They understand the kind of disruption to themselves, their families and communities that follow certain actions in the name of development. They understand that some of those actions in the name of development, or progress, or whatever buzz words the planners happen to use, will be found to be obsolete, inefficient or redundant. That is the reason farmers in the East and West are worried about the survival of agriculture. They are worried about the survival of agriculture and their place in it.

The assumptions that have been made of the livestock feeding program are in accordance with those we have been told were made for the studies done by the federal Government. They showed that livestock production in Eastern Canada will continue to increase in size, and that livestock production in Western Canada will do the same. Not much time was spent on determining where that increased production would be sold.

The studies did raise some possibilties. They indicated it may be sold as a result of the increased domestic demand which may occur after the economy turns around and people can afford to eat more meat. That demand may increase because of a possible increase in population. The increased production may be exported to the United States and Japan, depending on the economies of those countries, their ability to be self sufficient and the degree of protectionism.

Those are all very nebulous factors in these studies. The only hard evidence presented is that the market in Eastern Canada, on the U.S. East Coast, the Eastern Seaboard, are as close to our producers as they are to the producers in the mid-Western United States. They point out that producers in Western Canada are as close to the California market as are the producers in the mid-Western United States.

The studies ignore, however, the question of political interference in crossing those political borders. They ignore the effective demand, because they had to make assumptions on whether those economies are going to pick up. In fact, they ignore reality. They ignore the fact that we have to compete in international markets in grain. We are geographically trapped in a region where transportation over land for up to 700 miles has to take place, compared to our competitors, who are only 100 miles to 150 miles to water transport. They ignore these realities.

Farmers are not waiting, Mr. Speaker, for a blind economist on a galloping horse to see the answers. They are simply looking for some clear-eyed politician to honestly say what sort of future is being planned for farmers of this country. They want a clear assessment of what is going to happen to them under the Government's transportation and agricultural policy. They did not get that in the documents which have been made public. They did not get that in the replies which we received on February 8.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in his question of February 10, and in his remarks tonight, the Hon. Member objects to the Government's plans to reform the Crowsnest Pass freight rate on the grounds that this is the only program which allows Canadian grain farmers to remain competitive. He refers to concerns voiced by the Minister of State responsible for the Wheat Board about export grain subsidies in other countries. The key is Canada's ability to compete. In his closing remarks, the Hon. Member said the answer ignored the fact that we have to compete on the world market. I believe that is exactly what we are addressing. Our Canadian producers have to compete on the world market.

The Hon. Member, in fairness to his constituents, should look up the definition of "competitive". What is competition? Competition is not being just price competitive. In order for the Canadian producer, the Canadian farmer, to be competitive, he must, first of all, guarantee a quality product. The producer must guarantee delivery of the amount he contracted for, and he must guarantee delivery on time. In combination with all of this his or her price has to be competitive.

But even if we subsidize the farmer 100 per cent of the cost of producing transportation, if the farmer cannot meet the other terms of being competitive, that is, if he or she does not give a quality product, does not deliver the amount contracted for, does not deliver on time, then that farmer is not competitive.

Therefore, I believe, Mr. Speaker, we have to finally take a good look at what we mean by encouraging our farmers to be competitive. That is what the Western transportation initiative is all about, a better transportation system. The Government has allocated a great deal of money, almost $4 billion over four years, to this initiative, in spite of a large deficit. The Government believes it is not unreasonable to ask farmers to share in future cost increases. I spoke to farmers in the Hon. Member's constituency because I was born and raised there, and these farmers agree. When you speak to them on an individual basis, they agree they have to be realistic, they have to pay more for transportation costs. But, they say, guarantee us an efficient transportation system.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

THE ECONOMY

OPTIMISTIC INDEXES AND PROSPECTS

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to some optimistic indicators which encourage optimism and suggest that the national Government has been pursuing proper and prudent policies. First, inflation has fallen to an annual rate of only 8.3 per cent as of today. Housing starts are up from a low of 86,000 in September, 1982, to 165,000 last month, a 90 per cent increase. Sales of passenger cars increased 37 per cent between July and December of 1982.

The Conference Board of Canada's index of consumer confidence rose 36 per cent, from 54.8 per cent in the second quarter of 1982 to 74.7 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1982.

Senior business executives have become more optimistic about the near-term prospects for the Canadian economy. According to the Conference Board survey of business, attitudes and confidence in Canada's investment climate have also improved.

Pension funds in 1982 showed a sharp improvement over 1981, according to private surveys. Equity funds have increased 39.1 per cent over the past six months.

Finally, the Toronto Stock Exchange 300 composite has risen from about 1850 in mid-December to 2150 in the past week.

A large part of the credit for this improvement should go to the Government, which has addressed the economic situation through hard work and constructive policy initiatives. This is in contrast to those in the Official Opposition whose negativism and lack of policies are destroying their Party from within.

HUMAN RIGHTS

POLAND—IMPRISONMENT OF SOLIDARITY HUSBAND AND WIFE ACTIVISTS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, yesterday in Warsaw, Zbigniew Romaszewski of the Polish Solidarity Movement was sentenced to four and a half years in prison by a military court for activities which, in any other country, would be considered legitimate in defence of the freedom of information and expression. His wife, Zofia, was sentenced to three years in prison at the same time.

This is what the military regime is doing in Poland, seeking to extinguish those flickers of freedom that Solidarity has been struggling to keep alight. When will the Government protest? Is it making excessive demands to speak out about what is happening and carrying information to others?

Are Romaszewski and his wife guilty of making excessive demands which our Canadian Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) hoped the military regime in Poland could keep Solidarity from making? On December 18, 1981, only five days after the steel curtain of martial law had descended upon Poland, Canada's Prime Minister said:

> Hopefully the military regime will be able not only to keep Solidarity from making excessive demands—

The record of the Government in verbal support of freedoms throughout the world, at Helsinki, for example, and Madrid, is not matched by its diplomatic protests when specific incidents of suppression of freedom occur, as they are occurring today in Poland.

STATUS OF WOMEN

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, women have not achieved equality in Canada. In October, 1981, the NDP asked the Government to establish a Standing Committee on the Status of Women. Unfortunately the Minister responsible for the Status of Women did not support this request. Since then, the economic situation for women has drastically deteriorated, while many more women are left alone to raise children and to face unemployment and poverty as they grow older.

We are pleased that the slow learner Conservatives have finally supported our request which we recently reintroduced to House Leaders. Because 52 per cent of our population remains disadvantaged, it is essential that there be one standing committee which will monitor all legislation affecting women, including the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and which will receive annual reports from all Government Departments concerned with women's programs, and undertake special projects to benefit women.

The Government and the Minister responsible give lip service to equality, yet they have not even implemented the 1970 recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. There has been no increase in daycare. The wage gap has widened. Government restraint has worsened economic hardship. Government action on pension reform has been shelved. The Government has refused mandatory affirmative action.

• (1110)

To begin to right these wrongs, the Government must agree to establish a Standing Committee on the status of women as a priority for parliamentary reform.

THE ECONOMY

SUPPORT EXPRESSED FOR GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Denis Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 21 I rise to encourage the Government to continue to develop positive and constructive policies aimed at achieving energy security at a fair price for Canadians.

Three years ago the Government pledged to establish a "made in Canada" blended price for oil, resulting in lower costs to Canadian consumers.

I further urge the Government to continue progress on such projects as the Nova Scotia offshore, the synthetic crude refinery and benzene plant at Scotford, Alberta, and the Beaufort Sea exploration. The Government, in the absence of any specific and constructive suggestions from the Opposition, should continue to encourage economic development through initiatives, such as the Office of Industrial and Regional Benefit, to ensure that the Canadian industrial and manufacturing benefits from these projects are maximized.

Finally, I urge the Government to encourage the creation of jobs in different regions by ensuring that energy maintains its central position in the Government's approach to industrial and regional development, giving Canadian industry a price advantage by keeping costs low.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, we are on the verge of entering the fourth year of this first session of the 32nd Parliament. It is unprecedented in Canadian history. As we look back we see three years of fumbling, blumbing, Government intervention and interference, broken promises, helter skelter policies and, for most Canadians, dissipated illusions, shattered confidence, and broken hopes and dreams. The Government has not only fractured the parliamentary system but has broken faith with the Canadian people. Canadians say that they have had enough. As the Board of Dromore might say, Pierre, you're nimble; Pierre, you're quick.

But you, and your manoeuvrings, make us sick.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

LABOUR RELATIONS

CONDEMNATION OF QUEBEC'S SUSPENSION OF RIGHTS CHARTER

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise to express my concern and the concern of my Party over the vicious attacks that have been made against working people in this country over the last few months, and to express our belief that it is not working people who are responsible for the problems of Canada.

The federal Liberal Government began these attacks a few months ago with its six and five program which broke the contracts of workers and stole money from pensioners. The Conservative Government of Ontario, which had already shown itself ready to use its full power against hospital orderlies but not even to pressure doctors, was quick to follow the federal Government.

The most drastic, vicious and immoral attack on working people, however, has come from the Government of Quebec.

In its recent legislation it even had to suspend its own Charter of Rights which is supposed to provide basic minimums of freedoms to citizens in a democracy.

Like the federal Government, it broke contracts and stole money, perhaps showing René Lévesque's Liberal roots. But it went further and threatened firings and slashes in seniority and pensions. Such cuts in seniority will most hurt union militants who may then be laid off because of lack of seniority. Such moves are union bashing in its most vicious form.

The Government of Quebec has absolutely refused to bargain in good faith with its workers. We would now like to call on the Government of Quebec to restore collective bargaining and to bargain with its workers, treating them as citizens in a democracy rather than as scapegoats to be attacked for the Government's convenience.

THE ECONOMY

RECITAL OF GOOD NEWS

Mr. David Smith (Don Valley East): Madam Speaker, in view of the continuous diet of gloom and doom being meted out by the Opposition, this third anniversary of the election of the present Government is an appropriate occasion on which to take stock of some good economic news.

Interest rates are now at their lowest level in five years, and of course lower than at any point during the Clark Government, and the downward trend continues. The cost of living index dropped to 8.3 per cent in January and, over the past six months, has only been increasing at an average annual rate of 4.2 per cent. The previous six months it had been increasing at an average annual rate of 12.5 per cent.

Non-COLA wage settlements were down to 7.3 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1982, a drop of 50 per cent from a year earlier. Surely that is evidence that the six and five program is in fact working.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Smith: Employment increased in December and stabilized in January, after a period of continuous decline.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1115)

Mr. Smith: The Canadian dollar has strengthened, capital outflow has reversed, foreign investment has increased, and corporate profits have started to go up after dropping for five consecutive quarters. These trends, Madam Speaker, attest to the basic strength of the economy, the correctness of the Government's policies, and justify optimism that the stage is set for economic recovery.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—ROLE OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister who in April, 1980, sent his Minister a set of guidelines for their behaviour. If I may quote to the Prime Minister one of his guidelines:

> In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

My question to the Prime Minister is this. Has he determined whether the Deputy Prime Minister, when he participated in a press conference in April, 1981, to announce the Scotia Coal Synfuels Plant, was aware of those guidelines? Also, has he determined, if the Deputy Prime Minister was so aware, why he felt it was reasonable to breach those guidelines that day?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member and his colleagues keep returning to those guidelines. He has read them again this morning. I have great difficulty in believing in the seriousness of this attack by the Opposition. We talk of improper influence. Here is a public project in which the Government of Nova Scotia Crown Corporation is associated, as well as an Alberta public corporation, Nova, a federal Crown corporation, Petro-Canada, and a private sector giant, Gulf. They are doing something which has been asked of them under the energy policy, in other words to provide for oil substitution schemes.

Money is paid out from the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Nova Scotia. If there is any improper influence it must have been on Nova Scotia. They have to authorize—

Mr. Crosbie: That's really stretching.

Mr. Trudeau: That is not stretching. The money comes from the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Nova Scotia. Nobody is suspecting that they were subject to undue influence. This is a project that they badly need and that they hope will proceed. It has been known since the announcement in the Spring of 1981 by many people in that Province, certainly by the Government of that Province.

Where is the improper influence? What is the privileged access, Madam Speaker? When a consortium that is well known and operating above board applies to the Government so that it can pay funds for a policy of the Government which is beneficial to the Canadian people, oil substitution, beneficial especially to the Maritime Provinces which have been asking for this type of scheme for many years, where is the preferential treatment?

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It would be helpful if we could keep the answers short.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S PARTICIPATION IN PROJECT ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, it is inconceivable that one would maintain it is the responsibility of Nova or the Government of Nova Scotia to make sure that ministerial guidelines are followed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bosley: I repeat my question to the Prime Minister. The deal, according to the Prime Minister, was not finalized as of April, 1981. Why was the Deputy Prime Minister involved in announcing that deal, creating the impression of undue influence in contravention of the Prime Minister's guidelines?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member returns to undue influence. I repeat, what is the preferential treatment when we know that the same Deputy Prime Minister and the same Department had been turned to by many other people across the land?

• (1120)

As I say, every Province across Canada had such a fund originally provided out of federal Government money but put in the trust of the Provinces, and over the years few applications, if any, I am told, were turned down under this oil substitution program. Where is the undue influence? Where is the preferential treatment, if anyone with a reasonable scheme beneficial to the Canadian energy self-reliance program, beneficial to creating work in Nova Scotia, is approved by a Government Department? Where is the scandal? What is the shock? Why is the Opposition, two years later, seeking some hidden motives for something which was public at the time and which, as I repeat, was entered into by a consortium, including a Crown Corporation of the Government of Nova Scotia?

RATIONALE FOR GUIDELINES ON MINISTERIAL CONDUCT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister cannot have it both ways. Either there was no deal in April, 1981, in which case what he is saying may be correct. What he just said is there was a deal in April, 1981, in which case there was a two-year guideline. My question to the Prime Minister is this: what is the point of guidelines if the Deputy Prime Minister is allowed to go in April, 1981, to sit beside a man who was a former Minister of the Crown, and pretend he does not know he is a former Minister of the Crown, apparently, and announce a deal which takes $1.9 million of public money? What is the point of guidelines if they can be broken so easily, and the Prime Minister can then say there is nothing wrong with the deal?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The point of the guidelines, Madam Speaker, is to ensure two things: first, that public trust is not exploited unduly by people in the private sector, including—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Madam Speaker, I fail to understand the cause of this hilarity. Maybe I have missed some subtlety over there, but I doubt it. The point of the guidelines is to ensure two things; first, that the public trust not be abused, not be exploited improperly by people in the private sector and, second, to make sure that the integrity of the public sector be preserved, and seem to be preserved. The Hon. Member talks about the April announcement. I explained yesterday that that announcement was made in Nova Scotia before the deal had actually been signed by the federal Government—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —and by the Minister responsible for it. But members of the consortium knew they had something which was desirable under the policy. They had had a consortium, including all these public corporations. They were appealing to the Government of Nova Scotia for funds. For all I know they may have already been told by the Government of Nova Scotia that the funds would have been forthcoming. I am told they even began to expend some of their money in the beginning of July, 1981, and that is why the announcement was made retroactive to the end of June. Therefore, all this was above board. It is a plan which the people of Nova Scotia welcome. It is a plan which the Government of Nova Scotia welcomes. It is a plan which the Government of Canada welcomes. It is a plan under which no one exercised any undue influence. No one got any undue advantage. The public trust—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The public trust was respected, Madam Speaker. And I suggest that the people over there are just trying to cover their own backsides by digging into the past and trying to find scandals where there is no scandal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING PUBLIC TRUST

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, for three days the people of Canada have watched the Prime Minister bob and weave and duck around this issue, and with every day his actions get sleazier.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Miss MacDonald: The people of Canada are fed up with the preferential treatment that Ministers of this Government are giving to their former colleagues, whether it is Macdonald, or Buchanan, or this particular case. Either guidelines exist to prevent that sort of treatment, or they do not. I would like to ask the Prime Minister, in this case, why was his Deputy Prime Minister in a situation in Cape Breton in April, 1981, where he exploited the public trust which the Prime Minister has had the nerve to throw out this morning?

• (1125)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Madam Speaker, if the Deputy Prime Minister was exploiting any public trust, the Hon. Member knows or should know that he was doing it in the company of John Buchanan, the Premier of Nova Scotia.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: They were there—well, they are laughing at their own well-known Tories. What was dishonourable about the Premier of Nova Scotia being there?

Mr. Wilson: How about the federal public trust?

Mr. Trudeau: Here was a project which was good for his Province. Here was a project which was being announced—

Mr. Fraser: He was not getting a personal benefit out of the deal. That is the difference.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Madam Speaker, I hear the Member from Vancouver now talking of a personal benefit. Who was getting a personal benefit out of this deal? Certainly not the Minister. If there was any benefit, hopefully it was a political benefit that both the Premier of Nova Scotia and the Deputy Prime Minister were hoping to get from the people of Nova Scotia who had the good sense to see that this was a useful operation, beneficial to them, if ever it does in fact prove to be feasible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Madam Speaker, the guidelines in question are the guidelines of the Prime Minister of Canada, not of the Premier of Nova Scotia. It is his duty to see these guidelines are enforced.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: And what he has been doing these last few days is defaulting on that duty, as he has over the last couple of years with regard to former Cabinet Ministers, and with regard to his current Cabinet Ministers.

MONITORING OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, since the Prime Minister has defaulted on putting these guidelines into effect, did he at least ever consider going to the Deputy Registrar General and asking that official, who is responsible for monitoring these guidelines, whether any of these activities were in default of the guidelines which he, the Prime Minister, supposedly enforces in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I want to point out to the Hon. Member that I did not suggest they were the guidelines of the Premier of Nova Scotia, although I accept that he must, like everyone in public life, want to be guided by good standards of morality. I am not suggesting they are his guidelines; they are our guidelines. But I am suggesting that his presence there must be some reassurance, even to the Member from Kingston, that this was not a sleazy deal, which is the word she uses. This was something above board, beneficial to his Province.

When I am constantly referred to my own guidelines and the words "preferential treatment", why would the Premier of Nova Scotia give preferential treatment to this abominable former Minister that the Hon. Member seems to be referring to? Why would he be doing that? He would not, Madam Speaker. He would be dealing with this group because he thought it was beneficial to his Province. Therefore, there is no preferential treatment, and if there was, once again it must come from the Province which holds the most money and which is going to spend the money. Therefore, it seems to me that the Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister cannot be accused of giving preferential treatment when it does not come from them, it comes from the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Nova Scotia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INVOLVEMENT OF FORMER MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question supplementary to the questions just raised. It seems to me the Prime Minister is introducing a couple of red herrings which do not go to the root of the issue here.

Mr. Nielsen: Just two?

Mr. Broadbent: One is that he keeps asserting the deal was beneficial for everyone involved. Let us say that is beyond dispute and set it aside. Then he points out that Nova Scotia was involved and therefore tries to suggest in some way that that makes it entirely acceptable. Surely, Madam Speaker, the point is that Mr. Gillespie was a former Minister of this Cabinet, not of the Government of Nova Scotia.

• (1130)

To come to the question of appearance, since the guidelines refer with equal emphasis not only to wrongdoing but, in the Prime Minister's own words, provide as follows:

> Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence.

Surely "appearance" is the essence of the case that is being made.

I want to ask the Prime Minister if he does not agree that an impartial Canadian, not a member of any political party, looking at the situation involving a former minister, could conceivably reach the conclusion that there was the appearance of wrongdoing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think I can assert that unequivocally. If there were really an appearance of wrongdoing, if this was a scandalous thing in its very appearance, if it had been obvious that something was wrong here, why, only two years later do we hear about it? What kind of apperance is that? When it was announced publicly in the Province, when it was then signed, when it was on television, when it was in the news, when there were press releases—there is the appearance—who said, "This is terrible? This is awful?" Who said, "There is wrongdoing there"?

Some day, two years later, because once again both Opposition Parties are looking for red herrings, they dig this up out of the distant—not the hidden past but the known past.

What are the appearances of wrongdoing once again when public figures, including the Deputy Prime Minister and the Premier of Nova Scotia are on a platform making an announcement which is carried far and wide, and suddenly, two years later, these guys over here just realize that the appearance is wrong?

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister's interesting rhetoric is all beside the point.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Where were you before?

Mr. Broadbent: The Liberals should just listen to the question. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources asked where I was before. I say to him and to the Prime Minister that this is news to me that has emerged in the last few days.

Mr. Chrétien: Where were you?

Mr. Broadbent: The question of integrity is surely being raised now. The question of the appearance of wrongdoing is being raised now.

QUERY RESPECTING APPEARANCE OF WRONGDOING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he does not agree that a decision involving some of his Ministers was reached within the two-year period, in principle, that has been disputed here? Would he agree to that? Would he agree that one of the central Ministers involved—surely the signing Minister is now the Minister of Finance—would he agree that the Deputy Prime Minister, also acting within the time period of two years, publicly made an announcement?

If he agrees with all this, even assuming that we are just now becoming aware of it, surely he must conclude that such a deal, that provides profound financial benefits for one of the former Ministers, is leaving us with the appearance of wrongdoing? That is the issue.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the appearance of wrongdoing assumes that there will be some wrongdoing.

Mr. Broadbent: No, no.

Mr. Crosbie: There was.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, if there has been no wrongdoing, then our case rests.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes there was.

Mr. Trudeau: If there was no wrongdoing, and therefore if the Hon. Member wants to contrive in his thoughts that there is some appearance, and he discovers that later, that is a problem in his mind. But if there is no wrongdoing, there is no wrongdoing.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER DEMAND RESIGNATION OF MINISTERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, just as in the case of the judges' affair, the Prime Minister is confusing legality with morality, and legality with the parliamentary traditions that used to exist in this country. He always makes that confusion.

The issue here is not, in fact, the honesty of the Minister of Finance; it is not the honesty, I say to the Prime Minister, of the Deputy Prime Minister; it is the appearance of improper conduct. There was a minister of the Crown in Great Britain, a finance minister, who resigned because, inadvertently, a newspaper story revealed some information about a budget. There was no suggestion that the minister of the Crown in Great Britain was involved in wrongdoing, but he was involved in the appearance of wrongdoing.

I say to the Prime Minister that, if his guidelines mean anything, he should act and demand some resignations. If not, he should have the minimum of integrity and scrap the guidelines entirely.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member makes a parallel with former Chancellor of the Exchequer, Dalton, who inadvertently let out a budget secret. That secret hit the newspaper headlines before the Minister had read his budget. This, according to the tradition, is something that you should not do, and therefore the Minister chose to resign.

What is the parallel with this case? Do we have a former Minister who comes in secret and tries to arrange something under the table which will be beneficial to him? We do not. We have a former Minister who is trying to earn his living out in the private sector.

An Hon. Member: Poor Alastair!

An Hon. Member: At $600 a day.

Mr. Crosbie: Pass around the hat.

Mr. Hees: Pierre, you are breaking my heart.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I, too, am amused by the hilarity over there because I mentioned former Ministers who were trying to earn their living. The laughs came mainly from those who were never former Ministers, particularly the Hon. Member for Calgary who never quite made it to the Cabinet for reasons which may have to do with guidelines or not.

Mr. Andre: I did the honourable thing; why don't you?

Mr. Trudeau: And his seatmate, the Hon. Member for Northumberland, who wished he had made it to that Cabinet, but who never quite made it either.

Madam Speaker: Order, order!

ROLE OF ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who is certainly exhibiting hircine tendencies in this whole situation. What we allege, and what I would like the Prime Minister to answer is this. We say that the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance conspired with Mr. Gillespie, a former minister, to breach the guidelines so that Mr. Gillespie could secure a privileged contract and certain favours from the Government. That is the situation as it appears to us. It is a conspiracy of sleeze.

Has the Prime Minister investigated whether Mr. Gillespie or any of his agents, or associates, spoke with or to anyone in the office of the then Minister of Energy, either on his exempt staff or to the Minister himself, about this contract in Cape Breton which involves a process he had been involved in when he was a Minister and before the two-year period was up? Has he done that? Has there been a thorough investigation of that aspect of the matter, forgetting signing the contract which was cleverly left until 23 days after the two years expired. That is an obvious expedient and just shows that they were aware they were ignoring the guidelines.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am back to the words used by the Hon. Member about preferential treatment. Once again, I cannot appeal to Members on the other side, I appeal to the court of public opinion. Where is the preferential treatment given in this particular case by the Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, or anyone in the Government, when they are giving, once again, not in secret to a former Minister of one of my Governments—they are giving publicly to a consortium which is applying a policy which is beneficial for Canada and beneficial for the people of Nova Scotia and not receiving any undue benefit? They are trying to carry out an enterprise which is asked for by the Government of Canada and by the Government of Nova Scotia. Where is the preferential treatment, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Broadbent: There is the appearance.

Mr. Trudeau: The Leader of the NDP keeps talking about the appearance. Where is even the appearance of preferential treatment when people in the private sector—once again, not once individual who happens to be a former Minister but a whole public consortium including Crown corporations of the provincial Governments, including the private sector, including a public corporation—

Miss MacDonald: They knew where to go.

Mr. Trudeau: Where is the secret? Where are the appearances of wrongdoing when everything is above board and is following government policy?

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister did not answer my question about whether any inquiry has been made into contacts between Mr. Gillespie and his agents and the Minister and his agents. He did not answer that question.

POSSIBLE USE OF PUBLIC FUNDS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Does the Prime Minister not realize that his administration now has the appearance and is, in fact, steeped in patronage, favouritism and sleaze? That is the whole problem that we are asking about. Can the Prime Minister assure us that we have not $750,000 that was being made available in certain circumstances in this situation to Mr. Gillespie, through the favouritism of the former Minister of Energy who is now the Minister of Finance, and the Deputy Prime Minister? Is that not patronage and sleaze and favouring people, the same as the Macdonald favouritism, the Judd Buchanan favouritism, the CMHC directors favouritism? Does he not realize that his administration is steeped now in favouritism and corruption, and that a full inquiry by an impartial body is needed to clear the air, if that is possible?

• (1140)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as usual, when the Hon. Member wants to make sleazy accusations, he shouts them. The sleaze is in his mind and in his mouth when he says—

Mr. Crosbie: Go to the public.

Mr. Trudeau: He is distorting the facts. Whether he is doing it deliberately or not, I leave you to judge, Madam Speaker. But he is distorting the facts when he says that $750,000 is made available by this Government—

Mr. Crosbie: Made possible for him to gain.

Mr. Trudeau: —made possible, Madam Speaker, by virtue of a contract which I understand was negotiated by Gulf, which is common practice, which may happen if the project is worth-while, and which is—and I checked on that—along the lines of arrangements that are constantly made with minority shareholders when the majority shareholders want to buy them out. This is some hypothetical happening which will take place in the future, under a contract negotiated by Gulf Canada, which may or may not result in some reward for work done. We do not know whether it will happen. If it does happen, not only will it not come from the Government of Canada, it will not even come from the Government of Nova Scotia because it is specified in the contract—and the Members know it because they have been quoting the contract—that Mr. Gillespie will not receive money from those public funds. The Hon. Member knows that, and he is making a sleazy accusation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Well, go to the public on this; call an election on this and see if they understand.

APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. If the Gillespie scandal does not qualify—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McMillan: —as a breach of the Prime Minister's own conflict of interest guidelines, what in the Prime Minister's view would constitute such a conflict of interest involving a former Minister? What conceivable set of circumstances would fall under the guidelines if this one does not?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking hypothetical questions. I gave examples of hypotheses earlier when I said that if the former Minister had come, once again, in secret with a deal which was beneficial to him—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Well, do they or do they not want examples? I will not give hypothetical examples because the imagination of those people over there just turns toward sleazy things.

PURPOSE OF GUIDELINES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. What is the purpose of the Prime Minister's guidelines if they can be breached by any member of the Crown, knowing full well that he can count on a justification for any wrongdoing or any apparent wrongdoing? What is the purpose of the guidelines when a Minister can get away with the kind of thing that the Minister of Finance did when he was Minister of Energy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the purpose of the guidelines is so that some impartial observer, of which I do not see many on the other side of this aisle, can look at Government conduct and have some test against which to say, "Well, this is reasonable and this is not". My case rests with the public, that this was a reasonable operation, not a hidden one, not one which gave undue advantage to a former Minister of the Crown.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR UPDATE REPORT

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. What we appear to have is a number of the main planks of the National Energy Program collapsing around us—the Canada-Newfoundland negotiations the Vancouver Island pipeline, the energy revenue projections to the Government, exports of large volumes of gas, and renewing exports of light crude. It appears that the collapse of the National Energy Program and the collapse of the economic programs which were underpinned by it have now been reduced to chaos.

Would the Minister of Energy be prepared to acknowledge that the Government is responding in an ad hoc manner to crises which arise from day to day? Would he be prepared to indicate when we in the House might get an update to the "Update of the National Energy Program", so that there would be some clear guidance as to where we are going?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the question of the Hon. Member is not very clear. I just have to say that, of course, there was a turn in the oil prices in the last few weeks because OPEC nations could not agree on a price.

The energy policy still applies. We have international prices for imported oil and for new oil produced in Canada. We have a different price, 75 per cent of that price, for old oil in Canada. The policy still applies and still works. That we have a large surplus of gas in Canada that we want to export, I think the Hon. Member cannot blame on the national energy policy. When we have gas in sufficient quantities that we can export it, he should be rejoicing. It is because of the energy policy that there was some drilling, that there were some finds in Canada that made that possible.

I do not think the Hon. Member can say that we have to restart everything, but because of the possible collapse of the price of oil we will have to change some of the prices. We are monitoring the situation at this time. When the situation will be clarified because of what is happening in OPEC, we will act accordingly, but I think that the energy policy is still there and that it is still a good policy.

Mr. Skelly: The only thing confused in this House was certainly that answer, and I think that confusion is spilling over into the country as a whole.

OIL PRICES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I would like to come back to the question, as the Minister pointed out, of the 75 per cent price on oil and the made-in-Canada price. Certainly, if the Government were prepared to have that blended price tracked downward as the price of world oil dropped, Canadian fishermen, farmers and manufacturers would all benefit and, in all likelihood, Canadian goods from Canadian manufacturers would remain competitive in the world marketplace. Would the Minister give us a solemn or ironclad agreement that they will live up to their commitments and maintain that 75 per cent price on old oil and the blended Canadian price, which should be a little less than the Canadian price of oil? Will he make that commitment in the House?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I said earlier that the policy as stated by my predecessor is still the policy. When we see what will be the level of international prices for oil, if there is some need to change the policy we will announce it to the House of Commons. It is premature at this time because nobody can know exactly what will be the level of oil prices next week, next month, or in six months. According to developments we will make the necessary adjustments that will be needed. Of course we are not the only players in that. I am in consultation with the producing Provinces that have an interest in that. I understand there will be some meetings with Mr. Lougheed very soon on that. We have to talk to the producing Provinces because they have an interest in it. After these consultations, we will decide if we have to change the policy or not.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES ON MINISTERIAL CONDUCT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns this whole matter of conflict of interest of Members of his existing Cabinet. The Prime Minister asked a question of the people of Canada: "Who says there is any appearance or in fact any suggestion in anybody's mind in Canada as to impropriety in what has transpired as far as the arrangements with Mr. Gillespie are concerned?" I will tell the Prime Minister that it was Mr. Alastair Gillespie who was quoted as follows:

> Gillespie admits that outsiders—"ordinary people"—might believe his role as an energy minister and the experience he gained there gave him a privilege or special advantage to get the development going.

That is who said it, for one person. I suggest to the Prime Minister that the guidelines are clear. There is a prohibition, an absolute prohibition, against a former Minister making representation on behalf of anybody, let alone himself, to his former Department. Does the Prime Minister not agree that that is in breach of conflict of interest?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the part of whom, Madam Speaker, of Mr. Gillespie or of the Minister who did not even hear about it? What is the Hon. Member driving at?

• (1150)

KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): The Prime Minister cannot avoid answering a simple question as to whether or not that is a breach on the part of Mr. Gillespie of the specific and explicit conflict of interest guidelines set down prohibiting Cabinet Ministers, after they have left their portfolios, from dealing with their original Departments.

Yesterday the Prime Minister suggested that the former Minister of Energy, the Minister of Finance, was absolved of any responsibility because "he did not know of this transaction." I assume that if it was determined in the course of our investigation that the Minister of Finance was aware of any of the circumstances with respect to this project, he would be expected to resign his portfolio.

Has the Prime Minister had a full discussion with his Minister of Energy to determine whether or not he, or any Member of his exempt staff, had any knowledge with respect to this transaction which was announced by the Deputy Prime Minister in April of 1981?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, I have had discussions, as I said to the House yesterday, with the Minister of Finance. He has checked his agenda, he has checked his books, he has checked his memory and he has checked his files. He was not aware of this arrangement.

Mr. Nowlan: Has he checked his conscience?

Mr. Trudeau: He has checked something that the Member for St. John's West would not know anything about—his conscience.

Mr. Crosbie: What deadly wit.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, it is not deadly, Madam Speaker, but when I address it to a man whose wit is already dead, I think it is sufficient.

Mr. Crosbie: You are the Dustin Hoffman of the Liberal benches. Come on, Tootsie.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, we have the Member for St. John's West who wants to get into this but who is not prepared to ask questions.

Madam Speaker: Order.

ROLE OF PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. During this period in question the present Minister of Finance, who is the former Minister of Energy, had in his office a Mr. Mike Phelps. We subsequently learned through the activities of an investigative reporter that his salary was being paid by Petro-Canada.

Given that these guidelines specifically state that Ministers must conduct themselves in regard to Crown corporations that fall within their jurisdiction in the same way as if they were a direct responsibility of the Departments, can the Minister assure the House that Mr. Michael Phelps, whose salary and the mortgage on his home was being paid by Petro-Canada, did not know anything of this transaction or this arrangement or had any discussions with regard to this consortium of which Petro-Canada was a part, and for which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was supposedly responsible to the House and to the country?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have checked the whole file. I did not see anything in relation to Mr. Phelps. I have checked with Petro-Canada and I asked the President of Petro-Canada if he had informed the then Minister of Energy about this deal with the consortium. The Chairman of Petro-Canada, Mr. Hopper, said that he did not inform the Minister at all, directly or indirectly.

Mr. Crosbie: What about verbally? The shredders have gone berserk.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Would the Minister review that matter and examine this question? The Scotia Coal Synfuel project deals with the conversion of coal into transportation fuels, gasoline and diesel specifically. The funds for it came from federal money put into an oil substitution fund which arises out of a 1977 agreement between Canada and Nova Scotia. That agreement deals entirely and exclusively with the use of alternates to oil for the generation of electricity.

In other words, the agreement and the fund are to deal with alternate ways of generating electricity and not for the conversion of coal into transportation fuels. I presume that since this money was used in a way that was inappropriate to the agreement and the authorizing authority of the fund, there must have been some amendments to the agreement and the authorizing authority. Will the Minister make a commitment to the House to table those amendments to the funds authority and to the agreement which authorized them to use this money in an inappropriate way to fund Mr. Gillespie's income problems to which the Prime Minister alluded?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I do not have anything to add to what the Prime Minister said. This money was under the control of the Government of Nova Scotia. It was transferred to them, as the Hon. Member said, following the agreement of 1977. In this proposition, the consortium had the agreement of the Nova Scotia Government that it was a proper use of the money to make oil out of the coal available in Nova Scotia rather than importing oil.

Mr. Andre: That is not what this said.

Mr. Chrétien: I think it was to form an alternative to the importing of oil from abroad. According to Premier Buchanan at that time and the officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources at that time, this program was a good one to find an alternative to imported oil. I guess it was the feasibility study that was financed with the agreement of both Governments, as signed by the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in September, 1981.

For the Hon. Member to pretend now that the money was not spent according to the guidelines, it would have been a breach of the agreement between Nova Scotia and us, and, according to the Premier of Nova Scotia, not only was it desirable to do that within the policy but he was a promoter of that project.

TERMS OF CONSORTIUM AGREEMENT

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. He is denying that his Government conferred a benefit on a former Cabinet Minister, Mr. Gillespie. My understanding of the terms of the agreement between the consortium and Mr. Gillespie is that, in the event that he wishes to sell his equity interest in the consortium, the consortium will pay him $250,000. On the other hand, if the consortium approaches Mr. Gillespie and asks him to sell his interest, they will pay him $750,000.

In the Prime Minister's opinion, what did Mr. Gillespie do to earn the $250,000 or the $750,000? I would like to suggest that what he did was to arrange a loan to the consortium from the federal Government of $1.9 million.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member missed a couple of the points which were made earlier in the discussion. He suggests that the federal Government conferred a benefit on Mr. Gillespie. That is the whole point. It did not. The federal Government does not have these funds. They were transferred under the oil substitution agreement. They were transferred to the Consolidated Revenue Fund—

Some Hon. Members: Wrong.

Mr. Trudeau: If they would pay attention over there, maybe they will not be asking the same question over and over again. These funds were in the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Government of Nova Scotia. That is point No. 1. Point two, the agreement says that none of these funds will be used to pay Mr. Gillespie. Point three, the agreement was not negotiated by the Government of Canada, by the former Minister of Energy or by the Deputy Prime Minister; it was negotiated by the members of the consortium among themselves, so that the minority shareholder—it was negotiated in fact by—

Mr. Crosby: It was negotiated by P. J. Read in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Trudeau: It was negotiated by Gulf with Mr. Gillespie.

Mr. Crosby: P. J. Read.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, this is done all the time when a consortium is put together with minority shareholders and when the majority shareholders want to preserve an option to buy them off. If they exercise that option, yes, Mr. Gillespie will presumably receive the funds mentioned by the Hon. Member. He will not receive them from the federal Government. He will not even receive them from the Government of Nova Scotia. He will not receive them under a deal conceived by this Government or even by the Government of Nova Scotia. He will receive them under a deal conceived by the shareholders themselves.

DURATION OF GUIDELINES' APPLICABILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Throughout the Question Period the Prime Minister has been suggesting that the two years elapsed time before raising this case has somehow been crucial to the issue of the appearance of wrongdoing. In his view is there some kind of statute of limitation on the appearance of wrongdoing? Is it two weeks, two months, or two years? Surely the Prime Minister's argument is absurd. I would ask him to comment on that.

• (1200)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member had done his homework he would know that there is no statute of limitations. It is not one year, it is not two years, and it is not five years.

Mr. Broadbent: That is right.

Mr. Trudeau: The guidelines which apply to Ministers do not state any period of time.

Mr. Broadbent: Right.

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore, the only relevance of the two years was whether the Minister himself could conceivably have thought of the fact that this former Minister was under another guideline. Former Ministers are under the two-year rule. Because, in the first day in which this question was raised, the Opposition Members kept speaking of dates and of the two-year guideline, it became apparent that they were not even right on their facts, that it was more than two years before the present Minister became involved in the deal. That does not mean that, if it had been more or less, that the guidelines, as applying to him, would have changed. I am not making his defence on that point.

Miss MacDonald: You did yesterday.

Mr. Trudeau: I am just making his defence on the fact that the eternal guidelines have not been breached because there was no improper influence, there was no privileged access, and there was no preferential treatment.

Miss MacDonald: "Or the appearance".

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, if the Prime Minister had listened to the question with care, he would find that I was referring to the time of the incident, occurring some time ago, and to the appearance of wrongdoing emerging now, which he seems to think is somehow irrelevant to the argument. We on this side of the House think it is crucial. We think he is wrong. However, I would like to ask the Prime Minister another question.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): The other assertion which the Prime Minister seems to have been making throughout the Question Period is that there is some kind of equation between proper Cabinet leadership, Cabinet responsibility, and legality, whereas those of us who believe in parliamentary Government know that there is a distinction between morality and legality in political practice.

If he wants to make this equation, does he not realize that a system of guidelines which refers to appearances is really irrelevant? Does he not realize that what he is really saying is that all we need in this country is the Criminal Code? If that is what he is saying, does he not realize that he really does not understand what is required in a parliamentary democracy?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member prefaced his statement by three preambles, each one of which began with "if". The "ifs" should be answered in the opposite way. I do understand that there is a difference between criminality and guidelines, and therefore the conclusion which the Hon. Member drew was false. Once again, the appearance is something which—

Miss MacDonald: One that you can throw out the window.

Mr. Trudeau: The only reason I talk of the lapse of time is that, if it were obvious, then it seems to me someone would have thought of complaining about the indecency of this before. I am not saying that there is a prescription, that there is a statute of limitations, but there is a test which is well known and which I will not insist on—

Mr. Crosby: Time heals all wounds.

Mr. Trudeau: —but which has been used time out of mind: Quad semper, quad ubique, quad ab omnibus.

Mr. Crosbie: That's the Jesuit coming out.

Mr. Trudeau: I know that this is beyond the Hon. Member for St. John's West, but I can say—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Res ipsa loquitur.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Now I will turn to Greek.

Mr. Crosbie: "The thing speaks for itself!"

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, you don't have to translate it.

Mr. Crosbie: I am translating it for you.

Mr. Trudeau: Thank you. How about translating the Greek, "Ta zoa étrekhe"? And that applies to him.

Mr. Crosbie: Andrezesthe krateousthe.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, February 17, 1983, and finds that the petitions meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HERBERT—RECORDING OF ADMITTANCE TO AND DEPARTURE FROM PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, my question of privilege deals directly with the right of a Member of Parliament to have free and unimpeded access to his or her office at any and all hours of the day and night and not be subjected to any recording of his or her comings or goings.

Last evening, after ten years of free access to my office in the Confederation Building, I was stopped and asked for identification. This in itself is not an issue, although there were somewhat humiliating aspects in that it was carried out in front of other employees who have been aware of my identity for the last decade.

My privilege was, in my opinion, violated when my name was recorded on a list. Inquiries elicited the information that my entry and exit to my office was to be recorded on each and every occasion after 7.30 in the evening. As Your Honour is aware, our committee activities, which are an integral part of our work here on Parliament Hill, continue until ten o'clock p.m. and sometimes later. Whatever security measures may be felt necessary should not apply solely during our evening work period, as if such work times differred from any other time during the day.

Of additional concern is the use to which such lists can be put if they fall into the wrong hands since there is no verification of their authenticity. Quite apparently, since an Hon. Member is not asked to sign in and out, an identity mistake can be made which might not bother anybody in the private sector but which could have considerable influence on the assessment of the conduct of an Hon. Member by his constituents.

Personally, I consider the recording of the times of entry and exit of an Hon. Member in and out of his or her office during regular working hours to be an invasion of his or her privacy and a practice fraught with abuse which could have a direct influence on the election of the people's representatives.

On the assumption, Madam Speaker, that you recognize that I do have a question of privilege, may I suggest that you take the matter under advisement. May I further suggest that, at least during the interim period, no records be kept of the movement of MPs between the hours of seven o'clock a.m. and eleven o'clock p.m. on weekdays.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: First, I do not believe that this is a question of privilege; it concerns administrative decisions. I would welcome a discussion in my office with either the Hon. Member or the representatives of the different Parties.

Mr. Nowlan: It certainly is privilege.

Madam Speaker: I want to say to the Hon. Member that the presence of anyone in the buildings which we call the House of Commons is recorded and has been recorded for a long time. These records are kept in order to ascertain who is in the buildings and how many people are in the buildings for security and fire reasons. We have always kept a record of the number of people who were in the buildings, expecially after hours, because one must assume that most people have left their offices by that time.

As for the Hon. Member being required to sign his name, I am sure that was a mistake. Members of Parliament should not be required to sign their names when they go in and out of the buildings, because the guards are trained to recognize Hon. Members. Perhaps the Hon. Member was unlucky and had to deal with one of the guards who happened to be new or simply did not recognize him. It is quite clear that Hon. Members do not have to sign in and out of their offices. Other people who enter the buildings will be required to sign.

Concerning the records, I can assure Hon. Members that those records are not kept on our files forever. They are automatically destroyed. They are simply kept for the purpose of knowing who is in the buildings on a particular day for fire and security reasons.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Joining in the discussion on that particular point, may I indicate that on many occasions it is impossible for the security staff to ascertain who is in the building or who is leaving the building. There are many social occasions when people are going in and out of the buildings between ten-thirty o'clock p.m. and eleven-thirty o'clock p.m. There is no record being kept at that time, nor has there been a record kept, as to who is going in or out, be it stranger, employee, officer of the House, Member of Parliament or Senator.

I would suggest that this is an administrative matter, as Your Honour said. The rules state that administrative matters are to stand referred to the Members' Services Committee. Since Members and their privileges are being affected, I find it strange indeed that this matter was not referred to the Committee for consideration before action was taken.

Madam Speaker: It can be referred to the Committee. If the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) wants to refer it to the Committee, he is perfectly free to do so.

Mr. Lambert: The Chair.

Madam Speaker: Not necessarily the Chair. The channels through which the Speaker is informed about requirements or requests from Members is through the Management and Members' Services Committee. If the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil is not satisfied with my answer today, of course, he can refer the matter to the Management and Members' Services Committee.

• (1210)

Mr. Lambert: You should ask the Members.

Madam Speaker: I might also ask the Members. It is an advisory committee to me and I may ask them to examine this question. What I am telling the House is that the Members present have always been recorded, as far as I know. The information that I just received this morning is that every single person who enters the building is recorded, be it for a social occasion or something else. That is a necessity for security reasons and in case of fire. If Hon. Members object to that kind of administrative decision, I am quite willing to discuss it and I am sure that the guards will be happy to comply with any future instructions that we give them. I am just informing the Members of what the situation is at the present time.

Mr. Lambert: That is patently wrong.

Madam Speaker: It is not wrong.

PETITIONS

MR. THACKER—RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTATION OF JAPANESE AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition signed by some 60 petitioners from the City of Lethbridge and region. They wish to voice their opposition to the restrictions placed on the importation of Japanese automobiles. The implications of these restrictions prompted them to avail themselves of their ancient right to petition this House because their personal futures and freedoms are at stake. This is certainly a justification for their desire to be heard and a stimulus for action on the part of this House to consider their grievances.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS OF CANADA

Question No. 4,640—Mr. MacKay:

What are the ten largest contingent liabilities included in "Pending and Threatened Litigation" in Volume 1, Section 12.7 of the 1981-82 Public Account of Canada and, in each case, what are the amounts of contingent liabilities and the details of litigations?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services):

	Amount of Contingent Liability (Amount of claim) as at March 31, 1982	Contingent Liability	Description
(1)	$1,000,000,000	Claim related to ownership of land	Plaintiffs are claiming unextinguished aboriginal title over a large area of northern Alberta, including the exclusive use and enjoyment of all the natural resources in the area claimed. Plaintiff have impleaded the federal and a provincial Crown corporation and several major oil companies. They are also asking the Court to declare void all permits and leases already issued for the exploration and extraction of natural resources in this area. In the alternative, if these aboriginal rights are held to have been extinguished, they ask for compensation of one billion dollars.
(2)	$ 181,000,000	Claim related to ownership of land	Plaintiffs allege that the 1909 surrender was invalid because there was no proper surrender meeting, no proper notice of a meeting, and no majority of the Band as required by the Indian Act.
(3)	$ 130,000,000	Breach of agreement	Alleged breached of the Crown's obligation to provide health and social services under the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement.
(4)	$ 125,000,000	Claim related to ownership of land	Claim relates to a 1902 surrender. Allegations of fraud, cœrcion, breach of trust and the majority issue.
(5)	$ 95,000,000	Damages	As a result of the importation of tobacco plants and the subsequent outbreak of "blue mould" disease, an action has been initiated against the Crown for its alleged negligence in failing to prevent the above-mentioned outbreak.
(6)	$ 71,000,000	Loss of revenue	Plaintiffs allege that, subsequent to the 1957 surrender of reserve lands for leasing, the Crown failed to exercise the degree of care, stewardship and prudent management required of a trustee, with a resulting loss of revenue to the plaintiffs.
(7)	$ 62,000,000	Claim related to memoranda of agreement	Plaintiffs seek a declaration that five memoranda of agreement to provide funds for a variety of needs are valid and enforceable and seek an order to the defendants to give immediate effect to these agreements.

Order Paper Questions

	Amount of Contingent Liability (Amount of claim) as at March 31, 1982	Contingent Liability	Description
(8)	$ 60,000,000	Breach of trust obligations	Plaintiffs allege that under a treaty the Crown undertook to provide them with a reserve sufficient to allow one square mile per family of five and that this obligation was not fulfilled.
(9)	$ 60,000,000	Civil action	Plaintiff claims harassment, wrongful seizure, false arrest, false imprisonment, economic loss, loss of profit.
(10)	$ 50,000,000	Claim related to ownership of land	Plaintiffs allege that the surrender in 1908 was invalid.

FARM ENUMERATIVE SURVEY

Question No. 4,651—Mr. Mayer:

What is the over-all cost of the annual "farm enumerative survey" that is done by Statistics Canada and what is the information gathered used for?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Statistics Canada reports:

The Farm Enumerative Survey is a general purpose annual survey conducted in the designated Canadian Wheat Board area at an estimated cost of $1.1 million for the fiscal year 1982/83. The statistics produced from the survey are used for many different purposes. Expenditure and acreage data provide a major portion of the data used in the calculation of payouts under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. Farm expenditure estimates are also used in calculation of net farm income which, in turn, is part of the calculation of Canada's national income. In addition, data related to farm crop production are used by farmers, farmer co-operatives and such agencies as the Canadian Wheat Board in planning crop production and marketing strategies.

Livestock information from the survey provides an indication of the future supply of animals and animal products. All segments of the agriculture and related industries are thus provided with unbiased information to be used in planning their production and marketing activities.

Finally, all Farm Enumerative Survey data are of relevance to federal and provincial Departments of Agriculture in the development and management of policies and programs aimed at the food and agriculture sector.

1982 AVERAGE LIVE FED CATTLE PRICE

Question No. 4,658—Mr. Hargrave:

1. What was the average live fed cattle (steers and heifers) market price for 1982 as required by the Agricultural Stabilization Act?

2. What was the previous average five year fed cattle market price immediately prior to 1982?

3. What was the previous average five year fed cattle market price prior to 1982 adjusted for the cost of production factor?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The average market returns for the 1982 marketing period are estimated to be in the range of $74 to $74.50 per cwt., basis A1/A2 steers and heifers.

2. The previous five-year average market price (same basis) was $65.49 per cwt.

3. The previous five-year average market returns, adjusted for the cost of production factor, has not yet been calculated.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the other questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—GOVERNMENT ELECTION PROMISES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That, in light of the Government's outright betrayal of the Canadian people and its repudiation of its 1980 election promises to reduce unemployment, combat inflation, avoid inflationary tax hikes and excessive energy price increases, reduce the deficit, and implement an industrial strategy for Canada, this House calls upon the Government to face its responsibility to Canadians and take immediate action to live up to the commitments that it made in 1980 or resign.

He said: Madam Speaker, today is a tragic anniversary in the history of this country. In the words of President Roosevelt after Pearl Harbour: "This is a day that will live in infamy". I refer, of course, to February 18, 1980, the day on which this Government was elected to office. It was a day which inaugurated the most dismal and disastrous three years in the history of our country.

Three years ago today, a country that was prosperous, a country that was buoyant, a country that was full of hope and promise, started on the long, downward path of Liberal Government despair, ineptitude and disaster. Canadians who were gainfully employed three years ago are now walking the streets. Firms that were prosperous three years ago and that had some hope are now in the bankruptcy courts. The pleasant, smiling countryside with its prosperous farms is now rapidly becoming deserted and full of despair, due to the mismanagement of the Liberal Government sitting opposite.

Young people have been forced out of their homes; others have seen their hopes of security blasted and torn asunder. Older people have seen the Government renege and cut back on their hopes of a worry-free old age, paid for with their own contributions. Not even the widowed mother or orphan has been spared by a Government which spends without stint to realize its own peculiar centralist and socialist objectives, and passes on the bill to Canadians without explanation or without apology.

One must go back to the 1940s to equal the distress and uneasiness which prevails in the economy today. This country has been run headlong into an economic crisis of the first magnitude, due largely to the mismanagement and incompetence of this Government. Brief after brief after brief, from both labour and management, have made it clear that the economy has been staggered by a series of rude shocks deriving from this Government's policies or lack of action.

Nothing is so urgent in the minds of millions of Canadians who have been made to suffer because of this Government's indifference and neglect as to remove this Government from office. Incompetent, inept, untrustworthy, careless in its corruption and heartless in its approach to the problems, this Government has lost the confidence of the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: One after another, its policies have proven to be exactly the wrong remedies at the wrong time. From FIRA to the NEP, from the CIDC to Canagrex, they have turned out to be incredibly costly, cumbersome and destructive.

Trust remains a major ingredient in human affairs. Trust has departed from this Government. Canadians do not trust this Government. Foreign countries do not trust this Government. Our friends and allies do not trust this Government.

Yesterday we had one of those little vest pocket lectures which spring so readily to the lips of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whenever he is in trouble. Like the squid of the underseas caverns, he retreats first this way, then that way, emitting an opaque cloud in order to befog the issue.

It is hard to believe that a man of the Prime Minister's intelligence fails to understand that when two Ministers sign a contract providing monetary gain to a former Cabinet colleague, that conduct is not condoned in any code of ethics in the world from the Code of Hammurabi to the Judeo-Christian ethic.

I come now to the shabby record of broken Liberal election promises. It is a shocking spectacle, Mr. Speaker. It is the record of a Government which over and over, blatantly and furiously, broke its word to those Canadians who had accepted on trust its sparkling promises, promises about full employment; promises about an industrial strategy; promises about a buoyant economy! Promises! Promises! Promises!

Here was a Government and Party which promised, in the words of one of their former crystal ball-gazing leaders, "A new heaven and a new earth". Nothing was sacred to this Party and to that Prime Minister. In election after election they promised a brighter world and a nobler future. They promised megaprojects. They promised high technology. They promised something for the aged, something for youth, something for the newly married, something for students, something for the scientists and something for the farmers. Those promises now read like a litany of broken dreams.

● (1220)

As Canadians contemplate the wreckage of those bright dreams—the farm foreclosures, the abolition of the Crow rate, the monopolistic food marketing policy of Canagrex, the sprawling empire of Crown corporations responsible to no one but the Prime Minister, the bankruptcies, the unemployment, the incredible expenditures, the demand on Parliament for blank cheques—they can only ask themselves whether they are dreaming.

When I was a young boy I read Robert Louis Stevenson's book "The Wrecker". Members will recall in that book that a group of unprincipled individuals lit bonfires on the beach to lure ships on to the shore so that the sailors could be massacred and their property plundered. That is what Canadians must be thinking of today when reflecting back on the lure of the promises of 1980 and what they are getting today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: No Government in the history of any free Western nation with a parliamentary tradition has ever been so irresponsible or so reckless. No Government has so quickly lost the trust of the people, the confidence of investors and the friendship of our neighbours and allies. The reason is that this Government is totally unpredictable. The only predictable thing about it is that if there is any way of screwing up things, it will do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I say that with my usual good feeling. What did they say in 1980? They were going to establish a petroleum pricing and auditing agency. They were going to construct a reversible pipeline to the Province of Quebec. Somewhere along the line that got reversed. The Government's share of increased oil prices through PetroCan would go to the poorer regions of Canada. I presume those are the regions where "Dire Straits" is located.

They were going to boost alternate energy through an alternate energy corporation. That would take in wind, sun, tidal power, biomass and liquid coal. Well, the last one proved a bonanza for at least one former Minister. As for the wind, they have not harnessed it yet, except here in the House every time they speak. As for the sun, it is still shining in spite of them. It is the only thing left in this country that is free.

On January 17, 1980 the Prime Minister promised to double track the CNR. He must have been serious. He is still promising to double track the CNR. On January 10 the Prime Minister said the Liberal Party would provide hundreds of thousands of jobs. They did that. The only hitch was that the jobs were in Japan, Taiwan, Hong Kong and West Germany.

He said we would expand FIRA so that Canadians would control the economy. FIRA helped the economy like the earthquake helped San Francisco. He said he would set up an international trading company. Probably this would follow along the lines of similar state corporations in the Soviet Union and the satellite states. They have not done this yet because is still some of the domestic economy they have not finished wrecking.

The industrial strategy would encourage workers to become shareholders in the firms in which they work. They should have followed through on that one. So many firms went bankrupt, nobody wanted them but the workers.

There are some relevant quotations from the Prime Minister. They do not have quite the ring of Chairman Mao nor the predictability factor of Nostradamus, but for the student of broken promises they are not without a certain macabre interest. In Toronto on January 12, 1980 the Prime Minister said:

> This Party will not simply stand by and let the recession come.

No. They brought it on.

> We will fight it and overcome it.

The Prime Minister in his own personal Pilgrim's Progress was ready to wrestle anything, anywhere, any time. He would wrestle inflation to the ground. He would fight and overcome. He did this by the simple expedient of jumping into the 707 and taking off. In January, 1980 the Prime Minister said:

> We have an economic program for the eighties which will enhance dignity, create opportunity and provide security.

It did just that, but the people it reached were few in number. They were all either in the Cabinet or were ex-Cabinet Ministers. In February, 1980 in Toronto the Prime Minister really got off a bomb:

> I would want to manage the economy in such a way that interest rates would in fact come down—

Then there was the famous statement by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), who said on CITY-TV on February 7, 1980 that he would resign his seat if interest rates did not come down. Somehow, as time went on, his seat became more precious than his own personal integrity.

Then we had the Prime Minister's personal formula. He said:

> We would bring interest rates down by fighting inflation, not by manipulating the dollar.

So much for bright words tarnished by subsequent events. The Prime Minister got off some gems in January, 1980 when he said:

> The deficit will be reduced in a phased and orderly fashion.
> We will not add to the deficit by adding new programs.

As the poet said:

> Words, words, words, I know not what they mean.

We are at a point now where this whole nation has expressed a total lack of confidence in this Government. We are at a point now where this whole nation wants them to go. Consumer confidence has dwindled away. Business and industry are consumed by uneasiness and uncertainty. Investor confidence has plummeted to zero.

At the present time the most serious impediment to the recovery of our economy is the presence of this Government. The single most constructive act which this Government could perform in the best interests of this country would be to resign and give Canadians back their inalienable right to elect a Government of their choice.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions? Comments? Debate?

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me to follow the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) in discussing this very serious questions and very serious motion.

Three years ago the Liberal Party perpetrated the greatest electoral fraud in Canada's history. After an election campaign in which every possible deceitful promise was made to the Canadian people, that tired old gang took over again. Today we want to examine in the House some of the promises made to the Canadian people by this fraudulent gang of thugs and bring them forward for the Canadian people to examine once again.

On February 9, 1980, they said that a new Liberal Government will work to reduce unemployment through a program of responsible fiscal and monetary management. What happened? In January, 1983 a record 1.6 million Canadians were out of work with a net loss of 578,000 jobs between August, 1981 and January, 1983. The unemployment rate in January, 1983 was 12.4 per cent compared to an unemployment rate in January, 1980 of 7.6 per cent; and according to the Economic Council, the unemployment rate will be in excess of 10 per cent for the next five years.

Unemployment Insurance benefits in 1982 were equal to $8.5 billion, more than the combined Government spending of the four Atlantic Provinces.

But more serious than the 1.6 million Canadians who do not have a job, Mr. Speaker, are the 500,000 Canadians who are so discouraged that they have given up looking for work, and the 390,000 Canadians who are not working to their full capacity. That is a situation which just cannot be allowed to continue in this country. Forty-eight per cent more workers are unemployed now than in 1979. In the past, unemployment has risen because the number of jobs has not increased as fast as the labour force. Today, unemployment is rising because jobs are simply disappearing. The year 1982 was the first time in a quarter of a century that we had a year-over-year decline in the number of jobs.

In my riding of Simcoe North, the number of people employed in the service and manufacturing sectors has fallen by 16 per cent since that election of 1980. It is bad in the Orillia area, which I just referred to, but it is even worse in Midland and Penetanguishene where there is an unemployment rate of 33 per cent, which is a result of the failure of this Government to live up to any of their promises. Midland and Penetanguishene had ten manufacturing plants completely shut down. RCA, with 1,220 employees, is shut down completely. We went to see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the summer of 1982 and he promised help in arranging for the sale of this plant, but he has done nothing. The Liberal Government has done nothing to help RCA and those 1,220 Canadians who want to work. It failed them completely. That is the legacy of the 1980 election promises for the riding of Simcoe North.

This Government said: "We will not simply stand by and let the recession come; we will fight it and we will overcome it". That is a quote from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in January, 1980. But, Mr. Speaker, they did not fight it. They did not overcome it. They did everything possible to bring on the recession. That promise was kept in reverse. The Government brought on the recession which Canadians are now fighting.

One of the favourite tactics of this wasted front bench of the Liberal Party is to attribute the poor state of our economy to international factors. Let us deal with some of those international factors. In the United States the GNP has dropped by only 1.9 from its peak in the third quarter. In Canada it has dropped 6.9 per cent. Why do we have to drop that much farther and that much faster than the United States if we are linked to them, as they say? Industrial production in the United States dropped 11.5 per cent by October of last year from a high level, while in Canada the corresponding figure was 18.8 per cent. I ask the Liberal Government again, why does industrial production have to drop so much faster and harder in Canada than the United States if it is an international situation?

Manufacturers in Canada reported in the third quarter that they were operating at the lowest level of their capacity since records were first kept in 1961. I ask Hon. Members opposite, did they promise that they were going to have that effect on the manufacturers of Canada, on the production, and on the jobs which have been lost as a direct result of their inaction, ineptness and lack of caring for anyone who works in this country?

Let me talk about the famous Liberal energy policy. They said: "The Liberal price hike will be less than half of what the Tories plan to inflict on you; we will negotiate an increase of less than 14 cents". That may sound like a specious comment out of the comic section of the newspapers, but it is not, Mr. Speaker. It is a comment made by the present Prime Minister. This is by far the most often broken promise of the Liberal Government. Gasoline prices, which were promised to rise only 14 cents, have gone up 17 times. The price of OPEC oil is going down but Canadian prices are continuing to go up.

The Government did not promise exactly the kind of national energy policy we got, but we got one all right. Canadians got a national energy policy and, brother, did it do something for us. The Government's energy policy resulted in oil rigs leaving Alberta and the cancellation of the Alsands project, which would have meant jobs for hundreds of thousands of Canadians; the cancellation of the Cold Lake project; the loss of the spin-off benefits, not just for Alberta where the oil is in the ground, or British Columbia or Saskatchewan, but for Ontario. We in this Party happen to believe that the energy policy is something which should benefit all Canadians, not from a price standpoint so much as from a job standpoint, because those jobs which could have been there for us in the energy industry are in all Provinces. That is what this Government neglects to consider when it looks at the electoral map and sees there are no seats there for it in Alberta, so it just does not care. In the meantime, it inflicts pain and misery on the entire country.

Mr. Smith: Nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: If it is not true, you tell me where the jobs went.

Mr. Smith: We love Alberta.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, you love Alberta. That kind of love anyone can do without, thank you very much.

I would like to refer to my riding once again. In my riding of Simcoe North, we wanted the megaprojects to go ahead because we have industries that supply the energy industries. We have Fahramet, a company in my riding which produces refractor tubes used in the energy industry. But what happened? As a result of the Liberal national energy policy, it went on work sharing. It cut back on its staff. That is the result in my riding of what the Liberal Government has done about energy prices.

In Canada we now have a $27.36 billion, or whatever it is today, deficit as a result of the mismanagement of the Liberal Government and its failure to keep its promises. We have an interest burden. Interest on our national debt is $700 for every man, woman and child in Canada. That is $1,700 per year per taxpayer. The interest on the debt in 1982-83 equalled 4.8 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product. When the present Prime Minister took office it was 2 per cent.

This country, as a result of mismanagement of the economy by the Liberal Government, has lost its fiscal flexibility. In 1968-69 one tax dollar in nine was needed to service our debt. Today, one tax dollar in three services our debt. As a result of the massive Government borrowing the private sector interest rates go up.

Lastly, when we talk about the deficit we talk about the confidence which people have in the country. The confidence in this Government, Mr. Speaker, is absolutely gone. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) this week had the nerve to ask us (a) to let him introduce a Bill without any financial information, a Bill to borrow money; and (b), without any notice to go ahead and introduce his Bill so he could borrow some $19 billion. Both Parties on this side, Mr. Speaker, have rejected that offer because he comes forward with no financial statements, no projections. Oh, yes, he has offered us projections to March 31, and I would venture to say that, given that the Minister of Finance has only six weeks in which to goof on those predictions, probably his prediction for this year is as close as any prediction any Minister of Finance in that Government has ever made. That is not saying very much, but we are saying it because he has only six weeks to goof, so that is probably going to be the closest prediction. But once again, it is a broken promise to the people of Canada who put that tawdry group in office on the basis of their election promises.

I have a minute or two, Mr. Speaker, and I want to talk about bankruptcies. Just what has happened to the Canadian economy as a result of the Liberal Government's inept handling of the financial situation in this country? Personal bankruptcies have climbed. There has been a 46 per cent increase in the number of personal bankruptcies since 1980,—thanks to the way this Government has handled the country's affairs. Those bankruptcies cover the manufacturing section, construction section, all areas of the economic sector, all as a result of the failure of this Government to do anything about the economy.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I say that this Government has made promise after promise which it will be reminded of over the next few months and in the next election. There is no question but that it is going to be with a heavy heart that every Member on that side seeks re-election if he or she has the nerve to go back to the people and say: "Yes, I am the candidate who promised you lower energy prices. I am the Member of Parliament who sat here from February, 1980 and watched interest rates skyrocket, bankruptcies climb, watched foreclosures and powers of sale. I am the Member of Parliament that you could not get hold of when all those problems were occurring. But I am back here and I am promising once again to give you all of those things." I tell you, Mr. Speaker, and I tell the Members of the House on the opposite side: this time it will not wash.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) on a question.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, the Opposition Parties seem to be advancing the thesis that if a government is low in the polls, as this Government is at about 30 per cent, then it has lost the moral right to govern and should resign. I am wondering if the hon. gentleman subscribes to that thesis.

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the question. If the Hon. Member would repeat the question, I am certainly prepared to answer it.

Mr. Kelly: Based on what he said and what his predecessor said, it would appear to me that the Opposition is developing the argument that any Government low in the polls, as this Government is at 30 per cent, has lost the moral right to govern and should resign. I am wondering if he subscribes to that.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion from the Hon. Member on the other side that there are any morals on that side of the House threw me off, and that is why I did not quite understand the question. I want to assure the Hon. Member that polls have nothing to do with how you govern, but morality and trust do, and you just do not have it on that side.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that he and others on that side do in fact subscribe to that theory, which they are pressing very hard: so if there is any intellectual honesty on that side of the House—which I think is an important ingredient in any debate in this Chamber—I am asking him if he felt that way back in 1979 when his Government's standing in the polls was at 23 per cent.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, first of all I must confess amazement. Perhaps the Hon. Member was not here for Question Period and did not see the lack of morals on that side. Perhaps he did not notice that. I should tell him that the lack of morality is all on the Liberal side of the House.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member on the judgment he is making of other people. I wonder if he would explain to this House what is more immoral than making moral judgments of others?

Mr. Crosbie: No wonder they support the Government.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I can see you shaking your head and I share your amazement at the question after what just occurred in Question Period.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, I never had the opportunity to engage in this particular aspect of the proceedings of the House and I beg your indulgence and that of other Members while I try to become acquainted with this new system.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) was attacking the energy policy of the Government by insisting, on the one hand, that our oil prices were so high that they were hampering the consumer mercilessly, yet insisting on the other hand that oil prices were not high enough because the oil rigs had left the country in despair of getting higher prices. I ask him which of these two criticisms reflects his policy or that of the Conservative Party. Are oil prices too high, when you are wearing your eastern consumer hat, or are they too low, when you are speaking from the western perspective? Make up your mind, if you have one.

Mr. Lewis: Well, the one thing about this Party, Mr. Speaker, is that we do have a western hat, whereas the Liberal Government, as everyone knows, has no western hat and no northern hat; and in fact when you take questions from that particular Member you wonder what they have under the hat they wear in Ontario.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I count myself fortunate to have the opportunity to enter this debate on the third anniversary of the election of this Government on February 18, 1980. It was my intention to take some time to comment on the constructive alternatives and policies that the mover of the motion, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Nielsen), put in his remarks to support his criticism contained in the motion. However, I am somewhat taken off guard because, if you review his speech and the speech of the Hon. Member who has just spoken, there is, of course, not one single sentence with one single idea, one single constructive criticism, offered by the Opposition. Therefore, I am really caught short because I have nothing positive or constructive to respond to in the comments of the speakers thus far.

It is important in any government, in any mandate, to reflect on what I perceive as being some very high points and, indeed, some very low points in my experience, which in this Parliament has been exactly three years. My election to this House for the first time, therefore, was on February 18, 1980. I found myself fortunate to have been part of this Parliament which after a long time finally adopted, and is in the process of implementing, a constructive, comprehensive national program for the development and protection of the energy resources that are so important to all Canadians.

History will recall no doubt that in this century the initiative taken by the Government, given a mandate by the people of Canada on February 18, 1980, will go down as one of the most important economic initiatives of any Government at any time. The first objective of the plan, to secure adequate supply for future generations, has been achieved. The second objective was to achieve that at a fair price, and that has been accomplished.

The Opposition are critical, in part, of some of the pricing policies of the Government but they did not indicate that their policy, as I understand it, is to charge a price at least 10 per cent higher than that which prevails under the National Energy Program. Indeed, some Members of the Party opposite have argued that the price should be even higher than world price, that we should lead in soaking Canadians in the area of pricing. We have not heard any policy from the Conservative Party but I have perceived this from public statements by individual Members of that Party.

That was a high point of the last three years of this Government of Canada. Probably equally important and certainly as important and fulfilling to me was the opportunity to be part of a Government that was responsible for patriation of the legal framework of this country and the return of the Constitution. More important in that process was the granting to all Canadians in future of the Charter of Human Rights, which is second to none in the world. Those words come from the Leader of the New Democratic Party. The Charter grants rights and protections for every Canadian from coast to coast into the future, and it is second to none in the world. For me it has been a thrill to be part of this Parliament and of the process that resulted in that achievement. It is no mean achievement by this Parliament.

I was in the Chamber on the evening that the results of the referendum in the Province of Quebec were announced. That referendum was the springboard in the energy and activity that resulted in the return of the Constitution. I was here when we received the information that the majority of people in that part of Canada said they were Canadians first. Following that, all Canadians through their representatives, federal and provincial, joined in seeking the return of the Constitution to give us a basis from which to address the future, not as it affects the individual Canadian through the Charter of Rights but through the representatives of federal and provincial Governments, and to proceed to the next challenge. That is the continuing and most important challenge of this Parliament, the achievement of economic recovery in the country and the formation of an economic base that will emerge hand in hand with the legal and social services that have been achieved through the Charter of Rights.

The third and equally important highlight is my small role as a Member of this Government and of this Party in signalling to the Canadian people that this Parliament would address leadership in the process of economic recovery. We did that by signaling to Canadians that restraint was important. I knew that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and senior Ministers of the Government have, through intergovernmental meetings, attempted to draw the support of the Provinces. I think of their meeting in January or February, 1982 on the restraint program.

Unfortunately, I suppose, it was a little too soon. When the Government found out it could not carry the support of the Provinces, it introduced a program of restraint in the budget of 1982. At that time it adopted a restraint program which applied, first of all, to Members of this House, to Members of the other place, to those who assist this House, this Government, agencies of the Government and any agency that has contact with the Government. We said that restraint would have to be one of the first steps in a long program of economic recovery. The program has been dubbed the six and five program. On the initiative of this Government and supported by the Official Opposition, it was felt that that was the place to start economic recovery, to show that if we had any excess of financial ability it should be used in productive ways and that other people should be willing to make sacrifices. We started that program in the House of Commons. I predict that in years to come it will be identified as a very significant start on a program of economic recovery in the country.

Like all industrial countries and like all developing countries in the last few years, we have reached a watershed. The old economies do not work and the old systems are creaking. The world economies have reached a watershed. We know the challenge of this country and other industrialized countries as well as the developing countries is to establish a new restructuring. Better ways must be found to make the economies work.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, those are the high points to me. I count myself privileged to have been a Member of the House involved in these very important initiatives and to be a Member of the Government with some input into the decisions and leadership demonstrated in this short three-year period.

There were also low points, Mr. Speaker. I will not dwell on them because the Opposition has spent the last 45 minutes painting an unconstructive, doomsday scenario. You would not think that anything was possible or that there was any hope for Canadians if you believed that doomsday scenario.

I offer this observation on the low point in the hope that it might be instructive and constructive. I compare the operation of this House and its federal system of government with my personal experience in municipal government in Metropolitan Toronto. As Mayor of the borough of Scarborough and a member of the Metropolitan Toronto Council, I found that we addressed problems quickly. I suppose it is the nature of the animal that the system of local government seems to be able to respond more quickly than the federal Government. I cannot describe the depth of frustration, for example, in watching this House take six months to attempt to get $300 million of assistance for the housing industry while I was housing Minister.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Minister of State for Finance had the floor.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment of the House for the lunch period, I was reminding Hon. Members and those observing the debate in the House of Commons today that February 18, 1980 was the initiation of this Government and that we were at the three-year anniversary of the mandate of the Government. Also I indicated that, in my view, this Thirty-second Parliament of Canada would be recorded as one of the most productive and significant in the history of all Parliaments of Canada.

I did that, drawing to mind three initiatives taken by the Government. The first was the securing of energy resources for Canadians in the future, brought under the control of all Canadians at a price which was affordable and which was 10 per cent less than the price of the Official Opposition, in a national program which is successful, even at this point of our mandate, and beyond our expectation of achieving conservation by Canadians in energy at a rate and degree we did not think would be possible when we began the program.

Second, this Parliament will be remembered because Canada received its own constitutional ability, with Governments sharing power in the country, to make agreements in the future as to how legal structures and laws will be amended to suit Canadians. Of course, a major component of repatriation was the inclusion of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, described by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) as the best Charter of Rights in the whole world.

Finally, the Government is in the process of addressing economic recovery. I reminded Hon. Members that the first step was the issue of restraint. We felt that all sectors of the Canadian economy and its people, but more important this House and we as Members, had to demonstrate leadership in the area of restraint, and we did that. The six and five program, as it has come to be known, was supported in the House by the largest majority of Members, including the Tory Party and the Liberal Government. The program was a start toward bringing some realism to the recovery of the economy which for Canada, being a trading country, was very important. I am referring to the issues upon which everyone reflects these days—the issue of productivity and the issue of the efficiency of our economy to compete with world markets.

I concluded my remarks by indicating that my experience was previously in municipal politics and by comparing it with the way in which the federal Government and the Parliament of Canada operate. Unhappily, the comparison was a disappointment. I have been a Member of the House for exactly three years. I have been disappointed by the slowness of the House in addressing economic problems in Canada. I fear for many sectors of the economy if we take as long for them as we did to get assistance for the housing industry, which has relied upon the Government for years and years for support. We tabled in the House a Bill to put $300 million into the construction of apartments, and it took until March to get it out of the House and build apartment buildings. Why, when that industry was in such trouble, did it take so long? Why did the industry have to go into turmoil?

Mr. Lewis: Because you were incompetent.

Mr. Cosgrove: I will tell the House why. It was because the Opposition stonewalled it. We had to use closure to get that money into the economy.

• (1410)

Now we are addressing the issue of economic recovery that is before us. We are addressing the plight of the unemployed in this country who are looking to this Parliament for some small assistance in refunds of income tax which they have paid. They are not working now and want refunds of the money which they earned.

What is this Parliament doing? We are asking that this Parliament give some urgency to that issue. We, as a Government, ask that this Parliament sit evenings to consider that matter. We should be sitting on weekends to consider the plight of the unemployed. Where is the sense of urgency in this system in addressing the plight of the unemployed? I find it very disappointing. It is extremely disappointing in comparison to the role that elected politicians play at other levels in this country. I do not wonder at the frustration of Canadians who observed Question Period today, while the economy and helping those who need help go unaddressed.

Mr. Lewis: Gillespie needs it all right.

Mr. Cosgrove: This is a negative motion. There is not one whit, word, sentence or paragraph of constructive suggestion from the Opposition; nor has any Opposition Member said anything constructive.

I have indicated that this Government, for example, has put over a billion dollars into the housing sector in the last 18 months. The $3,000 home grant has been responsible for over 150,000 sales of houses in this country, a good part of which involves new construction which, in turn, contributes to the work force.

We have taken many other initiatives. I think of the employment initiatives of this Government and the $500 million which drew support from the Provinces in the form of millions of dollars and is creating jobs across the country.

Last evening I had the opportunity to review a number of projects under the NEED Program that are having positive effects in communities in the Province of Ontario, where I reside. There are programs for building bridges, repairing recreation centres and firehalls. These are projects which are necessary for many communities, but more importantly, they are creating jobs. This Government is about the task of assisting those people in Canada who are looking for work.

Mr Lewis: Gillespie and Macdonald.

Mr. Cosgrove: This Government is being assisted in that effort with funds from the provincial Governments. We are being assisted with funds from the municipal level. All of these levels of Government are contributing in a positive and co-operative way to the provision of jobs. Employment is our most important challenge.

I repeat that this is a negative motion. There is not one indication in it of anything right about this country. There is no hope to be found in the Opposition resolution which is before us today. No one from that side will admit, for example, to the housing starts which have increased to an annually adjusted rate of 165,000 in January. Will they admit to the increase in the sale of passenger cars of 37 per cent from July, 1982, to a total of 66,800 in December, 1982? Will they admit to the Conference Board of Canada index of consumer confidence jumping 36 per cent, from 54.8 per cent in the second quarter to 74.7 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1982? Will they admit to senior business executives indicating optimism for the prospect of the economy, according to the Conference Board's survey?

Will they admit to Canada's trade surplus jumping to $21.6 billion in December, 1982, which is a 157 per cent increase from the previous record of $8.4 billion in 1980? Will they admit to the year-over-year rate of increase of the CPI having declined to 8.3 per cent in January of this year? Will they further admit that non-COLA wage settlements fell to 7.3 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1982? Will they admit that the Bank of Montreal has reduced its prime rate to 11.25 per cent? Will they admit to those things, Mr. Speaker? Will they admit to anything positive about the economy? I doubt it.

In summary, this Government has shown leadership which will be recognized with the three items I have referred to. This Government has identified economic recovery not only as its challenge but as the challenge to all Canadians. The Prime Minister said in his television address that the recovery will be faster, longer lasting and more firm if, in the process of recovery, Canadians can form a new partnership and new hope for the future in working together. I wish all Hon. Members of the House would join in that optimism.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, answers or comments.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister received an extra two minutes for his speech. I hope that does not detract from the ten minutes we have for questions.

I listened carefully to what the Minister said and I took accurate notes. I believe he will find that I quote him accurately, if he checks the blues. He said that he was proud to have been a part of this Parliament which obviously, written in the past perfect tense, indicates that he is already anticipating his eminent departure from this place. He said that the Charter grants rights to Canadian citizens. I would ask him if the Charter grants rights or did Canadians already have those rights?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I am flattered that the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) would deign that I am an eminent Member of this Parliament.

Mr. Friesen: Imminent, not eminent.

Mr. Cosgrove: Possibly there may be some imminent departures, but not so imminent, no doubt, as the present Leader of his Party.

I am somewhat puzzled by the Hon. Member's question, which I guess reflects the malaise of the Conservative Party. The Conservative Party participated in the debate which resulted in the Charter of Rights being supported by his Party. Now he has a question. Obviously, he did not support his Party. He has misgivings about what his Party voted for. He has misgivings that the Charter of Rights is not a good Charter. If he would specify those misgivings, I would be very interested to listen to his suggestions about how the rights of Canadians can be better secured than by the present Charter.

Mr. Friesen: The Minister is afraid to answer that question because he knows, as a result of the Question Period today, it is obvious that Canadians do need protection. I am afraid that the Charter may not give as much protection as we need from this kind of Government. I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question concerning his reference to the pride he took in "leadership in economic renewal" as Minister responsible for housing. There are a number of sites in my constituency where there are excavations which now have grass and weeds and water in the bottom of those excavations because the housing policy was changed many times within six months. Is that his idea of economic renewal?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the Government has directed over a billion dollars in the last 18 months from other sources of its operations to a variety of housing initiatives in this country. The Hon. Member must be living in another world if he does not recognize that the housing needs of Canadians are changing, that the needs of Canadians, depending upon age groups and other considerations, are changing all the time. The Government must be responsive to changing markets and changing needs. Using the Member's own riding, for example, the allocation to non-profit and co-op housing increased while I was Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing. Those people looking for low and moderately affordable accommodation had to be served. There was an overabundance of expensive apartment accommodation and we had to address the needs in the particular markets. Therefore, we had a variety of programs by which to address those needs. I have indicated the Canada rental supply plan, the Canada mortgage renewal plan and the non-profit and co-operative housing plan. These were all flexible and addressed needs as they arose in a changing housing environment.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, before asking my questions I would note that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) did indeed have a distinguished career as a municipal politician. He ran twice for the seat he now holds and then won it on the third occasion, and we hope to send him back there. However, in his present capacity as Minister of State for Finance, I wonder if he could assist the House with some simple mathematics.

In December, 1979 the price of heating oil was 70 cents a gallon. In December, 1982, after the completion of Liberal promises to hold down the price of energy, it was $1.40 a gallon. Could the Minister announce to the House the difference between $1.40 and 70 cents, to give us some idea what percentage increase that would be?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the Hon. Member's observation about my attempts to seek election to the House of Commons. What he says is quite true. As a matter of fact, it was a remarkable experience. Over the period of 15 months, I attempted to run on three occasions. I lost by 30,000 votes on the first occasion, by 10,000 on the second, and I won by 10,000 votes on the third attempt. I happen to represent the largest riding in Canada.

Mr. Lewis: That is their problem.

Mr. Cosgrove: I persisted because I was concerned, for example, about the housing policy of the Government in office.

Mr. Wilson: How about the energy policy, Paul?

Mr. Cosgrove: I am not so sure if the Hon. Member was a part of that Government, but I was concerned about its housing policy which would do away with non-profit and co-op housing.

However, on that point, I do not apologize. I thought the 10,000 majority that I received in order to come to the House was adequate. Certainly it was larger than the 66 votes which the Hon. Member received when he squeaked by to get into the House.

Mr. Lewis: I told the truth. That is the difference.

Mr. Cosgrove: Concerning the area of oil pricing, I do not know if the House Leader of the Tory Party was present when I indicated before lunch that no matter what the prices are under the policy of the Government, which is to restrict prices to 75 per cent of world price, it is 10 per cent less than the Official Opposition policy which was passed at the last national conference. I am sorry, I am not referring to the convention which was just held in Winnipeg, because the Tories did not deal with policy at that convention. However, the year before they did deal with the issue and recommended that the price be increased by 10 per cent over that which is the policy of the Government.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a short question of the Minister, who has made quite a lot of his concern for the unemployed. If I quote him correctly, "We should be sitting weekends to address the problems of the unemployed", I suspect that many of us would agree.

Mr. Fisher: It would not hurt. You would not sit in the evening the other day.

Mr. Bosley: However, this week Liberal Members have refused to let committees sit in certain circumstances, so let us just put that on the record.

I take it that since the Minister believes the House should be sitting in some special committee form, he is saying, in effect, that the decision by the Government to refer the question concerning economic growth to the Macdonald Commission and to give it three years to report is a decision he does not support.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, that is a very witty question by the Hon. Member.

An Hon. Member: It is a serious question.

Mr. Cosgrove: He has surprising, flexible, delightful wit and can use it to effect in the House. However, I must reiterate that that is a difficulty with the House. There are witty questions when what is at stake is the future of over one million unemployed who are waiting to receive funds to assist them because they are unemployed. Instead of solutions, we hear witty questions.

Mr. Lewis: And witless Ministers.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, let me ask the question in a more straightforward manner. The Minister is having some difficulty understanding a straight question. If this side of the House were to support an urgent joint committee on unemployment, would the Government side of the House support abandoning the Macdonald three-year delay?

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, in my personal view I think the House should first address the plight of people who are unemployed in Canada—

Mr. Thacker: Why don't you do something?

Mr. Cosgrove: —and receiving very modest benefits, who are trying very hard to find employment and are looking for additional income.

The way in which the House can most effectively assist those people with their incomes at this time is to address speedily the legislation presently before the House, which the Government has asked the House to consider, for example, in the evenings, but which was blocked by the Hon. Member's Party. That is the way in which we can address the problem.

Mr. Fisher: They were out campaigning.

Mr. Cosgrove: A long-range study, a restructuring of the economy, which is the mandate of the Commission on the economy, is not the answer to the unemployed nor to those people who are looking for cash in hand at this point.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today is a rather interesting one, and we intend to support it. We support the intent of the motion, which states:

That, in light of the Government's outright betrayal of the Canadian people and the repudiation of its 1980 election promises to reduce unemployment, combat inflation, avoid inflationary tax hikes and excessive energy price increases, reduce the deficit, and implement an industrial strategy for Canada, this House calls upon the Government to face its responsibility to Canadians and take immediate action to live up to the commitments that it made in 1980 or resign.

That is a solid motion, but it is a little out of balance. What it requires is an amendment. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

—and that this House further recognizes the failure of Her Majesty's Official Loyal Opposition to fulfil its responsibilities in this Parliament and recognizes that when its members formed the Government in the Thirty-first Parliament, they broke as many promises as the present Government, but in a shorter period of time. Since there is no appreciable difference between the Government and the Official Opposition, they should both follow the example of the former Leader of the Official Opposition and resign.

I would like to discuss the first part of the motion in the context of some of the difficulties we have had with the present Government. I am astounded that anyone could be proud to be identified with some of the programs which have come forth, especially the National Energy Program. Over the last three years, the National Energy Program and the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the many Ministers of Finance to the people of Canada have been complete disasters. This situation has extended back even beyond the life of this particular Parliament and has been created by the attitudes, I would say, of the individual who leads the Liberal Party and who acts as Prime Minister in the House.

I would like to recall some comments made by the present Prime Minister prior to the 1979 election. At that time there was unemployment in the country, difficulties experienced by farmers, concern over the proliferation of nuclear energy, about which he made some interesting comments.

First, he said that farmers were nothing but chronic bitchers. He directed that comment, in public, to people who were suffering from some very serious problems. To the unemployed who met him in Vancouver, he stated that if the unemployed wanted jobs, they should "get off their arses and go look for them".

With regard to nuclear energy, there was also concern over the incredible waste of money which the Canadian people had been saddled with over a period of time. Nevertheless, when people expressed legitimate concerns, such as the question whether the Japanese were planning to dump nuclear wastes in the ocean, the Prime Minister turned around and told those people: "Look, you are going to get nuclear power whether you like it or not".

I submit that the kind of attitude which has been displayed over the terms of office of the person who leads the present Government shows that he is not the kind of individual who should lead the country and draw people together at this very difficult time. However, he did not learn from his defeat in 1979. In reality, the Conservative Government was not elected on its merit in the Thirty-first Parliament. It was elected as a rebound action from the Liberal Government being thrown out of power and, I would assume, the Prime Minister being thrown out of power.

• (1430)

But we went on further. The Prime Minister had some very interesting comments to make in this Parliament, and we had one of the best examples of it today. There is very serious concern about the behaviour of the former Minister of Energy, Alastair Gillespie, and his access to Department of Energy officials, officials who worked for him in the past, and his connections with Hon. Members and colleagues in the Cabinet. Then to be involved in a very lucrative arrangement in the Province of Nova Scotia is beyond all question a very serious, serious matter in this House. The flippant answers of the Prime Minister will add nothing to resolve the issue of the confidence of the Canadian people in that Government and, frankly, it will not be resolved.

It is interesting to recall the significance of the finger being waved at individuals. Certainly there is concern out there, but that kind of response should not happen.

We can go back to the appointment of Michael Pitfield to the Senate. I would like to point out that that act, in the minds of many people, is absolutely disgusting but is consistent with the Liberal Government's policy of "We will take care of our own". The conduct of the Prime Minister, his contempt for the Canadian people, his contempt for the Parliament of Canada, is just astounding. He says that the people do not care but, mark my words, they do care. The 30 per cent in the polls indicates that they care. The absolute contempt with which the present leader of the Liberal Government and the Liberal Members' support of that leader leads me seriously to question anything they have done.

Without dwelling further on the transgressions of the Prime Minister through this Parliament, which have been very serious, we have had questions raised in the issue of the urea formaldehyde foam with certain individuals and certain Government organizations. There has been no satisfaction given, no attempt to come clean.

We had problems with the uranium cartel, the setting up of that cartel, that implicated individuals in the Government and political appointees within the Government service. That was never addressed fairly in this House. Again we are faced with the same kind of problem today and that question I am convinced will not be dealt with fairly.

Over a period of time we have also seen the Prime Minister deal with Parliament in a very contemptible manner, and not just the Prime Minister but Members who serve in his Cabinet and other Members of the House. We have found a great many vital issues that face the people of Canada removed from this Parliament. Those issues are outside of Parliament. They are resolved by the Liberal Government outside of Parliament.

We have had a very difficult time with the transportation system in the country. That has largely been dealt with outside of this House of Commons. We have dealt with problems of unemployment and problems of the nature, the structure and the operation of the economy. Those have been stalled and will be dealt with outside of the House of Commons.

The Bertrand report in which serious allegations were made against the major oil companies in Canada came forward, but was it referred to the House of Commons or to the people who represent the people of Canada for a decision? Not a chance. It was shuffled off into a commission which has trotted back and forth across the country until, literally through exponential decay, public interest has disappeared.

We have a population in this country now who has no confidence in the Liberal Party as a result of the long historical trend in its behaviour. They have no confidence in the Prime Minister and they have no confidence that that group respects this Parliament. That is a very serious situation.

Unfortunately, that leads to a problem, and I pointed out that the motion probably needed amendment and balance to point out the role of the Official Opposition in the House. I would like to take a few minutes to point out that the people of Canada are not being well served by the Official Opposition. In fact, we have spent a great deal of time in this House in character assassination. That is a function of the very serious problems that we have had in this House, where one group says: "In the last election we got crucified for making commitments, and therefore we will make no commitments to the Canadian people; we will concentrate on eroding the confidence of Canadians in the people who govern this country". That is the appeal of the Conservative Party to the electorate.

I would go back again to the issues that have been dealt with in this House. The Conservative Party refuses to fulfil its responsibility as the Official Opposition in this Parliament. It refuses to put forward alternate policies and suggestions. The people of Canada in selecting a Party in the next federal election are faced with the possibility of getting rid of the Liberal Party but unfortunately the Conservative Party are offering forward no constructive option.

I would point to the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) as an example of probably the most typical and strongest argument on this matter. When leaving the lock-up one day when they were considering the budget, he announced that the Minister of Finance had come forward with a terrible budget, and I completely agree with him, it was a disaster. Nevertheless, when he walked out of that lock-up and the press said: "Sure it is bad, but what would you do?", his comment was: "If I told you what we would do, we would never be elected". That will stand for all time as a great quote on the Conservative Party's position on serving the people of Canada.

When we go back and look at the matter of urea formaldehyde foam, for months the Conservative Party fought in this House, telling Members how they were at one with the people who were suffering out there, but when it came down to making a proposal, what would they would do? Had they done that, that would have acted as a lever to move the Government, but their only position was that there is too much UFFI and it is the Liberals' fault. They refused to put forward a position.

That has also happened on the bail-out of Dome. The Leader of the Official Opposition said that he did not know what they should do, that they should probably refer it to a parliamentary committee. That was another cop-out.

The Conservative Party as the Official Opposition in this Parliament has failed miserably in its responsibility to the Canadian people to put forward alternatives. There are certain questions of moral responsibility, of appropriate activity for Cabinet Ministers, that are certainly valid questions in this House; but there is a tendency on the part of some people to see it boil over into character assassination for long-term political gain, rather than to clarify what is appropriate behaviour in this House and establish relevant, pertinent guidelines for conduct. That should be the end result of the current exercise.

Mention has been made in this House of the former Minister of Energy's program. I used to think that when the Prime Minister changed the Cabinet it was to remove an individual from the Finance portfolio who had done less than a noteworthy job—three failures in an attempt to come up with a rational budget. It was probably not just the removal of a Finance Minister who has been judged by many people to be incompetent; it was probably to remove an incompetent Energy Minister.

I want to speak for a moment on the National Energy policy as we are in a very interesting situation. The National Energy Program that was put forward in 1980 as a vehicle through which certain Government commitments were made proposed a number of key points: fair prices, fair treatment, security of supply. It went along for about a year and a half. The Government pushed through in a very vigorous manner Bill C-48, which was the legislative platform for that national energy policy; but by the time that Bill was part way through they found that they had to gut it. The Liberal Party, in concert, I would say, with the oil companies, gutted that Bill.

It moved forward again, but the basic assumptions in it were wrong. Then we had the national energy update in which it was admitted that revenue projections and certain activities were not going to be fulfilled; for instance, the collapse of the megaprojects. We found a situation where the economy would not benefit during this period from the National Energy Program, that revenue projections were not going to be sustained, and basically the assumptions and the circumstances upon which that program was built had changed and were in fact no longer appropriate. Therefore the Government was forced to change it.

We are in a situation today where we can point to numerous situations that have changed again. The recent decision of the National Energy Board approved very large exports of natural gas to the United States in the face of the Americans attempting to force down the price of gas. Essentially we are going to give away the resource in order to try and get some kind of cash flow going.

The Government came up with a proposal to export 40,000 barrels of light crude. Members of Parliament were told that we had 900 years' supply of oil and, therefore, could export it at almost any price. Very shortly after that we moved into a situation where we were told by the same oil companies that the projections they had made were wrong, that there was a very short supply and, therefore, we should put the price up.

We are now faced with the same kind of situation. The oil companies say that we have a surplus of oil in the Western Basin, that we should export that oil, but in fact we have a long-term shortness of supply so we should jack up the price to the world price. We have the Minister saying today in a waffling, mealy-mouth way that he intends to bow down to blackmail from the oil companies and pressure from the Provinces. They will no longer live up to their commitment to maintain a blended price for Canadian oil below the world price based on the old oil 75 per cent of world price.

We have a situation where the Government is backing away from firm commitments. It has seen the megaprojects collapse. It is trying to pump as much cheap gas as it can into the United States in order to bail themselves out. A very poor decision. We have a situation where we are again exporting light crude. A week ago Thursday the Minister said in Vancouver that they are reviewing the whole matter of a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island. I ask somebody on the Government side to stand up and come clean. One of the main issues was fairness in the national energy policy. Is it fair to the people of Vancouver Island who have seen the price of energy become one of the main factors, along with interest rates and business bankruptcies, in making fishing a very difficult activity in which to make a living? The difficult transportation system has driven up the cost of living.

Is the Government prepared to be fair to the people of Vancouver Island? It is certainly willing to build a pipeline East. It made a commitment of a $150 million basic grant for a pipeline to Vancouver Island. Now the Government is waffling out of it.

It is also committed to conversion costs on the Island to assist people to convert from very expensive oil to an alternate energy program that will be maintained at taxpayers' expense at 65 per cent of the equivalent price of oil. It is not fair to the people of Vancouver Island. The Minister and the Government should live up to the commitment to provide these people on Vancouver Island with the alternative.

The main point is that the National Energy Program has collapsed. The National Energy Program update has collapsed. There is no doubt that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) must be pulling out his hair wondering where he will get all the money to fund the deficit and fund Government programs which are being strained to the nth degree. The Government made some very wrong projections on the economy. It made all the wrong projections on the source of revenue for energy. Because of the entire depressed nature of the economy, revenues are away down. However, demands continue for basic social institutions, health programs, Unemployment Insurance and income-support mechanisms. There are certainly difficulties in those areas. By and large it is based on incompetence.

It is unfortunate because the Government had a choice over the years to develop a broadly based industrial strategy in this country, but it failed to do so. It had a chance to strengthen our manufacturing sector to ensure that Canadians, instead of the Japanese and Europeans, use our raw resources and would realize the employment benefits from the value added. This has been a disaster in our forest industry where the Government has failed to act in an appropriate manner. It has not acted in an effective manner in the shipbuilding industry. Basically it is a question of incompetence.

There is no doubt that the motion before us this afternoon is appropriate. This Government has treated Parliament with contempt. It has treated the people of Canada with contempt. It has been absolutely incompetent to the point of being immoral in handling some of the basic, critical issues that have faced Canada over the last three years. I am certain that the people of Canada will not allow this Government to proceed into the next Parliament. There is no doubt that the disillusioned people of this country will react in the same way as they did in 1979.

The lack of balance in this resolution is that it fails to assign appropriate blame to the Official Opposition, whose conduct in this Parliament has been as bad as that of the Government. As my proposed amendment states, there is no appreciable difference. Therefore, they would be a poor choice to replace that particular organization on the Government benches at the present time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions, answers, comments?

Mr. Crosbie: For debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Debate will come in a moment.

Before recognizing the Hon. Member for the purpose of debate, I would like to deal with the amendment suggested by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly). I will read that amendment and then indicate what I think is probably lacking in terms of procedural acceptability.

The amendment suggests that after the Official Opposition motion, there ought to be a comma and the amendment would read as follows:

—and this House further recognizes the failure of Her Majesty's Official Loyal Opposition to fulfil its responsibilities in this Parliament and recognizes that when its Members formed the Government in the Thirty-first Parliament, they broke as many promises as the present Government but in a shorter period of time. Since there is no appreciable difference between the Government and the Official Opposition, they should both follow the example of the Leader of the Official Opposition and resign.

I have considerable difficulties with that amendment. In the first instance, I find that the language in the amendment is argumentative rather than related to the motion put by the Official Opposition. I am not sure that Parliament foresees in its procedures an opportunity for Hon. Members to enter into particularly partisan points in the way that this is expressed.

I wanted to say that and yet at the same time explain to the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River that my duty is not to consider whether a particular motion is partisan, obviously, but to see whether it fits within the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. I would refer the Hon. Member to Standing Order 58(3) which reads:

Opposition motions on allotted days may be moved only by Members in opposition to the Government—

In that regard this amendment qualifies.

—and may relate to any matter within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada—

I begin to have questions obviously.

—and also may be used for the purpose of considering reports from standing committees—

The essence, the nature and the purpose of an Opposition motion on an Opposition day is to fulfil its function of addressing itself to the business of the governing of the country. I find that the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River does not address itself to the issue of governing the country or the issue that is put forth in the motion made by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Nielsen), but rather is addressed to the Official Opposition in the House of Commons.

I will, if the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River sees fit, cause further research to be done. I wanted to offer him that opportunity to ask that the Chair research this matter further.

On the face of it, and in view of Standing Order 58(3), I have to find that this amendment is out of order. In my view, it does not fulfill the implicit understanding of the purpose of an amendment to an Opposition motion, as is referred to in Standing Order 58(3).

I realize that I have not referred to any precedents in that regard. If the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River wants me to cause the Table Officers to seek out the necessary precedents, I will do so. If he feels he can accept my ruling at the moment, we can proceed.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, in order to facilitate the House and your responsibilities here this afternoon, I will simply accept the ruling at the present time. I felt it was an objective, honest, forthright statement of what we, as Canadians, have observed in here, and, again, I would abide by your ruling.

• (1450)

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): I believe you have made a wise ruling, Mr. Speaker, and I think you should look at the main motion in the same light. It is just as fallacious as the amendment proposed thereto, and does not deserve to be credited with any amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. That intervention certainly does not help the Chair. When I used the word "partisan", obviously the House of Commons is a partisan institution, and I did not mean in any way to derogate from the right of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) to use the forms of the House in that regard. I simply meant that an Opposition motion should really be addressed to a criticism of the Government—that is all I meant—and not necessarily to a criticism of another Opposition Party. If that is acceptable, we will proceed, but I did undertake to offer the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River the opportunity to have further consideration of the appropriateness of his motion, if he so saw fit.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that you saved the intervenor from New Brunswick—I have forgotten the name of his district for the moment—from the embarrassment of dealing any further with his suggestion about this main motion. And I am glad that you saved the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) from the same embarrassment.

The New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, at the moment, remind me of a flea or a nit trying to crawl up the leg of a noble animal such as the Newfoundland dog or Labrador retriever. They want to try to persuade the public that we are not the real Opposition in this House, that somehow they are the real Opposition—they who put the Government in here; they who moved the motion which put the Government here, and their Leader who crawled into bed with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the Constitution. The two Parties are head to head, cheek to cheek, toe to toe and knee to knee. I am going no further because there are certain standards of decency which are observed in this Chamber. So the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River was saved from a lot of embarrassment.

When these nits get on the back of our legs we take up the other leg and give a little flick and the nit or the flea goes back to its accustomed spot, which is where the NDP are going after the next election. They are very much interested in the leadership of our Party. We have had many marvellous Leaders and we may have many more marvellous Leaders, but I am too modest, Mr. Speaker, to pursue that theme.

The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) spoke in this debate and he is certainly a good example of a man with his mind open at both ends. His mind is completely open and the wind whistles through the hollow space. He did not deal with the motion at all. The motion deals with the Government's repudiation of its 1980 election promises, and I will back that statement up. The motion deals with the question: Has the Government a mandate when it has completely turned its back on its solemn promises to the Canadian people and has operated now for three years in direct contravention of what it told the public?

We have all seen in the last three years what the Prime Minister stands for. He stands for whatever he thinks the public will fall for. We saw this here this morning in Question Period, with the Prime Minister trying to make believe that there is no moral crisis afflicting his Government in the area of the conflict of interest guidelines. As long as he thinks the people will fall for his explanations, no matter how specious, he will put them forward, and about the worst advice I can give him is to be himself and to keep on being himself.

What was the public asked to give the Liberal Party a mandate for in the last election? There is not too much evidence of what they were asked to do by the Liberal Party, or of the promises the Liberals made, because they did not make all that many promises. However, unwisely on January 12, 1980, the Prime Minister, who was then the Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the Liberal Party, spoke in Toronto at a Liberal campaign college. None of them graduated because going to college has not helped them much, except to win elections. At this particular college, he outlined the platform of the Party to 500 Liberal candidates, campaign managers and Party workers from Ontario. After outlining his platform, he said, and I quote:

> It would be the height of irresponsibility for any Party to make promises in the heat of an election campaign that could not be acted upon.

That is a very fine sentiment, of course. We, of course, completely agree with. It would be very irresponsible for him to do that. But what promises did he in fact make? He went on to say this, before he outlined the five themes which persuaded the Canadian people to vote for him, and I quote:

> There is a prior commitment that I want to make clear. Liberals will do what we say we will do. And if we can't do it, we won't say it.

That was a revolutionary departure for these poor cretins at that policy conference to take in. They had never heard that before. But this is what the Prime Minister said:

> Liberals will do what we say we will do. And if we can't do it, we won't say it.

Let us see if they did what they said. Have they observed the mandate they were supposed to have had? The Prime Minister also said, and I quote:

> Our program for the 1980s consists of five major commitments:

The first commitment is, and I quote:

> —to manage more rigorously the nation's finances in order to make more effective use of the taxpayers' money.

Has the Government met that major commitment? Between January, 1980 and now, what have the increases been in Government spending? In the year 1979-80 when the Prime Minister made that promise, the public accounts spending was $50.4 billion. This year it is going to be at least $80.4 billion. That is an additional $30 billion of spending. Is that managing more rigorously the nation's finances?

The deficit in the year 1979-80 was $11.4 billion. That was bad enough. It was a large deficit. It was the twelfth we had had in a row. But this year it is going to be $27.2 billion; that is almost two and a half times as much. When the Prime Minister promised to manage more rigorously our finances and to make more effective use of the taxpayers' money, our interest costs in that year were $8.3 billion. This year they are going to spend in excess of $17 billion. That is double. Is that managing the public money more rigorously? Is it making more effective use of the taxpayers' money when the interest bill is doubled in three years. This year $17 billion is being spent which does the public no good at all. It is just paying interest on the past debt. That was the first major commitment, and we can see from what I have said that it was completely broken.

Second, the Prime Minister said—and this is how he got into office—"We are going to achieve energy security at a fair price for all Canadians". Has he achieved energy security? Only in the sense that this year there is a greater supply of oil in the world than demand because of the fantastic recession we have had, but not in any other way. The tarsands plant and the Alsands plant have not gone ahead. The Cold Lake heavy oil plant has not gone ahead. The Beaufort Sea project is stumbling along. The Hibernia oil field off Newfoundland is just bumbling along because of the Government's greed and refusal to give the Province of Newfoundland a fair deal. And on and on it goes. We have had no increase in energy security.

By the way, in connection with that particular main plank of his platform, the Prime Minister also said this on February 12, 1980, and I quote:

> The Liberal price hike would be less than half of what the Tories plan to inflict on you; we will negotiate an increase of less than 14 cents.

That is 14 cents a gallon. That was a deception beyond all deceptions, Mr. Speaker, because the public knows what has happened to oil and gas prices since the Prime Minister made that promise. In December, 1979 gasoline was selling at $1.14 a gallon. In December, 1982 gasoline was selling at $2.15 a gallon. The price has doubled.

In our budget, Mr. Speaker, we did not impose any tax on heating oil because we know the lower-income people generally use oil for heating. We know the Atlantic Provinces are heavily dependent on heating oil. The infamous 18-cent tax did not apply to heating oil at all, only to transportation fuels. But what has this Government done to help the lower-income Canadian on heating oil? Why, it was 70 cents a gallon in December, 1979 and it is $1.40 today. That is an increase of 70 cents a gallon, double the price. That is what this Government did to give Canadians energy security at a fair price. The Liberals have gouged them in every way you could conceive on energy prices. They have imposed more taxes than one could even dream of. Most of those increases are in federal Government taxes.

• (1500)

That was the second great plank of the Government's platform. Then, of course, the Prime Minister's third great policy was to develop, and I quote:

. . . industrial policies that will provide jobs, spur growth and increase Canadian ownership and control of the economy.

Well, in regard to that latter bit about increasing Canadian ownership and control, the Government has increased our ownership in the oil and gas industry minimally but at a cost to Canadians of interest rates that went sky high because of the Government's new energy policy and its anti-American rhetoric and the rest of it. It cost Canadians tens of billions of dollars in unnecessary interest rates to do that. But what is the good of Canadians owning our economy when the economy is diminishing, not growing? What price Canadian ownership then?

Well, Mr. Speaker, what about the industrial policies that will provide jobs? Do you know, Mr. Speaker—and this is why the Government should resign today—what has happened with jobs under this Government since it came into office just three years ago? We have added to the unemployment rolls 652,000 people. In January, 1980, there were 949,000 Canadians unemployed. As a result of three years of this Government, with the promises it made to provide jobs, the official rate is now 1,598,000 unemployed, an increase of 652,000. That is 652,000 Canadian families betrayed by this Government which promised it was going to develop industrial policies to provide jobs and spur growth. Spur growth, Mr. Speaker? Last year the Gross National Product went down 5 per cent. In other words, we Canadians, have 5 per cent less to share among ourselves this year than we had a year ago. Our Gross National Product did not increase, it did not stay the same, it went down 5 per cent last year. That is called spurring growth. In addition, there has been a net loss of jobs since the summer of 1981, just 16 or 18 months ago. We have lost 578,000 jobs in Canada. Is that spurring growth? Is that the industrial policy which will provide jobs? Surely to God, Mr. Speaker, this is a total betrayal of this Government's commitment to the Canadian people.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the public might think to themselves: could there be any further betrayals of our interest? Why, yes, there certainly are further betrayals because the Prime Minister at the same meeting said this:

We must endorse the right of every Canadian to have a job.

That is what that monumental mountebank, that hypocrite who now leads this country said, and I quote him again:

We must endorse the right of every Canadian to have a job.

Well, there are 1,598,000 Canadians out there wondering what that means. What is the good to them of a Prime Minister who endorses the right to have a job and then does nothing to keep his promise? The hypocrite!

The fourth plank in that program, Mr. Speaker.

To build greater economic strength in each region of the country as the basis for over-all Canadian prosperity.

Well, Canada is devastated from coast to coast. British Columbia, one of the most booming regions of Canada, has been devastated in the last several years. It has almost as high an unemployment rate as Newfoundland. Newfoundland has been devastated even more than it was already by a Government which has done everything it can to inflict pain upon the Government and people of that Province by cutting back DREE spending and economic assistance, by doing everything it can to damage that Province because they want a fair deal on the offshore mineral resources. That is what this Government has done for the regions of this country.

The fifth great plank was this, Mr. Speaker, and this is the greatest betrayal of them all. I hope the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) will listen to me. He is supposed to be a man of some sensitivity but he is having his ears filled now with some specious nonsense by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). I want the Minister of Public Works to listen. This was the fifth plank in the Prime Minister's platform:

To enhance the security of the individual by helping those who most need assistance.

That was the solemn pledge to the Canadian people on January 12, 1980, by your Leader at the campaign college in Toronto. The Liberals were going to enhance the security of the invdividual by helping those who most need assistance. He went on to say this, Mr. Speaker:

And most important of all, we must guarantee the income security of our older citizens. Retirement should be a time of peace rather than a time of fear.

Can you hear the violins being played while the sanctimonious Prime Minister assured our older Canadians that retirement should be a time of peace rather than a time of fear? What did he do then? He led the Government which reduced indexing, which took away from the income this year of 1.1 million Old Age Security recipients. He put the boots to 200,000 Public Service pensioners. That is how the Government enhances the security of the individual. That is how it helps those who most need assistance. Well, who have the Liberals helped? Why, they have helped Alastair Gillespie. We have seen how the Prime Minister's heart was rended today for Alastair Gillespie. Poor Alastair was forced to the private sector. The Prime Minister said here in the House today that poor Alastair had to go out and be like an ordinary Canadian and look for a job, "and we had to fix poor Alastair up." That was the implication. This Toronto industrialist, Alastair Gillespie, our hearts were supposed to cry for him when we have 1,598,000 people who the Prime Minister has not fixed up with some fancy deal through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) and the Acting Deputy Prime Minister; this sleazy, tawdry affair that we are exploring in this House today.

Mr. Nystrom: Let us pray.

Mr. Crosbie: The Liberals are going to enhance the security of the Liberals who are heaped upon the CMHC Board of Directors. It is not good enough that they should get $150 a day; their pay is going up to $450 a day. For Sylvia Sutherland, a defeated Liberal in Peterborough in the last election—that is her only qualification for being a director of CMHC—$150 a day was not good enough to attend meetings here in Ottawa; she has to get $450 a day.

Mr. Gauthier: Don't attack people who cannot defend themselves.

Mr. Crosbie: The retired President of CMHC, Mr. Hession, said that $450 a day was "pretty low" for directors of Crown Corporations. Imagine, pretty low! Yes, it is prettry low, low in the sense that it is pretty damn mean. It is pretty tawdry. It is a scoundrelly thing to do to give the directors of CMHC a 200 per cent increase and to reduce the incomes of old age pensioners and Public Service pensioners. That is who the Liberals are helping, their friends and pals. That is the security they are enhancing. Those are the people they think need assistance most. Donald Macdonald, the corporate lawyer from Toronto who is supposed to save the Liberal Party from Mr. Trudeau and Mr. Turner, is to get $850 a day on his Royal Commission. Why? Because poor McCarthy and McCarthy's overhead costs would go to hell if he did not get this from the public Treasury. This is the hero who is to save us from John Turner. This is the Party, Mr. Speaker, and I quote again, which will:

> —not simply stand by and let the recession come. We will fight it and overcome it.

When are they going to start fighting and overcoming the recession? Ronald Reagan is going to pull us out of our recession temporarily, to some extent this year, but the Government of Canada has done nothing to pull us out of anything. The Prime Minister went on to say this:

> All this we will do. And more. So that is our commitment.

Well, that is the point of our resolution today, Mr. Speaker. The Government has not met those commitments. It has repudiated those commitments. The Liberals have got themselves here in office and they have done nothing but roll in the trough. I said the Prime Minister's conduct today was hircine, it was goat-like. It had the smell of a goat when he attempted to defend the indefensible here today. The Liberals have become a coalition of looters, Mr. Speaker, despoilers, favour seekers, patronage granters, patronage receivers, murky influence peddlars, jesuitical justifiers. Did anyone ever see such jesuitical twisting and turning, as we have seen the Prime Minister do in the last several days when he was trying to justify the immoral plundering of the public purse by the cutpurses of the twentieth century led by a dacoit who will defend anything his Ministers, his former Ministers or the Liberal Party associates will attempt to do.

• (1510)

That is why we have moved this motion, Mr. Speaker. It is not because we expect the Government to pay any attention or because we think there are millions watching this Chamber today, but because we want to have on record what we think of the disgraceful spectacle we face in this Chamber week after week, day after day and month after month.

I say to the Prime Minister that if he wants to give the people of Canada a chance to judge the conduct in the Lalonde-MacEachen scandal—the Maclonde scandal—let us have an election now. Let him call an election now. We do not need a leader in this Party to clean your clock in an election. We will bollix you. Give us six weeks and we will devastate you. We will wipe you out. You will be lucky to have a remnant left. Go to the public on your betrayal of your commitments and we will stun you into insensibility. You will not survive. There will be none of you here for the rest of the twentieth century, and it is just about time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions and answers or debate.

Mr. Crosbie: What about a question? Where are the questions?

An Hon. Member: It is not worth it.

Mr. Crosbie: Chicken.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and I think a good title for his speech would be: "Variations on an unfinished theme". I could not believe my ears, Mr. Speaker, here in the House of Commons, when, as the Hon. Member said earlier, millions of people might be watching the proceedings they probably seldom heard such arrant nonsense. It is very easy for the Opposition to say more or less what they like, except that when people have to make up their minds in a year or two, they will have to vote for the party they think is the most responsible, and if they remember this speech by the Member for St. John's West, I think it would make a rather peculiar impression during an election campaign. Imagine, a political party that says it does not need a leader and does not need ideas to be elected. Mr. Speaker, such a party would be disaster for this country.

I would like to give some statistics on what has been done by this Government in the past three years, but first I would like to refer to the motion put by the Opposition party, which says, and I quote:

> That, in light of the Government's outright betrayal of the Canadian people and its repudiation of its 1980 election promises to reduce unemployment, combat inflation, avoid inflationary tax hikes and excessive energy price increases, reduce the deficit, and implement an industrial strategy for Canada, this House calls upon the Government to face its responsibility to Canadians and take immediate action to live up to the commitments that it made in 1980 or resign.

Mr. Speaker, if I may draw a parallel between what was said earlier and what the situation is today, I would like to refer to what is happening in my riding in connection with the mining companies Iron Ore, Sidbec-Normine and Wabush Mines or else companies such as Quebec North Shore and others in the private sector that are having problems. If I wanted to see things in black and white, Mr. Speaker, as the Opposition preferred to do just now, I could say that Iron Ore's problems were brought about by its President, Mr. Brian Mulroney, a well-known figure whom I know very well and for whom I have a great deal of respect. But I will not follow the lead of the Opposition. I am not going to say that Iron Ore's problems were brought about by the President of Iron Ore. It is a matter of economics, and when they say that we have increased unemployment in this country, I could answer that unemployment in my area is due to Mr. Brian Mulroney, because we have a town that is about to disappear and people who have been laid off. It is very easy to make fancy speeches and say whatever comes to mind, under the cover of parliamentary immunity, without taking responsibility for one's statements. It is easy to indulge in crass rhetoric and to establish a relation of cause and effect between a weak economy and high unemployment, but I think that if we are to be the least bit reasonable and realistic, we must make comparisons that take the economic situation into account. I really deplore the fact that in the House, everything the Opposition says boils down to entirely haphazard discussions in which no connection is made with socio-economic questions and in which there is no rhyme or reason or logic. Instead of proposals and alternative solutions, there is only the same old refrain we have been hearing for well-nigh twenty years, which is that everything this Government has done badly, and that its decisions have always been the wrong decisions.

Mr. Speaker, this crass rhetoric is one reason why I am tempted to say that the Official Opposition may not be ready to form a new Government, because it has no real solutions to propose. All they do here in the House is repeat the same old thing, day in and day out.

Mr. Speaker, if we compare Canada's position to that of the United States, we see that all things being equal, Canada's public finances are in better shape than those of the U.S. If we examine the proposals made by Mr. Miterrand when he ran for office, these were measures to reduce unemployment, strengthen the franc and upgrade the industrial sector. Two years later, France has record levels of inflation, record levels of unemployment and the value of the franc has plummeted.

The Official Opposition had all the answers. It is very easy to be in the Opposition and to say that if the Opposition were in power, it would settle most of the country's problems. In France, the former Opposition has been in power for nine months, and has done what it could during that time. There are no miracles. A responsible Government must tell the people that it cannot work miracles. But when I hear people say in the House that nothing at all has been done, well, if it is not rhetoric, it is very close to being a lie.

I would like to say a few words about expenditures that were made by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in 1981-82. For industrial expansion alone, which means in the private sector, grants totalled $98 million in 1980-81 and $119 million in 1981-82. Guaranteed loans totalled $231 million in 1980-81 and $131 million in 1982. In other words, the amount of money spent on grants to help private enterprise was greater than the amount spent on guaranteed loans. With respect to defence industries, Mr. Speaker, there were $142 million in 1980-81 and $262 million in 1981-82; for the development of export markets, Mr. Speaker, $17 million in 1980-81 and $24 million in 1981-82; for shipbuilding and modernization, $102 million in 1980-81 and $143 million in 1981-82. The Opposition will note that the amounts have steadily increased.

For research and development in the field of energy, the amounts vary between $4 and $6 million for both years. For the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, $180 million in 1980-81 and $206 million in 1981-82. The Federal Business Development Bank was allowed $484 million in 1980-81 and $460 million in 1981-82. The National Research Council obtained $3 million in 1980-81 and $4 million in 1981-82. The grand total, Mr. Speaker, is $5,234 million in 1980-81 and $8,189 million in 1981-82.

Of course, if we went into details, we would realize that some positive achievements were made. The Official Opposition should recognize those facts and suggest whatever should be done to extend the effects of such fundings. We would be interested in hearing such suggestions from the Official Opposition, but we never do. And this is what Canadians would like to hear. What are the proposals brought forward by the Official Opposition. We would like to compare them with our government policies so that a better choice may be made. Such is the advantage of democratic debates: we know exactly what is going on so that the best choice can be made advisedly. It is too bad but the Hon. members opposite have never heard about alternatives.

To give still further facts which are not only related to figures, we could point out some plans and complementary agreements signed since 1978 but I will only go back to 1980. I will give you an exemple in Quebec and in Ontario. In Quebec, under an agreement signed on June 20, 1981, with respect to the development of transport, the federal government will pay $3,600,000; for forest development, $110,400,000. Some $24 million to promote the tourist industry, $105 million to upgrade the pulp and paper industry, $25.5 million from the Federal Government to build a newspaper mill in Amos, $5.5 million for Quebec's Société Interport, $60 million to modernize pulp and paper mills in Ontario, $33 million for eastern Ontario, $10 million for rural development in northern regions, and $21 million for Sault Sainte Marie's infrastructure. I wish I had enough time to give concrete examples of what is being done by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to help our industries become more competitive and put our private sector on a sound basis. It is very important for our private sector to operate on a self-supporting basis, for it will then be able to seek ever expanding export markets, create more jobs and generate revenues to pave the way towards better days for the Government and all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, in the Drummondville area, the Soprema Company has just announced a $3.7 million investment in a roof sheeting plant. It is an international company based in France and it will receive a $1 million grant from the Federal Government.

What I find astounding in this debate, Mr. Speaker, is the bad faith of Members opposite. When the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister or Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) signed the most important contract for the private sector of Canada, the Bombardier contract, the Progressive Conservative Party raised objections about the way the Canadian Government had awarded the contract. Our Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce deserves praise for taking calculated risks with a view to landing that contract. We all know that even the Americans were extremely shocked and critical about the way we had managed this deal, but still we did succeed in keeping the contract and getting people back to work. When it was announced that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, through the Minister, had just signed the contract, Hon. Members on the other side raised hell about it. And yet, that is the best example of a Government which has made a significant contribution by signing that agreement; we will now be able to make progress in the field of new technology and open up new markets while competing against countries such as France and Japan. That is what counts, but Members opposite cannot find anything constructive to say about it.

Perhaps they should stop making empty speeches and give us more logical and more responsible arguments, and indeed tell us just what they would do if they were on this side. I would also like Members of the Opposition to tell us whether they would have signed the Bombardier contract if they had been in office. Yes or no, Mr. Speaker, would they have given jobs to the people in the regions of Montmagny-L'Islet and Valcourt? Or would they have helped promote the establishment of a new technology in the United States? I hope they will give me an answer to that because I think it is important.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for St. John's West should have remained in the House to follow the debate on this important issue of fisheries. During the three years I have been a Member of this House, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has made wonders for Eastern Quebec and Eastern Canada, streamlining all our infrastructures, making it possible for our fishermen who live far away from the national capital to benefit from capital investments and thus compete on world markets with such countries as Norway, Finland and Sweden. That was something important that we felt we had to do and which we have done. Moreover, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) announced yesterday a $200 million investment plan to update the fisheries, without waiting for the opposition to move a non confidence motion. So much so that the Kirby report which was made public yesterday contains the Task Force's 57 recommendations to improve the industry so that it may expand considerably and use advanced technology to compete with other countries.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that any sincere person would realize that these are positive steps on the part of the Government, and should stop repeating in the House platitudes and vain arguments. It would be nice, for a change, to hear from opposition members a non-biased and rational debate, as well as suggestions to improve the situation. What is lacking most in the House, Mr. Speaker, are new and creative ideas. That's what is missing! They rely on the Government to take action, and they never have any new initiative or solution to put forward.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to note what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has done over the last three years to rationalize the sea, air and rail transport operations within his Department. Let us look at what is happening to Interports in Montreal and the corporation of the Old Port in Quebec City. Projects worth millions of dollars have been initiated in both cities, and they are being funded either by the federal government alone or else in a proportion of 60 to 40 p. 100 by the federal government and the Province of Quebec. I shall just mention the Centre des Congrès.

We can boast of outstanding achievements, Mr. Speaker but readily admit that the present economic situation is difficult for everyone. Yet, compared to other countries, Canada is doing quite well in the middle term. It is true that the Canadian dollar is weak compared with the American dollar, but we should perhaps be telling Canadians that our dollar is now at its real value, except that in relation to the French franc, the British pound or the German mark, our dollar is very strong on European markets. We must realize it. We should stop cultivating our guilt complex and our negativism, because we are doing well in certain areas, but tend to look only at our failures. Talking about our successes, Mr. Speaker, I should perhaps add for the benefit of the Opposition that we are now merging the operations of the former Department of Regional Economic Expansion with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce into one large Department to ensure a better regional presence so that we may help small and medium-size businesses and provide assistance to those who want to expand their present business. Mr. Speaker, there soon will be before the House a bill merging these two Departments, and I hope that we shall have the support or at least the views of the Opposition on this matter and that their proposals or additional ideas will help make our proposal even better. The merging of these two Departments is an important step in the Canadian government's efforts to provide assistance to various kinds of businesses.

Mr. Speaker, I know that our time is very short, and realising that the oppositions motion aims at asking for the Government's resignation or calling an election, I wish to point out that we certainly have an unemployment problem, but as I said earlier, we cannot blame the situation on the Government, just as I would not blame the board of directors of certain companies in my region. It is quite wrong to say that the Government has no industrial strategy as we shall see when the Government introduces a complete revision of our industrial legislation in the very near future. The Members opposite say that inflation is rising, Mr. Speaker, but I believe that is because they have not seen the latest figures. We are fighting inflation and all of us, as Canadians, shall win that fight. In the last three months, the price index has gone down and inflation has shown obvious signs of weakening.

As for interest rates, Mr. Speaker, we see that the bank rate has already gone down to 9.5 per cent, which puts the mortgage rate at 11.5 per cent, while these same rates were reaching 18 and 20 per cent one year ago. These are very encouraging signs, Mr. Speaker, and the Opposition had better have another look at the figures they quoted, and try to understand them.

Mr. Speaker, I invite the Opposition Members to show much more creativity and responsibility, and any solution they may suggest in this House would be greatly appreciated because Canadians have no use for people who cry over spilt milk, what they need are people who can suggest solutions or provide answers.

• (1530)

[English]

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should respond directly and immediately to some of the comments of the previous speaker. Our motion is intended to take the form of a report card on the Government's record on the third anniversary of its election.

The Hon. Member's defence of the Government's record over the last three years does not refute any of the items in the motion. He did not make any reference to the items that the Government promised to deliver, nor has he in any way indicated that the Government has delivered on those promises. The consistent response from the other side is that they want to hear what the Opposition would do if we were in their place. Those Members do hear what the Opposition would do if it was the Government. Various Members from this side, including the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) and others, do make suggestions to the Government when we are debating economic issues. Therefore, I suggest that the Hon. Member is wrong in his analysis. The purpose of this motion is to indicate that this Party had the courage to go to the people in 1980 and tell them precisely what needed to be done in this country in economic terms. Members opposite went to the people and said different things, I believe. The Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher), a Liberal on the other side, is even shaking his head at that statement. I take it that what he is saying is that the Liberals went to the people and told them the same things that we did. That clearly is not true.

Liberals clearly told the people different things from what we said. But let me remind the Member from Mississauga North of some of the promises that the Liberals made. The question for debate today is surely not what this Party would do if it was in power today. That is a matter that will be debated on other days when there are economic policy projections discussed in the House. It is a matter that will be debated in the next election. The Hon. Member knows that. The question for today, three years after their election, is whether the Government has delivered on the promises it made in the election campaign. It is no defence for the Liberal Government to attempt to explain what it has done by telling us about all the money it has given to people.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Spent.

Mr. Bosley: The money it has spent. That is in fact proof that the claim the Liberal Government made that it would exercise fiscal restraint has not been honoured.

Canadians are becoming increasingly aware that the country cannot be put back to work simply by having the Government take more money from the private sector or anywhere else and spending it on job creation programs, however well intended. There is a trend line which Members opposite have to face. Every year that the deficit goes up, unemployment goes up in lock step with it. There is a relationship between those two facts. Simply, the more money one takes from the system where it is being spent efficiently and puts into the bureaucracy for however well intentioned programs, the greater the loss to the national system. The pursuit of that policy will only result in more unemployment.

The Government cannot defend its failure to keep its promises by talking about what it has spent its money on. The consequences of that spending has been that the Gross National Product has fallen as a direct consequence of Government policy. The same Liberal Party campaigned against our budget on the basis that it would allegedly put 100,000 people out of work. They said that this was unacceptable and there must not be a policy that would put 100,000 out of work. That claim was not right in the first place. However, the Liberals turned around and implemented a policy that has put in excess of 650,000 people out of work. Therefore, it is true that the Government honoured its promise not to put 100,000 people out of work. It honoured its promise by putting 650,000 people out of work. Some honour!

I would like to talk about the restraint that the Hon. Member opposite refuses to discuss or defends by talking about what the Government spent its money on. The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) gave some examples of that lack of restraint, but I would like to put some of those figures into context.

I realize that the Hon. Member opposite does not like us to repeat Liberal promises and discuss their performance; that is his privilege, but I will repeat some of their promises. They promised to "manage more rigorously the nation's finances in order to make more effective use of the taxpayers' money". Further promises were made, as Members opposite will know, to restrain Government spending increases in line with real growth in the GNP. I subscribe to that policy. It is essential that the Government of Canada get its spending increases beneath actual growth in the GNP for the next while. However, what has the Government done? If Members opposite and other Canadians reread the budget of the Member for St. John's West, they will discover that those spending projections that we campaigned on were $17 billion less than what the Liberals have spent. They said that in their campaign promise, we were going to spend too much. How can they go to the people with any integrity to say that they will spend less than the listed figures of the Progressive Conservative Party and then come to the House, spend $17 billion more and show their faces in public? Not only the Liberal Party gets hurt when it fails to deliver on its election promises. I believe the attitude shown by that Party over the last number of years has led Canadians to mistrust politicians. As a result of their behaviour, not only the Liberal Party and the economy suffer, the credibility of Government itself suffers.

The spending increase in 1979-1980 was 10.3 per cent. In 1980-1981, it was 15.4 per cent. The spending increase in 1981-1982 was 19.6 per cent. The spending increase in 1982-83 was 20.5 per cent. Those are the Government's figures. How do they compare to the commitments of the restraint on which that Party went to the people to ask for their support? They do not compare. In fact, one should not have to go any further than that to prove the case that the current Government either did not mean what it said or knew it was not telling the truth.

Let me return to other issues. I would like to read the promise made by the Government at the time with regard to megaprojects which were to get us out of the dilemma. Others have already referred to the commitment on heating oil prices and other energy prices which the Liberal Government so radically broke. Members opposite have referred to the Conservative Party's commitment to 85 per cent of world price. You may remember that the Liberals went to the people and said that this was too high and that they would go to only 75 per cent of the world price. What they did not tell the people, however, was that they would add whopping taxes on to 75 per cent of the world price. The result of that has been that the consumer pays more today for heating oil and every other commodity of its kind in this country to the federal Government than he or she would if our budget were in place. All the rhetoric in the world does not disguise the effective numbers.

Let me just put back on the record, while the Hon. Member for Mississauga North shakes his head, the fact that heating prices have risen from 70 cents a gallon to $1.40 a gallon, and we would not have imposed taxes. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North will know, if he looks back to our budget, that today heating oil would have cost in the order of 90 cents or 95 cents a gallon under our policy. There is no way he can disguise that fact. It is simply a matter of going back to the old budget and reading current figures.

I would like to speak on megaprojects and the Liberal promise. The Liberals said, "We must increase the economic might of Canada by strengthening each of the regions. We will make the big projects happen, whether developing fisheries in the Atlantic, rebuilding railways in the West, developing new manufacturing strength in Ontario and Quebec or expanding British Columbia's resource and trade potential".

The report was out last week that Ontario will face another job loss of at least 25,000 jobs in the next six months as a consequence of these—I was about to say "people", but that would be less than parliamentary—of these policies. Since that time, as everyone in the country knows, the major oil projects, the Alsands and Cold Lake projects, have been cancelled. Esso Resources' Judy Creek tertiary recovery project is gone. The Syncrude oil sands plant expansion has been postponed, and the list continues.

We Canadians—not only me, a Conservative Member of this House—were promised that we would see those developments placed back on stream. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove), who was formerly known as the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough, earlier said that "this Parliament will be remembered as one of the most significant Parliaments in our history, or, to be more precise, the most significant Parliaments ever". It most certainly will. It will be remembered as the Parliament in which the Government of the day, having promised economic recovery, virtually deliberately destroyed the economy of the country. It will be remembered as the Parliament in which the Government of the day, when campaigning, said it was in favour of free enterprise, but when in office, moved the country toward national socialism faster and further than it has ever been done. It will be remembered as the Parliament in which a Minister of the Crown could say today, "We Canadians should be grateful because housing starts have been brought back up by Government programs to 165,000 units". Again I quote the Minister.

I think it is only appropriate to remind that same Minister that during the period of time in which he had responsibility for housing, because of the economic policies of the Government, housing starts fell from over 200,000 to 128,000 a year. We are supposed to be grateful for the fact that today we are back to 168,000, when we need and have always needed 225,000, when we campaigned with respect to the need and the rightness of encouraging housing development in this country through a mortgage interest deductibility scheme. The people of Canada were told, "That is not needed and unfair. Housing will grow all by itself".

Mr. Evans: Have you seen the demographics?

Mr. Bosley: However, it was not true, and as a consequence of those—oh, this would appear to have excited some interest on the other side. It always does when Hon. Members opposite are reminded that they campaigned against helping the housing industry by providing mortgage interest deductibility.

Mr. Fisher: And the people agreed with us.

Mr. Bosley: They told the people, in campaign terms, that the continuation of making people pay for their housing mortgages out of after-tax money was fair. It is not fair. Canadians know it is not fair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)): Order, please. I must remind Hon. Members that they are allowed to speak in the Chamber only from their place in the Chamber.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I think that this is my seat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)): I was not speaking to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Bosley: I appreciate that, and I also know to whom you directed the comment. If the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) prefers to stand behind the curtain and yell, that is all right. That is his privilege. He does not worry me.

The Liberals promised that housing would be made affordable and that there would be more housing for Canadians as a result of their policy. I repeat that the consequence was that housing starts fell from above 200,000 units to 128,000 units. I repeat that tenants in my constituency are facing a 0.2 vacancy rate as a consequence of these policies, because of the lack of recognition of what it will take to get the housing industry, which is the backbone of economic development in a manufacturing society, going again.

There are one of two things which should be done in relation to this question, and the Government can take its pick. First, there should finally be a recognition that property taxes are paid by people out of their after-tax income, and they should be allowed a deduction. Second, there should be a recognition that interest on mortgages is also paid out of after-tax income to people who are charged income tax on it as an income item. In other words, the Government makes housing pay double tax.

Mr. Fisher: That is ludicrous.

Mr. Bosley: The sooner the Government stops doing that, the sooner it will wind up with a rejuvenated housing industry, and the problem could be resolved in one of two ways. The Government could either allow people a deduction for their property taxes and mortgage interest so they would not bear this double tax burden, or it could allow people a deduction for their property taxes to eliminate that double system. Because people who give mortgages are being paid with after-tax money, that mortgage income could be non-taxable, which would immediately lower the rate of interest on homes. It would immediately spur the housing industry and the sale of white goods, such as refrigerators, and carpets and all the rest. Those are the Government's choices. Instead of that, the Government, having promised Canadians that it would do something to help the housing industry, once again decided against that method in favour of a program of giving out grants. As necessary as they are to those who need them, every program like that, as every Canadian is learning, has a built-in efficiency rate of 50 per cent because it effectively costs one dollar to administer for every dollar, that is given out. I remind Hon. Members opposite that we made that exact point when the lottery Bill was in the committee. The Minister openly admitted that that program, like others, would cost 50 cents to administer for every 50 cents it gave out. That is exactly the kind of program which is now in place. The country does not need the interface of Ottawa. Let people help themselves through tax incentives. Let the system be just and let Canadians get on with building the country, because Canadians will put Canadians back to work in a much better fashion than would any Government in Ottawa.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, as my good television friend, Gomer Pyle, would say, "Surprise, surprise, surprise". Those tired old Tories are at it again. Look at their number, on a Friday afternoon. They amount to one-third of the number on this side, maybe? One-half, maybe? Let it never be said that those in that happy band of warriors over there, with all the answers for the economy, are not fighters. I watched my good friend, the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) this afternoon. He is a fighter. I watched with interest my good friend, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). He is a fighter. They are fighters. They fight, they fight and they fight. Sometimes they even fight people who are not Tories.

I have watched with great interest the concern of the Tories in the past few days during Question Period and at other times, their concern on such issues as those addressed here in this particular motion, issues involving full employment, industrial strategy and energy prices. It has been most instructive to watch how that concern has been exercised, in particular, to watch the new parliamentary Leader of the Tories—

An Hon. Member: The interim Leader.

Mr. Simmons: —the best streetfighter of the lot, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). After Winnipeg, and there was a bit of theatre, if we could go into it—

Mr. Crosby: I thought Chrétien was a streetfighter.

• (1550)

Mr. Simmons: If I ever saw the Tory follies it had to be Winnipeg, but that is another story—Tory follies, western edition. After that, the man who is now Leader of the Opposition—and do not think that happened by accident either, he was the obvious choice for the job—had his hands full after Winnipeg, of course, as you will have seen in the House this week. Just think of all those Tory MPs who had to be put into line.

That reminds me, and I must tell you for totally relevant reasons, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, about the day in January when I successfully stormed the British Parliament at Westminster, in broad daylight, with some wounds to show for it. Let me say that what I am about to say on this subject is so relevant that I submit that ever after you will be inclined to quote this moment in time as an absolute model for precise and totally unfettered relevancy in debate. I did not go to Westminster dressed for an accident so I had to borrow some clothes. I came back across the Atlantic with a shirt from my good friend the Deputy Government House Leader, the gentleman from Don Valley East (Mr. Smith) and a sweater from my good friend, the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), the gentleman who is making so much of a contribution to the Procedures Committee these days, the former Minister of Small Business in the Clark administration. Indeed, he was the former Tory national caucus Chairman until quite recently, a demise not totally unconnected with the Tory follies in Winnipeg.

This brings me back to the subject of the Leader of the Opposition, the Member for Yukon. People are calling him, especially after Winnipeg, the kneecapper, kneecapper Nielsen, I cannot say that—I suppose it is "knielcapsen" for short. Let us look at his performance in the House this week and see how consistent it is with the concern in this particular motion for economy, for inflation, for reduced deficits, for employment, for an industrial strategy in this country, because that is the acid test. If the gentleman from the Yukon is putting his money where his mouth is, if the gentleman from the Yukon is pursuing in debate in this House the things he says he is interested in and that his Party is interested in, I have some real difficulty believing these words in this motion, as good as they are, as supportable as they are in terms of the individual concerns expressed. I have some real difficulty relating that to the Party that has been applauding like so many trained seals the mud-slinging of the Leader of the Opposition this week.

Winnipeg—what a night that was! My friend, the Hon. Member for Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Coates), wrote a book, "The Night of the Knives". He had better get busy again. That title will not do for this time. I guess it should be "Machetes in broad daylight" or something of that nature this time. Dalton Camp should recall that night, although I thought he had a rather selective memory when he was lecturing the minority on television from Winnipeg.

Now, folks, if it were permissible in Parliamentary terms—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Simmons: Oh, my good friend the Speaker is a very folksy person. I say, if I could, Mr. Speaker, to the few people who are left watching this program this afternoon on television, if you really want a yardstick on the people who authored this motion and who support this particular motion, I would say to you, compare this motion to Winnipeg and ask one question only. Can you imagine, if that is what they do to their own on national television, what they would do to you, the taxpayer, behind closed doors? What would they do to you if the public were not watching? I know the rhetoric, I know the statements of concern, I know how they say they would look after the people of this country. Thank you very much. If they look after the people of this country the way they have looked after themselves in the last few weeks, I for one taxpayer do not want to be looked after. Thank you very much, I will look after myself.

I speak from experience because I did listen with great interest to my good friend, the Hon. Member for St. John's West who regaled this House, as he always does, for the last hour or so, a man who has been at different times on both ends of the kneecapping exercise. After all, why is he not the finance spokesman now if he knows as much about the economy as he professed to know earlier this afternoon? We all know the answer to that particular question. That Member, the former Tory Minister of Finance for Canada who was also a Tory Minister of Finance in Newfoundland, this man who rose in his place today and talked about concerns for people who are unemployed, concerns for people who are poor, concerns for people who, through no fault of their own, are in desperate financial straits, that same man, when he was in a position to do something about it, did something about it, and I know because I was there. I sat opposite him in the Newfoundland House of Assembly and I will tell you one of several things he did. He, as Minister of Finance, wiped out, did away with, terminated, abolished a long standing Liberal program called the mother's allowance. This was a particular monthly stipend made available to mothers in Newfoundland and Labrador who had not necessarily access to other income. The Member for St. John's West, who exudes all kinds of compassion today, was very short on compassion that day in the Newfoundland legislature when I and others pleaded with him, "Do not do it, do not do it to the mothers of Newfoundland and Labrador", but he did it. Did he tell you about that this afternoon, Mr. Speaker? Did he use that as an example of the kind of compassion he has been known for over the years?

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you will pardon me if I am slightly less than ecstatic about this particular motion because resolutions in Parliament are like other things and objects and people in real life, you judge it by the company it keeps, and this motion keeps terrible company. This motion is keeping absolutely terrible company. It keeps the company of a man from St. John's West who did the absolute opposite of what this motion advocates. So I have difficulty keeping company with that kind of motion for very good reasons, for reasons of experience, long bitter experience at the hands of that particular gentleman from St. John's West.

Why is it that every time I read this motion about inflation and employment and industrial strategy, quotations from the Holy Writ come to mind? I think of quotes like "moat in your own eye" or maybe "physician, heal thyself". Why is it that I find myself asking, if it is as simple as the Tories say, where were they, what did they do when they were in Government in 1979? Where was the Member for St. John's West during the several years he was Minister of Finance in Newfoundland? Why is it that the public debt in Newfoundland more than trebled during his tenure? It went from $900 million to $2,800 million in the five years he was Finance Minister. It took 23 years to go to $900 million, and in the next seven years it went from $900 million to $2,800 million at the hands of the fellow who is now going to solve all of our problems, with one particular motion. Physician, heal thyself.

The Tories are all marvellous talkers, wonderful, marvellous talkers, great talkers and abominable hypocrites, expert deceptionists, practised illusionists. Remember, when we were dealing with the Constitution not many months ago, the hue and cry from the Opposition? They were clean out of their skulls. They asked why we were spending so much time on the Constitution when the economy was begging for attention. Unemployment needed to be addressed. Do you remember that? Let me say for the public record that it was a fair criticism. It had no grounds in fact, but it was fair. It was a fair criticism for an Opposition to take.

• (1600)

Let us apply that same yardstick to them. The Tories say they are concerned about the economy. Let us be fair to them. They have talked about their concern in this motion. They said we should get on with it in terms of addressing inflation, unemployment and bringing in an industrial strategy. It is all there. I do not argue with the issues they want addressed. They have demonstrated on paper that they have a concern for the issues in that motion.

That is real concern, concern for unemployment and energy prices. On a Friday afternoon when most ordinary sensible people are getting ready for a leisurely weekend, the hard-working, the long-suffering Tories are here looking after the problems of the economy. If they have their shoulder to the wheel on a Friday afternoon, let us find out where the shoulder was on Thursday afternoon and Wednesday afternoon. Let us look, for example, at Hansard for Wednesday and Thursday and see how many questions the Tories put during a one-hour long Question Period on the economy, on inflation and on industrial strategy. How many questions were there? I see one on the Gillespie affair. The Leader of the Opposition asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) another question on the same affair; the old knee-capper really got down below the belt there, didn't he? Anyway, it was on the same subject.

How many questions were there on Wednesday or on Thursday regarding unemployment? I ask them, how many questions were there on energy? I ask them just to make a rough guess. Give me a ballpark figure. How many? I have gone through Hansard for Wednesday and Thursday. Just give me a rough guess, fellows. How many questions were there on any of the subjects addressed in your motion?

Let me be completely fair. I would not want to leave here suggesting that all the questions were on the Gillespie affair, because that is not true. I want to say to my good friend the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) that not all the questions on Wednesday and Thursday dealt with that. I have not looked at today's questions. I was not in the House for all of Question Period today. I want to be fair.

On Wednesday and Thursday the questions were not all on Gillespie. My friend, the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence) asked a question on another subject altogether, RCMP files. Never let it be said that the Hon. Member for Yukon and the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland engage in the same kind of mud-slinging. Oh, no. RCMP files. The Gillespie affair.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The Lalonde affair.

Mr. Simmons: I ask the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) how many questions there were on the economy. Will he make a rough guess? I will help him. It is fewer than ten in two days. It is fewer than five. Does he want to try yet? It is fewer than three. It is fewer than two. It is fewer than one. There was not one question on Wednesday or Thursday from the crowd that is now going to cure the ills of the country, help all the poor people and put everybody back to work with one motion.

How many times have they raised the issue in Question Period in two days? Not once. They were too busy trying to knee-cap. They were too busy trying to mud-sling. They were too busy doing what they are best at. That is why they are known unofficially as "Her Majesty's Permanent Opposition."

Now we have this pious rhetoric. This pious, pompous bit of nonsense from the crowd that never had any foresight. In terms of political instruction, even if they do not care a whit about the country, just in sheer, elementary, political terms, why did they not cover themselves by asking one or two questions so that they could keep on fooling the people? Why did they not do what they do best, continue to fool the people? At least they could have asked one or two questions to distract, but no. They were too busy trying to distract attention from their own internal Party squabbles by pointing the finger the other way, to be concerned about the economy, jobs and employment.

Don't give me this on a Friday afternoon when I would be better off at home taking a nap or something. Don't give me this pious rhetoric. Don't waste the taxpayers' money telling us one thing on a Friday when you spend all day Wednesday, all day Thursday and most of Friday doing the exact opposite. At least be consistent.

Finally, we have been saying for years that these are the things that need attention. Significantly enough, on February 18, 1983, three years after the people of Canada gave the Tories the message, they got the message. They finally understand the message we have had for three years. The message is employment, development and fair prices. We have had that message for some time.

I congratulate them on this important and happy anniversary for us and for them because three years ago today, they got back where they belong. I congratulate them on this happy anniversary for finally getting the message that people are concerned about fair prices. I say, Il vaut mieux tard que jamais—better late than never. Welcome to the club. Why do they not get their act together in their own Party, come into the House and do the job they were elected to do, provide constructive and responsible opposition to measures which this Government introduces which, in the opinion of the Opposition, may not be in the interests of the country as a whole? I hope they refine and re-find themselves. They need a little refining and a lot of re-finding. I hope they do both. I hope they then come in and do the job they have done so well over the years and which, with my best wishes, they will continue to do for many, many years to come. May I say to them, through you, Mr. Speaker, happy anniversary.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Questions and answers?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment and follow up on his theme a little bit by observing that 134 Members were elected to this House to serve in the Opposition, 129 of whom have not bothered to show up this afternoon, including the whole of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Simmons: I thank my good friend for his comment and question. We are too painfully aware of the difference between words and performance from the Tories. The last part of my speech today dwelt on that particular theme. If we could take them at face value, it would be easy to deal with them. I am not saying we would agree with them. I do not believe we should aspire to the day when the Government and the Opposition agree on every issue. That would be bad for the principle of Government in this country. However, I would hope that we could aspire to the time when we had in the Opposition a group of men and women who at least do not give their support to a motion which shows their very hypocrisy. That is my plea this afternoon, that these people will come in here with constructive measures. They would be surprised. Sometimes they would have my support and the support of others on this side.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to finally complete his story about London since it would be the only part of what we heard so far that would be relevant in any way.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, there are many stories. The official one is this. He wears glasses, I wear glasses and my good friend the Acting Speaker wears glasses. There was a time when people were civil enough so that you could go about this country with your glasses on and count on them to be civil. These days you have to be a bit more inventive, so I put my arm in a sling. And who knows, my nightmare might come true and one day I might get up and put my wrong arm in the sling. Then the jig will be up. The truth is, I was with the Procedure Committee immediately in front of the British Parliament. I went over a low barrier. I got over, but the coat did not, and here I am with my new look.

• (1610)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) whether he has read the notice of Supply Proceedings and the Opposition motion.

Mr. Simmons: Oh yes, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, for the benefit of my good friend, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich, I am going to read it for him. It reads as follows:

> That, in light of the Government's outright betrayal of the Canadian people and its repudiation of its 1980 election promises to reduce unemployment, combat inflation, avoid inflationary tax hikes and excessive energy price increases, reduce the deficit, and implement an industrial strategy for Canada, this House calls upon the Government to face its responsibility to Canadians and take immediate action to live up to the commitments that it made in 1980 or resign.

I believe that is the fourth time I have read it, but just now I did so for the Hon. Member's benefit. That is the motion, Mr. Speaker. I was fully aware of it and I found it to be very hypocritical. I appeal, particularly to a gentleman with the integrity of the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich, to divorce himself from this particular motion, not because he does not believe it, I am sure he does believe it deeply, and I commend him for having beliefs, but because his Party's actions this week have betrayed him and betrayed the intent of this motion. What they have done this week is to address everything but any concern for the economy. I do not argue with him for holding beliefs, but I take exception to the fact he is not putting his money where his mouth is. He is not standing by his beliefs when he allows his Leader this week to mud-sling when he should have been speaking on behalf of the Canadian people.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I was happy to learn that the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) could read. The fact remains, however, he does not understand what we are doing today, Mr. Speaker. I can explain it for him. I am sure you understand it, Mr. Speaker. We are castigating the Government for failing to live up to its promises. The motion says quite clearly:

> —the Government's outright betrayal of the Canadian people and its repudiation of its 1980 election promises . . .

I agree that the matters following that are matters of concern to Canadians and to our Party, and they are of even greater concern to us, Mr. Speaker, because they represent promises which were made to the Canadian people in 1980 which have not been fulfilled. This is an expression of the concern which the Hon. Member says we do not have. Of course we have concern. I believe the Liberals should have concern also, Mr. Speaker, that they have failed to live up to the undertakings and promises they made three years ago today. And as for the concoctions of irrelevancies which we have just been subjected to, particularly the "London" story, as I was waiting for that story to finish, I was wondering whether we might have been able to find one of those deck chairs somewhere which we could have brought in here, then we could have had the third "Ronnie" sitting with his hands on his knees talking about those irrelevancies, embroidering on them, and getting further and further away from the subject of his discussion. But I quite understand that perhaps a deck chair on the floor between the two sides of the House of Commons might be a little extraneous. However, I really found it extraordinary that the third "Ronnie" should have showed up at this particular time and accused the Progressive Conservative Party of fooling the people.

We are talking about the three year old record of a group of Liberals who claim to be the Government, and who claim to be governing, and who were fooling the people. I do not know whether this character who has just been speaking went to that campaign—

Mr. Fisher: Order. Watch your language.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Well, "character" is a perfectly good word, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether he went to this campaign college in Toronto in January, 1980, where the policy for the campaign was being outlined, and where the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in addressing the pupils on the occasion, said:

> There is a prior commitment that I want to make clear. Liberals will do what we say we will do. And if we can't do it, we won't say it.

Whereupon he went on and elaborated five different elements for these scholars who were assembled on that particular occasion. These were things which his Government would do if he could bedazzle the Canadian people into electing him and his Party. And lo and behold, the Party was re-elected. It has subsequently, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to you, failed utterly to live up to the promises made on that occasion. I will just take, for example, the very first one, which reads:

> We have an economic program for the 80's which will enhance dignity, create opportunity and provide security.

Let us take those three points in order. Enhance dignity? We have been witness this week to a spectacle in this Chamber which virtually makes me ashamed of being a Member of Parliament, that we should be governed by a group of people who can so deny, repudiate, turn their backs on their own rules of conduct and behaviour, and still stand there and in the most casual way attempt to excuse their actions. The performance of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) in April, 1981 at Port Hawkesbury, sitting beside a former Minister of Government, and announcing a program, and obviously embracing the associated company with that program, is a complete—

Mr. Evans: The Tory Premier of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I am not talking about him. He at least had faith that everything had been done correctly by the Government of Canada, but he was very, very sadly deluded in that, was he not? Oh, he certainly was, Mr. Speaker. There they were, the Deputy Prime Minister and the former Minister of Energy announcing an energy program which, I suspect, would involve paying royalties to South Africa. And if only they had known that. So you have two hypocritical actions there, one involving a former Minister before the two years were up, according to guidelines which his own Prime Minister had written and to which he subscribed, getting involved in a program which might very well require the payment of royalties to a Government with which they would rather not have to do business. That is dignity? That is the "dignity" to which this House has been subjected during this past week, and it makes me a little ashamed, Mr. Speaker, to find that the Canadian Government, any Canadian Government, could be associated with such an undignified procedure.

The Prime Minister also claimed in this school that he was going to create opportunities. And what do we see about creating opportunities? The unemployment rate at the time in 1980 was 7.5 per cent and the total number of unemployed was something in the order of 838,000 at the end of 1979. Whereas today, Mr. Speaker, twice that number are unemployed. The opportunities that were being created were the opportunities to go on the unemployment rolls. I do not think that is what the electorate really believed when they swallowed this. Creating opportunities to go on Unemployment Insurance?

The third offer was to provide security. Security of what kind? I do not know whether you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that since that particular time the growth of bank deposits in savings accounts has risen at an extraordinary rate. If I can quote from the National Finances published by the Canadian Tax Foundation for 1981-82, in 1979, the amount of personal savings have increased from about $30 billion in 1979 to about $80 billion today. That is not a reflection of economic security, that is fear. The general public does not know where it can, with confidence and security, place its funds.

At one time it was thought possible that if you had money to invest, you could invest it in the energy field. I do not know whether you have been following the trends in the energy field on the stock market, Mr. Speaker, but there are only one or two companies going in the right direction. Dome has gone down, and there are a good number of others. There are a number of loyal Canadians who would like to be able to invest in their country.

This was not a public undertaking to provide security, but it was an undertaking given to candidates and they went out and said, "Don't you worry, we will provide security." What has the Government done? It has squandered the revenue of this country in a manner which has never been seen before. This statement I have been reading from goes on to say that the program for 1980 consists of five major commitments. One was to manage more rigorously the nation's finances in order to make more effective use of taxpayers' money. Well, what were we debating yesterday, Mr. Speaker? We were debating a Bill to authorize this Government to borrow $19 billion. Now, I do not know whether this Bill has ever been contested by the Chair as being an omnibus Bill and it should therefore be split up into two different Bills, one for the 1982-83 year, and the other for borrowings for next year. That is a possibility. It ought not to be presented in this form. Nonetheless, $19 billion is being sought. I wish I could find the figures on the borrowing. They are around somewhere amongst all these papers, but I would say it is something of the order of $45 billion to $50 billion which this Government has sought to borrow in this Parliament, while at the same time making the statement that it would manage more rigorously the nation's finances.

Mr. Gauthier: Over three years? Come on.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): In three years. I now come to the commitment to achieve energy security at a fair price. The figure which comes to mind on the purchase by PetroCan of Petrofina is about $1.5 billion. That is part of the debt that your children and mine have to pay down the road, $1.5 billion to acquire a series of storefronts to match those acquired earlier for a somewhat smaller sum on the West Coast through the purchase of Pacific Petroleum. All the Petrofina stations have been repainted, and it cost $1.5 billion to repaint them, put up the signs, the Maple Leaf, and everything. But not one drop of new petroleum resources was acquired in that purchase, Mr. Speaker. Just the storefront, that is all. This is the manner in which you achieve energy security at a fair price. Fair price, Mr. Speaker? We find that in December, 1979, when that infamous resolution was passed down here—

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): You mean the day you could not count?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I was here. In December, 1979 we were paying 24.6 cents a litre for gasoline at the pump. That translates into a language which other people understand as $1.12 a gallon. Well, today, in Ottawa, it is about 42 cents or 43 cents a litre for regular.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): It is 43.3 cents.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): All right, 43.3. So we have an increase of 18 cents. Now, that is odd, is it not? Eighteen cents a litre. I remember hearing something about 18 cents a gallon at one particular time, and now we find it has gone up 18 cents a litre. Now, where are we? The national average was 25 cents a litre in December of 1979 and it is 47 cents a litre in September of 1982. I guess we get into the 18 cents business there, too. Rather strange. That is 22 cents a litre more on average.

• (1630)

I really wonder how these gullible people could have been soaked in by these promises—the promises about which we are speaking today—the promises that have been repudiated.

The fourth commitment was to develop an industrial policy that will provide jobs. Jobs for whom? For the Japanese? If we look at the statistics for unemployment in 1979 we would see how they were going to provide jobs. At that time 838,000 Canadians were out of work. Today, Mr. Speaker, at least 1,600,000 are out of work. Is that what they call providing jobs? The only way the Government seems to be able to provide jobs is to throw money around.

The Liberals were going to build greater economic strength in each region. I should like to give you some figures for the amounts of money that has been poured into the various Provinces through the Regional Development Incentives Programs. Newfoundland got $30 million; Prince Edward Island, $22 million; Nova Scotia, $79.8 million; New Brunswick, $81.2 million; Quebec, $530.1 million; Ontario, $94.7 million; Manitoba, $100 million; Saskatchewan, $33.6 million; Alberta, $35.3 million; British Columbia, $10.8 million; and Yukon, $0.4 million, for a total of $1 billion. That is since 1970, Mr. Speaker. Those figures hardly fit the promise to build greater economic strength into each region of the country as a basis for over-all prosperity.

The fifth undertaking was to enhance security of the individual by helping those who most need assistance. In last week's debate we heard what happened about that. The pensioners found that their pension cheques have been reduced from the undertaking that was given them to index to the CPI; instead they must conform with the six and five program.

An Hon. Member: What about GIS?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The GIS was left alone. The indexing of public servants' pensions was also reduced to conform with the six and five formula. Is that the best we can do for the security of the individual, to help those who most need assistance?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Are there any questions and answers?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Hon. Member who referred to our definite ambition to help those who most need help. He will know that amongst people who file income tax returns at this time of year are low-income parents, single parents and the unemployed. These people definitely need help and the Government has indicated that it would like to get the refunds out to them as quickly as possible.

In light of his concern for the same people, could he tell us why his Party deliberately refused to extend debate on the income tax legislation last Monday night when we wanted to get that legislation through?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, the income tax measures ought to have been brought forward many months ago. Hon. Members opposite have been changing their minds so damn often that we do not know quite what is going to be in the income tax forms.

Excuse the outburst, Mr. Speaker, but with all due respect I feel that it was necessary to use an expletive like that. The income tax forms for the collection of income tax ought to be before the House in January or even in December.

What worries me about the collection of income tax and the refunds is that people who file on a quarterly basis have to pay their tax before they receive the revenue. I do not think that is fair.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the Hon. Member that those tax measures were introduced in November, 1981 and more were brought in in June, 1982. The Finance Committee met to discuss them in the fall of 1982, and there has been extended debate both in public and in this Chamber, on those measures.

If we take the Hon. Member at his word, he could hardly claim ignorance of those measures after 15 months. If he does claim that, he should not be here.

Why did his Party refuse to speed up debate so that we could legally mail refunds to those people who need them the most?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why the Government did not bring in that measure earlier. I suppose it is difficult to bring in income tax measures until they decide how much the deficit will be. In November 1981 it was $13.3 billion and now it is $27.2 billion. They cannot make up their minds how much the deficit is going to be, let alone what measures apply to income tax.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to my good friend, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich. I should like to tell him that one of the three people watching is my grandmother, and first he should restrain his expletives in response to my question.

He said he remembered the time when gas was 18 cents a gallon. Many of us remember that. I wonder if he also remembers and will put on record—and if he cannot, I can—that in the budget brought in by the former Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), one of the appendices clearly sets forth a pricing schedule, which would have meant that gasoline prices and heating fuel prices at the pump in 1983 would be higher than they actually are at present.

Would the Hon. Member respond to that question without expletives?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) for having used a word with which he was not familiar.

I would be very pleased if the Hon. Member would send to me in the mail—and not by Canada Post, please, because it might take too long—a copy of this particular fabrication.

Mr. Simmons: Of course I will do so, Mr. Speaker. Not tomorrow but on Monday. The Hon. Member has waited three years without reading the information, so I am sure he can wait another 48 hours or so. I will also send it to the people in my riding through my Householder. I have seen some of his Householders and I commend this kind of information to him because it would make an improvement on what was in his last one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): May I explain a difficulty. It is often a courtesy to recognize an Hon. Member from the same Party by which the motion under debate was originally put forward so that it might be given the opportunity to complete debate before the end of the day. However, another tradition is that ordinarily we alternate speakers between left and right. Under the circumstances and unless I hear some other proposition, I would have to recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans).

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in a sense of fairness to the tradition I would be prepared to stop at ten minutes to five and split the time with the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta).

I have a few things to say about the motion before the House. I would like to look at the situation which faces us and at the options which are available to the Government to try to assess what it is that we are up against and why, in light of that, I think the motion is totally and wholly out of order.

• (1640)

We have been told on a number of occasions—and I firmly believe Canadians have come to realize it—that the economic disorders of the country are not solely those of Canada, and that the economic situation which Canadians are experiencing is not solely the responsibility of Canadians. We are an export nation. We depend very heavily for our Gross National Product, for our national income and for our livelihoods, on our ability to sell. What we have sold the most and sold best has been natural resources and the processed materials from them. It is well known on the West Coast that the lumber industry or the forest products industry is suffering, not as a result of policies of the federal Government or of provincial Governments, but as a result of the fact that these products cannot be sold in foreign markets. Also the mining industry is suffering today, not as a result of policies of the federal Government or provincial Governments, but as a result of the fact that we cannot sell nickel or iron ore in world markets because the markets do not exist as a result of world recession.

The same conditions, to a greater or lesser degree, as we are experiencing in Canada are being experienced by every western industrialized nation in the world. It does absolutely nothing for the psychology or understanding of Canadians for the Opposition to put forward a motion which inappropriately and falsely lays the entire blame on Government or Governments in this country for the economic situation we face. We certainly have a role to play. I defy Hon. Members opposite to say that the Government is not doing in a positive way everything within its means to resolve the problems we are facing.

We can trace the difficulties back for many years in all western industrialized economies. We were told in the 1970s that inflation had to be brought down. In fact, the Opposition demanded that inflation be brought down. It realizes, as we realize, that if we let inflation get out of control, it creates massive uncertainty, cuts back on investment, reduces economic growth and drives up interest rates in the system. These kinds of conditions are not conducive to rising standards of living or being able to maintain present standards. For example, in 1975 Government policy implemented through the Bank of Canada began to restrain the economy or to do something about the inflationary problem. Other countries have followed suit with precisely the same policy because it was the only way to deal with the inflationary problem.

Inflation is simple. It is too much purchasing power chasing too few goods and not enough economic output. In this situation prices rise, and we have a productivity problem and an output problem. This is inflation.

Under a standard economic arrangement where markets are free to adjust, which does not exist in this country, United States, France or Germany—but it does exist in Japan to a certain extent—when demand falls, the incomes of all people in society would fall somewhat to reduce their incomes in line with the demand in order to combat inflation or to bring demand into line with output. This would stop inflation, but we have a system in which there are a great many rigidities and structural problems with labour-management relations and the way we do business in the country, privately, governmentally and otherwise. Our system adjusts to a reduction in demand. The only way to solve inflation is to reduce demand, so that we quit putting upward pressures on prices. The way our system adjusts to that kind of situation is that it leaves the majority of people with the high incomes they had prior to the fight against inflation and throws other people out of work. We have a compensation system in Canada which yields precisely that result. When recession hits, when demand falls, the majority keep their incomes and remain stable. It has no impact on their standard of living, but the minority gets thrown out on the street. This is the way our system works. I do not think that is how it should work.

The Japanese compensation system provides for greater flexibility of wages in management and labour, so that everyone shares in the income loss somewhat but no one suffers a dramatic decline in their standard of living. Our system does not operate that way. It operates in the manner I have described, and we see 1.5 million people thrown out of work. This is the way our system responds to the fight against inflation, which is necessary.

There is only one method of handling it. If we do not believe that the people thrown out of work should be asked to bear the entire brunt of a recession, or a fight against inflation, then governments have a responsibility, which all of us have recognized, to ensure that there is a social safety net to catch these people before they are left destitute. We have done that in Canada. I might add, in a non-partisan spirit, that this has been done by past Liberal Governments with the introduction of unemployment insurance, welfare programs, medicare and pensions, all designed to cushion people affected by the adjustment process I have just described.

We are faced with a situation that is real. We know what it is. Also we are faced with some very real options. The Government can respond to this problem by reinflating the economy; in other words, printing more money, selling bonds to the Bank of Canada, taking that money and spending it, investing it, or giving it to people to ensure that their incomes remain above a minimal level. This would generate inflation again, and we would be right back into the same cycle. Also, the Government can increase taxes on those people who continue to have jobs in order to provide the funds necessary to subsidize those who do not have jobs. This is possible.

If we did that today, we would probably drive the economy further into recession because we would reduce the incentives to produce and grow. That is not a possible option. The only other option left to a Government faced with an economy in which the psychology is so badly shaken that individuals will not invest on their own and consumers are saving at high rates, is the classics Keynesian one—the Government borrows funds from the public and puts them into the marketplace to stimulate demand, or it can put those funds into the hands of individuals who are out of work and suffering, and let the deficit rise.

The Opposition screams that the deficit is out of control. There are many ways of analysing the deficit. Some people at the University of Toronto and in other places have analysed the situation and made a distinction between the structural and the entire deficit, that during a serious major economic downturn, deficits should rise; but just as true, during times of economic expansion, deficits must be reduced. I suggest that in this period of time, when deficits have risen, it is exactly what should happen in a society that has a system like ours and that adjusts like ours if we are not to allow people to become destitute, re-ignite the fires of inflation and raise the taxes to the extent that it will drive the economy further away from growth.

Effectively, we are running a deficit now because we are borrowing against the future. Deficits are tax liabilities for the future. Those deficits are justified and the actions are correct if they are incurred to invest in the future and to generate greater income for the future and provide more jobs for the future. That is precisely what the Government is trying to do with the deficit. We are trying to invest in capital infrastructure and in human capital through the skills and training programs. We are trying to invest and expand the potential of people and capital for the future which will generate the income and allow us to reduce the deficits.

Let me just say that we certainly have achieved some of our objectives and we will achieve more. We will achieve the objective of reducing unemployment. Finally, with respect to inflation, as of today it is down to 8.3 per cent. If you look at what inflation has been over the last six months on an annualized basis, it is 4.6 per cent. Annualized for the last three months, November, December and January, the inflation rate in Canada is running at 2.2 per cent. Inflation has come down. This is an achievement which will help bring down interest rates and stimulate the economic growth, and that is how we will attack the unemployment problem.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by saying that I appreciate the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) relinquishing part of his time so I may participate and wrap up this debate this afternoon. I would also like to congratulate him on his speech. It was certainly one of the better speeches that was made this afternoon. Certainly, many people would agree with the general theme of his remarks.

I would say, however, that one of the things he obviously did not mention—probably because of lack of time—is that inflation is primarily caused by governments. The Government has shown its record for creating inflation. Obviously, we cannot insulate ourselves from world recession which has taken place, but the Government has played a major role in our experiencing higher inflation than necessary. That is what concerns Canadians the most at this time.

The National Energy Program is a good example of Government mismanagement which has caused a tremendous amount of money to leave the country.

The Hon. Member also failed to mention the fact that the economy has just not performed. The Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development, OECD, indicated in its 1982 estimates that Canada's real economic growth performance was the worst of any country in the industrialized world. Our growth as a percentage of GNP was minus 5 per cent. This is clearly part of the problem. The Government could obviously have played a geat role in this area but has not done so. Canada's performance was behind the performance of countries such as Iceland, Sweden, The Netherlands, Luxembourg, Greece, Portugal and Turkey. Surely the Government must take some responsibility for the economic mess we are in when one sees these figures. These figures are given to us by what must be considered an independent and objective body that examines 24 countries in the world. It found Canada to be at the bottom, twenty-fourth.

Canada has a history of being a great democracy. It is probably one of the greatest in the world. Democracy involves free elections and people expressing their opinion in an election campaign.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I will make my point of order very brief.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Sit down.

Mr. Simmons: I recognize that the Hon. Member has very limited time. Since there will be no time for questions, I wonder if he would permit a brief question.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Sit down.

Mr. Murta: Before the interruption, Mr. Speaker, I was saying that Canada is a great democracy in which people are elected after telling their voters what they intend to do if elected. The motion that we are debating today results from the 1980 election campaign. During that campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and the country, knowing full well that we were entering a recession, made to the people a series of statements that were as far from the truth as could be imagined.

One statement the Prime Minister made was, "This Party will not simply stand by and let the recession come." Obviously, the Prime Minister knew the recession was coming. He also said, "We will fight it and overcome it". He went on to say that the Liberals would fight to lower unemployment when the Conservatives planned to increase unemployment by 100,000 people. When he knew the recession was coming, he made a statement like that.

At the present time, in January of 1983, the unemployment rate is 12.4 per cent. In January of 1980, it was 7.5 per cent. At the present time we have some 1,598,000, almost 1.6 million Canadians out of work. That is some 650,000 more than in January, 1980.

It was statements like that that have been discussed today. The Prime Minister, knowing full well what would happen and that this country was possibly entering a severe recession which would make times much worse, purposely neglected to tell the Canadian people what was to happen. In effect, he sugar coated the pill for the Canadian people. Unfortunately, they swallowed it and elected the present Government.

That is what this debate is really all about. Unless the Government owns up and tries in a meaningful way—much in the way the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre indicated—to deal with the economy in a sensible fashion, not only will the Liberal Party be hurt by its statements, the whole democratic process of the country will be in jeopardy. People just do not believe what politicians say any more. I thank Hon. Members for their indulgence and I will bring this debate to an end.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House, pursuant to Standing Order 62(11), that proceedings on the motion have expired. This House stands adjourned until Monday at eleven o'clock a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed from Tuesday, February 15, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning to speak at second reading stage on Bill C-139. The first thought that occurs to me is that I am participating in what fundamentally is an anti-democratic exercise. We have a Bill here that is 295 pages long and we have just heard the Clerk of the House indicate that the motion would move this Bill to a Committee of the Whole.

Inside this Bill are an enormous number of tax changes which attack our society, which create unemployment and which are not good for this nation. If we were moving this Bill into a standing committee we could call witnesses to provide us with testimony on the possible impact of each of the provisions of the Bill. By moving it into a Committee of the Whole, I am quite certain that the Government will ultimately invoke closure. We will not even be able to debate, with the kind of sureness that is required, each of the individual clauses and each of the individual tax measures. We certainly will not be able to call witnesses to tell the Canadian people and Members of this House what the possible repercussions are of each of these individual tax changes.

It reminds me of the omnibus energy Bill. That was such an abomination of democratic principles that we were forced as an Opposition to ring the bells in this Chamber for two weeks before the Government agreed to split the Bill into different parts and to move it to committee where witnesses could be heard.

Mr. Speaker, we are elected to come to this Chamber, hopefully with a sense that collective wisdom will prevail. We are not all experts on all aspects of Canada and the Canadian economy. Very few of us can feel comfortable with the diverse range of topics that go from national defence to atomic energy to farming to manufacturing, and on and on and on.

Some time today we will be asked to vote on this piece of legislation which is 295 pages long. It includes complex tax provisions which will affect all aspects of Canadian society. We have the certain knowledge that it will move into Committee of the Whole where we can talk about it more and question the Minister. However, experts and average Canadians will be denied the right to appear before a parliamentary committee as witnesses to provide information to Parliamentarians on what might be good in the legislation, what might be bad and what needs changing.

When the Government adopts processes of this kind regarding legislation that is so important, it is no small wonder that the country is in trouble. If you have bad processes, you have bad conclusions. If you have good processes, there is no guarantee of good conclusions, but the odds go up that the conclusions will be better.

As I stand in this Chamber and try to review the 295 pages of this Bill, I ask myself what principles are contained in this legislation. The first one that leaps out as I read through it is that this Bill will attack employers. Employers are the job creators. Many of the provisions will make it more difficult for companies to stay alive and employ people. In the present climate with over 1.5 million Canadians unemployed, why bring in a piece of legislation which attacks the employers, the job creators?

A principle of this Tax Bill will disallow future legitimate business costs. Businesses which want to grow and expand must borrow money. The interest cost on that money is a legitimate business cost, but this legislation says that some parts of it will not be legitimate. A trucking business that wants to expand must buy more trucks and a construction business would buy more construction machinery. According to this Bill, the cost of that machinery will no longer be a legitimate business cost in the same way. When you say to the employers of this nation that their interest costs, equipment costs, are not legitimate business costs, you are telling them not to grow, expand or hire more people. If you get an unemployment rate of over 12 per cent, with more than 1,600,000 Canadian unemployed, you should not be surprised. It is because the Government is attacking the employment creators through legislation such as this.

This Bill also attacks employees. It says they shall not benefit from their work the way they used to do. It is a discouragement for people to seek a job, a discouragement for them to put their heart and soul into their work. First it attacks employers and then employees. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, you should not be surprised to find 1,600,000 Canadians unemployed. This Bill attacks all Canadians. The minute you put a six and five cap on deductions in the income tax system, you increase the tax take. You take $1 billion this year and $2 billion next year out of the pockets of Canadians and hand it over to Government. Therefore, Canadians cannot make purchases which would create jobs. A farmer cannot stay in business if no one buys his produce. No one can stay in a manufacturing business unless we have people willing to buy what the manufacturer makes. This Bill will be taking a great deal of money out of the pockets of the consumers of this nation, the buyers of this nation, and if the consequence of that is not increased unemployment, then tell me what it is. I suggest it is increased unemployment. If people are not buying, there will be no jobs.

One other aspect of this Bill and other legislation is that it is a specific attack on Canadian families. It is a specific attack on the principle of marriage. In a most clear-cut provision previously in our tax system we have declared that any adult Canadian is entitled to own one piece of property and to dispose of that piece of property without paying tax. But this Government, the Liberals on the other side, have decided that if a person signs a marriage licence they have half of the rights of all other adult Canadians. They have a shared right, a half right, simply because they signed a marriage licence.

As for the Child Tax Credit provisions, we cut Family Allowances in this Chamber the other day much to the objection of the Conservative Party. We replaced it with a one time only $50 bribe. It does not go on forever, it occurs only once. That extra $50, Mr. Speaker, is given to someone who makes $10,000 a year, and it is also given to someone who makes $40,000 a year. That is not just, Mr. Speaker. It is not right. We have nothing in this provision to strengthen the traditional family in this country and we are doing much to hurt it, even destroy it.

On the weekend I held a public meeting and many people attended. Many of those people were disturbed about specific provisions in this tax Bill. They were disturbed about the general thrust of policy over the last three years. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that what has been destroyed by this Government is the spirit of Canadians, the sense of confidence which Canadians have had in their country.

One day in this Chamber one of the Hon. Members opposite stood up and told Canadians what it was to be a Liberal. At the public meeting I held on the weekend a Liberal was described as someone who put Party first and Canada second. A Conservative was described as someone who put Canada first, family second and Party third. It is time we got back to that kind of philosophy.

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, throughout the many decades that this House has been in session and, indeed, the British House before it, there were certain standards set which allowed the people to assess whether tax changes are fair or unfair, whether they make sense or not. One of the reasons there has been such vigorous opposition to this Bill on this side of the House and, indeed, I believe the Government will shortly find also in the country, is that most of the rules which have been established for tax changes in this country are broken by this legislation. They are not complicated rules and standards; they are simple standards which ordinary people can understand and which, ordinarily, Governments can understand.

Let us look at three principles and see what this legislation does with them. First of all, Mr. Speaker, all tax changes at any level of the Government, by any Government, should first of all satisfy one principle: they should be clear, certain and understandable. There is good reason for that. The tax changes are not clear, certain or understandable. It breaks that relationship with the Government, without which we cannot operate. It is absolutely essential that people understand what the tax changes are, that they will be clearly comprehensible and the people are certain they will be in place.

This particular Bill brings together the three budgets of November, June and October which have been brought down in the last 13 months and resulted not only in legislation that has been not only unclear and not understandable, but has created a litany of uncertainty. In fact, we have had changes, revisions, delays and reversals to the extent that even today people are not sure whether the Minister is talking about the budget of November, 1981, the budget of June, 1982, the budget of October, 1982 or the pre-budget discussions for the budget to come when he stands to speak in the House.

This Government has almost accomplished the unaccomplishable. It is now talking about four budgets at one time. People have no idea what the changes are and how they will be affected by them. Indeed, they are aware that the changes they know of will hurt them adversely. Not only is the content of the legislation unclear, uncertain and incomprehensible, but the language that these changes are described in is incomprehensible to the ordinary Canadian.

Last week, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) gave a number of examples of the wording of this legislation. If a Member picks out any one page and asks the next ten people in their riding if they can say what it means to them, the answer to that question will be no. The Government should remember that when it levies taxes, it is taxing ordinary people and not lawyers and accountants. The tax changes as they are described in this legislation are simply incomprehensible to the ordinary Canadian.

First, this legislation is not certain, clear or understandable. The reason the legislation should be clear and understandable is to allow for some predictability. In a free economy and a free country, tax changes are supposed to set a framework in order to allow for an investment environment which will provide incentives and job creation. There should be no doubt in anyone's mind that the Government's lack of certainty and understandable tax policy has substantially led to the creation of the conditions under which we have now had 450,000 jobs lost since the first budget of November, 1981. The Government must bear responsibility for a large part of the situation because no one could understand what the investment policy or the state of the economic climate has been for the last 15 months.

Tax changes should be just and fair. The main theme which has been evident throughout all of the speeches which have been made in the House, and indeed in editorials and statements from ordinary Canadians who were commenting on these budgets, clearly is that this legislation is not just and fair. Tax changes should be just and fair and perceived to be so. The theme which has been prevalent throughout speeches from all sides of the House has been that the tax changes hurt low and middle income people more than any others.

Second, there has been a shift in tax policy toward those who are self-reliant. This shift discourages people who are self-reliant and it discourages initiative.

Third, a tax regime has been created which has particularly left small and medium-sized businesses on their backs and gasping. This legislation is not just and fair. These are not tax changes which help low and medium-income Canadians. These are not tax changes which allow people who are self-reliant and have initiative to maintain that incentive. This is not a change in taxation which will allow us to support small and medium-sized businesses. Indeed, the reason the budget of 1981, the budget of June, 1982 and the budget of October, 1982 have been condemned time and again is simply because they have not only been confusing and unclear, but unjust and unfair.

• (1125)

The third principle which has been used for centuries to effect tax changes in a parliamentary system is that they must be seen to be linked to more general policies of Government, particularly as they relate to the economic environment. Tax changes do not exist in isolation; they are related to what a Government's economic program is. They are related to what a Government sees for the future economic growth of the country.

If you look through every page of the Bill, Mr. Speaker, including the explanatory notes, you will find nothing there about industrial strategy; you will not find much about improvement of productivity; you will not find much about the investment climate; you will not find much about human resources development; you will not find anything whatsoever about business confidence; you will not find anything about research and development; and you will find nothing about resource development.

There is nothing in these tax changes that in any way speaks to the Canadian people about the Government's economic program. These are tax changes related simply and only to the private imaginings of the people who work in the Finance Department and are unrelated to what happens in the streets, in the towns, in the villages and in the neighbourhoods of the country.

The reason that the Government is being challenged by this Opposition, and indeed is being challenged in all parts of the country, is that these tax changes are not clear and understandable to the people. They create difficulties for investment. They are not tax changes which are fair and just and they are not tax policies which are linked to some kind of economic recovery, economic renewal and economic growth in the country.

That is why we not only oppose these changes vigorously but, I can assure the Government, 25 million Canadians oppose them as well.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, ten minutes is not sufficient time to discuss Bill C-139 in detail, so that will not be my purpose. Much less is it enough time to consider the damage caused to the Canadian economy by the policies and actions of the two most recent "Ministers for Gillespie", but we shall try.

In Madrid today the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, stretching its session into the third year, has as one of its aims to negotiate what they call confidence-building measures to reduce tensions between participating nations. What Canada needs today is a Government which is devoted to incorporating confidence-building measures into its philosophies, its politics, its actions, its motives and, most specifically, into its fiscal responsibilities. There is very little to generate confidence in the Government's management of national affairs.

This focus of blame on the Government of Canada cannot be dismissed as simply the rhetoric of Opposition Members. In its January, 1983 "Pre-Budget Statement to the Minister of Finance", the Canadian Chamber of Commerce observed, as set out on page 2 of that brief:

—uniquely Canadian factors which, in our view, have served to make the recession here in Canada more severe than it is in the United States or many of the countries in Europe.

On page 3 the brief goes on to say:

We believe that the most important "made-in-Canada" elements of our recession are the twin losses of consumer and business confidence.

On page 4 the brief reads:

—unprecedented weakness in business confidence ... has resulted in extreme weakness in investment spending ... while economic conditions were the most important factors causing the drop in business confidence, it is also clear that government policies have been a major contributing factor ... nearly 50 per cent of Canada's senior executives cited "government policies" as representing major impediments to increased investment.

In relation to taxing, the brief states on page 5:

—governments have been too optimistic in their assessment of the level of taxation that can be supported by the resource industries. As a result, overtaxation has undermined the ability of these industries to undertake the investment needed—

Confidence results from trust, trust that comes from a feeling that all will be dealt with fairly by the Government which has been entrusted with writing the rules under which we all live, individually and corporately.

• (1130)

The brief of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce indicated the unease which pervades society stating that:

—business confidence in the Government's commitment to private enterprise as the main engine of economic growth in Canada is extremely low.

Also, as the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) just stated, tax legislation must be understood and understandable to allow confidence to be in place.

Let us consider the confusion about the automobile standby charge which began within the Department of Finance. It lacked the proper information for employers until December, 1982. It has left a substantial and unreasonable tax burden on many employees for whom there could be no withholding of tax because there was no information. The request of the Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada for delay in implementation until 1983 is not unreasonable. But the bases of the standby charge are inequitable. The initial cost of vehicles and the cost of their operation reflects the purpose for which employers buy or lease vehicles. It is not right that employees should be charged a share of exaggerated costs which do not reflect upon their use of the vehicles.

Farmers today are banding together in the Canadian Farm Survival Association. They find the Government acting to put impediments in the way of their very intent to survive. In October, changes to the Farm Credit Corporation prescribed a penalty for the farmer who might wish to pay off a loan to take benefit of lower interest rates which now prevail. One Okanagan farmer advised me that he would save $400 per month by refinancing at today's interest rate.

June Menzies, speaking to the National Farm Products Marketing Council in Vancouver, said the following:

It is important for everyone to remember that the foundation stone of the whole food system is the primary producer—in this country, the independent, commercial, family farmer who owns the farm and lives on it.

Also she added:

Urban-dominated policy decision, if ill-informed or misinformed, could lead to his destruction.

She further observed that sensitivity was part of Government leadership. What evidence do we have of sensitivity on the part of this Government to what is happening in the agricultural community today? Can it be found in the evidence that there was a Canadian farm bankruptcy increase of 55 per cent to 405 in 1982? Fortunately only five of those bankruptcies occurred in British Columbia where the Government of that Province takes a more enlightened view of its responsibilities to agriculture and to society.

The changes being made to the Unemployment Insurance Act will involve farmers in compulsory deductions and premium payments for employees working as little as 15 hours in any week. This change is resented by farmers generally. The tree fruit industry in British Columbia is particularly concerned because there are so many extremely short-term workers involved in producing and harvesting crops. Surviving farmers selling their family farms to provide for retirement will find that they are adversely prejudiced by the new rules for property reserves and may very well be forced to pay taxes on money not yet received.

On a personal note, my father, who is 93 years of age, left last week for a holiday in Hawaii. He would have been grossly penalized by the actions of this Government. The implications for the longevity, good health and happiness of my father are difficult to assess.

An Hon. Member: Perhaps it was the apples.

Mr. King: Yes, it could have been the apples, but what can be said is that his retirement comfort for the past nearly 30 years has been enhanced because he sold his orchard after 45 years of struggled farming, and when he sold it, he was not subject to the penalties to thrift and planning which the Government now places upon Canadians.

In a letter addressed to myself dated June 16, 1982 the then Minister of Finance explained some of the tax changes and indicated that:

The resulting revenue gain has been used to lower tax rates generally to the benefit of all Canadians.

Where is this benefit to all Canadians? Is it in the $27.2 billion deficit, the legacy of debt we leave for our children, the legacy of debt which the Government has run up through waste, patronage and carelessness? Is the benefit to all Canadians found in the competition on the part of Government for capital investment dollars that would better be put to productive use in Canada? Is the benefit to all Canadians to be found in the pressures of inflation and higher than necessary interest rates caused by year after year extravagances? Or is it to be found in the removal of incentives to work and achieve, which the Minister describes as benefits to Canadians?

Every action of this Government seems intent upon exacting some penalty on Canadians. The average citizen works, struggles and creates as he makes his way in the world, paying his bills, raising his family, pursuing the goals of home ownership and comfort in retirement. Especially evident is the way the Government puts blocks in the way of such individual achievement of legitimate goals.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, listening to the debate which has taken place on this piece of legislation over the course of a number of days reinforces in my mind the problems which Canadians have in understanding the tax structure.

I listened to a number of Members express concern about the complexity of the system. Many of them admitted, I think quite justifiably, that even they were having difficulty understanding it, although it be true that many of them were involved in the actual drafting of the legislation or, if not in the actual drafting, certainly in the passing of the legislation which existed prior to these amendments being brought forward.

I want to take a moment to talk about four points which strike me as important in this debate. The first one which is important to understand is that the present tax system is inherently unfair. The tax system places far too heavy a burden on those with limited means, those who are struggling daily simply to meet financial commitments to themselves and their families. They are being asked to carry a far larger share of the total tax burden than they reasonably can afford. I will return to this point in a moment.

The second point is the one I made a moment ago concerning the complexity of the Canadian tax system. I know of nowhere else where tax forms are so complex or where rules are so badly written as to make it virtually impossible for average Canadians, educated in the school system of the country, to understand what is expected of them when they fill out their tax forms. It has reached the point where, for the vast majority of Canadian families, tax time is not only a horror story, inasmuch as they might end up paying more than they can afford, but the very prospect of going through countless pages in an effort to find what it is they must pay and to what they are entitled by way of deduction is so onerous and frightening that a new business has been created in the country—the filling out of tax forms.

• (1140)

I might say that I am sure other Members do as I do, and as I have done for a number of years, and that is provide through the constituency office a service, particularly to senior citizens. On occasion I provide this service to other than senior citizens. I assist people in filling out their tax forms. I confess that over the years it has become a complex matter. People arrive in my office with their tax forms in hand complete with their T-4s, T-3s, T-6s and other receipts. I have great difficulty in personally analyzing and coming up with something I feel confident will adequately reflect their tax situation.

My father, who is now retired, devotes a great deal of time to helping people. He has been an executive member of a credit union for years, and as such was involved in financial matters on a daily basis, and even since he has retired he is involved daily in financial matters. He takes the forms not only of those who cannot afford professional help but those who are unable to fill out their own forms, and he does it for them. He said to me just yesterday that the one thing that puzzles him is what that amount really means which is on the new tax form. It is supposed to reflect last year's income. He said: "I have not found anyone yet who can provide information, with the benefit of last year's forms, which would relate to that number appearing on this year's form. No wonder people are confused and do not understand."

My father has taken a number of courses in order to keep up with the changes. If someone has a mind and a bent for that kind of work and still has difficulty understanding the form, then you can well understand, Mr. Speaker, the terrible problems that confront other citizens who are working eight or ten hours every day struggling to pay their bills. At the end of the year they have a form handed to them in which they have not been schooled and about which they have received no real information but they are expected to absorb the contents and fill in the forms.

You cannot talk about a tax bill without considering the whole priority of Government spending. The reason for the tax changes is that the Government's spending priorities have been wrong over a substantially long period of time. You cannot help wondering as you look at the way this Government goes about establishing its priorities who gives the Government advice—

Mr. Thacker: Who keeps the Liberals in power?

Mr. Deans: —who it is that suggests to the Government that it is appropriate to take from those who have little to give to those who have more than they reasonably need.

Mr. Thacker: Who puts the Liberals in Government?

Mr. Deans: Yet this Government continually does that, egged on as you know, Mr. Speaker, by the Conservatives who are constantly preaching that people at the higher income levels need more, and to hell with those at the lower levels.

Then, of course, there is the need to look at the whole question of the Government's fiscal policy and the role of the Government in supporting the Bank of Canada's idiocy of the last two years. This support, I might say, as you are well aware, sir, was given not only by the Government of Canada but also by Conservative spokesmen. They supported a policy which time after time after time, as the Bank of Canada operated supposedly in the best interests of this country, has driven people out of their homes as a result of the insane high interest rate policy. Yet the representative of the Conservative Party on financial matters rose and said he believed that the Bank of Canada, and by implication the Government, was pursuing the right policy. You cannot look at the tax structure without considering that, too.

The four criteria for an analysis of the tax papers before us—the unfairness of the system, the complexity of it, the Government's spending priorities and the Government fiscal policy impact—add up to a terrible burden on the citizens of this country. This is a Government that has taken advice from all the wrong sources. It has followed policies that inflicted terrible hardship and it has followed policies that will inevitably, by virtue of what we have before us, add to the tax burden of the majority of Canadians. This action will make it no easier for Canadians to maintain themselves in the years to come than in the years just past.

Think about the questions I could ask, Mr. Speaker. How do you encourage a construction worker to work away from home on a project which may in the long run prove to be beneficial to the country if you are going to add a tax to his board so that he will be paying tax as if it were somehow or other income?

I see you are rising, Mr. Speaker. Let me add one final comment. How can you encourage small business development if interest rates, as a result of this Government's policy, will only drive those small business people out of business?

This Bill must get to Committee now. This Bill has to be analyzed more carefully because it will cause more harm than good.

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to the Income Tax Act.

I believe it is in the interest of the Canadian business community for the Government to eliminate the high amount of uncertainty that presently exists with regard to tax changes. The federal Government's budget of November, 1981 was not an equitable document. While the June, 1982 budget did eliminate some of the more onerous aspects of that disastrous budget, this past October budget—and I refer to the Minister of Finance's (Mr. Lalonde) Economic Statement as a budget—has still not completed the task that is so essential in relieving the stress of this recession. The Minister of Finance has produced a document that still does not eliminate those provisions introduced by his predecessor that have contributed to such high unemployment and so many bankruptcies in this country.

Interested groups and individuals from my federal constituency of Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington have contacted me about particular aspects of the continual changes that have occurred in our income tax laws which serve to penalize the working man. It has been brought to my attention that, with the changed definition of "temporary employment", construction workers who incur legitimate expenses travelling from their permanent place of residence to the construction site where they are employed are now going to have to pay tax on this allowance.

All construction workers understand that their employment is temporary, based on the duration of the particular construction job. Construction workers are prepared to travel to their work wherever it occurs. The decision to tax the allowance for room, board and travel because the construction job has lasted more than two years is unrealistic. Workers in my riding are fortunate to be able to find employment at Ontario projects, such as at Bruce Peninsula and at Pickering. It is unrealistic for many of these workers to move to these sites due to the costs involved, allowable deductions for moving expenses notwithstanding, and the fact that the work is temporary and the individual can be laid off at any time. This is one example brought to my attention which illustrates the point that the Government's stated objective of implementing equity in the tax system in actual fact penalizes the working man.

• (1150)

I find that I am constantly reminded of the Liberal budget motion of 1979 which was moved by the former President of the Treasury Board and seconded by the former Minister of Finance. It stated:

—condemns the Government for its budget which will place an unfair and unnecessary burden of higher gasoline prices, higher fuel oil prices, and higher taxes on middle and lower income Canadians—

—condemns the Government for its outright betrayal of its election promises to lower interest rates, to cut taxes, and to stimulate the growth of the Canadian economy.

It is obvious that this Liberal Government's economic programs of the 1980s, as contained in the November, 1981 budget, which Parliament still finds itself addressing today, totally lacks reality, penalizes working Canadians, discourages investment, and has created an economic recession. There is no doubt in the minds of the majority of Canadians that fiscal responsibility does not exist in the federal Government. In the November, 1981 budget, Canadians were told the deficit would be $10 billion. Then, in June of 1982, they were told that it would be $19 billion; the October, 1982 budget stated $23 billion, and now Canadians are being told $28 billion. Will the next announcement be $35 billion or $40 billion?

Now the Minister of Finance is asking Parliament for the authority to borrow a further $19 billion without giving any projection of need or any complete financial statements to back up this request. This is no way to run a country. If the average Canadian attempted, in any small way, to run his or her personal finances or small business the way in which the federal Government runs this country, he or she would certainly be bankrupt. The federal Government has been morally bankrupt for years. It cannot declare financial bankruptcy because it has nowhere to file.

The federal Government's high interest rate policy has forced a vicious cycle on Canadians. It has driven Canadians out of work. A record 1,598,000 Canadians were officially out of work in January of 1983. The Government's unemployment policy cost Canadian taxpayers approximately $8.5 billion in Unemployment Insurance benefits in 1982. For this cost, the federal Government informed Parliament that it must borrow $19 billion. This expensive borrowing supports the Government's high interest rate policy which will drive more Canadians out of work and force more Canadians through the high interest rate and high unemployment cycle once again.

The Minister of Finance insists that his October Economic Statement is not a budget. Glancing through Bill C-139, it is no wonder that small businessmen in Canada are experiencing great difficulty. This thick volume, comprising 295 pages of numerous provisions and the constant changes to the Income Tax Act, requires an army of accountants to decipher. It is painfully obvious to all Canadians, except those Liberal Members on the Government benches, that a simplification of Canada's tax laws is urgently required.

If the federal Government is serious in its desire to create a constructive program by which to help alleviate the unemployment in this country which leads to the kind of poverty the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) feels Canadians are all the richer for, it will seriously undertake a program to uncomplicate the Income Tax Act. It has been recognized by many very competent income tax accountants that the Income Tax Act is much too complicated. Imagine how the struggling fisherman, farmer or small businessman feels when confronted by these same tax laws. Their simplification is long overdue.

It is clear that the huge federal deficit now facing the country is preventing a recovery of this country's fortunes in a time of economic recession. I do not believe that Canadians would be so troubled by changes to the income tax system if there were some indication that the money was being wisely spent. That is not the case. The numerous corporate bail-outs, the billions of dollars spent as well as the billions of dollars wasted, provide no indication that the Canadian taxpayer is receiving value for his taxes. The $34 million which was spent on the Maislin company is a glaring example of how the Liberal Party rewards its Liberal friends. The Pitfield Senate appointment and the $800 a day to be paid to Donald Macdonald are also examples of the kind of pork-barreling Canadians cannot afford today.

Bill C-139 does not address these problems. It is specifically the failure on the part of the Minister of Finance to provide effective leadership on the broad economy which prevents him from dealing with the individual problems concerning each and every Canadian.

Recent legislation of the federal Government which reduced pensions paid to Public Service and old age pensioners and limited Family Allowance increases demonstrates the federal Government's so-called restraint program which penalizes the very old and the very young but rewards its friends. Here we have a Government promising a just and equitable tax system but adopting a proposal which clearly discriminates against low and middle income Canadians. It was not competent management which led Canada to being twenty-fourth out of twenty-four OECD countries in economic performance.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, today we are dealing with the Income Tax Act, and many other Hon. Members have referred to it. I would say that the Government has much for which to be thankful. We have what it takes. When I look at this volume containing 295 pages, when I see what is happening to the economy and when I realize that there are 1.5 million people unemployed, I wonder why at this particular time we are dealing with a Bill which would, in effect, take money away from the economy and hinder employment in the private sector. For that matter, the Government will not even have enough, because of its deficit, to go into the public sector.

The question of capital gains is very important to many people in the sense that the capital gains tax itself has penalized those who, over the years, have been acquiring some assets. Without the benefit of any pension schemes, in effect, their only assets and only pension scheme amount to the farms or businesses they own.

At one time we argued against the inclusion of this particular tax because it is necessary to acquire capital in a country like ours. Why should it be that we must go to the United States or other foreign countries to borrow money when, in fact, that wealth could be accumulated here? We would not have to take money out by way of dividends later on. For that matter, we would not pay back as much interest, which is particularly important at a time when our dollar is so devalued. Therefore, if we cannot eliminate this tax and if the Government has to have money, the least it can do is to index the value of the property that it is taxing. If the personal indexing of individual income is a fair principle, then it also should apply to property.

Even if that cannot be done, the least that could be done is to provide an over-all exemption of an amount of $100,000. What happens in many cases where the businessman or farmer retires is that he simply sells off one asset and perhaps moves into a community and buys a home. Under the several examples that were provided here last Tuesday by the Hon. Members for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) and Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson), out of a $60,000 sale he would end up with $15,000. That does not even begin to buy a home, so how can one retire on that? Why is it necessary constantly to change the regulations is such a way that people cannot even plan for their retirement?

Not only does it apply to businessmen or farmers, it also applies to people who have been employed and who have termination benefits. It is not possible to plan anything because one year the regulations say one thing and the next year there is another budget which changes the regulations. The third year the screws are tightened again, and before it is finished every possible exemption will be eliminated to the point that retirement benefits are going to be taxed. The only group that will benefit is perhaps the taxman, or the axeman, if you like. People who have over the years been relying on that retirement benefit are now being penalized. What kind of a society is this? Is it intended to confuse people, or what is the purpose of that type of a society?

I want to move on to another particular section. I am not a lawyer, but I heard the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) the other day complaining about the Bill's complexity, and he is a lawyer. When I think of the forward averaging Section, Section 155.(1) provides:

> "155. (1) subject to section 156.1, every individual whose chief source of income is farming or fishing, other than an individual to whom subsection 153(2) applies, shall pay to the Receiver General"
> 106. (1) Subparagraph 157(1)(a)(i) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "(i) on or before the last day of each of the first 12 months in that period, an amount equal to 1/12 of the amount estimated by it to be the tax payable under this Part by it for the year computed without reference to sections 123.3 to 123.5."

I do not know what that means but it seems to me that what is being asked here is that the farmer or fisherman prepay every month. If that is the implication of that Section, then I suggest that what is happening here is that more bureaucracy is being added and that adds more burden to a farmer or fisherman who is not surrounded by accountants and there is something on the face of his income tax form this year that says that he is going to have to prepay a portion of his tax. Whether he has an income or not, whether he has been hailed out or frozen out or did not catch any fish or whatever the problems are, he is going to have to pay money to the Revenue Department, so they can use his money, and he will pay an interest rate of 22 per cent, if that is what the rate is, only to have the income tax Department tell him a year later that maybe there is a refund to him.

What kind of an arrangement is this? Who is it that needs the money more? Is it the businessman or the farmer? We are asking the banks now to allow farmers to refinance because they are in difficulty, yet the Revenue Department is telling us: "No, sir, you cannot do that; you have to give it to us first whether you owe it or not". It used to be that one could average out over five years, and at least you knew what your expenses were over the year.

When I look at some of the decisions made by the Department, it tells one taxpayer that his machinery is too old and requires too much repair, that it cannot allow any claim. In other words, it is telling him how to run his business. It is telling him that he has to go and buy himself a new machine. The Department says that this machine is for personal use. A one-ton truck with a grain box is supposed to be for personal use? Can you imagine anyone lumbering around the city or town with a one-ton truck with a grain box, bang, bang, bang, for personal use? What other use is there?

At the same time the Department tells him that he has not enough land. There are many feedlots on a few acres. There are many chicken operations and many hog operations on a few acres, but it tells him that he has not enough land there for his cattle. It also tells him that he has to buy feed. Of course he has to buy feed; many farmers have to buy feed. In fact, the Government was subsidizing the transportation of feed because there was a drought, but the Revenue Department cannot see it that way. Immediately it makes that kind of a decision, the onus is on the individual to go and argue with the Department. The individual has to hire an accountant, run around and see lawyers, write to his Member of Parliament. He has to go through the whole rigmarole, all the stress and strain, and for what? Because somebody made a decision. Add to that the complexity of different people from different Departments giving different interpretations, and one has to choose which one is the proper ruling.

Because many farmers, for example, have had outside employment, because they needed the additional revenue, they are not allowed the same type of tax deduction on their farms. How in the world is financing arranged? The banks will not give it to you and the Revenue Department penalizes you.

I have just one other point. On an envelope dated January 12, the Department notified an individual that he was assessed a certain amount and on the back there was a remittance form stating that he had to make his payment by January 15. Tell me how that letter could be delivered and the money returned in three days' time.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to contribute a few comments on Bill C-139. I think it is significant that this Bill incorporates the last three budgets of this Government and the dozens of changes that have been made by the different Ministers of Finance in the last couple of years.

I think it is also significant to note that there will be several dozen more technical changes which the Minister says he will be giving to the House after we complete second reading of this Bill. I do not know whether they would have helped us get through second reading sooner but it will certainly be interesting to hear those changes proposed.

I want to restrict my remarks this morning to one particular aspect of the Bill, and that is the complexity of the whole income tax situation that we have now. I was amused by the example my colleague for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), just gave of one horrendous and very complex clause in this particular Bill.

I am a chartered accountant and before I came here ten years ago I did a lot of tax work. In fact, I was the chief financial officer for a small group of companies and individuals and I was able to practise tax work as a chartered accountant. Now I cannot understand the law adequately to be able to give the advice that I used to give.

We have a Bill here, C-139, consisting of nearly 300 pages, and for a long time Liberal Ministers have been telling us that the aim in tax legislation was simplicity and equity. You do not achieve simplicity and equity by a 300-page amendment to the existing body of income tax law. Not only have we not achieved equity and simplicity, but we have come into the worst morass of tax law. It gets worse every time changes are made. We need a new reform which will give us both simplicity and equity.

We do not have equity or simplicity now. I will give an example or two. The present body of law and these changes will not make the tax law any more equitable for single parents, mothers or fathers, who must pay about $4,000 child care for each child in a normal daycare centre. The present tax law allows only $1,000 tax deduction before arriving at taxable income. A person in business is allowed to deduct expenditures; I think the wording in the Act is "laid out to earn income". There can be no argument that the amounts paid out for child care are laid out to earn income. If there was no child care, there would be no possibility of the parent earning a salary.

The parallel in the business world is that a taxpayer in business who hires a clerk to carry out certain functions and who can deduct the total wage cost in arriving at income under the tax law. For years we have been after the Government to increase that $1,000, but we still do not have equity for working single parents.

I have said that we do not have simplicity. That can be clearly seen in the fact that the tax preparation business in Canada is flourishing. I do not know how many hundreds of thousands, and it is probably millions of Canadian taxpayers, have thrown up their hands and said that they cannot cope with the body of information available to prepare their tax forms, so they go to the tax preparers.

I remember rising on another matter dealing with equity and simplicity some years ago. The then Minister of National Revenue was the Hon. Ron Basford. He stated at that time that the Government was unable to give refunds in advance of the return being filed and, therefore, in advance of the end of the taxation year and the returns coming out. Therefore, it would probably be April of the following year before a Canadian could get his money back.

That may not have been so important at that time, but we now have in Canada 1,500,000 unemployed. When Canadians get a job, their tax is deducted at source on the basis that they will be working for a full year. If they do, that is fine. Come the end of the year, they will probably owe all that has been deducted and maybe a little more. However, we now have a situation where a man works for a few months and then becomes unemployed. He needs those tax dollars back. The probability is that he will not owe any money at the end of the year. The Government has that man's money. He may have to go on welfare if he does not get the money back.

This has led to another whole new industry in Canada, tax discounting. The government has criticized the practice. It does not like it. With modern technology, computers and so on, wage statements could be made. The Government accepts a wage statement on the Unemployment Insurance form if a person is laid off. Why could the tax Department not accept a statement from the employer that so much has been deducted, and if the individual can show that at the end of the year he will not have any tax payable, the Government should be in the position of refunding his money? Many things could be done by this Government to achieve a degree of simplicity and equity in the tax laws. We certainly do not have that now.

Many groups have made submissions to the Government on this subject, including the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Construction Association, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. All of these groups represent millions of Canadians in one way or another. Most of them are in the small business sector. They cannot afford the technical and professional advice that is needed in order to cope with the tax laws.

I was particularly struck by a paragraph in the brief submitted by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce entitled: "Complexity of the Income Tax Act". It should be on the record and I propose to read it. I quote:

> Income tax legislation, especially as it relates to Canadian-controlled private corporations, is becoming so complex that it is all but incomprehensible to the businessmen who are paying the taxes. In 1971 a new tax system was introduced which provided integration for Canadian-controlled private corporations; that is, the ultimate after tax return realized by the shareholder of such a corporation was almost exactly the same whether he earned business income directly as an individual, or earned it through a corporation. In 1977 a "mini reform" was introduced which included, among other things, an enriched dividend tax credit, one of the results of which was that shareholders of Canadian-controlled private corporations which had income eligible for the small business deduction received a larger after-tax yield on income received through a corporation than on income earned directly. Much of the present complexity stems from that decision, since successive budgets have been adjusting the system in an attempt to reduce this advantage. This patchwork series of adjustments finally resulted in the introduction, in the 1981 budget, of the corporate distributions tax (which we will deal with in more detail below).

I will skip a bit and then read the final paragraph dealing with complexity. I quote:

> In considering whether the system has become too complex we believe a distinction should be made between acceptable and unacceptable complexity. If a businessman decides to reorganize his corporate structure, he would expect to be involved in complex provisions. However, we believe he is entitled to earn income, pay tax on the income and declare dividends under an understandable set of rules.

We on this side have often urged the Government to come up with a set of rules which the average taxpayer, whether he be a small-businessman, wage earner or—

Mrs. Mitchell: He or she.

Mr. Clarke: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) is thrashing me for ignoring the women. I wish to put in the usual disclaimer. Any words which I use which denote the male gender are also to be taken to include the female gender.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am not pleased to rise to speak to Bill C-139. I am very concerned about the impact of this Bill, particularly on low-income Canadians. As has already been stated, Bill C-139 is a complex, regressive, omnibus tax Bill. It is completely unacceptable to the New Democratic Party both from a social and economic point of view.

As the previous speaker pointed out, this 300-page Bill is very difficult to understand, even for him, and he is a tax expert. I am sure he will agree that the principles are easy to understand. This Bill follows the typical Liberal-Tory tax philosophy, which is punitive toward low-income earners and rewards the rich. As the social policy critic, I want to comment on the social implications of this unjust Bill.

On February 10 our leader referred to the injustices of Bill C-139 when in this House he implored the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to do something for over 3.5 million Canadians who live in poverty in this country. He pointed out that this Bill puts a disproportionate tax increase on the poor in comparison to the rich. For example, a family of three earning less than $18,000 lives in poverty, according to the latest poverty facts published by the Canadian Council on Social Development. Bill C-139 will increase taxes for this kind of a low-income family by 23 per cent. However, if we compare this with the percentage tax increase on higher income families, for instance a family of three with earnings over $100,000, the tax increase is only 10.5 per cent. Less than half, Mr. Speaker. Twenty-three per cent tax increases for the poor and 10.5 per cent tax increases for the rich.

• (1220)

There is no doubt at all of the principles and philosophy on which this tax Bill and, indeed, the whole tax system of Canada is based. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) said earlier this morning that the tax system of Canada is unfair. It places far too heavy a burden on those with limited resources and means. We know that the Liberal tax system which, in philosophy anyway, is supported by the other Party, is based on a hidden welfare system which robs needy Canadians of essential social security programs and provides substantial benefits through tax policy to upper and middle income families. Canadian expenditures for corporate welfare continue to grow despite dismal results in job production and other promised socio-economic benefits. Canada forgoes vast sums in revenues which are needed for essential programs for the common good through a regressive and highly inequitable tax structure.

Bill C-139, of course, reflects this Liberal tax policy. It focuses on corporate welfare benefits while penalizing those of limited means and at the expense of funds which are needed to maintain vital social programs during a time of high unemployment and severe economic stress.

One of the specific measures of this Bill is to authorize payment of an extra $50 per year, for this year only, on the Child Tax Credit. And it is important to point out to the Canadian public, Mr. Speaker, that this is for one year only. It is a bonus of $50. This credit supposedly was to compensate for the rollback of indexation of Family Allowances to 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year. Of course, it does not take too much expertise to figure out that the rollback reduces, in effect, the base rate of Family Allowance payments which will continue thereafter.

The Child Tax Credit is really, in effect, a smokescreen in order to pacify people for one year, but it does not remain as a benefit for low-income Canadians. We strongly opposed this approach when we debated Bill C-132, which imposed indexing restraints on Family Allowances. This Bill obviously reflected the Liberal Government's inclination and subtle intent to undermine universal Family Allowances, a program which applies to all Canadian families with dependent children. We, of course, feel that in any universal program there is a need for more effective tax-back provisions to be applied to higher income families, if it is also to be just.

I want to put on record, Mr. Speaker, that this Party does not object to poor families receiving an extra $50 this year. In fact, the Child Tax Credit should be far higher, particularly since poverty and unemployment have increased so drastically. If Family Allowances and tax credits were increased, it would not only be a more just social policy, but it would also help the economy. Most Family Allowance cheques are spent immediately on consumer goods, for food and clothing, and Child Tax Credits are used by low-income families, and also slightly higher income families, largely for family items. This, therefore, creates jobs and helps small businesses.

The Child Tax Credit gift of $50 is sheer deception, however, Mr. Speaker. It is really hypocrisy. It is for one year only, and the reduction in the indexing of family benefits will continue to reduce the base amount of money which families will receive in the future. This is just not the position of our Party. And it was documented very clearly by the Canadian Council of Social Development when they appeared before the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Recently I met with representatives of the National Anti-Poverty Organization and we discussed their concerns about the Child Tax Credit. I would like to just refer to their news release in which they stated that approximately 2.5 million mothers receive the Child Tax Credit. The vast majority of these mothers cannot wait until the end of the year to receive their full Child Tax Credit. However, the National Anti-Poverty Organization which surveyed a sample of low-income women found that these women wanted to have the Child Tax Credit retained as an annual benefit because they needed a lump sum amount. It is very difficult to save from a monthly cheque for certain larger payments which they have to make.

One of the great problems with relation to Child Tax Credit is the deplorable usury going on in Canada where low-income people are being exploited because of their need for an advance on the Child Tax Credit. I believe it is important to bring this problem to the attention of the House and the Government so that something can be done about it. We are told by the national anti-poverty group of their very serious concern regarding low-income families who are losing part of their Child Tax Credit benefit to tax rebate discounters. Loan companies are legally allowed to charge 15 per cent of the value of the rebate for filling out an individual's tax form and providing a tax advance. Of course, families who need this money are going to these "rip-off artists", as my colleague says, and are losing 15 per cent of the actual tax credit. We feel it is essential that the Government place some restriction on this kind of practice and we would ask it to consider such restriction. The executive Director of NAPO stated that a sizeable portion of the Child Tax Credit will not be getting to the families for whom it was intended this year—that includes the $50 increase provided by this Bill—if something is not done about this matter.

I would also like to say, Mr. Speaker, that we have called for a review of all the family benefit components of the income tax system with a view to reforming the system in order to provide the greatest benefits to those families with the lowest incomes. We feel that there should be a declining scale of benefits for families with higher incomes. In particular, we call for an analysis of spousal exemption, the child exemption, the child care deduction, the refundable Child Tax Credit, and the Family Allowance. We feel it is essential that these programs be reviewed and the tax policy be reformed so that benefits go to low income families and are reduced proportionately as the income of those families increases.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in looking at Bill C-139, we find that the Government is in a serious situation as a result of fiscal irresponsibility. It is a great misfortune, but it was the inevitable result of the direction in which the Government has been going over the past several years. Unfortunately, the Government has not adopted a policy of "cutting the cloth to fit the pattern". Therefore, we find that the Government's take from the economic community becomes greater and greater each year. This is a great misfortune because it is putting too much of a load on the ordinary business corporation in the business community and on the ordinary Canadian worker.

• (1230)

Canadians are awash in taxes. We have been provided some figures by the Fraser Institute. In those figures we find that in 1961 the average family with an income of $5,000 faced a tax bill of $1,675. By 1980, the average family was earning $22,500 and, of that, $10,306 went to the tax man at three levels of Government. Since 1961, the tax bill to the average family has shot up by 515 per cent.

We have seen a perfect example this year of what a misguided Government is doing to our economic state because of its massive deficit borrowing. The Government first stated that the deficit would be $10.6 billion. It is now up to $27 billion and I believe there is a great possibility that it could end up at $30 billion at year end. Deficit financing, or borrowing, is, in effect, deferred taxation. Somewhere along the line someone—our children or grandchildren—will have to pick up the tab for what we are doing today. If we do not leave something tangible in return for that massive amount of borrowing, we are being very unfair and essentially stealing from future generations.

When one calculates this deficit borrowing into the whole picture, taxes have increased between 1961 and 1980 by 619 per cent. That is a tremendous increase which, of course, we cannot afford.

There does not seem to be any plan from the Government to bring us out of this economic mess that it led us into in the first place. While it has set up the Macdonald Commission, it will not make a report for another two or three years. There are economists, people in the business community, and I know there are Members in the Opposition, who could give the Government some advice about how it can get out of this current mess. I wish the Government would listen to some of the suggestions we are trying to make to it in order to assist not only the Government itself but the Canadian taxpayer generally, so that we may begin an economic recovery.

The tax index has escalated more rapidly than any other economic burden that a family faces. Canadian families now pay more in taxes than they do for food and shelter combined. I suggest that the editorial in the Toronto Globe and Mail dated March 31, 1982 perfectly depicts the situation that we are in. It says:

> Most Canadians, unfortunately, won't see a copy of this Fraser Institute document—

These are the figures I used.

> —and they will scarcely get much information on its message from their tax man or their political representatives. But, until they "wise up" to the fact that governments cannot spend the people's money better than the people themselves, we will continue on the long slide to total dependency on the state and its expensive bureaucracy.

Unless the Government adopts that as a basis for recovering from this mess, I do not see any other way to accomplish much for the ordinary Canadian taxpayer.

At the present time, we find that food prices are rising at approximately 7 per cent a year. This really does not make much sense to the agricultural producer in Canada when he or she, or both together, find their income depreciating by 15 per cent a year. That was the loss last year and that is what it will be this year. That does not make economic sense.

When one considers the number of bankruptcies that are occurring today both inside and outside the system, we will find ourselves in a very serious situation in the near future. Unless the Government develops a new policy, we will continue down this road to destruction.

John F. Kennedy used to say that "Victory has a thousand fathers and defeat is an orphan". This is also true for people starting a business. A person starting a business immediately has the Government as a partner—most of the time on their back—but once the business suffers reversals, he or she ends up as an orphan. There are certainly many orphans in Canada today. The rate of bankruptcies in Canada is staggering. In the past ten years, the total number of bankruptcies has increased four times in the business sector and more than ten times in the consumer or personal area. In 1982 there were more than 10,700 business bankruptcies and more than 30,600 consumer failures. To this total could be added those farmers and small business corporations which have simply closed the door. That is a tremendous amount.

In turn, this creates a real problem for the Department of National Revenue and the Government as a whole because those people are not paying taxes that they would normally pay. No doubt this is where the Government went wrong in its projection that the deficit this year would be a little over $10 billion and has ended up closer to $30 billion. The revenue was not there. Further, there will be large refunds out of that revenue to those who are asking for refunds on their income tax. No doubt as a result of Bill C-139 there will be a delay in those pay-outs until the next fiscal year. This will create further problems next year. This is why the Government is suggesting that the deficit in the next fiscal year will probably be $30 billion to $35 billion. We do not know whether the Government will be able to hold the deficit to that figure. I hope they are not as wrong next year as they were this year because the situation will be intolerable if they are. I do not think the Canadian taxpayer will be able to carry the burden when one considers the amount of debt we are acquiring.

That is why I indicated earlier that the Government must learn how to cut the pattern to fit the cloth. Until that happens we will just keep drifting. Of course, Canadian taxpayers will become more and more frustrated than they already are. They will not be able to carry the burden any longer.

I see you are prepared to rise, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps as this Bill progresses I will have the opportunity to make more comments on it.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, in the short time I have available I would like to make a number of comments relating to the amount of correspondence I have been receiving over the years from the farming industry in my riding that is particularly adversely affected by capital gains tax.

First, I would like to make some general comment on Bill C-139. Any tax changes that are brought about by the House of Commons should be clear and understandable, as well as just and fair. We have to use that as a broad, general guideline under which we must operate.

• (1240)

Bill C-139 combines three budgets, Mr. Speaker, those of November, 1981, June, 1982 and October, 1982, and is probably the most complex Bill that this House has ever had to deal with. It is far from being clear and understandable. Our tax system is becoming more complex all the time.

What we are really doing through this measure is bringing about a guaranteed income for accountants and tax lawyers. If I were advising young people about an occupation they should consider, besides the sciences and computers, I would advise them to become involved with the Canadian tax system. By understanding portions of it at least, they would be guaranteed an income for as long as they wanted to stay in business. That certainly is not, or should not have been, the intention of Members of this House, but it seems to me it was the intent of the bureaucrats who drafted the legislation.

At the outset I mentioned that I wanted to talk about the capital gains tax as it pertains to agriculture. Over the years representatives of agriculture have pleaded with the Government to understand that agriculture is a different kind of industry and that, in the initial stages, the capital gains tax should not have applied to it. In my 12 years as a Member of Parliament representing an agricultural constituency, I have not received as much mail about anything as I have about the capital gains tax. The subject crops up when farm land changes hands through transfer or inheritance.

There are many items in the tax system that must be changed but the single most important item is the capital gains tax. It is wrong for agriculture because the capital that is taxed is tied to land and buildings, the value of which usually appreciates during the period of ownership. The capital gain that accrues over a period of time is generally regarded as the retirement fund or the old age pension for the farmer and his wife, but we are taxing it away and in some cases making it extremely difficult for farmers and their wives who have worked hard all their lives to look forward to a retirement on the same scale as the rest of society.

In my opinion, it is wrong to apply the capital gains tax to land and buildings and other farm assets. Farmers have asked for an upward adjustment of costs based on inflation. Valuation day, set for 1971, was the worst possible time for agriculture as low prices prevailed at that time. In southern Manitoba land was selling for less than $100 per acre. The price was depressed because there was a glut of grain which affected all of agriculture. At the present time most agricultural land in southern Manitoba sells for between $500 and $1,000 per acre. Valuation day does not take into consideration the inflation factor.

Farmers have also requested a once-in-a-lifetime exemption for bona fide farmers or their spouses who have been involved in farming for a long time. There is also the question of the rollover provision on transfer of farm property with deferral of tax on capital gains that should be extended to include several classes of people. First, a widow whose spouse was engaged in farming; second, a farmer who no longer can farm but is still actively engaged in farming; third, a farmer who leaves his farm to his family farm corporation—and most farms are headed in this direction at the present time; and fourth, the farmer who cannot farm part of his land because of its location.

Ill-health, old age or distance may be an inhibiting factor in the transfer of a farm to a spouse or children and may prevent the farmer from being able to meet with the requirements of being "actively engaged in farming". Farmers without children are put into a special category which makes things difficult for them. They should be able to transfer the farm to another member of the family but obviously this cannot be done at the present time. Farming is tough enough, Mr. Speaker, and profits are hard enough to come by at the best of times without the Government making things much more difficult for the farmer, for his spouse and for his children.

When we deal with tax legislation in the next session of Parliament, I plead with Members of the House to consider some of the concerns that I have outlined. I do not ask that farmers receive any special treatment within the tax system but just what is considered by most people to be fair and equitable.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are aware that this is a very important Bill that we are dealing with and that every day passage is protracted is detrimental to many Canadian taxpayers. You will also be aware that the Government cannot process tax refunds until the Bill has become law. Early refunds tend to go to people who need them most, such as single mothers and others in dire financial need.

Time is of the essence on the Bill so we need to take advantage of the time available to us. Therefore, pursuant to Standing Order 8(4)(a), I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Bossy):

That the House continue to sit between 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. this day for the purpose of considering Bill C-139.

• (1250)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the wish of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: According to the provisions of Standing Order 8(4)(a), if 25 Members rise in their places to object, the motion is declared defeated. Shall the motion carry?

And less than 25 Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There not being 25 Members rising in objection, the motion, according to the provisions of Standing Order 8(4)(a), is deemed to be carried.

Motion (Mr. Bloomfield) agreed to.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the riding of St. Catharines is an urban industrial riding. It ranges from big business, as represented by General Motors of Canada, its largest employer, to a wide range of single family, small business operations. As one voice, they cry out that the Government should provide a fair and reasonable tax system, put it in place and end the fiscal uncertainty which has plagued Parliament for so long.

The Minister speaks of many consultations and says that the Bill is the product of those consultations, while in fact it has its foundations in the budget of November, 1981, one which will change the course of budgets from here on. There are four major versions of that budget: the one which was introduced in November 1981; the one as amended in December, 1981; the June 28, 1982 version; and the statement version of October 27, 1982. In addition thereto, there have been a great number of minor setbacks, announcements and variations which have completely confused the business world. Real consultation in advance might have saved much of that confusion.

Before the Government embarked upon such a punitive tax Bill as this one, it should have taken a realistic look at our business community and started to listen to some of its concerns. Canada's productivity performance is the worst in the western world; at least so says the chief economist of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. Canada's cost of production is way out of line, comparatively speaking. Among other recommendations made at that time, it was recommended that taxes be shifted away from investment, that there should be a release of some of the pressure on profits, and an encouragement of new technology, renovations and equipment.

But what do we have here? It is nothing less than an attack on investment. It eliminates the incentive of investment. The limiting of the capital cost allowance, as was mentioned frequently before, to one half the normal rate in the year of purchase of the asset discourages the retooling needed to increase productivity. It adversely affects our shipbuilding industry, the automobile industry and papermakers, let alone its deterring effect on small business generally.

Our country does not particularly reflect a nation of good employer/employee relations. The November budget proposed to increase the taxation of employee benefits in several different areas, and now the taxation of employee benefits will result either in higher wages, when wages are already a deterring factor in our productivity, or add to the friction between employer and employee. Yes, the Government yielded on the taxation of health and dental proposals, but it still proposes to tax employer loans which businesses make to their employees so that they may purchase homes. And so it goes on with respect to other travel and accommodation costs.

To create better working relations and to give employees an interest in the business, loans were made to assist employees to purchase shares in their respective businesses, particularly the ones in which they are working. How many of those employees will now pay tax to purchase shares from their employers? If an employee has the use of a company-owned or leased automobile, he is taxed on a standby basis. That standby charge is to be doubled, imposing an unnecessary hardship on the employee and further aggravating an already troubled auto industry. All down the line we see that the economic problems facing us today point in one direction, while this budget goes in the opposite direction.

I mentioned earlier that this budget was the result of a patchwork job on the November, 1981 budget. The patching is bad enough and the uncertainty created has been simply disastrous, but just when we think the Government has settled on a final version, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stands in his place and tells us that it just is not so. Questioned in the House about the tattered discards of the November budget, the Minister rose to their defence and said that there was nothing wrong, that he believed in them and that only the timing was wrong. When, Canadians might ask, is the time right? Would it be tomorrow, next month or next year? Until that question is answered, the threat of the full November 12 budget will still be hanging over us; the confusion and the uncertainty will still exist.

Is there any wonder that there is frustration in the St. Catharines business community? No business can plan with this kind of tax uncertainty, and the Minister's remarks only fan that uncertainty. Nor does this Bill give a business or an individual much cause for optimism about the future. For businesses, this legislation means more paperwork, less private financing and higher taxes. For individuals, particularly in the lower to middle-income tax bracket, the result is higher taxes. Yet these same individuals are being urged to get out, spend their available dollars on consumer goods and help the economy get going again.

Quite the reverse is bound to happen. Disposable income which might have found its way into a new car, new furniture or appliances will be chipped away and the remainder regarded as a necessary buffer against future calamities or casualties. It is not that long ago that these same Canadians were struggling with 20 per cent mortgage rates. However, I must admit that what galls my constituents and me the most is the fact that this legislation has a negative impact upon employment. St. Catharines-Niagara is an area which has been plagued by high unemployment for many years. Jobs have disappeared at the rate of 1,750 per month over the last two years; 33,000 people in my community are actively looking for work. This legislation will further aggravate the situation because it will hurt the shipbuilding, automobile and construction industries, all three sectors which affect employment in our area.

• (1300)

I have gone on record on numerous occasions, Mr. Speaker, as being opposed to the November budget and the dog's breakfast which this Bill presents. I strongly urge Government Members to give careful consideration to the anti-investment aspects of this legislation and the detrimental effect they will have in their respective ridings.

I see you are rising, Mr. Speaker, but just let me say that if Government Members do not consider that, perhaps the dubious wisdom of raising taxes at a time of severe recession will surely affect their vote. I ask them to vote with the Opposition in the best interests of Canada and in the best interests of their own constituents.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to add my remarks on Bill C-139. First, I would like to comment on the remarks made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bloomfield), who indicated that by debating Bill C-139 and trying to deal with some of the issues and principles involved, we as the Opposition were delaying the issuance of tax refunds to Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cosgrove: That is true.

Mr. McDermid: What about the T-4s?

Mr. Gurbin: One of the reasons Canadians are having difficulty trusting this Government and politicians today is the kind of comment emanating from Parliamentary Secretaries and Ministers who sit opposite. They try to bluff their way through and create the illusion that they are being responsible by giving us a Bill consisting of 295 pages and containing a number of complex issues. The Government first presented this Bill last December, waiting over a year to introduce it. In the meantime, the Government brought in a number of other bills, including C-131, C-132 and C-133. These Bills reduced Family Allowances, pensions and other matters and will affect a large number of Canadians who are in difficulty because of the economic times which have been created by the Liberal Government. The Government did all of those things and yet tells us that we should not take a careful look at this complex piece of legislation, which probably most Members opposite do not understand if the truth were known.

Tax refunds probably will be delayed this year. The Government needed an excuse. It needs the capital and the money it will save by doing that. Also the computers will be down in the Department of National Revenue which will prevent the refunds from being issued on time. There were ample opportunities for the Government to bring in this Bill so that it could be adequately discussed. For the Government to claim now that we are holding up this legislation is a sham, and it should be ashamed.

I have three points that I would like to outline. They have been made in a variety of ways by a number of Members. Dealing just with the complexity of this Bill, let me open the Bill at random. At the top left-hand side under Section 54, it reads:

"(5.4) Where there has been a disposition by a non-resident of a life insurance policy in Canada by virtue of subsection 148(2) or any of subparagraphs 148(9)(c)(i) to (ii) and (iv.1), the insurer under the policy shall, for the purposes of subsections (5.2) and (5.3) be deemed to be the taxpayer who acquired the property for an amount equal to the proceeds of disposition as determined under section 148."

I would challenge one of the Parliamentary Secretaries or the Minister to stand up and interpret that paragraph for us very quickly. It contains four or five references which I pulled out at random. This paragraph identifies one of the major problems we have in Canada with our whole tax system by showing how very complex it is. It creates great difficulties for the taxpayer.

Mr. Lyman J. MacInnis, a senior partner of Touche, Ross and Company in Toronto and President of the Chartered Accountants Institute in Ontario, delivered a speech a little while ago in which he made three basic points about the tax system in Canada. He indicated that the tax system in Canada should be self-assessing. In other words, the individual taxpayer is required to respond to this system on his own behalf. The majority of Canadians are required to interpret legislation like this and then establish their tax position. They are required to deal with the Department of National Revenue, which employs a large number of specialists who devote their full time to dealing with tax policy. Mr. MacInnis also said there should be an ability for self-assessment by having tax measures in clear and unmistakable language. Let me again refer Canadians to the random opening of Bill C-139 that I have just made. Is that an indication of clear, unmistakable language?

The courts have identified this problem. They, too, have said that tax legislation should be in clear, understandable language. There is hardly any argument, whether from an accountant, a lawyer or a Member of Parliament, that this is a basic problem of our tax system. Mr. MacInnis gives us a number of examples going back to the first tax Bills right up to the most recent. He gives us the impression that the accountants, those dealing with this matter, are not able to respond satisfactorily to the needs of their clients and individual Canadians. The language in our Income Tax Act has created confusion. It is difficult for any of us to deal with it. Unless the language is cleared up and we start to deal with this problem adquately, it will go on resulting in more and more specialized people dealing with measures that are more and more confusing to the average Canadian. We will have a dichotomy, a separation, of interests and understanding. In fact, we are left as a country in confusion over the whole tax system.

I have two other points. One is on behalf of the Canadian people. I will quickly run through proposals that will affect individual Canadians through their personal income tax changes. One is the replacement of the IAAC deduction with the forward averaging measure. Then there are the changes referring to the taxation of employee benefits; the limitation on deduction for investment interest costs; a reduction of federal dividend tax credit to 34 per cent of cash dividends; the repeal of the capital gains revenue deductions; the requirement of professionals to inventory work in progress; the prevention of excess transfer of claims for $1,000 investment and pension income deductions; the restriction of $1,000 pension deduction to retired persons; the restriction of personal exemption for non-resident dependants; and deindexation to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. These are all things that affect individual Canadians through their personal income tax. It gives us a situation whereby Canadians will face higher income taxes as a result of these provisions.

I see that my time is drawing to a close, Mr. Speaker. I could list things that affect business, making it very difficult for business to operate. Included are the capital cost allowance changes and so on. These are leading to a situation where individual Canadians will be less able to look after themselves, where business is less able to function, to grow and create the economic activity which is important to our country. We end up with a government that is increasing activity daily, increasing its spending, its deficits, its borrowing. We have more and more emphasis on Government activity and less and less ability for individuals and business in Canada to carry on with theirs. We are forcing Canadians—this is the crime of which Bills like this are part—to depend upon a state that cannot look after them.

That is the legacy of the Liberal Party. That is the result of years and years of mismanagement. It started off with John Turner and Donald Macdonald, and it is continuing under this regime.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on Bill C-139, it is interesting to point out that the Government has used its right to extend the sitting hours so that we are sitting through the lunch hour to discuss this very important piece of legislation. The Government is once again proving that it will use the mechanisms of the House to try and rush through important legislation.

This bill represents the economic and moral bankruptcy of the Government. As well, it represents its bankruptcy of leadership. We have before us a 300-page piece of legislation which would bring in a number of amendments to the Income Tax Act. Our taxation system is already tremendously complicated. An article written by Robert J. Jackson, the head of the political science department at Carleton University, for yesterday's Toronto Star states in part:

> Income tax forms have grown so complicated over the years that great numbers of confused Canadians seek professional help to fill them out. Yet difficulties at the individual level are but pale reflections of the confusion and insecurity that is generated throughout the system by flaws in the taxation process.

Yet that process will be further complicated if the legislation is passed at this time. Another layer of amendments is being added to the Income Tax Act, another layer of confusion which will make it hard for the ordinary Canadian to understand what taxation is all about. The Government should be introducing comprehensive legislation, rewriting the whole Income Tax Act, making income tax something that ordinary Canadians can understand again, doing away with the litany of tax deductions which help those at the top, and doing away with the confusion which it has created when it has introduced as it is now doing, piecemeal changes to the taxation system.

I said earlier that the Government suffers from a lack of leadership. It is evident in every piece of legislation that comes before the House. It is evident in the very acts and speeches of cabinet Ministers of the Liberal Government. They have lost the ability and the will to lead the country. Only the problems of the Conservative Party keep the Liberal Government in power at this time.

Canadians are facing record unemployment. Canadians are suffering because of lack of leadership by the Government. Canadians want the Government to provide leadership. Canadians want jobs for themselves and for their children. They want the Government to introduce legislation which will help them in each and every part of the land. This Bill does not do that.

The Bill, we are told, must be passed because to delay it would affect the amount of time required by the Government to process 1982 income tax forms and refunds. However, let me remind Your Honour that many of the articles in the 300 pages of the Bill are from a budget which was introduced in the House in November of 1981. The Government did not act at that time. Other parts within the Bill come from the June 28 budget of 1982. Again, the Government did not act to introduce legislation in the House. Other parts of the Bill come from the October, 1982 budget of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). Again the Government did not introduce legislation in the House.

The Government had 13 months in which to introduce this legislation but it failed to act. Now we are speaking during the lunch hour as a result of an attempt by the Liberal Government to rush this legislation through, to pass it before Canadians who will be affected have a chance to respond to their Members of Parliament and to the Liberal Government. That is part of the moral bankruptcy of the Government, part of its mechanisms which stifle debate and prevent Canadians from understanding the taxation system in this land. It is part of the mechanisms used by the Liberal Government to prevent Canadians from participating in the democracy of this land, because they are not able to understand what is going on in the House of Commons and are not aware of what is in the legislation being discussed.

This does not apply to all Canadians. Those Canadians who are represented by powerful lobbies, by interest groups which meet with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Cabinet, do have the ability to change legislation. They have the financial resources to ensure that their loopholes are enhanced. They have the ability to ensure that Government introduces legislation which, as this legislation does, removes the percentage of tax to be paid by those who earn the most. Significant deductions will be allowed to those who earn the most. The tax percentage of those people who earn over some $130,000 a year will be dropped from 43 per cent to 34 per cent, a tremendous reduction for those who could best sacrifice.

The Prime Minister has appeared on TV and radio to discuss the necessity of sacrifice and of Canadians co-operating together, yet the Bill states that those who have the most, who earn the most, who are best able to sacrifice, will pay less to the Government of Canada. What kind of justice or taxation system is that? What kind of Government would introduce taxation legislation enabling the rich to become richer at a time when we have unparalleled unemployment across the country? We must oppose the legislation because it is unfair and because it is complicated. Our taxation system should not be so complicated that Canadians cannot fill out their own taxation forms. However, we oppose it mostly because it represents the bankruptcy of the Government, the fact that the Government is now moving from legislation to legislation, from speech to speech, from PR effort to PR effort, without any concrete plans which would help the average Canadian.

This approach by the Government, by the PR team headed by the Liberal Senator Keith Davey, whose sole job, financed by the taxpayers of Canada, is to keep the Liberal Government going, represents the moral decay of the Government. It represents the Government's loss of concern over the fate of the average Canadian. It represents the fact that the Government has only one purpose, and that is to retain power. Canadians deserve better than that, and I hope all Hon. Members will oppose this legislation and force the Government to introduce comprehensive tax legislation and economic policies so that Canadians can once again trust the leadership of their Government.

• (1320)

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, most people today have been speaking about measures included in Bill C-139 and how they will affect Canadian taxpayers. However, I would like to talk about a measure that should have been included in any Bill amending the Income Tax Act but is not in Bill C-139.

When the previous Minister of Finance introduced his ill-fated budget of November, 1981, he promised reform of the Income Tax Act that would promote equity and fairness. Bill C-139 stems from that budget, yet it does very little to promote the goal of equity and fairness.

As a good example of this, I would like to discuss Section 31 of the Income Tax Act which deals with the deductibility of farm losses. Under the Income Tax Act, there are three classes of farmers. There are those whose major source of income is farming but who may earn some other income not related to farming; there are those whose chief source of income is not farming, or a combination of farming and some other source of income, but who still carry on farming with a reasonable expectation of a profit; and third, there is the taxpayer whose chief source of income is not farming but who carries on farming activity with no reasonable expectation of making a profit. This category is commonly referred to as the "hobby farmer."

My concern is with the second class of farmer and how Section 31 applies to this taxpayer. Under Section 31, the second class of taxpaying farmer, whose major source of income does not come from farming but who can reasonably be expected to make a profit from his farming, can only deduct farming losses of $5,000 a year. This $5,000 deduction has remained constant since it was introduced in 1952, over 30 years ago. Not once has it been increased to reflect general inflation or specific cost increases to agriculture. If this deduction had been indexed since 1952, I suggest it would today be worth $20,000, a four-fold increase. In other words, the deduction is only worth one-quarter of its 1952 value. This is obviously inequitable and unfair to this class of farmer.

It is fairly easy to speak of Section 31 in the impersonal terms of a Government tax accountant, but what we often fail to see is the terrible impact that such a measure can have on an individual or a family. In my riding, I have had a number of individuals who are trying to start up a farming operation come to see me because Section 31 of the Income Tax Act is effectively wiping them out.

I would like to discuss one particular case because I think it illustrates the problem very well, and it was brought to my attention just last summer The farmer in question was born and raised on his parents' ranch, and he inherited one-quarter of it in 1970 upon the death of his father. Being raised on the ranch and trained as a rancher, he knew the business and felt he could make a living and support a family. During the two years that the estate was being settled, my constituent worked hard with an exploration company and saved every cent he could to develop his share of the ranch. When it was finally his in 1972, he began fencing in the land to raise livestock. He acquired some cattle and purchased necessary farming equipment, paid for by taking out a bank loan and by working part-time off the farm.

In 1975, he applied to the Farm Credit Corporation for a loan to buy additional equipment, put up a barn, purchase a mobile home, instal power and do some necessary roadbuilding. He was turned down for a Farm Credit Corporation loan.

In spite of this setback, my constituent continued to work his land, and in addition he began to consolidate his property which had been in nine separate parcels. He also sold low, wet land where half of his hay crop had been flooded out and purchased upland hay land. However, in spite of his efforts my constituent had to begin full-time work off his farm in 1977 to get sufficient money to continue developing the farm. Basically, this was because the Farm Credit Corporation had been unwilling to give him the loan necessary to develop the land. From 1977 to 1981, my constituent worked at a sawmill located in a remote area of B.C. accessible only by aircraft and he put every penny he could into his farming operation. During this interval he could only farm approximately 84 days a year, weekends and holidays, because of his outside job. In June of 1981 he again applied to the Farm Credit Corporation for a loan, this time being successful, and he began to farm full-time once again.

Since 1978 he has cleared over 200 acres of hay land and more than doubled the amount of hay produced. He started to build a home on his land, but at this time he, his wife and their three young children live in the basement of this partially completed dwelling, without the benefit of running water. His land is good and he is finally on the brink of reaping the benefits of the 10 years of hard labour that I have just described.

However, last spring Revenue Canada struck, in the form of tax auditors. Because of Section 31 of the Income Tax Act, my constituent can claim only $5,000 a year in farming losses for the 1977 to 1981 period, even though he plowed all the money he earned into his farm during that period. His actual losses during this time ranged annually from $7,500 to almost $17,000 and totalled over $48,000. Under Section 31, however, he could deduct only $20,000 in total, leaving him with losses disallowed for this period of over $28,000. The back taxes and penalties now assessed are impossible for him to pay unless he sells land, which at this time is very difficult.

Now, if the $5,000 limit established in 1952 had been indexed, this rancher would have been well within his allowable deductions and would perhaps be facing a profitable future. Instead he faces potential bankruptcy at the hands of his Government. And what will be gained? A family on Unemployment Insurance, if not welfare, defaulted loans, and the lost production of a new farm. Where is the equity and fairness in this?

My constituent, his accountant and myself have tried to reason with Revenue Canada, to no avail. The Act appears to be written in stone. When I wrote to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) about this case, I received a one-page, three-paragraph reply. The Minister said in his last paragraph, and I quote:

> Yours is one of a number of representations I have received on this issue, and I thank you for bringing to my attention these examples of the impact of present tax law.

What a farce! The Minister made no effort to see that this inequitable piece of legislation was amended. He acknowledges the problem but refuses to take any action whatsoever. And so here we have Bill C-139, legislation which could have amended this injustice and put some incentive into the system but does not.

The Secretary/Manager of the B.C. Cattlemen's Association put the situation into perspective when he wrote to me recently on Section 31 of the Income Tax Act. He said, and I quote:

> In my own opinion the problem stems from the lack of clear national policy regarding development of new agricultural production units (farm or ranch) and recognition of such policy through the Income Tax Act. If we as a society want to encourage development of new farms and ranches, we should say so and provide for it through taxation.

Truer words were never spoken. Bill C-139 fails miserably to address this very issue and the silence and inaction of the Minister of Agriculture simply underlines this lack of a clear national policy. But, Mr. Speaker, it is not simply the young farmer starting up a new operation who is being hurt by this counter-productive policy. Professionals who wish to invest in agricultural operations are being actively discouraged from doing so by Section 31.

As an example, the expansion of the Canadian equine industry has been severely curtailed by Section 31. People cannot be persuaded to invest in a horse-breeding operation when they can only deduct $5,000 a year against losses. When we now see outstanding horses selling for hundreds of thousands of dollars, the $5,000 deduction becomes even more ludicrous.

The Canadian Horse Council has recognized this and in a February, 1983 article in "Hoof Beats" the Council made the reform of Section 31 its first task. In that article they said, and I quote:

> The agreed upon first task of the Horse Council will be to see if Section 31 of the Income Tax Act can be either eliminated or at the very least, have the limited loss liability amount raised from its present $5,000, the amount it was first set at when the section was enacted way back in 1951. From becoming an intended incentive to agriculture, it has become a disincentive.

• (1330)

This is plainly the case. The present structure of the Income Tax Act is antiquated. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Agriculture have been negligent in failing to introduce measures in Bill C-139 that would either repeal Section 31 or bring the $5,000 deduction to a more reasonable limit of $20,000 or more.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member's time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Greenaway: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Their failure to do so has resulted in a great deal of hardship to those attempting to get started in agricultural ventures, thus posing a serious threat to Canadian agriculture. If the Government is truly serious in its oft-stated concern for this sector of the economy, then let it immediately introduce a simple tax reform.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised to be here at this time participating in this debate at second reading of this Bill. I thought this was the lunch hour. Apparently under the spirit of parliamentary reform, lunch hour will not be what it used to be. If that spirit carries on, I am afraid that reform will be an improper description of what will be occurring in the future. However, two can play the same game.

The Bill we are debating today is a classic example of the absolutely absurd budgetary system we have in this country. On November 12, 1981, well over a year ago, the then Minister of Finance brought in a budget. We have the absurd situation in this country where at the instant a Minister of Finance tables a notice of Ways and Means, basically a piece of paper which says "I hereby give notice of a Ways and Means Motion", that has the effect of law. From that point on the Government can start collecting the tax. He does not need to make a budget speech before doing that. At any time any Minister can table a piece of paper called a "notice of Ways and Means", and from that point on the tax can be collected. It is absolutely incredible.

That system was put in place at a time when there was some sort of adherence to practices and traditions. Following immediately upon the Ways and Means motion was a budget debate. That was followed immediately by Bills flowing from the budget. The time lapse between that period and it becoming law, having been passed by this House, the other place and approved by the Governor General, was very short. Through sloppiness, contempt of Parliament, incompetence and a variety of other reasons, we have the absurd situation where the rules governing parliamentary democracy have been so distorted that over a year after the budget was brought in we are debating the legislation.

We did not get to see the Bill until a year after the budget was presented. For over a year Canadians were forced to pay the tax. They were forced to adhere to the law. They did not know the law. They still do not know it. They have received T-1 forms which they are required to fill out. They are to send in the money they owe for taxes even though they do not know what the law is. Even though they do not know the law, they have received their T-1 forms and are expected to comply. It is incredible.

The sorry situation is that we have become more tolerant of that incredible situation. It is an insult to Parliament and to those Canadians who elected us to carry on with this absurd situation. By comparison, let us look at the situation in the United States.

Prior to the end of January, the executive presents a budget to both Houses of Congress. That budget is then considered for eight months. It is amended and changed by their parliamentarians, the people elected to represent the population. The subsequent legislation is passed before the end of the fiscal year, October 31 of the year. In other words, there are eight months of consideration by their legislators. Frequently, in fact most of the time, there is significant amendment, depending on what the legislators want. The law is then passed and comes into effect. That is the way it should be.

In a democracy, the most important group is the electorate. The second most important group is those elected by the electorate. No one in Government has the right to introduce laws imposing conditions and forcing people to obey something not passed by the legislature. That is what democracy means in that country.

We have the absurd situation of Canadians being expected to comply with the law that Parliamentarians, those whom Canadians elected to represent them, do not even become aware of until nearly a year later. It is an absolutely absurd situation. One of the serious consequences of this is contempt by Canadians for Government, for Parliament and the law. When that contempt extends to the Income Tax Act, we are in serious difficulty.

Many of my colleagues and others have spoken of the excellent address given by the chairman of the Ontario Association of Chartered Accountants dealing with the complexity of the Act and the inability of the average person, and, indeed, those who have been trained such as chartered accountants and lawyers, to comprehend the Income Tax Act. He said it is an absurd situation when we have a self-assessing system. Individuals are expected to know the Act, to comply with it and to voluntarily send in their tax based on the self-assessment system. How can one self-assess, how can one do a proper job of fulfilling that responsibility, if one cannot understand the Act?

I am one of the better educated people in this country. I stayed in school until they would not have me any more. I am not suggesting that I am the brightest, among the brightest, or anything like that. However, after 20 years of publicly-supported education, I still cannot understand the Income Tax Act. I humbly suggest that either there is something wrong with the education system or, more likely, something wrong with the system that generates this kind of Income Tax Act.

More important in terms of the attitude of Canadians toward this Act is the increased evidence of tax avoidance. It is not only practised by a few sharp cookies, but practised far and wide. It is estimated that the underground economy, that is, the economy which escapes the taxman and recognition by the information takers in Government, is in the order of $50 billion. That is not the cash economy but the barter economy. The lawyer says to the carpenter that he will draw his will if the carpenter will do some work in his rumpus room. The dentist would say to the plumber, I will look after your children's teeth if you will put the plumbing into my cottage or farm. The house painter says, it will cost you $2,000 for me to paint your house unless you pay me in cash, in which case I will be able to do it for $1,200.

• (1340)

That, Mr. Speaker, is not hypothetical. It is not a rare situation. According to hard evidence gathered by research groups, that sort of thing constitutes something like $50 billion of our economy. It is an underground economy. People simply have so much contempt for this Income Tax Act that they are now using schemes which heretofore were not contemplated. A chartered accountant in Calgary who has been in business 30 years told me that clients are asking him to do things now in terms of avoiding tax which had he suggested to them ten years ago they would have fired him. Ten years ago there was a feeling that one did not avoid tax because that was unpatriotic. It was unfair. Maybe it was not illegal in the strict sense but a good Canadian did not avoid tax. Today people are saying to their accountants or lawyers: "Find me a way to avoid tax because I do not have any respect for a Government which would bring forward tax Acts like this, and I do not intend to pay one penny more than I am absolutely required to do".

That situation, Mr. Speaker, is extremely dangerous for Canada, is extremely dangerous for the future, and leads inevitably to what we are seeing—an increase in the number of tax collectors, an increase in the Gestapo of the National Revenue Department, to go out and force people, and it changes Canada significantly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to follow my learned colleague to my left, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), because, as he says, he is one of the most educated men in this House; but at the same time that is not saying very much.

This is my first opportunity to speak on this piece of legislation, Bill C-139, and the people of Canada have to understand that this is the result of three Liberal budgets—or could we call it two and half Liberal budgets? The first one of November, 1981, was brought in by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), who was then Minister of Finance. Of course, he is no longer Minister of Finance. He was driven from that position by the Liberal caucus members, which caused him to be a fugitive now in the safe bosom of External Affairs. The Cruise missile is as nothing compared to the missiles which that former Minister of Finance got from his colleagues in the Liberal caucus as a result of his attempt to perform the functions of a Liberal Finance Minister.

He was the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, who said in Halifax on September 9, 1980—the former Minister of Finance, and I want to identify him as Mr. MacEachen, the now Deputy Prime Minister—"It was to create jobs, improve living standards and to promote greater equity that I took on the position of Minister of Finance". Of course, it is exactly for those reasons that the poor devil was driven from the post of Minister of Finance. He created to jobs. In fact, we have lost 582,000 jobs since the summer of 1980. He created no jobs. We have the highest unemployment in our history, 1,600,000. Living standards have done nothing but fall since he took the portfolio on in 1980.

He said he wanted to promote greater equity. It was in his budget of November, 1981 that he attempted to provide this equity. And, Mr. Speaker, this became the most elastic budget ever presented in the House of Commons. Its elasticity became 100 per cent. That poor Minister became a whirling dervish, retreating from this proposal of reform, so-called, retreating from that proposal. Within seven days he had twirled and whirled and we had about 18 reverses of the positions he had taken in that budget of November, 1981. And he whirled and twirled until I believe it was June, 1982, when he brought in another budget, and again he was forced to twirl because the budget which he brought in did not provide equity.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, he was given the coup de grâce and removed from that position. We now have a new Minister of Finance the former Minister of Energy. A gentleman more widely known outside as Mr. Lalonde. He brought in another document in October of this year.

It is the process of those three budgets which is interesting. In the October document, the new Minister of Finance reserved again many of the provisions which were in the first two budgets of his predecessor. It was funny, Mr. Speaker, and I have remarked on this before, how the Hon. Members of the Liberal backbenches in this House sat there on the night of November 21, or whenever it was, of 1981, when the Minister of Finance of the day said he was going to bring more equity and reform into the system, and applauded all his attempts to reform the system. The same people sat here in October, 1982 applauding the successor to the then Minister of Finance as he reversed all those so-called attempts to reform and to create equity. What was equitable under the MacEachen budget was inequitable under the Lalonde budget. What was fair under the MacEachen budget was unfair under the Lalonde budget. What was reform under the MacEachen budget was "deform" under the Lalonde budget. And the same people sat there giving the same claps, cheers and smiles as they saw their two Ministers of Finance completely reverse themselves in the period of 15 months.

Well, the result of that abominable procedure is this Bill which is before the House. So that the public might understand, I believe it has 289 pages and it took the Government 389 days. A budget was brought in in November, 1981, yet this Bill was not tabled in this House until December 7, 1982. Some 389 days after the great budget of reform of Mr. MacEachen, we have the Bill finally produced in this House, and there were hundreds of changes in between.

The present Minister of Finance says we are to deal with this budget fairly quickly or else he will not bring in a new budget. I say, Mr. Speaker, thank God for that. The longer we can dwell on this Bill, the better chance we have to stopping the new Minister of Finance from bringing in his new budget; because if his new budget is anything like the budgets we have had since February 18, 1980, it is in the public interest to stop it from being brought into this House. I recommend to the Hon. Members of this House that we talk on this Bill from now until the end of 1983 to prevent another Liberal abomination of a budget coming before this House.

When I came into office in June, 1979, Mr. Speaker, I found left behind the debris from two Liberal budgets. I had to appear in this House and introduce legislation to try to salvage something out of two previous "Chrétien" budgets. Oh, we have had Ministers of Finance, Mr. Speaker, from the Liberal Party; we have had Chrétien, MacEachen, Lalonde—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order.

Mr. Crosbie: Sorry, Mr. Speaker; we have to use the names of their ridings.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Yes. Would the Hon. Member please refer to other Members of this House by their ridings or their portfolios.

Mr. Crosbie: Well, I have to refer to the Donald Macdonald budget. He is no longer in the House. He is on to a good thing outside the House now. He is riding a fine Liberal stallion outside the House and being paid $850 a day, and you know what stallions are paid to do. That is what he is being paid to do to the economy of this country, at $850 a day.

We have another former Liberal Minister of Finance in the person of Mr. John Turner, the man who started it all back in 1972.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I like to listen sometimes to the brains of the hon. gentlemen opposite, but this is a very solemn occasion where we are having this Bill forced through this House. I mentioned Mr. John Turner, not because he is the only hope left for the Liberal Party, as he skulks and sulks in his office on Bay Street in Toronto and he goes to that well-known restaurant, I cannot remember the name—

Mr. Turner: Winston's.

Mr. Crosbie: Winston's. We poor Opposition characters cannot afford to go there. But as John Turner sulks at Winston's waiting to be called upon to save the great Liberal Party of Canada—and, of course, nothing can save that Party today, but some people hope that he can or else the Hon. "Iona" will save it, or perhaps the two of them together, the Hon. "Iona-Turner". Put the two of them together and we will have a saviour for the Liberal Party. He was the man who introduced the suggestion which was made by the Leader of our Party, the Hon. Robert Stanfield, that it was only fair, right and equitable that the income tax system should be indexed. It was John Turner who stood in the House and introduced indexing, to make it fair so that people would not suffer unfairly as a result of inflation by automatically having to pay more taxes each year as their incomes went up due to inflation when their real income was not going up because of the increase in the cost of living. Mr. Turner introduced the great Conservative principle of reform which was suggested and campaigned upon by Bob Stanfield. He stole that suggestion. We did not mind the Liberals stealing it. The Liberals steal everything. If they are not stealing from the Conservatives, they are stealing from the NDP. The trouble with stealing from the NDP is that they have nothing left worth stealing. Now they are reduced to stealing from just the Conservatives. I do not have the exact research material before me, but that was introduced in 1972 or 1974 by Mr. Turner.

• (1350)

What does this Bill do? It reverses that great Conservative "Stanfield-Turner reform" by capping the indexing of the personal income tax so that the people of Canada will pay more income tax this year as the result of inflation, not as a result of any real gain on their part in their income. They will pay more because in this budget the principle of indexing the exemptions and the principle of indexing the tax brackets is removed, and we now have this famous six and five ceiling imposed. It does not matter that the cost of living actually went up approximately 9 per cent last year. This year, you will only get your indexing up to 6 per cent or 5 per cent.

It is also interesting to note that we have another distinguished Conservative in the Liberal Cabinet. Of course, he is a chap who used to be a young Montreal tax lawyer and used to be able to speak his mind, be truthful, honest, direct, free and critical when he wanted to be. He was unwise enough to write a book called "Fiscalamity: How to Survive Canada's Tax Chaos". He could see the MacEachen budget looming over the horizon. I have to use his district, "the Cape Breton budget". What did the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) say about what Ottawa's bureaucrats were doing? I quote from his book:

> This mysterious process of unsolicited tax reform by Ottawa bureaucrats should be severely curtailed.

Now he is in the Government. He is the Minister of State for Economic Development. He is the big cheese. He has a lot of influence, so we are told. Yet, has this mysterious process of unsolicited so-called reform been severely curtailed? It has not. There are 297 pages of uncurtailed and unsolicited tax reform in the Bill that is now before the House. Our friend, who is now the Minister of State for Economic Development, is not carrying out the principles that he had written about back in 1974 before he got into the somewhat murky coils of the Liberal Party.

These three budgets that are included in that tax package—I am only getting started, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I regret to inform the Hon. Member that his time is up.

Mr. Crosbie: Do I have unanimous consent?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to continue his speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky).

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak on Bill C-139 in these remaining minutes. I find it rather ironic that we are discussing this particular Bill at this time. The Government is urging us to give quick passage to this Bill. It is very interesting that it did not use the same logic whenever it wanted to pass other legislation or take other action. For example, the Government did not show any concern about implementing the six and five regulations on Family Allowances before that Bill was passed in the House. However, at this time, they want to blackmail the Opposition over Bill C-139 by attempting to scare people and saying that they will not receive their income tax refunds if this legislation is not passed.

I believe that the confusion we have surrounding income tax and the whole problem with Revenue Canada is only the tip of the iceberg. They are an indication of the problems that the Liberal Party is facing with regard to the entire budget. This legislation comes as a result of numerous budgets that the Government has brought forward. There is an old adage which states, "If you look after the pennies, the dollars will take care of themselves." Unfortunately the Liberal Government has not been able to look after its pennies. As a result, it has brought the country into this economic mess. This legislation will only place additional pressure and fear on Canadians. It is absolutely unnecessary at this time.

I would like to comment on my personal experience in my constituency office and indicate, for the benefit of Members opposite, that one of the greatest problems I face in my constituency is in my dealings with Revenue Canada. I must say, with due respect to the previous Minister, that the problems we faced then were perhaps not as great. At least some of the constituency problems we raised were listened to with a half-open ear. However, our difficulty in dealing with Revenue Canada in the Manitoba region has multiplied. The situation has become catastrophic. We are dealing with problems in our constituency office never before experienced as a result of the kind of regulations that are being put into effect. There are people who are becoming physically ill because of the manner in which Revenue Canada in Winnipeg is treating them. There are situations in the Department of Revenue Canada in Winnipeg where the left hand does not know what the right hand is doing. For example, the auditing department will say that it will review the case raised by a particular constituent but, at the same time, that individual constituent, will receive a call from the collection department demanding immediate payment. Some older people in the area are becoming physically sick because they do not know what to believe. The Department will say, on the one hand, that their cases are being reassessed and, on the other hand, it will send out immediate demand notes. These elderly people are going to their children to ask if they must go to their credit union to withdraw $8,000 because of the demands they are getting from Revenue Canada.

This legislation does not help those people. It is not alleviating any fears because it is not dealing with some of the problems that are occurring.

I suggest that the Government should consider the problems that it is creating through urging the quick passage of a Bill by such sneaky methods as having us sit here through the lunch hour. We must debate these measures within the income tax Bill so that our citizens do not have to live in fear when there is nothing really to fear at all.

The policy of publicly displaying the average annual income of individuals on the new income tax forms has certainly made these forms less confidential. Surely the average annual salary of taxpayers could be conveyed to them in another manner. It appears in its present form only because the Government wants to make the information more accessible to its own bureaucrats. Many people have complained to me that this confidential information can be revealed by anyone simply opening up a letter received from Revenue Canada. Canadians are not guaranteed their confidentiality simply by way of having these income tax forms personalized.

Madam Speaker: Order. I am very sorry, but pursuant to Standing Order 18(3), I must now interrupt the debate to proceed with Statements under Standing Order 21.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TEST AND EVALUATION PROGRAM

THE PRINCIPLE OF MUTUAL SECURITY

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (London-Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on the debate that has consumed much of the Question Period these past few days in the House of Commons. I am referring to the on-going dialogue concerning the umbrella Weapons Testing Agreement which Canada and the United States have recently signed. Unfortunately, in the confusion over just what has and has not been agreed to, we have seen the very heart of the issue recede into the background, overshadowed by the rhetoric and moral posturing of some of the Opposition.

What I think is important for the House of Commons and Canadians to recall is that Canada and Canadians fully support NATO and the Alliance. We believe that a "credible deterrent" is needed to maintain peace with liberty. The two-track approach which we support calls for actively engaging in negotiations that could contribute to meaningful and verifiable arms control and disarmament agreements, while at the same time working with our Allies to modernize our theatre and conventional defence forces in Europe so that they will in fact form a deterrent to the frightening build-up of Soviet armaments.

I am confident that we will give serious consideration to any serious Soviet proposals that would enhance the chances for effective and verifiable agreements, but it is obvious that real progress can only be made on the basis of the principle of mutual security. I would like to remind Members of this House and all Canadians that the crux of the issue at hand is our security, without which we are unlikely to continue to enjoy peace, independence, and hope. We would all be well advised not to lose sight of these facts.

AGRICULTURE

DECLINE IN SOIL PRODUCTIVITY

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, there persists a myth that much of Canada is still a frontier where vast areas of good agricultural lands are yet to be discovered and developed. In fact agriculturally suited lands are very limited in quantity and quality.

Improved farmland in Canada amounts to 44.2 million hectares, about 5 per cent of the total land area and only 50 per cent of that is in classes 1 to 4. Yet the results of recent research show there has been and there is vast land deterioration.

Man assumed a dominant role in soil degradation. Cropping practices presently followed in western Canada account for the alarming increase in soil salinity. Dryland saline seeps are expanding at an average rate of 10 per cent a year. As a result, substantial decline in soil productivity has followed.

Farmers in the prairie provinces are losing some $20 million annually because of land degradation due to salinity. A cumulative loss of $930.6 million by 1990 and $44 billion by the end of the century is forecast. This is just one aspect of the problem. Available documents quote a number of agricultural activities resulting in vast amounts of land being lost irretrievably.

If the present farming practices, proven to have degrading effects on land, are to be continued, the most important resource heritage for our descendants will be at stake. The prime need is for increased funding and raised priorities for research—

Madam Speaker: Order.

RAILWAYS

CN—SIGNING OF CONTRACTS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, I would like to raise a matter involving the national railways and Canadian taxpayers. Canadian National, which has lines across Canada and has a duty to serve Canadians, is generally conscientious in this respect. However, it has come to our attention that landowners who must cross CN tracks are being forced by the corporation to sign contracts that are highly unreasonable. CN thinks it alone has any rights in the matter. The terms of these contracts are incredible, and in our opinion, they should be revised. Although as far as railway rights-of-way are concerned, it should be a matter of two-way negotiations, landowners with land adjacent to the tracks are given agreements to sign, without any possibility of further negotiations. For instance, three people from Lévis will have to pay $60 a year—the amount set by CN—under the terms set by the corporation. The contract says that this amount may be revised as the railways see fit.

I think this goes against the elementary rules of law, especially considering the fact that the properly can only be reached by crossing the tracks. I urge CN to review its position and I would also urge the people concerned to think twice before signing such a document.

LABOUR RELATIONS

EVENTS IN QUEBEC—ATTITUDE OF THE PARTI QUÉBÉCOIS

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, after witnessing recent events in the public sector in Quebec, we are now in a better position to assess the sincerity of political groups that boast about their affinity for the working classes and see themselves as the defenders of the working man. I am of course referring to the Parti Québécois and to socialists of every description.

It is truly outrageous to see the Lévesque Government conspiring with the union leaders to manipulate, perhaps I should say betray, those who put their trust in them. It is not a matter of being for the unions or for the Government, or of considering whether a particular group is being paid too much or too little. I understand why they were given more than they asked for before the referendum, but when the Government then turns around at the end of the year and demands a 20 per cent reduction in wages that, I feel, is totally unacceptable and demonstrates an incredible degree of mismanagement. What Canadian employer would be allowed to get away with that, Madam Speaker? I am rather surprised that our arch-manipulator, Mr. Lévesque, has not tried to prove to some highly impressionable people that once again, it is all Ottawa's fault.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS IN ONTARIO

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, as the House knows, for many years I have been trying to have the Muskoka area designated under the terms of the Regional Economic Expansion Act, now the industrial expansion legislation. Indeed, the present Minister's three predecessors had all encouraged me to believe that this was in process of being done.

When last I asked the present Minister about this, he replied by pointing out the extremely heavy demand for designation that already exists. The example he used was ILAP, the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program, and he said that he thought that demand for designation under this program "must be close to the $500,000 mark".

I think it is worth bringing to the attention of the House that, by my figures, up to the end of last August over $30 million of ILAP funds, representing some 65 per cent of the financing, 53 per cent of the project and, by the available figures, over 65 per cent of the jobs created, went to Windsor, Ontario, the riding of the Minister then responsible for the Program.

It seems to me that the only interpretation it is possible to put on these data is that these celebrated government programs are not being used for the benefit of the country as a whole, but as plums for the partisans of the Party opposite.

At a time when the morality of the Government has been repeatedly called into question, I can find neither comfort nor reassurance in these figures.

STATUS OF WOMEN

EQUAL JOB OPPORTUNITIES URGED

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, today the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women will release a report called "A Working Majority: What Women Must Do For Pay", which documents the deplorable conditions of women in Canada's paid work force.

The pervasive and debilitating ghettoization of women's jobs has intensified, as more than 70 per cent of women are in clerical, service, sales, and processing jobs and one-third are employed in jobs where men earn twice as much. Women are even being displaced by men in the few well-paid job areas such as teaching.

Just as shocking as the lack of opportunities and inadequate pay for women is the finding that the federal Government itself discriminates against women.

This House must launch its own inquiry into accusations that the Canada Employment Commission discriminates against women on the basis of age, sex and national origin. Women who cannot find work have been refused unemployment insurance and some have been cut off without reason or warning. I and other Members have had similar complaints from constituents and from women who cannot get into trade training or apprenticeships.

This evidence of discrimination makes it imperative that governments set an example. The federal Government must implement mandatory affirmative action and require equal pay for work of equal value. Affirmative action must be applied to federal job creation and training programs to give higher priority and equal opportunities to women workers.

Madam Speaker: Order.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY ELECTION PROMISES

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, in honour of the third anniversary of the 1980 general election, better known as the infamous "election of broken promises", I would like to take this opportunity to remind the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of his pledge to the Canadian people, stated on January 12, 1980, as follows:

> There is a prior commitment that I want to make clear. Liberals will do what we say we will do. And if we can't do it, we won't say it.

He also asserted that "This Party will not simply stand by and let the recession come". As all Canadians now realize, this pledge was a complete fallacy.

In fact the above statements are as fictitious as those made by the Hon. Allan MacEachen in his reference to gasoline prices and the 18 cents tax when he stated, "Vote Liberal and the Price Will Stay Down".

Since 1979 under the Liberals gasoline has increased in price from $1.14 per gallon to $2.15 per gallon, while heating oil has doubled from 70 cents per gallon to $1.40 per gallon. Everyone now knows that a Liberal made-in-Canada oil pricing policy results in increased prices for Canadians and that if only the Conservatives had given the 18-cent increase per gallon in metric, for example 4 cents per litre, we would probably still be in office.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

POLICE ACCESS TO FINGERPRINT FILES

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the House and the respective Ministers responsible for the Department of National Defence and the Privacy Act a situation which needs clarification and, if necessary, legislation to spell out clearly under what conditions police forces will have access to Canadian Armed Forces fingerprint files.

The confusion surrounding an informal request by the Metropolitan Toronto Police Force investigating the murder of nine-year old Sharin Keenan, in checking a suspect's fingerprints with the indentification bureau of the Canadian Armed Forces, should not be repeated.

One Section of the new Privacy Act reads:

> Personal information under control of the Government institution may be disclosed ... to an investigative body specified in the regulations on written request of the body for the purpose of enforcing any law of Canada ... or carrying out a lawful investigation.

This Section should be immediately brought to the attention of all Departments in order that they may live within the spirit of the new Act and not delay or impede in any manner an investigation such as the one into the brutal and reprehensible murder of Sharin Keenan.

HARBOURS

LUNENBURG, N.S.—NECESSITY FOR DREDGING SHIP CHANNEL

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, correspondence is on file going back to July 29, 1980, to the former Minister responsible for small craft harbours, requesting that action be taken to improve government facilities in Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, and I made special mention of the need for over-all dredging in the entire harbour.

This request was followed up by another letter on September 10, 1981. On October 7, 1981, the then Minister of Public Works informed me that the extensive survey required to determine the dredging quantities involved could not be carried out until late fall, with a final report expected around the middle of February, 1982.

I again wrote to the Ministers of Fisheries and Public Works on February 1, 1982, and again on March 12, 1982, and later on July 26, 1982, to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), since shipping comes under his authority. On October 13, 1982, I wrote to the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) endorsing all previous requests, followed up by another letter on December 7, 1982, and a further letter on February 2, 1983.

On February 9, 1983, the present Minister of Fisheries informed me that the Public Works dredge had arrived in Lunenburg Harbour, but that dredging would only be carried out in the area adjacent to the government wharf. This will be helpful, but it is imperative that the entire ship channel be dredged if the harbour is to function at full capacity and allow ships to make adequate use of the repair facilities and berthing space, without scraping bottom.

In conclusion, I ask the Minister of Fisheries why this necessary task is not to be completed while the equipment is on site.

RAILWAYS

QUEBEC ADVERTISEMENT ON CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATE CHANGES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, the proposal of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to change the Crowsnest Pass freight rate has not been submitted to Parliament. To date we have a Liberal Party position which is not the law of the land, and may never become so. I do not believe that Liberal Party proposals are entitled to be publicized at public expense. Nevertheless, the federal Department of Agriculture has placed large advertisements in Quebec newspapers favouring Crow change. The full-page ad appearing in today's edition of The Gazette in Montreal is worth $4,535.

These ads are slanted to convince Quebec farmers that a changed Crow rate is good for them. For example, The Gazette ad says that higher transportation costs will prevent Western pork and beef producers from becoming more competitive with their Eastern counterparts. Yet the Transport Minister's Crow statement predicted that this could mean an expansion in the output of the Western livestock industry of about $1 billion by 1990.

The arguments being used to sell the Minister's proposal in the West are being downgraded in the East. This is classic Liberal divide-and-rule politics. If Cabinet Ministers persist in using public money to sell partisan policies, then provision must be made for public funding of opposing viewpoints. This principle is well established in the equal time provisions for the broadcasting of differing party points of view.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ADMINISTRATION

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S PRESS CONFERENCE STATEMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and is based on that memorable ceremony of April 4 in Port Hawkesbury, which is recorded by videotape for posterity, that press conference wherein the Deputy Prime Minister had this to say: "Things always come out right in the end. Gillespie is now one of the beneficiaries of his own foresighted policies". I wonder if the Deputy Prime Minister would please explain to the House what he meant by the words, "Gillespie is now one of the beneficiaries of his own foresighted policies".

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the interpretation ought to be self-evident to the Hon. Member—

Some Hon. Members: It is.

Mr. MacEachen: —that on that occasion at least we were participating in an event at Port Hawkesbury in which a consortium was launching a proposal that might have the effect, if implemented, to transform Nova Scotia coal into synfuels, and if this project obviously came to fruition—and that is not certain yet—if it came to fruition, all members of the consortium would hopefully benefit, as well as the Province of Nova Scotia.

I certainly was quite aware of the potential benefits that might accrue to the coal industry of Nova Scotia, to the miners and to the unemployed if this project is ultimately a success. We do not know that yet, but if it led to an actual building of a plant, presumably all members of the consortium would benefit—not just Gillespie and Associates—including Petro-Canada, including the corporation formed by the Government of Nova Scotia, including the Cape Breton Development Corporation, including Gulf Products Limited, including Algas. All corporations, all participants, if this succeeded, would benefit, and particularly the people of Nova Scotia. This is what I meant, and I am very happy to have the opportunity to repeat it here today.

I am quite prepared to give the Hon. Member all the information that was made available to the people of Canada on April 4, 1981, information which is now becoming known to the Members of the Official Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPLICATION OF MINISTERIAL CONDUCT GUIDELINES—TREATMENT OF DEFEATED MINISTER

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would like to suggest to the Minister that the merits of the project, the jobs to be created and the value of the project to the people of Nova Scotia are totally irrelevant. What is relevant is the moral conduct of Ministers with respect to their own guidelines.

It might do well to put that guideline on the record once more. On April 28, 1980, the Prime Minister wrote to the Deputy Prime Minister with those prohibitive guidelines for sitting Ministers, and I quote:

In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

Those guidelines were for sitting Ministers, as he well knows.

I am glad that he has given the explanation he has given, because some Canadians might be forgiven for believing that preferential treatment was given to Gillespie who stood to make three-quarters of a million dollars on an investment of $25,000. Does the Minister really ask Canadians to believe that that kind of obscene profit to a former office holder, made possible by existing office holders, is not preferential treatment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased the Hon. Member has seen fit to refer to the guidelines which are directed to the conduct of Ministers presently in office. He has referred to the paragraph which reads:

In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

• (1420)

I would draw to your attention that the guidelines do not prohibit official dealings between present Ministers and former office holders, whether they be former Ministers or not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: In fact the guidelines presume that such official dealings will take place, otherwise they would not read:

In any official dealings with former office holders—

What the guidelines attempt to do is to provide guidance for present Ministers as to how they ought to regulate those dealings. In the regulation of those dealings, present Ministers must ensure that there are no grounds or appearance of grounds for preferential treatment—

An Hon. Member: But there are.

Mr. MacEachen: —or improper influence or for preferential access. Not a single piece of evidence has been adduced to demonstrate that Mr. Gillespie has received preferential access.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: It is rather important to remember that the funds, a million dollars or so, which were made available to this consortium, were funds that were in a bank account in the City of Halifax, in the Province of Nova Scotia. That is a fact. Those funds were transferred as a result of the agreement reached, I believe, in 1977.

Mr. Crosby: The funds came from the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. MacEachen: The release of those funds is up to a management committee, of which there are two provincial members, two provincial civil servants, and two federal public servants so that the funds are not within the free, so to speak, gift or decision of the Government of Canada. It requires a joint decision of the Government of Canada and the Government of Nova Scotia.

Let me ask the Hon. Member to argue that the Province of Nova Scotia, in giving its assent to the release of those funds, is subject to improper influence, because that is the inference, quite clearly. I ask my hon. friend how can he argue that there is preferential treatment to a former Minister when every member of the consortium received access to those funds? Alastair Gillespie and Associates received precisely the same access as Algas, which is an Alberta corporation, and as Gulf Canada Products. Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. McDermid: What a snow job.

QUERY RESPECTING COMMITMENT OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister tried desperately to justify what is wrongful conduct on the part of the now Minister of Finance, then Minister of Energy—

Mr. Ouellet: Smear.

Mr. Nielsen: —and what is wrongful conduct on his own part. In doing so he has—

An Hon. Member: Resign.

Mr. Nielsen: I should not resign. It is those two Ministers at the very least who should resign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: In doing so, the Deputy Prime Minister has misled the House. He has misled the House when he asks the House to believe that the Government of Nova Scotia had any discretion with respect to the disposition of those funds. He knows the terms of the agreement of June, 1981, as well as any other Minister on the treasury benches.

In Clause 4 it is stated that Canada—and Canada was a signatory to that agreement through the now Minister of Finance:

Canada and Nova Scotia hereby agree that, through the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Nielsen: I know, Madam Speaker, they do not want the questions to go on when the heat is on. I will continue:

—Canada and Nova Scotia hereby agree, that, through the Canada-Nova Scotia Agreement and from the Oil Substitution Fund, they shall contribute—one million dollars.

Invoices are to be submitted under paragraph 4.2. Under paragraph 4.3 it reads that the Management Committee shall manage the fund. But paragraph 2(b) of that clause stipulates that the federal Government, after having paid promptly to the Nova Scotia Government, that the Nova Scotia Government promptly thereafter must release the funds in the amount of up to $1 million from the Oil Substitution Fund to the consortium in payment of the bills.

Mr. MacEachen: What is the date?

Mr. Nielsen: The effective date is June 30, 1981. That agreement required the Government of Nova Scotia to pay those moneys.

Mr. MacEachen: That is not true.

Mr. Nielsen: They had no discretion over it whatsoever.

Let me ask the Deputy Prime Minister this question. Has the Government considered advancing any further moneys toward this project? Has the Government even considered that? Has the Government, in fact, committed any further federal funds to this project?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I will be glad to answer that question but I must deal with a series of misstatements made by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nielsen: I read from the agreement.

Mr. MacEachen: The announcement which was made in Port Hawkesbury, or at least the statement which I made in Port Hawkesbury on April 4, 1981, stated quite clearly "that the management committee of the agreement," namely, the 1977 agreement on conservation and oil substitution between Canada and Nova Scotia, "the management committee of the agreement has approved in principle a contribution of $1 million to the project."

Mr. Fraser: Keep going.

Mr. Epp: Continue.

Mr. MacEachen: The management committee of the agreement. May I just explain the agreement, Madam Speaker, that on March 31, 1977, Canada and Nova Scotia signed an agreement on conservation and oil substitution under which Canada transferred $9.2 million to a bank account in Halifax—

Mr. Nielsen: For the production of electricity.

Mr. MacEachen: —not in Ottawa, not in Kamloops or the Yukon, but in the City of Halifax.

Mr. Nielsen: For the production of electricity.

Mr. MacEachen: This money is intended to be used to initiate projects which reduce Nova Scotia's dependence on oil. The agreement, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Nielsen: For the production of electricity.

Mr. MacEachen: —places the funds under the control of a management committee with equal representation from Canada and from Nova Scotia.

The release of those funds requires a decision on the part of Nova Scotia as well as the Government of Canada. The fund was transferred to a bank account in Halifax.

Mr. McDermid: So what?

Mr. MacEachen: It was the management committee which made the decision to release the funds. That is the fact, and the Hon. Member better get that in his head before he proposes to make a case about this particular transaction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PAYMENT OF FUNDS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister better read the clauses of the agreement, which I have just finished reading to the House, again. But he did not answer my question. Has the Government either paid or committed any further federal funds beyond that called for in these agreements, to this project?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, yes, I will be glad to bring the Hon. Member and his Party up to date. Obviously they do not know what is going on. They are not following events.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Obviously the Nova Scotia Members are not following events.

Mr. Crosby: Watch yourself now.

Mr. MacEachen: On January 24, 1983—not 1981, but this year—the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced that the Government has entered into negotiation with the Nova Scotia Coal Synfuels Project consortium for a $750,000 contract to test Cape Breton coal in a new high yield liquefaction process. That is a negotiation with respect to the same project, and it was announced on January 24 in a release from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, in the name of the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Crosby: Where did the funds come from?

Mr. MacEachen: That is well known. It is the same project, announced in January of this year. No one got up and cried "foul" or "conflict of interest". I find it very surprising—

• (1430)

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. MacEachen: —that they are not on their toes, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING KNOWLEDGE OF FORMER ENERGY MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is aware of the old maxim, "When you are arguing and it is bad, you shout a lot".

Some Hon. Members: Shout louder!

Mr. Fisher: Go ahead.

Mr. Broadbent: Appropriately, Madam Speaker, I will attempt almost to whisper my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

I would like to refer to one of the guidelines which was not cited. The Deputy Prime Minister has made much of his claim that Mr. Gillespie was somehow an innocent participant in what we on this side of the House regard as being a scandal. However, I want to read the guideline, and then ask the Deputy Prime Minister a serious question. It states:

> Within a period of two years of leaving office, Ministers should not
> c) lobby for or on behalf of any person or commercial corporation before any department or agency for which they were responsible on an ongoing basis during the last two years of their participation in the Ministry.

It is clear that Mr. Gillespie violated this principle. He acted within two years. It is clear, that he, and he alone, stands to make three-quarters of a million dollars, and it is clear, from what the Deputy Prime Minister said in Cape Breton—

Mr. Nielsen: He knew about it.

Mr. Broadbent: —that he knew about it.

The Deputy Prime Minister said:

> Mr. Gillespie is now one of the beneficiaries of his own foresighted policies.

Considering that he, as the Deputy Prime Minister, knew this in April, could he explain to the House how the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, whose Department was directly involved—

An Hon. Member: You are shouting.

Mr. Broadbent: —did not know anything about it until September? Did the whole Cabinet know, except Mr. Lalonde?

Mr. Nielsen: None of them knew. See no evil.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I will attempt to follow the exceptional conduct of the Hon. Member and not raise my voice. I find that he usually raises his voice quite a lot. Maybe it is because he finds his question to be so ineffective that he does not want it to be heard very loudly in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has said that I knew about this project. Of course I did. I was present when the announcement was made, with the Premier of Nova Scotia and with all the other members of the consortium. I knew before the announcement that it was under consideration by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. In fact the press release, which I issued on the day of the announcement, suggested to all and sundry that if they wanted further information on this matter to call two officials in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Anyone could have called and found out about it.

Mr. Crosbie: A piece of skullduggery.

Mr. MacEachen: It was a normal project in the Department that officials knew about, and it was my business to know about, not only as a Member of Parliament but also as a regional Minister, because for quite a long time I had been following the situation in the coal industry of Nova Scotia and it was most natural that a project of this importance should be drawn to my attention by Mr. Gillespie, by my own staff, and I knew about it.

The Hon. Member has asked me how it is that the Minister of Finance was unaware of that project.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister was fixed with knowledge.

Mr. MacEachen: I do not draw any inference from that question, except to say that it was not a project of such unusual character that it required any conversations between myself and the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Nielsen: He was fixed with knowledge.

Mr. MacEachen: It was handled fully at the official level, and that is the explanation.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, that answer may convince the people sitting behind the Deputy Prime Minister, but it will convince no one in this country who is following the matter with seriousness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE REQUESTED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): One of the other guidelines which was quoted earlier in the House referred not to former Ministers, but, rather, to present Ministers. Indeed, in this instance, with reference to the Deputy Prime Minister and his responsibilities, it is stated:

> Ministers should not allow themselves to be influenced in pursuit of their official duties by plans for or offers of outside employment:

Further, it is stated:

> In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

It is now public record that Mr. Gillespie negotiated with officials in his former Department within the two year time period, clearly violating one guideline for ex-Ministers. It is now known that the Deputy Minister to the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, now the Minister of Finance, exchanged correspondence with Mr. Gillespie concerning this project.

Given the whole theory of ministerial responsibility as it exists, at least in some countries with parliamentary government—

Mr. Nielsen: Not this one.

Mr. Broadbent: —and under such circumstances where there has been a clear violation of the guidelines, clear involvement by the Deputy Minister, for whom the Minister must be held accountable, does the Deputy Prime Minister not believe, now that this is revealed, that he, as Deputy Prime Minister, should recommend to the Prime Minister upon his return that the present Minister of Finance should resign from the Cabinet?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is drawing our attention, once again, to the guidelines. I take these guidelines quite seriously.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: He means well.

Mr. Crosbie: Old twister.

Mr. MacEachen: The guidelines state:

> In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treament.

I think I have demonstrated that in this particular case, where $1 million was made available to a consortium, of which Mr. Gillespie, in equity, owned less than 3 per cent, it was not within the power of the Government of Canada, acting alone, to provide any benefit. It required—

Mr. Nielsen: It signed the agreement.

Mr. MacEachen: —the consent of the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Nielsen: The Government of Canada signed the agreement.

Mr. MacEachen: I ask the Hon. Member, who I think attempts to be fair in these matters, whether he believes that there was preferential treatment given to Alastair Gillespie Associates when Alastair Gillespie Associates held less than 3 per cent of the equity in a consortium composed of four other corporations, two public and two private? What is the ground for believing that there was even the appearance of preferential treatment given to Alastair Gillespie Associates? It was the same treatment given to Petro-Canada, given to the Cape Breton Development Corporation, the same treatment to—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacEachen: —to Algas and to Gulf Products, so there was no preferential treatment.

Mr. McDermid: They were not former cabinet Ministers.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If Hon. Members will take a look at the clock, they will understand my plea for shorter questions and shorter answers.

REQUEST THAT DEFEATED MINISTER DIVEST HIMSELF OF FINANCIAL INVOLVEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would be only too glad to answer the Deputy Prime Minister's questions. Yes, indeed, I believe, and the evidence is clear, that Mr. Gillespie violated the guidelines. He ought not to have negotiated with his own Department within the two-year period.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Furthermore, I believe that he and the present Minister of Finance violated guidelines pertinent to them in the knowledge that Mr. Gillespie stood to benefit, personally. He is the only person in all of this who stands to make three-quarters of a million dollars.

Mr. Nielsen: For $25,000.

Mr. Broadbent: The rest are corporations. I say to the Deputy Prime Minister that the fact that other Governments went along with this recommendation is irrelevant.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Broadbent: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I was just trying to cooperate with the Deputy Prime Minister. I would like to now ask him a related question. Given the clearly perceived sense of unfairness in all of this, in terms of the almost a million dollar benefit going to Mr. Gillespie as a result of his negotiating with his former Department, will the Government at least have the decency to request that Mr. Gillespie divest himself completely of financial involvement in this project?

• (1440)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, there is no personal benefit to any individual from the million dollars. The million dollars, as I recollect, was to finance a feasibility study as to how coal could be converted into gasoline.

An Hon. Member: He can make money from selling his shares.

Mr. MacEachen: The project has not yet been proved to be feasible. What the Hon. Member has to understand is that every one of the members of the consortium may gain, but every one of them may lose because the project has not yet been implemented. It has not yet been proved that it is economically feasible, so the Hon. Member is rather premature in talking about benefits that have yet to be realized. My hope is that this project will succeed because it will provide a new market for Nova Scotia coal, and will provide more jobs in an area of the country which desperately needs these jobs, but no one knows this is a fact.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Gillespie needed a job, too.

Mr. MacEachen: The Hon. Member is suggesting that the Government ought to have rejected this project because of a bad interpretation of guidelines by the Hon. Member.

REQUEST THAT FINANCE MINISTER RESIGN

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, it is interesting to see the change in defence. Last week the Prime Minister was pleading ignorance on the part of all cabinet members, and a two-year statute of limitations, as if that precluded Ministers from complying with the guidelines.

The Deputy Prime Minister just indicated, reading from his press release of April 4, 1981, that the management committee on the agreement has approved in principle a contribution of one million dollars on the agreement to the project. The federal co-chairman of that management committee stated in press releases over the weekend that he had serious doubts whether the project was eligible for funding under that agreement, and he said, and I quote:

> We put it to Mr. Lalonde and his provincial counterpart.

Therefore that quote from that official, and the Deputy Prime Minister's press release, which states a decision had been made, clearly establish that the Minister of Finance, the then Minister of Energy, knew about this project in intimate detail prior to April, 1981, which is not what the Prime Minister told us last week. The Prime Minister pleaded ignorance on the part of his Minister last week. We now have proof that that is not the case. When will the Deputy Prime Minister live up to his responsibilities and see that the resignation of the Minister of Finance is presented to the Prime Minister, forthwith?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think I should clarify one point for the Hon. Member. There is no two-year statute of limitations with respect to a serving Minister. Any Minister now in the Government, with respect to any former office holder, whether he is out of office for two years or twenty years, is still obligated to follow the guidelines dealing with current Ministers. The two-year or the one-year provision applies solely to former office holders, and I think the Hon. Member understands that.

Mr. Andre: That is fog; give me the substance.

Mr. MacEachen: The Hon. Member has asked me to recommend the resignation of my colleague, the Minister of Finance. If any Hon. Member opposite had put forward any grounds to lead one to believe that a current Minister had provided preferential treatment or preferential access to a former office holder, then I think that he might have a case.

Mr. Nielsen: Three-quarters of a million dollars for $25,000?

Mr. MacEachen: But that has not been put forward in any of the statements that have been made.

Mr. Broadbent: The appearance.

Mr. MacEachen: The appearance was a public announcement. It made the front page of the provincial paper in Nova Scotia. It is not The New York Times but it is the biggest paper we have in Nova Scotia. It told what John Buchanan said and what Alastair Gillespie said—

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

ROLE OF FORMER DEPUTY MINISTER OF ENERGY

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister was in his seat when the Prime Minister last week was acknowledging that this transaction would have been a violation of his guidelines had it in fact occurred within that two-year period because that clearly establishes the culpability of Mr. Gillespie and any co-operation from a sitting Minister of the Crown in that kind of activity is, by definition, in violation of the guidelines, and the Deputy Prime Minister knows that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: The Prime Minister pleaded ignorance. He said that the Minister of Finance, the then Minister of Energy, did not know what was going on.

Madam Speaker: Order. I have to ask the Hon. Member to go straight to the question. He is now repeating arguments that he had in his previous question, in the preamble. I would ask him to go to his question.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I will certainly take less time than the Deputy Prime Minister did in his answer.

A press story over the weekend by Tim Naumetz of Canadian Press indicates that Alastair Gillespie had conversations with Mr. Marshall Cohen, Deputy Minister of Energy to the then Minister of Energy, who is now Minister of Finance. Indeed, there was correspondence as well as conversation. It is inconceivable that in fact the Minister of Finance, then Minister of Energy, could have been ignorant of those conversations, as the Prime Minister told us last week.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Andre: In view of this overwhelming evidence, the Deputy Prime Minister's own words, the words of the official, the officials who commented on Mr. Cohen's knowledge, how much evidence is required? Do you need a coloured photograph? Do you need a tape recording of these conversations? What is required for this Government to face up to its responsibilities and admit that these guidelines were violated?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is repeating a statement that the guidelines were violated, without demonstrating how they were. He has raised the question of Mr. Cohen. I have discussed this matter with Mr. Cohen and he has indeed had a discussion with Mr. Gillespie. They exchanged correspondence.

Mr. Andre: Can you table it?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I would be glad to prepare the correspondence and table it for Hon. Members. Mr. Cohen has also told me that at no point did he notify his Minister that he had had these conversations because he did not think it was justified or necessary.

An Hon. Member: Mr. Read said he talked to Mr. Lalonde.

Mr. MacEachen: At no point had he felt that he was under any kind of improper influence or at any point that he was being lobbied, in the words of the guidelines.

Mr. Crosbie: Table Cohen, too.

Mr. MacEachen: I will provide the Hon. Member with the fullest possible information on that particular point.

RESPONSIBILITY OF FORMER DEPUTY MINISTER

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister is aware, I am sure, that these conflict of interest guidelines also apply to Mr. Cohen as a Governor In Council appointee. I have worked with Mr. Cohen. I understand how he operates and I understand the scrupulous care which Mr. Cohen took, during the terms of office that I was Minister and he was my Deputy Minister, in bringing to my attention every matter which had any significant bearing in a political way on the activities of me in my role as a Minister and on his activities as the Deputy Minister. Did the Deputy Prime Minister ascertain fully in his conversation with Mr. Cohen whether or not he spoke to the previous Minister, Mr. Lalonde, to ensure that this matter was not brought to his attention, in view of the great care that Mr. Cohen has always taken in bringing those matters to the attention of Ministers?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not sure I understood fully the question which the Hon. Member has asked.

Mr. Nielsen: It was very clear.

Mr. MacEachen: Let me answer by saying that Mr. Cohen, in my conversation with him this morning shortly before I came into the House, asserted that he had not found it necessary to discuss his conversations with Mr. Gillespie or report them to his Minister at that time. If I take the Hon. Member's analysis of Mr. Cohen's conduct, then I conclude that Mr. Cohen felt that his conversation did not have any significant bearing upon the political activity of his Minister.

• (1450)

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister is fixed with Mr. Cohen's knowledge. You know that.

Madam Speaker: Order.

POSITION OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister surely knows that the activities of the Deputy Minister are clearly the responsibility of the Minister in charge. That is the tradition here. It is the tradition that should be followed when a Minister tenders his resignation. The Deputy Prime Minister said clearly earlier in this Question Period that he was aware all along of this particular transaction. Since the Government of Canada was to sign this agreement, since Mr. Gillespie was to make a profit of $725,000 if it was successful, and since there were no tenders called on the matter, did the Deputy Prime Minister question at any time whether there were grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence on the part of the existing Minister?

While I am on my feet, Madam Speaker, may I ask the Deputy Prime Minister to table all documents, not just the documents he referred to in response to my colleague from Calgary Centre, but all documents related to this, so that everyone in this House of Commons and Canadians can understand just exactly what went on with this transaction?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker, there are a number of documents that may be of interest to Hon. Members.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I will make a search and table all that are possible to be tabled.

Mr. McDermid: Not just the ones you pick out; all of them.

Mr. MacEachen: In reply to the first question, I had no reason to believe, nor do I now have reason to believe, that the conduct of either the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of the day or of his Deputy Minister, Mr. Cohen, was anything but in accordance with the guidelines as I read them and as they apply. That is my understanding. It is the view of the Prime Minister. I gave him an honest appraisal of my understanding of the guidelines as they apply to myself and my colleagues in the Government of Canada.

APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES TO DEFEATED MINISTER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. I refer the Deputy Prime Minister to the guidelines, those that refer specifically to former Ministers. Number 1(c) says that within a period of two years of leaving office, Ministers should not lobby for or on behalf of any person or commercial corporation before any Department or agency for which they were responsible on an ongoing basis during the last two years of their participation in the ministry. Does the Minister not believe that Mr. Gillespie violated that guideline?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think I have to go to another point in my understanding of the guidelines. The guidelines are just that, guidelines.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: They are not carved in concrete.

Mr. Epp: They are not like law?

Mr. MacEachen: They are a guidance to Ministers.

Mr. Crosbie: They are meaningless; they do not mean anything.

Mr. MacEachen: I find it surprising that Hon. Members would not understand that they are guidelines.

Mr. Crosbie: We are not Liberals. Our minds are not twisted like yours.

Madam Speaker: Order. Precious time is being taken up by the heckling on both sides of the House.

Mr. Epp: Have they no moral force on you?

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, Ministers of the Government, including myself, are obligated to look to these principles for guidance in the conduct of our public affairs. Obviously we are obligated to look for guidance and to follow them according to our judgment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: If, as a member of the Government—

Mr. Crosbie: That's easy.

Mr. MacEachen: That is the obligation on every person to whom the guidelines apply; to every single Minister, Order in Council appointee or public servant. These guidelines are self-enforcing. There is no monitoring agency. They are up to the conscience of the individual.

Mr. Broadbent: They depend on the integrity of the Minister.

Mr. MacEachen: Exactly. For the Hon. Member now to ask me to police the guidelines for all the various ex-office holders is something that is not contemplated or asked for, or intended in the guidelines. That is the point the Hon. Member has to get into his head. It is unfortunate that so much misunderstanding has existed about the effect of these guidelines.

POSITION OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Minister very carefully avoided answering directly the question that I asked him. Let me ask this question. Was the Deputy Prime Minister aware of the guidelines that were in existence from April 28, 1980, as they applied to former office holders, former Ministers of the Crown? Did he not think that it might be in the best interests of the country, Mr. Gillespie and the Government, to bring to Mr. Gillespie's attention that such guidelines existed and that he might be in violation of them?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, of course I was well aware of the guidelines. They were sent to me in a letter of April 28 by the Prime Minister. I was aware of the guidelines. It is my responsibility to observe the guidelines as they apply to my conduct. I intend to do that. It is up to every other individual to apply the guidelines to his conduct. That is the purpose of the guidelines.

Mr. Deans: It is a public matter.

Mr. MacEachen: Of course it is a public matter, but it is a guideline, and the Hon. Member better understand that. These are guidelines that we must follow.

Mr. Deans: You broke the guidelines if you dealt with him when you knew he was breaking them.

Mr. MacEachen: The Hon. Member is attempting to extrapolate beyond the guidelines and establish a new principle that is not covered in the guidelines.

[Translation]

CONFLICT OF INTEREST GUIDELINES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I was listening to the Deputy Prime Minister as he tried to defend and even diminish the scope of the guidelines which his own Government established some time ago. I would like to ask him whether he agrees that the guidelines clearly prohibit lobbying on behalf of any persons corporation or agency for which the Ministers were responsible. It is clear that on October 29, the former Minister, Mr. Gillespie, was responsible for an agreement in principle that led to the announcement made by the present Deputy Prime Minister on April 4. It is also clear that negotiations and lobbying took place, and that contacts were made. Mr. Gillespie was responsible, and this has been proven.

In the circumstances, I feel that today, instead of following the example of the Prime Minister who last week gave a distorted interpretation of the Government's own guidelines, the Deputy Prime Minister should respect these guidelines and demonstrate to Canadians that the people representing them today have the moral courage to demand the resignation of those who were at fault in this matter.

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would like to hear the Hon. Member's question.

• (1500)

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, my question is very simple. I am asking the Deputy Prime Minister whether he has the moral courage to oblige his Government to respect its own guidelines. If he does intend to respect the guidelines, he will have to ask the Minister of Finance and perhaps others among his colleagues who took part in this project to resign, because of their failure to respect the guidelines and meet the obligations imposed on them by the present Prime Minister. Finally, I would like to know whether the Prime Minister has the moral fortitude to enforce directives established by the Government for its own Ministers. That is my question.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked whether I respect the guidelines. I do respect the guidelines. They have been issued by the Prime Minister to provide guidance to Ministers on how they ought to conduct their affairs in order to avoid the appearance of conflict of interest, or to avoid conflict of interest in themselves, and I fully respect the guidelines. I refer to them frequently, and my financial affairs are being conducted fully in accordance with the guidelines. But when it comes to a guideline like the one which I quoted earlier, surely, in the first instance, it is up to the conscience and the judgment of a responsible Minister to ensure that his conduct is in accordance with the guidelines. That is the point I am making. I add, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Deans: The Government should act in concert with—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacEachen: —that it is the responsibility of every former office holder to bring his conduct within the framework of these guidelines—that is where the responsibility lies—and sitting Ministers. I have made that point clearly. The Hon. Member has asked me to suggest the resignation of my colleague, and I ask him, on what grounds? On what grounds?

Mr. Nielsen: Preferential treatment.

Mr. MacEachen: Because there are absolutely no grounds for believing that there was preferential treatment given to a former office holder.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITION

TABLING OF REPORT OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the three hundred and ninety-seventh Report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) on Friday, February 18, 1983, and finds that the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. CROSBY—REMARK OF MR. MACEACHEN DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, on a point of order. During the course of Question Period, I am sure you heard the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) remark on the fact that Nova Scotia Members had not made any reference in the House of Commons to the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project. I would like to point out to the Hon. Minister that on January 25, 1983, this matter was raised—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. I am sorry, that is not a point of order. The Hon. Member, I believe, knows himself that he is just trying to continue the debate. He may do that on another occasion, but not now.

Is the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) rising again?

Mr. Crosby: No, just leaving, Madam Speaker.

MR. HARQUAIL—ALLEGED LACK OF RECOGNITION OF LIBERAL MEMBERS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, that is good news in a sense because perhaps that will give us an opportunity on this side to be recognized and to have an opportunity to speak. I have not made a practice of raising the question of not having an opportunity to put questions during Question Period, but last week for a period of three to four days very few, if any, questions were asked from this side of the House. Again, starting this week, we have just gone through Question Period without any Member on this side of the House—and I am talking not only—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harquail: When I talk, I speak of rights; we all have rights. I think, with respect to order in the House and to our rights, there is not a bit of evidence which has been brought forward on the subject which has taken up so much time of this House that has indicated any proof. No one has proven his case, and yet the time of the House was taken with no regard for other Hon. Members on both sides of this House who may have had some pertinent questions on the economy, who may have had questions with respect to transportation problems—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Harquail: —and other problems having to do with the day-to-day operations of this country. That is the point which I find pretty disturbing, and that is why I am raising it as a point of order. If the Official Loyal Opposition does not recognize its duty to pay attention to matters relating to the economy and the business of this country—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. Order, please. I accept the point of order put forward by the Hon. Member when he is discussing the matter of Hon. Members on the Government side not having been recognized during the Question Period. That is a perfectly legitimate point of order and I am willing to hear the Hon. Member on that point of order. But when he is debating issues which might have been brought up in the course of those questions, I cannot hear him any longer. If the Hon. Member has now made his point about not being recognized today in the Question Period, I can answer him now, and I will.

I have two Hon. Members of the Government side who have been put on the list, which is cumulative, for the purpose of asking questions. Those are two Members on the Government side. Today I have not recognized a single Member on the Government side. I want to make clear now to Hon. Members that I like to give everyone a chance and I tried to recognize an Hon. Member from the Government side today. But Hon. Members on the Opposition side of the House must suffer when the questions of some of their colleagues are too long. They then have a fewer number of Hon. Members who can get into the Question Period. In the same way, Hon. Members on the Government side have to realize that when Ministers take up a lot of time and give lengthy answers, which has been the case today, the result is obvious to everyone.

I allowed it to go that way because at some point during the Question Period it is important to give everyone a chance to clear up a certain matter. Because of that, obviously, Hon. Members on the Government side did suffer today. I acknowledge that, but I cannot apologize for it because it is the only way to run the Question Period.

Mr. Harquail: Madam Speaker, I certainly have demonstrated before, and it continues today, my support and respect for your judgment, and for the Chair. I want to bring to your attention, however, with respect to my point of order, that it does not only arise or begin today. It began last week. And that, by way of explanation, tells you the reason I am on my feet—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry. No, I am sorry. If the Hon. Member thought that he was being punished unduly last week, he could have raised the matter last week. We are speaking of today. I gave my explanation for today. I will give the Hon. Member statistics on the number of Members on the Government side who have been recognized last week. I will be glad to do that. If I have not recognized a sufficient number of Liberals, I will certainly correct that in due course, as I do with Hon. Members. Justice is not done every day of the week, but within a certain period there is a balance. I can assure Hon. Members about that. I have statistics daily, weekly, monthly. It is all done in the computer. And I do that because I want to be fair.

Mr. Harquail: But, Madam Speaker, in your preamble you have asked me, invited me, to explain. That is why I made reference to the fact that the same situation existed last week, when we were not able to be recognized throughout the whole of the Question Period.

The only point that I want to make in my point of order today is that I am being restricted from doing my duty here, which is to bring problems such as the Eastern Provincial Airways strike which exists in the Atlantic Provinces right now—

Madam Speaker: Order. All right. Very well. I try to give Hon. Members a chance, but the Hon. Member knows that the subjects discussed in the House are raised in a certain order. The Chair has nothing to do with it.

• (1510)

I explained things for today. I hope the Hon. Members accept what took place in Question Period today. I do feel there was no other way to handle it today. I did my best. I think the Hon. Member, who is now nodding, accepts that as far as today is concerned. I will try to give the Hon. Member a chance on another day.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, with respect to the Question Period today, I would like to point out that we on this side can understand the frustration of the Hon. Member opposite. He probably wanted to get into the debate and ask questions about the conduct of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). If he would like to see us after the Question Period today, perhaps we can assist him and other Members on that side who want to pursue this matter and who feel that the truth should come out. We would be pleased to speak to them about how we might fit them in.

Mr. Harquail: On that particular point, that Member and others have no lesson to give us on this issue. Let them bring the evidence and let them be prepared before they come here.

Madam Speaker: Order. Would the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) not agree that he is getting a formidable chance right now?

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I just wanted to say that the attempt of the Hon. Member opposite at being humorous on this important point of order is surely an indication of the Opposition's belief that somehow they can set up—

Madam Speaker: Order. That point of order is closed.

Mr. Tobin: Only the Opposition can be heard on relevant points, I understand.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

An Hon. Member: Withdraw.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,388 and 4,578.

[Text]

ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Question No. 4,388—Mr. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton):

1. Who sits on the Regional Board that decides who gets assistance through the Enterprise Development Program of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the constituency of Victoria-Haliburton?

2. Who sits on the Central Board of the Program?

3. What are the criteria for eligibility for assistance under the Program?

4. Who is responsible for informing MP's of successful applications for EDP funding in their constituencies?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned:

1. The Ontario Region Enterprise Development Board serves the whole of the Province of Ontario. This Board consists of three private sector members: R. C. Buck, Chairman; John Webster and Norman T. Curry. Senior officials of the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Regional Economic Expansion as well as the Federal Business Development Bank are also members of the Board.

2. The Enterprise Development Regulations provide for membership of the Central Board to consist of nine private sector members and nine public sector members. The regulations provide for the public sector to be represented by senior officials from the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce; Regional Economic Expansion; Finance; Employment and Immigration; Ministry of State for Science and Technology; Ministry of State for Economic and Regional Development; and the Federal Business Development Bank. The private sector members of the Board are:

Pierre Demers (Acting Chairman)
Montreal, Quebec.

Francis Murphy
Vancouver, B.C.

Murray Auld
Winnipeg, Manitoba

John G. McD. Brown
Wolfville, Nova Scotia

Helen Rice
Grande Prairie, Alberta

Marcel Bundock
Drummondville, Quebec

Presently, there are three vacancies in respect of the private sector membership.

3. Each of the various forms of assistance has certain criteria, but in general, the eligibility criteria are that the firm and the project must be viable; for loan insurance the firm must be unable to obtain financing on reasonable terms; and for grants the project must represent a significant burden in relation to the firm's resources.

4. News releases are made available to MPs on a regular basis advising of the assistance provided to various applicants across Canada.

PETROLEUM INCENTIVES PROGRAM

Question No. 4,578—Mr. Siddon:

1. With reference to the Petroleum Incentives Program grants, how many applications for the grants were received to date since the establishment of the Program?

2. How many of the applications were received from (a) companies with prior involvement in the oil and gas industry (i) in Canada (ii) outside of Canada (b) companies involved in the (i) distillery business (ii) insurance business (iii) banking and finance business (iv) real estate business?

3. What was the amount of the largest grant and to which company was it given?

4. What was the average amount for grants given?

5. Of all the companies receiving grants to date, what was the average Canadian ownership rate?

6. What amount was spent to date for the administration of the Program?

7. How many Program application kits were printed and distributed and what was the total cost of the kits?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

1. To date, a total of 499 applications for incentives have been filed with the Petroleum Incentives Program.

2. The requested information is not available in departmental records.

3. Pursuant to Section 17 of the Petroleum Incentives Program Act, the name of a specific applicant is privileged information and, therefore, cannot be released. However, payments will be reported in an appropriate manner in EM&R's Annual Report.

4. To date, the average incentives granted per applicant has been $5,300,624 and the average incentive granted per application has been $3,032,234.

5. More than 96 per cent of payments made to date, have been made to applicants with Canadian ownership rates high enough to qualify for the maximum rate of incentives.

6. Administrative costs to date are $7,070,889.

7. The Petroleum Incentives Program kit released July, 1982 was printed at a cost of $38,500 for 10,000 copies. Initially, 6,300 copies were distributed to the PIP mailing list and distribution outlets across the country. Since that time, an additional 1,900 have been sent to individuals requesting the information.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, if question No. 4,500 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 4,500 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to continue my remarks on Bill C-139. Before I was interrupted pursuant to Standing Order 21, I was saying that Bill C-139 was brought in as a result of some three budgets that have been brought down by the Government. They were the budgets of November, 1981 and June, 1982 and the mini-budget of last fall. This legislation, which deals with tax policy, took considerable time, some 15 months, to come to the House. It comprises some 300 pages. It is extremely complex and people do not understand it. It certainly has a detrimental effect on the performance of the Department of National Revenue. The Department has indicated that Canadians will not receive their income tax refund until this legislation is passed.

I was attempting to point out earlier how the Department of National Revenue certainly has no qualms about collecting taxes before appropriate laws are passed. However, we see how the bureaucracy is acting with regard to tax refunds. Unfortunately, this omnibus Bill does not address many problems that people such as my constituents face.

There are many farmers in my constituency as it is a rural, agricultural constituency. Many of the measures in this legislation do not deal in a systematic and helpful way with the problems faced by farmers in my area.

I would like to reiterate one of the matters raised by our agriculture critic earlier in the debate. It concerns the fact that one of the major changes introduced in Bill C-139 eliminates the income tax averaging annuity contract and replaces it with a system of forward averaging. In many respects, this is not the best answer to the problems that some of the farmers or small-businessmen face in our area. Within Bill C-139 we find that there is a reduction in the capital cost allowance in the first year. This is of particular concern in respect of farm equipment which would have been eligible under the previous provisions for a 30 per cent allowance in the first year. Under the new proposals, only 15 per cent of the capital cost allowance would be eligible. I would point out in this respect that if our agricultural and other primary producers received a proper benefit in income tax on the operating costs of their farms, the rest of the economy would move again.

I notice that you are getting ready to indicate that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I would just mention that we oppose this Bill because it is seriously flawed and because we think it should not be dealt with in its present form at this time.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to speak on Bill C-139. If the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) had been really concerned about taking part in debate on meaningful issues in the House, he could have put his ten minutes to use and possibly spoken on Bill C-139. However, our Party will speak on it seeing that he had his four chances to stand in the House this afternoon to have what amounted to a main question and three supplementary questions. We will try to assist him in the future and, hopefully, move him over here to the Opposition where he can ask questions to his content.

We certainly support the Speaker in trying to sort this problem out in the House. We realize the hardship the Hon. Member faces on occasion.

I did not think that I would have a chance to speak on this Bill, but the Hon. Member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield) made it possible as a result of his attempt at parliamentary reform and kinship across the floor by forcing us to sit through the lunch hour.

As you know, I come from a riding in southern Ontario. Many of my constituents are very concerned about Bill C-139. In my riding there are people in the small business field, in the agricultural field and even in the major industrial field, and amongst all of them there is confusion as a result of the complexities of this Bill. There have been some 500 changes to the Income Tax Act in the last 11 years, 42 of them in the Bill before us. People do not know where to turn for understanding. The only people the Bill seems to assist are the accountants, and even they are frustrated.

• (1520)

Having had some military experience and thus something to do with regulations and having spent some eight years in university, I thought I would be able to understand the Bill. However, being a moderate man from a rural riding, I need some assistance, and this Bill does not offer it.

One of the things that concerns people in my riding, for example, is general averaging. It is being replaced by forward averaging and that sounds fine. When we read the definition of "accumulated averaging amount", however, this is what we are faced with in clause 69(8) on p. 162 of the Bill, which reads as follows:

(a) "accumulated averaging amount" of an individual at the end of any taxation year means the product obtained when

(i) the amount, if any, by which the aggregate of

(A) the individual's accumulated averaging amount at the end of the immediately preceding taxation year, and

(B) the amount deducted under subsection (1) by the individual in computing his taxable income for the year exceeds

(C) the amount added under subsection (2) by the individual in computing his taxable income for the year is multiplied by

(ii) the ratio, adjusted in such manner as may be prescribed and rounded to the nearest one-thousandth or, where the ratio is equidistant from two one-thousandths, to the greater thereof, that the Consumer Price Index for the 12 month period that ended on the 30th day of September next before that year bears to the Consumer Price Index for the 12 month period that ended immediately before the commencement of that 12 month period; and

The people of Haldimand-Norfolk find that very confusing, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps the Minister and the people in his Department do not. We are just average, rural folk, and we would like the Government to try to make things a little simpler for us. The small business people and the farmers in my riding need help, not more regulations or definitions or restrictions. Small-businessmen are concerned about interest rates and about the decreased purchasing power of the individual. The farmers are not concerned about how much paper work they have to do to calculate their taxes; they are concerned about the cost of equipment, fertilizer, help, fuel and everything they need on the farm. They are concerned about the low return they receive for their work, not how difficult the Government can make the Income Tax Act.

I looked for the capital gains exemption and a new valuation day date which was promised by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) in the last election campaign. That is what the farmers need; it is what they count on for their retirement plan. They also need something to stimulate their business, not more bankruptcies and foreclosures. How can they be proud of their country when they consider the economic outlook?

Figures issued by the OECD on economic outlook indicate that in the areas of economic growth and productivity, Canada ranks last of the 24 leading industrialized countries. We have the second highest unemployment rate in the industrialized world, second only to the United Kingdom. Japan has an unemployment rate of 2.25 per cent, and Germany 8.25 per cent, 5 points less than ours. Canada is the only OECD country in the top ten, whose industrial productivity has decreased. We rank tenth behind the United States, Japan, Germany, France, United Kingdom, Italy, Belgium, Denmark and Sweden. All other countries registered some increase but Canada experienced a drop of 0.2 per cent.

How can small businessmen and farmers make plans? The figures I have quoted do not demonstrate leadership. They cannot plan five years ahead when the governing Party changes the Act every time it presents a budget. All levels of business are concerned—individuals, small business people, major corporations, farmers, fishermen, even municipal and provincial Governments.

In the pre-budget statement presented to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in January, 1983, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce stated as follows on p. 19:

We have expressed our view on previous occasions that the post-budget process is now grossly over-extended. We hope that we will not see again a situation where legislation is passed in 1983 relating to the 1981 taxation year. We believe that the government should adopt an approach where draft legislation is tabled on budget night. We are appreciative of the change in approach taken for Bill C-139 where detailed explanatory notes were released. We believe this approach should be followed in the future, and even be amplified, making it much easier to react to the draft legislation in a timely fashion.

We believe that it is generally agreed that the Income Tax Act has become too complex in the past few years, especially in the areas relating to small business. The reason why this has occurred is not difficult to establish; every budget in the past few years has added another layer of complexity onto those which have gone before, so the whole system is now virtually staggering under its own weight.

When the Chamber of Commerce expresses that view, Mr. Speaker, we are in trouble.

How does all this affect Canadians? There have been four different versions of a budget—the one introduced in November 1981, the version that amended it on December 18, 1981, the one that was dropped on us on June 28, 1982, and then, of course, the one of October 27, 1982. In addition, there have been all sorts of minor announcements and clarifications, such as the January 1982 announcement of employee benefits.

These other things I mentioned concern us and we want to see them clarified and brought into better perspective in the budget. We could talk about this for days and hours, but I am glad to have had the time to raise a few of the issues that are of concern to people in my area and which I think should be of concern to all Canadians.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, this Bill is totally incomprehensible. I realize that it is not the first one that we could not understand and that nobody else, including the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) could understand. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) also has problems with it.

I was glad to see Members of the NDP participate in the debate and slam the Liberals today. I had been worried about their close collaboration with the Liberals when they were saying that they would not campaign against them in the constituencies in the foreseeable future. But they are with us on Bill C-139, Mr. Speaker.

This Bill is partly the result of the worst budget ever brought down. That was in November 1981 when the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) was Minister of Finance. He decided to correct everything without giving any real thought to what the effects might be. Consequently, he brought in a horrible budget to close the so-called loopholes. Actually, they were tax incentives that had kept such industries going as the building industry. Suddenly the door was slammed. I shall not soon forget the look of absolute horror on the face of the Deputy Prime Minister who was then the Minister of Finance. It was pointed out to him by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney) that the immediate result of his budget at that time was to put some 20,000 construction workers out of work in the Province of British Columbia. Until that time I believe he had gone through it as a kind of exercise in some sort of paper war so that he would look good to people who were fretting about tax loopholes in the construction industry. Possibly this was his first realization that he had actually put a lot of people out of work, simply because of what he thought was a good speech given in support of a budget that some people believe to this day he had not read before presenting.

All the changes in the budget ever since then have been piecemeal and have frequently left the impression that they have postponed the implementation of various sections, have cut amounts in half, have cut percentages in half or by a third, or found some other amelioration for the rather savage changes. They did not withdraw the entire budget, and they withdrew very few major portions of it.

I would like to speak for a few minutes about the problems with the terminology in the Bill and in taxation matters in general. I have received many letters about the inability of people to understand the taxation rules until too late. One such letter was from a lady in my riding. I wrote to the Minister about it. I would like to refer to parts of this letter and, rather than identifying the woman who wrote it, I will call her Ms. X. The second paragraph indicates that at present she is age 99 and is fortunate enough to have a gentleman, whose address is such and such, to look after her affairs and have power of attorney. This gentleman was most upset because he had paid her taxes for 1981 on time but on a once-a-year basis. He did that because her total income in 1981 was $16,843. More than $14,000 of this income came to her only in November or later in 1981. This would likely be because of savings bonds or Government bonds. She received her income in November but was expected to pay taxes in June, on the first instalment for the year. She did not understand that and made only a one-time payment for 1981.

I run into quite a few people in my riding whose incomes come from sharecropping arrangements which they have back on family farms in Alberta or Saskatchewan. This is a payment they receive whenever the Government makes a wheat payment. It is not necessarily phased out once every quarter of the year; quite often it comes in in the fall.

I wrote a letter to the then Minister of National Revenue in which I said that it was difficult to understand why the Government wished to have my constituent pay through three-quarters of the year on income she would not receive until the fourth quarter of the year. It is no wonder that the gentleman who was looking after her affairs was puzzled. In part my letter read:

I wonder if you would be kind enough to have your officials look into this matter and determine if proper warning was given to Mr. . . . that Mary . . . (aged 99) would be required to pay taxes quarterly apparently based on her total annual income.

I look forward to your early, favourable reply.

I received the usual answer acknowledging receipt of my letter, and then I received a further reply a month after I had written. That was pretty quick time for that group.

As an aside, I would like to congratulate the current Minister of Finance. I guess he needs every kind word he can get after the shambles he has made this week and last week of the conduct guidelines of the current Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). But he did something of interest, because I am now receiving letters from the Minister of Finance in answer to ones which I wrote to the former Minister of Finance, the present Deputy Prime Minister, over a year ago. I thank him for his letter of January 1982. At least the current Minister is beginning to get the mail answered. Apparently he has something over a year's backlog left to him by the rather feckless Deputy Prime Minister when he was Minister of Finance.

A month after I had written asking about this particular lady who paid her taxes on an annual basis until this year, I received a reply from the Minister. The first thing she recalled about it all was that not only was she to pay on a quarterly basis, but she owed them so much for the first quarter and so much in interest on the payment she had not made. The answer, which was supposed to please them, was contained in a letter addressed to me from the then Minister of National Revenue, which read in part as follows:

I am writing in reply to your letter of July 14 . . . in regard to the income tax affairs of Ms.—

It is true that the requirement to pay tax on income in the year received creates situations where a portion of the tax is required to be paid prior to receipt of the actual income. Self-employed businessmen in summer seasonal operations face a similar problem.

I am sure that would be of great interest to this 99 year old lady! It continued:

In their case, they would not normally be in receipt of any income until the month of July but, nevertheless, would have been obliged to make a quarterly payment of tax in the immediately preceding June and March quarters.

My Head Office officials have reviewed Ms. . . . records and have informed me that she was advised during the 1980 calendar year that she may be subject to the instalment requirements.

Now, listen to this; it goes on:

The advice Ms. . . . would have received was in the form of a T7B, Instalment Guide for Individuals, along with a T3T01 remittance form. In addition, Ms. . . . was also charged instalment interest on the 1980 tax assessment.

I trust the foregoing explanation will assist you in replying to your constituent in a satisfactory manner.

How on earth do we reply in a satisfactory manner to a 99-year old constituent when the officials claim that because they sent the Instalment Guide for Individuals in an envelope to her in 1980, she should have known that it changed her system of paying taxes, and therefore they will penalize her for not paying them under this system right from scratch. Ridiculous.

I am one—and I suppose the same is true of most Members of the House—who has my income tax forms completed by an accountant. It has gone beyond the scope of most of us to fill out our own income tax forms. I believe Department officials should begin considering the fact that all the accounting could be done by the Department or something, because I do not know how to figure it out. When one tries to read the form which Ms. X was supposed to have understood, one would not believe it. It is ten pages long. It is full of anomalies. It talks about Option A and Option B. I can hardly believe that the poor soul was supposed to understand. In part it read:

General Requirements

If you have a taxable income, you are required to make quarterly instalment payments of income tax unless:

(a) taxes deducted at source from at least three-quarters of your "Net Income";

(b) your chief source of income is farming or fishing; or

(c) either your Federal Income Tax for 1981 or your estimate of Federal Income Tax for 1982 does not exceed $400.

Instalment payments of Canada Pension Plan contributions may also be required (see page 7).

There are ten pages in this document, and by the time one gets to page 7 it tells one the following:

Calculation of Canada Pension Plan Contributions.

I am not sure what that has to do with it. Also it indicates:

Estimated Canada Pension Plan Contributions Payable by Instalments.

Perhaps they made a mistake and it should have been page 8. Who knows? This is the kind of problem with which Members of Parliament are faced because of these omnibus or enormous Bills that contain totally non-understandable English.

How would Hon. Members like to be faced with understanding Clause 12.(1) at page 44, which reads:

Paragraph 20(1)(c) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "or" at the end of subparagraph (ii) thereof, by adding the word "or" at the end of subparagraph (iii) thereof and by adding thereto, immediately after subparagraph (iii) thereof, the following subparagraph:

"(iv) borrowed money used to acquire an interest in an annuity contract to which section 12.2 applies, or would apply if the contract had a third anniversary in the year—

Is that clear? In conclusion I would like to refer to an Act which was passed by the United Nations. We should send down Bills to them. This one was written in simple English, and we are able to understand it very easily. I am sorry I do not have any time left in which to quote from it.

• (1540)

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I agree with every other speaker whom I have heard comment on Bill C-139. It is the most complex piece of legislation which this House has seen for some time. Certainly the most complex that I have ever had to deal with since coming here three years ago. The Bill itself, which is to amend the Income Tax Act, is about 300 pages thick.

Mr. Riis: It is sick.

Mr. Young: It is sick. That is probably right. But it took the Department of Finance another 200 pages in explanatory notes in an attempt to set out to Canadians and to Members of this House what the amendments are all about. It has not been particularly easy for Members of Parliament, for the public and even those who are experts and professionals in the field, to understand what the Government is trying to do here. In fact, one writer, Robert J. Jackson, head of the Political Science Department at Carleton University, in attempting to define what the Government was trying to do, wrote:

In the tax field the two MacEachen budgets, of November, 1981 and June, 1982, were catastrophes that never became law. Neither did Lalonde's mini-budget of last fall, which tried to undo the worst damage of his predecessor.

What we are attempting to do is to deal with bad amendments which were supposed to have been made less so by a new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

In going over the Bill itself and looking through the explanatory notes it would seem that the present Minister of Finance has resorted to the same kind of twisting and bandying about of an income tax system that in general is totally inequitable. It is particularly inequitable in regard to people at the low end of the income scale. He had an opportunity, I think, in finally bringing this particular Bill before the House, to have made some amendments to the Income Tax Act for which many groups across the country have been calling for quite a number of years. For instance, he could have taken into consideration the findings of the Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped which travelled across the country listening to disabled groups and individuals about their financial needs and what the Government could do to make life a little bit better for them to help them participate in the mainstream of Canadian life as able bodied individuals have been permitted and allowed to do over the years. There was one simple amendment the Minister could have brought in, to which he said earlier he would give consideration, namely to bring in some amendments to the Income Tax Act which would have offset the cost of disability. A disabled or handicapped person has living costs which are in excess of what an able bodied person has. Very often a person, particularly one with mobility problems, requires special forms of transportation. This is an additional cost to that individual. It should be remembered that most disabled people receive far below what we would normally consider to be an average income. In fact, most individuals have incomes which would be considered at or below the poverty level. The Government could have acted on some of the recommendations made by that Special Committee. Amendments could have been made to the Income Tax Act.

In response to a constituent's complaint in this area, the Minister of Finance stated that his Department was reviewing income tax concessions currently available to the disabled as well as recommendations which were made to our Committee. The Minister of Finance certainly could have made some move in that area without its having a drastic effect on the existing revenue the Government receives.

In another area the Minister could have done something for the disabled people and their families by taking into consideration the financial needs of those who have mobility problems, those who are not sighted and those with other disabilities. Concessions could have been made through the income tax system to allow either the disabled persons or their families to make renovations to their own homes or apartments so as to make them easily accessible for disabled people.

Under current legislation there are many contradictions which make accessibility difficult to achieve. For example, special devices to assist disabled persons in making their toilet should be made tax deductible. What about renovations to make the doorway to the bathroom wider so that the disabled person can have access to the bathroom? The committee felt that in specific instances such as those, the Department of Finance could act immediately to provide deductions without waiting for presentations from other Departments. That would have been a rather simple thing for the Minister to do had he so chosen. But, he did not.

What about amendments to the Income Tax Act to encourage on-the-job-training for disabled people? The Minister's Department did bring forward an employment program several years ago. It provided some assistance with equipment to allow a disabled individual to fit into the normal workplace. That particular program, to my knowledge, has not been very successful, primarily because the federal Government has not shown an example by bringing in, within its own Departments, adequate training programs or affirmative action programs for disabled people. In the federal Government's own employment practices it still has a long way to go to accomplish some level of satisfaction in that area. The private sector is not likely to act until the Government—and the Committee argued this very strongly—takes a leadership role in employing disabled and handicapped people. From my own experience, especially in small business, small businesses are more open to the suggestion of hiring disabled people than are large corporations and governments.

The Government could have assisted small businesses which recognize that disabled people should be judged for their ability rather than their disability. The very least the Goverment could have done was to accommodate the good citizenship shown by the small business community and to assist small businesses to do their job even better.

I see that my time has run out, Mr. Speaker. I could speak for another 40 minutes on this subject.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate. It is probably one of the most important events that has ensued with respect to matters incredibly complex. I have heard the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) speak about complexity. He put it within one term of reference. I have a personal term of reference within which I would like to put the complexity. It came about as a result of being aware that I would be speaking today concerning the provisions of the Income Tax Act. I met three tax accountants from a large Canadian firm in Toronto last Friday. They outlined two points to me. The first one dealt with ordinary accountants, those in small firms in towns like Cambridge. In some cases because of the complexity of this Bill it was beyond their capabilities to understand it fully. The result was that accountants were coming to these large firms to seek advice, but even these large firms found it difficult to give advice in some circumstances.

This tax partner, who deals with international finance and large multinational corporations, made a second point. These particular areas are complex by their very nature, with international implications. However, when compared with the provisions with which a small business person and an accountant advising the small businessman must deal, they bear no absolute relation in terms of their complexity. He asked me if I would point out in my speech the provisions of Section 125(3) of the Income Tax Act and he asked me to defy anyone, through Your Honour—and I see that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) is here—to say exactly what the provisions of Section 125, 1 through 6, mean. I read it over the weekend. I was once a practising lawyer and dealt with a great deal of tax litigation. I will say to Your Honour that ordinary people certainly cannot understand it and accountants do not even have the time to try to understand it. Some do not have the aptitude to do so. The large firms are having a great deal of difficulty, especially with the one section that I pointed out. Taxes are the price that we pay for civilization, and it is a very dear price that we are paying these days.

I would like to discuss three or four aspects of the new provisions of the Income Tax Act. One of the most important, from my perspective because I am a small business critic, concerns RRSPs. Everyone knows that interest expense on contribution to RRSPs made after November 12, 1981, will not be deductible. The provision with respect to deductibility was a tax preference because it was given on the social understanding that it was wise for people to provide for their own retirement. That was a laudable social and public goal. It has been absolutely stripped by the provisions of this particular piece of legislation. The objective of the RRSP, as I say, is to allow savings for retirement. If an individual continually borrows year after year in order to make RRSP contributions, never paying off any of these loans, then the objective of saving for retirement is completely frustrated. However, most lenders require that the RRSP loans be paid off within one year. If one goes to the lending institutions, whether it be the credit unions or the banks, and looks at the advertisements, one finds that they will lend money for the purposes of buying an RRSP, but one of the provisions is that it be paid off within one calendar year.

This is obviously another Government grab for revenue. It is as simple as that. The reality is that if people cannot borrow for the purposes of providing for their own retirement, they will not become involved in RRSPs, which I believe to be a public and social necessity because it deals with the philosophy to which I subscribe, that is, self responsibility. I find the situation with respect to RRSPs nothing short of appalling.

Let me deal with capital cost allowance. Here we are, at this particular point in our history, in the depths of a very deep recession. We are in a situation where the Government will be taking $3 billion out of the private sector and putting it into the public sector. I find this to be absolutely against the grain so far as I am concerned. It is certainly nothing in which I have ever believed, especially at this point in time. There has been an abridgement by the Government. Specifically, I point out Class 29 write-offs, depreciable property.

Your Honour may recall the budget of May 8, 1973, I believe, brought in by John Turner. In his speech on the budget, with respect to Class 29, he said he wanted to create employment because that was the most imperative social issue at that time. He brought in what is known as the speedy write-off for manufacturing. In other words, in the first and second years a person could write off 50 per cent of any manufactured machinery purchased. He was holding out a carrot. The former Minister of Finance gave three reasons at that point in time. First, he said it would create employment. I agree, it did create employment. Second, he said it would enhance cash flow. Because that carrot was being held out, the third provision was that we would avoid obsolescence. As I say, to take such a tremendous amount of money out of the private sector and put it into the public sector at this time is totally without foundation or justification.

The third matter I would like to discuss is the corporate distribution tax. I can certainly understand why the Government is proposing it, because it is trying to ensure that salaries are treated in the same manner as dividends. That is where I disagree. I will give a very short example. Under the old system, if a company was taxable at $100, the corporate tax, the small business rate, would be approximately $25, with $75 left over. If a dividend was paid on the $75 under the 1982 scenario, it would amount to approximately $18.75, which was one-quarter of the amount. The total tax involved would be $18.75 plus the $25, so that at the most the taxpayer would be paying $43.75. Under the 1983 budget provisions, with that same $100, there is a quarter off, which makes it $75; there is the corporate distribution or Part II tax, payable by the company, which brings it down to $66.67; and the personal tax on the dividend at one-quarter of the rate, and what we get, really, is $50. The point I am making is that it becomes a question of preference. I understand, because it has been clearly stated, why the Government did this. I have always believed, and still do, that being able to take money out by way of dividends in this—no doubt about it—preferred way, was socially and publicly good. I do not see why it was changed.

I would like to touch briefly on two other areas. One concerns work in progress. I was happy to see that the provisions of the November 1981 budget were changed with respect to professionals such as lawyers and accountants who could not be incorporated. What irritated me is that it discriminated against architects and engineers. I do not think there are any Members in the House who have not received letters from their local engineers about these discriminatory provisions. In my view, the reason these professional people were discriminated against was that it was said they could incorporate and were therefore eligible for the small business rate of tax. However, from everything that I have been able to ascertain, if I could use a word of the street, the architects and engineers are really getting "shafted" with respect to this provision, whereas there are proper remedies with respect to lawyers and accountants.

I had hoped to make a couple of points more, but I see that Your Honour is giving me the nod to signal that my allotted time has expired.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relative to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak to Bill C-139 which deals with the amendments to the Income Tax Act. This Bill is the most complex Bill since 1971, and it is some 297 pages long. Moreover, it has taken the Government 398 days to bring this Bill into the House.

As a new member, elected in October, I must say that it is very hard for me to be able to absorb 298 pages in such a short period of time, the changes from the budgets of November, 1981, June 28, 1982 and October 27, 1982, and 350 changes to the Income Tax Act.

Today I want to speak on a few of those. My riding, which is Timiskaming, stretches from Lake Nipissing through to James Bay. My constituents have a concern with some of Bill C-139, and I would like to take a few moments to describe some of the proposed changes we would like to see. The proposed taxation on professional work in progress has been withdrawn for professions outlined under Section 125(b)(f) of the Income Tax Act: medical doctors, lawyers, accountants, dentists, veterinarians and chiropractors. The measures, however, remain the same for architects and other professions.

The one profession I would like to mention to you today is that of insurance adjusters. I have a constituent who has a very small operation and is concerned with regard to the taxation on work in progress in the adjuster's office. His understanding of this reform means that at a certain date it will be necessary for him to calculate the amount of time he has spent on each file. The time will be converted into a financial figure and, once this is done, taxation would apply.

His letter went on to say that if this is to happen as his operation has a very minimum margin of profit it would probably force this individual out of business. This is one concern that we have in this riding in regard to Bill C-139.

Another area which is of grave concern is the taxation of northern benefits. To the north of my riding, which enters into the James Bay area which takes in Moosonee and Moose Factory, at any time it is very hard to get qualified people into the area. Under Bill C-139 the taxing of northern benefits is not only going to jeopardize the individuals who are now in Moosonee and Moose Factory, but in future trying to interest employees whether they be in the Moose Factory hospital or with the James Bay Board of Education or with the Ministry of Natural Resources in that area, is going to be very, very difficult. And I hope that this will be taken into consideration not only for my riding in northern Ontario but in other northern areas across Canada.

I would like to move on to another area in which there is great concern with Bill C-139. Prior to my being elected to the House of Commons I was a salesman, and the taxation of the travelling expenses of individuals who are employed as salesmen is of great concern. There are many salesmen provided with a car by their company, not only in my riding but across Canada, who work for a very low income and work on an incentive basis. An individual might drive anywhere up to 125,000 miles a year, and he is being taxed for possible use of this car during the weekend or in the evening. I must say that it is very wrong to tax an individual who happens to be making in the neighbourhood of $12,000 a year on the one benefit that he might have, a car sitting in his yard for a short period of time over the weekend, and if he uses this car in any sense, whether it is going down the street to shop with his wife or whether it is just going out to a private home, he is being taxed on that.

I must say that at the same time there are companies across Canada today which are saying to their salesmen: "We are no longer going to supply you with a car. You have to go out and buy your own car. Because of this taxation we feel it is much better for you to own a car and then in turn be paid by the company." Once again, if you are in the income range of $12,000 to $16,000, a car payment on top of everything else today—everyone recognizes the problem with the way the economy is, and the fact that selling is not the same as it was five years ago—is another burden. I would like to say once again that that is another concern with Bill C-139.

There is another very, very large concern in I think almost every area across Canada, and that is taxation in regard to MURBS, in regard to apartment buildings that are much needed across this country. In my riding of Timiskaming a new industry was started three years ago, and we had the opportunity of having a contractor come into our area who was willing to build apartment buildings that were required. But under the taxation of the budget of November, 1981, this was taken away from private individuals who wanted the opportunity to invest money in apartment buildings. I urge this Government to reconsider this matter because this provision must be put back in, in order not only for the riding of Timiskaming to have the opportunity for the much needed apartment buildings but because there are numerous towns and cities across this country that require that extra building.

In closing I must say that under Bill C-139 it is very, very important that we look after the small businesses across this country, small businesses which make up this country. With a bill such as this, 296 pages long, and the problems that a small businessman has today in trying to understand a Bill such as this, I, and I think all Members on this side of the House, see the urgency of making this task easier. We have to make it a lot easier for the individuals because, as we all realize in these times, it is very hard to break even, let alone have to worry about hiring a chartered accountant, which some of these small businesses or individuals really cannot afford to do.

In closing I must say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I am very pleased to have had the opportunity to speak on this Bill. My people in the riding of Timiskaming are certainly pleased that you have given me that opportunity.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, in order for a taxation system to be successful it has to be intelligible and citizens have to abide by it cheerfully and voluntarily. I think it was the Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) who said it is a price we pay for civilization.

It is becoming increasingly apparent, as the Member who just finished speaking noted, that Canadians are becoming frustrated and bewildered by the complexities of trying to cope with a very complex set of rules and regulations. It is interesting from a historic perspective to recall that when a taxation system becomes too complex and too onerous some irresponsible politicians make great gains by leading so-called tax revolts. I say to the Minister opposite, who I know is a keen student of political history, that Pierre Poujade in France at one time controlled the very balance of power in the French National Assembly by espousing a tax revolution. In the meantime, we have seen a similar phenomenon in the United States, in the State of California, and recently there has been another movement in that regard.

I think that the taxpayers and the business community want more than anything else in this country is some stability and some continuity in the taxing system. It seems to me that the Ministry of Finance and the Ministry of National Revenue are inextricably bound together. When one looks at the plethora of Ministers in the last four years and looks at the contradictory policies that have been espoused, it is very easy to see why the business community is in such a quandary about what to do.

• (1610)

Colleagues will remember when the present Minister of Energy (Mr. Chrétien) brought in his budget. He never had that budget legitimized. The election came before that could occur. My colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) then became Minister of Finance. That budget was never implemented. Then we had, as many Members have said, that dreadful budget brought in by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) when he was Minister of Finance. We then had the son of that budget, which in some ways was even worse than the first one.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The illegitimate son.

Mr. MacKay: We then have the present Minister of Finance who brought forward a very well accepted economic treatise or statement which really served in the place of another interim budget. Now we are waiting for yet another budget. Just consider that, all within the space of four years.

Looking at the Ministry of National Revenue side, we go back to Tony Abbott in 1979, not so long ago. Well, he is gone. We had the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) in our short-lived administration. We then had the Hon. Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), and now the present incumbent. Again, with all respect, it is difficult to get any continuity or stability with all this turnover of ministers. In fairness, that was not enough time for these gentlemen to have mastered the complexities of the Department and perhaps not enough time for them to have co-ordinated their particular policies with the Minister of Finance.

However these kinds of fundamental policies as opposed to specific regulations surely need not have suffered as much as they had. I note, not with amusement but with some interest, that in order to make the situation look a little bit better for itself and perhaps more relevant, the Government recently raised the base of the cost of living index. In effect, we are starting off on a much higher plateau for the eighties. This serves to make people forget how badly their standard of living has eroded in the last decade.

Our capital gains evaluation, which was set in 1971, has not been touched. That surely is a great disincentive to the kind of business activity and confidence that the Government should be wanting to instil in ordinary Canadians and the business community. I remember speaking to the then Minister of Finance about this, the present Deputy Prime Minister. I asked him questions shortly after he became Minister. On March 13, 1981 I asked him:

> Since it is approximately ten years from valuation day, and since the Minister knows that when assets change hands now they are being taxed heavily on inflation, which I think he would agree is confiscatory, what plans do he and his Cabinet colleagues have to revise or otherwise make more equitable the capital gains tax structure in this country?

The then Finance Minister replied to the effect that he had released a discussion paper on capital gains and talked about the question of indexing. I pursued the matter in a supplementary question to the Minister, asking him about the time frame and about more specific information.

I quoted a man named Harris who was President of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. He wrote a very good treatise on the ironic situation in which people who benefit from lotteries are not subject to capital gains while people who invest in their country are, and people who save to buy securities from Canadian companies in order to put their children through college or provide for their retirement are taxed heavily in the same way as someone who speculates in or buys foreign securities.

I pointed out to the Minister that there was room here to be more equitable, to tilt toward Canadian securities, to encourage investment in Canadian companies and be fair about the way that capital gains are being assessed. The Minister indicated that he was interested. Accordingly, I wrote him a few days later, and I said among other things:

I am enclosing a copy of Mr. Harris' speech to the Winnipeg Rotary Club as well for your information I am attaching a copy of a letter I sent to Mr. Harris.

I wrote to Mr. Harris bringing to his attention the fact that I had made these representations, based on his speech, in the House of Commons to the Minister of Finance. I suggested that Mr. Harris might wish to take the Minister up on his offer for further information and elucidation about what he said. That was the absolute end of it.

I do not know whether the present Minister of Finance expects to look at changing the capital gains tax. I know there are Members on the other side who share my views. I trust that they will make these kinds of representation because, if the present situation continues and people are taxed on a capital gains for assets based on a 1971 valuation day, they should realize that in many cases their assets are simply confiscated because of inflation and they are punished for having been prudent investors.

There is another point I would like to make in the realm of general policy. That is the need to co-ordinate some of the efforts of the Minister of National Revenue with his Cabinet colleagues. Time and again I have been struck by the anomaly of someone trying to build up a family farm as a part-time farmer to the point where he or she can leave their present employment and become a full-time farmer, but then being frustrated by the rather harsh tactics of the field workers of National Revenue. On an arbitrary basis they disallow a lot of the farmers' deductions, and go back several years to do it.

On the other hand we have the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who is constantly espousing the welfare, as is his job, of the farm community in this country. He is making available money through the Farm Credit Corporation and encouraging in every way he can the welfare of farmers. While he is doing this, his Cabinet colleague is chopping down the efforts of those who are trying to achieve the status of full-time farmer. Those kinds of things are very anomalous.

Although it is slightly off the subject, let me point out that it would help to staunch the drain on our taxation revenues if we tied work-training programs to unemployment insurance payments so that people who are in this enforced period of idleness could at least benefit to some extent from the sustenance that they are getting in order to keep them in a decent position until work is available. It would help them to become more flexible and qualified. I do not see any real effort being made to do this.

There is also the question of the attitude of the Department of National Revenue. I want to pay tribute to the present Minister and his predecessor, the Hon. Member for Grand Fall-White Bay-Labrador, for being very open and available to me and listening to the suggestions I put forward. However, there are many instances, some in my own Province, where a Draconian approach has been taken by field workers and some of the officials. In that regard, and on a bi-partisan basis, I want to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) who, on March 26 of last year, moved the following motion:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of the Department of National Revenue assuming responsibility for the expenses incurred by a taxapayer whom the Department causes to be investigated, when such investigation by the Department's officials does not result in a suit or claim.

This is sometimes done in quasi-criminal and even criminal cases when an accused is acquitted.

Has my time elapsed, Mr. Speaker? Thank you, Sir.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I enter into this debate this afternoon with some misgivings, given the very serious economic plights of this country and the absolute and inappropriate actions of the Government of Canada. In talking at second reading of this income tax Bill, the basic statutory vehicle through which Government economic policy is implemented, we are in very serious difficulty with the directions of this Government and the principle it is developing. In indicating the direction taken in this particular legislation, the Income Tax Act, and the provisions within it, based on previous budgets by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), the Government missed completely the needs of the consumers in Canada. The individual Canadian is faced with problems of trying to maintain a home or a small business and living in this very negative environment.

• (1620)

There are five criteria, Mr. Speaker, which we should be looking at in this House of Commons which would assist people to move through this recessionary period, this worldwide recessionary period, with nowhere near the degree of harm which has occurred to date. Rather than simply considering the Income Tax Act in isolation, this particular piece of legislation should be put forward with a five-point program. First of all, we must have an industrial strategy. The impact of the Income Tax Act on shaping investment, shaping the redistribution of wealth in this country, and producing revenue for Government programs, is all for naught if there is not some idea of a plan, where we are going to go with that very fundamental instrument and how we are going to use it to shape the nature of industry in this country. It is an absolute waste of time to put a statutory vehicle like the Income Tax Act before us without some kind of an economic plan.

The second point is that we need an employment strategy based on full employment. The Government over there is quite content to see the abysmal levels of unemployment continue in this country. A million and a half Canadians are unemployed, and that figure is certainly underestimated when we are talking about unemployment figures in most of the communities which I represent, whether it is Courtney, Campbell River, Northern Vancouver Island, Powell River, or the sunshine coast in British Columbia. Those communities are experiencing unemployment at rates of above 30 per cent, and that is a sort of official level. The figures do not count people on social assistance or people who have given up looking for work and do not qualify for UIC or Social Assistance. Therefore, what we should be doing today is talk about an employment strategy, a commitment on the part of this Parliament nationally to ensure that every Canadian has a right to employment, the right to a job.

The third point this Income Tax Act should be coupled with is an investment strategy. This is a major vehicle which can shape the nature of investment in this country, which can bring fulfilment to an industrial strategy and employment strategy. It is a waste of time to sit here this afternoon producing a lot of hot air in discussing an Income Tax Act which is not coupled with a logical economic plan. An investment strategy, without a broadly based industrial strategy will result in an insane investment of available capital. In my own Province of British Columbia today, the Premier of that Province is trying to explain to 1,900 men and women who have lost their jobs in the coal mines of southeastern British Columbia why this has come about. The reason it has come about, Mr. Speaker, is that the Province of British Columbia, and Ron Basford, a former Member of the Cabinet in this federal Government, have no concept of an appropriate investment scheme for that Province. Southeast coal has an over-capacity to provide coal to the Japanese. We have northeast coal; billions of dollars are being sunk into a project which will just increase the over-capacity in coal. Then, in my own riding we are going to dig another open-pit mine to undercut the price of both those projects and sell more coal to the Japanese in a shrinking, softening Japanese energy market. That is a waste of scarce and valuable capital. That is an absolutely insane resource development policy for this federal Government and the provincial Government to adopt. Where are your heads? Pull them out of the sand. Let us get this country together.

The fourth point we need a national co-operation program in this country. To sit here and talk about an Income Tax Act in isolation is ridiculous. We need a national co-operation program instead of the national conflict program which has been promoted by this Government. We have gone on long enough driving wedges between business, labour and Government for political ends. We must resolved the problems which are faced by so many Canadians in this recession. It is time to stop fighting and start cooperating and working together.

The six and five program was designed by the Liberals to pit business and Government against labour to create a fight, to envelop the population in a national internecine war. It is the most destructive thing which I have seen in my term in Parliament and what is a most destructive feature is the attitude, the failure to develop a program, and counting on short-term political gains by turning the population of Canada against organized labour, against the Public Service, and trying to entrap the business community into that obscene alliance. This Income Tax Act which we are debating this afternoon is a farce. What we need is a sense of direction. Japan, West Germany and other countries in the world have established a sense of direction. Where are we going? We need a re-commitment to social programs in this country. Health, education and welfare are the fundamental programs which underpin this country. There is an erosion of our health care system where the elderly, the poor, are going to suffer with user-pay programs. Students can no longer afford to attend our universities because costs are skyrocketing and their jobs are disappearing. Faculty members, who have spent years trying to stay on the leading edge with proper training, proper equipment, proper class sizes, in order to train the engineers and professionals of the future, are being driven out of the universities. We must make investments in those social programs.

These five points are absolutely important to establishing a direction, and we can sit here until hell freezes over, but at some point we are going to have to take positive action. At some point we are going to have to sit together and develop those five basic principles of national reconstruction. Until that happens, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people will continue to suffer.

There are two statutory vehicles which this Government could immediately put into place. One of them is the Income Tax Act. It is here before us this afternoon. Just recently we have looked at figures on the poverty level, Mr. Speaker, and we have found that 20 per cent of the people in this country take 80 per cent of the income. The other 20 per cent of the people at the bottom take about 10 per cent of the total income. That is a national obscenity. But it can be corrected and, with any sense of fair play, it has to be. It should be done by this legislation, but that question is being ignored. The Income Tax Act could also establish an investment program in this country which usefully uses our pools of capital to develop a diversified industrial strategy, in the forest industry, in the mines and in the shipbuilding industry, so that Canadians could have jobs. Those jobs are sitting there waiting and we are doing absolutely nothing. That is an absolute obscenity.

A second legislative vehicle is the combines law which could structure the state of competition, and the nature of business. Part of the problem we face today is the result of that enormous glut of greed which went on in this country with corporate takeovers. Instead of investing in this country in appropriate technology and manufacturing, bringing us to the leading competitive edge of the world's market, we watched our major corporations swallow up other corporations trying to make a fast buck, cutting people out of work. We watched the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) spin his wheels, and the Government spin its wheels, by failing to bring forward an appropriate combines law which would structure the nature of our economy and would give small businesses a fair opportunity in the marketplace to compete with the large businesses, the Imperial Oils and the Royal Banks of this country.

With respect to the Bankruptcy Act, a third legislative vehicle we need in the short term to protect home owners and businessmen from the loss of their homes and business. The Income Tax Act is important, but if it stands alone, Mr. Speaker, we are spinning our wheels, we are producing nothing for Canadians. That Income Tax Act has to be coupled with a change in policy, and the five points which I outlined should be acted on now so we can make rational sense of this legislation before us today. Those five points should be coupled with at least three pieces of legislation which are already before this House, and certainly a program which would see a national employment strategy develop. Small businesses, Mr. Speaker, in many areas of this country have been hammered into the earth. We are looking at a situation today where the combined weight of Government, provincial and federal and municipal, are crushing them. We are talking about half of the small businesses in this country being driven into the ground by Government policy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret interrupting the Hon. Member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

• (1630)

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): In entering into this debate on Bill C-139, we have been reminded that on December 7, 1982, the Government finally brought in the income tax legislation necessary to implement the November, 1981 budget some 13 months later. There were 389 days needed to bring Bill C-139 forward, which is a mammoth 297 page document. In spite of the fact that there have been what the Government calls extensive consultations, this document continues to be an attack on individual Canadians and on investment. It is the same attack that was announced in the November budget. The Government says that it is listening and makes a great deal about the fact that it is consulting. But it has become very clear that it is not responding. I enter this debate to reflect the views of Kitchener and Waterloo and southwestern Ontario, including parts of Woolwich Township and Elmira, the Township of Wellesley, New Hamburg and Wilmot Townships. It is an area of industry, farm and small business. I find that there is in this area a definite sense of repudiation of the direction taken in the Income Tax Act.

What is seen as being needed today is the incentive for the farmer, the small-business person and those in larger businesses in order that they may keep operating. What we see happening, rather, and the reason that this Bill is so inappropriate at this time, is a resort to survival tactics. Our small businesses are trying desperately to hold on. If the Government were interested in recovery and job creation, it would listen to what the small business are saying.

One has to ask why such changes should be introduced at this time in the face of what is happening. Some will ask where the incentives are. They certainly are not available to those in the Waterloo regional area who are part of our soaring statistics.

The Kitchener-Waterloo Record of February 4, 1983, entitles its lead story, "Recessions Victims". It states:

> The unemployment rate in Waterloo region soared in January to the highest-ever recorded level—14.2 per cent—as 22,000 people were jobless out of an area work force of about 152,000, Statistics Canada said today.
> That's up from 10.8 per cent unemployment in December, when an estimated 16,000 were jobless in an area work force of 151,000.

The article continues:

> Locally, 15,402 people were registered in January at the Canada Employment Centre in Kitchener as unemployed and seeking work. At the end of December there were 14,157 registered.

This particular statistic is compounded by the fact that there is a lack of incentive in the tax system for our companies to continue. In the last few weeks, Leigh Instruments has announced that it intends to sell or close its Waterloo operation. At the same time, B. F. Goodrich is seeking to sell one of its divisions, the engineering products division. The combined potential loss of jobs in the next number of months may add another 800, plus the spin-off effects.

With the tax measures that we are asked to pass, come more penalties instead of incentives to create jobs in the workplace. As I look at Kitchener-Waterloo, and the Waterloo region which is home for a major part of Canada's insurance industry, I see that industry forced into a defensive position, especially in the life insurance capital dividend-accounts, as they affect estate planning.

I look at the farm community, and I see some of the finest farming area in southwestern Ontario. As a measure of the desperation that is a part of that community, and which shows the lack of faith it has in Government, we find the phenomenon of penny sales by the Farm Survival Association. On February 10, the Kitchener-Waterloo Record reported:

> About 300 militant farmers shouted down the appointed auctioneer, persuaded him to step aside and proceeded to auction off an estimated $100,000 worth of farm machinery for $19.80 near here Wednesday.
> After a $40,000 tractor sold for $2.20, a truck for $5.20 and a hay wagon for less than $1, the farmers ignored police warnings and cut through wire fences to make off with the machinery belonging to an area beef farmer.

The story went on to say that the low bidding, which is the latest tactic by the Association, was to aid strapped farmers who are unable to repay their bank loans.

What we have in the mood of the country at the moment is the danger of men and women pushed, in many cases to the limit, beginning to take the law into their own hands and the structure of our society beginning to break down. What we have in rural areas is not unfamiliar in the cities.

In recent weeks I have heard a number of comments about the style of operation of the officials of the Department of National Revenue. The question now is whether they are henchmen or whether they are public servants as they begin to try to feed a Government which is functionally bankrupt with more revenue, which is like taking blood out of a stone. The time has come to begin building some structure of trust and incentive for those who have been working and want to continue to work.

Let me say another word in the time I have remaining about what this defensive posture is doing in the whole area of charities and what is being forced on our charities. The November, 1981 budget would have required charitable foundations to include the full amount of capital gains and losses in computing income, subject to the disbursement requirements.

In April, the original proposal was replaced with a requirement that foundations annually distribute an amount at least equal to 4.5 per cent of the fair market value of all their investment assets. Included was a formula to minimize the adverse impact of fluctuations in asset values, that is, disbursement in a single year will be based upon an average value of foundations' assets in the previous two fiscal years. A penalty will be imposed if the requirement is not disbursed in the given year.

Consultations with charitable foundations are continuing. The draft legislation is still outstanding. The new rules governing disbursement requirements will only apply in taxation years commencing after 1983. This will be the subject of legislation that will be introduced at a later date.

The whole matter of Bill C-139 and these income tax changes pertain not only to a lack of incentives to business, farms and industry, but also to charitable foundations and to charitable agencies themselves. I have already been espousing in the House the case of the need for a task force to review the give and take tax proposals which have been set forth by the national voluntary agencies. We are now set in the ridiculous context of Quebec-based charitable organizations being actually taken to court by National Revenue because they are pressing the Government to implement give and take tax reforms.

In all of these areas there is a need for incentives. Instead, we are faced in this House with a Bill that brings disincentive and disruption.

• (1640)

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, this Bill is an attack on Canadians, particularly those in the middle income sector. It has been introduced by a desperate Government—a Government without heart, a Government without conscience. The Government has reached the point that it needs to impose more taxes on Canadians primarily because, due to its own mismanagement, it does not have the wealth it needs in order to govern. Fairly or unfairly, Canadians must pay to maintain the burden of over-Government which is now in place.

The Government must be blamed for its lack of vision of what would happen in the OPEC situation. Like other nations, we are dependent on oil to pull us through this period. With Brazil, Venezuela and Mexico, we are over-dependent on the high price of OPEC oil and now, with the effect of the failing price of that oil on general revenues, the Government has had to revert to a heartless attack on the Canadian farmer, those who set aside money for their retirement, on women and on the whole future of the country. This is an attack on those people by the Government which should be protecting them. It did not have the foresight to look beyond the income it was planning to receive through its most recent energy agreement. It believed it was going to receive millions of dollars because OPEC prices would rise to $60 per barrel. Now that the price has fallen, the Government is short of money.

This country should not be dependent on one industry. We are one of the most blessed nations in the world. Not only do we have oil, we also have one-third of the world's fresh water and mineral wealth not equalled by any other nation, a forestry capacity that would be the envy of many—we want nothing, Mr. Speaker. We have every resource, including the enormous talent of the men and women of the country.

If we had practised business principles as the Japanese and Germans did we would be the wealthiest nation in the world today. Just a decade ago this country ranked second amongst the leading nations of the world; today it ranks twentieth. That has happened because the Government is taking an increasingly large portion of the Gross National Product for its own expenses and is spending less and less on incentives for the private sector.

It is a generally accepted principle that the private sector creates wealth in society. It is the engine which creates growth in the economy. The public sector redistributes the wealth to make sure it is shared equitably.

Fifteen years ago it took 27 per cent of the Gross National Product to run Government, but today it takes 42 per cent. Let me show how dangerously close we are to a totally negative position, Mr. Speaker.

If the private sector is the engine for the creation of wealth, then any time a Government tries to distribute more wealth than it creates, say 50 per cent plus one penny, it is heading in a negative direction. Today, it takes 42 per cent of the total wealth of the country to run the Government. That is necessary because of the Government's mismanagement and ill-founded projections.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) was in charge of energy he put an energy program in place. But he knew nothing about energy, Mr. Speaker. He believed that the OPEC price would keep going up, with no end. That was the whole basis of the arrangement. But OPEC collapsed and so did the Minister—so badly that they put him in charge of another Department.

That dependence on one industry in a country where many industries should flourish, has caused this desperate Government, without conscience, to attack the people in the middle income sector in their retirement years. It is taking away from them income that they earned throughout a lifetime. It is a desperate snatch at nickels and dimes. In the process they are taking away the incentive that would cause the country to grow.

We are coming dangerously close to the position of the Mexicos, the Venezuelas and the Brazils of the world. For different reasons those countries are vulnerable because they depend on one industry. Mexico had some agricultural resource, a beef industry, some leather manufacturing and fruit production, but primarily its strength was based on petrodollars. That was even more the case with Venezuela. Brazil is an interesting contrast with Canada because it had a broader industrial base. But it made all its projections on the basis of petrodollars. Brazil is more heavily populated than Canada, and today it is on the verge of bankruptcy with a debt of $80 billion. With a population of only 24 million, this country has an accumulated debt of $140 billion.

The only reason that this country is sustained to some extent is that our forests are so large, our mineral wealth is so great, our fresh and salt water fisheries are so extensive. Otherwise, today we would be in the position of Mexico, Venezuela or Brazil.

It is because the Government believes that the price of oil would go up forever that this Bill, that attacks the farmers and retired people, is before us today. Before we pass legislation like this, the Government should do an enormous housecleaning.

Although the amount may be small in terms of total expenditures, we have to ask for the justification of the $800 per day for Donald Macdonald, the justification of the coal project connected with Alastair Gillespie who stands to make $750,000 on the basis of a $25,000 investment, for putting Michael Pitfield into the Senate or making sure that a former Minister of the Crown, Judd Buchanan, is able to establish a housing project in a national park in Banff. No other person could put such a construction unit in there because the area was not designated for that kind of housing. There are many other examples, Mr. Speaker.

Day after day the Government continues to waste money on inefficiencies and on large bureaucracies. There are Departments employing 2,000 people. We must ask why we need tax measures such as those before us if the Government cannot show that it is making every effort to restrain spending.

• (1650)

On the one hand we have no constraint being shown. There is no reason for the Liberals to believe that they need to hold back their spending, no reason for them not to pad the incomes of their friends, but they attack the retired people of the country, they attack farmers and small-businessmen! Small-business persons, according to this Bill, are greatly damaged by the fact that they cannot set aside moneys to invest for their future. In short, we have a Government which has caused an ill economy. It is treating it with an eyedropper. Somehow it believes that tremendous expenditures will bring about a recovery or that somehow its band-aid proposals or make-work programs are the answer. Painting the hall is not satisfactory for the creation of employment in the country. We need the private sector to be operating again for wealth to be generated in the country. On the basis of initiative—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I wonder whether the Hon. Member would like to seek the unanimous consent of the House to continue his remarks or whether I should recognize the next speaker, because the time allotted to the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) has now expired.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of other Hon. Members of the House, I will not take much longer. I will just take a moment or two—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. If the Hon. Member for Crowfoot wants to take any longer at all, I must tell him that in accordance with the rules he should seek the unanimous consent of the House. I will recognize the Hon. Member for that purpose only, that is, the purpose of seeking unanimous consent to continue his remarks.

Mr. Malone: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for clarifying that. I seek such consent and I trust you will find it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to continue his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is no unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying that an infinite number of monkeys using an infinite number of typewriters would eventually type all the great works. I think they completed their first one. It is called the Canadian Income Tax Act. Believe me, it keeps getting worse. The Bill we are discussing today, Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, does nothing to change this situation.

Mr. Bosley: It will take more bananas.

Mr. Fretz: That is right. We in Canada are subject to an income tax system which is based in the first instance on self-assessment. This means that it is up to us as individuals to determine how much income tax we owe and when and how it must be paid. It is not like sales tax where the rate is applied to a fixed amount, such as the price of goods, and included on an invoice, a cash register tape or a restaurant slip. Nor is income tax like property taxes, which local Governments calculate for us and on which they then send bills telling us how much we owe. No, when it comes to income tax, as I said, our system is such that the responsibility rests with us to determine how much we owe and when and how it must be paid.

Second, for decades it has been a well-established rule of jurisprudence that income tax laws be written in clear, unmistakable language. This is so because it is a self-assessing system. The most quoted statement by a court in this respect indicates:

It is not enough to attain a degree of precision which a person reading in good faith can understand, but it is necessary to attain, if possible, a degree of precision which a person reading in bad faith cannot misunderstand. It is all the better if he cannot pretend to misunderstand it.

Third, the cost of obtaining professional help in the preparation of a tax return for the vast majority of Canadians is not deductible for income tax purposes. To be able to deduct the cost of getting one's tax return prepared, one either has to have business income or a substantial volume of investment income. Thus, the very people who most need help—that is the wage earner or the taxpayer, with perhaps one T5 for interest or a bit of dividend income—cannot get a deduction.

All right, we have established the context. It is a fundamental principle of tax law that taxpayers should be able to understand the Act. Under Canadian law it is our responsibility to figure out correctly how much tax we owe and when and how it is to be paid. For most Canadian taxpayers, the cost of getting help with their tax returns is not deductible for tax purposes. Yes, the Income Tax Act is an unmitigated mess. The reason I say this is that it is incomprehensible. Yet every taxpayer in the country is required by law to understand it; if we do not, the cost of obtaining help is probably not deductible; if we make mistakes on our returns, we may end up paying interest and penalties.

The entire Income Tax Act was revamped back in 1972. That is really not long ago, and that so-called reform of the Act was supposed to give us a well-thought-out, simpler tax system. Since 1972 there have been more than 30 major amending Acts. There were 350 changes in 1980-81 alone. Two months ago, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) introduced the latest amending Act. It contained 133 amendments, most of which are incomprehensible.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Like the Minister.

Mr. Fretz: Yes, like the Minister. Bill C-139 is such a confusing document that neither I nor most other Hon. Members even know where to start in attempting to give it a fair appraisal.

It is not only desirable but absolutely imperative that taxpaying citizens of the country be able to communicate with their elected Government in terms that they both can understand. Is it unreasonable to expect that?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fretz: No, not at all, yet here we have a massive contraption of some 295 pages which reflects no less than four budgets, near budgets, mini budgets, non-budgets and what have you. This does not count the number of minor statements, adjustments, changes, modifications and just plain retreats that this monstrosity reflects. In turn, it proposes amendments to a taxation system which nearly defied logical explanation at its inception. The inevitable result of all this is that the poor individual taxpayer is so totally helpless and at sea when confronted by a taxation problem that he cannot deal with it without professional help. I believe this is wrong in principle.

Bill C-139 is also harmful to insurance companies. There remains a clear disincentive for individuals to invest in life insurance, what has been until now the main investment vehicle for the less advantaged among the Canadian population. In other words, now people might just say, "What is the use of saving money, we might as well squander it, we won't worry about it, let the state take care of us when we reach age 65".

This disincentive takes two forms. First, policyholders are to be taxed on accrued income from their policies or deferred annuities. To tax a person on hypothetical income which he or she has not received is, in every case, to force a hardship on the investor. Investors must either scrimp and save from their current incomes to pay the tax or they must liquidate some of their investments to do so. In either case, there is created a strong disincentive to invest, and that is a likelihood that one more family and one more elderly couple will be dependent on the state when they reach the end of their working and earning lives.

• (1700)

There are many deficiencies in the new amendments to the Income Tax Act. Not only are there sections detrimental to the life insurance companies and to the people who hold policies, but businessmen who drive company cars are now being fingered for victimization at the hands of Revenue Canada. The Government is not taxing the folks in limousines. It is taxing the hard working, marathon-driving salesmen whom you find in Holiday Inns across the country in the late evening after a day spent selling their products. They are the people who keep this economy moving. We need these people. We are treating their company vehicles almost as a form of personal income and taking away what for many was one of the few tangible and enjoyable fringe benefits of their jobs.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The transition is very expensive, too.

Mr. Fretz: What about the hardworking waitresses and waiters? Under the new terms of the Income Tax Act, they are being treated almost as common criminals. Their miserable incomes are being scrutinized with a magnifying glass.

An Hon. Member: A typical socialist ploy.

Mr. Fretz: At the same time, the Government is going to pay Mr. Macdonald how much a day?

Some Hon. Members: Eight hundred dollars a day.

Mr. Fretz: Again, how much?

Some Hon. Members: Eight hundred dollars a day.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Darling: And $125 a day for expenses.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Macdonald is receiving $800 a day for activities of questionable benefit to the country. These waiters and waitresses are honest people. They are hard working. They scrimp and save, and they serve you and me in restaurants across this great country. I am proud of them.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They are the salt of the earth.

Mr. Fretz: I submit that in carrying on this way against the little people of this nation, the Government is giving birth to unparalleled resentment, and it will be to their own detriment.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, my Party has no argument with the spirit of tax reform. We say, bring it on. However, only when that reform includes the closing of loopholes for the rich and influential and the simplifying of the tax return for the average citizen will the Government receive our full and uncompromising support.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I wish to inform the House, or rather confirm, that tomorrow, Bill C-143 will be on the agenda.

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I must say I do not take a great deal of pleasure in speaking to this Bill this afternoon, particularly when it is a Bill designed to gouge the taxpayers of this nation of additional millions and millions of dollars. It seems a bit of a paradox this afternoon that we should be called upon as a Party to defend the rights of Canadians to be represented in this Parliament on the heels of a Bill that I now understand has been introduced by the Government to request an additional borrowing authority of $19 billion, which will be debated in due course.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is a shameful Bill.

Mr. Corbett: There is no question that this Bill will hit people who can ill afford to continue to support the wanton whims and ways of the Government that seems to be afflicted with some sort of desire to create a classless society. There will be no initiative left for anybody to take to work in a system that is responsible for the great country we have today. I am referring, of course, to the free enterprise system. This Government seems determined to wipe out all incentive for people to work and to contribute to society. It is a Government that seems determined to lead us down the path of socialism, a path fraught with great danger and one that holds very little benefit for the people of Canada or any encouragement for them to support the continuance of the group opposite.

I want to talk about the burdens this Bill will impose on people, particularly the middle and low-income people of this country who will derive very little or no benefit from the lower taxes that it will create for them. The middle and low-income people will lose proportionately from partial deindexation. There is nothing left for these people in the country but a great amount of despair. This program is being implemented by a Government that is panicking in taking steps to gain revenue. The Bill introduced in the House which requires an additional $19 billion in borrowing authority is reflective of the sort of desperation which this Government is experiencing. This Government is penalizing those Canadians who continue to remain in the work force, either through diligence or through good fortune, to support their families.

We have dealt in the House before with the plight of life insurance holders. Those people are still being penalized. The language in Bill C-139 is so difficult as to be incomprehensible. It creates hardship to people. Those people who hold insurance policies and the companies that issue them are still terribly upset with the attitude of this Government and its absolute determination to penalize policy holders.

There is a particular class of people with whom I want to deal. They are the ones who are being hit hard. They include people of retirement age and people who have worked for years contributing to pension plans and now find themselves unable, because they are relatively few in number, to deal with the magnitude and the enormity of the burdens this Government is placing on them.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is another attack on senior citizens.

Mr. Corbett: It is a desperate state when the attack of the Government has to be directed primarily at low-income earners, middle-income earners and those who are least able to protect themselves, namely those people who are about to go on pension or have recently gone on pension.

This is a sad reflection on the direction the country is taking. I suspect that if Members on the other side of the House were truthful they would admit that their offices have been flooded in recent months, as has mine and those of most Members on this side of the House, by people finding themselves in trouble with the income tax people and who have found it more difficult to deal with this bureaucracy over the years, and over the past months in particular. These people are receiving little or no satisfaction. It is the mentality of this Government and of the Department of National Revenue that in their eyes a person is guilty until that person is able to prove his or her innocence. That is completely contrary to the foundations or democracy laid down by our forefathers when this great country of ours, Canada, was set into motion some number of years ago.

I want to refer, as an example, to the sort of frustrations my constituents in Fundy-Royal are facing. They are basically hard working, conscientious people who, over the years, have developed, and substantially contributed to, the foundation of free enterprise and to the development of the country in no small way. Let me read a short paragraph from a piece of correspondence I received not too long ago which I think sums up very nicely the frustrations of these people. It states:

—my visions of a democracy have been greatly shattered and today I see just a hair's difference between a democracy and that of a totalitarian, socialistic Government. It appears that those individual rights of a citizen under the Charter of Rights is all a hoax and very hypocritical. It again appears that the time wasted for the constitution was merely a diversion from the real economic problems of the country with its energy and trading problems.

Your Honour will recall that at that time a good number of us who sat on this side of the House said just exactly that, that it was indeed a diversion from the economic problems. Now we know, months later, that a budget deficit which was initially forecast as being $9.8 billion was escalated to some $19 billion and went from there to $22 billion. If one checks the record, it will be found that we suggested the Minister of Finance at the time resign if it rose $3 billion over the $22 billion. Now we are told that it will be $27 billion.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Will it ever end?

An Hon. Member: Twenty-seven billion plus.

Mr. Corbett: I am sorry, $27 billion plus. That is a sorry tale to be told. I suggest that the Government must take several proposals under advisement, one of them concerning educational benefits. The Government should release the students of this nation from that doctrine which seems to be "keep 'em down on the farm". It is deplorable that if one earns $40,000 a year and is attempting to send three children through college at $4,000 a year, by the time one ends up paying taxes, one probably ends up with an income of $8,000 with which to run the household and put food on the table. Of that $8,000, probably another $3,000 will be spent on federal and provincial sales taxes.

I will suggest to the Government that it place a moratorium on the Income Tax Act changes for a period of two years in order to build up some confidence in the business community of this nation, particularly the small business community that, as we all realize and understand, is the least able to defend itself but which provides the bulk of the job.

Let us put this country back on the road. Let us create an income tax system which can be defined in layman's terms so that even the tax people, the accountants who deal with tax reform, are able to understand it. That is not the case today.

I wish the people of this nation were fully aware of the fact that the frustrations we are experiencing have been caused solely at the hands of those people opposite who refuse to recognize the plight of the low and middle income people, the pensioners, those who are least able to defend themselves. I can only say that unless there is a distinctive change in the attitudes of those who are directing the course of the nation, God help us.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with Bill C-139, which is an Act to amend the statute law relating to Income Tax, I would like to point out something which was just brought to my attention today and which I feel is rather important. An article appearing in the Ottawa Citizen stated:

Businessmen who purchase gas by the gallon at a new anti-metric service station being opened Tuesday by a group of Conservative MPs can kiss their fuel tax rebates goodbye unless they convert their purchases to litres.

Anyone who uses a car for business is entitled to claim an excise tax rebate of 1.5 cents per litre—but apparently nothing per gallon.

"If you send us a rebate request in gallons, we'll just send it right back and ask you to correct it to litres", an official in the government's excise tax branch said Friday.

"It's illegal to sell gas by the gallon, so there's no way we are going to give rebates on anything but litres."

Consumers who buy their gas in gallons will have to convert their bills to litres to qualify for the rebates.

That is a lot of hogwash. Canada has been selling gasoline by the gallon in Provinces from British Columbia to Prince Edward Island since Canada became a nation. There is nothing illegal in Canada—yes, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I thank the Hon. Member for realizing that I am concerned. The issue, obviously, concerns the relevance. It is always an extremely difficult subject, particularly for the Chair, but perhaps the Hon. Member could relate his remarks to the subject matter of Bill C-139 from time to time. That would make it easier for the Chair.

Mr. Domm: For the benefit of the Speaker, Members of the Government and Hon. Members on this side of the House, I refer to Bill C-139 at page 65a which states, "This amendment would convert the measurement of area from imperial to metric."

Some Hon. Members: Aha!

Mr. Domm: It states:

"—effective after 1981, the measurements referred to in the Act be converted into their metric equivalents."

With all due respect, my remarks are relevant to the Act. I am discussing the costs to the small businessman in the conversion of his land, his gas, his expenses in the running of his business, so that he can make a profit and pay some of that profit to the Government, so that he can continue on with his operations.

Since the Speaker has dealt with the isue of mandatory conversion to metric, I will draw to the attention of the House an invoice from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, which I have in my hands, which became a tax item in the hands of the retailer who received the invoice. The retailer was Len Welch's Food Market Limited of 52 Hunter Street East, Peterborough, Ontario. The invoice was dated October 20, 1982 and stated that Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada wished to bill the dealer for a breakdown of fees involving one hour of inspection time and one and a half hours of travel time, for a total of two and a half hours at $20 per hour, amounting to $50, plus a distance of 78 miles at 22 cents per mile.

An Hon. Member: How many kilometres is that?

Mr. Domm: My question is, if it is not legal for a retail businessman to submit his expenses to the Government in imperial, that is, the price per gallon, why is it legal for the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, which is responsible for the Metric Commission, to bill retail establishments across the country in so many cents per mile for so many gallons of gasoline?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Domm: I draw the attention of Hon. Members opposite to the fact that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is responsible for the Metric Commission which has stated that it is mandatory to use metric measurements while it is invoicing businessmen in imperial measurements, right across the country. Why is Canada Post, which is also under the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, dispensing gasoline by the gallon at the main branch in Toronto, and why is the Armed Services base, under the Department of National Defence, dispensing its fuel to their required users in gallons? Why is Canada Post using imperial weigh scales to weigh parcels before they are shipped from post offices in Ontario.

• (1720)

I realize that I have only 10 minutes and I have only made one point, but I think I made it. I would like to deal with a few other points, and these are some of the reasons why we in the Opposition have been spending a considerable amount of time fighting over one budget or another or one tax Bill or another since some three budgets ago.

I would like to put in my concluding remarks some of the things that we in Opposition have won on behalf of the people of Canada in our fight against unfair, prejudiced tax levies against the business community of this nation. I am going to list them.

First, the Government, because of the Opposition, will not tax employee health and dental benefits.

Second, the implementation of the shift in the manufacturers' sales tax to the wholesale level is delayed until 1984. It is only delayed, but it is delayed because we have consistently fought on that point of the necessity to reconsider that retrogressive measure.

Third, professionals such as doctors, dentists, lawyers, accountants and veterinarians, who are all eligible for the small business tax rate and those who would be ineligible if they were incorporated, will not be affected by the new tax treatment of work in process.

Fourth, the small business dividend distribution tax will only apply to dividends paid out of income earned in the taxation year, starting after the end of 1982, instead of being levied on dividends paid out after November 12, 1982.

Fifth, tax exemption for housing and travel benefits of employees in northern Canada will be extended one more year, and a modified system of taxing these benefits will be phased in over a four-year period, beginning January 1, 1984.

Sixth, the pre-budget rules on the tax treatment of capital gains in corporate re-organizations will continue to apply after the end of 1982. Any new proposals resulting from a current study by independent tax experts and subsequent consultations on a planned draft document will not apply to re-organizations that are substantially advanced from the date of the new proposal.

Seventh, the proposal to require that the interest on money borrowed to earn investment income only be deducted against investment income has been now withdrawn. However, interest on money borrowed to buy RRSP's or contribute to PDSP's or a pension plan may not be deducted as was proposed last November.

Eighth, there has been a reduction in the proposed automobile standby tax from 2.5 per cent to 2 per cent. The old rate was 1 per cent. That is one of the reasons we have been debating this for so long, it is not where it should be yet.

Ninth there are, modifications to the proposal relating to forward averaging for athletes and artists.

Finally, significant changes have been made to the November, 1981 proposal concerning periodic taxation of life insurance. Policies purchased before December 2, 1982, are not affected by Bill C-139.

I say to this House that there is no easy way to pass anything today brought in by a Government that has lost its credibility. It has shown its ineptness in balancing its own budget. Whether one is a businessman, a farmer, a homeowner, a housewife or whatever, if one cannot run the Government of Canada, one cannot run one's own home. The responsibilities of Members of Parliament are to live within the framework of the money that is available, at their disposal. If the Government cannot generate through its policies the necessary income, then it behooves this Government to show responsibility to curtail some of its budgeting expenses. One of those expenses that I am happy to announce has been cut down and on which this Government has finally seen the light, is that of the Metric Commission. They have told the Metric Commission of Canada that they have walked their last kilometer. Starting the end of this month, sectors in the Metric Commission will be phased out, and by the end of 1984 we will save an annual budget of $26 million by the abolition of the Metric Commission. Following the course of Mrs. Thatcher in Britain and Ronald Reagan in the United States, we are now going to see the end of the Metric Commission in Canada. When we revert to voluntary in metric we will save the business community dollars, we will save this Government dollars and we will be more credible in the eyes of the people of this nation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before I recognize the next Hon. Member, it seems to me that the Chair owes at the very least a compliment to the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm). I have a vague feeling that I walked into a very well prepared process, but if I am vague about that I am very clear that the process was very well prepared and I admire it and I accept that the point of the Hon. Member was quite relevant.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with Bill C-139 from the perspective of a whole industry which was confused because of the tax structure in this country, an industry in which tremendous difficulty was created amongst fishermen and their families as a result of a confusing income tax law. This law caused untold difficulty in the fishing industry, particularly in the area of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island as well as Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia.

The Bill we have today does nothing very much to clarify the situation for fishermen, but it does show a reversal of policies that were introduced in the November, 1981 budget. This action was taken by the Government in order, I think, to some extent to compensate for an audit of fishermen and the hardship that audit brought on, an audit which was done on both coasts, and went back many years over fishermen's income and which assessed fishermen a tremendous amount in income tax. A net of $30 million was assessed on an industry which was under some severe financial difficulties for a number of reasons: reduction in the quota, the amount available to fishermen; increases in the cost of energy and increases in the cost of interest to finance those industries. As a result, fishermen were faced with bills up to $500,000 in some cases but more often, I think, in the range of $1,200, $1,300, $1,500 and $2,000. That kind of income tax audit and the harassment from Revenue Canada in trying to collect brought hardship on families and concern from law-abiding citizens who were confused about the income tax laws, felt that they had filled in their income tax forms for a number of years well, they had received their payments from the Income Tax Department and had had no complaints for several years about how they were filling out their income tax forms. All of a sudden, during an audit, the income tax officials decided that these people had not been filling out their income tax properly, that their receipts were not adequate to qualify for the deductions they had made and, as a result, we had garnishees of up to 50 per cent of the income of those fishermen for the 1981 fishing season.

The answer to that and the answer to the number of representations from fishermen's groups about the audit and the way that the audit was being carried out was a proposed change in the Income Tax Act in the November, 1981 budget. Until then fishermen were able to pay two-thirds of their estimated income tax at the end of December and make up the difference at the end of the tax year. The Government felt that led the fishermen into some difficulties and suggested there should be a remission at source. Every time a fisherman sold fish to the processors, that income tax was to be paid.

The Government did not understand the sensitivity in the fishing industry, the requirement of fishermen to finance their operation during the fishing season. It did not understand that the fishermen had to use that source of income in the early part of the season to finance the purchase of gear, gasoline and meet other expenses.

Fortunately, fishermen were organized to some extent. There were petitions and letters from the Maritime Fishermens' Union of Prince Edward Island, the Fundy North Fishermen's Association, the United Maritime Fishermen's Co-op, the Eastern Federation of Fishermen, the Newfoundland Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union and the union in British Columbia. All made representations through the New Democratic Party and through petitions in the House objecting to the remission of income tax.

At one time the Minister of National Revenue was determined that it was the industry which proposed this change to the Income Tax Act. Their intervention was able to turn that around to the point where the Minister said that the remission of income tax at source could be voluntary. In the June, 1982 budget, it was indicated that that would be the provision in the Income Tax Act at that point. In the provision in this mass of documents before us, they no longer have the option of giving income tax at source. We are back to the status quo. What about the millions of Canadians who are not in the fortunate position of having a union or association to represent them? What about the millions who have to face the Income Tax Act on their own? They are faced with this cumbersome law which should have been reformed and simplified years ago. Instead, we are complicating it for these people.

There are accountants in my constituency who do not understand where we are going with the Income Tax Act, yet the fishermen, farmers and workers are expected to interpret this when working out their payable income tax. It is an impossibility. It just cannot be done.

Without the help of organizations, the average citizen is helpless to deal with this Government and the kind of legislation it imposes on Canadians. The sooner the Government realizes that income tax laws should benefit the citizen and not the lawyers, accountants and Government, the sooner we will have meaningful income tax reform. It should not be in a way which, as this Bill does, benefits the more wealthy in society. We should recognize the contribution of middle and low-income Canadians to the income of Government and the social programs which that income provides. Individual workers should be given credit for their work and they should receive some benefit from the Income Tax Act. They should at least have the opportunity to understand what they are supposed to be doing in terms of filing their income tax returns. Do not put them in the position in which fishermen were put in 1982 when they had to pay thousands of dollars in revenue to the Government after having believed they filed their income tax returns in a lawful manner.

This Bill is too complex for the average Canadian. As many Members of Parliament have said, it is too complex for them. Obviously it is too complex for those on the Government side.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, many of my colleagues on this side have already placed on the record the utter contempt of the Official Opposition toward Bill C-139. It is my intention during the next few minutes to highlight a couple of the points made by my colleagues, especially those who were Members of the Progressive Conservative task force on the budget that came down in November, 1981 and on which this Bill is largely based. I would also like to express a couple of my own thoughts and those of my constituents on this Bill.

At the outset, let me express my concern and a feeling bordering on disgust at the way this Liberal Government is proceeding with Bill C-139. In November 1981, the Government introduced one of the most complex, massive and comprehensive documents in income tax history. How complex is it? When my colleague, the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm), dealt specifically a few moments ago with metric, he was brought to order. Even such an intelligent occupant of the Chair as yourself, Mr. Speaker, did not know that in the amendments to the Income Tax Act there is a complete section which deals with metric conversion.

How complex is it? This was dealt with by the President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario, J. Lyman MacInnis. I understand this has been quoted during the debate by my colleagues. He gave an amusing and fascinating speech entitled "Cleaning Up Our Act (The Income Tax Act, That Is)". This senior partner of Touche, Ross and Company of Toronto had his audience on the floor when he got to an item which affects millions of taxpayers at all levels of income-earning capacity and wealth, capital gains. I wish to quote him very briefly. Here is how he defined capital gains under the Income Tax Act:

> There are three sections of the Act listed under the heading of "Capital Gains" . . . Let's assume you are a logical person, so you start with the first section listed there. It is Section 39. When you find Section 39, you will also find that the fun is just beginning. Section 39 begins with a sentence that has 774 words, 28 commas and two semi-colons. Lincoln's entire Gettysburg address had only 267 words in it.
> Section 39 has seven subsections. It refers you to ten other sections of the Act, which in turn refer you to another 40 sections. Section 39 also refers to a completely different law called "The Cultural Property Export and Import Act". And, I'll bet you all have a copy of that sitting on your coffee table!
> So here we are. In trying to find out what a capital gain is we've already had to look at about 50 different sections of the Income Tax Act, and another completely different law. And, if you get that far, the reality then hits you that Section 39 only dealt with the word "Capital". To get a definition of the word "Gain' you have to look at Section 40. I'll spare us all that agony because Section 40 makes Section 39 look easy.

In my view it would be irresponsible and a disservice to Canadians to railroad Bill C-139 through all stages of debate. This complex Bill is far too long. Its implications go far too deeply for Canadians in all walks of life. It deserves full parliamentary scrutiny.

During the summer, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs examined a draft version of Bill C-139. However, the draft Bill was incomplete and there had to be several changes. Even the Government admits the weakness of the Bill because of the number of changes it brought in insubsequent budgets and budgetary statements. Several of my colleagues have pointed out a couple of the serious weaknesses that the Government should be realizing and which this Parliament should be dealing with.

• (1740)

In the length of time, Mr. Speaker, that this Parliament has been called upon to deal with this huge Bill arising out of the November, 1981, budget, in human terms, over 500,000 people have lost their jobs and some 50,000 bankruptcies have been declared during this period. To put that into perspective, that means more than 500,000 jobs lost, a figure which is just about equal to the entire population of Hamilton, or Quebec City, or Calgary, or Winnipeg, or Edmonton. It is an incredible figure, Mr. Speaker, and it is something which indicates the deep concern Canadians have about the way the Government is running the country, and the very real concern which we in this Party have heard expressed by millions of Canadians as we travel across the country, and by letters coming into all of our offices.

This concern indicates that this approach to tax reform is wrong. It is dead wrong. Bill C-139 is hitting the lower and middle class income groups in so many different ways that it is going to take Canadians a long time to realize just how serious the impact will be as a result of this Bill.

The hardest hit, of course, will be the lower and middle income Canadians who will gain little or nothing from the lowering of marginal tax rates and who will lose proportionately more from partial de-indexation. The increased taxation of employee benefits will hit hardest at those in the lower and middle income brackets. It will encourage employees to seek higher wage settlements at a time when moderation is required. The taxation of housing loans will make it harder to recruit employees who must relocate. For those who already have loans, the taxation of this benefit may represent a rude shock which was not anticipated when an employee accepted a housing loan as part of his relocation package.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), pointed out, the retirement nestegg is created by paying off the family farm. This is why farmers in my riding, farmers all over the country, but particularly the small farmers who I am familiar with in southern and southwestern Ontario, are hit very hard by Bill C-139. The Liberal Party and its bureaucrats simply do not understand that the family farm is the Canadian farmer's pension plan.

All of our constituents work hard on a day-to-day basis to put something aside for retirement. And as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North has reported during this debate, that retirement nestegg is created by paying off the family farm. What the farmer does is sell the farm and take back a mortgage. Before the Government changed the rules, a farmer could sell his farm and invest the capital gain portion in an income averaging annuity. That allowed him to plan for retirement. He could calculate his chances for surviving, and for how long, and invest the money and get an annuity. The Liberals have changed all that, and they do not care. They do not have any idea of what is happening out there. They have no idea whatsoever what is happening, particularly to farmers in Canada who now face an even greater uncertainty if the provisions of Bill C-139 go through.

The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) touched on much the same plight which is hitting the farmers. He put on record how the income tax legislation relates to the farmers in Manitoba, and the same applies to farmers in Hamilton-Wentworth. Every Hon. Member who represents a rural riding has been noting the number of people who come to our offices to complain about the tax system and the manner in which the tax Department is treating individual taxpayers. There is an increasing number of representations being made to our offices, Mr. Speaker, about what constitutes a hobby farm and how the income tax Department is going to be able to treat those people who own hobby farms equitably. This legislation does not speak to this at all, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, I would like to read into the record one letter which came from a constituent in Hannon, in my area:

Dear Sir,

I am writing to you about the college tuition fee income tax deduction, as of now only the student can claim this deduction. Now it seems to me that if the student has no income whatsoever, as in my son's case, as he cannot get a job, this means that the parents are paying the tuition fees, so why can't the head of the household claim these fees as a deduction.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that there are many millions of Canadians out there whose individual situations will be drastically affected by Bill C-139, if it goes through as the Government is now proposing to ram it through. We, on this side, find that approach unacceptable and we are going to bat for those millions of Canadians who are concerned about what is happening to them in an income tax sense with unfair taxation, even if the Government side will not.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I was addressing a large gathering of secretaries and administrative assistants from across the country. During the course of my remarks, I happened to mentioned that I would be returning to Ottawa to take part in the debate on the amendments to the Income Tax Act later today. I can tell you, sir, that a groan went up from that audience, not because I said I was going to go back to Ottawa to take part in this debate, but because the very mention of the Income Tax Act, and further amendments to it, brought a groan from them, as it is bringing a groan from Canadians from one coast to the other.

What those women said to me when I mentioned this, sir, was, "Is there anybody in Ottawa who can write anything at all about the income tax in straightforward, direct terms which we can understand?" They told me that what the Government is sending to them is totally incomprehensible. And these are women who work in offices, who transact business, who do detailed studies of various financial matter every day. But what they are receiving, and what their offices are receiving, with regard to income tax is totally incomprehensible to them.

It is increasingly incomprehensible, not only to Hon. Members of Parliament, but to the general public, just how the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) is ordering the business of this House. I would say to him that this tax Bill, this huge Bill we now have before us, is the best example I know of, of the Government's incomprehensible and, indeed, I would say, inscrutable way of processing legislation through this House. What we have is a document 300 pages long with 134 different tax changes. That is almost impossible to digest, whether you happen to try it mentally or physically. Many of the measures contained in it need detailed study and analysis just to see what their impact is going to be on average Canadians. This is a big document, it is a hefty document, and I sometimes wonder if the Government is not trying to calculate the worth of this document by its weight.

Quite seriously, this Bill emerges from what I would consider the incomprehensible fiscal policy of this Government stretching back over many months, indeed, years. We had that well-remembered budget in November, 1981. No Canadian will forget that budget the former Minister of Finance (Mr. MacEachen) brought down. No one will ever forget the way it was put forward, the way it was countermanded, changed, corrected, and parts withdrawn. The only tragedy is that it was not all withdrawn.

• (1750)

Before the measures in that particular budget were passed through the House, another budget was introduced, in June of last year. That budget contained even more complex measures. In October of last year we saw an economic statement which also introduced new measures. Just the other day, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) came before the House with his latest projections, saying he wanted authority from the House to borrow an additional $19 billion. That is not $19 million, something which we might have found comprehensible, but an additional $19 billion. Of course, none of the projections he gave us for the deficit, unemployment or inflation had any relation to the economic statement of October, 1982 or the November or June budgets. In each case, the projections for the deficit have escalated. The projections continue to soar with every passing month.

What is worse, the financial picture of Canada is in a total state of confusion. Is it any wonder, given that confusion and financial mess, that the Government wants to push this Bill through with the least possible scrutiny? That is what is happening right now. The Government is telling the House and the general public that it wants to get this Bill through, regardless of the fact that the impact of many of its changes will be detrimental to individual Canadians, small businesses and corporations. Indeed, the Government is using a not so subtle form of blackmail to make sure they bring down the hammer of their majority on this Bill. It is trying to insinuate that, without the passage of this Bill, tax refunds cannot be sent out to the many millions of Canadians who will be receiving them. That is downright duplicity on the part of this Government. No one knows better than that crowd over there that computers of Revenue Canada will be down from the middle of February to the end of March for reprogramming. There can be no tax refunds sent out during that period of time and they will not be available until April or even May of this year. As the Minister knows, some of the officials in Revenue Canada have had the honesty to admit that fact. However, none of the Government Ministers have deigned to do so.

The scrutiny of the 134 tax changes in this Bill will not hold up the mailing out of tax refunds. What will hold up the mailing out of those tax refunds is the Government's lack of planning in the manner in which the Department handles tax refunds.

When we get into the Committee of the Whole, we will have an opportunity to question the Minister on some of the more repugnant measures contained in this Bill. I want to mention a few of them in the time I have left. They are measures such as the taxation of employee benefits, the replacement of general averaging and income averaging annuity contracts by forward averaging, and the imposition of the 12.5 per cent small business redistribution tax. I want to say something about those particular measures.

Before I do so, I want to mention an issue that has been raised by Members on both sides of the House concerning individual tax reforms which have been sent out to Canadians all across the country. I was simply appalled to see confidential and private information printed on those forms; marital status, last year's income and social insurance numbers of individuals, with no security that these forms will actually land in the hands of the individuals to whom they are directed. There is no security or guarantee whatsoever. In fact, the release of that material on the 1982 Income Tax returns is surely a contravention of the Protection of Privacy Act. These Acts were put through by the House, yet the Government turns around and refutes them.

I have had dozens of people call my office about this particular issue. I have had many complaints from people who are concerned about what is happening here. These people are very upset that this private and confidential information which pertains to them particularly is now being made available for others to use. What they are most worried about is that if this particular step is currently being taken by the Government, what will it do next? What other information will it make available to the general public? Surely, if the Government makes that type of information available on the Income Tax forms it is sending out this year, it should make a definite determination right now that next year's returns will not contain the same private and confidential information.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, it seems the excellent speech by the Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) has the Minister worked up. It will be difficult to get the Minister more excited than he now is in the time I have left. The points made by the Hon. Member were excellent. Perhaps that is why the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) is excited.

My colleague spoke about this legislation being incomprehensible. People in my riding are telling me about their frustration and bewilderment over the complex Income Tax Act that has evolved over the last 20 years. Because people feel the Income Tax Act is unfair they try to find ways around it or they feel they must hire accountants at tremendous cost to keep them within the law. Billions of dollars of tax revenue are being lost each year as people try to get around the Act.

It is not very difficult to get around the Act with so many changes to it, such as the 139 additions from the last few budgets. We have had budget after budget with clause after clause added to the Income Tax Act. As a result, people revert to such procedures as the barter and cash systems, with jobs performed on a cash basis or in return for another project. Canadians are resorting to this practice because they feel too much money is being taken from them by the Government. Therefore, the underground movement begins. We, as parliamentarians, do not want that. As legislators, we do not want to enact legislation that people feel is unfair. However, that is the situation with this Bill.

The Minister who introduced these budgets said that we must close the loopholes. These loopholes exist in a tax system under which people have set up their businesses on which they depend for the income to raise their families. They are now called loopholes by the Government. Of course, as it discovers the political problems resulting from its budgets the Government backs off. In turn, the people and businesses of this nation sit back and wonder when the Government will stop its vacillation. The Government must determine the investment it should be making in the future, and how taxes should be levied in the future as well.

• (1800)

I have mentioned some of the difficulties this system of taxation is causing Canadians, Mr. Speaker. There are many other things I wish to say, but perhaps I may do that on another day, and call it six o'clock now.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

INDUSTRIAL SAFETY AND HEALTH—DUST HAZARD IN GRAIN ELEVATORS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, as a Member with a particular interest in occupational health and safety,

I have followed the disappointingly slow progress of negotiations with grain elevator operators over a number of years. Grain dust within elevators has long been considered a cause of serious lung disease. Furthermore, because the dust is combustible, high levels often constitute a fire and explosion hazard.

In 1972 the Government and the industry agreed on a system of voluntary compliance to improve the protection of workers. When that failed to produce results, the Department of Labour established a schedule with a three-year deadline, which in turn had to be extended by a further 18 months. However, by the end of 1982, 32 per cent of the 53 large terminal and transfer elevators, and 31 per cent of the 2,900 smaller primary elevators, were still without safe dust control measures. Clearly, persuasion has not worked and the time has come to enforce standards to protect the health of Canadian workers in grain elevators. I regret very much that we have not been able to arrive at voluntary compliance. This has always been the Canadian way. Voluntary standards are surely preferable in an industry. Management and workers surely have the same interest in maintaining a safe and healthy workplace. Where management has set up health and safety committees in other industries, the results have usually gone far beyond the immediate health and safety aspects, and have tended to result in better management-worker relations and higher productivity. There have been a lot of other gains.

It is unfortunate that in this particular industry progress has been slow, for whatever reason. I can understand that one reason may be the uncertainty about future rail planning and the high cost of installing safety measures. When human health and lives are at stake, surely that must be the overriding factor. The evidence is in that people who have worked in the grain industry are showing very definite signs of lung damage. As well, in 1978 there was a series of bad accidents in American terminals and we would not want to see that happen here.

In a recent speech the Minister said that he would have preferred to see voluntary standards work. He said that self-regulation is not predicated on a compromise in objectives—in this case the health and safety of the employee—but rather, it is predicated on a shared objective of management and labour and an agreed means of achieving it.

In 1978 this House passed amendments to the Canada Labour Code which gave workers the right to refuse to work if they thought conditions were unsafe and if other measures had failed to bring about the correction of difficulties. The refusal to work is a very serious decision for workers to arrive at. The voluntary improvement of conditions using the vehicle of health and safety committees with workers and management both involved is surely a much better decision. In these times particularly, when we talk about productivity, many of us are very much aware that we lose far more days of work through illness, industrial accident and injury than we do through strikes.

The issue of workers' safety is one which goes far beyond the grain industry. It needs to be addressed in every facet of Canadian working life. I had hoped that at this particular time, when, because of the six and five program bargaining on monetary issues is limited, we might have seen some very creative bargaining with good faith on both sides on occupational health and safety issues.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is certainly no question in this Chamber about the concern and interest of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) as it relates to occupational health and safety. She brings a great deal of interest to debate on this particular matter.

It should be noted that when the Minster of Labour (Mr. Caccia) replied to her question last week he was very concerned about the entire occupational safety and health of workers in the grain industry. In fact, industry officials have been informed that they will be required to show Labour Canada why they have not complied with the regulatory requirements for occupational safety and health. This directive places the onus on various companies to come up with some rationale or reason why they have not complied. I assure the Hon. Member that the Department of Labour will be following up on this matter very closely.

The primary objective of Labour Canada's grain dust program was to protect the pulmonary health of grain workers by reducing the amount of airborne dust in elevators. Included also was a requirement for environmental and medical surveillance. The directive contained specific objectives to be accomplished within certain time frames in accordance with established criteria. I wish to underline that certain objectives must now be met within a specified time frame. The industry will be contacted in the very near future and advised of the details of Labour Canada's follow-up plans, so that there can be no misunderstanding by the Department of Labour or the industry as a whole. I assure the Hon. Member that this matter is receiving the utmost attention of Labour Canada, the Minister and all his officials.

ENERGY—NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND NEWFOUNDLAND ON OFFSHORE RESOURCES. (B) TELEXED MESSAGE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in connection with a question which I asked on January 26 of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) that dealt with negotiations between the federal Government and Newfoundland on offshore resources.

Since asking that question, the Newfoundland Supreme Court on appeal brought down a decision, last Thursday, I think it was, in which it found that the Province of Newfoundland does not have legal ownership of the oil and gas and other minerals which lie off the shores of Newfoundland and Labrador. It has found, for technical, legal reasons, reasons of precedents and obscure points of law, which of course are dealt with in these kinds of court cases, that technically and legally the Government of Canada owns these resources. That judgment will be appealed, of course, to the Supreme Court of Canada. There is another case starting tomorrow in the Supreme Court of Canada involving the very same issues on a reference by the Government of Canada.

First I want to say that I have the highest respect and regard for the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland, as I have for the Supreme Court of Canada. I want now to turn to the parliamentary assistant and make the point that it matters not a whit what is the legal position. It does not matter whether or not the Government of Canada is found to be the legal owner of these resources. In equity and justice, they were all brought into Canada as resources by Newfoundland when Newfoundland joined Canada on March 31, 1949; two-thirds of the whole East Coast of Canada was brought into Confederation by Newfoundland. That is all of the area off Newfoundland, the Continental Shelf and off Labrador. Two-thirds of the whole Canadian East Coast offshore was brought into Confederation by Newfoundland. If Newfoundland had not joined Confederation, those resources would not have belonged to Canada at all.

• (1810)

We had a comparable situation in Canada in the period before 1930. I draw this to the Minister's attention. Up until 1930 neither Saskatchewan, Alberta nor Manitoba owned their mineral or natural resources under the soil of those three provinces. Those provinces were created from lands which the Dominion of Canada acquired, the lands of Saskatchewan and Alberta in 1905 and the lands of Manitoba, of course, earlier.

The legislation and the law was quite clear. The Government of Canada retained ownership of all the resources in those three western provinces. In 1930, because it was felt to be just and equitable under our system of confederation—the Canadian Constitution—to take such action, the Government of Canada and this House enacted legislation to provide for a transfer of ownership of those mineral resources from the Dominion of Canada to those three provinces; Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Had that not been done, Alberta and Saskatchewan and their Governments would not today be in the healthy financial situation they are now in. Action was taken, and I will quote from the debates at the time. In this particular case the debate is dealing with Manitoba. The debate reads that the Government should place Manitoba:

—in a position of equality with the other provinces of Confederation with respect to the administration and control of its natural resources as from its entrance into Confederation in 1870.

What the Government must do to put Newfoundland and Labrador , Nova Scotia and other maritime provinces in a position of equality with the other provinces of Confederation, is to have this House pass legislation, and, if necessary pass the necessary amendments to the Constitution to provide for ownership of these offshore resources in the provinces off whose shores they lie. That is the only just and equitable position that can be taken by any Government that cares in this country. Those provinces are, by the way, the have-not provinces. Then they can be given an equal chance with the other, let's call them, land-locked provinces in Canada who do now own their resources.

I point out that when the boundaries of Ontario and Quebec were enlarged at the beginning of this century, by including in their areas large portions of what is now the Northwest Territories and the Arctic regions, the resources were also transferred to those provinces. If Newfoundland in this particular case is to have an equal position in Confederation with the other provinces, the action taken in 1930 has to be taken again. It was later on July 15, 1930 for Manitoba and on October 1, 1930 for Alberta and Saskatchewan.

The position of our national Party, and my position, as exemplified in a letter written to all the Provinces of Canada on September 12 or 14 of 1979, when we were in office by the then Prime Minister, Mr. Clark, is that we were carrying out that exact policy. That is our policy, and it will be our policy when we resume office again. We will transfer ownership to the offshore provinces of all the offshore oil and gas and other mineral resources. The "offshore" provinces will be put in the exact same situation as the other provinces of Canada. They will then be able to make their own way, stand on their own feet economically and have control over activity that is going to be impinging most heavily on them, no matter who has legal ownership of the particular resources. That is the only fair and equitable thing to do.

I ask the Parliamentary Secretary today—I suppose he cannot give me the answer—to plead with his Minister and the Government to cease their attempts to bully and browbeat the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador, and to change its policy, and announce in the next several weeks that the Government will transfer and convey to Newfoundland and Labrador, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, P.E.I., and British Columbia rights of ownership, management and control over those resources. Therefore, the principles of Confederation will apply equally to all provinces including the less well endowed ones.

I want to appeal to the Government, Mr. Speaker. It could get the Hibernia development under way. It could start introducing the opportunity for some prosperity in eastern Canada if it moved now to carry out my advice. Wait no longer. If you, the Government, do not do that, I for one will support the Government of Newfoundland in its position that never should it agree to anything less. When we have a chance to form the administration in this country we will see that these things are carried out.

• (1815)

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want first to say that I found the remarks by the Hon. Member to have been somewhat confusing. In the first instance, he said that he has a great deal of respect and admiration for those individuals who sit in the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. Then in his second breath he proceeded to explain the legal argument for one side of the case. I found that to be very confusing.

It should be noted that the Government of Canada has always been willing to enter into debate or discussions with the Government of Newfoundland to try to resolve the offshore dispute in that particular Province. I would like to remind Hon. Members of the extensive progress which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) had made in his negotiations with Mr. Marshall before the Newfoundland Government began to resort to negotiations via telex. The Minister had found a solution to the four points made by Premier Peckford in his speech of October 12.

Mr. Crosbie: Absolute twaddle.

Mr. Dingwall: He confirmed his proposal that there be a revenue sharing regime which would initially provide the Province with 75 per cent of all offshore resource revenue. Second, he provided assurances that there would be no sudden and drastic reduction in equalization payments by the federal Government. Third, he offered to consider a specific provision for Newfoundland concerning the choice of a suitable production system. Fourth, he agreed to a system of offshore management involving three people each from Newfoundland and from the federal Government. These were the concerns of Premier Peckford which the Minister had met.

Then suddenly, after much hard work by the officials of both Governments, Newfoundland cut off the negotiations and began making greater demands by telex in the form of 17 entirely new points.

Mr. Crosbie: That's nonsense.

Mr. Dingwall: The Minister indicated in his response—

Mr. Crosbie: Try to be truthful.

Mr. Dingwall: —to Mr. Marshall's telegram that he was very surprised to find the Government of Newfoundland taking the position of setting out 17 positions before the negotiating talks could be resumed. I received that confirmation when I visited Newfoundland and met with Mr. Marshall. I specifically asked him whether he would return to the bargaining table and he said, "No, I will not return to the bargaining table until such time as these 17 points, many of which are new, are put into writing". He would not.

Mr. Crosbie: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: The Minister thought they had both agreed that they had to move away from their old positions upon which negotiations foundered last year. The Minister made it clear that while he was not prepared to negotiate by telex, he was ready to address each and every one of the 17 points with Mr. Marshall in meetings with him on a face to face basis.

On the matter of the work of the negotiators for the federal and Newfoundland Governments, the Minister reiterated his understanding that the mandate of his negotiators, as well as that of Newfoundland's negotiators, was to identify areas of agreement as well as areas of disagreement. The latter were to be referred to the two Ministers for consideration before they met their respective cabinets. Unfortunately, rather than agreeing to meet the federal Minister to discuss and try to resolve these points, Mr. Marshall decided to go back to the Government prematurely, and refused to continue the negotiations. Newfoundland changed the rules of the game and wanted negotiatons between cabinet. This could not work.

I do not wish to dwell at any length on the Hon. Member's comments concerning the decision of the Newfoundland Supreme Court. All I can say is that the matter is now being appealed before the Supreme Court of Canada, which shall decide.

FISHERIES—KIRBY TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS—PRESENTATION OF GOVERNMENT RESPONSE. (B) REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SECURE EQUITY IN EAST COAST FISH PLANTS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I rise to discuss the question of Thursday, February 17, following the release of the Kirby Report on the Atlantic fishing industry. I would like to remind the Parliamentary Secretary that in the beginning the Kirby Task Force was formed to look into the severe financial difficulty in which the fishing industry found itself, particularly in Newfoundland, but also in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Quebec and Labrador.

In November of 1981, ten fish plants shut down in Atlantic Canada. In January of 1982 The Globe and Mail reported:

> National Sea ... owes the Bank of Nova Scotia $100 million and the government of Nova Scotia ... $10 million. The Lake Group avoided bankruptcy through an 11th hour infusion of federal and provincial funds that will allow it to reopen its plants at Grand Bank and Galtois. They had been closed since late summer."

The Financial Post reported:

> Fishery Products Ltd. last week announced its plant at St. Anthony ... had lost $10 million in the past four years and might not open at all this year.

On August 13, 1981, St. John's Evening Telegram reported:

> Last Tuesday ... National Sea Products Ltd. announced it was shutting down its plant in St. John's and others in Nova Scotia, indefinitely ... laying off some 1800 workers—

• (1820)

The Kirby Report was initially supposed to be tabled, or at least given to the Government, in the summer of 1982. After a long one-year wait the report was made public, yet the Minister is hesitant about tabling it in the House of Commons so that the Forestries and Fisheries Committee can deal with it in any meaningful way. That report did not address the urgent problem of the fishing industry. In fact, Mr. Kirby and the Minister announced that it would be another two months before we would know about the financial conditions and the restructuring of the fishing industry. I do not think it is adequate that a report which has cost the Canadian taxpayer some two million dollars should not deal with the uncertainty of many communities in the Atlantic fisheries, including the still unemployed people in Ingall's Head, New Brunswick and Georgetown, Prince Edward Island. When I was there this weekend, I was questioned about the Georgetown, P.E.I., plant, whether it would be opening or not. I had to admit that I did not know, that we had to wait two more months before the Government's restructuring program would be announced. We also have uncertainty in Lewisporte, Bridgeport and Jackson's Arm, Newfoundland, and Lismore, Nova Scotia, and the people of Grand Banks and Burin are fighting desperately to save their plants and the income of plantworkers in those communities.

The Report of the Task Force that started out as a result of thousands and thousands of plantworkers being unemployed in Atlantic Canada still has not addressed that problem. I think that is unfortunate because people are dependent on the fishing industry, and they have not really been dealt with in a fair way to this point by the Government.

There is some suggestion in Mr. Kirby's comments that some of those plants will never open again. There is some suggestion in the report that in order to open we may have to depend on some foreign capital. Some of his recommendations and options call for the possibility of the Atlantic fisheries, including the possibility of Fishery Products, Lakes Group and Nickerson, coming under a Crown corporation. We have no certainty that that is going to occur.

We now know how desperate the situation is. Kirby estimates, as a result of very detailed accounting investigations, that there is some $520 million of debt in the Atlantic fisheries, and there will have to be a massive amount of money put into that industry to protect this fleet and the jobs of fishermen. The Minister was not able to say whether or not there would be any equity position of Canadian taxpayers, or any say on the Board of Directors by community and plantworkers and fishermen if we are again going to bail out the fishing industry, as we did in 1974 with a $200 million bail-out, only to have companies that were no longer viable at that time come back to the Canadian taxpayer in 1982 and 1983 for another major infusion of capital.

It is not good enough to carry on with the same management scheme, and not good enough to say that this report will bring greater benefits to fishermen in 1985. The report does not deal with a better price for fishermen. It says that fishermen will have to carry out mandatory bleeding and gutting on their vessels to deliver a better product to the dock. However, it does not say that that better product will demand a better price. It says that a processor should be able to give a better price, but there is no mandatory provision whereby processors must guarantee fishermen a better price.

We are disappointed in the report because it does not deal with the key issue. We are disappointed that we cannot tell people in Georgetown, Fermeuse, Trepassey, Burin and Grand Bank that they are indeed going to have a fish plant with employment for their community. This Government has a responsibility to see that those jobs are protected and to ensure, when Canadian taxpayers' money goes into a bail-out, that there is some equity for the amount of money, and that the processors will be involved in the decision making.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in releasing the report of the task force on Atlantic Fisheries on February 17, 1983, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) made clear that the task force had two mandates. The first mandate was to advise the Government on the long-term policies it should implement to promote a healthy fishery in the future. It is that mandate which has been fulfilled with the release of the task force report.

The second mandate of the task force was to advise the Government on how to deal with the specific requests which came in late 1981 for financial assistance from the Lake Group and H. B. Nickerson and Sons Limited, both important integrated offshore groundfish companies.

As the Minister stated, it quickly became clear that what was required to solve the immediate financial crisis of these companies was substantial restructuring of the offshore processing sector. Such restructuring is more complicated than simply handing out financial assistance. The whole process became much more complicated when, in November of 1982, Fishery Products Limited also came forward with a request for financial assistance. The problem of how to put the activities of these three companies on a viable footing is extremely complex and can only be worked out through a process of negotiations with all interested parties, including the major creditors, provincial Governments and, of course, the Government of Canada. These negotiations are now in their final stages. They are critical both for industry and the Atlantic region.

The companies concerned have plants in many communities throughout the region. These plants are, in many cases, the lifeblood of the communities in which they are located. The Government is very much aware of the sentiments expressed by the Hon. Member and we hope we can make those decisions in addressing these problems very soon.

These negotiations, which have been going on for some months, are currently in a very delicate stage, and I am not in a position to go into any detail at the present time. I can say, however, that the objective of these negotiations is not to bail out existing shareholders. Rather, it is to restore the offshore sector to reasonable financial health so that it can continue to generate the jobs upon which so many communities and individuals depend. The extent to which the Government might have to become involved to achieve this objective, and the form in which such involvement might take, will be a matter for negotiation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

The House resumed from Thursday, February 17, 1983 consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Skelly (page 22957).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is a certain custom in the House of Commons whereby when the Leader of the Official Opposition indicates that he wishes to rise, Hon. Members agree to permit him to speak at that time. Normally the Chair would recognize an Hon. Member from the Government Party. Is it agreed that the Chair recognize the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen)?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) for his observance of that parliamentary courtesy.

I have seldom given titles to speeches which I deliver in this place, but because of the issue before us, I thought that in this instance I would entitle my speech: "Living in Never-never-land with the Grits"; and it might have the subtitle: "Neither a borrower nor a lender be", the purpose perhaps being to advance a short course on what is involved in this borrowing authority Bill.

All of us in this House have listened with keen attention, not to say bated breath, to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) on the subject of guidelines. There has been nothing like it since "Goldilocks and the Three Bears", or was it the "Three Little Pigs"? If he erred on the side of naiveté, or something else in that episode, he was quite sensible and down to earth in committee when in May the Minister said, and I quote:

> I would not expect the House to act upon an additional request for borrowing authority without providing it with detailed information on the economic situation—

That is what he said, "detailed information on the economic situation in the form of a budget".

When you are talking in terms of $14 billion for a fiscal year which is not yet upon us and for which a budget has not yet been presented, nothing else surely will do. There must be a detailed financial statement with, as the Deputy Prime Minister has said, the implications of that situation on the Government's fiscal situation. That can only mean a budget.

It may come as a surprise to Members on the Government side, some of those on the backbenches, to be reminded, as seems to be an increasing requirement these days, that they are responsible to Parliament. They cannot come in here and get a blank cheque covering the next fiscal period without producing a budget which constitutes an outline of their fiscal and monetary position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The borrowing authority demanded in the Bill constitutes an immediate inflationary pressure. It will force interest rates up, the most damaging development in the economy at the present time. We have had no indication from the Government of the purposes to which this enormous borrowing power will be put. It indicates an expectation of a deficit in 1983-84 considerably higher than the proposed $27 billion. Without a budget we have no indication of what policies this Government intends to implement to restore confidence, stimulate the economy and provide jobs.

Now the chickens are coming home to roost. This Government is faced with a major, almost disastrous, economic crisis. One cannot help being reminded of the fable by La Fontaine:

La cigale et la fourmi

"La cigale ayant chanté tout l'été
Se trouva fort dépourvue quand la bise fut venue."

I hope my accent was understandable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: To the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), I say "Go to the ant, thou sluggard", a piece of advice they would do well to embrace. Having brought the country to the sharp edge of insolvency, they want money. Without a budget, with no budgetary measures, no setting out of fiscal or monetary policy, they simply came into the House and said: "Fork over, boys", to the tune of $14 billion.

When one contemplates the financial situation of this Government, one is overcome with amazement that in a mere three years so much could have been undone. It is a subject for students of political science and human conduct in years to come to attempt to explain how a Government could come down so fast, so far, in so short a time. What we must all be concerned about is that in its slide into insolvency and economic disarray, the Government has brought the entire economy down with it.

I, sir, am concerned about the size and the amount of this demand imposed on an already staggering economy in this country. It is conclusive proof, I submit, if any were needed at all, that this Government has no intention of mending its ways at all. Like a drunken sailor, it will go on throwing public money away until it leads this country to the edge of bankruptcy. The course of spending followed by this Government has been described as profligate, as wasteful and as reckless. It now, sir, borders on the edge of lunacy.

• (1110)

The first part of the Bill covering borrowing authority for $5 billion, representing part of the Government's cash requirements for the current fiscal year, must be taken in conjunction with the October budget. It is here that the details are set out covering the cash requirements for the current fiscal year. There are no such detailed explanations covering the second and larger amount of $14 billion.

As the Minister framed his demand, he must have been thinking of the lines from "The Ancient Mariner":

We were the first that ever burst
Into that silent sea.

It is a parliamentary first, sir, when you have a Minister who comes before Parliament and asks for authority to go to the public for $14 billion without the supporting and buttressing evidence of a budget. Perhaps he was thinking of the wreckage of the last three budgets now piled up on the beach. He decided to take the cash and let the explanations go until a later date. This House has been given no supporting documents, no financial picture, on the state of the economy, no current outline of fiscal and monetary policy. This mess which we are in is a direct result of mismanagement on the part of this Government. It is due to the two years in which the Prime Minister dragged the Canadian people through the labyrinth of constitutional reform. It is due to the Government's preoccupation with experimentation and centralization, and vast development programs which never got off the drawing board.

Giving this Government power to borrow $14 billion for unspecified purposes to be outlined in a budget which we have never seen is like giving a keg of whiskey to a drunk. This Government has a record of fiscal madness which is second to none. You have to go back, sir, to the Manchu dynasty to find a governing Party so remote from the ordinary citizens of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Talk about the cart before the horse! This borrowing Bill is more evidence of the Government's mismanagement of the finances of the country. Its budgetary performance has been so inept that, in order to get one budget accepted by the House, it has to take three runs at it. We are now working on a budgetary resolution covering three budgets, approving budgetary measures which should have been through this House months and months ago. Now this lethargic, incompetent aggregation of political misfits find themselves confronted by the necessity of producing another budget to cover current and upcoming demands, and they cannot do so until they get rid of the logjam of previous budgetary resolutions which have remained piled up in the House while they played with Canagrex and other non-essentials.

So what do they do? Do they follow normal procedure and bring in a budget, followed by a request for borrowing authority for the purposes spelled out in such a budget? Not at all. The Liberals have decided to cut the Gordian knot of their own incompetence by dispensing with the need for a budget and simply demanding the right to go into the market for their cash needs. First comes the cash, and then whenever they get around to it they will produce a budget justifying their demands for the cash.

We have had a bellyful of this Government cutting corners, bypassing Parliament, raiding the Treasury and attempting to govern without responsibility. It produced two unworkable budgets and a third which was simply an exercise in plastic surgery. It wandered away in a jungle of hazy schemes like the CIDC, the CDC, the NEP and FIRA, which consumed enormous amounts of money, involving, for example, the purchase of Fina and BP. Now that it is time to do its housekeeping, it is completely at a loss.

The Minister's desire to be orderly and efficient cannot be used as an excuse to deprive Parliament of its right to full explanations and respect for the traditions of this place. If the Minister and the Government are faced with meeting huge debt commitments and refinancing requirements, all we can say, in all bluntness, is: "Don't come crying on our shoulders". For years we have warned about the runaway expenditures of the Government, and for just as many years we have been totally ignored. When the day comes that the Liberals can walk into this House and demand permission to borrow $14 billion without any explanation, without detailed taxation measures and fiscal proposals outlined in a budget, then this House has no further function but to act as a rubber stamp for the demands of Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: In the cursory explanations of the Minister of Finance which in no way addressed the issue as to why there was no budgetary explanation of the cash which he required, along with the proper tax measures, the Minister used the words "orderly" and "efficient" more often than did Mussolini when he was making the trains run on time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: That is right. Where are our trains after the VIA cuts? In his speech, with a mere nod to the practice and traditions of this place, the Minister said:

> It is desirable that Parliament have adequate time to study and debate the budget as well as the new borrowing authority Bill.

It is more than desirable; it is absolutely and vitally necessary. The Canadian people are uneasy and very concerned about handing the Government another blank cheque. Canadians are asking themselves: "When will this stop?" Here is a Minister who comes in after three disastrous budgets, with the economy on its beam ends, and says: "Let us not worry about a budget this time. Just give us the money; we will take the cash and let the credit go." It is not that easy. This is Parliament. This is not Household Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Surely no finance company would lend money on those terms. What would be the collateral? A bunch of gas stations?

Mr. Speaker, you, as the chief officer of Parliament, the guardian of its rights and privileges, the watchdog of its traditions, must be concerned about this abrogation of practice and tradition. You must surely be uneasy about a Government which comes in with all the finesse of Jack the Ripper and says: "give us money". Everyone who knows and respects Parliament and is aware of what this institution stands for must be conscious of the fact that if we sit still at this kind of hijacking of our rights, the institution itself will have entirely lost its validity.

• (1120)

We want the Minister to follow the practice of previous Ministers back to Confederation. We want him to outline his cash requirements for 1983-84 in a budget for that period, clearly outlining the state of the economy, the Government's fiscal and monetary position, the measures it contemplates taking to restore confidence and put Canadians back to work. That is the minimum that the Minister and the Government is obliged to accord Parliament. I warn the Minister and the Government, Parliament surely cannot stand for anything less than a full measure of its rights.

It would be the height of naiveté to inquire why the Government tries so hard at every turn to evade parliamentary scrutiny. The Auditor General had something to say about that. He said the expenditures of the Government were entirely out of control. This latest demand by the Minister of Finance proves in spades that the Auditor General was exactly correct.

Parliament is being asked to underwrite expenditures for a fiscal year not yet begun, in reference to a budget which has not yet been presented. It is the Government's way of covering up the mess that it is in. It is a mess entirely of its own making.

For two years the Prime Minister, like a modern Moses, led the country through the desert of constitutional reform. He was not concerned about the economy, he was not concerned about unemployment, he was not concerned about balancing the budget, he was not concerned about runaway deficits, he was not concerned about high interest rates, he was not concerned about accelerating bankruptcies, and he was not concerned about farm foreclosures.

None of that could penetrate the veil of mystical fanaticism in which he warpped himself. Like a prophet of old, he betook himself into a desert of his own making—with his "moozmaad"—and there he remained in isolation, fed by the ravens of his own party.

The problem which this country faces today, in spite of signs of an economic pickup in the United States, is that their policies have so disrupted the country's capacity to come back, that we may not get the benefit of their economic turn-around.

The Government is now in a position where it is borrowing to pay off its creditors. That is surely always a bad policy in financial circles. The request for authority to borrow $19 billion illustrates the chasm between the Government's perception of the economic parameters and the real needs of Canadians.

No one would object to a deficit, even one of the colossal proportions of the Government's deficit, if it meant that Canadians would get jobs. We know it will not mean that. It means a licence to the Government to continue its orgy of unproductive, ideological empire building. It means a licence to continue its ideological and destructive interventionism in the private sector. It means that this House is putting its seal of approval on policies which have driven this country to distraction, made us a laughing stock internationally, put hundreds of thousands of Canadians on the streets, and brought the economy to a rockbottom low. A deficit of this size creates a logjam in capital markets and reinitiates the battle over scarce capital that will result inevitably in pushing up interest rates.

The simple fact is that the resources the Government is asking for will not go to stimulating the economy. After all, it has had more than two years of the highest deficits and highest spending in the country's history to stimulate the economy. Instead, we have unemployment and foreclosures. So to suggest that this idiot Government is capable of providing jobs is to suggest that blood can be obtained from a stone.

There will be no new jobs, no stimulus. There will just be an added burden on the dead weight of centralist interventionism by the Prime Minister and his associates—both past and present—that will result in blocking our economy from benefiting from the resurgence now under way in the United States. They will use this to build an isolationist and separatist wall around the Canadian economy so that the benefits of the American comeback will not cross the border. That has been the record, and there is no warrant for believing that it will be anything different. There will be no end to the Liberal-induced recession in the country until the Liberal Government is removed from office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1125)

Mr. Nielsen: Certainly a deficit would be permissible in normal times for a normal Government to attempt to stimulate the economy. A deficit of this size for a Government which has been spending like drunken sailors for more than two years on non-productive, self-defeating projects is simply not acceptable or permissible. This Government ought to be cutting out unrealistic and counter-productive expenditures, such as the incredible purchase of hundreds of gas stations which have become a drug on the market.

They could open doors and allow constructively-motivated investment to flow back into Canada and provide new jobs. They could back out of energy and allow the energy industry to operate in accordance with the realities of the day rather than the textbook fumbling of the Government. They could do these things, but they will not because the Government is as remote from reality as though it were on hashish. Nowhere in the Government is there any sign of repentance, regret or remorse.

They have run up the largest deficit in history, with the highest expenditures in history, yet they sit over there, proud of their dismal record. Rather than curtailing their own expenditures, they turned to the pensioners, the superannuates and public servants. Now, by demanding a lump sum advance payment of $14 billion, they evade the problem of coming before Parliament with specific budgetary measures in support of their demand for cash.

The other day the Minister rose in the House and went through the motions of explaining the need for $14 billion for the next fiscal year. This is what it amounted to. He said: "We are broke. We need money; $14 billion will do for now. If we need more—and we will—we will be back." He went on to say that the required explanations will be forthcoming in the budget which is forthcoming. As to the precise time when the budget would appear, he was vague. He said, of course, that we could turn to the "Economic Outlook" for further information. That too will be reviewed in the budget, not yet here but forthcoming. This is why the House must not agree to this Bill, without the necessary explanations and taxation measures clearly spelled out in a budget for the 1983-84 fiscal period.

The Minister expressed a desire not to be hindered by borrowing authority constraints. Surely in view of the record of the Government, it is a primary requirement that the Government shall be hindered in every way by constraints. That is precisely what we are here for—we are here to protect the interests of Canadians, not to see the country ripped off by the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: This approach by the Government is symptomatic of the deep financial mess into which it has plunged the country. The Government senses the oncoming storm and is trying to build itself a $14 billion hurricane cellar so that it will not have to come back to Parliament until some time next year. At this time and in the context of this Government's record of mismanagement and blundering, to approve a borrowing commitment of this size, with no further details than the hand-wringing pleas of the Minister, would signal the end of the usefulness of the institution.

• (1130)

This House, sir, should stand on its right to have detailed explanations of the reasons for this Government's borrowing. This Government should not be allowed to spend another single red cent of the taxpayers' money until we have those traditional explanations.

Canadians have come to the end of their rope. They will stand still no longer for any further rip-offs by this profligate Government which now comes to us in this totally untraditional fashion for borrowings of this magnitude.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions? Comments? Debate?

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Before the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) takes his leave, I would simply like to point out to him that the Estimates which detail the expenditures for the next year will be tabled in the House at three o'clock this afternoon. That should give Hon. Members a good explanation of precisely how the dollars that are being asked for in the borrowing authority Bill are to be expended over the next year; and a budget is forthcoming, Mr. Speaker.

Miss MacDonald: When?

Mr. Evans: The Minister has indicated clearly that a budget is forthcoming.

Mr. Lewis: What about the income?

Mr. Evans: I would suggest to Hon. Members opposite that the changing circumstance we now face, whether or not we are actually into an economic recovery—which many people are saying we are and which I personally agree we are—is altering the situation very dramatically.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) is rising on a point of order.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the budget which the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) has been discussing, would he for the benefit of the House interpret the word forthcoming?

Mr. Fisher: We have time for that; show some courtesy.

Mr. Kempling: Listen to who is talking about courtesy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I must inform the Hon. Member that that is debate.

Mr. Evans: Being out of order, Mr. Speaker, is something which the Hon. Member is quite used to. The budget is coming within this month or the following month—

Mr. Kempling: Some time this year?

An Hon. Member: We have a forthcoming budget, do we?

Mr. Evans: The real reason the budget has not been brought down to this point in time, to my mind, is that the economic situation, as I have stated, is changing very rapidly. If the Government were to bring down a budget which did respond to these very real, changing economic conditions, the Opposition would be the first group to howl that the Government was not forecasting properly, that the Government had done something improper in bringing down a budget before the Government really knew what the economic situation was. Changes are happening very fast. Changes are occurring very fast in this country and very fast in other countries. This affects our economic condition very dramatically. Economic change and economic recovery is coming about very quickly in the United States. That will have an impact upon employment in the primary Canadian industries. What kinds of programs should be in place in a budget will depend on where the areas of greatest need are in this country in light of the changing economic circumstances.

We will have the Estimates today at three o'clock. Given that the Minister has indicated his intense desire to bring down a budget at the earliest possible date, the Opposition will certainly have sufficient material to evaluate how the Government intends to spend the money it is asking for in this borrowing authority Bill.

Along the lines of the Bill itself and in trying to add something to the debate in this area, I would like to carry on with the comments I was making last Friday in the debate. I had to shorten my comments because another Hon. Member wanted to speak and we had to cut the debate short. At that time I indicated that the economic situation we faced in this country is no different in substance from the economic situation that is being faced by most, if not all, western industrialized countries. Certainly there are differences in the numbers as far as the unemployed in this country are concerned versus the numbers of unemployed in other countries. There is a difference in the level of inflation in this country versus other countries as well as differences in the level of interest rates and so on. But uniformly all countries are facing the same dramatically difficult economic situation.

The particular economic situation which faces the world has been in the making for a great many years. First it was in the form of inflation, and subsequently there were the attempts to bring that inflation under control made by all Governments.

It is important that we understand the nature of inflation and what must be done in order to bring inflation under control. Then we can argue whether or not Members in this House believe it is important that we bring inflation under control. If what causes inflation and what needs to be done to bring inflation under control is understood, then we can ask the question: Is fighting inflation worth the price? I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is worth the price. Indeed, there is no option but to bring inflation down.

Quite frankly, we have succeeded quite dramatically in the last year in bringing down inflation. If you look at the inflation rate on an annualized basis for the last three months, Mr. Speaker, you will find inflation is now running at 3.2 per cent. Similarly, if you look at inflation for the last six months, it is running at less than 6 per cent. That is a clear indication of the trend, the elimination of inflation which will lead to lower interest rates. All observers who have the slightest knowledge of economics understand that lower interest rates will be the key to stimulating the recovery of the economy.

Let me go back to inflation, Mr. Speaker. I believe the fight against inflation and the recession have very common characteristics. First with regard to inflation, inflation comes about as a result of a situation where the purchasing power in a system exceeds the output of the system. In other words, standards of living in a country can only rise as fast as productivity or the increase in output of the system. If the money supply, the purchasing power of the system, grows faster, it will lead to rising prices. There is no argument about that; it is a basic fact. That is what gave rise to the inflationary spiral we saw, which the United States saw, which western Europe saw and which all countries in the western world saw during the 1970s.

Can inflation be allowed to continue and be left to run on its own? The answer from the Opposition, the answer from the Government and the answer from other Governments in other countries has really been no. There are very good reasons why that answer was resoundingly no. Because inflation leads to increased uncertainty, it cuts back on investment. Without investment there is no growth. Without growth there are no rising standards of living. The situation leads to higher interest rates. This we saw in an all too real way during the 1970s and especially during the first part of the 1980s. That is the reason that we had to bring inflation under control. All Members in the House were very concerned about inflation and called upon the Government to bring inflation under control.

How does one bring inflation under control if it is growing because of the increase in purchasing power at a rate that is higher than the rate of output in the country? The only way to reduce inflation is to reduce the purchasing power so that it is back in line with output. If that is not done, inflation will not be brought down. High inflation means that our dollar income had been growing faster than the output of products that those incomes were to buy. Therefore, to reduce inflation incomes must be constrained in dollar terms.

What is inflation, after all, but the market's natural adjustment mechanism which tells an economic society that it has been living beyond its means? That is what inflation is, a sign that the market is adjusting for excess purchasing power through a reduction of incomes to reduce the purchasing power. In order to eliminate inflation, the growth of income has to be restrained so that it more closely corresponds to the growth of output.

The issue, then, is how should the income reduction in the system be distributed? In a normal, functioning marketing economy all individuals in society would share that reduction by some small amount. Unfortunately, that is not how our system or other systems in the western world operate. While the Japanese system operates that way to a much greater extent, our system operates on the basis that the great majority of people are able to protect their incomes and hold them at the previous level while the minority are deprived of incomes altogether. In other words, instead of our system adjusting to the fight against inflation by reducing everyone's income to bring income into line with output, it reduces the incomes of a few by a great amount and the incomes of many by very little. In other words, we throw people out of work rather than reducing incomes uniformly. The labour-management system in our country leads to that situation. Those who continue to be employed do very well but there are a large number of people who are thrown into destitution.

That is the system which has evolved in this country, in the United States and Western Europe over many generations. It is not a system that was introduced by this or any previous Government. Given this situation and the necessity to reduce inflation for all the reasons I have suggested, what can the Government do to raise our standard of living? There are methods which the Government can use. The Government can respond by reducing income security programs. The Government has done this over the years. We introduced the Unemployment Insurance Program to ensure that those people who are out of work as a result of this system have some kind of income to support themselves. We introduced welfare programs, medicare and public pension schemes.

If the system were to adjust normally, everyone's income would come down a little and employment would stay very high. This is the case in Japan where they have a 2.5 per cent rate of unemployment as opposed to our 12.5 per cent. In our system, however, a few are asked to take an enormous income loss while the rest have no income loss. The Government can respond by introducing programs and it can pay for those programs by imposing some form of involuntary tax, in the broad sense of the word, on those who continue to be employed in order to pay for those who are no longer employed. I believe that system is inefficient. Our compensation system should be modified and revised so that we have a more automatic, uniform and just method of adjusting to these changes which occur in our economy over a period of time.

There are three ways the system can pay for these kinds of income transfers. The first method involves the natural process of adjustment that comes about with inflation. Inflation effectively taxes people's incomes by raising prices and that inflationary system is generated by the increase in purchasing power. The increase in purchasing power is caused by increases in the money supply which is under the control of the Government. If the Government increases the money supply very rapidly and uses those funds to give money to people who are out of work while generating inflation, it can pay for those programs in that way. However, we know that this is not a very efficient method because it will have a negative impact on future growth rates and standards of living. In fact, Governments all over the world have tried to stop that kind of process.

The second method which can be used is for the Government simply to tax those who continue to receive income and use those revenues for its expenditure programs that pay those who no longer have incomes. We are presently in a very deep and difficult recession. Any tax increase at this point could, and I believe would, lead to a much more severe recessionary situation than we now face. I personally believe that this is certainly not the time to be talking about any kind of direct tax increase.

The third method is effectively to borrow against the future, since taxes cannot be imposed today due to the very fragile economy. Therefore, these income support programs that are very necessary—which I believe no Member would deny—would be paid for through another form of tax called a deficit. A deficit is no more and no less than an increase in future tax liabilities. The present economic situation being as it is, I believe the best way to stimulate the economy and maintain the income support programs that are necessary in our economy is to use the deficit. In other words, borrow against the future to ensure that we establish the conditions for growth today. Through growth, we will be able to reduce the deficit in the future.

Let me say that there are some conditions which should be met. If the decisions were up to me, there would be certain conditions that I would place on that deficit, its nature and how it should be employed. First, I think the use of borrowed moneys from the increased deficit should be oriented wherever possible toward expenditures which are in the form of an investment in future growth. This could be in the form of public works programs, railway expansions, port development or other programs that improve the infrastructure of the economy and make it more efficient and lively in the future. It can be used in other areas, such as skill training programs which are an investment in human capital as opposed to physical capital. If the deficit is used to improve the lot of those who are out of work and are suffering from the recession in order to make them more capable of participating in the future growth of the economy and being able to have higher incomes than they had without the skill training program, then it is a very valid use of the money.

Of course, the money should be used for straight income support programs to ensure that the critical mass of skilled workers in adversely affected industries, such as the forest and mining industries, can remain in those jobs, when we know that the demand for those products will increase in the future. That critical mass of skilled people has to be maintained in these areas so the industry can rebound when the recovery comes.

I think the NEED Program is another area where the deficit can be used effectively with regard to employment. It is designed to keep that critical mass of employment available as the recovery comes.

• (1150)

We could bring forward, of course, viable projects for immediate start in the private sector. The deficit could be used to finance programs which would help bring forward some of these programs which the private sector has delayed.

We could also, and most importantly—and we talked about this last week—invest more heavily in the expansion and development of research and development facilities and people in this country, which again is an investment in the future. It is an expenditure today but it is an investment in the future. All of these things will lead to a more robust recovery and allow us to handle the deficit more carefully.

As a final point, Mr. Speaker, all of us are concerned about the deficit. It is very large. It certainly can be justified on the basis of the kinds of reductions in income or reductions in tax revenue that the Government is faced with and the increase in expenditures for these income support programs that are very necessary. That is what is causing the deficit to go up.

In closing, I have to say that I would call upon the Government to ensure that in the coming budget a program for deficit reduction is clearly spelled out, so that Canadians know as the economy recovers, as the growth occurs, that the very high deficit that we have today will be reduced in a systematic manner over the next three to five to seven years, to a level in relation to GNP that we consider appropriate for long-term stability in the Canadian economy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Questions? Comments?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the previous speaker, has pointed out that the Government is asking for $5 billion to the end of March and $14 billion for 1983-1984. My colleague has suggested that the Estimates will be tabled today. We know that there will be Supplementary Estimates after that.

Just out of curiosity, as my colleague is a learned economist by profession—

Mr. Kempling: Not too learned.

Mr. Lewis: —he appears to be suggesting that the presentation of expenditures is sufficient to support massive borrowing. As an accountant, I would suggest to him that if someone goes to the bank to borrow money, one has to show not only the expenditures that one is projecting but also the revenues. What we are asking for on this side is an accounting for the revenues for 1983-1984 before we, as the country's banker, approve this Bill. When can we expect to see the anticipated revenues for 1983-1984? We know, as of today, what the expenditures are. When do we get to see the anticipated revenues, before or after we are asked to approve a borrowing of $14 billion?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the best estimate I have, and it is probably no better than the Hon. Member's opposite, is that a budget will be coming down before Easter. That was the latest information that we received in this House with regard to a budget. I think we should make it clear to the Canadian people who are watching and listening that the Government cannot spend without parliamentary authority. The Government might have borrowing authority, but the Government cannot spend any of that without the authority of Parliament, and the authority of Parliament is granted through the process of passing the Estimates. The Government could have $100 billion of borrowing authority, but it could not spend a dime if this House did not approve the Estimates.

An Hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Evans: The Estimates are the control, except for the statutory payments in the statutory programs, of course; but the Estimates are the control that this House has over Government expenditures in the non-statutory area.

Mr. Kempling: They are passed or are deemed to have been passed. What a bunch of garbage!

Mr. Evans: Borrowing authority, Mr. Speaker, is simply the authority to finance those expenditures that are being approved by this Parliament.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, we were all humoured by the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). Does he realize that Governments cannot spend money if they do not have money to spend? If we give them money to spend, we know how they spend it. He was talking about a budget and he said it should not be a blank cheque deficit. He suggested it had to be stimulative.

I was wondering if he could tell us how the deficits of, say, 1977 or 1976 or 1978 or last year or this year, $27.2 billion, have been so stimulative. Have they put people to work? Have they made the country prosperous? Have they made the country grow? Can he tell us about how stimulative these deficits have been and how borrowing money makes something stimulative.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member and I have agreed on a number of points in this particular area. He knows as well as I do that I have been concerned about deficits, especially during a period when the economy is running relatively smoothly. My own personal opinion is that Governments should not run deficits during good times, but deficits are certainly appropriate during bad times.

In this House we are now debating deficits and borrowing authority during the worst economic recession we have had in 50 years in this country. That is what we are debating, and the question is: Is the borrowing that is being asked for by this Government to finance the deficit that is forecast by this Government appropriate in this economic situation? I suggest it is appropriate. I would not like to see it grow bigger and I would hope it could be brought down very dramatically and very rapidly as we come out of this recession; but certainly, faced with the economic realities we are faced with, the Opposition cannot stand and say we should slash away at the deficit at this point in time. Certainly we should as we recover from the recession; there is no doubt about that in my mind and I agree with the Hon. Member from Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). But today's request for borrowing authority I believe is appropriate to make sure that we spread the burden of this recession as widely as possible and remove the possibility of having people in this country in destitution as a result of having to cut back on Government support programs.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). In 1968 it took approximately $12 billion to look after the needs of this nation, which at that time was composed of approximately 20 million people. This year the Government is asking for approximately $90 billion, an increase of $78 billion, to look after a nation of 24 million people. In other words, we have only had an increase of four million people between 1968 and the present, but the cost of looking after their affairs has increased from $12 billion to $90 billion.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member how many billions per million does he feel are required in order to bring about what he says is economic recovery?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's figures mask a great many things. One is that we have had a very serious bout of inflation over the period of time and $12 billion in 1968 cannot be directly compared to $90 billion in 1983. We have had 15 years during which there has been some very serious inflation and as a result those figures would have to be deflated dramatically.

The second point is that there has been a dramatic increase and improvement in services that are provided by Government to Canadians. If you look at the expenditures of the federal budget, 50 per cent goes in transfers to Provinces and people in this country for services that are directly received by Canadians. Right now 25 per cent goes to servicing the interest on the public debt. That is one of the reasons inflation had to be brought down, to bring down the interest rate and reduce that proportion. The other 25 per cent is used for all other matters, including 10 to 12 per cent for defence. Therefore, about 13 per cent of the federal budget goes to administer the operations of Government.

• (1200)

Many observers who recently have looked at the pattern of Government expenditures have found no evidence of runaway federal Government expenditures in the last five years. There has been restraint in the federal Government, not runaway expenditure increases. The increases have come in the form of statutory programs, the cost of administering the deficit due to higher interest rates and in other such areas. These are the two areas which led to the increase in programs which we deal with in the Estimates. They have not been out of control. They have not grown inordinately.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about fighting inflation. One definition of inflation is too many dollars chasing too few goods.

Mr. Evans: That is the only definition of it.

Mr. Taylor: Wait for my question. Don't go away.

Mr. Evans: I thought this was debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I should inform the House that the time for questions and comments has been exhausted.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, we have before us today another in a long and horrendous catalogue of borrowing Bills which this Government has placed before us since the February, 1980 election. It is the fourth of its kind in eight months—$6.6 billion in June, 1982; $7 billion in July, 1982; and $4 billion in November, 1982. The Government now has the temerity to request us to grant them a blank cheque. I do not know how Canadians, including Members of Parliament, could possibly visualize $19 billion and the other billions we have been asked for over the last three years. How could anyone visualize what is involved in that amount of money? It takes considerably more imagination that I could bring to bear.

The Government has given no clear indication as to how it intends to use this $19 billion. A few moments ago the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) suggested that it would be difficult for any borrower to get funds from a finance company, unless he believed the TV commercial "Never borrow money needlessly, but when you must"—for a vacation, third car, winter holiday or summer cottage. Perhaps that is the airy-fairy kind of thinking which this Government has. It has given no clear indication of the purpose of these funds.

Anyone attempting to borrow money is asked a number of questions. They are asked about their plans. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has given no indication as to what his plans are. He simply says: "trust us". With this Government's record of shenanigans over the last few months, why should we trust them with another $19 billion on top of the $6.6 billion, $7 billion and $4 billion of the past eight months?

A borrower is also asked about his credit rating. The lender wants to know how he measures up in terms of meeting financial commitments. I received a letter today which deals with a situation which I have raised in this House many times. It is perhaps on a smaller scale but it shows the abominable attitude this Government, its Departments and agencies have when it comes to meeting payroll commitments to its employees. The letter I received in the mail today is addressed "To whom it may concern". I am sure it was forwarded to cabinet ministers and officials as well as to Members of Parliament. I quote from the letter:

> I am writing this letter on behalf of the participants of the Salmo Workers Employment Society. (Employment Bridging Assistance Program). The reason of this letter is to find out why so many of the participants in this project are not receiving bi-weekly UIC pay cheques—
> When we owe the government money they expect it promptly or there is an interest penalty of some kind added on. Why then, when the Government owes us, can't we expect the same treatment from them?

That is a worth-while question, especially today.

We can't rely on this money that we've earned to pay our bills and the interest is starting to add up. If the Government was to pay the interest on these past due bills, they may realize the unfair treatment they give us.

We are doing this work because the country is in need of it and they are far behind. We trudge through deep snow, work through all kinds of weather, and climb mountainous terrain to thin and space trees, while regular UIC people sit at home in warmth and collect UIC benefits on time, while we suffer on these long delays on our UIC pay cheques. How would you like to do this type of work and not get paid on time for it? Some employees can't even afford to bring a lunch or drive their vehicle to work. Since Louisianna Pacific Canada Ltd. has been shut down in 1981 there has been very few jobs available in this area.

We appreciate the opportunity of being a member of the Employment Bridging Assistance Program. On this program we have received a great amount of training and experience in the forest industry. We have the feeling of some importance knowing that we are aiding our country in these poor economical times, but, it sure would be appreciated to have more support from the Government themselves as the Province is in need of this work being done and they are profiting by it. We would appreciate it very much for your attention on this matter.

Many of those involved with the sending of this letter do not have a great deal of education. However, they are willing to work for very little in order that they can be useful and make a contribution to society. Despite repeated urgings and having the various technical and other problems brought to their attention, the Government still has not devised a system whereby these people could be paid every two weeks. If an employer with that kind of reputation tried to borrow rather heavily from some agency, he would be looked at questioningly.

This letter does not talk about normal delays. There is a list of 18 employees attached to this letter. One is behind seven weeks, three are behind four weeks, the next two are so far behind they have lost track, three weeks, three weeks, four weeks, another inestimable number, four weeks, three weeks, four weeks, three weeks, three weeks, six weeks, three weeks and three weeks.

That is the record of this Government when it comes to paying its own employees, not to mention payments on other matters which are not normally covered by legislation in terms of the time in which those bills must be paid. God knows what it does when it is not required by law to make payments. And, of course, the federal Government is not required by law to make these payments either because the provincial Governments, in concert with it, have seen to it that the parts of provincial legislation which require payment of wages on time is excluded. So the Government has even bent the laws and the rules.

This is not the time, necessarily, to give a long catalogue of the ills of specific programs, but they are symptomatic of the inability of this Government to meet its financial commitments and of its faulty sense of priorities. How is it that the country has managed to pile up the terrible debt burden which it has over the past number of years? There are a multitude of reasons, Mr. Speaker, and Hon. Members are very aware of some of them. It is interesting to note that at a time when we are being asked to authorize the borrowing of another $19 billion as of June, 1982, the cumulative total of deferred corporation taxes was some $20.8 billion. We in this Party believe that deferred taxes are actually interest-free forgivable loans given to corporations through the taxation system. That is money which is owed to the people of Canada and which has not been paid. It has been deferred for a number of reasons, but ordinary Canadians do not have the right to defer their taxes. It seems incumbent upon some of us to point this out at a time when we are being asked to authorize the borrowing of yet another $19 billion. The corporate sector is not asked, or has not been asked over a number of years, to pay those debts, and that means that the rest of Canadians must.

Just the other day I received a copy of "Beale's Letter", an independent newsletter which is generally sent to chief executive officers in the forest industry mostly in the Pacific Northwest, but actually right across the continent. The editor of the newsletter—and it is a highly regarded one within the forest industry—was in Tacoma, Washington recently, and in this particular issue he dwells on some comments of an industrialist in the Tacoma area. He quotes the industrialist as saying:

If there's one thing that really worries me about Canada today, it's political uncertainty. What's going to happen to Trudeau? Will he be around another 10 years? And as for Clark—when he was prime minister it seemed Canada had no government at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, order. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but when he refers to Hon. Members of this House, he should refer to them by their portfolios, their offices or their ridings.

Mr. Kristiansen: With all deference, I recognize that rule and generally try to obey it. I was just quoting something from a publication and the names appeared within it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Again the Chair must remind Hon. Members that we should not do indirectly what is not allowed to be done directly under our rules. The Speaker has on many occasions advised Hon. Members to proceed with extreme caution when quoting from documents. It is simply a matter of respecting each other's reasons for being here, and I would recommend to the Hon. Member that he adhere to that practice.

Mr. Kristiansen: Very good, Mr. Speaker. The problem, again, on the whole matter of confidence, not only in the political situation in Canada at present but for the future, over perhaps the next number of years, is that we as Hon. Members and representatives of our constituencies are affected by and share in that feeling of uneasiness as to whether the plans and priorities of this Government, or any future Government, are going to make more sense than they have in the past.

One of the major items which has led to the large deficit which we have today is the matter of deferred corporate taxes owing, the amount of which is almost equal to what is being asked for today. That general scheme of forgiven taxation is not only supported and advocated by the Government but has been supported strongly by the Official Opposition. The huge multi-billion dollar grants which were given to the oil and gas industry within the period of the last year was not only the policy of the Government, but was supported by the Official Opposition. Huge bail-outs of the corporate sector have taken place, especially over the last few years, and hundreds of millions of dollars on each occasion has been taken out of the public purse. The public purse had been used continuously to bail out losers, and this has also been supported on both sides of the House.

What confidence can we, therefore, have when these holus-bolus hand-outs are given, either directly or by simply not collecting the money which the people are owed? How can we have confidence as long as it appears that one or the other of the two major Parties in this House, the Liberals or the Tories, will likely be the Government and this policy is not likely to be changed? How can we have any secure feeling whatsoever? We cannot.

There are two or three other programs which I would like to draw Hon. Members' attention to while discussing this Borrowing Authority Bill because they demonstrate again the incompetence of that bunch over there with their faulty sense of priorities. One such program is the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. Among so many of the Government's employment-creation programs, this has been one of the most popular and most long standing. There were problems with it in its infancy, but they have been largely resolved. It has a well established delivery system and is one of the most productive and job-intensive programs ever to be offered by the Government, producing some $3 in job-creating private housing expenditures for every $1 of Government funds expended. It has also in its social purpose contributed greatly to many senior citizens, particularly, and to many other Canadians of modest means, enabling them to retain their own homes, which is surely a worth-while social objective.

Yet at a time when our national unemployment rate is some 1.6 million officially, when British Columbia's rate is 16 per cent, we see the RRAP budget for the British Columbia-Yukon region being reduced by some 15 per cent. At this same moment the Government is bragging that it has increased the individual amount of forgivable loans from $3,700 to $5,000. It has reduced the total amount available and issued directives which really leave us with a feeling that the operative slogan of the Government now should be: "Let the user of Government programs beware". Its directives have been to the co-ordinators of this program in the various areas, telling them not to advise people of the forgivable loan aspects of the program, and to try only to lend money which will be repayable. Some regional districts and one of them in my own constituency have had to tell the Government quite frankly to go to hell—that they are not going to defraud program consumers by omitting to list the facts of the program and what benefits the people are eligible for. They will not do that. If there is a program in place which offers assistance to people, then these people have the right to be informed.

At the same time, a new directive has been issued stating that no longer will it be possible for unused surplus funds in one part of the country to be used in the program in other areas which have demonstrated a need. Again, those allocations have been included in the budget and have been provided. With a program of job creation which is as useful and beneficial as this one, why should the Government deprive those areas which have shown initiative and have the demonstrated need for housing and jobs? Those jobs are surely needed. It simply makes no sense. There is a whole myriad of other job-creation programs, which is surely one of the reasons the Government feels it will be bound to borrow money, whether for the Canada Community Development Programs or Summer Employment Programs.

Why is it that when the deadline for applications to the Summer Canada Employment Program is March 4, we and our constituents have still not been advised as to the constituency allocations under that program? Apparently, according to calls made today, we will be told tomorrow, only a week before the deadline. How does the Government expect people in the communities, in volunteer organizations or wherever, to be able creatively and efficiently to expend public money to obtain the maximum social benefit when we and they are given less than a week's notice as to what funds will be available? Is that the way the Government plans its financing?

Mr. Thacker: Yes, exactly.

Mr. Kristiansen: People in my constituency and, I expect, people across the country are only human. They need a little bit of information upon which to base their judgments. They feel they have the responsibility to see to it that public funds are used in an efficient and responsible way. It is unfortunate that the Government seems to have failed to recognize the importance of that very necessary attribute in any responsible Government and any responsible citizen. It is for precisely that reason that we cannot support the appeal now before us.

Mr. Thacker: Because the Government is sub-human.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Questions or comments?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke this question: Does he believe the federal deficit is too high?

Mr. Kristiansen: Is the Hon. Member referring to the current operating deficit or the accumulated debt? Certainly the accumulated debt of this nation is too high. The kind of appeal which is being made to us today is unjustified simply because we have not been given the appropriate information in order to determine whether or not the Government has any concrete investment plan which would give us any faith in its ability to expend those funds in an efficient way, a way which would in fact add to this nation's wealth and to its productivity rather than simply detract from it, as its policies have done in the past.

Mr. Epp: If the Hon. Member, then, says that the accumulated deficit is too high and that the deficit request is unjustified because of lack of information, could he give the House an indication of what means he would take to reduce that deficit?

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, while I may not be able to be specific on this occasion, I can refer back to October of last year, I believe, when the Leader of this Party made some very specific suggestions in the city of Hamilton which would have cut approximately $2 billion from the deficit at that time. There are suggestions which this Party has made and which I have supported. I cannot draw them out of the air right now to express them in the House.

An Hon. Member: That is where they came from.

Mr. Kristiansen: They were very well documented and presented at the time and were not challenged, as I recall, by either the Government or the Opposition, and I would certainly stand by them.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Hon. Member who just spoke on behalf of the NDP whether he could answer a question from another direction concerning the size of the deficit. With a GNP or total of goods and services in this country amounting to something under $300 billion, could he give us an indication as to what percentage he thinks the federal Government's deficit should be before it becomes too large, in terms of percentage? Would it be 3 per cent, 5 per cent, 7 per cent or 10 per cent? What would be his estimate as to an appropriate federal Government deficit compared against the GNP?

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I would hestitate to throw out a given percentage term. That would seem to be playing a rather hypothetical game. It appears to me that a much more important consideration would be to determine whether or not expenditures or any planned borrowings by this or any other Government are to be directed at investing and increasing the wealth and productive capacity of the country, or whether we are simply to see a further pouring down the drain, with no visible, concrete, productive results.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short supplementary question. One of the other ways in which the Government can finance a deficit is by printing money. Could the Hon. Member indicate what he thinks would be appropriate in terms of increasing the money supply in these problem times? Should it be 3 per cent, 5 per cent or 10 per cent? Should it be 20 per cent as it was in 1975-76? Could he indicate what kind of advice he would give to the Governor of the Bank of Canada as to how far he should let the money supply increase?

Mr. Kristiansen: It certainly appears to this Party, Mr. Speaker, that over the years one of the problems has been the abuse of credit and expansion of the money supply, not only by Government but, even more so, by the corporate and private sectors. I do not know what position the Official Opposition would take concerning the kind of encouragement which has been given by Government taxation policy over the decades to financially support the kind of demand-creation advertising which has encouraged consumers to go out and buy what they do not want or need, or at least what they did not feel they wanted, until millions of dollars of private funds, supported by Government, deducted as legitimate costs of doing business, were spent in order to create exactly this kind of continuous and excessive demand by both the private and public sectors over the last few decades.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of this House since 1979, but it is only within the last three or four weeks that I have heard the NDP speaking about the creation of wealth, actually mentioning private enterprise as creating wealth.

Mr. Althouse: You should listen.

Mr. Thacker: When did the Hon. Member have this giant conversion on the road to Damascus, as it were, and begin to understand that wealth is really created by private enterprise rather than by Government enterprise?

Mr. Kristiansen: The question of the Hon. Member leaves me a little puzzled, because I have been a Member of this Party and the predecessor part since I was approximately 16 years old, and I have always recognized that there is a vital role to be played by the private sector within any economy. This Party and its predecessor, the CCF, have always held that view.

However, unlike the blind dogmatism of the Conservative Party, we recognize that no sector of the economy has a monopoly on virtue or on efficiency. If we believed that the private sector was always efficient, we would not be seeing the gross corporate failures and the continuous bail-outs which he and his friends in the Conservative Party and in the Liberal Party have endorsed over the past few months. Governments can fail and the private sector can fail. Government operations can succeed and private sector operations can succeed. We are not the doctrinaires. The Conservatives and the Liberals, with their blind faith in the private sector, are the ones who seem to feel that as long as they pray to the holy mother of private enterprise, all will be well; but that is just not the way it works.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member indicated that advertising by private industry is creating unnecessary demand and making people buy things they do not want. Does the NDP advocate that we should pass laws to limit the kind of advertising that is directed to the consumer so that he will not buy things that he does not want? Or should we be advocating that consumers only buy things that the Government dictates they can buy, so that they will not make a mistake and buy things that they do not want because they were led down the garden path by advertising?

• (1230)

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, an argument could be made that there is a distinction. I hesitate to suggest that anyone should tell people what they should or should not buy. I would not tell them that. At no time have I or this Party suggested it. However, we think there is a legitimate question to be asked about whether excessive amounts of money spent on advertising for creation of an image by a given company, or an excessive level of advertising beyond a certain percentage of the cost of production or perhaps of sales revenue, should legitimately be charged as a cost against a company's revenue.

That item has been raised before and it is in the program of the New Democratic Party. We do not suggest that there is a simple answer. We would be the last to suggest that people should be told what they should or should not buy, but we would be among the first to ask whether demand-creation advertising for products beyond a certain point is an acceptable charge, however indirect, against the public purse.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to hear the Hon. Member become an advocate of the private sector all of a sudden—after all these years he says, since he was 16. If he is such a devotee of the marketplace, then why did he advocate in this House support for former Premier Barrett's position at the 1975 First Ministers' Conference, that all the natural resources of Canada could be turned over to federal control on the condition that they become nationalized? If he advocates that, would he include Kootenay Forest Products?

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I am not certain of all the incidents; there was a specific situation in British Columbia a number of years ago regarding a particular resource. The Hon. Member did not mention it and I cannot recall which resource was in question at that time.

Regarding the last part of his question about whether this would apply to Kootenay Forest Products, I would say that it would be better for anybody, public or private, to operate that company rather than having it turned over to the private sector and then shut down, putting some 400 or 500 people on the dole as has been the case in the private sector. This was not the case when KFP was under the public sector, previously.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak in the debate on the borrowing authority Bill today because this is a very important request that the Government is making. It is a request from a Government that has no concept whatever of financial responsibility, no understanding of the trust placed in it by Canadians and no comprehension of the need to demonstrate a concern for spending control or restraint.

The Government of six and five is coming before us with a borrowing request for $19 billion—$5 billion this year, $2 billion to curry over to next year, plus another $14 billion—$16 billion for next year. That is the largest borrowing request in the history of this Parliament. The Government will probably require another $19 billion after the $16 billion is used up to carry it through the balance of the year. It has asked for a total of $26 billion to date and has clearly shown that it is a Government which is out of control.

Let us examine the record, Mr. Speaker. In November, 1981 in the infamous MacEachen budget, the deficit was estimated at $10.5 billion and the borrowing requirement was some $6.5 billion. Eight months later, in June, 1982, the deficit had almost doubled to $19.5 billion and the borrowing requirement had gone up three times to about $17 billion.

Then we had a change of players. In September, 1982 we had a new Minister, one who would take control and would show that he knew what was going on. We heard that he would probably be a little more conservative in his estimates to show that he had things under control and would perhaps be able to cut back the borrowing requirement or the size of the deficit before the year was out. His first guess was that the deficit would be about $23.5 billion and the borrowing requirement would be $22 billion, an increase of $4 billion and $5 billion respectively over his predecessor's estimates.

Now we have the man who had it all under control telling us that the deficit is $27 billion, about 2.5 times the original estimate, and that the borrowing requirement is $26 billion, four times the original estimate. How could any Government be so far out in its estimates made just 15 months later? The utter contempt that this Government is showing Parliament and Canadians is unprecedented. In face of this incredible demonstration of incompetence, it is coming to Parliament and saying: "Give us a blank cheque. Give us a free rein over spending for the next few months. We are not going to tell you what is happening. We want total carte blanche to the end of this year before we come back, cap in hand, asking for more money."

There is no spending plan, no stated purpose for the amount of money required, no real control indicated of how the Government will keep its spending within reasonable limits. It is bad enough to be embarking on this crazy spending spree, but the Minister is breaking a clear commitment that he made to Parliament four or five months ago.

Last October the Minister said:

In the budget I intend to present early in 1983, I will review again the fiscal situation for the current fiscal year—

He has not done that.

—set out estimates for 1983-84—

We have not seen them.

—and future fiscal years—

We have not seen any since November, 1981.

—and then seek additional borrowing authority as required.

As my colleague the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) just said, he is putting the cart before the horse and in so doing is breaking the clear commitment he made to Parliament in October, 1982. That fiscal plan must be presented to Parliament. That is why he is showing such contempt for Parliament and Canadians. There is no sense of need or of giving reasons why this borrowing authority is necessary today. That is why we oppose it so strongly.

This is quite consistent with what we have seen in the House in the past few days, Mr. Speaker. There is an utter lack of principle, an ignoring of guidelines on conflict of interest, as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) told us yesterday. It is quite consistent with the ignoring of the principles that have been established over the years on control of spending by Parliament.

Here is a Government with the Deputy Prime Minister sitting on a platform with a former minister, Mr. Gillespie, when he knew that the Government of Canada had to sign an agreement, when he knew that the former minister stood to make a gain of $725,000 personally, when he knew there were no tenders being called by the Government for this particular project. It did not cross his mind that he should question whether there was something being done that was contrary to the principles of this Parliament, contrary to the guidelines that had been established.

What did we get from him yesterday? He said that those guidelines are there to be broken, that the guidelines are there for the conscience of the Ministers themselves. But if the Ministers have no conscience and if the Ministers have no principles, those guidelines are not worth the paper they are written on. That, Mr. Speaker, is the sort of Government we have been receiving from these people for 15 years and it is a Government that must be changed.

Let us look at what the borrowing authority signals to Canadians today. It shows that the spending of the Government is totally out of control; but worse, it is showing Canadians that there is no real sense of concern about this, no sense of concern that there is any real intention of submitting itself to the normal constraints of Parliament. It is asking for a blank cheque.

Last October the Minister said it would not be right to request more borrowing authority until the budget was brought forward with a five-year plan. Now, five months later, totally ignoring the principles he established at that time, he is saying; "Give me that blank cheque".

• (1240)

The last time we had a five-year plan was in November, 1981. It was out of date before it was presented in the House of Commons. The Minister has not had the courtesy or the principle to set before the House a five-year plan on which we as Canadians can judge where we are going and how we will get there before we give the Government approval to spend taxpayers' money. We have no idea of the budget deficit for next year. We have no idea of the financial requirements. We have no idea of the spending or the revenues which the Government has in mind for next year or the five-year period thereafter. Yet the Minister wants $19 billion of borrowing authority without any strings attached. It is essential that the Government honour the obligation made to the House and through the House to Canadians. We must have that commitment before we approve this Bill.

Interest rates during the last few months have been going up in the area of the marketplace which is established by the private investor, the saver, or people who have their money at risk. These are not the rates which are manipulated by the Bank of Canada; these rates are a reflection of the broad concerns in the marketplace at this time. These rates have been going up since the middle of December, but, more important, real interest rates or interest rates after the impact of inflation are at a near record high at this time. Last month inflation dropped one percentage point to about 8.3 per cent, which is down from about 12 per cent last summer. If we look at a more concentrated period of time, say the last six months, we will see that it ranged from 6 per cent to 6.5 per cent or, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) told us today, it is down to 3.2 per cent. That is his figure. I have not checked it out but I will take his word for it.

The reason Canadians are worried about the value of their money is very simple. They are worried that the dollars they have invested today in a Government bond or in a mortgage will lose their present value. This is why real interest rates after inflation are so high. Also they are concerned because they see that runaway budget deficits will lead to more inflation. Deficits also mean that Governments will borrow; Governments will go into the marketplace and compete with the private sector. That competition with the private sector will force up interest rates. It forces up the cost of money, which is interest rates. The federal Government will borrow some $30 billion this current calendar year, provincial Governments will borrow some $20 billion and the private sector will borrow another $20 billion. That combination must force up interest rates. It means that money invested today will be worth less some short period of time down the road.

Another reason for the fear is a lack of confidence over what the Government is doing. Let us look at what happened in 1981 and let me remind the House of that disastrous budget. We all know of its disastrous effects across the country. It hurt people who were small-businessmen, people who were on pensions, people who had health care plans, people who were trying to save for their retirement, farmers, fishermen, people in the North and businesses in general. All these people were hurt by that budget.

Why did the then Minister of Finance attack these people? It was not because he had any outrageous desire to hurt them; that is not what a politician likes to do. He said: "I am broke; the Government is broke. We need money. We have to get some money in the till." The Government was desperate at that time. It knew the deficit was too high. It was worried about it, so it brought in that budget in an attempt to get more money through an increase in taxes on that wide range of people.

If there was a problem in the 1981 budget with the deficit projection, as I reminded the House a minute ago, of $10.5 billion, think of the problem today with budget deficits of some $26 billion. Next year we are hearing stories that it could be as high as $30 billion. What is that doing to people? What is that doing to Canadians who are wondering what will happen to them in the next budget? They are very concerned that the same attack will come through increased taxes, taxes which will take away their ability to grow. They see their ability as small businesses to grow and create jobs for people taken away. A huge deficit increases the pressure on the Minister of Finance to increase taxes and to remove tax incentives which lead to planned expansion, the development of new technology or the creation of jobs. This is why Canadians are worried today. This is what a high budget deficit means to them when we get down to the raw, real terms of the marketplace.

It is difficult to comprehend the runaway deficit. It is a huge amount of money. What is $27 billion? Can we picture how much money that is? It is very difficult to comprehend. This year with that deficit it means that each Canadian—every man, woman and child—will be going into debt by $1,125. Or to put it in family terms, in terms of our responsibilities as family people, it means that each family will be seeing its debt load through the Government of Canada increase by $3,700. That will be repeated next year, and it will be probably a little more because of a higher deficit that year. Whether it is in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, British Columbia, Manitoba or Ontario, it is all the same—we will see our debt load increase by $3,700 per family.

Let us get down to the hard facts. Let us look at the impact of this on job security, the competitive position of the companies for which we work, and their ability to stay in business and continue to provide the jobs we need. We are all aware of the drop in the value of the Canadian dollar over the past eight years. This is one clear indication of the loss of a competitive position in the country. We are all aware that the deficit in our manufacturing trade balance has increased over the past ten years from $3 billion to $20 billion. This is also an indication that we are losing our competitive position. We are all aware that Canada is last in productivity of the industrialized countries of the world. This is another reason we are losing our competitive position.

What does all this mean to the average Canadian? It means that jobs are being lost, companies are going bankrupt, and small businesses are in the most serious position they have been in the last 20 to 40 years. How do we get out of this mess? How do we break the downward spiral of the Canadian dollar? How do we regain the competitive position we have lost in the past few years? We have to do all we can to help small-businessmen and large-businessmen take the necessary steps to recover our competitive position on a broader industrial basis. This means that we must give them incentives to expand, to buy new machinery, to develop and acquire new technology, not just for the high technology, glamour companies of the world, but for run-of-the-mill companies which need that technology just to maintain their position in an international environment. The deficit to them means potentially higher taxes. It means that the cost of the money they will need to allow their companies to expand will increase because Governments are competing directly with them.

When the Government shows no indication through the borrowing requirement it puts before us that it has its deficit under control or that it has any serious resolve to bring it under control, when Canadians see the deficit increase 2.5 times in 15 months and the financial requirements of the Government four times in that same period, is there any wonder there is a lack of confidence in what the future holds for the country?

I have spoken about small businesses and other businesses, but the same applies to individual families. I said that real interest rates, the interest rates after adjusting for inflation, are close to a record high today. We know that savings rates are high and that Canadians are putting record amounts of money into the sock for a rainy day. Why is that? With these record high interest rates it makes sense to save. If inflation is falling there is no urgency to rush out and buy that new car or that new stove because the price will be much higher in the next few months. It will not be higher because inflation rates are coming down. People are being encouraged to save.

Canadians are also worried because they feel they will lose their jobs. One million, six hundred thousand Canadians have lost their jobs, and if taxes are to increase because of high inflation, more jobs will be lost in the future. Canadians are taking the cautious course. They are taking a sensible course. They are leaving their money where it can be drawn upon for that rainy day.

I have shown why this deficit, this run away spending, is a fundamental problem for all Canadians. It is not just a number; it is a major threat to our way of life, our industrial base. It affects the ability of our industries to provide jobs for our economic future. By bringing in this totally irresponsible borrowing Bill the Government is showing no understanding of the problem, and by demonstrating this total lack of comprehension, it is making the problem far worse than it need be.

I urge the Government to adopt a three-part program for deficit control in its upcoming budget. This is absolutely essential if the Government is to face its loss of confidence out there among Canadians as a result of its policies.

Let me outline briefly what this three-point program is. First, we have to recognize that the safety net in place today cannot be changed. The safety net of Unemployment Insurance and welfare programs is there just for the times that we are now experiencing. Let us leave that safety net in place and recognize that there will be an increase in cost there.

Second, in order to finance that increased cost, the Government must review all Government spending programs, weed out the unproductive ones and either cancel them or defer them. That must be an objective in this forthcoming budget.

Third, I want to address the problem of the structural deficit, which has been growing from zero about ten years ago to $1 billion, $2 billion or $3 billion, then up to $5 billion, to a level of $10 billion for four years, and now it is over $20 billion. In fact, the deficit is close to $30 billion.

The Government must bring in a long-term plan to bring the structural problem under control. I do not want to hear any figures like those the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre brings in. He says that the deficit will drop down to about X billion dollars in five years' time. Those figures do not mean anything. We know that from experience over the last 15 months. However, we must see a program that brings this structural problem under control on a long-term basis.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Questions? Comments?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I notice today that Canada has suffered another blow on the international market. An Associated Press story from New York reports that economic recovery is under way in all seven major western industrialized countries, but Canada's anticipated rate of growth is the slowest. The U.S. Conference Board reports that Japan is showing an increase of 8 per cent this year; the United States will be growing at 5 per cent, and the list goes on until we finally reach Canada's rate, which is 1 per cent. Would the previous speaker care to comment on that?

Mr. Wilson: If I do not speak loudly enough, will you draw that to my attention, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member should address his comments to the Chair.

Mr. Wilson: I will, Mr. Speaker. It is a very serious point which this very astute and wise Member of Parliament raises.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: I believe there is a broader problem that we face in the country today, above and beyond the short-term problem of the international recession. We have been trying to draw this to the attention of the Government over the last few months.

Let us stand back and look at some of these broader problems that are coming together at this point in time. There are four points that I wish to outline. First, over the past two or three years we have suffered a major regional conflict, East versus West. That causes problems right across the country.

Second, during the same period of time this Government in particular has provoked differences between Canada and our major trading partners. That problem and the effect it has on our ability to trade and on our ability to deal and reach agreement on some major problems with the United States is hurting our short-term economy.

Third is the problem of the over-all micro-technology revolution, the information revolution. We have not faced up to that in the way we should as a people, and certainly this Government has not been leading our thinking in that direction.

The fourth problem I lay directly in the lap of this Government, that of its over-all role. This Government opposite over the past three years has taken on far too much of a requirement to solve every problem. It has concentrated too much of the decision-making within the bureaucratic apparatus that is here in Ottawa rather than having trust in the people, whether they are small-business people or otherwise.

It is the confluence of those four major areas that is at the heart of why Canada is suffering so much from international economic problems and why our rate of recovery is so much lower than that of other countries in the world.

Mr. Cosgrove: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) was concluding his remarks, he touched upon a three-point program for deficit control. I was under the impression as he dealt with the last point of deficit control that he was short of time and he might have had a few more things to say. I would be interested in the specifics that he had in mind if, indeed, he had. If he would like to elaborate further on the specifics of what he referred to as controls for structural deficit, I would like to hear him.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to elaborate, but I will elaborate on them after we see a budget in this House. The responsibility of the Government of Canada is to do just what I have set out; that is, to identify the structural problems and put forward Government policies for attacking those structural problems.

Since the Minister asked whether I had anything else to bring forward in my speech, there is one other point. I wrote a letter to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on September 13 and again on November 5. I raised some of the elements of the broader problems of borrowing in the Government; the problems of borrowing by Crown Corporations and guarantees to such corporations as Canadair, of the enterprise development program of Maislin, Massey-Ferguson, Consolidated Computer and so on. I said that in the next borrowing Bill there should be introduced some over-all control, some over-all limitation on this type of borrowing and guarantee, because the credit of the taxpayer, the Government of Canada, is brought to bear on that. In addition, I said it was essential that the Government commit itself to an annual report on the over-all financial requirements for the operations of the Government. They should be laid before the House of Commons so that we understand what is going on in these other indirect areas. We do not know that today.

It is for that reason that I addressed this letter to the Minister of Finance. He has not responded to it in his remarks in this debate. I hope the Minister of State will.

SHIPBUILDING

LAUZON SHIPYARDS—AWARDING OF CONTRACTS RELATING TO REPAIR OF SHIPS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, on January 19 of this year, the Canadian Government officially announced a federal contribution of $122 million for the construction of a ferry for CN Marine. Starting in August 1983, this will mean work for nearly 1,500 people at Davie Shipbuilding Limited in Lauzon. This is very important news for the riding of Lévis and the Quebec City area, where otherwise the employment situation would have been a complete disaster. However, a few days ago, the president of the Lauzon shipyard workers union wrote to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) and to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne), as follows, and I quote:

> The Davie Company has informed us that its order book is empty, except for construction on the ferry Gulfspan for CN Marine, which is not expected to begin until the fall of 1983.

On behalf of workers in our Canadian shipyards and especially in Lauzon, I want to urge the Ministers concerned to speed up the procedure for awarding contracts for ship repairs, such as the HMCS Nipigon, tenders for which are to be made known on April 5 of this year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED TELEVISING OF S.O. 21 STATEMENTS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my ninety-second statement today is about these ninety-second statements.

I do not know how Your Honour and other Hon. Members feel about this 15 minutes under Standing Order 21 prior to Question Period. My own impression is that these brief statements by Members have been quite valuable to the daily parliamentary process.

Just look back over the number of Members of Parliament who have taken advantage of this period since we began statements on January 17. The vast majority of statements by Members on all sides of the House have been really meaningful. Hon. Members put a great deal of thought and expertise into these brief statements. They are not always partisan. They are often valuable messages to Canadians generally and to constituents in particular. For backbench MPs especially, they constitute a safety valve for those Members who cannot get on Question Period.

My point is that this 15-minute period should be included at the front end of the repeat broadcast of the daily proceedings of this hour. An ever increasing nation-wide audience is watching the playback of Question Period. I think our constituents might also want to see and hear these sometimes thoughtful presentations.

Madam Speaker, I would request that Your Honour take whatever steps are necessary to have the CBC parliamentary network, in conjunction with the House of Commons Broadcasting Services, televise statements by Members as part of the replay of the oral Question Period.

I believe that a message from your Office, Madam Speaker, to the President of the CBC would suffice to have this done. I know that CBC can mount it. I also know that Hon. Members and their constituents will appreciate it.

PARLIAMENT

RESPONSIBILITY ATTACHING TO PARLIAMENTARY IMMUNITY

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, immunity is a precious privilege conferred on parliamentarians so that they may better pursue the good of the state and of its citizens. However, like all privileges, the one of parliamentary immunity carries with it an awesome responsibility which is to ensure the protection of the innocent.

No court in the land would admit innuendo or unsubstantiated statements. No court in the land would deny or curtail the right to defence, whether the subject be a private citizen or a former Minister of the Crown.

Let this Parliament, then, as the highest court of all, pay extra heed to the responsibility of its Members lest, in the heat of debate and the glare of publicity, they besmirch innocent reputations, deny equal time and opportunity for rebuttal, and find themselves guilty of morally reprehensible character assassination.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ONTARIO INDIAN FISHING AGREEMENT

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, the Ontario Indian Fishing Agreement is a matter of great concern to anglers, tourist operators and outfitters throughout the Province of Ontario.

This tripartite Agreement which has been signed by the Province of Ontario and native leaders, but has yet to be signed by the Government of Canada, calls for the granting of certain fishing privileges to the Indian people and the zoning of some lakes for a five-year period.

The lack of information provided to the public by the three parties negotiating the Agreement has resulted in concern and uncertainty among non-Indians throughout the Province. This is a direct result of the lack of public knowledge as to the purpose of the Agreement and the effects that it will have on fishing if and when it is implemented.

The controversy surrounding this Agreement is primarily due to a lack of public information and public input. As it appears that the federal Government is on the verge of signing this Agreement, I strongly urge that this Government and the other parties to the Agreement hold public information sessions across the Province, particularly in northern Ontario, to explain the Agreement and all its implications. In order to remove the suspicions that have resulted from misinformation and misrepresentation concerning the Agreement, these public information sessions are essential.

I urge the Government to ensure that allowance will be made for public input on this matter which is causing great, and perhaps unnecessary concern to many residents of the Province.

TRADE

CONTRACT FOR SALE OF EQUIPMENT TO CHILEAN PRISONS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I was dismayed to learn that the Canadian Government is now in the business of promoting the sale of security equipment for Chilean prisons. Only three months ago the United Nations Report on human rights in Chile stated that there has been a substantial increase in torture in that country. Torture is an habitual practice of Chilean security agencies which can legally detain people for up to 20 days before placing them in the hands of the courts.

Our Government's role in the sale of this equipment is distressing, not only because of the likelihood of Chilean prisoners being tortured but also because it is a clear violation of the Government's own position regarding the sale of such equipment to that country. On August 31, 1981, the then Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Hon. Mark MacGuigan, wrote:

> —our own view is that defence equipment may be sold to Chile so long as that country is not involved in hostilities and Canadian equipment is not used against the civilian population.

But now a project officer from the Defence Programs Branch of External Affairs has been assigned to help five Canadian companies prepare their bids to sell military and security equipment to Chilie. The information that I have is that the equipment they are trying to sell includes an intrusion detection system for three new Chilean prisons. In addition, the Program for Export Market Development has approved a grant to one of these companies to help defray the costs of presenting the contract bids to the Chilean military government. The companies involved are planning to present their bids to the Chilean government this spring. I would urge the Government, instead of promoting the sale, to take immediate steps to stop it.

ARREST OF DR. YOSIF BEGUN BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, Dr. Yosif Begun, a Soviet Jew, who first applied to leave the U.S.S.R. in 1971, has been arrested and faces the possibility of a third term in prison. Dr. Begun has been convicted twice before, and since 1977 has served a two-year and a three-year prison term for trying to maintain his Jewish identity and to teach the Hebrew language.

On November 6, 1982, Dr. Begun was arrested and informed that he would be charged with anti-Soviet propaganda and agitation and face a 12-year sentence. His arrest came only five days prior to the scheduled opening of the Madrid Review Conference. This can only be interpreted as a direct provocation and denigration of the Final Act of the Helsinki Accords and the principles which Helsinki embodies. As such, it is an affront to Canada and the other signatory states.

I am informing the House that I intend to request the Secretary of State for External Affairs to direct the Canadian delegation presently in Madrid to bring the case of Yosif Begun to the attention of the Soviet delegation, and request that he be released and allowed to be repatriated to his homeland, Israel, and further, that the Government inform the Soviet representatives that Canada considers the case of Dr. Yosif Begun to be an indication of Soviet intentions to fulfil its commitment to the provisions of the Helsinki process.

Lazar Lubarsky, a friend of Yosif Begun, and a former prisoner in Russia himself, is in the Gallery today and is visiting Canada to obtain support for the release of Yosif Begun. I am sure my colleagues will join me in wishing him well in his efforts.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

ELIMINATION OF JOBS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, Canadian Pacific Railway facilities in New Brunswick have suffered substantial lay-offs in the past 16 months. Twenty-eight jobs have been lost from the customer service centre and 62 truckers were let go recently. Rumour threatens that another 17 jobs will be lost in Saint John and McAdam on May 1.

The CPR employees are appealing to the federal Government to assure them of protection and fair treatment. Clerical employees are suffering a $3,300 financial loss because of the six and five restraints, and continue to lose their jobs at an alarming rate. They are being squeezed from both sides.

The Brotherhood of Railway, Airline and Steamship Clerk locals in Saint John are asking the CPR to adopt policies of retirement at 55 with full pension, job reduction only through attrition, and the retention of all employees now holding permanent jobs. The adoption of these proposals would make it possible for CPR employees to hold their jobs with confidence and security.

As the federal Government has regulated CPR to adhere to the restraint program, it carries the responsibility of assuring that the employees are offered some protection from unwanted job loss. On behalf of CPR employees I appeal to the Government to adopt these proposals and consider the significant ramifications of further lay-offs on both the employees and the region.

AGRICULTURE

VEGETABLE GREENHOUSE INDUSTRY—IMPACT OF ENERGY COSTS

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Madam Speaker, I rise to draw attention to the threatened existence of the vegetable greenhouse industry due to the rising costs of production, one of the major components of which is energy in the form of natural gas.

In the early 1970s it was estimated that energy costs represented approximately 20 to 25 per cent of the greenhouse growers' operational costs. Today, due to increasing prices, energy costs represent at least 50 per cent of those production costs, and are rising.

These rapidly increasing costs have put the industry under extreme pressure because of the need for greenhouses to be built of uninsulated glass or plastic, to provide for sufficient light to ensure a good crop. This prerequisite has minimized the cost of efficient energy conservation opportunities which have been available to other industries over the same period. The problem the industry is experiencing is evidenced by the fact that stabilization payments were paid to the growers in all but one year since the 1977-79 growing season.

To alleviate this pressure, representatives of the Ontario Greenhouse Vegetable Growers' Marketing Board have met with the Government to request that the federal excise tax on natural gas, first introduced in 1980 and now equalling 68 cents per MCF, be refunded to those growers in food production.

I would add my support to this worthy proposal and urge the Government to act upon this request, by using the experience and mechanism of refunding the excise tax to other farmers in the production of food. This act of equity would help ensure that the greenhouse vegetable growers continue to operate—

Madam Speaker: Order!

STATUS OF WOMEN

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON WOMEN'S ISSUES

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, a report commissioned by the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, "A Working Majority: What Women Must Do For Pay," has just been released. It reinforces what many of us have been saying all along, that the economic inequality of women in this country is growing; it is not being reduced. But what perhaps is the most reprehensible revelation in the report is that it points out that the federal Government's Canada Employment Centres are more of a hindrance than a help to those women who are locked into menial, low-paying jobs in the clerical, sales, service and processing occupations.

This report indicates that women in these job ghettos have fewer opportunities for advancement, receive less pay, and lower and fewer benefits than do their male counterparts.

This report makes it even more imperative that the proposal that has been put forward by the Progressive Conservative Party and by the New Democratic Party for a standing committee to deal with issues primarily of concern to women be adopted immediately by this House. Only the Liberal Party has so far refused to act on this matter. Surely even the Minister Responsible for the Status of Women can see how vital—

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES REACTION TO ACID RAIN POLLUTION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I would like to address the serious problem of continued Government inaction on the acid rain problem that threatens our lakes, forests, farmlands, and health. In a comprehensive report released yesterday, hand picked Reagan-supporting American scientists would not agree with Canadian scientists that current sulphur dioxide emissions should be cut in half. The American response has been to demand further studies, further reviews, and further inaction. That is a view created by the manipulative politics of Reaganism that put the interests and profits of industrial polluters before the health, well-being, and economy of the North American public.

When is the Minister of the Environment going to legislate acceptable limits to acid rain? When will he convene a lobby of Members of Parliament and scientists to address the U.S. Congress on acid rain and toxic waste dumps? When will the Prime Minister get involved to ensure an agreement with the United States is reached? When will the Government take unilateral action to stop these deadly emissions? When will the Government admit that the steps that it has taken to date have so far just promoted the status quo?

If the Liberal Government put as much enthusiasm into solving acid rain as it has into achieving a weapons testing agreement with the United States, we would have a solution. Instead, Canada is and will continue to be a waste dump for U.S. industry.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—CONTRIBUTION OF ALASTAIR GILLESPIE TO PROJECT

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, my fellow Nova Scotian, concerning the liquefication project involving Scotia Coal in which his former colleague, Alastair Gillespie, appears to have been foisted off on the other consortium members who, prima facie, would appear to have had something to contribute to this project. Accordingly, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister just what did his friend Alastair have to contribute to the success of this project, which we all hope will be successful, with the exception of a few dollars up front which now have the potential to make him a very rich man.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, this is a question for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I have had an opportunity to examine the issue, and Mr. Gillespie's contribution to the project was to form a consortium for the purpose of promoting a concept that was of great interest to the Government of Nova Scotia, namely, using Nova Scotia coal to produce oil that could then be used as a substitute for imported oil. I think Mr. Gillespie's contribution was to persuade the various partners in this project, and particularly the Government of Nova Scotia, that it was in the best interests of Cape Breton and all Canadians to try to maximize the utilization of the vast quantities of coal for which Cape Breton was and still is famous.

[English]

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE BENEFITS TO ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, the most interesting formula here appears to be the Gillespie formula of making $25,000 up front suddenly turn into $750,000. That is the kind of development program that would benefit all Nova Scotians, if we could just make it a little bit more general.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I was hoping that the Deputy Prime Minister would elaborate on this, because yesterday he talked about the principal ingredients in this whole affair, benefits, knowledge, and guidelines. Yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister downgraded the guidelines aspect—he said they were just guidelines—and no one over there is willing to concede very much in the nature of knowledge about this whole affair, although it is becoming apparent that more and more people are deemed to have known or have imputed knowledge.

Having downgraded the knowledge and the guidelines, surely none of the Liberal members are seriously suggesting that their friend Alastair is not getting substantial benefits, and I come back to my question, for what?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, it was said in the House that Mr. Gillespie had signed an agreement with a certain number of corporations and he had invested some money. It was agreed that if the project were successful and they wanted to buy him out, they would have to pay him a certain price, according to the contract that is already in the hands of the Opposition.

It was clear in the agreement signed between the consortium and the Government that none of the money coming from the Nova Scotia Treasury was to be for the benefit of the contract of Mr. Gillespie. The money should not be used for that purpose. It was clearly understood in the agreement that the Nova Scotia Government and the federal Government signed with the consortium headed by Mr. Gillespie.

APPLICATION OF MINISTERIAL CONDUCT GUIDELINES

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I appreciate those answers, but I want to again ask the Deputy Prime Minister and remind him that he appears to have been the Vice-Chairman of the Treasury Board Committee at the time that this particular project was approved, some time ago. Why was that Committee not looking at any other such project under the National Energy Program? What made the Gillespie project so unique in that respect? Would the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister of Energy not agree that this particular deal would fit in very nicely under the recent announcement made by Iona Campagnola, the President of the Liberal Party, wherein the Liberal Party is finally investigating itself and its tendency to reward supporters and former cabinet ministers with generous business deals and contracts. The name of Judd Buchanan comes readily to mind as an example.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister of Energy explain the relationship, if any, between the prime ministerial guidelines and this new initiative that was recently announced by their president, Ms. Campagnola?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I do not know what question the Hon. Member is asking. We have debated that for many days in the House of Commons and have said exactly that there was no conflict of interest.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Then make an accusation.

Mr. Nielsen: I make it.

Mr. Chrétien: There was no conflict of interest on the part of anybody. It was a project that was in the open and that was enthusiastically supported by Premier Buchanan of Nova Scotia. He was convinced that he had a good case even before he had the agreement of the federal Government. He was keen to have an announcement made in Cape Breton. Premier Buchanan was kind enough to proceed faster than the agreement, and he invited the local MP to be there. That was because everything was above board and it was in the best interests of the people of Nova Scotia, particularly those looking for economic development in Cape Breton.

ADVICE GIVEN BY DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It has to do with the Gillespie affair. He spoke of people who were enthusiastic about the proposal. He will know that as recently as September, 1982, his own officials warned him against proceeding with this project. His own officials said, and I quote:

> It is clear that the project is not commercially viable.

In light of that information received by the Minister from his own officials, will he tell us what it was, other than the Gillespie factor, that caused the Government of Canada to ignore the warnings of its own officials?

• (1420)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, as the second phase of the project was proceeding I received some information about the request for additional funds. At that time I accepted the recommendation of the officials that none should be forthcoming. Eventually, after clarification and debate, the new formula for the testing of this new technology was discovered. It was proposed and recommended that it now be accepted. I made a statement through my parliamentary assistant that we were interested in entering into negotiations with them. We are negotiating at this time. No final decision has been made.

Mr. Clark: We presume that Alastair Gillespie is doing the negotiating for a fat fee.

OFFICIALS' RECOMMENDATIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Yellowhead): Madam Speaker, the Minister will know that there was placed before Cabinet on September 13, 1982 a Cabinet document which, among other things, stated that the consortium, Mr. Gillespie, is seeking a capital grant of "approximately 95 per cent of the net present value of the capital investment." It said that each permanent job created by the project would have to be valued at over $1¼ million per job. It said:

> Front-end capital assistance in the range of $200 million per year over the five-year construction period for the project would likely be required for the project to proceed.

It said that kind of funding could not be found within the energy envelope. In light of all these recommendations by his own officials against this project, why is the Minister still considering it, apart from a favour to Alastair Gillespie? What other than Alastair Gillespie's involvement justifies this action, against the advice of the Minister's own officials?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, one of the reasons is very simple. It is because we are still receiving representations from the Tory Government of Nova Scotia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

APPLICATION OF CONDUCT GUIDELINES TO ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the local Member of Parliament who was present when this project was announced in Cape Breton. If I could get the attention of the local Member, the Deputy Prime Minister, I would ask my question. Yesterday, in all his rather noisy obfuscation of the issue, he refused to answer a specific question. I would like to put that question to him again today. In view of all the evidence that has been revealed outside and inside the House in the past week on this important issue, it clearly shows that Mr. Gillespie, within the two-year period prescribed by the Government guidelines, did negotiate with his Department. Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House today whether, in his opinion, Mr. Gillespie did or did not violate the guidelines? Yes or no?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am glad to be referred to as the local Member. Probably I will have that title long after the Hon. Member has left the House, when he would still like to retain the title of local Member. The Hon. Member has asked my opinion. What is important here is the opinion expressed by those who have been involved in the transaction, both Mr. Gillespie and Mr. Cohen with whom he has had discussions. In the case of Mr. Gillespie, I understand he has stated that he has not been in breach of the guidelines. Mr. Cohen has stated quite clearly to me that at no time did he feel that he was being lobbied in any way.

OBLIGATION OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister simply cannot get away with that answer. He knows that one of the guidelines pertains to present Ministers, not former Ministers. He knows that, as the local Member, he was on a platform. He was side by side with Mr. Gillespie announcing this project. The Deputy Prime Minister was praising Mr. Gillespie for taking advantage of legislation or a proposal that he himself had instigated.

Considering that the Deputy Prime Minister has a responsibility under the guidelines not to leave any impression or support for the idea that something incorrect might be being done, does he not agree that, as Deputy Prime Minister, he had an obligation to ensure that the guidelines were being enforced? Did he not have an obligation to make sure that Mr. Gillespie was living up to his obligation? That is the question.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite unclear about what the guidelines say, and what has been characteristic of the questioning in the House is that Hon. Members have created their own views as to what the guidelines say. The guidelines make it absolutely clear that, in the case of serving Ministers they should not in any way grant preferential treatment to any former office holder. That is my obligation. That guideline has been fully enforced as far as I am concerned. I believe also it has been fully observed with respect to the then Minister of Energy and the present Minister of Energy. I have no hesitation in assuring the Hon. Member of that.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S APPEARANCE WITH ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I know that Members on this side are very familiar with the guidelines. I will read this to the Minister and then ask my question. I quote:

> In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

Considering that that is the guideline, and considering that the Minister appeared with Mr. Gillespie in Cape Breton and publicly praised him for taking advantage of a deal that was in accord with a proposal that he had implemented as Minister, and considering that we know that Mr. Gillespie acted improperly at the time—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I can accept a short introduction to a question, but certainly supplementary questions do not require any preamble.

Mr. Broadbent: I see the Minister smiling. He knows that the factual situation is very relevant to his judgment. Does he not agree that if, as Deputy Prime Minister, he is publicly seen with a former Minister who is doing wrong, he is not carrying out his obligations as laid down in the guidelines?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is getting more and more absurd every time he gets up in the House. The guidelines state very clearly that, and I quote:

> In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

• (1430)

There is no suggestion at any point in the guidelines that Ministers are prohibited from having official dealings with former office holders. There is no prohibition in the guidelines at any point that contact, that conversation, cannot be had with former office holders. And if the Hon. Member is suggesting that appearing at an event with Mr. Gillespie in Port Hawkesbury, an event which included the Premier of Nova Scotia, the President of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, the Vice-President of PetroCan, the Vice-President of Gulf Products, and the Vice-President of Algas—all of these people were there in a public event, known to all of Nova Scotia—if the Hon. Member is trying to suggest two years later that there is something wrong, well, he is getting more absurd everytime he gets up in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER RESIGN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. This event was known to everyone, according to the Deputy Prime Minister, except, of course, the present Minister of Finance, who knew nothing. I say to the Deputy Prime Minister that if "Joe Doe" from Port Hawkesbury phones Mickey Cohen, he will get a busy signal, but if Alastair Gillespie phones Mickey Cohen, he says, "Hi Al, what can I do for you?"

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister what does it take in terms of present Hon. Members of this Cabinet in order to obtain their honourable resignation from this Cabinet—a criminal conviction? Why does he not do the honourable thing in terms of his clear conflict of interest in this matter, dealing with a man who is clearly in conflict of interest, a former Cabinet colleague, in promoting this project? Why does he not now tender his resignation and do the honourable thing?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have examined the guidelines very carefully. I received the guidelines when they were issued. The Prime Minister has examined the guidelines. And it is my view, Madam Speaker, because I consult my conscience and I consult my judgment—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —I have concluded that there is not the slightest grounds for believing that any Member of the Government has breached these guidelines. The Hon. Member is asking me to accept his advice. Hon. Members, since they began their attack on present Ministers, and since they began their attack on former Ministers, have clothed their sentences in the clothing of high ethics, of high morality, and in their conduct, Madam Speaker, they have departed from every principle of natural justice, because their purpose—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: —because, Madam Speaker, their purpose is not to protect public ethics and public morality. Their purpose is to score political points at any expense, at any cost. They are not going to get away with it, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, it is not I who wallows in the mud. It is the Members of the Treasury benches who have not the courage to stand up and tell the truth in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT TWO MINISTERS RESIGN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister talks about ethics. He talks about doing the right thing. Let me remind the Deputy Prime Minister that in the United States Richard Nixon did not get into trouble on the basis of the original wrongdoing. It was on the basis of the coverup—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is on a supplementary question. I have said that, if I can accept a small preamble or an introduction to a question, I certainly cannot accept a preamble to a supplementary question. I would ask the Hon. Member, in the interest of the Question Period and using up the time as it should be, to put his question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I apologize, Madam Speaker, to you as the Speaker of the House, but not to the Minister. I ask the Minister whether or not he accepts the fact that if a present Minister deals with a former Minister who is in breach of the guidelines set down by his Prime Minister, that bespeaks preferential treatment and privileged access on the part of current Ministers? On that basis, does the Minister not agree with me that the honourable thing is for the Minister of Finance and himself to tender their resignations immediately?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, if I thought the Hon. Member's question was based upon a deep concern for the public interest, I might take it seriously. His concern is totally political and that has characterized his party's conduct since this false issue has been raised.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE CONFERRING OF BENEFIT ON ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. My question is simple and straightforward. Was a benefit conferred on Mr. Gillespie under the terms of the contract between himself and the consortium? Let us forget about who conferred the benefit and let us forget the timing in which the deal took place. Would the Minister just answer the simple question? In his opinion, Madam Speaker, was a benefit conferred or was it not?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, under the contract with the consortium, Mr. Gillespie was paid a certain honorarium for the work he was putting into the project. He has also invested $25,000 as a minor shareholder. It was in the provisions of the contract between the companies and Mr. Gillespie that if they wanted him out, they had to offer him a certain compensation. This would be the case if he wanted out or was pushed out, as any minority shareholder would try to protect himself in a deal like that. And all that was to happen only when the project was successful. Of course, so far they are still at the point of completing the first stage of the feasibility study and I do not believe Mr. Gillespie has gained, or is in a position to gain anything from the Government, as I said before. As to the negotiations between himself and the representative of the consortium, who was the representative of Gulf company, they signed a contract so that, because he had invested some money, he was to be protected in that fashion.

DETAILS OF TRANSACTION

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, is the Minister saying that this is a normal, everyday commercial transaction which a minority shareholder could expect? In other words, could you and I, Madam Speaker, go out and invest $25,000 in a project and expect to be bought out for $250,000? Is that a normal commercial transaction, in the Minister's opinion?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I was not there at the negotiations between the representative of Gulf and Mr. Gillespie. I am telling the House of Commons that the negotiations were held between Mr. Gillespie and the companies. The representative who was involved in the negotiations between Mr. Gillespie and the consortium was a man from Gulf Canada, which was involved in the deal, Mr. Joe De Grandis. They agreed to these terms and the Government had absolutely nothing to do with it.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

NEW BRUNSWICK ZINC REFINERY PROJECT

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, I thank my hon. colleagues from both sides of the House, and yourself, for allowing us to come back to the economy, specifically with respect—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harquail: Madam Speaker, there are many Canadians who share the same concerns as we do on this side of the House with respect to various questions relating to the economy.

My question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development and is with regard to employment in Atlantic Canada. The inflation rate is down to 6 per cent, interest rates are down to 11 per cent, and the CPI was .03 per cent in January, 1983—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Harquail: —making the first decline in the CPI since September of 1978.

My question relates to the project which was announced in the speech of the Minister of Finance on November 12, 1981, with regard to the new Zinc refinery plant in New Brunswick. I would like to know if the Minister can give us assurances, based on discussions with the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister, that he will take immediate steps, in coordination with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to ensure that all pressures are brought to bear on the Noranda Group and Brunswick Mining Limited to see that this important project, which will create 1,500 person years of work, is realized?

Madam Speaker: Order, order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, this is a very significant project, not only for New Brunswick, but also for the country. It has obviously been referred to in the economic development perspective which has been developed for New Brunswick, and it is under consideration. I will be discussing the matter with my colleagues. I might add that we have economic development perspectives destined for all of Atlantic Canada, in fact, for the whole country, which will ensure economic growth in those various regions. However, the project to which the Hon. Member referred is certainly one of the important ones.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT OIL PRICE BE ALLOWED TO DROP

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, we spent a great deal of time in the House today dealing with one of the Liberal election promises, that of caring and sharing. I would like to direct a question concerning a second promise to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. That was the promise of the Government to keep the price of energy in Canada and the price of oil below the world price.

Knowing that we have an absolute economic disaster in this country and that OECD and numerous other analysts have projected slower recovery in Canada than elsewhere, and knowing that we are facing thousands of business bankruptcies and lower competitiveness of goods produced in Canada, I would like to ask the Minister why he is not willing to allow the price of energy and oil to track downward as the blended Canadian price rather than the world price of oil, toward which the Government appears to be attempting to shift that pricing policy. In particular, he knows that this would reduce unemployment and get the economy rolling again.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is making a mistake. The policy is still the same. We have not changed it. Representations are being made to change it but it is still the same. The cost of oil in Canada breaks down as follows: the world price is paid for imported oil and for new oil produced in Canada, while up to 75 per cent of the world price is paid for old oil produced in Canada, which means that at the wellhead, the price in Canada is still below the world price. Therefore, the Hon. Member is wrong in saying that we have changed our policy. It has not changed in the last two years.

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Minister will be saying that again next week. It would be nice if he could give us a firm commitment in the House.

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): My second question concerns the fact that that price is a fiction, and the Minister and the Government know it. When the price of gasoline in the United States is 95 cents a gallon and the pump price in Canada is $2 plus a gallon, can the Minister tell us why the Liberal federal Government is not prepared to deal with gas pump policy rather than that wellhead fiction so that Canadians can at least obtain a fair price for energy during this economic recession?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): It is very easy, Madam Speaker. We cannot get rid of the provincial Governments. For example, the price—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: —the taxes vary from one Province to another. Therefore, a decision not to allow any taxes by the Provinces at the pump level might be possible, but we cannot do that. We must deal with the price at the wellhead, but the price at the pump is not controlled by us because, above the wellhead prices, one must take into account the federal taxes.

Some Hon. Members: Aha!

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, they are very much comparable to the level in the United States. Of course, in Canada, in many Provinces the level of provincial taxes is much higher than the level in the United States.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for St. John's West.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Leader!

Mr. Crosbie: It is wonderful to know one has admirers on the other side, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Chrétien: On the Government side, John!

An Hon. Member: You don't have any on this side!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: We do not need any from the group to our left, Madam Speaker.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE CONSULTATION WITH PRIME MINISTER

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, who said yesterday in this House that federal Cabinet Ministers have only their consciences to answer to when interpreting the Prime Minister's conflict of interest guidelines. It is very difficult to appeal to something that might not be there.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: You were talking about yourself.

Mr. Crosbie: However, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he or the present Minister of Finance, who was then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, discussed with the Prime Minister the question of Mr. Gillespie's activities in so far as they knew about them—and the Deputy Prime Minister did know about them—in reaching the decision based on their consciences as to whether it was within the rules or not, or did they refer the question to the office which is set up to look after Ministers' statements under the other rules which apply to Ministers? What action, if any, was taken to consult with the Prime Minister or any other officials on this subject in order to determine whether their decision was right or wrong in carrying on as they did?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have a suggestion. The words used by the Hon. Member, "carrying on as they did", were probably used to infer all sorts of activities which did not take place. Precisely what happened is that I attended a press conference in my own constituency to—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Oh, local boy makes good.

Mr. MacEachen: —to participate in an announcement of a project which, if successful, would have a very beneficial effect on a very depressed part of Canada. That is one thing I did.

Mr. Clark: That violated Alastair Gillespie's guidelines.

Mr. MacEachen: The second thing I did was to be informed about this project. As I mentioned yesterday, my staff knew about it. Indeed, at one point Mr. Gillespie advised me about the project, and I think I mentioned that yesterday.

Mr. Clark: When, Allan?

Mr. MacEachen: These are the facts, and the Hon. Member is asking did I go to the Prime Minister to find out if that was right or did I go to some other committee to find out if that was right. I did not, Madam Speaker, because I found that these activities in which I engaged were totally in conformity with the guidelines. I venture to make the other point that, if I failed to participate in the way I did, I would have been shirking my responsibilities as a Member of Parliament, as a Member of the Government of Canada, and shirking my responsibilities to the people of Nova Scotia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I suggest to the Deputy Prime Minister that he shirked his duty to his conscience, which he mentioned here yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: That is where he shirked his duty.

REQUEST THAT DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER RESIGN

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister a supplementary question. While we cannot yet be certain whether the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources knew that Mr. Gillespie was the initiator of this project, we are sure that the Deputy Prime Minister, by his own testimony here in the House, knew he was the initiator of this project through the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources in the Deputy Prime Minister's district. The Deputy Prime Minister knew, and Dr. P. J. Read, who was directly involved with Mr. Gillespie for eight months, briefed the present Minister of State for Mines, who is responsible for the status of women, concerning the whole situation. It is peculiar that she would have been briefed, but not the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

• (1450)

In view of that, is it not obvious to the Deputy Prime Minister that the conflict of interest guidelines have been breached, at least by him, possibly by the Minister of State for Mines, possibly by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and that the whole thing dictates that he refer again to his conscience and resign?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I knew that the Hon. Member was arrogant, but I never thought he would become so arrogant that he would attempt to tell any other individual what their conscience told that person. I think that that is an arrogation that not even the greatest theologian in history attributed to himself. Because of that arrogance that the Hon. Member shows, I reject his suggestion as coming from a mind that is besotted and besetted with arrogance and a clear unwillingness to listen to facts, and a total obsession—

Mr. Crosbie: You are punch drunk with conscience.

Mr. MacEachen: —with recovering from the humiliation he received in this House in December, 1979.

Mr. Crosbie: Your conscience is punch drunk.

THE ECONOMY

REPORT PREPARED BY UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO PROFESSORS

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Some time ago I had delivered to his office a copy of a report by Professors Bossoms and Dungan at the University of Toronto, which report was given considerable prominence on the front page of the business section of Saturday's Globe and Mail. Has the Minister's Department had an opportunity to analyze this report fully? It purports to show that, if we had no recession, the Government would now be showing a surplus rather than a deficit, as compared with the United States where there is a very large surplus under the same kind of study.

I would also like to ask the Minister if he has had an opportunity to have the report analyzed and if he could indicate if this would have a major bearing on his budget considerations.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. Lalonde: —first of all I want to say that I have received the study referred to by the Hon. Member and have referred it to my officials for further consideration. I also read the story in Saturday's Globe and Mail. I think the comments made by Professors Bossoms and Dungan are very important and very relevant. This study deserves the consideration of all Members of the House as we consider the next budget.

I want to underline to the Hon. Member that one aspect that certainly struck my eyes particularly was the statement by Professor Bossoms that the key thing, if there is going to be an activist fiscal policy that attempts to increase the deficit deliberately to help the economy, is that I should make sure it is temporary in nature. I have that very much in mind indeed.

AGRICULTURE

DEPARTMENT'S ADVERTISEMENTS ON PROPOSED CROWSNEST PASS RATE CHANGES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I have sent him notice of the question since this involves long-standing parliamentary practice, and I want to make certain that his answers are very accurate.

Since the announcement of the Government's intentions to change the Crow rate is, at this point, only an announcement and not the policy of the country nor of his Department, can the Minister explain to the House why his Department is taking out full-page advertisements in newspapers which argue his Party's case for making the Crow changes? Will he also explain why public money should be used to argue what is, at this point, only Liberal Party policy?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the ads are being taken out because of what was said by another level of government and, in most instances, because of what the Provinces are doing with ads. The Province of Quebec, especially, has taken out huge ads, with movies and slide displays et cetera. There is only one way to fight that, and that is to fight it with what is accurately being put forward by the Government. We are trying to do that in the best way we know at the present time. The ads are not free. We know that, and we are estimating that the total ad program will probably cost around $350,000.

FUNDING FOR ADVERTISEMENTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister to tell us the source of the funds he is using. He says he is proposing to use about $350,000. What branch of his Department are these funds coming from? How is the expenditure described in the estimates, and when were the estimates on this particular expenditure passed?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the funds we are using are funds from my Department and several other departments that are available for communications.

Oral Questions

THE ADMINISTRATION

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF STATE (MINES) RESIGN

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, we now have another Minister involved in the "coal-gate" affair. My question is to the Minister of State for Mines, both in her capacity as junior Minister to the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and in her capacity as the Minister who took over a component of the Department formerly headed by Alastair Gillespie.

She admits that her Department was involved in the Scotia Liquifuels project, a project headed by Alastair Gillespie, for some six months prior to June, 1981, and she admits that she has discussed the project with Mr. Gillespie.

Given that the guidelines established by the Prime Minister in 1980—and I hope she pays more attention to them than the Deputy Prime Minister does—prohibit that kind of transaction between any former Minister and any current Minister responsible for the same Department or agency, will she at least have the decency to rise in this House and submit her resignation?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): No, Madam Speaker, I will not. I did not admit that I had conversations with the former Minister. I said to the press that I had had conversations within the past year, well within the guidelines.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, is the Minister now asking us to believe that the project which was headed by Alastair Gillespie, on which she was briefed by P. J. Read of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, who had been dealing with Mr. Gillespie for some eight months, the project which her colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister, had been negotiating and had appeared publicly with Alastair Gillespie in April, 1981—that all of these things took place and that she was totally unaware of any involvement of Mr. Gillespie? Is that what she is asking us to believe?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Yes, Madam Speaker. What I find appalling about all of this is that the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands is not looking at the project as she should be, as an exciting technological breakthrough for Canada and Canadians.

TECHNICAL RE-EVALUATION OF PROJECT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, in an exchange across the aisle a moment ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources asserted that Mr. Gillespie had received no benefit. I point out to him that he has already received $30,000 under the annual stipend paid to him, plus $600 per diem—in fact, the return of his initial investment.

The question I have for the Minister is this. In view of his officials' recommendation that the Government offer to the consortium additional federal financial support for a technical re-evaluation of the project, focusing particularly on processes which would utilize higher ratios of natural gas to coal and offer higher saleable product yields—has that offer been made to the consortium pursuant to the recommendations of his officials? Was it made in the amount of $750,000 and, if so, from what fund are those moneys to be obtained?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, this is what is being negotiated at this time. There is no final decision on that. If we decide to go ahead, this money would not be from the same fund. It would be from a fund in the coal division of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. We are discussing that at this time.

Mr. Clark: The slurry fund or the slush fund?

Mr. Chrétien: My officials are in touch with the Government of Nova Scotia and the consortium on this project. We made an announcement that we were to enter into negotiations. We are at that phase at this time. If we decide to sign, we will inform the House immediately after the decision, one way or the other.

• (1500)

Mr. Nielsen: There was some doubt in my mind whether that was to come from the slurry fund or from the slush fund, but the Minister seems to have clarified that.

REQUEST THAT PRE-FEASIBILITY STUDY BE TABLED

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my next question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He agreed yesterday to come clean with the House and to table all relevant documents with respect to this transaction. In view of the fact that he and the rest of the Cabinet are aware that the consortium—and I quote from the document which he has seen—has completed a pre-feasibility study for the facility, will he table that pre-feasibility study, as well as the feasibility study which, by contract, the consortium was bound to produce in December, 1982?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I undertook yesterday to table all documents that were possible to be tabled.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: I am in the process of completing that commitment, as I volunteered yesterday. The Hon. Member talks about coming clean. We were quite prepared to table the letters that were mentioned in the questions yesterday, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will determine what is available for tabling in the House.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1983-84

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting Estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1984, was presented by Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board) and read by Madam Speaker to the House.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, in addition to tabling Part II of the Main Estimates, I would also like to table in support of the Estimates Part I, the Government Expenditure Plan, and, on behalf of my colleagues, Part III, consisting of 47 departmental expenditure plans.

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT OF TREASURY BOARD

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, this is the first step in Parliament's consideration of the detailed expenditure budget of the Government for 1983-84. It is for Parliament to grant final approval of this spending plan. When approved, these Estimates establish the framework within which the activities of the federal Government itself are carried out and accounted for. Tabling of these Estimates is the end of months of intensive preparation by the Government.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, the Main Estimates provide a detailed and comprehensive description of the Government's present policies, activities and programs. However, they do not give more than an overview of total government spending as projected at the present time. If we consider the time required for decision-making and producing the forty-nine volumes that make up the Estimates this year, it means that the Federal Government must be able to adapt to the circumstances and have the flexibility to review and revise its programs so as to promote economic recovery.

Madam Speaker, I also wish to remind Hon. Members that the budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) expects to bring down shortly may very well affect the Government's expenditure plan for the coming year. Of course, any changes in the Estimates as a result of the budget will require approval by Parliament of Supplementary Estimates or a separate Bill. The Government's 6 and 5 program has also had an impact on the Estimates. Capping of compensation in the Federal Public Service and capping of Old Age Security benefits, family allowances and indexing of public service pensions has made funds available for creating jobs and establishing other programs to help Canadians cope with these difficult times and speed up the country's economic recovery.

[English]

This year the Estimates are presented as a group of volumes: Part I, The Government Expenditure Plan; Part II, the Estimates proper, long referred to as the Blue Book; and Part III's Program Expenditure Plans that provide detailed program information.

This is the third year Part I has been prepared and tabled. It provides Parliament with an overview of Government spending in a form conducive to an understanding of total expenditures, and focuses on the broad policy areas to which resources are allocated by Parliament through programs of Departments and agencies.

Part II, that is the Blue Book, continues to support the items that may eventually be included in the Appropriation Act, of the Main Estimates. When the new form of the Estimates is fully developed, there will be changes to the form and content of Part II. However, this year it is the traditional Blue Book in structure and content.

Several volumes of Part III are tabled this year for the second time and a further number are provided for the first time. These volumes, 47 in all, provide information to the Standing Committee of Parliament that has the task of examining the Estimates for each Ministry. Each volume includes explanations of what the Department expects to achieve with the resources requested and includes, where possible, a statement of the benefits expected from the program. Part III will be expanded over the next few years to include volumes for all Departments and agencies. Therefore I have tabled, on behalf of my colleagues, the 47 Department Expenditure Plans. These documents, which are prepared by and are the responsibility of individual Departments, provide a great deal of further detail on Government programs and, more specifically, what the Government hopes to achieve with the money it plans to spend through these Estimates.

In recognition of the fact that individual Members will have particularly strong interest in examining certain programs and Departments but not others, we are not having automatic distribution of all volumes of Part III to all Members. However, Members can obtain these documents from the Parliamentary Distribution Centre by simply indicating those of interest to them on a list of available volumes included with their copies of Part I and the Blue Book.

A further initiative in improving the information available to Parliament is the planned revision of the Blue Book. As I have said, the new concept of the Estimates calls for presentation in three parts. Because consultation with Members on the form of Part I and Part III proved very constructive, it is my intention to initiate in the near future discussions with Members on proposals to amend the form and content of the current Blue Book. I would only note at this time our expectation of a reduction in the volume of the Blue Book when all part III books are available and it becomes possible to relocate information to Part III without reducing the information available to Parliament for its consideration.

I would now like to focus on Part I of the Estimates, the Government Expenditure Plan. The updated plan for 1983-84 and the information related to 1982-83 reflect the policies and programs announced by the Ministers of Finance in the June, 1982 budget and the October, 1982 economic statement. Because final decisions have not yet been made on the measures to be included in the next budget, Part I of the Estimates does not include any information on the planning years beyond 1983-1984. Information on the Government's multi-year expenditure plans will, however, be presented in the next budget, including any changes the Government may make for the current fiscal year.

• (1510)

As announced last Thursday by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), total forecast spending in 1983-1984 is $88.9 billion, an increase of 9.6 per cent over the revised forecast of $81.1 billion for 1982-1983. This rate of growth in spending is the lowest since 1979-1980.

Mr. Lewis: But it is not six and five.

Mr. Gray: Even while funding substantial increases in existing and new measures to assist Canadians in this difficult economic period, the Government has been able to restrain over-all spending growth by implementing a number of spending restraint initiatives. The restraint program announced in the June budget, which, of course, directly affects about one-half of total spending, results in funds available for reallocation of over $700 million in wages and salaries, Old Age Security, Family Allowance payments and Public Service pension costs. In addition, planned spending on aid to developing countries and on defence was reduced by several hundred million dollars. Much of the over-all 9.6 per cent spending increase is due to programs designed to protect those Canadians most in need, to provide support to sectors hard hit by the recession and to enhance the prospects of economic recovery.

Within this total expenditure plan of $88.9 billion, these Main Estimates provide for budgetary expenditures of $85.6 billion, and for $1.8 billion in loans, investments and advances. Within the over-all plan the Government has $0.9 billion in reserves to cover adjustments to statutory programs as well as $2.4 billion in envelope reserves to cover cost adjustments to other programs and to provide for planned but not yet announced initiatives. I should emphasize that these reserves are not free money for which no use has been found. A substantial portion is simply a prudent contingency fund against the inevitable uncertainties of precisely anticipating thousands of costs over one year in advance.

In regard to remaining reserves, Government decisions and approvals in principle have already been developed which effectively earmark the reserves for a variety of initiatives. Once the details of such items are finalized, and should any of the contingency funds be required, parliamentary approval will, of course, be sought through Supplementary Estimates.

The planned total outlays of $88.9 billion also reflect two other adjustments. First, Estimates must be adjusted down by the forecast $0.5 billion in repayments on loans issued in previous years. Second, since the Government cannot legally spend more money than Parliament authorizes, and in fact always spends less, a downward adjustment for the lapse of expenditure authority must be made, for which the current projection is $1.4 billion.

I would now like to focus on the $85.6 billion in budgetary expenditures provided for in these Main Estimates. Thirteen items account for about 80 per cent of the total increase of $12.7 billion in budgetary Main Estimates. These items include increases of $2.7 billion in payments to persons for Old Age Security, Guaranteed Income Supplement, spouse's allowances and the Government's contribution to Unemployment Insurance benefits. Increases of $2.2 billion occur through transfers to the Provinces under the Established Programs Financing Program, the Canada Assistance Plan and fiscal transfer payments. Public debt costs are up $1.8 billion. Other items in this category are petroleum incentives payments, National Defence, direct job creation, Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Trade Industrial Program of Industry, Trade and Commerce, payments to VIA Rail and the budget of the Canadian International Development Agency.

[Translation]

Although Hon. Members will find a host of explanations and information on changes that have been made as compared to last year's Estimates in the various documents I am tabling today and pertinent press releases, I would like to put this total increase into its proper perspective, namely, the economic environment in which we live and the effect of including in the Estimates some of the measures introduced by the Government last year.

[English]

We are all very much aware that the Canadian economy has been passing through one of the most difficult periods since the Second World War. While encouraging signs of improvement are beginning to emerge, particularly with regard to inflation and interest rates, we must be mindful that the recession has been deep and recovery will be gradual. As Members know, almost two-thirds of these budgetary Estimates are for statutory expenditures, thus of a non-discretionary nature. That is, they are based on continuing authority given by Acts of the current or previous Parliaments. These acts determine the basis whereby individuals, businesses, provincial and other Governments become entitled to receive federal funds, and in most cases the amount of money to be paid. I would like to speak briefly about just four of these payments which are directly, and particularly strongly, affected by current economic conditions.

First, public debt charges, which include the interest due and payable on outstanding debt as well as servicing costs and costs of issuing new debt. These costs, totalling $18.6 billion in 1983-1984, are $1.8 billion higher than the 1982-1983 Main Estimates level. This increase is attributable to the growth in total debt, partially offset by lower interest rates. A key factor in the rise in total debt is, of course, the very sharp decline in federal tax revenues as a result of the difficult economic circumstances.

Mr. Thacker: You got us into them.

Mr. Gray: Under the Established Programs Financing Act, 1977, the federal Government contributes to the financing of hospital insurance, medicare, extended health care and post-secondary education. The federal contribution consists of a combination of tax transfers and cash payments, the combined value of which grows with the total value of economic activity in Canada. If the tax transfer portion grows very slowly, the federal Government makes up the difference in increased direct cash payments. The depressed tax revenues which I just noted have caused a sharper rise in the cash portion of the federal payment under Established Programs Financing, which has increased $1.1 billion, or 21 per cent, to a total of $6.6 billion in the 1983-1984 Main Estimates.

As the Minister of Finance has also noted, we cannot expect a rapid recovery in our economy and the level of unemployment is of particular concern. While the Government has taken a number of measures to improve employment prospects, the unemployment outlook remains difficult. As a direct result these Main Estimates show a dramatic increase in the Government's contribution to Unemployment Insurance designed to reduce the financial burden on the unemployed. This year, $2.9 billion has been allocated to Unemployment Insurance, an increase of some $1.681 billion over the last fiscal year.

The final statutory payments I will mention are the federal contributions to the Provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan. The federal Government pays for 50 per cent of eligible provincial and municipal expenditures for assistance payments, welfare services and certain health services. We also cover one-half of the costs of child support services, such as foster care and daycare and a broad array of other family and social support services. During 1983-1984 it is estimated the federal Government will transfer $3.1 billion to continue these programs. This increase of $0.6 billion, or 21 per cent, over the 1982-1983 Main Estimates level is attributable in large measure to current economic conditions.

I noted earlier that the Government has taken a number of decisions in the past year not only to increase spending in existing programs to ease hardship and speed recovery, but has also implemented a number of new initiatives. Of course, since some of these initiatives were approved after the 1982-1983 Main Estimates were presented to Parliament, they have been funded through Supplementary Estimates in the current fiscal year.

I would like to mention just three of these items which are included in the Main Estimates for the first time in the 1983-84 documents which I have tabled today.

With the passage of legislation in June, 1982, the Petroleum Incentives Program became fully operational and the Supplementary Estimates (B) which I tabled last November included $1.8 billion for this item in the current fiscal year, 1982-83. These payments are included in the Main Estimates, for the first time in 1983-84, and account for $1.2 billion of the total change from 1982-83 Main Estimates.

Another new measure is the Small Business Investment Grant Program designed to assist small and medium-sized businesses. This new program, announced in the June, 1982 budget, accounts for $0.2 billion of the over-all increase from the 1982-83 Main Estimates.

The last item that I want to mention is the $0.2 billion increase due to funds included in 1983-84 Main Estimates for the New Employment Expansion and Development Program.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, these are only a few of the many programs and activities mentioned in the White paper. In fact, the Main Estimates contain hundreds of further changes, on both the plus and the minus side. I would therefore invite Hon. Members, if they require further information on the subject, to consult Parts I, II and III which I am tabling today, as well as the additional information appearing in the press releases.

[English]

Finally, I would like to focus on one other element of the budgetary Main Estimates, which is the total operating and capital costs of all federal Departments and agencies. The Department of National Defence has total operating and capital costs in these Estimates of $7.8 billion, an increase of $0.8 billion from 1982-83. This increase is in keeping with the Government's commitment to NATO to sustain the increase in defence expenditures by 3 per cent annually in real terms. A significant part of the growth continues to be devoted to the re-equipment and modernization of the Canadian Forces.

The total operating and capital expenditures of all other Departments and agencies is $12.8 billion in these Main Estimates. This cost of running the Government, up $1.1 billion from 1982-83, is increasing only about one-half as fast as total Main Estimates. The category of total spending has roughly only kept pace with inflation over the past six years, thus remaining constant in real terms, despite the growing number of new programs and increasing demands for federal Government services. This year, the share of these total operating and capital costs in budgetary Main Estimates is 15 per cent.

Of course, as I mentioned earlier, this area of spending has been particularly affected this year by the Government's six and five restraint program, since operating costs are in large measure accounted for by the salaries and wages of some 225,000 federal employees. As Members know, the salaries and wages of our employees have been limited as required by the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act. In addition, in preparing the detailed departmental budgets for non-personnel operating costs presented in these Estimates, the Government has limited Departments and agencies to a maximum adjustment of 6 per cent for the effects of inflation.

Of course, the total increase in operating costs is above 6 per cent, since there are additional resources required to enable the Government to develop and implement new policies and programs and to meet the increasing demands for existing program services.

In the same vein, restrictive adjustments have also been applied to annually authorized grants and contributions made to organizations outside the Government.

I would now like to say a few words about the growth in the Public Service as measured by the increase in the number of person-years. The Government believes that for 1983-84 it should keep the rate of growth of the Public Service in the 1 per cent range, despite the calls by many for expanding Government assistance. Therefore, the Treasury Board has informed Departments and agencies with large person-year requirements that their 1983-84 authorized person-year level is in fact lower in total by 0.2 per cent than the levels shown in the Blue Book. However, there was not time to reflect throughout the Main Estimates this decision to limit over-all growth to 1 per cent without significantly delaying the tabling date.

Therefore, the Main Estimates documents before the House indicate a 1983-84 total of 258,463 person-years for Departments and agencies whose personnel requirements are controlled by Treasury Board. This figure is 3,141 person-years, or 1.2 per cent, over the 1982-83 Main Estimates. However, I have just noted that the Treasury Board has already taken steps to reduce this to 1 per cent over-all growth. A large proportion of the over-all increase reflects short-term requirements for the implementation of recent Government initiatives, such as the NEED Program.

In reviewing the largest specific year-over-year increases, pressures for the provision of greater services to the public become even more apparent. The Canada Employment and Immigration Commission has increased by over 1,400 person-years. Besides the requirement of approximately 500 for the administration of the NEED Program, over 800 will be used to assist in the processing of claims for Unemployment Insurance. In the Department of Transport an additional 250 person-years will be used for regulatory activities related to air safety and the operation and maintenance of air navigation aids and facilities.

The RCMP requires an additional 343 person-years for law enforcement and demand-driven functions, such as provincial and municipal police agreements which are, of course, cost recoverable.

To conclude, I want to say as President of Treasury Board that I have set as a major priority the continuation of our policy of improving the management and efficiency of the federal Government. I am well aware of the difficulties of the task. However, I believe we can still further improve management in Government and the efficiency and effectiveness of Government as a whole. The consequences of the current economic situation pose difficulties for Government itself as well as for Canadians generally. But it has also produced a positive effect in making us demand the best from our systems, the best from our people and the best from ourselves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my colleagues and I briefly reviewed these Estimates in a briefing session which commenced at noon. These Estimates, which are massive, involve Part I and Part II, as set out by the Minister, together with 47 baby Blue Books. The Estimates disclose to the House and to the country an unconscionable amount of spending. They are expenditures that we as Members and our constituents cannot begin to fathom even if we were to work on them day after day.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) presented his demands to the House under the borrowing authority statute on February 17, he said that the spending for the next current year would increase by 9.6 per cent. That was a total, complete and fraudulent misrepresentation to the House. That misrepresentation was repeated this afternoon by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). He knows better. One is supposed to compare oranges and oranges, not oranges and apples. The President of the Treasury Board is comparing what he has spent so far in this fiscal year and what he intends to spend by March 31 with the Estimates for next year, which are always much too low.

Let me compare what he has said in the House in prior years with what he is saying now. In 1982-83, the Government produced its Estimates. I am sure Members will remember Part I of the Government Expenditure Plan. That book says that the Government would spend approximately $76,300 million. However, it spent $81,150 million. If you compare it against other items you will find that the Minister spent nearly $7 billion over and above what he said he was going to spend a year ago. What we are comparing here, when he says that his expenses are increasing at 9.6 per cent, are last year's Main Estimates plus Supplementary A, Supplementary B and Supplementary C with this year's Main Estimates. But this year's Main Estimates do not include an anticipated $600 million loss in Canada Post. This year's Main Estimates do not include what we are told is going to be required to continue with the further bail-out of Canadair and de Havilland.

• (1530)

What do the Estimates really include? They include the minimum amount that the Government intends to spend. Last year it came back to the House for $7 billion dollars worth of Supplementaries. Indeed, it has not come back for all of its Supplementaries yet. Supplementary C, which we do not have before the House yet, is going to be $1,850,017,341, and that is also included in these Estimates. We have a spending plan by a Government gone crazy, we do not know where they are going. The Government says that it has covered the contingencies by providing a 7 per cent central reserve and a 3 per cent envelope reserve. But all previous history indicates that these reserves are just not so. The fact is that if we go back over the history of this Government since it took office on February 18, 1980 we find that its expenses for the year 1980-1981 increased over the previous year by 13 per cent. Its expenses for the year 1981-1982 increased over the previous year by 17.6 per cent. Its expenses this year increased over last year by 17.8 per cent. Where are we going? They say it is going to increase 9.6 per cent, and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that you have no reason at all to believe them. Does anyone in this House have any reason to believe them?

An Hon. Member: No reason at all.

Mr. Smith: Oh ye of little faith.

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend says, "Oh ye of little faith". You would have to have faith to move mountains to believe them.

Mr. Kempling: Robbers.

Mr. Blenkarn: We know how they act with their former colleagues. That is how you can believe them. We know what standards of morality they have.

Mr. Kempling: They have none.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is how you can believe them. You know how they perform, that is how you believe them.

Mr. Kempling: No morals at all.

Mr. Smith: Wash your mouth out with soap.

Mr. Kempling: You should wash your morals out with soap.

Mr. Blenkarn: I thought it would be important that we take a look at some of the spending items in the Blue Book that we have analyzed in the brief time we have had.

First of all, I thought we might compare various kinds of things that the Government does. I thought we would compare, for example, salaries and wages. We are under the six and five program for salaries and wages. The salaries and wages paid by the Government this year will increase 8.8 per cent. That is where six and five is. Other personnel expenses—I do not know what they are, but they are personnel expenses—are going to increase by 13.5 per cent. The Government spending on transportation and communications—and bear in mind that a big part of that is Bell Telephone expenses that are frozen at six and five—are going to increase by 16 per cent. I suppose that is the extra gasoline required, or whatever, for a new fleet of Challenger jets.

There is one figure that I want to give you that I cannot believe. The Government says that its propaganda expenses are going to go down by 1.6 per cent. Perhaps we can analyze that as we go through the Blue Book to find out if in fact the propaganda exercise will only go down by 1.6 per cent.

But that is the only thing that goes down. Professional services go up by 15.6 per cent; rentals go up by 15.6 per cent; the purchase and repair of machinery goes up by 45.1 per cent; utility expenses go up by 14 per cent; construction of buildings goes up by 13.6 per cent and the purchasing of furnishings and fixtures in buildings goes up by 22.8 per cent. We have been told that it is the cost of the debt that is running up this budgetary deficit. That only goes up by 11.8 per cent.

I think we could then compare the expenditures by Department. The Government has broken the budget down into envelopes, and we all want to know what is in the envelope. In the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Energy envelope, goes up by 14 per cent. The Economic Development envelope goes up by 25.6 per cent. The Social Affairs envelope goes up by 19.3 per cent. Justice and Legal Affairs goes up by 15.1 per cent. Fiscal arrangements goes up by 10.6 per cent. External Affairs goes up by 12.7 per cent.

The Minister in his statement said that Defence was going up by 12.9 per cent. Again he is giving us a wrong story. The fact is that it is only 11.3 per cent. The reason is that he cut his Defence expenditures last year and now he is restoring them. Comparing Main Estimates with Main Estimates shows that Defence spending goes up by only 11.3 per cent.

I am not going to go through all these and bore everyone completely. I want to say that there is only one Department, one envelope in the whole bunch, that really does not go up at all beyond the six and five guidelines, and that is the cost of running this place. We all know the proclivity to waste that we have here, but our expenditures in this Parliament are only going up by 5.1 per cent. That is within the guidelines. We know what is wasted here, we know because we are here. We know what we could cut back in this place if we really wanted to, yet our expenses only go up 5.1 per cent. Think of what we could cut back if we really worked at it in other Departments, in other envelopes of this Government.

We have advocated to this House that a serious study should be made on the Estimates to cut them back, to get back to where we should be, so we will not have to continue to go to the market and borrow and borrow and borrow. There is unbelievable fat in these Estimates. It can be cut back, and it is a challenge to the committees of this House of Commons to tackle these estimated expenditures and cut them back.

In that respect, if the President of the Treasury Board had any real intention of trimming the fat in Government, he would form a special committee of this House to supervise the cutting back of Estimates. He would say to Departments, "I do not care what you would like to do. Here is what you can afford, trim it to that". This is a Government totally out of control. Expenditures have gone up in the 17 per cent range two years in a row, back-to-back. They are likely to go up 17 per cent this year even though the Government says it will be 9.6 per cent. This Government is out of control.

• (1540)

If you look at inflation, you will notice that with this depression we have had a lowering of inflation rates. Today the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) indicated in this House that the seasonally-adjusted inflation rate over the last three months was 3.2 per cent. If that is the case, why should Government expenditures be three times the rate of inflation in their increase? Why should the cost of Government creep up three times the inflation rate? Do we really need a positive increase over inflation by 6.4 per cent? Do we need that much more Government in Canada, or does this Government want us to have that much more government? Is this the kind of Government that gets Chairman Mao to do its projections? That is what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) suggested.

I suggest that if we allow this kind of expenditure program which is now set to go at a rate at least three times higher than what the Government says is the current inflation rate, we have done a great disservice to our constituents and to Canada. These Estimates are improper, wasteful and must be turned back.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this really is a "Gray Day" for Canada. We have just had the opportunity of perusing about three kilograms of "Gray" matter in an effort to understand what it was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) was telling us a few days ago. At that time he said, "Just hold off, Canadians, because I promise you I am not going to say a single word of what will be in the $19 billion request I am bringing forward today, but just wait until February 22 because it will all be in the Estimates and you will have a very clear idea of what the Government of Canada is going to do with your money."

Something is drastically wrong. We have just had the opportunity, not to study carefully I admit, but to peruse the Estimates for the forthcoming year. Either there is a plan for the Government to do nothing particularly new other than simply lift all of the budgets up a number of percentage points, which I will come to in a moment, or the Minister of Finance was unintentionally misleading Members of Parliament and Canadians.

When you look at the documents before us, some very puzzling points come to mind. For example, I remember quite distinctly the Minister of Finance saying that Government expenditures this year will be up not 6 per cent, as the guidelines of the Government would indicate, but 9.6 per cent.

A lot of senior citizens in this country are puzzled because their increase was restricted to 6 per cent. A lot of mothers in this country were expecting a higher increase in their Family Allowance rather than having it capped at 6 per cent. The Government said it would ignore all their six and five programs and lift their expenditures by 9.6 per cent.

We talked to a number of officials from the Government who presumably are knowledgeable on how the Government plans to spend its money. They suggest that the budgetary Main Estimates for 1983 are going to go up 17.4 per cent. I think you can use some peculiar form of rationale, smoke and mirrors and some creative accounting to justify those two figures, 9.6 and 17.4. However, this document tells us that the Main Estimates, that area of Government expenditure where the Government has discretionary power, will increase more than 17 per cent in the coming year.

What does that say about the Government's attitude toward its six and five program? What does it say about the Government's attitude toward honesty, fair play and being forthright with the people of Canada? They say different things, depending on which Minister is making the comment. Whether that is intentional or not I leave up to people's speculation.

At this point one begins to wonder whether there is some effort being made on behalf of Government Members to encourage the public of Canada to think in creative ways about what it is they are doing. Canadians were waiting for the Government to indicate today how it will be spending the taxpayers' money and borrowed money in the year ahead. They have waited to see what the Government plans to do.

I note with interest that the Government has given up forecasting. It has made so many errors in the last 12 months that any attempt to forecast for another year or more would be totally futile. It simply does not have the ability, the talent or the technology to make any real comment about where the economy is going. For that reason I say that these Estimates are virtually useless at this point.

The Estimates that have been tabled today will not help Members of Parliament, Canadians or anyone else to understand what the Government is trying to do, unless it is trying to do nothing. That they will understand. We cannot rely on the Estimates before us. Let me give a single example of that.

A gross distortion of information has been presented in the Estimates for the past year and for this year. I read with interest in one of the summary statements that direct job creation under CEIC was going to increase by $216 million. When we look at what actually happened, we find that expenditures did not increase by $216 million. As the Government's own forecaster suggested, they increased to approximately $482 million. That is a 125 per cent error in the Estimates. When you look carefully at what that means, not only was there a 125 per cent error in the Estimates of last year in that very critical area of job creation, but it will increase total job-creation expenditures for this fiscal year by only 21 per cent.

What kind of signal is that to the people of Canada? The Minister of Finance said that unemployment will be dramatically high this year, and that it is one of the highest priorities of this Government. However, when you look at what the Government is estimating for 1983 in the area of job-creation, you find that they are going to be expanding by only 21 per cent. The figures before us do not say that. They say that job creation will go up by 170 per cent. That looks good, a 170 per cent increase. However, when you look at the fine tuning, when you do the simple calculations, you find that it is not a 170 per cent but a 21 per cent increase. That is their commitment for real job creation in 1983?

One can only say, Mr. Speaker, just based on that one simple example—and we have not even begun to analyze these Estimates which are critical for 1983 job creation—that the Government is misleading the House in a dramatic way.

However, let us consider something else which we find in these Estimates, Mr. Speaker. I am assuming, first of all, that we all agree that job creation is important. We would like to see more money moved into that particular area. We find from the Estimates, then, in terms of direct job creation under CEIC,—that $100 million more than was spent last year will be invested in job creation. We also noticed that a certain amount of money has gone for PIP grants. Not $100 million,

Mr. Speaker, but $1.15 billion has gone for PIP grants to encourage, by and large, the multinational oil companies to explore the frontier areas of Canada. I am not making a judgment on whether or not that is a wise investment, but I personally do not think it is a particularly wise investment. But let us just say that $1.15 billion is going to assist, by and large, the multinational oil companies operating in Canada to explore in the frontier areas. How many jobs will that $1.5 billion create, Mr. Speaker? If we are seriously interested in job creation, that is the most unlikely place to spend a single dollar. The jobs created in that sector under the PIP grants will give us less return than spending money in any other sector of Government spending. Setting aside the rhetoric and looking at where the Government is actually going to be putting its job-creation money, Mr. Speaker, tells us that they are not serious when it comes to job creation because their actions go completely against the rhetoric which we hear from some of the more progressive Members opposite.

I notice with interest, as well, where some of the Government priorities lie, again without necessarily making a judgment at this point. I notice that when it comes to Government spending for operating and in capital costs, over-all Government spending by the Minister of Finance's own admission, is going to increase by 9.6 per cent. Let us say for a moment that we believe him. I personally do not believe him on this point, but if we take him at his word, he says spending for Government operating and capital costs will increase by 9.6 per cent. But there is another area, which is quite different from the 9.6 per cent area, and that is the area of Defence. Defence expenditures appear to be going up 11.3 per cent. It seems that in terms of over-all Government spending, we have identified military spending as a higher priority than other areas. That is an observation. I also notice something, Mr. Speaker, which I believe is a very sad comment on the Government's position towards war veterans. We realize as Members of Parliament how much time it takes to process concerns brought to our attention by veterans. Yet, in terms of person-years, one of the few Departments in the Government which is going to have a decrease of 11.4 per cent in person-years is the Department of Veterans Affairs. Some veterans in my constituency have waited one year, and some two years, simply to have their applications processed through to completion. To find that man-years in the Department of Veterans Affairs are going to be decreased by 11.4 per cent leaves one simply speechless.

We also notice, Mr. Speaker, there is no reference in these Estimates of Government expenditures for 1983 to de Havilland and Canadair when they come back asking for $100 million each, or $200 million or $300 million. There is no mention of that, when those companies are on record themselves as saying, "We will be back asking for more when we require more." There is no mention of that, Mr. Speaker. There is also no mention of the contract work which the Government relies on to a large extent. There is an attempt, and I commend the Government for it, to evaluate carefully its expansion in terms of man-years to ensure that the return to the Government is maximized. But when I see there is no mention of money set aside for contract work, and knowing the amount of contract work which takes place, particularly with the federal Government, I believe we are leaving a large void, a large vacuum in these Estimates.

If the Government, and the Minister himself, are serious about these Estimates, when these Estimates go to the respective committees they should receive the kind of thorough analysis which they deserve, not the usual sit around and chit-chat with the Minister for an hour or two, a handful of questions and a lot of gobbledygook on behalf of the Minister trying to skate around the issues. Then we vote, and the majority of the Government Members vote in favour and the Opposition vote against, and we all go home for the evening. That is not the kind of examination, study and investigation which Canadians want, Mr. Speaker, during these very critical times.

When we discuss those Estimates in the House of Commons or in committee, what is our goal? What is the point of these Estimates? What is the point of our discussion, our analysis, our examination? Are we attempting to find ways and means of developing a full employment option for this country? Are we trying to reduce Government spending by a certain amount? Are we attempting to support certain kinds of industries or provide certain kinds of services to Canadians? What is it, Mr. Speaker, that we are attempting to do with this examination? If we are simply examining it for the sake of examining it, then, of course, it is not going to be an appropriate investigation. Therefore, before we go into committees to examine these Estimates, surely we need to have some kind of strategy, some kind of game plan, some kind of program which will direct us in our inquiries to see if in fact we are getting the "bang for the buck" which Canadians ought to be receiving.

In conclusion then, Mr. Speaker, I make an appeal on behalf of the New Democratic Party to the Minister: when we have an opportunity to evaluate these Estimates in detail, as the Minister has indicated in his speech, would he give us a framework within which to operate, a strategy, so that our examination can be aimed toward some purpose, some goal, so that there is some objective which the examination is attempting to achieve.

We look forward to getting the Estimates into committee as quickly as possible. In attempting to digest these Estimates, however, Mr. Speaker, I think that a great deal of that enthusiasm and commitment to do the job well will be eliminated because we all know how successful these Estimates have been in years past at predicting and explaining the reality of the Canadian economy, and going in with that cloud over us, I suspect that once again this examination is going to be marginal, if not completely fruitless.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Before proceeding to the question period, the Chair should remind Hon. Members that it has the discretion of limiting the time for the proceedings on questions. I would propose to the House, in view of the Minister's statement having lasted some 23 minutes, approximately—and this is a proposal from the Chair—that we set the time for the question period at some 20 minutes. And unless there are some strong objections from Hon. Members at this time, I think that at about 4.20 p.m. we should end the time provided for questions.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, going back to the last time there was a statement on motions, I do not remember any correlation between the length of the Minister's remarks and the questions. I believe we can, on this occasion, agree to that, but I would much appreciate the question period being controlled by the Chair in accordance with the flow of questions and the sense of the House.

• (1600)

With all due respect, I would also ask that Your Honour monitor the answers on this historic occasion of the first statement on motions since December, 1981. I do not feel that this should be a precedent which is set in stone, for I want some time to think about this and discuss it with my colleagues.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the suggestion that rather than allocating a certain period of time, we should leave it to the discretion of the Chair to decide when a meaningful interchange of questions and answers has terminated. I know that the Minister himself, judging from his comments to us earlier and the thrust of his speech, is an individual who is open and quite prepared to do his best at this point, to examine and clarify any questions raised by Hon. Members.

In the spirit of the Minister's comments, I would suggest that rather than setting aside a prescribed period of time, let us just see, and perhaps after only ten minutes Your Honour might, in your wisdom, find that the ebb and flow is sufficient, or perhaps that it should continue for 30 minutes.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House believe your proposition is a reasonable one. I might say that we are frequently urged by Hon. Members opposite to have more statements by Ministers. Quite frankly, I would think that would be a healthy trend, but it cannot be totally open-ended. There must be reasonable limits. I welcome Your Honour's proposition.

Mr. Malone: I agree with the Parliamentary Secretary when he says it would be healthy for Parliament to have more statements on motions. With regard to the question as to whether or not there should be fixed times attached to the length of the question period, may I put forward at least one argument for Your Honour's consideration as to why that is probably better left to your discretion? If we state that the period will be 20 minutes, we will have then signalled to the Minister answering the questions how much time he needs to use up. He could have two questions and two ten-minute answers. He would then know he would have to work until 20 after.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Not Herb. Be fair.

Mr. Malone: If it is left to Your Honour's discretion, then I believe the Minister would be more likely to be psychologically forced into the position of answering the questions that Hon. Members might ask. On the other hand, if he knows that all he must do is use up 20 minutes, then it is to his advantage. He would simply need to know how much time he has for buffoonery, without necessarily responding to the question. I think that if Your Honour believes it should be 20 minutes, Your Honour's judgment would be fine, but it should not be a preknown fact.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair thanks Hon. Members for their wise comments. Standing Orders do create some difficulty for the Chair in the proceedings inasmuch as they leave the matter entirely to the discretion of the Chair. I have made good note of Hon. Members' responses to the Chair's suggestion and I will be guided accordingly.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), dealing with some of the questions which have been raised by the two Hon. Members who spoke previously, and which we attempted to explore in the lock-up.

First, last year the Government forecast an increase in outlays of 11.7 per cent in the Main Estimates while, in actual fact, the increase in Government expenditures was 17.8 per cent. I believe my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), made that point. The Minister is now forecasting an increase in Government expenditures of 9.6 per cent. What assurances can the Minister give the House that he can hold Government outlays to 9.6 per cent in the absence of any budget or revenue forecast or, in fact, any responsible fiscal forecast?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, what we are discussing here is a comparison of the total outlays as announced to the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in his statement last week and as restated in Part I of the Estimates, amounting to $81,150,000,000 for 1982-83, with a forecast of total outlays for 1983-84, giving a projected increase in total outlays of 9.6 per cent.

However, there are some elements in the total outlays projected for 1983-84 which indicate why we basically are discussing a forecast. We cannot be totally certain what the demand will be on the Unemployment Insurance Fund. It may require more, but it will hopefully require even less than we have estimated we will have to provide.

With respect to our transfers to the Provinces under the Established Programs Financing legislation, we have estimated that our cash transfers to the Provinces will have to increase because the tax revenues which they had expected to receive under this legislation are likely to be less because of the weakened economic situation. This may also change.

Therefore, we are giving a picture at a point in time as to what we expect the total outlays for 1983-84 to be. But we are obviously discussing a forecast. We will work in order to stick to it, but there are certain factors not under our control which will affect the amounts of money which we will have to provide under statutes passed by this Parliament.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address another question to the President of the Treasury Board. I can understand his problem in dealing with a forecast which is at a special moment in time. However, what I cannot understand is the difficulty which the Government seems to have on its side of the House in getting its own numbers together. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has already discussed the discrepancy in the job program, and I would like to address one concerning the housing program.

The allocation for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation shows a substantial increase this year of about $482 million. In the Blue Book Estimates, the Government states that $122 million of this amount is included for the purposes of extending the Government aid program to first-time home buyers. In his statement last week, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) used the figure of $240 million. There is a discrepancy of $120 million in the space of a few days. Could the Minister explain why it is not possible to get better numbers on some of these spending programs?

Mr. Malone: What's a million?

Mr. Blenkarn: What's a hundred million?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I think it is the custom, when one deals with specific programs, to address the question to the Minister responsible. However, I would remind the Hon. Member that subsequent to the Main Estimates for 1982-83 which were tabled last year, we had the June budget and the October economic statement, and both of those declarations proposed to Parliament substantial additional expenditures in such areas as housing. The Hon. Member should take that fact into account when making her comparison with regard to numbers.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board another question. I am not referring to figures which are tabled months after each other. I am referring to program figures or Estimates which are given in this House by the Government within days of each other, which indicate that the Government's financial figures given to us are unreliable, and not to be trusted.

According to the Privy Council Estimates, this year the Government will spend about $4 billion on commissions of inquiry, task forces and others.

Mr. Gray: Four billion?

Miss Carney: How much of this amount will be related to the Macdonald Commission on the economy?

Mr. Gray: Did the Hon. Member say $4 billion or $4 million?

Miss Carney: I said $4 billion, which is the figure in my notes, but I will have to check the Estimates.

Mr. Gray: Yes. I respectfully suggest that the Hon. Member check her numbers. I think that most of the amounts with respect to the Macdonald Commission on the economy will be dealt with in Supplementary Estimates. I will provide her with the information, hopefully during the course of this question period, with respect to what is in these Estimates on the Macdonald Commission.

• (1610)

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister about the Government spending on propaganda this year. He will recall that on page 15 of the June budget paper last year it was set out that in fiscal years 1982-83 and 1983-84 there would be $15 million for each of those years cut from departmental publishing and advertising, for a total of $30 million.

In view of the fact that on page 1-48 of the Main Estimates under the heading "Information" the difference between 1982-83 and 1983-84 is only about $5.5 million, could the Minister tell us where the other $24.5 million is in cuts in propaganda as promised by the former Minister of Finance.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I reject the use of the word "propaganda". The Government is carrying out activities through advertisements to inform the public, in exactly same way the Conservative Government of Ontario and the Conservative Government of Alberta are doing. My hon. friend never complains about their activities which, in many ways, go beyond anything done by the federal Government.

I will be providing my hon. friend with further information in answer to his question. I can say that work is being done with respect to restraint of advertising expenditures which, if my efforts are successful, will go beyond what is in the Blue Book.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, these figures were included in the June budget under the former Minister of Finance. Is the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) now telling the House that he has not given the sort of attention that is necessary to these Government-wide figures on information, propaganda, advertising and publications—he can use his own terms? Is he saying that he has not bothered to check to see whether the $30 million promised in the June budget has been cut out and, if so, where is the other $24.5 million?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I am not only working to see that what was said in the June budget was carried out, I am working to see to what extent we can go beyond that. I hope that when this becomes more evident even my hon. friend will applaud these efforts.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). In Table 5 on page 1-49 under the heading "All Other Expenditures", the 1983-84 Estimates show $7.5 billion, while the 1982-83 Estimates were $3.5 billion. That is an increase of 88 per cent, Mr. Speaker. Given that inflation is approximately 8.3 per cent, how does the Minister account for this serious increase?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, there is a whole range of increases that are not connected with the rate of inflation, nor should they be. We are providing substantial additional funding in support of housing, and substantial additional funding in support of job creation, both directly through Government efforts and in support of the private sector. There are a number of items like that which I do not think, nor do I think the Canadian public believes, should be limited to an increase equal to the rate of inflation. If that were the case, we would not be responding to the additional needs and requirements caused by our difficult economic situation. This is the explanation my hon. friend is seeking.

Mr. Wright: Mr. Speaker, it is too bad that this could not be translated into jobs. As the former Minister of Public Works knows, his program was a failure.

In Table 5, under "Purchase, Repair and Upkeep", the 1983-84 Estimates are $1.056 billion, while the 1982 Estimates were $726 million. That is an increase of 45 per cent. Given the inflation figures that I have just quoted, could the Minister tell the House why there is such an increase?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the need to repair and maintain Government buildings and facilities is not linked to the rate of inflation. The rate at which things wear out or need to be repaired has something to do with the degree of actual use and normal maintenance requirements. I wish it were possible to limit these expenditures to the rate of inflation in some cases. I would ask my hon. friend what the facts are with respect to the need to carry out repairs and maintenance in order to effectively preserve these important assets belonging to the Canadian people. I think we have to deal with the reality which may or may not have anything to do with the rate of inflation.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister a question about VIA Rail. On page 29-82, Vote 80 I notice that the 1983-84 Estimates are for $755.4 million, while the 1981-82 Estimates were for $540.617 million. Last year there was a 20 per cent cutback in VIA Rail services in order to save $100 million. If you deduct the $100 million from the 1982-83 figure, it means the Government is now asking for $200 million more in these Estimates for VIA Rail, with a 20 per cent cutback.

To corroborate that, in Part I of the Blue Book at page 49, the Minister said:

> In the Department of Transport, of the total 451 increase in person-years, 155 are required for regulatory activities related to air safety, 104 will be used for the operation and maintenance of air navigation aids and facilities, and 127 have been approved for the Marine Program for requirements such as search and rescue, improved vessel traffic management services and a transfer of responsibilities from the Department of Public Works.

Man-years for VIA Rail are not mentioned anywhere. Where will the $200 million be spent—will it be totally on administration?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I could suggest that this quetion be referred to the responsible Minister, but I will try to assist my hon. friend by giving him the information that I have.

First of all—and I stand to be corrected—when it comes to man-years for VIA Rail, that is not part of the controlled person-years under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Board. In any event, my hon. friend may recall that we had Supplementary Estimates last year of $137.2 million in order to reflect more accurately the cost of providing rail passenger service.

What we are doing, basically, is to carry over to this year what was in last year's Main Estimates and what was in the Supplementary Estimates, with the exception of some additional funding provided last year for assistance to CN, CP and VIA employees who were affected by changes in railway passenger service.

The further increase of 1983-84 over forecast outlays of 1982-83, include $73 million additional payments for services provided by CP and CN, costed in accordance with the provision of the Canadian Transport Commission costing order R-6313 and the Commission's staff estimates of appropriate inflation indices for railway costs in 1983-84.

My hon. friend will recall that this is basically done after the fact, which is something that Members of the House have questioned from time to time. This matter is under review. I am also informed that the figures my hon. friend mentioned include the provision of $43 million for additional capital expenditures, of which the most significant item is further expenditure for the purchase of ten LRC train sets. This is a most useful support for Canadian industrial activity, especially since it involves something that the NDP spokesman claims to be interested in, and that is the use of significant Canadian technological development.

I hope this information will be of assistance to my hon. friend.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I stand to be corrected but I thought that several years ago we passed an Estimate which was a pay-out to CN, forgiving it for $600 million or $800 million so that it could operate on its own, as a Crown corporation ought to operate, and compete in the sector.

Is the Minister now saying that there is an extra $47 million in capital expenditures being given to VIA Rail in order to help it along, even though it is supposed to be running on its own? Did I understand him correctly as saying that some of that $200 million was designed as a kind of severance pay to employees who had been injured because of the cutback of 20 per cent of rail services?

• (1620)

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, again I think a detailed answer to this question should be given by the responsible Minister. I am told that there was funding provided in the Supplementary Estimates last year to assist in the adjustment of CN, CP and VIA Rail employees affected by the cutback in railway passenger services.

Again this is not a matter I claim to follow in depth or in detail, but I do not think either the House or the Government has taken a decision that VIA Rail is to be immediately self-sustaining. Instead, the decision of the House was that the provision of railway services was a justified need and that, therefore, the House should provide payments to VIA Rail to enable that particular level of service to be maintained. This is why there was an amount in last year's Main Estimates that was approved by the House, and this is why there was a further amount approved by the House in the Supplementary Estimates. This is being picked up again in the Main Estimates for 1983-84. Of course it is up to the House to decide whether or not the amounts in question are to be approved.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question for the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) dealing with the amount of money per job created in the area designated as PIP grants, with which the Minister is familiar. While I realize he may not have the figure available, will he give us some general indication as to what it would cost under that particular sector from a job-creation cost point of view?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I regret that I do not have information about the cost per job likely to be created by PIP grants. I remind my Hon. friend that PIP was not intended to respond to the need for short-term job creation. Its purpose was to carry out a long-term and long-range program to develop our own Canadian oil and gas energy resources. It is part of a long-range effort by the Government, widely supported by the Canadian people, to develop self-sufficiency in oil and gas and to do so in a way which provides opportunities for Canadian industrial and regional benefits, both with respect to the provision of machinery and equipment and also jobs.

One has to look at PIP in a somewhat different way than one looks at the NEED Program, which was directly related to short-term job creation of a kind that, hopefully, will leave some lasting benefit. However, I do not think one would expect it to have exactly the same benefit from PIP and the results sought from it, in terms of creating a basically Canadian oil and gas industry in the hands of Canadians for the benefit of Canadians. PIP is a longer-term program.

While I will see what figures I can provide for my hon. friend in terms of job creation, I would say that this is a somewhat different matter from the type of jobs we hope to create and are creating under the NEED Program.

We are carrying out a long-term development of something which is basic to the well-being of our whole Canadian industrial base. It is reasonably well known that the oil and gas industry is not labour-intensive. Be that as it may, if it is not directly labour-intensive, it is still an outlet for Canadian professional services and, hopefully, for Canadian machinery and equipment. It is a basis for thousands of other jobs over the years in Canadian industrial sectors that will benefit from having a strong Canadian oil and gas sector. I think the Canadian public will very much agree with the approach I have described.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, sometimes one wishes one had not asked questions which allowed the Minister to go off on so many tangents. I will try to be more specific in my last question.

When we go into the respective committees to examine the Estimates in detail, does the Minister feel that there will be sufficient information to understand the priorities of the Government, so that we can evaluate the Estimates for particular areas within some framework and understand clearly what it is the Government of Canada is attempting to do today?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I am told that there is no Parliament in the world which has so much information from the executive side of Government with respect to its expenditure programs. When one looks at the quantity of material which I tabled, it would be hard for any reasonable person to say that we are not making a very sincere and substantial effort to provide not only a lot of information but to provide information in a meaningful form.

I suppose it is always possible to bring about improvements. In fact, I said in my speech in the House that I intended to consult with Hon. Members as to how we could improve the format of Part II in the Blue Book. We have made some very substantial strides forward, not only in the quantity of information provided, but in its over-all quality.

I suppose we could go further. An effort was made to inform some Opposition spokespersons in the brief period available before I tabled the Estimates. If Hon. Members wanted to do their homework using the information provided, they would certainly be in a position to carry out a very meaningful investigation, not only of the Government's expenditure programs but of the priorities underlying them.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, Canadians have been deluged with bumper stickers and various advertising programs calling for six and five. The Minister has now admitted that the Main Estimates for 1983-84 will be up 9.6 per cent over 1982-83.

Will the Minister admit in good faith that once the Supplementaries are in, A, B, C and D, for the year 1983-84, the percentage increase will be closer to 17 per cent or 18 per cent, which will be a similar increase in terms of what Government expenditures have been in 1981-82 over the year before and in 1982-83 over the year before?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I am really not in a position to agree with my hon. friend. We certainly intend to make a very important and substantial effort to remain within the expenditure framework reflected by the total outlays figure. As I said to my hon. friend, there are certain factors which are not within the Government's control with respect to programs such as Unemployment Insurance and other statutory programs involving transfers to individuals, to businesses, and to provincial and municipal Governments. The Government is obliged to carry out what the statutes in question indicate. If because of a decline, for example, in revenues generated by the tax points allowed to a provincial Government, it is not getting the revenues it expected, the federal Government has no alternative but to increase the cash payments required under the established programs legislation.

If unemployment continues at high levels or even goes up higher—and I hope this never happens—the Government will be obliged to increase its payment to the Unemployment Insurance Fund. There are certain factors which we can forecast to the best of our ability but which are beyond our absolute control.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, that of course is true, but from all the data which the Minister has and based on historical projections of the amount of the Supplementary Estimates, will he agree and admit that when we get to this time next year and look at 1984-85 the percentage increase this year over last year will likely again be in the order of 17 per cent or 18 per cent?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to agree or to admit that. Let us see what happens. Let us hope that things improve in the economy so that some of these forecasted expenditures do not have to be carried out at the level we have here. Perhaps they will be even less than 9.6 per cent. On the other hand, as I said to my hon. friend, you cannot say at this point that events will not develop so that we have to make payments above the forecast level. There is a possibility we will go above this. But we are giving a forecast at this point in time to the best of the information we have. All I can say is, let us see what happens, as the Hon. Member puts it, when we meet on this subject this time next year.

• (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Chair, guided as it is by the wise comments made earlier at the beginning of question period, I proposes at this time to recognize two more Members who have risen; the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), after which we will revert to Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). I know it is difficult for him to answer questions that should be directed to appropriate Ministers, but in view of the fact he was recently Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and DREE, perhaps he could help me with the problem I have.

At the top of page 17 in Part I of the Estimates, funding continues for the organization of the pulp and paper industry. This troubles me because Canada had built one of the most modern steel industries in the world on the principle of capital cost allowance. If the steel industry can become modern in terms of world competition, why is that that the pulp and paper companies in certain parts of Canada have to rely on Government grants? Is it because they have been drawing down too much of their earnings in the form of dividends instead of using the money for capital replacement in order to remain modern, not requiring Government assistance?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that back, I think, in 1979 the federal Government and the provincial Governments of eastern Canada, including the Conservative Governments of Ontario, New Brunswick and those other Governments that were Conservative at the time, agreed with one another that it was in the over-all public interest, not only in their region but in all of Canada to lever several billion dollars in additional investment from the private sector, the pulp and paper companies to enable them to modernize and upgrade so that employment would be stabilized and so they could meet competition from companies in the southern United States, where there are faster growing trees and totally new plants.

As a consequence, we have had the results we have been seeking from several hundred million dollars in joint investment by federal and provincial Governments. We have had investment by the private sector in modernizing our pulp and paper companies which will turn out to be several billion dollars. We have stabilized employment and we have made our industry in eastern Canada more competitive in a way that would not otherwise be the case. We have taken steps in the best interests of the entire country.

I invite my hon. friend to take this up with his colleagues, the Conservative Members of his caucus from New Brunswick, Ontario and Nova Scotia. They will give him the same explanation I have given him, and an even fuller one, if at all possible. They will strongly dissent from any suggestion by him that this program is not in the interests of their area or of the country as a whole.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the answer of the President of the Treasury Board because it does not specifically address the question I asked.

I appreciate the need to modernize plants in those areas, but is it because the draw downs in dividends have been too heavy for companies to take advantage of capital cost allowance in the management of their balance sheet, as the steel industry has done and as other pulp and paper industries in Canada have done—as they have done on the West Coast? Why is it necessary for the Government to intervene where there has been less than good management, when the Government does not have to intervene where there has been good management?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I regret that I do not have any detailed information at hand that would be available to the Minister responsible for Forestry or to my successor, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley). The amounts are in the Estimates so that we can carry out our side of the agreements which were signed by Conservative and other provincial Governments with respect to the modernization of the pulp and paper sector of eastern Canada. Subject to correction when it comes to western Canada, we have provided assistance in other ways, marketing assistance through the COMDE Program. I could be mistaken, but we have provided assistance in some cases through the DREE Program in some of the Provinces. We have said that we are willing to sit down with the provincial Governments in Western Canada to see if we could develop a program equivalent to that already in place in eastern Canada.

I am not in a position to say what factors make the pulp and paper industry in eastern Canada differ from the steel industry, and so on, but I do know that if we had not done this we would have imperilled, in fact lost, tens of thousands of jobs in areas represented by colleagues of the Hon. Member, and by his friend in his caucus.

Mr. Huntington: Address the question, Herb.

Mr. Gray: We would have failed to take steps that were strongly urged upon us by provincial Governments made up of the same Party he says he is a part of. The debate is not between myself and my hon. friend; the debate is as much or more between him and his colleagues in his Party from Eastern Canada. I hope those colleagues will note what he said and they will work it out in their caucus along with all the other things that they have to work out.

Mr. Lewis: We have no Gillespies.

Mr. Lang: You wish you did.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I hope I will get answers from the Minister that will not get buried in that sort of political flim-flam in which he likes to indulge. I would refer the Minister to Table 2.1 and 2.2 of Part I of the Government expenditure plan. Along the same line as the point discussed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), I would like to remind the Minister that for years many of us have been complaining about the totally misleading impression left by the tables as we see them at the beginning of Chapter 2 of the expenditure plan. To this extent, I think the Minister would agree that total outlays for 1982-1983 as shown are not anywhere near reality because they were prepared for publication in this Blue Book at least six weeks ago. They were closed at the end of December, 1982, and we still have three months to go to complete fiscal 1982-1983.

Therefore, we have not seen Final Estimates or Estimates C. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who has seen so many of those, will tell you that those are usually very interesting Supplementary Estimates, and they are usually the biggest ones. The figure of $81.150 billion may be many billions of dollars greater. In addition to which, there are only two figures in the 1983-1984 column which may have, shall we say, some accuracy. One is the projection of the budgetary expenditures, and the second is loans. There are no Supplementary Estimates A; there are no Supplementary Estimates B and there are no Supplementary Estimates C. Therefore, the whole table which shows changes year by year of the expenditures pales off into something that is totally incomplete and misleading. Can the Minister give us more accurate figures for the total outlays of 1982-1983? What does he anticipate as President of the Treasury Board? This is something we want to know because we are being asked, at the same time as we are starting to consider this, to consider borrowing authority for another $14 billion for 1983-1984. Therefore, the information is very pertinent now and not six months hence. I apologize for the length of the question, but can he give us more precise information as to 1982-83 and 1983-84?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the figure in Part I, Table 2.1, includes an amount for final Supplementaries. We will be tabling them in the House before too long, and the amounts and exact details will be available.

With respect to the proposed expenditures for 1983-84, the Member is right to the extent that this Table is something of a shorthand expression of the projected total outlays. But these not only cover the amounts in the Blue Book, they also cover, as the Table says, amounts for loans, investments and advances. They cover amounts for a central reserve to cover adjustments to statutory programs. They cover envelope reserves, expenditures which will be reflected in the Supplementary Estimates once decisions are taken on new expenditure programs or the adjustment of existing expenditure programs.

There is also an allowance for lapses, in other words for all the moneys proposed in the Blue Book not being spent, as well as an adjustment or allowance for repayment of previous years' loans.

I will go over these amounts again for the main budgetary Estimates of $85.618 billion, for loans investment and advances we have $1.843 billion. There is a central reserve of $891 million. There are envelope reserves of $2.452 billion. From these amounts we have to deduct the allowance for lapses of $1.407 billion and the repayment of previous year's loans in the amount of $497 million. When the first group of numbers I gave are added up and the last two are deducted from them you get the figure in the final column of Table 2.1 of $88.9 billion.

As I said, I agree that Table 2.1 itself is rather abbreviated, but all this other information is displayed in various tables throughout the Part I expenditure plan and was also contained in my statement earlier this afternoon.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, just for the Minister's edification, may I suggest that he look at Table 2.2 where the figures come out the same, $88.9 billion. Included in there are the envelope reserves and the provision for lapses. Therefore, there is no difference.

If the figure of $87.852 billion for budgetary expenditures is firm but contains the provision for some flexibility—which it must—such as reserves for the envelopes and adjustment for the lapses, what is the purpose of bringing in supplementary reserves on three different occasions, which will bump up the total of $88.9 billion or the $87.852 billion for budgetary expenses to almost $95 billion, if one looks at the projections of the last few years?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, any use of the envelope reserve will have to be reflected in Supplementary Estimates tabled in the House and voted on in the House. I do not see it as bumping up the amounts.

Incidentally, when my hon. friend's Party was in Government, they took great pride in the fact that they were instituting this program and expenditure management system. We are simply carrying forward the elements of the system and displaying it in the way that it was first presented, if I am not mistaken, by my hon. friend's Government, although I am told, some substantial work on this system was done by the Government that was in office prior to 1979. If there are some qualms about the way things are displayed under it, I suggest that responsibility has to be shared by both sides of the House for what we have here today, in terms of the form of presentation of the Estimates.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to compliment the Minister on the form of his presentation, if not the substance. If I had the opportunity to ask a question, I would have inquired whether the little six and five stickers will be replaced by ones that say 9.6.

However, I would suggest that we have seen today the parliamentary tradition carried out as I understand it. We have had the Minister come to the House and make a statement.

We have had the opportunity on this side for our Members to be briefed. There have been replies by the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party. As well, there was a brief question period which followed the flow and ebb of what should happen in the House as we suggested earlier.

Our objections in the past have been about seeing Government policies, such as the Government reply to the Kent Commission report, stated on university campuses. We believe that it demeans this House of Parliament. We find that to be totally offensive to the way the public and representatives of the public should find out about Government policy.

I do not want this to go to the Minister's head, but I suggest that this is the way it should happen and we commend today's practice to the Government in the future.

Mr. Gray: Briefly, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I appreciate my hon. friend's comments and I will draw them to the attention of my colleagues. I do want to point out to him, however, that the Government, as far as I am aware, never said that it would limit all of its expenditures to 6 per cent and 5 per cent. What it was limiting was very clearly stated in the June budget and, in fact, it would not be legally possible to limit all its expenditures to 6 per cent and 5 per cent since there are statutes passed by this Parliament calling for a certain formula for expenditures which we have to obey, as we are doing in the material tabled today.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ALTHOUSE—GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES NOT CONTAINED IN ESTIMATES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I did not hurry to raise this because it is so rare that we get a ministerial statement in the House. I did not want to intervene in that process.

However, there was a matter arising out of question period which I think should be dealt with by this body because I believe it deals with the ancient rights and privileges of Members of this House. My understanding of the basic tenets of the parliamentary process is that Members of Parliament oversee, review and pass Government policy into law, after some amendments, with regard to expenditures. As well, we review the Estimates that are based on the approval of those policies. We witnessed that function here this afternoon.

I noted that in the provincial legislatures of this country, a provincial Government introduces a policy to the legislature, the expenditures that are required to implement the policy are passed, and then the policy is put into place. I believe this is what happened with regard to provincial opposition to change in the Crowsnest rates.

We discovered today that some Provinces, having gone through that procedure, have received approval from provincial Members to embark upon an advertising program to oppose what is at the moment the Government policy proposal by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to meet that advertising thrust with an arbitrary action of his own. It is an action which does not have the backing or approval of the House. The policy has never been presented to the House. The Government is expending funds that have not been approved by the House since that policy has never been introduced in the House. We have no funds in last year's Estimates to embark upon a program of advertising to explain a policy which has never been introduced to this House, to explain why the Government may be coming in with a policy to do away with the Crowsnest pass rate agreement.

• (1650)

Therefore I submit that the expenditure is being made without the approval of this House. It has not been included in the Estimates of this House and, because it is being made without our approval, our rights and privileges as Members of Parliament are being trampled upon for many, many generations it has been the undisputed right and privilege of Parliamentarians to be presented with the revenue and expenditure proposals by the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member raises as a matter of privilege some details concerning the manner in which Government funds are expended. At this stage the Government has laid before the House a statement of its proposed expenditures, and at this stage the House will be dealing, through the procedures that have been followed, with these matters. If at any time expenditures are made by Departments that are not approved by Parliament then there are appropriate means for Members of this House to take action through the committees and through other measures available to them.

At this stage it hardly seems to be a matter of privilege to raise a question concerning the way in which money is spent, when the Government has just laid before the House a statement of how it will spend the funds for which it is requesting Parliamentary approval.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I say to the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre that I have ruled that there is no point of privilege in the matter which he has raised before the House. Does he have something else to raise?

Mr. Althouse: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to argue with you but I would point out that my remarks were perhaps misconstrued.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The matter has been dealt with.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my point of order does not involve the expenditures that are going to take place in the future.

Mr. Althouse: Mine did not either.

Mr. Taylor: I am suggesting that there is a flagrant abuse when money during the last year which had been voted on is spent for advertising a policy that has not yet been adopted by this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We are dealing with exactly the same point. It may be a grievance, it may be a matter that Hon. Members may seek to raise on Opposition days or by other methods that are available to them, but it is hardly at this point a matter of privilege.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I think I could probably help you on this point. If you check the "blues" that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) was referring to, you will see that he was not referring to—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member is raising the same point. The Chair has ruled on the point and will not hear further argument. The Chair listened to the argument which was raised as a matter of privilege. Whatever else it is, it is not privilege.

Mr. Smith: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett)—Agriculture—Application of feed freight assistance program to Maritime farmers, (b) division of funds between Quebec and New Brunswick; the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—The Administration—Cape Breton coal agreement—application of guidelines on ministerial conduct, (b) knowledge of Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources; the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell)—Social Security—Canadian Council on Social Development poverty statistic. (b) request for pension increases.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

SUPPLEMENTARY BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1982-83 (NO. 3)

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-143, to provide supplementary borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Skelly (p. 22957).

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted with this opportunity to take part very briefly in the debate and support the measures being proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in Bill C-143. I most certainly wish to emphasize the importance of these proposals which are aimed at maintaining adequate funding to stimulate the housing industry and to help those in Canada who are most in need of housing. As Hon. Members are aware, housing and residential construction has become a major government activity in creating employment and economic growth.

The housing sector has a beneficial impact on all other sectors of economic activity, and most important of all, it makes a massive use of Canadian materials and services rather than imports.

[English]

The House would like me probably to provide some facts for this assertion. Each 10,000 unit increase in housing starts creates over 25,000 person years of employment.

Miss Bégin: Hear, hear!

Mr. LeBlanc: Close to 8,000 of these jobs are in the construction industry.

Miss Bégin: Excellent. That is what we want.

Mr. LeBlanc: It is very useful, Mr. Speaker, to have a cheering section close by.

The remaining jobs occur in manufacturing, trade, transportation services, forestry and other industries. These initiatives are not make-work plans, or make-work projects, helpful as such projects might be. Money invested in housing produces real, durable products that respond to the fundamental needs of the Canadian people.

As the Minister of Finance has pointed out, it is not possible to relate the proposed borrowings to specific programs, but the need for additional borrowing arises from the extraordinary measures which the Government has undertaken to assist those most urgently in need of help and to continue and accelerate the economic recovery. Many of those extraordinary measures are related to housing. During 1982, the Government authorized a budget of over $1 billion to stimulate the housing industry.

● (1700)

I would like to remind Hon. Members of some of the highly successful initiatives the Government has introduced. To date, nearly 165,000 Canadian families have availed themselves of the $3,000 grant provided under the Canada Home Ownership Stimulation Plan to buy homes. That involved a commitment by the Government of almost half a billion dollars.

As Hon. Members are aware, the plan was extended to assist with the purchase of new homes built before the end of April 1983, and another $100 million was provided for this purpose. This program has had its intended effect.

I would like to remind Hon. Members that the number of single detached houses started in January 1983 across Canada was more than 4,800. This was the largest ever recorded for any January in Canadian history. Housing starts have rebounded to the level of 165,000, on an annual basis, in January. This sharp rise in production continues a trend which began in the last quarter of 1982, and I am confident that it is going to continue well into 1983.

At the moment our forecasters are talking about 150,000 starts in 1983. That would be a considerable improvement over the previous year. I would like to aim higher. I think, with interest rates staying low, chances are that we will be beyond the forecast level of 150,000.

Housing starts are not the only area where our efforts are being rewarded with success. As a matter of fact, as the Minister of Finance has pointed out, mortgage interest rates are now 12 per cent for one-year mortgages, the lowest level in several years. Six and five is working, and inflation rates have declined significantly. At the same time, $115 million has been established in grants for renovations under the Canada Home Renovation Plan. This program is very effective, creating jobs at a cost of $5,000 per person-year because of the way this program triggers private expenditure.

Under the Canada Rental Supply Plan, commitments were made in 1982 to provide interest-free loans for the construction of some 11,000 new rental housing units in communities where vacancy rates are low. There remains authority for an additional 19,000 units under this program.

I would like to point out that the effect of these very substantial investments by the Government are multiplied by the leverage which they exert on private money. Under the Canadian Home Renovation Plan, for instance, our experience shows that every Government dollar invested levers three more dollars of private money. The Government's contribution to date of $115 million represents a total investment of public and private funds amounting to about $450 million.

These Government housing initiatives have proved to be extremely successful, more successful than even our optimistic expectations. They have been most enthusiastically received by Canadians, which suggests that they are responding to a very generous genuine need. In this area, I wish to pay tribute to my predecessor, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove), who brought most of these programs forward. These measures have increased public confidence in the home ownership market and made an important contribution to economic recovery and more employment.

While I am speaking of the strides we are making toward overcoming the current recession and improving the housing conditions of Canadians, I might draw to the attention of Hon. Members that the shortage of housing for rent that has plagued so many communities is very much improved. The latest Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation vacancy survey shows that almost 2.5 per cent of rental units were vacant as compared to about 1.5 per cent six months before. The forecast is that the vacancy rate will rise even higher in 1983 as more builders take advantage of the Canada Rental Supply Plan.

All the measures taken are designed to help restore the country's economic health and they make large demands on the Government's financial resources. The steps the Government has taken in housing have provided the basis for concerted national action to get housing moving again. The success of the Government measures has required the commitment and co-operation of other orders of Government, of the industry and of the lending institutions. We have worked together in a spirit of national purpose and commitment to get housing going and to contribute to economic renewal.

The Government's actions have demonstrated its concern for existing home owners, for first-time home buyers and for renters. Canadians see housing as central to their social and financial security, and our measures have helped restore that security. Confidence is needed if first-time home buyers are to purchase a house, and this confidence has been provided.

There are substantial rewards for the economy and for individual Canadians in achieving these results. A lot remains to be done, but federal housing actions in the past year will create an estimated 180,000 jobs. These jobs will be in rental construction, the construction of single family dwellings and the renovation and installation of existing homes. Jobs will be created in the production of building materials and in the manufacture and distribution of appliances and other household furnishings. These benefits will flow to all regions of this country.

The federal Government wants to increase the housing supply and its wants to restore security and confidence. The Government, through its actions, has provided over a billion dollars for housing initiatives. This is in addition to the Government's ongoing support for social housing, for rehabilitation under the RRAP, for home insulation and for support of native housing. These are new funds allocated to housing. It is important that Hon. Members and the public understand that these funds do not represent the replacement of private funds with federal funds. As I said earlier, many actions did trigger considerable investment of private funds in the housing sector. These funds provide incentives to Canadians. They represent the Government working with Canadians to create an environment, a partnership, for economic recovery and for renewed security and confidence.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I know that everything that happens in the Minister's Department of Housing is not evil. Bearing in mind that one program has some merit to it, the $3,000 grant for a home buyer, why would the Minister have a cut-off date, even though it has been extended, of April 30 for those areas below latitude 55 when he knows full well that in places like The Pas, Grande Prairie or Fort St. John there is still frost in the ground? In some cases, it will take all of the $3,000 grant simply to put the footings or the foundation in frozen ground. Why have a policy which causes someone to spend that which you get in order to get that which you got?

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, I have received representations from Members opposite and on this side of the House. We are reviewing the lines as they were drawn. This, I must say, was done with the very large expertise and knowledge of the officials of the Corporation. But we have undertaken to review this and find out if we can accommodate more Canadians in their housing needs.

I would like to make it very clear that our intention is to encourage the construction of houses, and I will do everything which is within the legal powers given to me to make sure that Canadians are not excluded by conditions of climate, if we can help it.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Minister would bear in mind that the objective is to get houses built, I think he might take this as a representation to extend that date. Alternatively, would he give consideration, if he is not going to do that, to sending the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) out to speak a chinook over the building sites, or sending the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) out to wrestle the footings into the ground, or even to sending the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) out as an ice breaker so those footings can be put in the ground prior to the end of April?

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, I take these as representations without necessarily endorsing some of the rhetoric. But the Hon. Member is right. The goal of this program is to encourage housing. We have tried to be as flexible as possible and this we will continue to do.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has made extensive reference to the Government's spending plans with reference to housing, and we can understand the disaster he has followed and what he is trying to do. But we notice today that the Estimates show that six and five has been replaced by 9.6, and the Government is asking for $88.9 billion. Today the Government is asking for permission to borrow $14 billion for the 1983-84 year. Can the Minister tell the House what the Government's estimates are for revenues for 1983-84?

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much that this is in the venue of my responsibility. I believe the questions I heard in the previous debate would have been more properly put to my predecessor, or my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray).

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask several questions in one, if I may. I wonder if the Minister is aware of the MURB disaster which his predecessor created? In my riding most of the affordable, decent housing was torn down for the end-of-the-year MURB programs. Now they are sitting there as holes in the ground with nothing being built on them. That is typical, I believe, of the expedient, short-term kind of programs which they have featured.

I wonder, also, since the Minister talks about extremely successful programs, if he is aware that the reason why vacancy rates are lower, at least in western cities, is the economic situation where key populations have shifted eastward again. In fact, there has not been an increase in affordable housing for people.

Also, has the Minister considered taking a look at social trends whereby home ownership and homes which are subsidized with Government grants are going largely to couples without children? Families with children are still living in apartment buildings and will continue to do so because they cannot afford private homes. I do not think there is any program related to this.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, what is the Minister going to do about increasing, rather than decreasing, allocations for non-profit housing units, particularly in order to have some kind of housing for low income people who, as he knows, are increasing in great numbers?

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, I hope that I cover most of the points raised by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell). I was briefed on the MURB situation when I was out there a couple of weeks ago and I recognize that it is a problem which will not be easy to solve, but we must address it. Some areas felt that the program of MURBs was quite successful. Other areas felt the program had contributed to building some luxury condominiums. On balance, it was not recommended that the program be prolonged beyond a certain date, while trying to find ways to accommodate those who had made commitments to it.

The Hon. Member raised the matter of affordability and, of course, that is the other problem of housing: affordability versus availability. I might say, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the programs which I have described of $1 billion new dollars in 1983-84, the fact is that we are continuing the social housing program. We have increased it. We have borrowed on the coming years and we hope to do it again. There is no reduction. At the moment we are asking the Minister of Finance that he delay our payback of those additional units which we obtained from him in the past two years, and I hope we will be successful in this venture.

On the home ownership grants which are going to non-families or to smaller families, I must say to the Hon. Member that the variation in the housing market in Canada can introduce some distortions, although I am not sure I would define it as black and white, as she did. But the Hon. Member should remember that the home ownership program was really put into place to encourage the construction of housing, to stimulate economic activity and to create jobs, and it was not felt that a definition, as she seems to advocate, especially in a market which is as volatile and turbulent as the market in the area she represents, would have been a very successful job-creation program, an economic activity stimulant. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, there is no less commitment to social housing. It is an expensive form of housing, especially where the write-down of interest at 2 per cent comes into play, but being expensive does not mean it should not be done. The difficulty I have with this program is trying to find a way to make the queue made up of those who are waiting a little bit shorter, and to find ways of getting more "bangs for the bucks" in this program.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Minister took some pride in pointing out that the housing industry was a great stimulus to job creation. I have been hearing that for the past eight and a half years here. I remember the AHOP Program, which was used as job creation more than it was for building houses. I would like to ask the Minister, first of all, whether he does not feel that when he is trying to solve two problems that may not be resolved with the same program, he is not over-heating the market in the housing industry by trying to create jobs?

I would like to ask him also if he subscribes to the theory, apparently propounded by Mr. Norman Levi in British Columbia, that those who are on income assistance should be able to assign some of that tax money to the purchase of homes so they can increase their capitalization?

Finally, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) mentioned non-profit housing. Does the Minister have any way of ensuring that those who live in non-profit housing are in fact the ones who really need that kind of help, because at the present time I can assure him that there are a lot of people living there who—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must tell the Hon. Member that his question has to be cut short now in order for the Minister to have any time at all in which to reply.

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, no discussion I have had with the industry, and they represent really national organizations, indicates that there is a worry about over-heating the market, as the Hon. Member suggests. Even with the optimistic figures which I have given, the fact is that the ideal housing start figure which the industry feels is useable is roughly 200,000, so we are well below that range and there is a bit of catching up to do. There may be some markets where there will be some distortion. That is why in programs like the Rental Supply Plan, we tend to look very carefully at vacancy rates in order not to create a surplus or artificial supply.

● (1720)

Concerning non-profit housing, I must remind the Hon. Member that some years ago a decision was made that we should try to create an environment in which people of modest income would live in subsidized accommodation alongside people of higher incomes. I might say that I recently had occasion to see two co-operative projects in Vancouver and felt that it was quite a wise investment, both in human and economic terms.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period of questions and answers has now expired.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-143. I suppose that while we are talking about that, I might say that there is an interesting ring for some Hon. Members in the numerals 143, because Members, such as the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger), the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga), the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) or myself, when we leave this place to go home we take Flight 143. That, of course, is the flight into reality.

Bill C-143 is the flight—I am sorry the "fright" out of reality, and it is a frightful flight. That flight takes us down that frightful trail of $19 billion for most of which there is no budget. To say there is no budget is to say there is no plan. That means the Government is asking us for money to spend with no plan upon which to base its spending. What a frightful flight of reality it would be to grant that request of a Government with the record this Government has for spilling money or dropping it and kicking it away, letting it blow in the wind, trying to buy all kinds of projects which do not make sense, buying oil companies when the price of the company has doubled in value, but thinking it can have it. Nevertheless, the Government's answer is to ask for $19 billion without a budget to guide us to where it is going and to expect that Parliament, as the Minister said, would grant in haste the kind of request contained in the Bill, and to say also, "Trust us". That kind of trust is rather like not suspecting the tomcat when the canary is missing, because the Government's record is such that it is obviously suspect. We know that the Government is wasting the money of the Canadian people.

I want to spend some time today discussing how this institution began. I will not dwell on it, but I believe it is important. This House of Commons is called the House of Commons because it represents the common people. It started some 730 years ago with the Magna Carta. One of the principal reasons for the existence of this place, from the outflow of its history, was to control the King's purse. The entire revolt against the King in England was over wasteful spending, and because the King did not give justification for taxing his subjects. Today we find more and more that we are moving away from the notion that we are citizens of this country and adopting the motion that we are subjects of this country. We find it in our tax legislation.

The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) raised the point that now our income is printed on the front of our tax forms. What the Government is doing is to reverse the presumption which had existed following Magna Carta, that Parliament, the House of Commons, was the place where common people went to represent their constituencies and to control the purse. The presumption was that we had the right to the fruits of our labour and that some of it would be used for the general good of all.

Taxation is a fact of this century, not of 700 years ago. It is a new fact, but now the presumption is changing so that the Government says, "It is our money and we will allow you to retain some to build your homes, to run your farms, to carry on with your activities". The presumption is changing, which is demonstrated by the very fact that printed on those tax forms is information concerning the amount of money one earned, whether or not one was divorced, and one's social insurance number. We are creeping a long way away from the presumption of what the Government ought to be doing. It is important to realize that any Government which gives its presumption to the people recognizes the fact that its vested power is extended from the people. Power rests with the people. That is not the presumption today. The presumption today is that power rests with the Government. Government will make whatever decisions it wants, and be damned with the House of Commons and common people and common representation.

The Government's attitude is, "We matter, and only we matter. We will tell them whether or not they can bring their intentions before the House of Commons and whether or not they will tell them to the House of Commons itself". Therefore, the notion of debating $19 billion, with no plan for its expenditure, should not surprise us. There is no budget before us. The Government simply wants the money. It wants to draw it away from the people. We are back to pre-Magna Carta times. We are back to the time when the King treated his people as subjects, not as citizens, when he had the notion that it was his right to raise whatever amount he wanted. It was King John who simply wanted to build a bigger castle and attack already overly suppressed people even more. That is the kind of Government we have today.

In speaking of property rights, let me say that in my constituency today many people think that what the subject of property rights concerns is whether or not they can keep their own farms or houses. That is not the question at all. That is an example to the question. What the question concerns is whether the individual has first prerogative to the fruits of his labour. That presumption has been changing in the last 15 years, under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). The new presumption is that the Government has the first prerogative to the fruits of our labour, and it will leave for us that amount which it thinks we can have.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: The Government has no budget, no plan and no projections. We have only heard the request, "We want more money". Well, who does not? Who amongst us does not want more money? Who in the country would not want more money? Who amongst us can go to a bank manager and say, "Sir, I would like some more money. I would like $1 million"? The bank manager would ask, "What would you use it for?" If the answer were, "That is my personal affair, sir, and I will not tell you", who would expect the banker to lend the $1 million? However, the Government comes to us, to the public and says, "We want $19 billion".

I will tell Hon. Members how much $19 billion is. Some years ago the United States bought Alaska for $8 million. If the United States decided to buy Canada for $24 billion—although I will not put it up for sale because it is not within my power—that would amount to $1 million for every Canadian in the country. However, the Government wants to borrow $19 billion. Some people might become a little excited just over being offered $1 million and getting rid of the troups opposite, because they might see some better value in their country than this borrowing and borrowing year after year. I suggest to Your Honour that while the perspective is there, it is important.

We have a Government which does not even have the morals of an alley cat. It would give Donald Macdonald $800 a day to find out what the people already know, that we need less Government and more incentive for small business. We need to have less borrowing and less inflation. Donald Macdonald will tell them that after he has spent millions of dollars, when Canadians could have told them that for nothing.

• (1730)

Michael Pitfield gets reward upon reward upon reward, and then gets sent to the Senate. Judd Buchanan is allowed to build an apartment house where virtually no other Canadian could. What is his licence for that? It is just that he was a Liberal and was in the Government. Because he was the Minister who looked after parks, he got the advantage in the park.

Now we have the Gillespie situation which comes down to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) and the giving of gifts to those who give gifts in that inner circle. Canadians are certainly not at all pleased that their dollars are being spilled in this way. To borrow is to receive value today to be paid back at some future time.

Today we have a $140 billion debt on our future. That is the accumulated federal debt, and it will not be paid back tomorrow, next month, next year or in the next decade. A debt of that magnitude, if it is paid back at all, will be paid by the next generation. We have mortgaged our children before they are even born. We have mortgaged the next generation. We have put a price on the unborn. That is what is happening with this enormous debt. Through selfishness and greed the federal Government has been willing to put a price on the next generation. We have condemned our children, our resources and our country to the selfish pleasures of the "right now".

Last December this country went into debt to the tune of $300 million per day—every day Mr. Speaker—Saturday, Sunday, weekdays and Christmas day. That is a 300 per cent increase over the same month the previous year.

We have leeches that suck, through this Government—that cause the Government to impose extraordinary taxation upon us. Those leeches come in the form of 480 Crown corporations, the buying up of oil companies at double their value for some foolish reason such as just saying they are ours. They are ours, but those debts are ours and those payments are ours. This debt-ridden Government is ours. We are living with every increasing Government expenditures. The Liberals have wasted their tomorrows in pursuit of the moment.

We need to compare ourselves with other countries, Mr. Speaker. Today, in the 22 Latin American countries there is a population of 360 million. Those countries have a combined debt of $300 billion. It is important to bear that in mind. Canadians understand that Latin America is in a very difficult financial position. The Canadian debt per capita is seven times larger than the per capita debt of the Latin American countries, however. Their population is 15 times that of Canada but their debt is only a little more than twice ours. The 24 million people in Canada have a $140 billion debt, while the 368 million people in Latin America have a $300 billion debt.

The only reason that Canada is not a Venezuela, a Mexico or a Brazil is that this country is resource strong. With this debt of $140 billion the Government has taxed those resources, has taxed our future and the children of tomorrow. That is a mortgage against the future that we should never allow. I repeat, per capita our debt is seven times more than that of the peoples of Latin America.

The richest nation in Latin America, Brazil, has a debt of $80 billion, less than ours, and it is teetering on the edge of bankruptcy. The only reason that we are not bankrupt is that we have the largest volume of fresh water in the world, the largest hard-rock mineral base in the world, and the largest amount of forest in the world. But we have mortgaged the future of our resources and our children.

The Government does not care how it manages the economy, Mr. Speaker; it only cares that it manages power. Power is the quest of the Liberals, not their achievement. If they can retain power, achievement is irrelevant. They simply want to hang on to the reins and continue to drive, without any regard for the potential of the men and women in this country who want to use their initiative to make the country grow. They want to believe that the country is ours because of their work. The Government wants to have control—to schackle and encircle people with bureaucracy.

In this country today the small business sector requires twice the secretarial staff, the number of lawyers and accountants, of the comparable small business sector in the United States. That is how much bureaucracy controls and directs our small business sector. We should recognize that the small business sector is the engine of our society.

The Liberals have requested the borrowing of $19 billion without any planning. It is now taxing without hope. It is a hopeless tax on hope itself—a tax on tomorrow, a tax on our future. They are borrowing against tomorrow's dreams simply to sustain their wasteful spending.

The Prime Minister was right at least once when he said "the land is strong". The late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker was also right when he commented that it had to be.

Mexico could not sustain its debt, Venezuela could not sustain its debt, Poland could not sustain its debt, and Brazil is teetering on the brink of bankruptcy. Money is not wealth. That fallacy was adopted by Mexico, Venezuela and Poland, but most particularly Mexico. In the belief that money was wealth, they printed more money and borrowed more money.

A recent article in The Economist pointed out that in one short period Mexico borrowed $80 billion but that it would have been a wealthier country today with more people employed and a greater industrial base, had it only borrowed $40 billion.

When you borrow, you borrow against tomorrow; you borrow today to have a new tax tomorrow because borrowing is a debt against the future. That is the way it is in Mexico. In this country we are in danger of running our resources into the ground. There is a risk that they will be for sale at wholesale prices tomorrow, simply to excuse us from our debt.

• (1740)

The currency would have been stronger in Mexico, had it borrowed less. Its foreign payments would have been less, it would have retained more of its domestic earnings and its unemployment rate would have been lower than it is now. Canada is following the example of Mexico. Borrowing dollars is not a creation of wealth.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent. Are Hon. Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who just spoke?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher).

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I was intrigued by the speech of the Hon. Memer for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). I think he reasoned some of his ideas in an interesting way. Although I did not agree with him in many cases, I should like to extend my congratulations to him for having thought out a speech rather than resorting to the use of many clichés.

Dealing specifically with his comments about Mexico, Poland and Venezuela, I point out that Mexico ran into serious difficulty because of the extent of its foreign borrowing, not because of the extent of its borrowing. Also I point out that in our instance foreign borrowing is a very small part of this package and is used to shore-up the dollar, not to finance the general operations of Government. When the shoring up operation is over with, the money is repaid out of the foreign currency account. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to comment on the fact that there is a very real difference between the amount of foreign borrowing by Mexico, which put it into difficulty as he pointed out, and the very small amount of foreign borrowing on our part.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the point the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) is making, that when the debt is an internal debt, it is paid back to the country some day. This does not refute the argument that when we incur a debt, it must be repaid at some time. That "some time" on a debt as large as $140 billion is not likely to be in our time. Therefore what it has done is to tax tomorrow, and that point still stands regardless of whether we pay out of the country or within the country.

Mr. Darling: At 19.2 per cent interest.

Mr. Malone: Yes, 19.2 per cent is the very shattering interest rate on which we borrowed much of that money. Although the Hon. Member said that all our debt is not foreign debt—and I accept that—he needs to concede that a great portion of it is foreign debt. It is a combination. Those factors taken together do not diffuse the fact that there is a great concern about borrowing when one borrows too much.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I would like to try to clarify a statement of the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). I understood him to say that he wanted to warn Members of the House and all those people who might be listening that the $24 billion would cost every man, woman and child $1 million. While one may regard a deficit as being an unfortunate thing, certainly one wants to maintain a balanced budget, if possible. It seems to me that in these times it is obviously not possible. I wonder why the Hon. Member would exaggerate and speak about it costing $1 million a person? Are these his statistics? Are his statistics carried on the same basis?

Another example of the statistics of the Hon. Member is when he spoke about spending $300 million a day, perhaps in reference to the deficit, or just in reference to spending. Taking into account Saturdays, Sundays and every other day of the year, that would be in excess of $100 billion. Therefore I think his estimate of the rate of expenditures is somewhat high. He ought to clarify his statistics because they put his entire point in doubt.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) checks Hansard tomorrow, he will find that I was not referring to this year. I was referring to the month of December. That was the rate at which we were going into debt during that particular month. It was at the rate which I quoted. I can verify my statistics. If he wishes to check with me afterwards, I will do that for him.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) seemed to argue that because the federal debt was internal, there somehow was no problem at all. Would the Hon. Member agree that it does matter because it means that the people of Canada who already have wealth become incredibly wealthy by lending their money to the Government and getting a guaranteed rate of return of 19.5 per cent with no risk? That being the case, why would they put it into industry?

Would he also agree that because the federal Government borrows all local money within the country, Crown corporations, private industry and provincial Governments must go offshore to Japan, New York and Germany?

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, it is not difficult to come to an agreement on such a point.

An Hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Malone: I believe it is the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) who is asking me to explain. The explanation is quite simply in the fact that the nation has a Gross National Product, it has a total wealth. Quite obviously, the subtraction of the larger portion taken for Government leaves less for the private sector. The Government is now borrowing at the rate of some $19 billion per year. It is simply leaving less of the pie, less of the total opportunities of acquiring loans, for the private sector or other Crown corporations.

If we start from the presumption, which has always been there, that it is the private sector that creates wealth and that it is the public sector which at best redistributes wealth, we are now in a position where nearly 50 per cent of the Gross National Product goes for Governments in the country. Once we pass 50 per cent plus one penny, we have a country in which we are trying to redistribute more wealth than we have the capacity to generate. When we reach that point, the whole system will have broken down.

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the Hon. Member overlooked my question. It seems to me that he did. When he spoke about $24 billion, he said that it would cost each person in Canada $1 million. If he uses his calculator, I think he will arrive at a figure of about $1,000.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I stand corrected on that. Obviously it is $1 million for every million Canadians.

An Hon. Member: A billion for every million.

Mr. Malone: A billion for every million. I can see that I got my "tang tongueled". I apologize if, in his trying to take down some notes or something which would be worth-while for the economy of the country, at one point I misled him. Certainly he is correct.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are other Hon. Members seeking the floor to ask questions? If not, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) on debate.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to participate in the debate this afternoon on Bill C-143. Also I am pleased to have had the opportunity to listen to the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) as he gave various interpretations and translations of what it was he was actually saying. Certainly I express my appreciation for his keen co-operation in that regard.

Some Hon. Members have expressed concern about the timing with regard to Estimates, budgets and the Bill which is before us now. Insofar as Part I of this Bill is concerned, it is covered adequately, I believe, in the October statement which takes us through and covers the end of the fiscal year.

• (1750)

As you know, earlier this afternoon, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) tabled his Estimates. I believe that is in keeping with that desire and concern expressed with respect to the debate in which we are now participating.

I appreciate the opportunity to tell Canadians some good news. This is the good news that I was attempting to allude to this afternoon in Question Period with respect to the successes of the Government in bringing down the inflation rate and the interest rate in Canada.

Mr. Huntington: Inflation is now 9.6 per cent.

Mr. Harquail: This subject is one we used to hear a lot about from Members sitting to your left, Mr. Speaker. But in recent months the silence has been deafening with respect to those successes and also with respect to mortgage rates being down; inflation being down to 6 per cent—

Mr. Lewis: Where is unemployment?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): How about all the other scams?

Mr. Harquail: —and the prime rate at the bank being down to 11 per cent and the Bank of Canada rate being down to around 9.3 per cent. It is not passing strange because the Opposition Members will be the last ones to admit any achievements of this order of magnitude with respect to the facts that I have just laid before the House and for the information of all Canadians.

It is particularly significant to look at the rate of inflation since June when the Government announced the successful six and five program. This is voluntary restraint on prices and wages. The rate for that period was 6 per cent. It is a clear confirmation that the program is working. All sectors of the economy have contributed to this achievement. I think that is a point worth-while noting, and we should congratulate Canadians especially for their co-operation during these difficult times that affect the entire world, certainly our neighbours south of the border.

I have mentioned the important and good news in the battle to achieve recovery and to achieve lower interest rates, which have fallen to the attractive limits at which they are now. This is restoring consumer confidence and bringing things around to where we would all like to see them. Resulting from this there has been an encouraging development in the construction sector, one of the key areas of our economy. As recently as last September, housing starts were running at a low level of 86,000 units on an annual basis. By January, the figure has risen to 165,000 units, a gain of 90 per cent in just four months. This is a direct result of the initiatives of this Government. It is related also to what I said in my opening remarks about the lower interest rates that we have been able to achieve.

My colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for Westmorland-Kent (Mr. LeBlanc), the Minister responsible for CMHC who spoke before me this afternoon, confirmed the good news that housing starts have increased substantially since that low of 86,000 in September, 1982. In January, 1983, housing starts were up to 165,000, a 90 per cent increase over September. Sales of passenger cars increased 37 per cent from July, 1982, to 66,800 units in December, 1982.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What kind of cars? Were they Ladas or Toyotas?

Mr. Harquail: The Conference Board in Canada indicated that consumer confidence jumped 36 per cent from 54.8 per cent in the second quarter of 1982 to 74.7 per cent in the fourth quarter of 1982.

This is the type of thing of which we should be speaking. We have heard and we have listened to sincere Canadians who have invited and encouraged all Canadians, particularly those in the business sector, to speak of these confidences and to bring forward the good news so co-operatively we can restore the confidence we all want to have.

Senior business executives in their recent statements have become more optimistic about the near term prospects for the Canadian economy, and according to the Conference Board survey of business attitudes. According to the same survey, business confidence in Canada's investment climate has also improved. We have seen a turnaround as well, Mr. Speaker.

A question was mentioned earlier with respect to employment. There has been some improvement in that area although not anywhere near where we would like it. We hold no monopoly on this question. All Canadians are concerned about finding jobs and seeking employment opportunities, notwithstanding the efforts of the various Departments.

I have talked about housing and industrial development, the upswing and the good news coming from the United States and in our own economy. It is also important to flag some of the initiatives the Government is taking with respect to job creation. I know that in my own Province it has been very substantial and effective. I will mention the CCDP, the Youth Employment Program, the LEAP Program, the NEED Program and the various training programs that amount to millions of dollars. Just recently an agreement has been signed on behalf of the federal Government by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) and the Minister of Labour and Employment for the Province of New Brunswick. This agreement involves a total expenditure of $24 million. This will be a co-operative federal-provincial cost shared program to put funds directly into the economy and create those much needed jobs to which I was just referring.

Earlier this afternoon I had the opportunity to raise once again the important question of the megaproject that has been talked about since the budget of 1981 when the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), the then Minister of Finance, interrupted his budget speech remarks to announce that the Noranda group and its subsidiary, Brunswick Mining Ltd., were planning to go ahead with this project. The project is estimated to cost over $370 million. It will create 1,500 person years of employment during the construction stage and will realize over 550 permanent job upon its completion. This is a significant project and one on which I am inviting all Hon. Members to show a spirit of co-operation in urging all Ministers who have a direct responsibility in the economic portfolios, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley), the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), to bring pressure to bear with respect to the holding company, the Noranda group, and to encourage the subsidiary company, Brunswick Mining Ltd., to go ahead with this much awaited and needed project.

I see it is close to six o'clock. What I propose to do at this time is to call it six o'clock and come back another day to complete my remarks on this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to calling it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—APPLICATION OF FEED FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM TO MARITIME FARMERS. (B) DIVISION OF FUNDS BETWEEN QUEBEC AND NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, on February 10 I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). I presume that his Parliamentary Secretary or his designate is here this afternoon to respond. At the time, I raised the issue that the cost of feed grain in the Maritime region of Canada will be greatly increased due to the current proposed policy of the Government to do away with the Crow. I expressed concern of behalf of the farmers who felt that they would be adversely affected, and, indeed, are adversely affected, due to a reduction in the Crow rates.

Prairie farmers now pay approximately 18 per cent of the transportation costs of their feed grain, whereas in Truro, Nova Scotia, and in that part of the country, livestock producers and poultry producers are paying upwards of 75 per cent of the costs of their feed grain. Of course, it is very difficult to compete under those circumstances and the Government proposal will make it that much more difficult in years to come.

The Government has recognized that the Maritime Provinces and New Brunswick in particular have a tremendous amount of agricultural property that has potential for the production of feed grain. As a result, it is looking forward to the time when New Brunswick as well as the rest of the nation will become self sufficient in the production of feed grains. However, the Government recognizes, and certainly the farmers in the region do, that this is a substantial distance down the road.

I asked the Minister if he would consider allowing the Feed Freight Assistance Program to remain in place in the meantime along the guidelines that were proposed by the Maritime Farmers Council in a recent brief to the Minister of Agriculture. They stated in that brief that all three provincial federations of agriculture and the Maritime Farmers Council have committed considerable effort toward developing a feed grain plan for the region. They believe that this new approach they are proposing would be fair and appropriate for all three Provinces and, indeed, would encourage a balanced development of Maritime agriculture.

The main points they were making to the Minister of Agriculture were; the restoration and future indexation of the level of support under the Feed Freight Assistance Program which prevailed in 1976; and the transformation of the FFA Program to a market and resource neutral system of direct feed cost equalization payment. When the Minister responded to that portion of my question, he stated as reported at page 22707 of Hansard:

> We are very much aware of their concerns, but we think that a lot of them are unwarranted, for instance the increase in the price of grain.

That is precisely the point I was making. They are concerned about the increase in the price of grain. If the Minister of Agriculture were a farmer in that region, he would naturally be concerned, along with the rest of the farmers, because he would obviously not be in a position to compete with his counterparts in the Prairies and in the rest of Canada. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to direct himself specifically to that particular expression of concern expressed by these farmers.

My second concern on behalf of the farmers of the region is that the Government has earmarked $130 million to assist those regions, which are now not self-sufficient, in becoming self-sufficient in the growing of grain over the next five years. The Government has stated that it will give Quebec, which is semi self-sufficient in the production of feed grain, $90 million of the $130 million. It has earmarked $16 million for the Province of Ontario, which is completely self-sufficient in the production of feed grain. The Minister acknowledged this in his response to my question when he said in Hansard at page 22707:

> —one will see that Ontario has a grain surplus producing area.

• (1805)

The Government will give New Brunswick, which is totally dependent on outside feed grain, $4 million over the same period of time to increase its feed grain production.

I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to please address himself to those specific points and tell the farmers of the region how it is that the Government has come up with those figures and what it will do to help tide them over until a period of time elapses and they become self-sufficient in feed grains.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as indicated by the Minister of Agriculture, feed grain prices in the Maritimes will not change because of this Government's decision to improve the grain transportation and handling system in Western Canada. The price of feed grain in Eastern Canada is determined by the cost of either U.S. or Ontario corn in Eastern Canada. Changes in freight rates in Western Canada will not influence the price of corn.

When freight rates for western grains increase, the net price that the western farmer receives for his grain delivered to a local primary elevator will be lower by the amount of the increase in freight rates. Thus a hypothetical $5 per tonne increase in freight rates on the Prairies will result in Prairie grain prices being lowered by $5 per tonne. In turn, the price of grain outside of the Prairies will not be affected.

The Feed Freight Assistance Program currently lowers the price of western feed grain by $10 to $18 per tonne on grain shipped to the Maritimes. Since its introduction during World War II, the Feed Freight Assistance Program has fostered the development of the livestock industry in the Maritime provinces. In fact, our Prairie brothers often complain that the Feed Freight Assistance Program and low freight rates for Prairie grain disadvantages Prairie livestock production, with livestock producers in the rest of Canada benefiting. Since the Feed Freight Assistance Program lowers feed grain prices in the Maritimes, it can work against the development of enhanced grain production there.

The Minister also received representations from the Maritimes to amend the Feed Freight Assistance Program to provide incentives for expanding local grain production.

THE ADMINISTRATION—CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES ON MINISTERIAL CONDUCT. (B) KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, in the last few days we have seen a dying Government lose every vestige of its claim that it is a moral administration.

The guidelines which require certain conduct of Ministers read in part as follows:

> In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds, or the appearance of grounds, of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

It has been repeatedly suggested to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that at the very least there is a clear and unmistakable appearance of improper influence, privileged access and preferential treatment. We have a former Minister who makes a deal through his former Deputy, Mr. Cohen. How many people in Canada have ready access to the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? I suggest, not your ordinary person off the street.

Throughout negotiations, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources was heavily involved. Memorandums of agreement were signed between Petro-Canada and Mr. Gillespie. Mr. Gillespie appeared with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) at a public gathering to announce this deal.

I think it is fair to say that many people would say that if a former office holder is dealing with a Government, Minister or a department for which he was once responsible, in a financial transaction, and is doing so before the expiration of his two-year prohibition period, as mentioned in the conflict of interest guidelines, that would give the appearance of improper influence and privileged access. Even Alastair Gillespie thinks that the ordinary person would get that impression. I quote a Canadian Press wire story of a few days ago:

> Gillespie admits that outsiders—"ordinary people"—might believe his role as an energy minister and the experience he gained there, gave him a privilege or special advantage to get the development going.

• (1810)

Surely that is precisely why these guidelines were put in place. They are to prevent former office holders from doing business with the Departments or agencies for which they had responsibility within two years of leaving office. The reason is that to do so would give rise to at least an appearance of improper influence, privileged access and preferential treatment. Therefore, for a present Minister to involve himself with a former Minister is clearly a breach as well. This case is obviously a breach of the guidelines.

The Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister insist on avoiding the issue. They refuse to come clean with Parliament. The Deputy Prime Minister has even come to the extraordinary conclusion that these guidelines are merely tools which a Minister or former Minister may consider in shaping his or her judgment. To quote the Deputy Prime Minister:

> These guidelines are self-enforcing. There is no monitoring agency. They are up to the conscience of the individual.

The sum total of what this means is that if in the mind of a particular Minister or former Minister the public interest is served, or perhaps the personal interest of one of the Minister's friends is served, these guidelines can be ignored. They are self-enforcing. Away with honour! Away with the notion that the Prime Minister has a responsibility to ensure that the guidelines are honoured! These guidelines are self-enforcing. The Minister's conscience is his guide. When we are given the Deputy Prime Minister's logic, when we are told he was guided by his own conscience when he dealt with Mr. Gillespie, it becomes more apparent how easily a breach of the guidelines occurred.

There is further evidence today that the project continues to exist only because of the presence of Mr. Gillespie and the cozy relationship he maintains with various Ministers of the Crown. And I say that, Mr. Speaker, because we have learned today that the great liquefaction project is of very dubious value from an economic point of view. A study within the Minister's own Department recommends that the project as currently conceived should not be supported by the federal Government. I quote:

> Calculations made by the Department indicate that a capital grant with a net present value of approximately $864 million in 1982 dollars would be required to raise the projected rate of return from 4.2 per cent to 21.4 per cent. Each permanent job created in Cape Breton would have to be valued at over one and one-quarter million dollars. From an energy point of view, the Scotia Coal Synfuels Project appears to be a high-cost source of synthetic fuels.

Those are not my words but words from the briefings and documents prepared by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. This deal not only appears to be a conflict, but most definitely is a conflict, and may very well be a bad deal on top of everything else.

These guidelines cannot be casually tossed aside by the Minister. I suggest that when the Prime Minister returns, he has the obligation to address the issue, make full disclosure of the facts in this matter and do the honourable thing, following parliamentary tradition.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has again raised the question of an alleged contravention of the conflict of interest guidelines by a Minister of the Crown, the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and now Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). The Hon. Member and his Party have repeatedly confused the requirements of present Ministers of the Crown with respect to the cooling-off periods required of former Ministers.

During the period when the Minister of Finance was the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, he was subject to the same principles regarding activities of current and former holders of public office as were parliamentary secretaries, Governor in Council appointees, public servants and exempt staff members. These guidelines are very explicit, and it may be remembered that on the evening of February 17 I outlined these principles in great detail. I am sure the Hon. Member has now had an opportunity to review those principles which I set out.

The objectivity and the impartiality of Government service must never be jeopardized and there must be no cause to believe that individuals have received preferential treatment or privileged access to Government personnel or services. Of course, there is no time limit to that. You cannot receive preferential treatment beyond the two-year period. You cannot receive it at all.

I suggest that the Hon. Member is doing a great injustice to the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if he is in any way implying that the Minister was intimately involved in this project, despite statements by the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

• (1815)

What bothers me, Mr. Speaker, is that the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West talks about honour. I believe that the Minister of Finance is as honourable a Member as there is in this House. He is a very dedicated Minister. We may all have policy disagreements, but his commitment to Canada and to the people of this country is surely beyond dispute.

When a Minister stands in the House and says he did not contravene those guidelines, I do not understand why it is not left there. What has happened to the great parliamentary tradition that we accept the word of Hon. Members? The Minister has said this repeatedly, and I believe it is a sad day when we are prevented from dealing with the issue because people want to attempt character assassination. I know this is the old stock in trade of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen), but I am surprised that the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West, who normally likes to deal with issues, now wants to go this route. That is disappointing. Has my time expired, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Almost.

Mr. Smith: In addition to the above requirements which we have already discussed in some detail, I would like to draw the Hon. Member's attention to the requirement that office holders have a duty in any official dealings they may have with former office holders to ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearances of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment. The Hon. Member today in the House was suggesting that because somebody can get somebody on the phone, that somehow constitutes lobbying, or somehow that constitutes an improper approach. Surely, we are not at the point where once someone has left Government service he cannot even have contact with his former colleagues?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

SOCIAL SECURITY—CANADIAN COUNCIL ON SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT POVERTY STATISTICS. (B) REQUEST FOR PENSION INCREASES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, on February 9, amidst very loud shouting from Government backbenchers, I asked the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) to comment on the poverty statistics which had been released by the Canadian Council on Social Development, statistics which showed that 3.5 million Canadians were living in poverty in 1980. I estimated at least one million more people had become poor since 1980 as a result of direct Government policies, including high unemployment, part-time jobs, the imposition of six and five wage controls and the abandonment of a guaranteed income policy. I asked the Prime Minister to justify the increasing poverty which his economic policies had caused.

The Prime Minister shrugged off my question. He did not acknowledge or show serious concern for the increasing numbers of poor in this country, and he joined his Liberal colleagues to laugh and joke about this. When, in frustration, I called him an uncaring millionaire, the Prime Minister refused to answer my supplementary question; an appeal to him to at least increase pensions to above the poverty line and provide some assistance for older women in their pre-pension years. His colleagues continued their disrupting uproar, which made it extremely difficult for me to be heard. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) indicated that the Government can do nothing to help.

The following day when my Leader again questioned the Prime Minister about his lack of concern and lack of programs to assist the poor of this country, he debated a theoretical poverty line, and I quote from page 22706 of Hansard which reads as follows:

> That line is very much higher than it was several years ago. It is a moving line. It means that the people of Canada generally are getting richer. It means, since the average Canadian is getting richer, therefore the average poor person becomes poor at a higher level than he did ten years ago. So it is a conceptual notion which is debatable—

These ridiculous and uncaring responses to the most serious problem in Canada, and the frivolous attitude of Government Members who tried to deny my right to speak on this matter, are completely unacceptable to Canadians. It is no wonder the Government refuses to act when the Prime Minister is so totally out of touch with the real economic situation of so many Canadians, and when he obviously could care less.

The CCSD report entitled "Poverty Facts" provided statistics which showed that in 1980, 10 per cent of Canadian families lived in poverty. These statistics showed that 66 per cent of elderly women were poor, two thirds of all poor families were headed by women, 46 per cent of single women were poor and 20 per cent of families with two wage earners had poverty incomes. This was in 1980. How many more thousands are poor today? These figures did not include native populations suffering from extreme economic deprivation. Statistics are often as neutral as debatable poverty lines.

The Prime Minister should meet with mothers on welfare who are trying to raise their families on $400 or $500 per month. One mother with two sons had only $21 a week after the rent was paid to feed and clothe her family. She is typical. The increase in welfare roles alone should prove to the Prime Minister how desperate this situation has become. In my riding of Vancouver East, 12,000 people are on social assistance, and that is a 28 per cent increase over the past year. A single person in B.C. receives $375 a month, but only $144 in Quebec. There are many families and individuals in Vancouver East who are trying with great difficulty to survive on pensions and meagre savings. Hundreds of unemployed workers who could hardly live on UI benefits are now lining up at welfare offices and food banks, because their benefits are gone.

Women have always had the lowest incomes and for them the situation is worsening on all fronts. Yesterday the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women released a report which shows that women are more ghettoized than ever, with lower-paying jobs, while men are often paid twice as much for doing the same work. The NDP task force on older women, which held hearings in every province, found that women who are widowed or separated in their middle years and unable to work after a lifetime of homemaking are the forgotten poor. This group must be given priority, both in employment opportunities and income support.

The first step in doing something about poverty in Canada is to recognize that the problem exists and to try to empathize with those who are the victims. The Government must face up to the enormity of the problem and plan programs now which will help to alleviate suffering. Children must be a priority for action. Pension reform is urgent. Poor people in Canada cannot eat the unfulfilled promises of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She must start planning now for the guaranteed income system which was promised over ten years ago. Poverty can only be solved by job creation programs and a positive strategy to bring about economic recovery, with incomes above the poverty line for all Canadians.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on February 8, 1983, the Canadian Council on Social Development released its most recent fact book on poverty. This publication and, more particularly, the press release which accompanied it, have resulted in a considerable amount of confusion as to the actual situation involving low income Canadians. I am pleased to have this opportunity today to address the issues raised by the CCSD.

First, I would like to address the issue of how poverty is to be defined and therefore measured. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated in the House on February 10, 1983, the choice of a particular line by which to measure poverty is in many ways arbitrary. Consequently, there are diverse views on how to define poverty. Moreover, these views may change from time to time, as evidenced by the periodic revisions which are made to the measures in use. Indeed, the Canadian Council on Social Development reflected a change in views by revising its poverty definition as explained in the fact book. Such a change in definition, however, does not mean that poverty has increased as indicated by the Council's press release. Rather, it simply reflects a change in view as to who is poor and who is not at a given point in time.

The large number of definitions currently in use confuses the real issue: that is, what is happening to poverty in Canada?

In its fact book, the CCSD quite clearly acknowledged that the incidence of poverty has been consistently declining since the 1960s. An examination of the table on page 7, for example, will show that, even using the Council's definition of poverty, the proportion of Canadian households in poverty in 1979, being 21.0 per cent, is less than it was in 1967, at 22.7 per cent. Moreover, the Council states again on page 7, that the reduction in household poverty over the period 1973 to 1979 is mostly attributable to the reduction of poverty among unattached individuals, mainly the elderly. This, of course, is the period in which this Government substantially increased the Guaranteed Income Supplement for elderly Canadians.

● (1825)

The Council's statement in its press release, that the rate of family poverty now shows every sign of increasing, is not substantiated by the facts available to date, particularly those in its own fact book. This Government has made substantial progress over the past decade in reducing poverty, and is continuing to provide for the needs of Canada's poor as evidenced by the special provisions of the six and five program to protect the benefits of low-income families and the elderly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 o'clock p.m.

At 6.26 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ACCREDITATION OF LATVIAN AND ESTONIAN HONORARY CONSULS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, on the occasion of the 11th Baltic evening, recently sponsored by the Baltic Federation in Canada representing the Estonian Central Council in Canada, the Latvian National Federation in Canada, and the Lithuanian Canadian community, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) brought to the attention of the House, under the provisions of Standing Order 21, certain irregularities in dealing with the accreditation of Baltic Consuls by the Government of Canada.

These Baltic Federations represent loyal Canadians who have selected Canada as the land of their destiny. They have made significant contributions to the arts and culture of this country. They have added to the ranks of our professionals in the fields of engineering and medicine. They are loyal citizens, conscious of their responsibility to this country, and have responded to this responsibility with dedication and zeal.

I would like to add my concern that two members of the Baltic Federation, the Latvians and the Estonians, unlike the Lithuanians, have not been accorded an accredited status for their consuls. Giving accredited status to these Consuls would show Canada's appreciation for the role that the peoples of Baltic origin have played and are playing in the development and promotion of the homeland of their choice, Canada, and it would serve as a useful link with citizens in the land of their origin. I therefore would urge the Government to grant accredited status to a Latvian and Estonian Consul.

FINANCE

ENDORSEMENT OF FORMER MINISTER'S POLICIES BY ALASTAIR GILLESPIE

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, on April 21, 1982, there was a meeting in Toronto organized by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), the then Minister of Finance, and three Toronto Ministers. The invited guests were 14 businessmen. The Globe and Mail of April 22, 1982, reported that 13 out of the 14 businessmen rejected the MacEachen theory about wage and price controls.

Alastair Gillespie was one of the 14 businessmen who claimed to The Globe and Mail that Mr. MacEachen received a "resounding vote of confidence" from the businessmen. The Globe and Mail of April 24, 1982, reported that Robert Owen, President of the Toronto Real Estate Board, " . . . disagreed with Alastair Gillespie . . . that the businessmen gave Mr. MacEachen a resounding vote of confidence." The Globe and Mail of May 13, 1982, reported that John S. Dewar, Chairman of Union Carbide, denied that there was support for Mr. MacEachen's policies at that meeting. The Globe and Mail of July 10, 1982, reported that only one favoured MacEachen's policies.

Under the circumstances, Madam Speaker, one can easily ask was the Gillespie endorsement of the Minister's economic policies, as well as his false claim of universal endorsement by businessmen, a quid pro quo for the Deputy Prime Minister's endorsement of Mr. Gillespie's lucrative participation in the Scotia Coal Synfuels project? And is there any connection between Mr. Gillespie's enthusiasm for the Minister's ill-fated economic policies and the subsequent decision by the Government to proceed with further re-evaluation of financing of the Gillespie consortium?

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Gilbert A. Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, as the Member of Parliament for Welland and as Chairman of the National Liberal Caucus, I wish to state that the National Liberal Caucus deplores the allegations and insinuations about Cabinet Members made by the Opposition Parties during recent Question Periods in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Parent: The Caucus is particularly disturbed by the fanaticism of the Conservative Party interim Leader, Mr. Erik Nielsen, who, since his election—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Parent: —to the House in 1957 has consistently resorted to character assassination as his only means of attacking the Liberals. The Caucus feels that Mr. Nielsen and those who follow—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

S.O. 21

Mr. Parent: —his example should realize that when they try to score—

Madam Speaker: I believe the Hon. Member does know that he must refer to Hon. Members by their constituencies.

Mr. Parent: I thank you for the correction, Madam Speaker. The Caucus feels that the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), and those who follow his example, should realize that when they try to score political points at any price, especially at the price of character assassination, they discredit the entire parliamentary institution in the process. The National Liberal Caucus wishes to note that, despite some encouraging signs, such as lowering inflation and interest rates, the economic situation remains a serious problem. MPs from all Parties would be well advised to devote their energies to finding solutions to the problems which are affecting Canadians in their daily lives.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

CALL FOR TAX RELIEF

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, in my opinion the handicapped are ill treated. For the past two years I have made numerous representations to the Government on behalf of the disabled persons of Canada. Today I make one further public representation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), asking him to review the position of the disabled with regard to the Income Tax Act. In particular, I would like the Government to include provisions in the next budget which would offset the additional costs incurred by the working disabled by such things as equipment and clothing, and transportation to unserviced industrialized areas.

I am aware that recommendation 46 of "Obstacles" is currently under consideration. I urge the Government to include this recommendation in the next budget because I believe that it will improve the tenuous position of the partially disabled. The present legislation is so narrow in its interpretation that it openly discriminates against handicapped people, many of whom are members of the work force. These people contribute to society through their taxes and are not dependent on society to keep them.

We have a chance to atone for our past neglect. We have a chance in the next budget to lighten the daily burden carried by the disabled. I, therefore, encourage the Minister of Finance to put forth some practical legislation to overcome the key obstacles faced by disabled persons.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

TRADE IN ENRICHED URANIUM WITH UNITED STATES WEAPONS PLANT

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, yesterday the President of the Liberal Party came out against Cruise missile testing in Canada by saying that it was only "the thin edge of the wedge". My statement deals with another thin edge which we have in the American nuclear weapons program, the buying and selling of enriched uranium between Atomic Energy of Canada and two nuclear weapons refineries in the U.S.A.

• (1410)

AECL's Chalk River laboratory is buying weapons-grade-enriched uranium from the U.S. Department of Energy's nuclear weapons refinery at Oak Ridge, Tennessee. When Chalk River is finished with this enriched fuel, it is sold and delivered to the Savannah River weapons reprocessing plant in South Carolina. AECL has no contractual obligation to sell and deliver this incredibly toxic irradiated fuel back into the U.S. weapons program.

In 1980 Canada signed a protocol with the United States under which the use of Canadian nuclear materials in the U.S. military program is forbidden, but Canada has continued to sell this material to the U.S. military.

Three U.S. States and approximately 40 U.S. municipalities have passed regulations to prevent AECL from shipping this irradiated poison through their areas, because a ten-second direct exposure to this material is lethal. Rather than listening to these people, AECL's shipper is fighting these regulations in the U.S. courts so that we can continue to sell Canadian uranium to the U.S. weapons program.

On behalf of the NDP and Canadians who do not want to be involved in the U.S. nuclear weapons cycle, I call upon the Government—

Madam Speaker: Order.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

ACCUSATIONS AGAINST CERTAIN MINISTERS OF THE CROWN

Mrs. Éva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, if parliamentary immunity allows the Leader of the Official Opposition and Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) to make accusations against Ministers of the Crown—and especially the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), whose integrity is well known—without being obliged to prove his case in public, according to the rules of a democratic society, this privilege is now being abused by the Member for Yukon in a manner that is an outrage to this Parliament.

According to Canada's Charter of Rights and Freedoms, a person is presumed innocent until proven guilty in a fair trial, during which that person has had an opportunity to prevent his defence. During the past week, some very serious allegations have been made, challenging the integrity and honesty of several Members of Cabinet. Perhaps the Leader of the Official Opposition is making these malicious accusations because the Minister is doing his job too well.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER FROM UNITED STATES SOURCES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in February of 1980, when he was the then Leader of the Opposition, undertook to urge the United States authorities to stop the pollution of the Niagara River. The Canada/U.S. task force recently reported that they had identified 300 polluters and that the international quality standards of the Great Lakes were being violated. Various substances have been found in the drinking water on which we have very little information.

The long-term solution to this environmental problem hinges on the outcome of a lawsuit initiated against Hooker Chemical with respect to the Love Canal. Environment Canada and this Government have refused to intervene in those court proceedings.

The presence of dioxin, the deadliest chemical known to man, has been detected for the first time in untreated lake water samples. That finding should finally provide the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) and the Prime Minister with sufficient cause to take more positive action now to protect the water supply of four million Canadians. Failure to do so simply leaves those Canadians as subjects of chemical experimentation. Can anything be more irresponsible?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EL SALVADOR—PLIGHT OF POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, recently Bishop Rivera y Damas of El Salvador asked that the El Salvador government release its political prisoners when the Pope visits there, about March 6. There are reported to be about 700 political prisoners held by the El Salvador government.

When the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) visited Central America he spoke publicly about the desperate condition of many people who have incurred the hostility of the government of El Salvador. I understand that the Government of Canada is giving serious consideration to offering visas and asylum in Canada to political prisoners released by the Government of El Salvador. I urge Canadians to support such a decision.

• (1415)

It is also reported that the Government of El Salvador may release only some of its prisoners and, furthermore, that the political prisoners have decided that none will come out unless all are released. This is apparently a matter to be negotiated between the Government of El Salvador, the Bishop of El Salvador, and the political prisoners.

I urge the Government of Canada to consult with the Bishop of El Salvador in any selection of political prisoners to be released and given asylum in Canada.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—APPLICATION OF MINISTERIAL CONDUCT GUIDELINES

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In his letter to the Deputy Prime Minister of April 28, 1980, the Prime Minister wrote as follows:

> I am writing to bring to your attention the enclosed guidelines which establish the conflict of interest régime for Ministers and set the standards of conduct expected of them.

In the House on Monday the Deputy Prime Minister stated that the conflict rules as outlined by the Prime Minister "are only self-enforcing guidelines", that is, subject only to the conscience of the individual Minister. Does the Prime Minister regard the conflict of interest rules as binding on his Ministers or as only guidelines subject to the conscience of each Member of Cabinet?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, there is no contradiction between the two positions. They are binding on a Minister subject to his conscience.

Mr. Crosbie: What conscience?

POSITION OF THREE MINISTERS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister says that they are binding on each and every one of his Ministers. Further to that letter of April 28, 1980, and the appendix to those guidelines or those rules, the Prime Minister stated as follows:

> In any official dealings with former office holders, Ministers must ensure that they do not provide grounds or the appearance of grounds for allegations of improper influence, privileged access or preferential treatment.

Does the Prime Minister still hold the view that his Deputy Prime Minister, his Minister of Finance, and his Minister of State for Mines, have not given any appearance whatsoever of grounds for allegations of wrongdoing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I read the Hansard of the past two days attentively. It would seem to me that the discussion permitted the Deputy Prime Minister to make the points which I was attempting to make last week in other words, that there was no improper influence, that there was no privileged access, and that there was no preferential treatment.

How could there be privileged access when we know that under this energy agreement with the Province of Nova Scotia there have been some 13 enterprises, some receiving as much as $3 million, which have proceeded under this? There was no preferential access. This was one of 13 which had access to the policy of the Government, and which was carrying out the intention of the legislation and the policy.

As a matter of fact, how could we claim improper access, privileged access, when the former Minister, Mr. Gillespie, did not even see the Minister? He was not seeking that kind of privileged access. He was going down at the official level.

How can we claim that there was improper influence when, as the Deputy Prime Minister pointed out, the funds were under the control of the Government of Nova Scotia? The agreement said so quite clearly: "The money shall become the public money of the Province of Nova Scotia". That is written in the agreement between Nova Scotia and the Government of Canada. The $9.3 million, I think, is transferred to the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the Government of Nova Scotia. How can we claim there was improper influence?

As to the third element of the guidelines, preferential treatment, I think the facts have shown that, far from giving preferential treatment to the former Minister, there was, in a sense, discrimination against him because there was a reopening of the Treasury Board submission to ensure that none of the money which had been transferred from the Government of Canada to the Government of Nova Scotia would be available or payable to the former Minister.

So, in a sense, a special effort was made by the Department to ensure that there be no privileged treatment and no preferential treatment. It seems to me, Madam Speaker, that that is the substance of the matter.

• (1420)

Has there been some scandalous misconduct or not? I repeat the question asked by the Deputy Prime Minister yesterday and the day before: has there been in substance anything done which a current Minister should not do and should not allow? My answers are no, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE IN NOVEMBER, 1980

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): The Prime Minister's defence rests in part on the argument that no preferential treatment could be given because the Minister of Finance, the former Minister of Energy, was not aware of Mr. Gillespie's involvement or, for that matter, of the project.

When speaking before the Special Committee on Alternate Energy and Oil Substitution on November 25, 1980, well within the two-year guideline, the Minister of Finance said, "I said that there are three projects on coal liquefaction. I would just like to stress there are two of them which involve Petro-Canada, so the national Government is directly involved in these initiatives". In view of those statements, does the Prime Minister really feel that Members of the House and the public can understand in any way that there is no appearance the Minister did not know and that, because of the defence that the Minister did not know, therefore no preferential treatment was given? Surely it is the opposite, that the Minister, being the type of person he is, would know and would be very much aware of what is happening in his own Department?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member refers to my answer he will see that I did not say that the Minister did not know. I said that there was no meeting between the Minister and Mr. Gillespie.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: As slippery as a sculpin.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member from St. John's is well qualified to speak as a skunk.

Mr. Crosbie: I know a slippery sculpin when I feel one.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, you should feel yourself and you would know who is slippery.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Your wit has deserted you; you left your wit in the Caribbean.

Mr. Trudeau: The Deputy Prime Minister undertook on Monday, I believe, in the House, to ensure that all relevant documents would be tabled. The work has been going on. They have assembled the documents. I understand the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources wants to table those documents at three o'clock.

I also want to table correspondence between the Minister of Finance and myself, the letter in which he indicated that he had no knowledge of the transaction before September, 1981, and, more important and relevant to the discussion, a second letter which I received today indicating that a search of the files indicated that he had been informed of the transaction as early as January, 1981.

Appended to that second letter is a letter from the Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources explaining that the file had been examined and that the information given to the Minister on which his first letter was based was erroneous. They had missed some memoranda. These memoranda have been uncovered. They will be tabled, and they led the Minister to write me a corrective statement.

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF STATE (MINES) IN JUNE, 1981

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The Prime Minister has just reasserted the statement he made last week in the House, that his Minister of Finance informed him that the first knowledge he had of these arrangements was in September, 1981.

My first question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. At page 10368 of Hansard for June 8, 1981, she laid out in detail the project that is the subject matter of this discussion which has been taking place here for several days. At the time that she explained the details of this project, the Minister of Finance, then the Minister of Energy, was in the House, and she gestured to him when referring to him in debate.

• (1425)

Will she tell us now whether, as she began her description of the project, that she did, in fact, refer to her colleague, mentioned his name and motioned to his seat where he was sitting at the time the Minister was explaining the details of this project? That was on June 8, 1981.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, it is very difficult for me to remember who was seated where. I cannot recall whether the Hon. Leader of the Opposition was in his seat at the time. I would assume if I gestured that the Member was in his seat, but I cannot swear to that at this moment.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, there are Members on this side who are prepared to do just that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rossi: How can you believe that?

Mr. Smith: When are you going to get submissions?

KNOWLEDGE OF FORMER ENERGY MINISTER

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. As I reminded him, he told this House last Thursday that he was informed by his Minister of Finance that he heard of the arrangements for the first time on September 3, 1981, while the Minister of State for Mines admits that her memory might be faulty but that the Minister could well have been in his seat, namely, the Minister of Finance. I say that he was. I am asking the Prime Minister to tell us now whether he misled the House last Thursday or whether his Minister of Finance misled him when he told the Prime Minister that the first he had heard of this arrangement was on September 3, 1981?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to be destroying his reputation as being a fast mover on his feet. He is asking me if I misled the House. If the Hon. Member for Yukon had not been busy following his own prescripted scenario he would have listened to my previous answer. He was off in some other area preparing one of his dastardly attacks, Madam Speaker. I just told the House that the correspondence I would table at three o'clock indicated that indeed the former Minister of Energy knew of this transaction early in 1981.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You misled the House.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, why did the Prime Minister just now repeat what he said last Thursday, that his Minister of Finance had told him that the first time he, his Minister of Finance, had heard of this arrangement was on September 3, 1981? Why?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I repeated that in order to clear up the matter. If the Hon. Member had not stopped listening, he would have heard me say that I got a second letter from the Minister of Finance where he cleared that matter. But I realize I have to repeat things, not twice, but many times, to get through to the Hon. Member for Yukon.

CAPE BRETON COAL AGREEMENT—ANALYSIS OF RETURN ON INVESTMENT

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister knows from a prepared Cabinet document submitted September 13, 1982 that the Synfuels project has an estimated real rate of return of minus 2 per cent. In other words, the project is a loser by the Government's own analysts. The Government document shows estimates of a much better rate of return, up to 18.5 per cent, for other upgrading projects, such as Canmet or Saskatchewan's heavy oil upgrader.

How is the Prime Minister able to defend the cutbacks and miserly expenditures on other vital energy programs in alternative energy and conservation while still considering an investment of up to $1 billion over five years in a Synfuels project, a project which the Minister of Energy's own Department describes as a loser?

• (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am afraid that I cannot comment on that in substance. The Hon. Member is presumably quoting from a leaked document or a document of which I have no knowledge. I certainly would be happy to take notice of the question on behalf of the Minister of Energy, but it would seem to me that the logic of the Hon. Member is suggesting that anything which is not profitable should not be encouraged by the Government. He and many of his seatmates are constantly putting forward projects on the grounds that they create employment in the areas of the country which need special encouragement. That may well be so in this particular case.

Mr. Rose: We are in favour of employment projects all over the country. We came out in favour of the pipeline to Atlantic Canada. We want to make sure that the employment prospects are real and lasting. We do not want to get involved in any more of these megamenaces about which the Prime Minister is talking.

PROPOSAL TO PROVIDE ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, we heard the Minister of State for Mines describing this thing yesterday as an exciting technological breakthrough for Canada and Canadians. The fact is that she was describing a fiasco which the Minister's own Department agreed was a fiasco. It may be what could be called the "Sting".

My supplementary question concerns "Sting, Part 2". The Minister told the House that the Cabinet is considering a further handout of $750,000 to the Gillespie consortium. That is what is before Cabinet. I am surprised that the Prime Minister is not aware of it. How can the Prime Minister tell us that no undue influence is being employed to make the Government of Canada consider further handouts to a group demanding a 21.4 per cent return on their investment in a project which was described by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources' own analysts as a sure loser?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I do not know of too many people in the private sector who like to get into sure losers. If they make a proposition which the Government of Canada, through its experts, and the Government of Nova Scotia, find worth while to encourage in terms of new technology, I suppose that is why both Governments have decided to try this new technology.

Once again, the point I was making was not to make a big case for mega projects, as he seems to understand. It was that this is a project put forward for an area of the country where there is high unemployment, where the people of the area would be very happy to see new technology and high investment. I think that is the role at least that Members from Nova Scotia on this side should play to ensure their Province is given a chance. That is why the Government looked at it seriously.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEEK RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister's answers in response to my colleague from Provencher turned this matter around very substantially. The Prime Minister has now told the House that he has received letters from the Minister of Finance which indicate that the Minister of Finance has either lied or misled the Prime Minister in his first response as to whether he had any knowledge of this project.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I ask the Prime Minister, in light of his guidelines and in light of the revelation that the Minister of Finance has now indicated his full knowledge of the project, whether he will not now ask the Minister of Finance for his resignation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member asks me to demand the resignation of the Minister on the basis of my own guidelines. If he refers to my first answer in the House today and the many answers given by the Deputy Prime Minister and myself last week, he will see that we constantly referred back to the guidelines.

I do not think that the House would want me to repeat again exactly what I said on improper influence, privileged access, and preferential treatment, which are forbidden under the guidelines. I think that has just been described quite clearly, that there has been no improper influence. If there was, it was meted out through the Government of Nova Scotia which is the Government that holds the funds under the agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Trudeau: If there was any privileged access, how could we explain that some 13 projects in all under this agreement have gone forward? Some of them were $3 million projects as opposed to the $1 million which was spent under this particular agreement, not to count all the agreements made with the eight other Provinces. There was no privileged access. It was access in the normal course by a consortium that wanted to follow this Government policy.

With respect to preferential treatment, I repeat that, if there was any, it was a discrimination against the former Minister by making sure that none of the funds could come his way. Any funds he received came from the other members of the consortium and not from the Government of Nova Scotia or the Government of Canada.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: What the Prime Minister is telling the House now is that it is all right if you pay somebody indirectly but do not pay them directly. If they are paid indirectly, no matter how that is done, it is quite satisfactory.

REITERATION OF REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, on two counts now, the Minister of Finance has either misled the Prime Minister or lied to him about his knowledge of this transaction in Cape Breton. On the basis that there was clear preferential treatment to a former Cabinet colleague well within the two years, I again ask the Prime Minister for the sake of honour and the sake of the parliamentary system—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —whether he is now going to ask for and obtain the resignation of the Minister of Finance.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the matter of honour, I would like to know why the Hon. Member talks about an indirect payment. These moneys are accounted for. The management committee which follows the spending of these funds is comprised of two people who are appointed by the Government of Nova Scotia. Is he suggesting that they in some way would be paying funds and not following whom they go to? Obviously, there were funds paid. They were, and will be, accounted for by representatives of the Government of Nova Scotia as well as representatives of the Government of Canada.
