A second time he sent a message, begging her to return, but her answer was negative, as before. Three hours later the proprietor of the house in which Pope's room was located, found him, face downwards, upon his bed, struggling in the throes of death. His face and lips were horribly discolored; his breathing intensely difficult. The odor of carbolic acid told the story plainer than words. Physicians were called, but they pro-nounced the case beyond their aid. He was sent to the United States Naval Hospital. An hour later he died. He was conscious to the last. His last and only words in explanation of his act were scrawled upon a piece of paper and left within sight of those who discovered his body. It read: DIVORCED BY DEATH, "Dear Friends,-When this is found I will be freed from all further cares. My life has been hell on earth for the last three days. She has left me and I can't persuade her to come back. Without her life is not worth living, so I am ready to die. She loves another man. His name is William King. Good-bye."

Appended was his signature, penned in a far from steady hand. On the following afternoon the sui-cide was buried; but before the marine band had rendered the final requiem, William Mallory King was at before she became the wife of his rival. Canada Accepts the Verdict. The Alaska boundary decision will accepted by sensible Canadians without complaint or recrimination. Hysterical protests will be heard from a few lingoes and sensationalists of the Gourley type. We shall be told that Canada has been sacrificed to the exigencies of the new Anglo-American brotherhood, and that the present decision is merely the Ashburton treaty and the treaty of Oregon over again.

These former boundary disputes were properly matters for compromise and probably Canada might have fared mountain-top, substantially parallel better in each case had the British' negotiators appreciated her interests more keenly. In the present instance the question before the tribunal was purely one of interpretation. The disputed territory was not on the bargain counter. There were only two posboundary lines on the mainlandetween Great Britain and Rusthey had to prefer. There could

Public interest was aroused not so much by a sense of the value of the disputed territory, as by a natural feeling of resentment at the refusal of the United American hands for that reason. States to refer the question to a fair tribunal which would carry a guarantee of finality. This feeling was exacerbated by the appointment of such men as Senator Ledge and Senator Turner, who had publicly fulminated against the Canadian claim. There is, perhaps, a deeper satisfaction in knowing that without any weak surrender on Canada's part, a source of friction between the two countries had been removed, and that henceforth the consideration of other questions of an international character, such as our commercial relations, will not be prejudiced by the Alaska boundary dispute.

The Americans denied the existence of a well-defined range of mountains, which would answer the description in the treaty. The Canadians produced maps and surveys showing that a line could be drawn from mountain-top to with the coast, costituting a natural boundary such as the treaty contemplated. It was a question of fact, and the majority of the commissioners decided against the Canadian contention. This makes the boundary line a purely artificial one, paralleling the windings of the coast at a distance of ten marine leagues, or thirty geographical miles. The definition of the word coast was another disputed point. The Canadians claimed that a line following the chain of mountain-peaks would cross the great inlets, the chief of which is the Lynn Canal, which pierces seventy miles into the mainland. The Americans, denying the existence of the mountain chain, fell back upon the in consideration that he had had a the coast; and they held the Lynn Canal to be part of the ocean, and the banks of the Lynn Canal to be the breadth, stand Skagway and Dyea, the ing surpluses of many millions been in nearest ports to the Canadian Yukon. the treasury, had immigrants of the the upper part of the Lynn Canal erally regarded as up-to-date in every Dyea and Skagway in Canadian terri- the most admirably devised public great career and reputation as a jurist tory. Mr. Reid, who was about 53 years of age, had been ill for four or five weeks, and Sunday his condition became so serious that Mr. McDonald, the proprietor of the hotel, had him removed to the hospital, but he was beyond aid.

Thomas Reid was a man, who though in greatly reduced circumstances, had the marks about him of having seen better days. He made his living by keeping books for different small firms, and it is said that as a bookkeeper he was without a peer. He came to Canada in 1883, from Glasgow, where his wife and family are, and where he was at one time manager of the branch of the Bank of British North America. He had no relatives in Canada. In going over his effects today, Mr. McDonald found a card with the following written upon it, in the deceased's handwriting: "His brother's Greenwich, subject to the condition address: Mr. Mungo Reid, 9 Pitt street, that if such line should anywhere ex-Glasgow, Scotland, Clyde Ironworks

Bonnie Brier Bush."

It appears as though Ian Maclaren's story of "The Bonnie Brier Bush," as as the portrayer of the principal chardoors of the Grand were thrown open for the performance there was scarcely a seat in the house that had not been sold, and when the curtain was rung up every seat was filled and many people stood at the back of the house during the three hours or more of the play. The success of "The Bonnie Brier Bush" has been and is now phenomenal, but it nevertheless is not a success which cannot be easily accounted for.

Of all the good plays that have graced the stage, "The Bonnie Brier Bush" is one of the best and the purest. Its story is a story of human interest, unfolding a life's chapter in the simple Scottish glen, so true to nature and to to the audience. It is a comedy-drama which like good wine, appears to improve with age. It is fragrant with the heather of bonnie Scotland, is enlivened with pointed, yet harmless, Scottish wit, and is softened and tempered by the rendering of "Annie Lau-rie" and the "Bonnie, Bonnie Banks o' Loch Lomond," by an excellent quar-

As usual, Mr. James H. Stoddart, as Lachlan Campbell, the stern, old shepthe part in an incomparable manner. The aged actor is now in his 80th year, and the time-whitened head needs stagecraft to add age, Mr. Stoddart looking the part, as well as speaking it, Miss Maria Richards, of Windsor, while which is equivalent to saying it could not be improved upon. After the pathetic scene in the shepherd's cot when in what he calls his "bitter, bitter shame," Mr. Stoddart was compelled to make a speech. It was very short, but appeared to please the audience very much. He said: every minute he spends on the stage. Miss Mabel Brownell, as Flora, old the accident. Lachlan Campbell's daughter, was not alone clever, but really brilliant, in her impersonation, the strong emotional scene of the second act, where she

AMERICAN MARKETS. CHICAGO. H. C. Becher, broker, Bank of Commerce building, received the following by private wire from Bartlett, Frazier &

Carrington yesterday: Chicago, Oct. 17.—Wheat was very strong again today, the advance in the bids from millers for the cash article being the feature. There seems to be no let up in the demand, and the premiums of the cash over the December continue to increase. No one seems willing, as long as present conditions exist, to sell the market short. A large local elevator interest was a persistent buyer of the December throughout the session, and this is popularly supposed to be covering of shorts. We favor taking profits on any further bulge, but at the same time we cannot advise short sales. Estimated re-ceipts on Monday, 85 cars.

Corn still felt the effect of yesterday's selling, but ruled fairly firm on covering of May by shorts and a good demand for the December by cash houses. There was an entire lack of inquiry for shipment, and no business was reported. The wea ther map was fine for the curing of corn, and the forecast is for a continuation of the same. The Liverpool market was ½d lower, in anticipation of increased arrivals. Estimated receipts for Monday.

Oats were dull and heavy, with absolutely no feature to the trade. Like corn, the market was depressed as a result of yesterday's liquidation, which created yesterday's liquidation, which created considerable bearish sentiment. The strength of wheat exerted some sustainng influence. Estimated receipts for Monday, 305 cars.

Provisions-The surprisingly large receipts of hogs both here and at western markets, opened the market lower. The packers sold lard and ribs on the hard spots. The buying was scattered and principally by shorts. The continued dispointing cash demand for lard and eats furthered lower prices in these products for the near options. If the receipts of hogs continue to come as heavy as they have for some time past, January or May lard and ribs ought to be a good Estimated hogs for Monday, 30,000. and for next week, 130,000. INDUCTION AT CHRIST CHURCH

Christ Church was filled in the ever ing, when the induction of Rev. R. S W. Howard was performed by the that prescribed by the church, new rector by Mr. J. W. Rowland, the other warden. In addition to a short charge to the incumbent, the bishop preached an excellent sermon upon the ministry itself. There were four tests, could be applied to the ministry today as in the days of Moses. They were

Whom he has chosen; who are his own; who is holy, and those that have the right of access. The applications, of course, were explained by references to Biblical history. In the course of his address the bishop deprecated the tendency today of drawing clergymen from what he called God's side to the side of the people. There was a cry today for "up-to-date" men. That meant, he said, men who were imbib ed with all the maxims of the day and the popular opinions, men who were swayed by public opinion and carried away by new means and plans, like the armor of Saul, that was not tried. What the church wanted was not men who would be witnesses for popular opinion and the cunning maxims of a dying day, but witnesses for the Lord. He said this because so many of the maxims were inconsistent with what God commanded and what th church required. The welfare of the church did not depend upon the gold the people possessed, nor the crowds office he had ever filled and was known as a warm and true personal friend loftiest steeple nor the grandest exterpower was not to be obtained in books, A rector was sent to bring power to bless was in the province of the priest, and he commanded the new cause no man was sufficient in him-tien, and on the rector who had just self.
