SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said it would not do for the majority of the House to be known as the Know-Nothing party in trying to stifle the Hansard. He did not think that they ought to be called the Lack Learning Parliament, a name that was given in England very many centuries ago; and the majority would be earning this name if they tried to put down the Hansard, or some authentic record, or what ought to be authentic at all events of what was stated in the House. It was quite true what his hon. friend from Northumberland stated; they could never get a true report or anything like an approximate to a true report of what happened in Parliament unless they had an official report of this kind. He supposed that the newspapers were anxious to be as fair as possible, and superior to every implication as to distorting what a member said in the House. But they would give prominence and length and longitude and latitude to members of their side of politics, and a considerable principle of condensation, and great hydraulic pressure would be exercised with regard to the speeches made by hon. gentlemen on the other side; and

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

this involved the necessity, if any member desired to know both sides, of subscribing for the leading journals on both sides; and he was quite sure that the hon. member for Chateauguay did not want to pollute his study or his library with such obnoxious literature as was to be found in such abominable principles as were inculcated in Conservative papers. And the hon. gentleman would now have to do it.

MR. HOLTON: He does it all the time.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: That accounts for the lack of principle which the hon. gentleman had exhibited this Session. The hon. gentleman had been insensibly corrupted by reading this obnoxious literature. He thought that it was neither fair nor just to the new Parliament to deprive it of the opportunity of having, if it desired to pursue this course, a complete Hansard next Session. If the Hansard was not established for three weeks after the Session opened, the notes taken could be written up at leisure, while henceforward, the issue could be made daily.

MR. MACDONNELL said that the Hansard was not generally circulated; as a record for the benefit of the country it was entirely useless. The country had been informed of the proceedings entirely through the Gallery.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he thought that every member had received frequent letters asking for copies of Hansard. It was true that every man could not get a copy, but every public library had them, as well as all members of Parliament, and continual reference was made to them.

MR. DECOSMOS said he believed that the attempt which was made to suppress Hansard was a mistake; without Hansard they would have no reliable organ to communicate the utterances of hon. gentlemen to the Upper House and the people of the country. The cost was a mere nothing in comparison with the advantage gained by the country in having a full, fair and complete report of what hon. gentlemen said on public questions. He further believed that the attempt to suppress Hansard was made in the interests of the great newspapers. It was in the interests of certain newspapers to mislead the people of this country, no matter what politics these journals represented.

MR. MACKENZIE: You have the Colonist.

MR. DECOSMOS said that the hon. gentleman referred to the Colonist; but he could congratulate the hon. gentleman on having secured as his organ, the biggest liar, he believed, in British Columbia. The Standard might sometimes tell lies; but it did generally speak the truth. The hon. member for South Bruce had made an eloquent speech a short time previous, and desired to prevent people using firearms and side arms and tooth-picks, and all that sort of thing; and he would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he should include in the Bill the carrying of any such incendiary thing, published in the Dominion, as Hansard, which would carry utterances broad cast over the country to the injury possibly of the hon. gentleman's party, or the gentlemen of the Opposition. He held in his hand a copy of the Congressional Globe, which was published every morning in the city of Washington. He was assured by the reporters that the delay which had occurred in the publication of Hansard was not their fault, but the fault of the printers, who did not employ men at night, as was done in morning newspaper offices. He was assured further by Messrs. McLean and Rogers, that the cost of Hansard, if it was produced daily, would not be increased at all. He considered the suppression of Hansard a retrograde step on the part of the House.

MR. SPEAKER said that an entirely new question arose regarding the point of order. This matter was of very considerable interest, as it would form a precedent. The hon. member for Chateauguay took an objection, which would be quite sound in the English Parliament. The old custom of introducing Bills for the expenditure of money, which was to be borne out of the appropriations that were thereafter made by Parliament on resolutions and addresses, was found to be so objectionable that in 186; a standing order of the House was passed in England changing the practice. But our Constitutional Act superseded the standing orders of the English House of Commons with reference to matters of this kind, and thus stated in the 54th Section: "The House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or Bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended by a message of the Governor-General in the Session in which such vote, resolution, address or Bill is proposed." The question was whether under a general appropriation recommended by the Governor-General, even though it had not yet reached the stage where that appropriation had received his assent, it was not open to anybody to propose, as in this case, the expenditure of a portion of the money for a small portion of the work for which it was designed. He did not think that the report, which the House was now asked to adopt, should appear on the journals in its present shape. He had no doubt that it was the intention of the House that they should adhere strictly to the Statute, and that the money should only be expended for the appropriation after it reached the final stage and became law. He believed that this was an entirely new question; but he was of opinion that if the report appeared on the journals it should go on in such a shape as to leave no doubt as to the regularity of the proceedings. The House was quite aware that there was provision already made for reporting the debates for the coming year in the Estimates, which had been duly brought down by Message from His Excellency. The Committee of Supply had already voted the provision, but the House had yet to concur in it. It would undoubtedly be advisable to have the report so amended that it would appear that any expense to be incurred under its recommendation would only be paid when the appropriation in question had been duly sanctioned by Parliament.

MR. HOLTON said the question of the regularity of the appropriation need not be discussed. They could make no appropriation which was not recommended by the Crown.

Question put, and motion negatived on the following division :

MAP OF THE ROUTE OF THE PACIFIC RAILWAY.

REMARKS.

YEAS :

Messieurs.

Appleby,	Macdonald (Kingston),
Béchar, d,	McDonald (Cape
Bowell,	Breton),
Brooks,	McDougall (Three
Bunster,	Rivers),
Cameron,	McCallum,
Campbell,	McCarthy,
Chariton,	McInnes,
Colby,	McQuade,
Cook,	Mitchell,
Costigan,	Orton,
DeCosmos,	Paterson,
Dewdney,	Perry,
Dugas,	Plait,
Dymond,	Plumb,
Farrow,	Robinson,
Fleming,	Rochester,
Flesher,	Ross (Middlesex),
Galbraith,	Ryan,
Gibbs (South Ontario),	Sinclair,
Gillmor,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Haddow,	Tupper,
Jones, (Halifax),	Wallace (South Nor-
Jones (South Leeds),	folk),
Kirkpatrick,	White (East Hastings),
Langevin,	White (North Renfrew)
Little,	Young.—51.

NAYS :

Messieurs

Bain,	Horton,
Bernier,	Huntington,
Bertram,	Irving,
Biggar,	Kerr,
Blackburn,	Killam,
Blain,	Langlois,
Blake,	Laurier,
Borden,	MacDonnell (Inverness)
Borron,	McDougall (South
Bourassa,	Renfrew),
Bowman,	Mackay (Cape Breton)
Brouse,	Mackenzie,
Brown,	McCraze,
Buell,	McGregor,
Burk,	McNab,
Burpee (St. John),	Metcalfe,
Burpee (Sunbury),	Mills,
Carmichael,	Monteith,
Cartwright,	Pettes,
Casgrain,	Pickard,
Cheval,	Ray,
Church,	Ross (Durham),
Coffin,	Ross (Prince Edward)
Coupal,	Rymal,
Ferris,	Scriven,
Fiset,	Shibley,
Flynn,	Skinner,
Gibson,	Smith (Peel)
Gillies,	Smith (Westmoreland)
Greenway,	Snider,
Guthrie,	Taschereau,
Hagar,	Thompson (Haldimand)
Hall,	Trow,
Higinbotham,	Wallace, (Albert),
Holton,	Wood.—69.

MR. HOLTON.

MR. DECOSMOS said he wished to call the attention of the hon. the First Minister to the fact that a map had been prepared showing the route of the Pacific Railway, and, although the last report had been sent to the House, and in possession of the members, this map had not been produced. The map, he believed, contained an idea as to the route where cereals could be grown, and where they could not; and he thought it important, in order to arrive at an accurate conclusion, and to state intelligently the route of the railway, that this map should be communicated to the House as soon as possible.

MR. MACKENZIE said there was a map in preparation, with a view to arrive at as accurate information as possible of the nature of the soil on the route to be traversed by the railway from Lake Winnipeg westward. This map had been submitted to the chief engineer, who did not consider it correct, and, therefore, it would not be submitted to the House until correct. The map of last year gave substantially all the routes proposed. It depended altogether on the engineering features of the country where the road would be located. The hon. gentleman would find, from Mr. Fleming's report, that the decision was practically between two routes, Butc Inlet and Burrard Inlet routes.

MR. TUPPER said he would draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a statement contained in the report of the acting engineer, the gentleman who had charge of the service last year. This matter was one of vital importance, yet the map to which he had referred, as containing the information necessary to an accurate reading of the report of the acting engineer, had not been furnished. On page 25 of the report it was stated :

" By referring to the map and Admiralty chart accompanying this report, it will be seen that near Lake Gumas the line to Port Moody takes a bend north-westwards, carrying the line further away from the passage to the ocean by the Strait of San Juan de Fuca, while the line to Holmes harbour leads directly to it. There can be no doubt whatever that, if the line comes down by the Fraser Valley Route, this must be inevitably the ocean terminus. It is impossible to force commerce out of its natural channel for any length of time; it will find the most convenient route despite national boundaries."

He trusted there was no necessity for suppressing the map, without which the report, to a considerable extent, was unintelligible.

Mr. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman had no right to say the Government were suppressing anything. Everything had been brought down which the Chief Engineer had embodied in his report. If the Chief Engineer had said the map was inaccurate, it was not to be depended on as any authority whatever. As to Holmes' harbour, that was a place in the United States. He did not think any map of the place had been struck off which could be brought down.

Mr. DECOSMOS said it would be a very great mistake if these maps were not brought down. He had received a letter from Washington, from a gentleman connected with the Northern Pacific Railway. They proposed to build, within the next six months, on the Pacific coast, 100 miles of railway, and a Bill had been passed the other day by the Senate of the United States in which they proposed to run this line north of Tacoma, which would reach the point referred to as Holmes' Harbour. Our line of railway would be tapped by this sixty miles line, and the chief city of Canada would be made a United States town.

TENDERS FOR THE COMPLETION OF THE PEMBINA BRANCH.

QUESTION.

Mr. RYAN enquired, Whether any tender for the ironing and completion of the Pembina branch had been accepted; and if not, why not?

Mr. MACKENZIE said tenders had not been accepted because the Government was not in a position to say the road would be built. Until they ascertained whether they could have communication south of Pembina, they did not propose to build it. Until the Government had authority from Parliament to enter into a lease, they could not do so.

COLCHESTER (N.S.) MAIL SERVICE.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. TUPPER moved for copies of all correspondence, reports and memorials in reference to increased mail accommodation from Brookfield to Upper Stewiacke, in the county of Colchester.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. TUPPER moved for copies of all correspondence, reports and memorials in reference to the change of mail route between Great Village and Five Islands, via Portapique Mountain, in the county of Colchester.

Motion agreed to.

TOLLS ON THE UPPER OTTAWA.

MOTION FOR ORDERS IN COUNCIL.

Mr. WHITE (North Renfrew) moved for copies of all Orders in Council fixing the rate of tolls to be collected by the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company on saw logs and timber passing through their works. He said an unjust discrimination was made between tolls levied on saw logs and those on timber. Timber was charged twelve times as much as saw logs. The Minister of Public Works would bear him out in stating that on the Government works the charge for timber was in no case higher than three times the amount for saw logs. He desired to know whether the Government had consented to such a tariff.

Mr. McDUGALL (South Renfrew) said he approved of the motion of the hon. member. The company was in hands of persons more largely interested in saw logs than on square timber. Square timber should not be charged over three times the amount charged on saw logs. He thought that the prices ought to be based on the cubic contents, whether the timber was square or round. The present system was unjust.

Motion agreed to.

REMOVAL OF COUNTY JUDGE AND STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATE.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

Mr. BUNSTER moved for a copy of any petition or petitions to His Excellency, or any member of his Government, praying for the removal of Mr. W. R. Spaulding, Stipendiary Magistrate at Nanaimo and Comox, and for such correspondence as may have taken place with reference thereto, either between His Excellency's Government and the Government of British Columbia, or with any other person or authority. He said that he had a rather delicate duty to perform, but it was one which he felt was incumbent on him in the discharge of his duty to his constituents. Mr. Spaulding, the gentleman referred to in the Address was now advanced in years, and owing to the fact of his being a non professional man and totally unacquainted with law, besides being exceedingly ignorant with regard to his general duties and the requirements of his position, general discontent existed in the District over his continuance in office. He was sorry the hon. the Minister of Justice was not in his place during the discussion of this matter, as Mr. Spaulding being under his supervision, the people would look to the Minister of Justice to have the wrong and injury they were suffering under remedied. He hoped, however, that in the absence of the hon. Minister, that the head of the Government would see that his complaint and the complaint of his constituents was not left unheeded. During last season, this magistrate, who was appointed by the late lamented Sir Jas. Douglas, when this gentleman did not have better material to choose from, and, perhaps, this officer was forced on him through letters received from Downing Street, had sent incorrect communications to the Government of British Columbia. As there was no telegraph between Victoria and Nanaimo, the Government was unable to verify the statement, and one of the men-of-war was ordered to proceed to Nanaimo, for which step there was no occasion in the world. Mr. Spaulding reported that the miners had struck, but this was not the case. They had only complained of injustice done them with regard to the weight of coal they were taking out at the time; and this was proved. Mr. Spaulding committed four of them for trial, but they were afterwards acquitted by a jury of their countrymen, before a legal gentleman who did understand law. For the information of the Government, he would read an Address of the Legislative Assembly, as follows :

MR. McDougall.

"PETITION OF MINERS.

"WELLINGTON, March 1st, 1876.

"This Petition to His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of British Columbia, humbly sheweth :—

"1st. That your petitioners are a community of miners residing at Wellington, near Nanaimo. That they view with deep regret the fact that certain interested parties have made false representations with respect to the behaviour of the miners in that community now out on strike :

"2nd. That your petitioners have gone out on strike, as the only means in their power, for the redress of certain deep and urgent wrongs affecting their liberties as men, and their means of obtaining support for themselves, their wives, and families as miners :

"3rd. That your petitioners aver that they deeply feel the disgrace put upon them, as law-abiding citizens, by the sending of an armed force into their midst :

"4th. That we assert and substantiate by our names that no breach of the peace has been attempted. That we have no intention of making any such breach :

"5th. And that we are ready to turn out to a man for the maintenance of peace and for the preservation of life and property.

"6th. That your petitioners humbly pray that a Commission be appointed of good men and true, who are not interested in the coal mining business personally, for the purpose of enquiring into the charges brought against the owners by the miners, and if those charges are found to be correct that the said charges may be redressed, and the order and well-being of the community restored.

"In witness to the before-mentioned statement we have hereunto subscribed our names.

"And your petitioners will ever pray, etc.

"(Signed),

"JOSEPH DORE,

"W. O. BAKER,

"THOMAS GOLDSWORTHY,

"JOSEPH HARDY,

"HENRY BIGGS,

"And 101 others."

This officer despatched a body of armed militiamen to the district of Nanaimo, in the Spring of 1877. Three companies of the militia were sent there; but the miners had made no resistance whatever to the Sheriff, with one exception; and this miner, he believed, was convicted, and sentenced to four months imprisonment without hard labour; but on the case being properly represented to the Government at Ottawa, the Minister of Justice released him after he had been for a month or so in prison. The reason why this miner had resisted the Sheriff was, because the Sheriff wanted to clear the house, in which the man had a sick child. The wife resisted, and appealed to the Sheriff, but the owner of the mine insisted that this man should be driven off the ground. There was not a more peaceable or a better citizen in the Dominion than this very man, and hon. gentlemen could readily understand that when a man had a child ill of diphtheria, and when such removal would have probably caused the loss of the child's life, that such action should be protested against. This was the only case of resistance, and even it was not one of resistance, this man merely did not comply with the Sheriff's wish to have him removed. He would assure the House that Mr. Spaulding was not fit to occupy the position he held; otherwise he would not have brought on this trouble. The report of this local "Dogberry" was as follows:—

"STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATE'S OFFICE,
Nanaimo, 25th February, 1877.

"SIR,—I have the honour herewith to transmit, for your information, a communication received by me on this date, from Messrs. Dunsmuir, Diggle & Company.

"It appears to me that the miners hitherto employed at the Wellington Colliery are determined to proceed to extremities, and have already committed such acts of violence as will necessitate the employment of an armed force to reduce them to order and compel them to respect the law.

"I would therefore suggest that one of Her Majesty's ships should be dispatched as early as possible to this station, for the purpose of overawing the miners, and, if need be, enforcing obedience to authority.

"This letter will be conveyed to Victoria by Lieutenant Diggle, R.N., who will afford Your Excellency any additional information that may be required.

"I have, etc.,

(Signed)

"WARNER R. SPALDING,
County Court Judge and S.M.

[ENCLOSURE.]

"Messrs. Dunsmuir, Diggle & Co. to Mr. Spaulding.

"NANAIMO,

"Sunday, 25th February, 1877

"SIR,—On account of a strike of our miners at Wellington for an advance per ton, which we refused to grant, we discharged them, and procured thirty-three men from San Francisco. These men agreed to work, and it was intended that they should have commenced to-morrow morning; but to-day the miners formerly employed came down in a body to Departure Bay, where we had provided accommodation for the new hands, and, by threats and violence, compelled them to leave and come to Nanaimo; we, therefore, beg that you, as Magistrate, will grant protection to those men whom we have employed and who are willing to work if protected.

"We have, etc.,

(Signed)

"DUNSMUIR, DIGGLE & Co."

A greater fabrication or misstatement of fact was never made by any person occupying an official position than to say that these men intended to resort to violence; and the best proof of this was that they were tried before twelve jurymen of Victoria who knew nothing about the case, and nothing was proved against them. They were honourably discharged, and the Judge on the Bench was compelled to say that they were discharged without a stain on their character, Hogan excepted, who had had the sick child in his house. This was the sort of style of this magistrate, who wanted to overawe and override everybody in a brutal, tyrannical way. He said this without fear of contradiction; and he would much rather have him (Mr. Spaulding) here to hear him say so than otherwise. Mr. Spaulding, as he had stated before, was an ignorant man, and did not understand the administration of justice, or the wants of the miners, or how to discharge the various duties connected with his office. Hence the petition for which he moved was presented with a view to securing his removal; he hoped that this would be done, and that the Government would appoint to the office a professional man, who understood law, and who had some respect for humanity and justice. He would now read from the report of the Grand Jury which acquitted these men, and which certainly ought to be proof, sufficiently substantiated, that this man (Spaulding) was now totally incompetent, though he might have suited Nanaimo 20 years ago, when few people lived there. This was the report of the owner of the mine:—

“WELLINGTON COLLIERY,
“16th January, 1878.

“DEAR SIR,—In answer to your letter by last mail, relative to two miners being burned with gas in the Wellington Mine, I knew nothing of it until I saw the report in the Press, but was aware that the mine was not working, nor had been working for over a week previous to the insertion in the Press of the item.

“Yours, etc.,
(Signed) “R. DUNSMUIR.”

The presentment of the Grand Jury was as follows:—

“SIR MATTHEW BAILLIE BEGBIE, K.C.B., “Chief Justice of British Columbia.

“I have the honour to present to your Lordship, on behalf of the Grand Jury, that they, in common with the people of Nanaimo, regretfully feel that a serious stigma has been cast upon this district by the fact that a military force has been called in to assist the civil authorities in the execution of their duty, in the case of the ejection of certain persons at Wellington; but we beg respectfully to remonstrate, that in our humble opinion, had the civil officer, viz., the Sheriff, attempted to execute his duty with judgment on his first visit, that no opposition would have been offered to the officers of the law.

“That, no act of violence having been committed, and the law having been exceeded but in the retained occupation of the tenements, the stigma cast upon this community by the calling in of the military, was caused only by the incapacity of the Sheriff in the execution of his duty, and that misrepresentations must have been made to have induced the Government to proceed to such extreme measures.

“I have, etc.,
(Signed) “JAS. BROWN, “Foreman of Grand Jury.

“Nanaimo, B.C., May 9th, 1877.”

That was the great trouble, and if Spaulding had been a proper officer, there would have been no occasion for it whatever. The men did not want to leave; but these persons felt like driving these miners out of the country, but the people did not feel that it was desirable to drive British subjects away from the country, as it cost a considerable sum to get them there. These men were making from $3 to $4 a day, and they would have made more if they had received their dues from their employers. There was only one of the employers that he would accuse of resorting to any such thing, and this man fairly admitted it, and compromised with one miner; and owing to the fact that this was proven in court, the men were discharged. He wished to get some promise from the Government that they would send out there some legal gentleman who could properly fill the position. He believed that as this was an Imperial appointment, Mr. Spaulding would be entitled to a pension similar to that granted to several other officials when British Columbia entered the Dominion. Through the foolish acts of this officer, the miners had almost been made guilty of riotous conduct, and it behoved the Government to take this matter into consideration. A population of something like 2,500 active miners lived in this place; and as they paid a considerable sum into the public Treasury in one way or another, it was the duty of the Government to consider their grievances. He did not think that any respectable member of the Bar would accept the position at the present salary; but some gentlemen who wished to emigrate to British Columbia, might accept it in order to go out to that Province. In connection with this subject, he would read from a letter which was not marked private:—

MR. BUNSTER.

27th February, 1878.

“How about the petition against Spaulding; all hands are watching you; I heard a fellow say the other day that you were throwing cold water upon it: that Spaulding had won you over. I told him it was a d—d lie; that you did not forward the petition, and had they have wished to do anything, their proper course would be through you. Hogan swears no other man but you had anything to do or say in the matter, and that it was forwarded through you, and they are all on the lookout to see what course you take. Hogan says you have kept out of his road for the last twice you were at Nanaimo. Now, Spaulding has not a friend in the country—go for him.

“Faithfully yours, E.”

He had been asking for this petition ever since he has been here. This petition was signed by something like 500 residents of Nanaimo and Comox. He would also read what the Standard said in this regard :—

COUNTY COURT JUDGE SPAULDING.

“The Dominion Government ought to be informed of this gentleman’s neglect of his duties. He often remains away a fortnight at a time at Comox, fishing and shooting ; and last Friday, we are informed, he left for another week’s excursion ; this time on a political mission to the same place in behalf of the Elliott Government in connection with the Deep Bay affair. The people of Nanaimo should send a strong remonstrance to the Dominion Minister of Justice, pointing out the injury to the district caused by neglect of his judicial duties by the County Court Judge.

He might say that ever since he had had the honour of holding a seat in this Parliament, strong complaints had been made against Mr. Spaulding, but he had abstained from calling attention to them until now ; forbearance had ceased to be a virtue, and it would be criminal on his part to remain longer silent. Mr. Spaulding had had a man-of-war sent up to Nanaimo to overawe the miners, who were as good, true, loyal and peaceable as any of Her Majesty’s subjects ; and men who would fight as quickly for their country as any in the Dominion ; and if he was not mistaken, a little quicker. They were entitled to consideration and justice. They were bailed out, and this fact alone was sufficient proof as to their respectability. These men were badly used ; and they paid the owner of the mines $3 a month for cabins, for which some of the hon. members would be sorry to give three cents. The proprietor wanted to use brute force to drive the men away, and import others in their places, because, as all knew, wages had fallen on the Pacific coast. The conduct of Spaulding was simply unbearable ; and therefore, although much against his will, he felt it to be his bounden duty to draw the attention of the Government to the matter, and to see whether they would send a better man even from Canada to take the offending official’s place. This was a matter of justice, as well as a question of great importance, as sometimes from 9 to 10 ships lying at this place, and this fact required the constant attendance of the magistrate, and of a man who could decide between right and wrong. A man of ability and determination was needed for this position, and this gentleman knew nothing about his duties, inasmuch as he was an old soldier who was pitch-forked into the office on arriving in British Columbia.

MR. DEWDNEY said that he had known Mr. Spaulding for the last 18 years, and he had performed his duties as a magistrate, he (Mr. Dewdney) believed, to the satisfaction of everyone he was brought in contact with. This officer had not only served the country as a magistrate for 18 years, but also in another position before he came to the Province. He was not very well acquainted with the details of the matter brought before the House, but he knew that this was a very serious riot, and that determined action had to be taken. The miners held possession of a certain property belonging to the proprietor of a coal mine, and it was with great difficulty that eventually they were arrested. He was quite sure that, in this relation, Mr. Spaulding had acted in the interests of the country, of the coal owners, and of the Dominion.

It being Six o’clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

---

After Recess.

Order for resuming the consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. McCarthy, that an Order of The House do issue to the proper officer, for the Return of the original papers made and signed by the Deputy Heads of the different Public Departments purporting to be made in obedience to the Order of this House of the fifth day of March, 1877, as follows :—“ The names of persons appointed to office between the 1st of January and the 7th of November, 1873, the names of the officials whose salaries were increased during the same period ; the names of those so appointed whose appointments were cancelled subsequent to the 7th of November. A statement shewing whether the positions which were filled up by those whose appointments were cancelled have remained unfilled or have been since filled up—and if so when and by whom—and whether the salaries of those officials which were increased during the period named have been since reduced or increased, and shewing the reduction or increase in each office respectively," read.

MR. MCCARTHY said he had moved for the Order of the House referred to in the motion now under consideration, in order to test the accuracy, which he doubted, of a statement made by the First Minister during the election contest in South Ontario in 1876. That statement was in substance that a number of officials had been appointed to office between the 1st January and the 7th of November, 1873, and that a larger number of officials had their salaries increased; and the allegation was made that these appointments had very largely increased the burdens upon the people. There was no doubt at all that a large number of appointments were made, and it was equally clear that a large number of the salaries were increased during that period; and if that statement had been made without the desire of insinuating that they were improperly made under circumstances which did not authorize them, there would have been no complaint as to the statement of the First Minister. But the inference which was intended to be drawn was that these officers had been improperly created; that the salaries had been improperly increased, and that the new Government had cancelled several of the appointments. He had desired to find out if that were so, because if it were, it was the duty of the new Government to cancel the offices improperly created, and to reduce the salaries improperly increased. On consulting the Public Accounts they all became aware that instead of there being a decrease under the management of the present Administration there had been a very large increase. He was, therefore, astounded at reading the statement brought down, which was calculated to convey an opposite conclusion. He had made this motion for the purpose of bringing to the notice of the House what he considered to be a contempt of the House, and a very gross impropriety in an answer to an Order of the House. On a close examination of the returns, signed by the Deputy Heads of the different Departments, he found a very material departure from the Order of the House. Instead of bringing down a return as the Order required, showing whether an increase had been made in the salaries of these officials or of the House, who had succeeded the gentleman who occupied the position on the 7th November, 1873, the Order had been made to apply only to those who were appointed to office, and whose salaries had been increased prior to that date. The Government having taken credit for those who had been superannuated, had resigned, or had died between November 1873 and 1877, it would appear, at the first blush, that a very large saving had been effected by the present Administration. Articles published in the Globe Newspaper, in September 1877, showed the view which was taken of the return, namely: that it proved there had been a saving of $200,000 by the present Government. But that return was not an honest return; it was calculated to deceive, and did deceive the country, and he thought it could have been designed for no other object. Credit was taken in all the Departments the death or resignation of officials appointed at that time, and the subsequent appointments and increases did not appear at all. If the return had been a fair and a proper one, it would have shown an increase in the Governor-Generals office of $400; in the Privy Council office of $950; in the office of Secretary of State, $2,840; in the office of the Minister of Public Works, $8,737.60; in the office of the Minister of Justice, $4,520; in the Department of the Interior, $2,500, and a decrease by cancellation of only $300; in the Department of the Militia, an increase of $4,050, and a decrease of $2,700; in the Department of Inland Revenue, an increase of $11,000, and a decrease of $5,965; in the Department of Finance, an increase of $9,120, and a decrease of $3,500; in the office of the Receiver-General, an increase of $900, and a decrease of $500; in the Department of Agriculture, an increase of $2,450; in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, an increase of $10,660, and a decrease of $6,500; in the Post Office Department, an increase of $46,800, and a decrease of $6,500. Those who were getting salaries on the 7th of November, 1873, amounting to $1,256,000, were now—that is the same individuals or those who represented them—receiving $160,000 more than they were at that time. That was what the return ought to have shown, and no more. This return, however, had been made in such a way as to mislead the House and the country. He understood that a breach or contempt of an order of this House was punishable. He had found a case in May similar to this one in which the House of Lords had reprimanded a person for having made a return to an Order of the House which was calculated to mislead the House. He could not understand that all the Deputy Heads could have been intentionally guilty of this impropriety. Was this done by the Secretary of State, or by the Deputy Head? He supposed they must take it for granted that the deputy heads of these twelve or thirteen departments could not by common agreement have altered the direction of this House. Then it must have been done in the office of the Secretary of State to suit the views of the Government. A recapitulation had been added which was not called for, and it was this recapitulation which was calculated to mislead the country. It was for the House to determine whether they were willing to allow their orders to be treated with contempt in this way, and he hoped some explanation would be offered from the Ministerial benches which would relieve the Government from the opinion which every impartial mind must entertain as to the way in which that return was prepared. The statement made by the First Minister in South Ontario, was literally true as far as it went; but a statement might be made which was strictly true, but which by not telling the whole truth might create a very false impression. It was now shown that instead of these offices having been cancelled and salaries reduced, those that were cancelled were filled up, and the salaries, which were supposed to be reduced, had been increased from that day to this.

MR. DEWDNEY.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex) said that the hon. gentleman had made a great flourish of trumpets when he had moved for the return, doubtless expecting that it would be of great assistance to him and his friends in demolishing the professions of economy made by their opponents. Finding, however, that the return had the very opposite effect, there had been bitter disappointment ever since, and the disappointment had gone on increasing until it culminated in the motion of the hon. gentleman. The Public Accounts did not bear out the statements which the member for Cardwell had made with regard to the increase of expenditure under the present Government, notwithstanding that some slight increases had necessarily been made owing to the addition of new Provinces to the Dominion, and other circumstances. He would give from the Public Accounts a statement of the percentage of increases or decreases made in the salaries of some of the Departments during the last three years, under the present Administration. In the Governor-General's Secretary's office the increase under the late Government had been 11 per cent. in three years, while the increase under the present Government had been five-sixths per cent. In the Department of Justice the increase under the late Government had been 48 per cent., while under the present Government a reduction of 2 per cent. had been effected. In the Militia Department the percentages were respectively an increase of 29 per cent., and a reduction of 1 per cent.; in the Finance Department an increase of 28 per cent. against a reduction of 1 per cent.; in the Receiver-General's Department an increase of 28 per cent. against a decrease of 5 per cent.; in the Customs Department an increase of 31 per cent. against a decrease of 2 per cent.; in the Public Works Department an increase of 27 per cent. against a decrease of 2 per cent.; in the Department of Agriculture an increase of 30 per cent. against a decrease of 10 per cent.; in the Post-Office Department an increase of 42 per cent. against an increase of 6 per cent.; or, in all the Departments, an increase of 35 per cent. in three years by hon. gentlemen opposite, against a reduction of one and one-half per cent. by their successors. He gave a statement of the increases made in the Departments during the last few days of the late Government, and gave also a statement showing as the general result, the fact that, while in 1867 the Departmental salaries were $314,634, they had risen in 1873-4 to $548,498, and in 1876-7 they had been reduced to $536,736.

MR. TUPPER said he must say he thought that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) had hardly been more respectful to the House than the parties who provided for the return which was now under consideration. The speech which the hon. gentleman delivered was one which only could be prompted by the conviction that no possible answer could be given to the strong and well founded statement made by the hon. member for Cardwell. The Government were charged with having been guilty of contempt of the House, and with having, in response to the Order of the House, brought down a return which was no answer to that order, and which, not only did not give the information required by this order, but a statement of facts entirely different, and at variance with the order as made. What was the answer of the hon. member for West Middlesex, who, in the absence of any Minister, proposed to rise and defend one of the grossest acts of disrespect towards this Parliament that was ever brought under the notice of the House? The hon. gentleman rose and talked upon another and different subject, and endeavoured to mislead and lead away the attention of the House from the consideration of the charges of the gravest character that ever were brought against any Administration. What did the hon. gentleman say? That the facts called for were furnished? Did the hon. gentleman say that this statement furnished all the facts?

MR. ROSS.

MR. ROSS: Certainly.

MR. TUPPER: In response to an Order of the House to state the reduction and increase in each office respectively? This was a return which professed to show the increase or reduction in each office respectively as between the 5th of March, 1877, and the 7th Nov. 1873, and he would ask the hon. gentleman whether this statement contained the facts in question. When he told the hon. gentleman that the Deputy Minister of Justice, whose name was signed here to the return which showed what the facts were, that Mr. Bernard, the late Minister of Justice, had a salary of $3,200 a year, he believed on the 7th March, 1873; and this return, which the House ordered was to state the reduction or increase in that office respectively at that date, and this return, signed by the Deputy Minister, gave them the salary on the 7th of November, 1873, as $3,200; and the reduction in the column of reductions made by this Government was set down as $3,200, and this gave not a single dollar in the account of 1877, March 7th—did the hon. gentleman mean to say that this was a statement of the facts? Why, it would be impossible to have a more gross falsification of the facts, or to imagine a more gross falsification as far as this return, for which the hon. gentleman said the hon. member for Cardwell asked, and that the members of the Opposition, when they received it, were very much annoyed at its presentation. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) knew that the return, in response to the motion made by the hon. member for Cardwell, would have sustained all that the hon. members of the Opposition claimed in this regard, and that a large increase, instead of a reduction, in these offices and in these salaries had been made. The hon. gentleman knew this right well, and that the only means by which the facts could be concealed from the House, and the only means by which the country could be deceived and misled in this important matter was by changing this Order of the House in the most indecent manner, that an order of the House was ever changed; that any Ministry should ever venture to change an order of the House.

Some HON. MEMBERS: No.

MR. TUPPER: No? He would say that if this order of the House was not changed, and if the Ministry which was responsible to the House, had ever the return made in the terms that the House had ordered, did not change it, there was not a Deputy Minister but ought to be deprived of the office he held. He said boldly, that if these Deputy Ministers had dared to change this order as it had been changed—

MR. MILLS: What change is there?

MR. TUPPER: Read the order and then the statement at the head of the return made by the Deputy Ministers. If the hon. gentleman did so, he would find what was changed, and that there was not a Deputy Minister in the public service that could have been induced to send down such a return as was made here, and signed by their names, if an Order of the House was placed in their hands and they were asked to fill it. He undertook to say that if a Committee of the House was struck, and if these Deputy Ministers were brought before it, one of these things would be found to be true: either they made returns and represented the facts as required by the order, and it did not suit hon. gentlemen opposite, who required them to take the returns back and concoct an order made to prevent the facts being brought down to the House; or else the Deputy Ministers never saw the Order of the House as made. If these gentlemen had been guilty in response to that order of making such a return as was here brought down, they had shown such unworthiness to fill their offices, or such an incompetency to understand a plain and distinct order, as to warrant the dismissal of every one of them from the positions they held; and they would rightfully deserve it. The gentlemen who were responsible for this contempt of an Order of the House, deserved that dismissal for having so treated this House, and for having brought down a return that not only was calculated to delude the House, but also to deceive the country and public. He would not say that hon. gentlemen opposite had intended it, but they had accomplished the most gross deception of the country and public as far as any confidence in these returns was concerned, that ever was carried out in any country in the world. He would draw the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross) again to this matter, and would ask him if this was a statement of the facts, where a return asked for the expenditure and reduction or increase in each office, where the late Deputy Minister of Justice received $3,200 per annum, and this was charged $3,200 against the last Government, and where this Government had superannuated that officer at $2,000 a year, adding that addition to the public expenditure; and yet this return showed nothing of the $2,000 a year, but a reduction, a pretended and false reduction of $3,200 in the office of the Deputy Minister of Justice; and in the column showing the cost of that office on the 5th March, 1877, not a single dollar. And yet these were the totals which were carried out, and that was the way in which the thing was summarized, and in which it had been attempted to mislead, and in which the people of this country had been misled, as no Government, in response to an order of the House, had ever dared to do before.

MR. MILLS: You got just what you asked for.

MR. TUPPER: Was this what they asked for? The hon. member for West Middlesex said that they could not expect to bring in three or four Provinces without having increased the business, and increasing the number of officers; and yet the hon. gentleman took up a return, and again endeavoured to mislead this House by a statement of officers, leaving out of sight the fact that during the period he referred to, an increase had been made in the number of Provinces, and a large increase with regard to revenues and the number of officials. The hon. gentleman knew right well that no answer could be made to the conclusive statement made by the hon.

member for Cardwell in his indictment against the Administration in reference to this matter; and so he endeavoured to lead away the attention of the House by going into a statement of figures that only required to be examined in order to show that there was no foundation whatever in the figures which the hon. gentleman could produce from the Public Accounts, to sustain the position the hon. gentleman had taken. He would ask the hon. gentleman this: he had read, and said the country had read—and this had made a deep impression on the country—the statement of facts with relation to the Department over which he (Mr. Tupper) had had the honour to preside. He would draw attention, for a single moment, to this matter, and the hon. gentleman could not have well selected anything in the whole transaction, or the whole return, if he searched it from cover to cover, or placed his hand on a case that illustrated more completely and more thoroughly the contempt with which the order of the House had been treated, and the extent in which it was attempted to mislead the people of this country? What were the facts? Parliament had placed at the service of the late Government a large amount of public money for the purpose of readjusting the salaries of the officials of the country. Parliament increased the salaries of the Ministers, and the indemnity of the members, and on the same basis and foundation, it placed at the service of the Government a large portion of public money with directions that it should be used in readjusting the salaries for the service of the Government. In the discharge of this duty large increases were made with the money placed at the service of the late Government for the purpose, and it was done in obedience to that instruction. Take the Department of Customs. Had there been any increase of business since the 7th November, 1873. The hon. gentleman knew that there had not; and that in this Department there had been a large decrease in business. While trade was flourishing and the revenue increasing by millions per annum, there was a reason why they should increase the expenditure of the Departments and the number of officials; but the hon. gentleman knew that since that period there had been a great falling off in the business and revenue of the country and in the Customs revenue; and there had been a great decrease in the business transacted. What did this return show? The return as to which the hon. gentleman said the sting was in the tail, and which he said would be read and leave a deep impression on the minds of the people, showed apparently a reduction, and was calculated to leave the impression that there had been a reduction to the extent of $95,780. They could come to no other conclusion. The amount was put down for salaries payable on 1st January, 1875, on the appointments made between the 1st January and 7th November 1873; on increases during that period, on reduction by death, on resignation, and on the salaries of those appointed in November, 1873, whose salaries were increased between the 7th November and 5th March, and how did it all foot up? That there were paid salaries to the extent of $443,630; increases to the extent of $55,123; and in fact a cost in that Department of $479,153, which showed less reduction by cancellation of appointments and increases, $74,503; less reduction by death, resignation and superannuation, $76,000, or a decrease of $151,000 of the amount showing as the cost, $443,630 paid by the late Government, and a reduction of about $347,850. The decrease in the Customs Department, as would be accepted by every person with this return in their hands, was no less than $95,980. He would ask the hon. member for West Middlesex whether this was not a statement of the facts. Was this calculated to cast conviction of the truth with relation to this matter to the minds of those who read this paper, when he told the hon. gentleman that in this Department, notwithstanding the enormous decrease in the business, and in the revenue collected, instead of there being a decrease of $95,000, this Government had increased the expenditure, and had done so at the date of this return, to the extent of $62,000? The hon. gentleman would find that this was the falsest statement of pretended facts that was ever attempted to be imposed on the people of any country. He would not take up the time of the House at this late period of the Session, after the exhaustive manner in which the hon. member for Cardwell had dealt with this subject in a manner that was most able, although the hon. member for West Middlesex ventured to use and open his observations with a sneer—a sneer at a gentleman who stood as immeasurably above the hon. member for West Middlesex as did any member of the House as a public man, and as a man of ability dealing with the public questions of the day, as it was possible to conceive; and yet the hon. gentleman rose with a sneer against a gentleman of the highest standing in this country in the noble profession to which he (Mr. McCarthy) belonged, and who held a first position as a barrister in this country, and as a man who had made a Dominion reputation for himself, as a man of the most remarkable talent, and who, in this House, had taken a position, and such a position as to commend him to the confidence and support of every hon. gentleman on that side of the House, and to render him an object of terror to the hon. gentlemen on the Government side of the House. The hon. member for West Middlesex had risen with a sneer directed at a man standing in that high and distinguished position in this House, and out of it; and yet the hon. gentleman took his seat without having ventured to deal with a single argument or to grapple with a single statement of the cogent, conclusive, incisive speech of the hon. member for Cardwell. It was unnecessary for him (Mr. Tupper) further to occupy the time of the House. He had shown by a single illustration—and this report teemed from cover to cover with illustrations—of the manner in which it had been attempted to treat the House and of the contempt with which this House had been treated, in the mode in which this Order of the House had been answered; and of the extent to which the audacity of hon. gentlemen opposite would go, even in a return brought down and placed on the table of the House. He would, however, do hon. gentlemen opposite the credit of saying that if they had answered this return, and brought it down while Parliament was in Session, he did not believe that they would have dared to attempt such a liberty with the House, and with the country, as this; and hence it was reserved. Months were taken in the concoction of this return which was no answer to the order of the House, and it was not only printed, but, in blue book form, sent out and scattered over the country from end to end at the public expense, not to give the information the House asked for and which it was desirable it should obtain, but for the purpose not only of concealing the facts, but also of presenting a statement of pretended facts, a statement of the grossest fallacies and misrepresentations with which any Government had ever dared to insult a Parliament which had ordered them to make a return.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. MILLS said that such a speech as the hon. gentleman had just delivered could not have been made by any other member of the House. He defied the hon. gentleman to show a single paragraph of the order of the House which had not been fully, particularly, and accurately met by the return which had been brought down. The return brought down had probably not been what the mover understood he was asking for in the motion—but it was certainly what the House understood. The hon. gentleman merely asked for this. It was impossible to put any other construction on the motion than that which the Government had put on it. If the hon. gentleman wanted other information, he should have extended the resolution with which the return was strictly in accord.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said a return in order to meet the order of the House must contain all that the House ordered and nothing more nor less, otherwise it was a false and irregular return. This return erred in both respects. What portion of this resolution asked for a return of superannuation? The resolution only asked for a return of those offices cancelled. Could the hon. gentleman grammatically or logically make out the superannuation of an officer was a cancelled appointment? The return was also faulty, inasmuch as instead of giving the statement of increases in each office, it had omitted the increases made by the present Government, while it gave the increases of the late Government. It also gave the superannuation, and it did not give the officers and salaries of the officers who were appointed in their place. The return was most misleading, and appeared to have been made with a view to misleading the country.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said the whole secret of the present motion was that, owing to the ungrammatical, inartistic and absurd motion of the hon. member for Cardwell, a totally different set of facts had been presented from what had been intended to be brought down by that hon. gentleman. The motion had been worded just as might have been expected from an hon. gentleman who was so unacquainted with the Public Accounts that, in addressing an assemblage of his fellow-countrymen, he had added $50,000,000 to the actual public debt of the Dominion, and $9,000,000 to its taxation. The return had been framed in strict and liberal accordance with the order, and he defied any hon. gentleman to compare seriatim the one with the other, and to say that such was not the case. Surely hon. gentlemen opposite would not say that it was the fault of the Deputy Ministers that they had complied accurately with the terms of the motion, instead of going behind that motion and supplying what the hon. member for Cardwell imagined he was asking for? As to the insinuation that the Ministers had sent back the return to their deputies, speaking for himself, and he believed for the most of his colleagues, he had been absent from the city at the time, and he did not think any one of them had had an opportunity of inspecting the return before it was printed. He protested against the deputy heads of the departments being held responsible for the absurd manner in which the motion had been worded, and affirmed that the more the motion was examined the more clearly would it appear that it had been complied with in the return.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

MR. TUPPER asked how it was that the heading of the return, as signed by the deputy heads of Departments, was different to the language of the Order of the House. He also asked if the Government would give a Committee to ascertain whether the change he referred to was made by the Minister or the Deputy Minister.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he would have no objection to a Committee, but he understood that all the Ministers had not seen the returns.

MR. MACKAY (Cape Breton) said he had been a little surprised at first to observe that the present deputy of the Minister of Justice received a larger salary than did the Deputy Minister in the late Government. But on consideration, the fact was not surprising, as it had been proven that the gentleman who acted in that capacity under the late Administration had supplemented his salary by receiving fees in a manner which was little short of disreputable. He believed that the present Deputy did not take such means of adding to his salary.

MR. BURPEE (St. John) said that the increase in the Customs Department had been frequently referred to by the hon. member for Cumberland. He would give the actual causes of these increases. The new appointments and the increases in salaries made in 1873 would cause an increase in 1875 over 1874 of $7,700—being the full year's operation of the increases made. Then, with regard to the Prince Edward Island service, the hon. gentleman spoke of his appointing 25 officers, while the present Government had appointed 46. But he forgot to say that in addition to those 25 officers there were 50 others acting under the Local Government, these salaries being partly paid by this Government, and partly by commissions, the total amount being as large as that subsequently paid. The Prince Edward Island service became a tax on us in 1875-6 to the extent of $7,300. Then there was paid for law-suits pending in Manitoba, and for which the late Government were responsible the sum of $1,000. Inspector Kerr in Nova Scotia, had incurred in 1875 an expense over the previous year of $1,360 in consequence of the former inspector not having done duty for the whole year. This appointment had been made by the late Government. On account of salaries and travelling expenses of Inspector Cudlip, appointed for New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island in 1875, there had been paid $2,500 for special inspection, $110 for the stationery department at Ottawa, $3,000 for organization of ports on Stickeen River. There had been paid in 1876 for two years $3,600 for increased rent of the Custom House, Toronto; in 1875, $1,000 for increased rent in Montreal; $1,000 for appointment of lockers in Montreal, less by reduction in extra list. Necessary in the correspondence of the defalcations and losses from the bonded warehouses for previous years, in accordance with Collector Dunscombe's report, 1875-6, $9,000. Then for increased extra tide-waiters and night watchmen in Montreal, on the reduction in the regular staff, under 1876 there had been incurred the sum of $6,000. Formerly the day tide-waiters were employed on night duty, but the system was found to be very inefficient. In 1876 there had been a change in the cartage and warehouse system in Montreal and Toronto, being a concession to the importers of the charges heretofore made for the examination of warehouses, &c., that charge being in excess of the cost, $10,000; charges for outports and ports made in 1873, full year's expenses, 1875-6, $3,500; Acting Inspector Newburn for Ontario, $1,700; and finally, a new charge for heating Government buildings at Halifax, $1,600—making in all an amount of $61,360.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said the percentages of the member for West Middlesex were no answer to the motion, for during the time he had worked his percentages the Dominion had extended from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The addition of Province after Province to the Dominion had necessarily increased the expenses, but the hon. member for West Middlesex could not prove that the increases which had taken place, were not at all commensurate with the natural growth of the Dominion. The cost of extra clerks had increased from 1872-3 to 1874-5 from $13,000 to $38,000. In nearly every Custom House section there had, since 1873-4, been a great increase, although the revenue was less. There had, in addition, been an increase in the excise, the weights and measures, the post-office and other departments. The cost of the public services had risen from a total expenditure of $1,736,442 in 1873-4 to $5,194,896 in 1876-7, while they were collecting two millions of dollars less revenue. The late Government had an increase of revenue, and they had money to spend upon public works. But with regard to the hon. gentlemen opposite, the country saw that, with a falling revenue, they were keeping up the public expenditure to the same point. The late Government had spent their surplus, and had reduced taxation, while the Ministerial party had increased the expenditure and had increased the taxation. Any Parliamentary return asked for should be obeyed literally. They had a right to know why the return had been altered. If one Minister had dared to alter one word of the return, the country would hold him responsible. He concluded by moving as an amendment that the return should be referred to a Special Committee of seven members, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

MR. OLIVER said this was the first Committee asked for during the Session for the investigation of charges against the Government. This request could be made very easy now, when hon gentlemen opposite knew the Session was near its close, and that there was no time for such an investigation. The expenses connected with the collection of the revenue had only increased in proportion to the business and extension of the Dominion. The total controllable expenditure in 1870-71 was $4,610,402; in 1873-74 it had increased to $8,324,076, but in 1876-77, under the present Government, it was decreased to $6,835,078. In the face of such facts no hon. member could fairly charge the Administration with extravagance. One plain, patent fact had been brought out by the return, viz.: that during the last months of the late Government 628 new officers were appointed and increases of salary were given to 1,381, thereby increasing the burdens of the people by nearly half a million of money. When they compared the present state of things, seeing that in the Civil Government of the country there had been a decrease of $71,000, with the condition of affairs in 1873, he thought that these two statements should convince the people of the country that the present Government should still continue, as they did now, to have the confidence of the people.

MR. MACKENZIE said he wished to know for what purpose the motion was made. Some alteration should be made in it.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: There is an alteration.

MR. MACKENZIE: There is none whatever.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: If the hon. gentleman chooses to vote it down, let him do so.

MR. MACKENZIE said he had no objection to grant a Committee if it was alleged that a false return was prepared or something morally wrong done.

MR. TUPPER said that this return, on its face, showed that it was improperly treated by the Government. They contended that the heading of the return, signed by the Deputy Ministers, was not a copy of the return ordered by the House; the heading of the order and of the return were not the same. He undertook to say that no Deputy Minister would have signed his name to this return, provided the Order of the House had been placed in his hands. He wanted the Deputy Ministers and Ministers, themselves, to appear before a Committee, and to make an investigation, to ascertain who had dared to take such an unprecedented liberty with the Order of the House.

MR. MACKENZIE said he denied that any liberty had been taken with the Order of the House. Unless it was asserted that some officers had made a false return, it was quite impossible to grant a Committee.

MR. OLIVER.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The hon. gentleman ought not to have allowed the Minister of Finance to promise a Committee.

MR. MACKENZIE: He made no promise.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: He said he had no objection to one being granted.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Of course, I presumed that the hon. gentleman had some charge to make.

MR. TUPPER said that Deputy Ministers did not manufacture the headings of these returns. He asked for a Committee to find out who had committed this palpable contempt on the House, and violated the Order of the House, to make a return by preparing a different return; and he believed that this would be established in a very short time, if they could obtain a Committee.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that the headings were altered for the purpose of preparing a return different from that which was asked for. He did not suspect one of the Deputy Ministers of having made the alteration; but somebody did this, and they wanted to know who this somebody was. The hon. gentleman, he knew, would not grant a Committee.

MR. MACKENZIE: We are not very likely to do so.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Hear, hear. I knew that you would not. You dare not do it.

MR. MACKENZIE: I have already stated that if the hon. gentlemen charges any person with fraud or wrongdoing in his motion, he shall have his Committee.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the charge was: that the return was not that which was asked for by the House; omissions that ought not to have been omitted, and additions which ought not to have been added, had been made; both were equally a contempt of the Order of the House. Somebody did this, and that somebody was not a Deputy Minister.

MR. DYMOND said it was a very old story. The loudest possible accusations were made by the hon. gentlemen opposite, but they dare not formulate them.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said he was amazed at the attitude assumed by hon. gentlemen opposite. He would satisfy the hon. Premier. He would move in amendment :—

“That the said resolution be amended, by adding to it the following words: and that such return be referred to a Special Committee of seven members to report on the same, with power to send for persons, papers and records.”

MR. MACKENZIE: So the hon. gentleman wishes us to vote deliberately that this is not the return which was ordered by the House.

MR. KIRKPATRICK: I said, “appears.”

MR. MACKENZIE: But it does not appear. He wants us to stultify ourselves. Does the hon. gentleman think we are all fools to vote for such a motion. The hon. gentleman is trying to contrive a motion that will not be accepted.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The hon. gentleman put it in this way. He says he will not grant a Committee unless we state the grounds, and when we do so, he says: “I do not agree with the grounds, and, therefore, I will not grant the Committee.” We cannot have the Committee any way. He says: “It is not so; I deny the grounds.” It is in order to prove the grounds given that we ask for a Committee.

MR. MILLS said that a Minister, if he discovered that a return was defective in any particular, had a right to correct it, and assume the responsibility of interpreting the Order of the House in consonance with what he believed was the intention of the House. This return was prepared in strict accordance with the requirements of the House.

MR. TUPPER said that the hon. gentleman admitted the charge.

MR. MILLS: I did not admit it.

MR. TUPPER said he now assumed that the responsibility was upon the Ministers, and not upon the Deputy Ministers. A column which ought to contain the expenditure with regard to the Deputy Minister of Justice was a blank column, although there was a sum being paid to him in the way of pension. The Globe newspaper, either deliberately, lied in reference to that return, or else the paper and the House had been misled. They could not get out of that dilemma.

MR. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman had stated that the Deputy Ministers had not signed the returns.

MR. TUPPER: I said nothing of the kind. Do not put words in my mouth, and do not attribute to me the very reverse of what I said.

MR. MACKENZIE said the Deputy Ministers had signed the returns. They were prepared and signed in the usual way; at least, so he was advised, by the Secretary of State. They would be brought down, and the hon. gentleman would see that they were correct.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he had been told across the floor by l'enfant terrible of the Government, the person who does the wrong thing at the wrong time, the member for North York, that he was afraid to send the matter to a Committee and make the allegations. He would move in amendment to the motion :—

“That inasmuch as is alleged that the report submitted to the Department to be answered, is different from the return asked for by this House, and, inasmuch as it is further alleged that such return as made omits matters asked for, and adds matters not asked for, and inasmuch as it is alleged that such omissions and addresses are calculated to mislead this House, and are a contempt of this House, be it resolved that the return be referred to a Committee to enquire into and to report upon.

MR. MACKENZIE: Who makes the allegations?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I do, and my hon. friend.

MR. MACKENZIE: Is it alleged by any one?

MR. McCARTHY: I allege it.

MR. BOWELL: Oh, vote it down.

MR. MACKENZIE: Undoubtedly we shall vote it down if the name is not inserted.

MR. McCARTHY said he would allow his name to be inserted.

MR. MACKENZIE said the allegation that an incorrect return was calculated to mislead the House was only a matter of opinion, and a Committee could not enquire into a mere matter of opinion.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said it was absolutely necessary that the words should be there. If the returns were not calculated to mislead the House, there was no necessity to refer them to a Select Committee.

MR. HOLTON thought it would be as well to wait till the papers came down, and then appoint a Committee if desirable.

MR. MITCHELL: We have already the papers.

MR. MACKENZIE said the motion was so objectionable in its terms that he could not adopt it. The returns would be brought down as soon as possible, and when they came down the hon. gentleman opposite could move for a Committee as soon as he liked.

MR. McCARTHY said he wished to say one word with reference to the allegation of the Finance Minister that he had mis-stated figures in regard to the finances of this country. He utterly denied that he had done anything of the kind, and challenged any one to show that such had been the case. If there was any garbling or misquoting, the garbling was on the part of the Finance Minister, who had misquoted and misinterpreted his (Mr. McCarthy's) Colborne speech. It was because the Premier at South Ontario had stated that, on coming into office, he had cancelled appointments made by the late Government to the extent of $52,000, that he (Mr. McCarthy) moved for the return in question, in order to test the trustworthiness of the statement. He had the return incorrect and misleading, and the Minister of Finance only had had the decency to regret that the return had been brought down in the state in which it was brought down. As an effect of bringing down such a return, he pointed out that the Globe, when the return was circulated, stated that it showed a reduction of $172,198 in official salaries since the present Government was in power, whereas the fact was that, instead of there having been a decrease, there had been an increase of $100,000. It was transparent on the face of the return that it had been changed in order to make it appear that there had been reductions where the facts were otherwise. Having referred to the percentages of the hon. member for West Middlesex, he promised to give a few facts which that gentleman could digest at his leisure. In 1873-4 the salaries of the Governor-General's office were $8,240; in 1874-5 they were $10,079. In the Department of Justice in 1873-4 the salaries were $17,367; in 1874-5 they were $19,181. In the Finance Department the salaries, which were $50,232 in 1873-4, were $54,139 in 1874-5. These figures, as taken from the Public Accounts, were better than percentages.

MR. McCARTHY.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that the hon. member for Cardwell would, on page 158 of the Pic-nic Pamphlet, find a full and detailed statement showing the absurdity of his assertions, that our taxation had increased from $3.50 per head in 1870 to $5.76 per head in 1876. In 1869-70, the estimated population was 3,400,000 and gross revenue $15,172,225, average per head $4.50.

MR. McCARTHY: If you deduct the amount of the surplus, and then divide, you will find that the other figures are correct.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Upon my word! Did any mortal ever hear such a mode of making a statement as to the amount of taxation levied. However, it is entirely on a par with all the statements made.

Question put and the amendment to the amendment (Sir John A. Macdonald) negatived on the following division:

YEAS.

Messieurs

Bowell,
Brooks,
Cameron,
Campbell,
Caron,
Colby,
Costigan,
Coupal,
Currier,
Daoust,
Dewdney,
Dugas,
Farrow,
Ferguson,
Gibbs (North Ontario),
Gibbs (South Ontario),
Haggart,
Jones (Leeds),
Kirkpatrick,
Langevin,
Little,
Macdonald (Kingston),
McDonald (Cape Bre-ton), McDougall (Three Rivers),
Macmillan,
McCallum,
McCarthy,
McQuade,
Méthot,
Mitchell,
Monteith,
Orton,
Platt,
Plumb,
Pope (Compton),
Robinson,
Rochester,
Rouleau,
Ryan,
Stephenson,
Thompson (Carboo),
Tupper,
Wade,
Wallace (Norfolk),
White (Hastings),
White (Renfrew),
Wright (Pontiac).—47.

NAYS.

Messieurs

Appleby,
Bain,
Béchar, d,
Bernier,
Bertram,
Biggar,
Blackburn,
Borden,
Borron,
Bowman,
Brown,
Buell,
Burk,
Burpee (St. John),
Burpee (Sunbury),
Carmichael,
Cartwright,
Casey,
Casgrain,
Cheval,
Christie,
Church,
Coffin,
Cook,
Dymond,
Fiset,
Fleming,
Flynn,
Forbes,
Galbraith,
Gibson,
Gillies,
Gillmor,
Goudge,
Greenway,
Guthrie,
Haddow,
Hagar,
Higinbotham,
Holton,
Horton,
Huntington,
Irving,
Jones (Halifax),
Kerr,
Killam,
Langlois,
Laurier,
Macdonald (Cornwall),
Macdougall (Elgin),
McDougall (Renfrew),
MacKay (Cape Breton),
Mackenzie,
McCraney,
McGregor,
McIntyre,
McNab,
Metcalfe,
Mills,
Norris,
Oliver,
Paterson,
Perry,
Pickard,
Ray,
Richard,
Ross (East Durham),
Ross (Middlesex),
Ross (Prince Edward),
Rymal,
Scatcherd,
Scriver,
Smith (Westmoreland),
Snider,
St. Jean,
Taschereau, Thompson (Haldimand),
Trow,
Wallace (Albert),
Wood,
Young.—81.

Question put and amendment (Mr. Kirkpatrick), negatived on the same division.

Motion agreed to.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY ACT
AMENDMENT BILL.

QUESTION.

MR. TUPPER said he wished to know whether there was any possibility of getting through the Bill entitled an Act to amend an Act intituled an Act respecting the Intercolonial Railway, passed in the 39th year of the Reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

MR. MACKENZIE: It is really impossible. We could not permit it.

MR. TUPPER said that when the Intercolonial Railway Bill was passed, it was promised that rights then existing under the law would not be interfered with.

MR. MACKENZIE: I recollect that.

MR. TUPPER said that private rights had been interfered with, and he hoped that the hon. gentleman would permit any claims which the Halifax City Railway Company made against the Government, to be referred to the public arbitrators under the Public Works Act.

MR. MACKENZIE, said that the Government had a perfect right to extend the railroad into the city of Halifax; and they could never admit the pretensions of the City Railway Company. He had simply to guard the public interests in this matter. He knew nothing whatever about the persons this concerned. It was impossible that they could consent to the passage of the hon. gentleman's Bill.

MR. TUPPER said that this matter was one of some importance. The hon. gentleman was quite right in protecting the public interests; but he was not bound, in doing so, to invade the private rights of the Halifax City Railway Company, which had expended money on the faith of an Act of Parliament, and which claimed that an Act of this Parliament passed last Session had deprived them of the rights they held under the former Act.

House adjourned at Fifteen minutes before
One o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 2nd May, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE VENTILATION OF THE CHAMBER.

MR. PLUMB said he desired to call the attention of the House to a most important matter—the ventilation of the Chamber—which was very bad, to which cause he ascribed a great deal of sickness. The health of many members became affected during the Session owing to the defective system in vogue. The air was pumped through ducts 700, 800, 1,200, and some 1,500 feet long; and it necessarily, in its passage, became deleterious, and very unhealthy. A commission was appointed in 1873 to examine into this question, but their report was never acted upon. He could not conceive any system more ingenious than the present to cause the members to breathe foul air. The health of the person who was employed to inspect these ducts was destroyed by the service, and the man was now pensioned. He knew, from the evidence of the Committee, that there was stagnant water in these ducts.

MR. CHARLTON said he hoped that this matter would receive the attention of the Government. The ventilation of the Chamber was certainly very defective. The changes made in it several years ago had proved ineffectual. Certainly, it was the height of absurdity to pump air into the Chamber through long subterraneous ducts. He did not think that public money could be spent more appropriately than in securing proper ventilation. He had always noticed that during the Session members became palid and out of health; and a great many diseases were originated in consequence of this defective ventilation.

MR. TUPPER said it would be hardly possible to have their attention drawn to a more important subject. Several efforts had been made to remedy this system of ventilation, but they had radically failed. The system of pumping air through subterraneous passages into the building was radically wrong. He had himself suffered very much from it, especially late at night; the air was then quite insupportable. The system, also, of throwing cold air into the Chamber often produced severe colds. No expense or effort should be spared to remedy these defects.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. MACKENZIE said this was an important matter, and nothing gave them so much difficulty as the question, what could be done? Owing to the style of the architecture, they were in a sort of den. If it were the classic style, they could have the windows opened; and if it was of any other style but that of the middle ages, they would have better light and better air. As it was, they must make the best of the circumstances. For the clerks, they had ceased to take the air in this direction. He would endeavour to find out what reform, if any, could be adopted. The air hat, however, been better this year than in the past. The only other system was to have shafts of air immediately above the passages coming into the building.

MR. BLAKE said that with regard to the English House of Commons and public buildings, an eminent architect being asked what remedy should be adopted, said he could give no other advice than to open the windows. Although barbarous and Gothic, he did not believe stained glass was as valuable as their lives: and if the windows were opened and a draft created, he thought that this would mend the matter.

MR. YOUNG said that while the air was very bad in the Chamber, on most occasions it was much worse in the lobbies. He had several times directed the persons in charge to see that the doors and windows of the lobbies were kept open as far as possible; and if this were done, it would probably remedy the evil to a very considerable extent.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

On Resolution 8,

MR. KIRKPATRICK said he wished to call the attention of the Government and House to a matter connected with the Department of the Minister of the Interior, regarding the claim of the widow of an old Civil servant whose death last January they all deplored, Colonel Coffin, who was for many years in the Department. The deceased was Commissioner of Ordnance Lands; he was appointed to this position in 1856, but previously had been for some years in the service of the Government; in 1856 he was asked to give up the office he held in Montreal and assume the management of the Ordnance Lands, which were then transferred to the Province of Canada. He took the office at a salary of $2,000, and expected to remain in Montreal; but very shortly afterwards, in order to better discharge his duties, he was removed to Ottawa; as the bulk of these lands lay between Ottawa and Kingston; but there were also lands under his control over the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario. He occupied a building on the ordnance lands, rent free, for some years, which fact, to a certain extent, compensated him for his removal here. In 1866, when the Government came to Ottawa, attention was called to his receiving a house free of rent, which advantage did not attach to other Civil servants, and he was compelled to buy the house in question, thus so much diminished his salary, which, nevertheless, remained at the figure of $2,000. In 1870, another very important branch, the estate of the Bank of Upper Canada, was placed under his charge, and he managed it for two or three years without receiving any extra emolument though he had the promise of it. He had not received any increase since he entered the service; he discharged his duties most satisfactorily to all his chiefs; but, unfortunately owing to procrastination, the promised increase of salary was overlooked until the time, with many others, he received tardy justice. This came, unfortunately, at the last moment of the existence of the late Government. From him, on the accession of the present Government, had been taken the increase of salary to which he had been entitled. He spoke of the saving which Mr. Coffin had made in his Department, and concluded by expressing the hope that Parliament would make up to his family the $2,000 of which he had been deprived.

MR. HOLTON described Col. Coffin as being what he considered the beau ideal of a Civil servant. He said the claim was a just one, and expressed the hope that the Government would comply with what he considered only a just and reasonable demand.

MR. LANGEVIN expressed his high sense of appreciation of the service of Col. Coffin, who had been an officer of this Department, and concluded by supporting the proposal of the member for Frontenac.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he could bear out all that had been said of Col. Coffin. He and the deceased had been boys together, and it was because of his great abilities that he had received his appointment. He had discharged his duties in an eminently satisfactory degree, and he trusted that provision for his family would be made in the Supplementary Estimates.

MR. MACKENZIE did not differ from the high estimate of Col. Coffin's character and ability; but he would only say at present that the Government would consider the matter before the close of the Session favourably in some way to the family of the late Colonel.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD thanked the Premier for his kindness.

MR. TUPPER urged the Government regarding the claim of Col. Dennis on the Government, to carry out the arrangement entered into with him when he entered into the Civil Service as Surveyor-General.

MR. MACKENZIE asked if the hon. gentleman spoke at the request of Col. Dennis.

MR. TUPPER: No.

MR. MACKENZIE; Because it would be very inconvenient for members of the Opposition to bring up the affairs of each officer of the Government in the House.

MR. TUPPER said he made the remarks as a matter of justice to the Colonel, who had been overlooked.

The officer was promised the same salary as a Deputy Minister, and the promise had not been carried out.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD bore testimony to the correctness of the remarks of the hon. member for Cumberland.

MR. MACKENZIE deprecated the practice of mentioning the cases of individual Civil servants on the floor of the House.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD agreed as to the inconvenience of bringing such matters up in the House, but he thought the circumstance was exceptional in the present case.

MR. BLAKE said he understood that the circumstance of this case had been mentioned to the Government in the usual and regular way, and if that were the case, the Government should have been left to deal with it at their own time and in their own way.

MR. MILLS stated that the increase made to this officer was made without prejudice to any right he had under the late Government.

Resolution agreed to.

On Resolution 18,

Departmental Contingencies.....$159,000

In answer to Mr. TUPPER,

MR. MACKENZIE said he had urged the Printing Committee to have the report of the Halifax Commission printed as soon as possible.

Resolution agreed to.

On Resolution 53,

Miscellaneous Printing.....$2,000

MR. KIRKPATRICK complained that no particulars were given. The House ought to know every year how many extra clerks were employed; and there should be an audit of this account.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he did not desire to swell the Public Accounts unduly, but he thought a detailed audit of this account might be printed and laid on the table of the House early in the Session.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. BOWELL said it was quite time that some better system should be adopted. The system of employing a certain number of officers during Session was vicious in principle. He saw no way of meeting the difficulty except by adhering strictly to the rule of the House. If that were done they could hold the Clerk strictly to account for unnecessary extra appointments. Attention had been called to one of many of these clerks who had employed his time in eulogising some members of the House and abusing others. It had been stated that he was not in the employment of the House, though he was on the pay list. The result was that he had charged a member of the House in the public Press, with having uttered falsehoods. He (Mr. Bowell) remembered that when a clerk of this House wrote something disparaging in reference to a member of this House, the then leader of the Opposition, now Chief Justice Dorion, brought him to the bar of the House and had him dismissed. He did not know who was responsible for this. By the 110th Rule it was provided that the Clerk should employ at the outset of the Session such extra clerks as might be necessary for the requirements of the public service; 41 sessional clerks had been placed on the staff, a large number of whom had comparatively nothing to do, and he believed that before this return was made to the House, 7 or 8 were dismissed. The whole system was lax, and means were thus provided to pay political supporters who had done certain services in the interests of the party. This would be a fair subject for the new Parliament to take up and make provision to prevent this abuse in the future. He found that two of these clerks had received pay, one for 14 days before he was appointed, and another for 11 days previous; and he wished to know why this was done.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said with respect to the general question raised that the Printing Committee had been held were the proper persons to disburse $70,000 appropriated for miscellaneous services; and the Auditor was to see that the expenditures were duly certified by the Chairman of the Committee and their officers. There were only two items in which he thought any possible abuse could occur, expenditures made for purposes not known before and authorized by the House, and the item with reference to extra sessional clerks and committees. As to how many clerks should be employed, this was not exactly a question for the Auditor, who was, however, to see that proper receipts were produced. The general object would be obtained if the gentlemen of the Internal Commission were to meet with instructions that these expenditures in reasonable detail be placed on the table of the House. He could not explain why clerks were paid for time prior to their date of engagement.

MR. MACKENZIE said that the Committee had nothing to do with the employment of these persons, except to fill up any vacancies that might occur. This was entirely under the control of Mr. Speaker and the Clerk of the House. He understood that the Auditor went over all the items of payment.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that a sessional clerk had, over his own signature, reflected in a letter on a member of the House, and he was informed that the moment that this fact was brought under the notice of Mr. Speaker, he at once dismissed the offending official.

MR. McDUGALL (South Renfrew) said he thought that this was an extremely proper course.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that no doubt, if the hon. gentleman in question had asked it, this clerk would have been brought before the bar of the House by a unanimous vote. Whether a member belonged to the minority or majority he was equally a member of Parliament, and no doubt the majority would have justice in the matter. He was glad that this had not been done, but, nevertheless the punishment was very small for a very great offence.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: The dismissal was instantaneous.

On Resolution 56,

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that the collection of criminal statistics was a very important matter. This was one of the means of knowing what was the actual moral state of the country; and the best means of detecting new crimes and of learning what were the favourite crimes. The Dominion Government alone could obtain this information from all parts of the country. He had been under the impression that a large amount of criminal statistics had been collected.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that very little of the vote had been spent last year. One of the returns gave the statistics, with regard to insolvency, and this return was published in the report of the Minister of Agriculture. Unless returns were obtained of the petty offences, he presumed that the report would not be very voluminous; and that it could be placed in the report mentioned.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The most important are the petty offences,—crimes committed in consequence of poverty and vagrancy. These are curable. It would be infinitely more valuable if the insolvency and criminal statistics were bound together in a separate volume.

Resolution concurred in.

On Resolution 60,

Immigration and Quarantine.....$120,370

MR. POPE said he wished to know what the Paris immigration agent was doing now.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Assisting the commissioners at the exhibition, I believe. The hon. the Minister of Agriculture informs me that he is advised that many more immigrants will come out this year than has been the case heretofore, and he cannot, therefore, diminish the vote; but, if the immigration does not increase, we will probably dispense with three or four agents, which will reduce both items considerably. There are some agents like Mr. Dyke, whom we must keep.

MR. POPE said that he was informed that certain agents drew $4 a day for travelling expenses, all the time, and when they were not travelling.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that the number seemed to show that this could not be the case with all of them.

Mr. BUNSTER said he would like to know whether any emigrants were sent out to British Columbia under this system.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that the great expense which the trip would require militated against that Province in this respect. He was afraid that only those who were induced to come over, owing to the information distributed concerning this Province, went to that section of the country.

Mr. LANGEVIN said that the item of $20,000 for health purposes might very properly be struck out. We were not on the eve of an epidemic. When the revenue was contracted, this vote might be applied to some more useful purpose. The expense in connection with the immigration agencies could also be largely reduced. The expenses of the Department were equally as great as when large numbers of people were brought across. He objected to the numbers of agents who were in Great Britain and on the continent, doing nothing but, as had been stated, writing articles for the newspapers. The expenditure of the Department, as it was operated at present, could not be defended. He invited the Ministry to a serious consideration whether there could not be some reduction which would be a real saving to the country.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT admitted that if the results of the coming year's operations were not more satisfactory than latterly, the Government would be justified in reducing the estimates for salaries of travelling agents and travelling expenses. The Minister was unwilling to do this until after the present season had been tested.

Mr. POPE said that the immigration was only one-third of what it had been previously.

Mr. PLUMB admitted the necessity of affording information as to the country, but believe it could be more judiciously and economically effected.

Mr. CURRIER was glad that there was a possibility that the services of travelling agents would be done away with. He advised that something be done to send away to our western country those now residing amongst us who had no means of procuring a livelihood.

Mr. POPE.

Mr. MACKENZIE said that would be impracticable. Moreover, he thought that more people were already going to Manitoba than would find it to their advantage to stay there.

Mr. TROW objected to any reductions maintaining the necessity of making Canada and its territories known to the people of Europe.

Mr. POPE said he would give the Government all the assistance in his power to conduct the work of the Department, but he wished it to be done with efficiency and economy.

Resolution agreed to.

On Resolution 66,

Mr. MITCHELL moved in amendment:—

“That in view of the present financial condition of the country, it is desirable to reduce the expenses of the Militia Staff, by striking out the amounts of $14,400 and $6,000 provided in the said resolution for 12 District Adjutants General, with their allowances, as well as the sum of $6,600 provided for 12 District Paymasters;” which was negatived on a division.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) said there must be such officers as these, but it was possible that the districts might be reduced and in that way some economy might be obtained; but at the present moment, when they hardly knew what position the country might be called upon to assume, it would not be wise to deprive the country of the means of having a sufficient number of officers in case the militia should be required.

Mr. MACKAY (Cape Breton) urged the Government not to reduce the pay of officers of the militia, and insisted that they should take care the militia were paid when called out to aid the civil powers.

Mr. ROSS (Prince Edward) trusted that next year there might be a reduction in the direction proposed.

Mr. BECHARD said he believed that in the rural districts there was no practical result for this expenditure of money, many of the volunteers being mere boys. He, therefore, trusted that next year the Government would seriously consider the subject of a reduction. He believed it would be preferable to spend the money in training volunteers concentrated in large centres.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) said the subject had already engaged the attention of Parliament, but there was some difficulty in dealing with the question, because, naturally the people in the rural districts felt that they had as much right to contribute their quota as the people in the more populous centres. He admitted there was great force in the remarks of the hon. gentlemen, and, no doubt, the result would be in accordance with what his hon. friend had suggested, which he confessed was also his own view. It was, however, a matter which must be dealt with gradually.

Mr. HUNTINGTON, as representing a rural constituency, said that in his own county and district were some of the finest bodies of militia in the Dominion.

Mr. SCRIVER said he believed there could be a reduction in district staffs, but he held that upon the frontier there were some most efficient corps.

Mr. BROWN advocated a reduction of the brigade staff and said there were new rumours of Fenians drilling on the other side and of war in the East, but as the hon. the Minister of Militia was vigorous and efficient, and had put the office in better order than he had seen it in for a great many years, if ever before, he was willing to leave the matter in the hands of the hon. gentleman. He knew that when the hon. gentleman examined into the matter and saw the waste of money in that direction, he would concentrate the business at the general headquarters and reduce the number in outlying districts. It was necessary to have two officers, a paymaster and a storekeeper in every district.

Mr. BOWELL said he was rather surprised that the hon. member for West Hastings had adopted the opinions expressed by the present Minister of Militia. That this hon. gentleman was not an efficient departmental officer he did not pretend to say, as it had not been his good fortune to come in contact with the hon. gentleman in that respect; but when the hon. gentleman expressed an opinion in accord with that of the hon. member for Iberville, that it would be well to disband the volunteer companies raised in the rural districts, and confine the battalions to the city volunteer force, it struck him (Mr. Bowell) that this was not a step in the right direction, and as to the hon. member for West Hastings, whose battalion he did not hesitate to say, was one, as good as any, if not one of the best in the country, if the suggestion of the hon. the Minister of Militia was carried into practice, this fine battalion would dwindle into one company, for only one company was in a town; the others were formed in rural sections; and this was as fine a body of men as was to be found in Canada. He (Mr. Bowell) totally dissented from the opinions expressed by the hon. member for Iberville, and also the hon. the Minister of Militia on this point; and for once he was happy to say that he was in accord with the opinions of the hon. the Postmaster-General. He had come to this conclusion, and it was an opinion which he had expressed, not only on the floor of this House, but also in other localities, that the best men brought into the field, and best battalions that were placed in camp and brigade, and the men who obtained the greatest proficiency in the shortest length of time, belonged to the rural companies. This had been his experience during 10 or 15 years connection with the volunteer force; but whether this was the case at Halifax, or whether it had come under the eye of the Minister of Militia, he did not know. In Ontario, however, he was sure in saying that such was the fact; and he was very glad to hear the remarks made by the hon. member for Huntingdon, when he called attention to the efficient volunteer force along the frontier in the counties from which the hon. gentleman came; and it was just so in other sections of the country.

He was not prepared to support, although most hon. gentlemen knew what his opinion on the staff question had been for the last 10 years, the motion as proposed by the hon. member for Northumberland. There must be the Deputy Adjutants-General and the Brigade Majors retained or the Brigade Majors must be dispensed with and the Deputy Adjutants General retained. It was better to retain the latter and to do away with the former, in accordance with the recommendation made by the Adjutant-General in his reports in 1866, 1875 and 1877. He had no doubt that the hon. the Minister of Militia had given this matter his attention; and if he turned the report made by the Major-General in 1875 he would find that he spoke of this very staff in this way. Very few, however, of the recommendations of this officer had been carried out by the Ministers of Militia in the past, and from the expression of opinion made by the hon. the Minister of Militia during the discussion on the estimates on this question, in which the hon. gentleman expressed opinions in accord in great measure, and in fact on every point, with those advanced on that side of the House in connection with this question, if the hon. gentleman remained in office another year and met the new Parliament next year, and would come down with some scheme by which the views which the hon. gentleman had expressed, and which he believed were shared in by the vast majority of the volunteer force in this country—would be put into operation, the hon. gentleman would be supported in the House. The Major-General, in 1875, said that some districts were overstocked with members of the staff, many of whom held positions which had been almost sinecures for three or four years. This was rather strong language, coming from the Major-General, whose special duty was to look after this department. This officer suggested that the brigade staff should be abolished; and, after calling attention to the fact, said that a considerable reduction would leave ample and to spare for general purposes, giving those left a more active life, and impressing them with more responsibility, and leaving room for the temporary training of intelligent young officers, soldiers at least, to act on the brigade staff and in camp exercise. Some members of the brigade staff had slight qualifications and some were unsuited for the position. The year following, as they knew, a slight reduction was made in the staff, but only two or three brigade majors were struck off, leaving, as this officer said in his last report, eleven brigade majors; and the small reduction of two or three which had been made had resulted in good instead of the reverse. When the next item, concerning brigade majors, was brought up, if the hon. member for Northumberland would move that it be struck out, he would be most happy to vote in favour of the proposition, because he believed and he now repeated what he had often said, that the less the number of the staff in the different districts, the greater the efficiency of the force would be. The force would be in a better state of organization when there were a less number of these officers in the different localities. The paymasters might as well be dispensed with during the time of peace, as they did nothing except draw their money and the travelling expenses connected with the office. Their duties could be performed from head-quarters as well as by having a salaried officer receiving $600 a year and expenses; and they could do without this officer in each district. He was quite sure that if the hon. the Minister of Militia would give his attention to this matter, he would find that when this item came down, he need not make provision for those who held these offices, and he could make a very large reduction in this particular item itself. He had, however, no objection to this amount of money being spent. If the $20,000 were struck off for this purpose and given to the men, he would not object, in order to make the different battalions more efficient and general satisfaction; and the result would then be what it ought to be with regard to the expenditure of this money.

MR. BOWELL.

MR. JONES (Halifax) said he was afraid the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bowell) had not understood what he had said in reply to the hon. member for Iberville. He was drawing the attention of the House to the fact that a good many rural companies were not in a thorough state of organization. If the hon. gentleman referred to the report of the Lieutenant-General, he would observe that he had drawn the attention of the Government on several occasions to that point, and he (Mr. Jones) did not hesitate to say that whenever the Lieutenant-General had recommended any company in the rural districts or cities to be disbanded, he had always given his assent to it. The hon. gentleman would remember, perhaps if he referred to the report of last year, that this officer had recommended the disbandment of several batteries of artillery, and this was at once done; and he (Mr. Jones) had always endeavored, since he was in office to carry out, as far as possible the recommendations of this officer, who, however, sometimes merely made recommendations regarding the expenditure of money, which it was not always possible to carry out. The hon. gentleman would remember the recommendation made with regard to promotion, to the Prescott Branch for five years service in one rank. He had agreed with the Lieutenant-General, and this alteration was made. Several alterations had also been effected in accordance with the Lieutenant-General's report, and several companies in the cities, and rural districts had been disbanded in consequence of their inefficient state. He would at once say, that there was not the slightest intention of disbanding any company in the rural districts as long as they maintained their organization; and the hon. gentleman would see that it would be contrary to the discipline of the Force to maintain any company, either in the cities or rural districts, merely for local considerations; if they were not in an efficient state of organization. He quite agreed with what the hon. gentleman said with regard to the material which the rural districts supplied. This was very superior to the material furnished by cities, the former were a much better class of men, and he said so without any disrespect for the cities, and in this respect the rural companies were very desirable. He had merely given the opinion with reference to companies that the Lieutenant-General had expressed, and as the companies were disbanded they were distributed over the Dominion where most needed. As the hon. gentleman was aware, by law there could only be so many in the Force, and of those disbanded here, one was allowed to Manitoba, one to British Columbia, and two to Quebec; and, as the Minister of Agriculture of the Ontario Government was very anxious that the schools of agriculture should have military training, and had offered that if the Government would supply the ammunition and arms they would pay for the instruction, this Government thought it desirable that such a body of fine young men as attended this school should receive military training, because they would be dispersed over the Province, and throughout the Dominion, carrying with them the information. This request was therefore complied with.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he was glad that the hon. the Minister of Militia had made this explanation, because it would sound very strangely if he was understood to express an opinion against the continued keeping up of the military force by the sons of the soil who had to defend the soil. He need not add a word to what had just now been so gracefully uttered by the hon. the Minister of Militia, and by the hon. member for North Hastings, as to the superiority of the rural population, in physique, over the towns people, while they were the equal of the latter in intelligence; and it would be, to the last degree, improper and inexpedient to diminish the military spirit which prevailed in this country. On the contrary, it should be encouraged, as we had no regular force. We must look to the volunteer force, and to the order and military spirit of our young men, who were very glad to serve. He hoped that his hon. friend from Northumberland would not press his motion for the reasons given. He was inclined to believe, and indeed he did believe, that the staff was too large. The hon. the Minister of Militia might not remember, as it was long before his time, that this system was adopted. This was done when the militia was organized at a time of supposed danger, and on the recommendation of an officer of great experience who was out especially from England, to organize our militia, and prepare it in case of war. He referred to the present Lieut.-General Macdougall at Halifax. This officer thought it was of the first importance to divide the country into military districts, and to have a staff. Of course the members of the Government of the day being laymen, were obliged, and very properly, to yield largely to his recommendations. Experience, had shown, however, he thought, that one did not want all these district Deputy Adjutant Generals and Brigade Majors; and certainly the duties of the pay-masters could be well performed by some Civil servants, or by Customs or Excise officers, or some officer which the Government had in every military district. The officers of the different corps might save the pay-masters' salaries altogether. He did not know that it was desirable to press the point regarding the brigade majors. They had a strong opinion by the Lieutenant General and also by the hon. the Minister of Militia, to the effect that a considerable expenditure could be saved in this direction; the only question that now arose was whether it would be well to reduce the staff under present exigencies, and the possible complications that might take place. He did not suppose that the efficiency of the service would be affected by the discharge of the brigade majors; but he did not think it would look well in the English press to be cutting down expenditure in this regard at the present time. He considered that the English staff system should be introduced here. And he thought that the hon. the Minister of Militia would express concurrence with that idea. We had a number of staff officers appointed for life, and who had not made themselves acquainted with the new drill, training and discipline, and the last system of tactics. They were old fogies, to use a common expression, without any disrespect; and these gentlemen could not be considered men who would keep up our volunteers to the present standard, which late events in Europe, had shown was absolutely necessary to now have an efficient force. Staff appointments only continued for five years, no matter what an officer's abilities might be; and at the end of this period he had to rejoin his regiment or be transferred to another branch of the military service, and new men were brought in fresh from the field and from study, so that the whole staff was kept up in a state of efficiency. There was this difficulty here, however, which did not exist in England; such an officer there still remained on the staff, while we had no such alternative here. He did not know how this was to be cured, but it ought to be cured. It was the business of the hon. the Minister of Militia to take up this point. The army was not made for these gentlemen, but these gentlemen for the army.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

MR. MITCHELL said that every gentleman who had spoken on this subject had admitted the necessity of a reduction of the staff. Under the circumstances, however, he would not press his motion to a vote, but allow it to be lost on the division. A general impression had been created from his remarks the other day that he desired, in some way or other, to do away with the volunteer force. He wished to place on record that he desired to do nothing of the kind, but when a million was appropriated for the maintenance of this service, he did not wish it to be squandered, but to have more of it given to the men who really did the work, and to eliminate and cut out the useless staff officers who were not required. He trusted that he had set himself right on this point. He would not like to see this country without a volunteer force, but when there was no actual necessity for extra officers, their number should be kept down, and the expenditure should be reserved for the payment of the men and the maintenance of the officers who were actually required for the due administration of the affairs of this particular service. The hon. member for West Middlesex had stated that he would leave this matter in the hands of the hon. Minister of Militia, as he was a young Minister and been but a short time in the service; but the way in which Ministers had been changed during the last few years, kept them young Ministers all the time, and at this rate they would never get any redress.

Motion negatived on division.

MR. MITCHELL said that he would now propose a motion which he felt bound to press to a division. His previous remarks applied equally to this motion, and consequently he would not take up the time of the House any longer on this question. He moved:—

“That the House do not concur in the report, but that it be resolved that in the present depressed condition of the country, it is inadvisable to vote the entire sum of $20,000 for the brigade majors in the said resolution.”

Motion negatived on division.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

On Resolution 71,

In reply to Mr. LANGEVIN,

MR. JONES (Halifax) said about the same plan as was adopted last year would be followed for the drilling of volunteers.

In answer to Mr. POPE (Compton),

MR. JONES said the drill would not be in camp, but at company headquarters in the country, and at battalion headquarters in cities.

Resolution agreed to.

On Resolution 73, Drill Sheds and Rifle Ranges, $10,000,

MR. MITCHELL asked what it was intended to do with the drill shed at Montreal, which was in a most discreditable condition.

MR. JONES said that the Government had advanced $12,000 for the construction of a drill shed, which, now that the roof of the drill shed had fallen in, the Government had called on the city to repair or return the money. The corps in that city were already suffering, and he was glad to see that the subject was receiving the attention of the Council.

Resolution agreed to.

On resolution 75, Military College $50,000,

MR. MITCHELL moved, in amendment, that the item be not now concurred in, but that it be resolved that, in the present depressed condition of the country, it is inadvisable to vote so large a sum as $50,000 for the support and maintenance of a Military College.

MR. JONES (Halifax) said if the hon. gentleman had moved against the Military College at all, it might be understood what he meant. But he did not say by how much the item should be reduced. The policy of having such an institution had already been pronounced upon by the House. The College was doing good work, and it could not be efficiently maintained for less than the sum now asked. He thought that the hon. gentleman should endeavour rather to perfect the system than to try to hamper it by such a motion.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said it was unfortunate that the member for Northumberland had not indicated where extravagance existed. If he objected to the principle of the College, he should have taken exception to its establishment. The College had been well established, and would make our native officers equal to any that we could import. The money was, he believed, well expended, and the country would reap great benefit from it. He hoped the hon. gentleman would withdraw his amendment.

MR. ROSS (Prince Edward) expressed his intention of supporting the College, and especially at a time when the Mother Country might require support. He knew the hon. member for Northumberland would be among the first to show devotion to England.

MR. LANGEVIN supported the vote, and said that the Military College should be maintained; it should be rendered more accessible to young French Canadians. He emphasized the value of non-commissioned officers, contending that some measure should be adopted by which a certain number of such officers should be turned out every year.

Mr. JONES (South Leeds) said that instructions were given in the Military College, not only to the higher grade officers, but to non-commissioned officers as well. He thought, while the member for Northumberland had his hand in, he might as well move to abolish the militia system altogether. He would find few, however, to support him in such a movement.

Mr. ROBINSON said that, knowing the pluck and gallantry of the militia, he intended to support that body. He hoped Canada would not make the mistake the Americans did, when they made raids upon their military schools and colleges just before the Southern troubles came on. This country should be always on the alert, and the militia should be well supported and encouraged. In conclusion, he urged the appointment of District Instructors in Musketry.

Mr. MACDOUGALL (East Elgin) strongly approved of the maintenance of a military college, especially as he learned, from those who knew of the management of the institution at Kingston, that it was most efficiently conducted.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) said he had given orders for the wide distribution of the new regulations as to instructions in the French language. He agreed with the hon. gentleman as to the importance of non-commissioned officers, and hoped that, next year, a vote would be taken which would insure a larger number of them being present for service.

Mr. MITCHELL said the speeches of hon. gentlemen around him reminded him of the celebrated lines about the Balaklava charge. There were colonels to the right of him, colonels to the left of him, colonels in front of him, and colonels in rear of him, and each gallant colonel he knew would be down on him when he proposed a reduction in the military items. This country could ill afford the expenditure that was incurred in the support of the Military College. It cost the country $1,100 a year for each student, and when the students came out of the College they were unfitted for the ordinary business of life. There was a great deal too much money spent on staff officers, and while he did not like to see so many of them travelling about the country at the country's expense, he certainly would not impoverish the militia.

Mr. LANGEVIN.

Question put, and motion negatived on a division.

Resolution agreed to.

On resolution 178,

Mr. LANGEVIN said, for what schools was this item appropriated? and how was it expended last year?

Mr. MILLS: I have the list made out, but it is at my office. I will give the hon. gentleman the information at a subsequent period.

Mr. LANGEVIN: I must say I am very unfortunate about this item. The same thing occurred last year.

Resolution concurred in.

On Resolution 185,

Mr. LANGEVIN said: Is this item to pay the salaries of the officers?

Mr. MILLS said this was appropriated last year for the expenses of the Keewatin Council. The greater portion of it was expended in the maintenance of a central cordon, and in regulations relating to the prevention of the spread of small pox. In fact this was a very small portion of the expense incurred. They expected this year to pay the expenses of the Council, to make necessary ordinances in the territory, to publish these ordinances, and to maintain order in the territory.

Resolution concurred in.

On Resolution 186,

Mr. LANGEVIN said: Where are these barracks being built? And what has been done with the buildings at Fort Pelly?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that these buildings still remained in use he believed. This vote, as the hon. gentleman would see was much too small to provide for any considerable expenditure. They meant to make the men do as much of the work as was possible; the intention was to considerably improve Fort McLeod, to erect some better buildings at Shoal

Lake, and also to increase the accommodation at Fort Walsh, at Fort Killderry and Fort Saskatchewan; and to a certain extent at Swan River. These were the places at which this money was intended to be expended, and it would go, he believed, chiefly in providing materials which the men themselves were expected to put up.

Resolution concurred in.

On Resolution 78,

MR. MITCHELL said he had called the attention of the House when in Committee to the expenditure of the Mounted Police, and to the very extraordinary and very extravagant charges connected with this service. He did not desire in any way to cripple or impair the efficiency of the service in any way, but he had arrived at a thorough conclusion from carefully looking over the accounts, and from having had the fullest explanations which the Government could give in this regard, both in the Public Accounts Committee and the House, that a very much larger sum of money was spent in connection with this service than the exigencies of the service warranted. The charges alone for the food of the 333 horses were enormous, and something far beyond what, in his opinion, ought to be expended in that country, where it was represented that horses and cattle could maintain themselves at all seasons out of doors. He did not mean to apply that horses which were daily used could keep themselves in this way, but for a great portion of the year the horses could, for the most part, find food for themselves, while the small detachment required for service could be fed in the stable. If, however, it was required to stall-feed the horses the whole of the time, surely this large number of men might raise some of their own oats, and cut and cure some of the hay necessary for the maintenance of their horses, and the men might break up the land and sow oats, as had been done by settlers who had gone out west. A gentleman had testified the other day that at one of these posts a field of ten acres had been broken up and used for the growth of very good and valuable oats. There was no reason why it should take from $17,000 to $18,000, as the Public Accounts showed, for horse feed. He simply wished to record his conviction in this regard and to ask the House to adopt a resolution approving of the reduction of this vote to a sum which would be within reasonable proportions, and whilst maintaining the force in all its efficiency limit the expenditure to something of a more reasonable character. He moved:

“That the House do not concur in the resolution, and that it be resolved:—That inasmuch as the expenditure for the maintenance of the Mounted Police seems to be out of proportion to the requirements of the service, it is desirous to reduce the sum from $306,000 to $256,000.”

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he would be very glad to accept the amendment if he could entertain the slightest hope that this service could be effectively performed for the sum mentioned. He was sorry to say that their experience during the past 3 or 4 years, although it gave them some reason to believe that the expenditure might ultimately be reduced to a figure something like this would not warrant them unless they were able to reduce the number of the troopers, in hoping that any reduction could be made in the vote asked for. He was not surprised that the vote was regarded as one of a formidable character; but they were unable to continue the service in its present proportions with less. They had tried to reduce the cost of oats which was very large, but had been unsuccessful. The Government was keenly desirous of reducing this expenditure, but it was impossible. He could assure the hon. gentleman that the men were at present pretty hard worked and so long as the duty devolved upon them of watching the movements of the hostile American Indians who had come into that country, he could not hold out much prospect of the number of the force being reduced or of the expenditure being diminished. It might possibly, to some extent, allay the fears of the hon. gentleman that great extravagance was manifested here if he mentioned that a regiment of English Dragoons was said to cost about £50,000 stg., while the rate was something like $750 for each horse and man in this force. It had been found requisite to maintain the horses in good condition to provide them with oats, and he was sorry to say that apparently nothing else would answer the purpose. He thought, however, that in course of another year or eighteen months, the growth of settlements around these posts would enable them to supply themselves with oats, but certainly this could not be done during the current year. They could not possibly reduce the force as matters now stood, and under the circumstances, he thought that the hon. gentleman would not consider it necessary to press his motion to a division.

MR. BLAKE said that when he had charge of this force, he was very much impressed with the notion of the hon. gentleman, but experience proved that the horses must have full rations of oats. The horses of the country which were grass fed, were used in relays or changed frequently in long journeys. Full rations had to be supplied during the whole season in which the force might be used at all in the dead of winter. An attempt had been made to raise oats by the men, but the first growth was destroyed by the grass-hoppers. Preparations were made for a second attempt when he ceased his connection with the Department, but what the result was he knew not. He found that the cost of maintaining the United States troops in those western out lying districts was even greater man per man than the expenditure which the Department was obliged to ask the House to vote for this force. Nevertheless, he entertained the hope and confident expectation that the price of cereals in that country would diminish by a reasonable increase in the settlement of it. This vote in accordance with the hope held out by the hon. gentleman, would be considerable reduced.

MR. MITCHELL said he hoped his hon. friend did not wish this House to pass the expenditure for that service upon the alleged plundering system adopted in the United States with respect to their Indian affairs.

MR. BLAKE said he understood it was the Indian that was plundered.

MR. MITCHELL: The plunder comes out of the avowed cost of the service.

MR. CARTWRIGHT.

MR. BLAKE: On the contrary, that was reformed. The Indian service was now proposed to be committed to the military, in order to avoid the plundering which took place under civilians.

Amendment negatived on division.

Resolution concurred in.

On Resolution 90,

MR. LANGEVIN asked, with respect to this item of $250,000 for the Grenville Canal, whether there been an expenditure made on this work during the current year without an appropriation from Parliament?

MR. MACKENZIE said there had been an expenditure on this during the last three months, but no money had been paid out.

MR. LANGEVIN said the hon. Minister had stated when this item was under consideration of the Committee, that he had thought the Government should take advantage of the low rates of wages to go on with this work.

MR. MACKENZIE: No. I said there was a great cry for labour, and I felt the Government would be justified in commencing the work, trusting that Parliament would furnish the money. There has been no money expended, but a certain amount of work has been done, which the Government expects to pay for under the estimate.

MR. LANGEVIN said the expenditure had been incurred, and although the money had not been paid, it was a liability of the Government, and, of course, must be paid. He did not say the object was not a laudable one, one for the good of the labourers, but he thought it against the law of Parliament that a liability of that kind, without the authority of Parliament. There were cases in which Government might take the responsibility of incurring expenditure and rely on Parliament afterwards to sanction it. This might be one of those cases, but there should have been an application, a Bill, laid before Parliament to indemnify the Government. He did not wish to make a motion about it now to censure the Government, but as guardians of the public money they should, at all events, affirm the principle on this occasion, that, although work may be wanted and would likely be ratified by Parliament, the vote should be obtained first.

Resolution concurred in.

On Resolution 97,

MR. LANGEVIN asked, whether any repairs were to be made on the fortifications at Lévis. He had also received a letter from Quebec urging him to impress on the Government the propriety of having the work done by contract. He could not too strongly urge on the Government the propriety of doing that.

MR. MACKENZIE said the main expenditure would be in Quebec, especially in the citadel, a small amount would be expended at Lévis, though there were defects in the fortification there which would require to be removed sooner or later.

Resolution concurred in.

On Resolution 104,

MR. McCALLUM said he rose with reference to the item for Harbours and Breakwaters in Ontario, as he had not obtained a satisfactory answer with respect to it when it was being discussed in Committee. He would be the last man to oppose an estimate of this kind, if it were in the interests of the shipping of this country. When this pier was made, it would only be ten miles from the Rondeau Harbour, and to put an amount in the Estimates with the avowed purpose of making a harbour of refuge was ridiculous. It could not be justified that this should be built, because there was a little pier on the lake shore where the Government had expended no money before, and which was simply in the interests of a few private individuals, and which was only ten miles from where there was a good harbour, on which the Government had expended a large amount. Further, it could not be in the interests of the people, because it was only four miles from a railway station. There was no excuse whatever for this expenditure. The policy of the Government, as declared by them when in Opposition, was to commence no new works, to expend nothing on local works. They were selling their harbours, giving them away for almost nothing. Another job had come to light. Last year there was an appropriation of $7,500; why was this not spent? The Minister of Public Works did not give a satisfactory answer. There was another $7,500 voted this year, which made $15,000. It was said the township or the municipality of Howard was to give a certain amount towards this harbour, but the hon. the Minister of Public Works did not mention the amount. He had in his possession a paper published in that county, in which it appeared the municipality of Howard had been kind enough to give notice that they would pass a by-law, to contribute towards building said harbour $2,500, and the amount coming to them from the municipal loan fund. The Government said they were going to build a harbour on the lake shore for the benefit of vessels. A little pier on the lake shore might be called a harbour, and it would suit very well as long as the weather was fine. But the moment the wind came from the south or south-west, it would be useless. The hon. the Minister of the Interior shakes his head in dissent. No doubt there were people in that part of the country for whom he would do all he could to obtain this money, but he does not tell this House why he desires to do so, nor condescend to address the House on this matter. The policy of the Government should be to give value to the people for the money expended, but they never could get value for this expenditure. This was only $15,000, but he desired to know if the Government were going to continue to spend money there, and how much the township was going to contribute towards building the harbour. He considered it would be money entirely thrown away. Did his hon. friend think he could build a harbour of refuge there for $25,000, it would take at least $200,000 to do it. He moved:—

“That the said Resolution be not now agreed to, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by striking out the sum of $7,500, provided for Morpeth, Lake Erie,—the said expenditure not being in the interest of the public.”

MR. MACKENZIE said he had previously given a very full explanation in regard to this matter.

Question put and motion in amendment negatived on a division.

In answer to MR. MCCARTHY,

MR. MACKENZIE said the work to be done in the Collingwood Harbour would be done by contract.

Resolution concurréd in.

On Resolution 109,

MR. STEPHENSON moved in amendment:—

“That the said Resolution be not now agreed to, but that it be re-committed for the purpose of specifying the certain localities and improvements on which the sum of $110,000 mentioned therein, shall be applied, so as not to leave so large a sum of money to be expended, at the mere will or whim of the Executive, without appropriating the sum as far as possible to the works approved of by this House.”

He said that a principle was involved in this resolution, which had been sustained on previous occasions. He would probably not have moved the resolution had he received satisfactory answers to the questions which he had put early in the Session, but he found that there was now voted for the improvement of navigable rivers, $10,000; for dredging, $110,000; and for miscellaneous, $70,000, to be spent wherever required, making a total of $190,000, in connection with which there was no place named. He hoped the Government would see fit to give some explanation as to where the money was to be expended.

MR. MACKENZIE said that for obvious reasons it was impossible for the Government to accept the amendment. He had stated generally that the dredge which the Government had on the the lakes, which was now in Bayfield, would be employed for the season at the harbours where she was required—first at Kincardine. How long it might take to clear the mouth of Bayfield Harbour he did not know. Then the work at Owen Sound and

MR. MCCALLUM.

Collingwood Harbours had to be executed by their own dredge, or by hiring another dredge. They hoped to accomplish some work in the Bay of Quinte, by hiring a dredge. It was impossible to say how much there was to do in the Harbour of Belleville. An arbitrary division of the vote would only have this result, that they would come to the end of a particular sum, at a point where it would be very inconvenient and wrong to suspend the work. In regard to the Lower Provinces, he had stated that the dredge would go to Miramichi. When the small dredge Cape Breton finished her work in Bayfield Harbour she would be sent to River John, and possibly do some work at the railway wharf, Pictou. Thence she would probably go to Cheticamp on the west coast of Cape Breton. If they could obtain the services of another dredge in Nova Scotia it would be used in the harbours along the coast in which the large dredges could not work. It was quite impossible for him to define the amount that would be spent in each harbour. Experience had shown that this was impossible. Every possible detail was given. The only places where they expected to do dredging by contract were at Collingwood and in the Bay of Quinté. The vessel had been waiting until the ice left, to go to Wood Island, Queens Co., Prince Edward Island, and would thence go to Grand River and probably to Crapaud Harbour. A division of the money was quite impracticable.

MR. BLAKE said he had not objected to this item in this form when gentlemen in whom he had no confidence were in power, and he certainly would not object to it when gentlemen in whom he had confidence held office.

MR. BOWELL said if the question came to vote the hon. member for South Bruce would vote against a principle laid down by himself (Mr. Blake). This hon. gentleman had, when in Opposition, moved a resolution against a similar vote for drainage purposes. The principle he ventured to say was about the same.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he did not see any difference between the principle laid down as to drainage and dredging. There were precisely the same, both were for public improvements, and if there should be a control by Parliament of the expenditure in the one instance there should also be in the other. No excuse could be given for not proposing distinct votes for this service. Any hydraulic engineer who knew his business could make the estimates required. The real trouble was, it was non-convenient for hon. gentlemen opposite to carry out the principles which they advocated when in Opposition, and they had the authority of the Premier for saying that any public man who would not carry out in office the principles avowed in Opposition was nothing better than a demagogue.

MR. MACKENZIE: I hold that now.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the hon. gentleman might say so and if he said so of course he thought so, but he thought that what the hon. gentleman thought was evidently most erroneous. This vote was not for a small sum, it was for $110,000, and there was no earthly reason why the information asked for could not be given, not merely verbally, but placed on record in the votes of the House. The country would and must believe that the keeping of this sum en bloc was done for the purpose of meeting political exigences, and of sending these dredges at the right time to the right place just before an election occurred all of which in the expenditure of public money was very pleasant to the electors and the ministerial candidate. The hon. gentleman might as well propose votes for $25,000,000 or $38,000,000 and vote them en bloc in that detail, saying: "We will settle that and divide the money ourselves, and arrange things as a paternal Government should." This was simply the proposition made, and it was directly setting aside the principle that Parliament should have complete and specific control over the expenditure of public money. He hoped his that hon. friend would press the resolution.

MR. MACKENZIE said that if the hon. gentleman had been in the House when he made his explanations, he (Sir John A. Macdonald) would have made a different speech. He had no objection, however, to again go over his explanations. This sum was to be almost entirely spent in the payment of wages, and the expenses of their own vessels.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The greater need of a check.

MR. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman was playing the worst part of the character he had mentioned a few minutes ago. When the hon. gentleman spoke he only manifested his own utter ignorance of the subject he treated.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he was very much obliged to the courtesy of the hon. gentleman, who had been trying to restrain his natural disposition during the last few weeks, and had consequently got along pretty well; but if the hon. gentleman wished to get away from here soon he had better not return to his old manner. Any hydraulic engineer could supply the estimates required, and this was incontrovertible. The depth of the places to be dredged was known, and the extent of the work done, and the question at issue was one of simple calculation. Any unforeseen expenses could be met irrespective of this vote.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that this vote in 18,0-71 was for a lump sum $30,000, also, and in 1872-73, amount $30,000, and also in 1873-74, amount $55,000. To the best of his recollection the then Opposition had not objected to this mode of voting this money. He personally knew that it was extremely difficult to form accurate estimates in this relation, from expenditures made in his neighbourhood. Whenever practicable he agreed with the hon. gentleman that it was extremely desirable to give these details. It might, however, be desirable in future Sessions to endeavor to procure the votes somewhat more in detail, but he did not think that anything would be gained by it.

MR. McCALLUM said that the explanation appeared to him to be very lame. If it was desired to ascertain the amount of money that was to be expended in each harbour, certainly an engineer could tell the number of yards to be removed in each harbour, and hon. gentlemen opposite ought to know the expense per day of each dredge, and also the number of yards per day that each dredge would be able to remove, so that it was no trouble at all to get at the time required to remove a certain number of yards, if it was desirable to do it; but hon. gentlemen opposite, of course, were going back on their record, and the excuse given for this by the hon. member for South Bruce was this: the hon. gentlemen said he had confidence in his Government.

MR. BLAKE: No.

MR. McCALLUM: But this is not an excuse.

MR. BLAKE: I stated that this vote, for several years, was made in the same form by a gentleman in whom I had no confidence, and I did not oppose it. I thought that this was not an objectionable form for this particular vote; and, certainly, I am not now going to oppose it when asked for by gentlemen in whom I have confidence.

MR. McCALLUM: The hon. gentleman was against this thing before. His own resolution had even been quoted here. The hon. gentleman voted for a resolution similar to the one now before the House, as he understood it; and the hon. gentleman gave, as his reason for his course tonight, that it was because it was proposed by a Government in whom he had confidence. He drew the inference—and certainly it was a fair inference to draw—that because the hon. gentleman had confidence in this Government, he was willing to vote any amount of money they might ask for on trust.

MR. BLAKE: No.

MR. McCALLUM said he could see no other way of looking at the question, by anyone who judged of it dispassionately. He would be very sorry to judge a Government in that way; and to vote an amount of money, whether he had confidence in the Government or not, without receiving proper explanations about it. He would be very sorry to so vote money, even to be expended in his own locality. But the hon. the Minister of Public Works had told him, a few minutes ago, that he (Mr. McCallum) should not oppose the waste and the extravagant use of public money, because the former Government of this country had thought it was their policy and duty in the interests of the country to spend a large amount of money on the Welland Canal where he happened to reside, and had thought to do so before he went to reside there; and this was given as an excuse and as a reason why he should not, in doing what he considered was his duty to the people of the country, raise his voice against the extravagant and wasteful use of the people's money. He could assure the hon. gentleman that he did not wish to be offensive; but it would take more argument and browbeating than was shown by these hon. gentlemen opposite to put him down in this House. He intended to do his duty, and if the hon. gentleman thought he could put him (Mr. McCallum) down, and prevent him from expressing his opinions in this House, the hon. gentleman would find himself very much mistaken.

MR. McCALLUM.

MR. BOWELL: The amounts spent in the Bay of Quinté were mentioned in the Estimates: Belleville, $10,000; Napanee, $5,000; and Trenton so much.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Wherever the municipality subscribes, we put in the amounts. The Government supplemented the vote mentioned, but the general dredging vote is never divided.

MR. LANGEVIN said the hon. the Minister of Finance had remarked that this item in 1871-2-3-4 had appeared, and that the items were $30,000 for one year and $50,000 for another. The hon. gentleman must see that this service had been increased very much; and that a statement as demanded might fairly be laid before the House in order that they might know the exact employment of this sum.

MR. MACKENZIE: I would be very glad to do so.

MR. LANGEVIN: That was done verbally.

MR. KIRKPATRICK pointed out that the whole of the House had not the same confidence in the Administration that the hon. member for South Bruce had. The granting of this large sum of money without details was placing a great deal of power in the hands of the Government, and it was a pity the hon. member for South Bruce drew such a distinction between his principles in Opposition and his principles as the supporter of an Administration.

MR. MILLS said the principle was not applicable to this case, because of the difficulties of dredging.

MR. PLUMB said it was evident an item of this kind could be used for specific and partial purposes, and the Opposition were, therefore, justified in scrutinizing it. If hon. gentlemen rejected the amendment they would have to take the responsibility of it.

Question put, and motion in amendment (Mr. Stephenson) negatived on the following division:—

YEAS:

Messieurs.

Benoit,	McMillan,
Bolduc,	McCallum,
Bowell,	McCarthy,
Cameron,	McQuade,
Caron,	Méthot,
Costigan,	Monteith,
Currier,	Montplaisir,
Cuthbert,	Mousseau,
Daoust,	Orton,
Farrow,	Quinet,
Ferguson,	Plumb,
Gibbs (South Ontario)	Rochester,
Gill,	Roy,
Harwood,	Ryan,
Jones (South Leeds),	Stephenson,
Kirkpatrick,	Thompson (Cariboo)
Langevin,	Wallace (South Norfolk)
Lanthier,	White (East Hastings),
Little,	White (North Renfrew),
Macdonald (Kingston)	Wright (Pontiac)—40.

NAYS:

Messieurs.

Appleby,	Jones (Halifax),
Bain,	Kerr,
Béchar,	Killam,
Bernier,	Lafamme,
Bertram,	Lajoie,
Biggar,	Landerkin,
Blake,	Langlois,
Borden,	Laurier,
Borron,	Macdougall (East
Bowman,	Elgin),

Brouse,	McDougall (East
Brown,	Renfrew),
Buell,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Burpee (St. John),	Mackenzie,
Burpee (Sunbury),	McCraney,
Carmichael,	McGregor,
Cartwright,	McIntyre,
Casey,	McNab,
Casgrain,	Malouin,
Cheval,	Mills,
Christie,	Norris,
Church,	Oliver,
Coffin,	Paterson,
Cook,	Perry,
Delorme,	Ray,
Devlin,	Richard,
Dymond,	Ross (West Middlesex),
Ferris,	Ross (Prince Edward),
Fiset,	Rymal,
Fleming,	Scatcherd,
Flynn,	Scriven,
Forbes,	Sinclair,
Galbraith,	Skinner,
Geoffrion,	Smith (Peel),
Gillies,	Smith (Selkirk),
Gillmor,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Goudge,	St. Jean,
Greenway,	Taschereau,
Guthrie,	Thompson (Haldimand)
Hagar,	Trow,
Higinbotham,	Wallace (Albert),
Horton,	Wood,
Irving,	Young.—86.
Jetté,

On Resolution 197, Salaries and Concurrences of Canal officers, $32,020,

MR. MCCALLUM said he thought superintendents should have the appointment of all their officers. He knew cases where men had been appointed against the Superintendent's recommendations. The staff and repairs had cost in 1869, $76,383; in 1870, $81,793; 1871, $100,749; 1872, $92,164; 1873, $92,013; 1874, $110,932; 1875, $154,632; 1876, $141,134; 1877, $109,742; and this year $114,359, an increase of $170,731, in the five last years, as compared with 1873. In all these cases he was referring to the date of the Public Accounts laid before Parliament. The increase of the staff was owing to pressure being brought upon the Government, and would not have taken place, if left to the Superintendents. In 1869, the staff alone on the Welland Canal cost $40,173; 1870, $39,060; 1871, $40,340; 1872, $42,382; 1873, $37,085; 1874, $45,382; 1875, $50,960; 1876, $52,595; 1877, $53,212 and by the Public Accounts laid before the House in 1878, $59,916; shewing a total increase in five years of $76,438, as compared with 1873, and in the year 1878 an increase of $22,931 over 1873. He wanted every man to have a full day's pay for a full day's work, but he did not want to send three men to do the work of two. It was said that the present Government were economizing, but he knew where an officer used to discharge a duty without an assistant for $2,166 a year, the present man was getting $4,600 a year.

MR. MACKENZIE: Who is that?

MR. McCALLUM: The officer I speak of is the late Thomas Adams.

MR. MACKENZIE: But who is the present one getting $4,600.

MR. McCALLUM: R. D. Dunn, paymaster on the Canal. That appears in the Public Accounts.

MR. MACKENZIE: That is not correct. There is no person getting that salary there.

MR. McCALLUM: It is so laid down in the Public Accounts. Of course, he is a good officer, and I have no fault to find with him.

MR. MACKENZIE: Mr. Dunns' salary is $1,500. He is paid $4,608 for allowances and salaries to the lock-masters on the Canal.

MR. McCALLUM said he was very glad to receive the information, but it did not change the result. The average expenses of the staff on the Welland Canal had increased over 50 per cent.

MR. MACKENZIE said R. D. Dunn was the paymaster, and the sum was allowed him for payments of House rent. His salary was $1,500. He was not aware that there was an excessive salary paid to any person on the Canal, and he was not aware of any political pressure being used over any lockmaster, or any one else on the Canal. As a rule Mr. Bodwell appointed all lockmasters, and referred the appointment to the Department at Ottawa for confirmation; and unless there was some reason against it, the appointment was usually confirmed.

MR. BOWELL said a large number of vessel owners had petitioned for the removal of Mr. Cameron. About 50 petitioned for his removal and recommended the appointment of Mr. Carter, and about 100 other vessel owners had recommended the retention of Mr. Cameron. Mr. Bodwell reported that the petition for Mr. Cameron's removal was principally from vessel owners who had transgressed the laws, and whom he had fined, and he recommended that Mr. Cameron should be retained. Nevertheless, this officer was removed and Carter put in his position; and the letter or letters recommending Carter had been lost or mislaid. They were not in the papers. He did know anything about Carter's tugs, though this man might be a tug owner. It struck him as singular that the Minister whose memory was usually so good should have forgotten these facts.

MR. MACKENZIE said he had merely brought down the papers. He, however, recollected very well the name and the change made, but he had no recollection of the precise circumstances, save that Carter was charged with being an owner of tugs.

MR. McCALLUM said that Carter was a first-rate officer, also Hamilton. The former was a good appointment. Hamilton was not discharged, but the duties which this man formerly did were now divided between the two. This office was uselessly created for Carter's benefit.

Resolution concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

MR. MACKENZIE delivered a Message from His Excellency the Governor-General, which was read by Mr. SPEAKER, and is as follows:

"Dufferin.

"The Governor-General transmits to the House of Commons, copies of a correspondence which has passed with Her Majesty's Government respecting the inclusion within the Boundaries of the Dominion of Territories on the North American Continent.

"GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

"OTTAWA, 2nd May, 1878."

SECOND READING.

The following Bills were severally read the second time:—

Bill No. 77.—An Act for the better prevention of crimes of violence in certain parts of Canada, until the end of the next Session of Parliament.—Mr. Mackenzie.

MR. McCALLUM.

Bill No. 68.—An Act to amend the Act, chapter 11th, 38th Victoria, intituled: "An Act to establish a Supreme Court and a Court of Exchequer for the Dominion of Canada.—Mr. Laflamme.

Bill No. 75.—An Act respecting the traffic in intoxicating liquors (from the Senate).—Mr. Mackenzie.

MR. MACKENZIE moved that Bill No. 77 be referred to a Select Committee composed of Messrs. Blake, McCarthy, Laflamme, Jetté, Devlin, Langevin and Kirkpatrick.

House adjourned at Forty minutes after Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, 3rd May, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS

PRINTING COMMITTEE.

MOTION TO ADOPT REPORT.

MR. ROSS (West Middlesex) said he moved the adoption of the 6th and 7th Report of the Printing Committee. The Committee had reconsidered the matter, but the only change they would recommend was that additional French and English journals should be furnished to members who spoke both languages.

MR. LANGEVIN said that they would, under this report, be supplied with only one copy of the Votes and Proceedings of Public Bills and of Private Bills. This was unreasonable. It was economy carried to such a degree that it became a nuisance. They desired to send copies to their constituents, and often to obtain advice on matters of importance that came before the House. Under this regulation, such a course would be impossible. The newspapers could not give all the details respecting measures that were considered in Parliament. They would now only have two copies of departmental reports, one in English and the other in French, and the French members required them both. The extra cost for printing additional copies was very slight, and he hoped that the House would not adopt the report.

MR. ROSS said that the hon. member was labouring under a misapprehension. The newspapers, after all, gave all the information which the general public obtained on these points. It would be utterly impossible to publish a sufficient number of these documents to enable them to be sent to all their constituents. The expenditure this would require would be enormous, and would not be authorized. The newspapers would hereafter receive copies of all these documents, and the reduction in the number of departmental reports was only from 4 to 2, not a very serious matter. The printing expenses were growing rapidly, and this Session it would be increased from $6,000 to $8,000 in the publication of the Report of the Fishery Commission. The recommendations of the Committee would effect a saving of from $12,000 to $14,000, and he trusted that the report would be sustained.

MR. YOUNG said that it was absolutely necessary, in the interests of the public, that members could send copies of blue books and certain bills to their constituents. He, nevertheless, believed that, in many respects, the recommendations made were good; additional copies, after the type was set, would cost very little, and he would propose an amendment which would not reduce the saving proposed, at any rate, more than $2,000. He moved:—

"That the Seventh Report be concurred in, except in regard to the number of copies of the Votes and Proceedings, Bills and Blue Books to be received by each Member for distribution, the number of which shall remain as heretofore."

Motion, in amendment (Mr. Young) negatived on the following division:—

YEAS :

Messieurs

Appleby,	Haggart,
Benoit,	Harwood,
Blain,	Jones (South Leeds),
Bolduc,	Langevin,
Bourbeau,	Lanther,
Burpee (Sunbury),	Macdonald (Kingston),

Cameron,	McDonald (C. Breton)
Campbell,	McDougall (Three Rivers),
Caron,	Macmillan,
Cook,	McCallum,
Costigan,	McInnes,
Currier,	Malouin,
Cuthbert,	Malouin,
Baoust,	Metcalfe,
Dewdney,	Méhot,
Dugas,	Mitchell,
Farrow,	Norris,
Ferris,	Paterson,
Fleming,	Platt,
Flynn,	Pope (Compton),
Forbes,	Ryan,
Gibbs (South Ontario),	Scatcherd,
Gillies,	Skinner,
Goudge,	Smith (Selkirk),
Greenway,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Guthrie,	White (N. Renfrew),
Hagar,	Young.—53.

NAYS :

Messieurs

Archibald,	Huntington,
Bain,	Irving,
Bécharé,	Jetté,
Bernier,	Kerr,
Bertram,	Kirk,
Biggar,	Kirkpatrick,
Blackburn,	Lafamme,
Blake,	Lajoie,
Borron,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Bowman,	Macdougall (E. Elgin),
Brooks,	McDougall (Renfrew),
Brouse,	Mackenzie,
Brown,	McGregor,
Buell,	McNab,
Burk,	Mills,
Furpee (St. John),	Oliver,
Carmichael,	Perry,
Cartwright,	Pettes,
Cheval,	Pickard,
Christie,	Power,
Church,	Ray,
Coffin,	Robillard,
Uolby,	Ross (West Middlesex),
Coupal,	Scriven,
Delorme,	Sinclair,
Dymond,	Smith (Peel),
Flesher,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Galbraith,	Snider,
Geoffrion,	St. Jean,
Gibson,	Taschereau,
Gilmor,	Thompson (Haldimand)
Hall,	Trow,
Higinbotham,	Wallace (South Norfolk)
Holton,	Wood.—69
Horton,

THE NORTHERLY BOUNDARIES OF CANADA.

RESOLUTIONS CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

MR. MILLS moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following Resolutions:—

1. That doubts exist regarding the Northern and North-Easterly Boundaries of the North-West Territories and Rupert's Land, transferred to Canada by order of Her Majesty in Council, of the 22nd June, 1870, incorporating the Territories of the Hudson's Bay Company and the North-West Territories with Canada.

MR. YOUNG.

2. That the discovery and working of minerals in the vicinity of Cumberland Sound have recently been reported, and other matters have transpired which make it important that all doubt respecting the jurisdiction of Canada over those parts of British North America should be removed with as little delay as possible.

3. That correspondence has taken place on the subject, between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, which, through the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, has intimated its willingness to transfer, to the Dominion of Canada, all the Territories in question, and has invited an expression of the views of the Government of Canada respecting the propriety of legislation for that purpose.

4. That it is expedient that the right of Canada to all of British North America, and the Islands adjacent thereto (not including the Province of Newfoundland) should be placed beyond question, and that the offer of Her Majesty's Government to transfer the said Territories to Canada be accepted.

5. That to avoid all doubt in the matter, it is desirable that an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland should be passed defining the North-Easterly, Northerly and North-Westerly Boundaries of Canada, as follows, that is to say: On the East by the Atlantic Ocean, which boundary shall extend towards the North by Davis Straits, Baffin's Bay, Smith's Straits and Kennedy Channel, including all the Islands in and adjacent thereto, which belong to Great Britain by right of discovery or otherwise; on the North the boundary shall be so extended as to include the entire continent to the Arctic Ocean, and all the Islands in the same Westward to the one hundred and forty-first meridian West of Greenwich; and on the North-West by the United States Territory of Alaska.

6. That the Parliament of Canada, on the transfer of the before-mentioned Territories being completed, shall have authority to legislate for their future welfare and good government, and the power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting them, the same as in the case of the other Territories; and the Parliament of Canada expresses its willingness to assume the duties and obligations consequent thereon.

7. That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty embodying these Resolutions

He would observe that the boundaries of Canada on the North-East and North-West were at present not wholly defined. Hon. members would remember that in 1870 the North-West Territories and Rupert's Land were transferred to Canada; but the boundaries of the North-West Territories were never very clearly known, and the boundaries of Rupert's Land were only given in the charter, which conferred this country on the Hudson's Bay Company in the time of Charles the Second. This charter provided that the Company should hold the territories within the Straits and Bay of the Hudson. What this meant was not very certain, but it certainly could not be the island at the entrance of the Bay or the territories in the north. It was true that the Hudson's Bay Company carried on, for a considerable time, the explorations and surveys to the north; and there were some explorers there after Hearne; but there was no sort of jurisdiction ever asserted over the country; nor were there any other parties that visited that distant region that necessitated any action on their part to have their authority clearly recognised. The Island of Southampton, and the other islands which lay in the entrance to the Bay, where large fisheries were carried on, had been the property of Great Britain since the time of Queen Elizabeth, and had never yet been annexed to any of the Colonies. They had recently been visited by American speculators, who had been exploring their mineral resources, and had made application to acquire certain rights on those islands, which application had been refused. It was well known, from recent explorations, that there were valuable mineral deposits upon those islands, and that the only large deposits of coal in that part of British America had been found on Southampton Island and other islands in its vicinity. He proposed, by this resolution, to take the necessary steps to have these territories transferred to Canada, and to remove all doubts with regard to our exact limits at the north and the north-west. The North-West Territories were formerly a part of the Province of Quebec. It had been held by the court of Lower Canada in, if he remembered right, the case of Connolly vs. Connolly, that the jurisdiction of that Province did extend as far north as Lake Athabaska. In these resolutions it was indicated that the boundary of Canada extended northward to Baffin's Bay, and included all the territory from the mainland to the Arctic Ocean and the islands to the west; it extended to meridian 141° west Greenwich. That was the line separating the territory of Great Britain from the American possessions of Alaska. These resolutions excepted, of course, the territories included in the Province of Newfoundland, which, hon. gentlemen knew, not only embrace the islands but a considerable portion of the territory on the Labrador Coast. In the British North American Act there was no provision that these territories might be acquired, as the North-West Territories and Rupert's Land had been acquired under 141st section of the Act. There was no provision for the annexation of any of these territories, except Rupert's Land, to the Provinces of British North America. Those particular possessions of Great Britain referred to in this resolution could only be transferred to Canada by an Act of the Imperial Parliament.

Mr. MITCHELL said he did not feel quite in a position to speak intelligently upon this matter at present, as he had only had the papers and returns in his possession the last five or ten minutes. He had expected the hon. the Minister of the Interior, when submitting a matter of such importance to this Parliament, would have taken the Parliament into his confidence and have informed them of the reasons which moved him and his Cabinet to assume a responsibility which magnitude and extent exceeded anything Canada had ever attempted to assume. He (Mr. Mitchell) recollected, when there was a question of purchasing the great North-West, with its extensive fertile region, which was now being filled up so satisfactory, at the rate of one to two thousand immigrants per week, and which was bound to become a happy home for millions, the opposition with which that proposal was received by hon. gentlemen opposite. They said, when the proposal was made to expend £300,000 sterling to buy the rights of the Hudson's Bay Company, that Canada would be weighed down by a burden, by a liability on the future, from which they could never recover, and that the Government were taking upon themselves a responsibility which they could not justify. When there was question of annexing British Columbia, and assuming the expense of making those connections which a colony had a right to make with the parent state, the Government was charged with pursuing a suicidal course, that British Columbia could be of no possible service to Canada, that her remote position upon the Pacific coast, with a territory almost uninhabitable and with intervening ranges of mountains considered almost impassable, rendered it impossible that annexation could be of benefit to the Dominion; they said it was a piece of folly to take her into the family of the colonial union. The Government of that day gave their consent for the annexation of those two great sections of the continent, the North-West and British Columbia; they took the House into their confidence and explained that it was done in the interest of extending British power and maintaining British institutions and allegiance from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and for the purpose of providing homes for the thousands of starving people in Europe whom it was desirable to attract to our shores. The results proved the soundness of the policy. We have got in the North-West an immense region susceptible of immediate occupation, where the farmer could go with his plough, and without having to cut down a tree, plough thousands of acres on a stretch, where the climate was such as to attract people from the genial climes of the Western States, and into which people were pouring from Ontario. There were other reasons for the annexation of that country. There was danger in the vicinity of an immense tract of country lying in such close proximity to a powerful neighbour. There was a probability that this country might become annexed to the United States by emigration from the United States, and in British Columbia there was an agitation, at the time, in favour of annexation to the United States. There were imminent reasons for entering into an arrangement for the purpose of securing within the limits of Canada those two immense sections of the western country. Had the hon. the Minister of the Interior in his speech presented a single argument in favour of the annexation of that great Arctic region? Had Canada not sufficient territory for the next century? Were not the enormous extravagance of the hon. gentlemen opposite sufficient to make us careful how we should assume responsibility of governing that immense territory stretching from the Northern Atlantic to the boundaries of Alaska, on the Arctic Sea? The hon. gentleman said the boundary of Rupert's Land was not defined. What inconvenience resulted from that? The hon. gentleman had failed to show the annexation of that country would increase the wealth or population of Canada, that there were any inducements to emigrants to settle there. Could Canada be expected to assume the responsibility of administering criminal law on the borders of the Arctic Sea? If the resolution were adopted, Canada would be bound to do it. There would be no desire felt by the people of this country to accept responsibilities from which they they could derive no benefit. He did not know what this volume of despatches which had just been laid before the House contained: he saw they dated back four years; this correspondence had been going on between the British Government and Canada for four years. It was not business or statesmanlike to come down at the end of the Session, and take the House and public by surprise, with launching a scheme calculated to impose upon the country an amount of responsibility which it was not prepared to assume. The Government should have produced these papers earlier, and have allowed the House time to consider the question, and not endeavour to obtain a snap verdict. What did the Government fear in relation to that territory? Were they afraid of our American friends; no. They had as much North-West Territory as they wanted; if there were any danger from that quarter, there was a proper way to instruct the House about it. Did the Government fear that Denmark, the nearest country to us on the Atlantic coast, would assume any title to that property? There was no reason to fear that any special country would make the slightest attempt to obtain that territory. Why should we assume the responsibility? The British Government had hitherto controlled that region; no complaint had been heard in relation to the administration of criminal or civil laws, if such existed there. If Canada assumed the responsibility, the Government would have to send a force of some kind there. Another Keewatin would be created; some other leading politician would be sent there to govern the country, at the expense of the rest of Canada. It would be the greatest madness to submit to the House to assume the responsibility of governing that territory, extending from the borders of civilization to the Arctic Ocean. It was unjust to the representatives of the people to launch upon them, at the close of the Session, this scheme, without giving them time to consider it, or even to appraise the expenditure which it would involve. When the late Government asked to unite these countries to the Dominion, they did so because the people of the North-West desired, the people of British Columbia desired it. But the measures which had been taken to annex the North-West were looked upon, by a portion of its inhabitants as arbitrary, because they said their wishes had not been consulted. He (Mr. Mitchell) recollected the position taken by the hon. the First Minister and the hon. member for South Bruce, when the difficulties arose in Manitoba. They said we had no right to assume the responsibility of purchasing that territory over the heads of the people, to take that country from the Hudson's Bay Company, acting under the supervision of the British Government. If there was no reason, then, when an object was to be gained, when British power was to be extended by pursuing that course, how could they justify the pursuing of a similar course which would produce no benefit, annexing a territory whose people had not been consulted, and not a single individual of whom, either civilized or savage, had petitioned to be annexed to Canada? The matter seemed simply preposterous; the country did not want another $330,000 per year to be expended on the North-West Police, $200,000 more on other useless stuff, such as existed in the North-West to-day. He did not want the hon. gentleman to tell this House that we had got the responsibility, and, as the hon. the Finance Minister said the other night, we knew it was costing too much, but it was very easy to remove it; it cost a great deal to get provisions there to keep men and horses but, having the responsibility, we must pay the expense. And some two or three years hence, when this iniquitous act will have been perpetrated, which it will be, if the Government succeed in passing the resolution through this House, and if they return to the Treasury benches, a set of resolutions may be launched on the House informing them that it was desirable to make provision for the Government of that country. A Governor, a staff of officers, a Secretary of the Treasury, a staff of policemen, would have to be created and paid by the people of this Dominion. If objected to, the hon. the First Minister would tell this House: "You should have objected when the resolutions were introduced; having passed them, we are bound at any cost to take the necessary means of governing the country of which we have assumed the responsibility." He (Mr. Mitchell) knew there was no use talking to hon. gentlemen opposite about this matter; they had made up their minds on it. They might see some great national benefit to be derived from this measure, but, if so, let them state it to the House; let them explain the reason which had induced them to assume the responsibility of such a measure. Let them take the House into their confidence, and not ask us to assume the responsibility of governing one-fourth of the whole continent of North America without a single reason being alleged that in its results it would benefit the Dominion. These were the views which he (Mr. Mitchell) took on this matter, and, although he stood alone in his views, he deemed it his duty to present them for the consideration of this House.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he must join issue with the hon. member for Northumberland on these resolutions. He thought the Government did perfectly right to press them with all due speed, and if they were liable at all to blame in the matter, it was that they did not take it up in 1875. Since this proposition was made, they would be false to their duty, as representing this great Dominion and laying the foundations of its future, if they did not at once accept it and ask the Imperial Parliament to pass an Act adjudging to the Dominion this large tract of country. The hon. member for Northumberland was very much frightened at the expense. The hon. the Minister of the Interior had informed them that that great North-West, the Arctic portion of British North America, had been owned by the British nation since the time of Queen Elizabeth, and he did not think it had cost England much up to this time. He did not think it had cost her anything, and he did not suppose there was any necessity after its transfer to Canada, that it should cost Canada any more than it had cost England, until settlements were made there. When settlements were formed and a number of English people settled there, it certainly should be treated as a portion of the Dominion. An American was said to have boasted of the natural limits of the United States, that it was bound by Cape Horn, and the Aurora Borealis; we must cut them out of that, we must extend our territory to that bright luminary. He had read last night the papers laid on the Table. He thought the Ministry had acted with due discretion in laying them before the House in a semi-confidential way. The less publicity was given to them, the better, because there suggestions in them which might be used against us if they fell into unfriendly hands; therefore, the Government had acted prudently. The papers showed there were interests concerned, above that of money alone. British subjects could go there and work the mines and fisheries, and settle there. We ought to be just to Her Majesty's Government, which had met our views in forming Confederation, and, in extending the original Confederation, England had, by right of discovery and formal occupation, the sovereignty of that vast territory, but England had really no interest in that country, and if we Canadians had no interest in it, and would not take the trouble of looking after it, of assuming its sovereignty and developing it, England would be perfectly justified in surrendering the right acquired by prior sovereignty, and the great question of abandonment might arise; and when England had abandoned that country, and Canada was so faint-hearted as not to take possession of it, the Americans would be only too glad of the opportunity, and would hoist the American flag and take possession of that territory. That country was known already, through information we had of it, to be very rich in mines of all kinds, possibly in coal. The fisheries were supposed to be exhaustless, and Canada required a great lever with respect to any future arrangement with the United States in those very same fisheries. In the Washington Treaty, the reciprocal right of fishing was limited between certain degrees of latitude. The permission of the United States to fish in our waters was also confined to certain degrees of latitude, and in 1871 the Americans were exceedingly anxious to get a foothold on those fisheries. The treaty of Washington, whether the fisheries were good or bad, was not going to last much longer. In any future negotiation for a reciprocal trade, we would have, if we did not throw this opportunity away, not only the fisheries already allowed the Americans, but those far northern fisheries and those of British Columbia as well, to use as an important element in making a satisfactory treaty with the United States. In this country we had the game in our hands, if we passed these resolutions. All that was required was that there should be some two or three officers ostentatiously appointed as being officers of the Canadian Government, as soon as the Imperial Act was passed and the country transferred to Canada. Then the question of abandonment could not arise, there would be a visible occupation, there would be the officers of the Canadian Government there, exercising their powers as such; one or two men could do all the business. The country was rich in mines of iron, copper, gold, silver and large deposits of mica which the Americans were now taking away in large quantities. If these sources of wealth were to be developed, we could surely afford to have officers there who would charge a royalty for any privileges to be given there. It would be unworthy of us, it would show we were unworthy to be founders of this Confederation were we to throw away this charge. England would have a perfect right to say: "What interest have we in this country? It lies far to the north of us; it is a portion of your country; if you will not take it, why should we trouble ourselves about it? We will let it go to the first adventurers of any country to take possession of." These considerations pressed upon him strongly that he hoped these resolutions would be adopted without delay, and this Bill, if possible, be obtained in the Imperial Parliament during the present Session.

Mr. LANGEVIN said this was only a natural consequence of the work which was commenced in 1867. At that time they had not been afraid to incur a debt of $20,000,000, to enable them to build the Intercolonial Railway, believing it to be necessary in their new position after the Confederation of the four Provinces. Shortly afterwards they considered that the Confederation required an extension westward, and they acquired the North-West Territories for a large sum of money proportionately to the means of the Dominion. Shortly afterwards they acquired British Columbia, and they had determined to build a Pacific Railway, in order to unite both oceans by a road through which they hoped to carry the trade of the world. If after all these sacrifices they were now to refuse to accept a territory which England offered them for nothing, they would not be true to themselves or the future of the country. The future greatness of this Dominion, and its position on the continent, required that from the boundary line of the United States up to the North Pole should be Canadian Territory. His hon. friend from Northumberland was afraid of the expense, but he (Mr. Langevin) said expense or no expense, let us have a territory we could afford to expend a few thousands of dollars to maintain our own on this continent.

Mr. MITCHELL: Say hundreds of thousands or millions.

Mr. LANGEVIN said that when the time came that a large expenditure would be required in that territory, they would have a large revenue from it. There would be a large population there, and the mines and fisheries would be developed, and would be paying large amounts towards the revenue. If hon. gentlemen had come down with the proposal to annex Newfoundland, with the approval of the people of that Island, he would have said "do it." The good results of Confederation were apparent. Our resources were developing. We were becoming a great nation; we were not very numerous yet, but the foundation of a great nation had been laid. Although we might not see all the results of what we were doing, our children would see them; and we wanted to leave to our posterity a country prosperous, great and respected. To do that, it was necessary to complete and extend our boundaries. It was with the greatest pleasure, although it might cost something to the revenue, that he saw these resolutions presented. He hoped they would be passed without delay, and that the proper legislation would be obtained from England.

Motion agreed to.

House resolved itself into Committee on the Resolutions.

(In the Committee.)

On Resolution 1,

Mr. MACKENZIE said that when the difficulties between Newfoundland and France were under discussion, the Canadian Government had felt it necessary to make a certain representation, when they found that a settlement was to be arrived at without reference to Canada. They were not in a position, absolutely, to demand that reference, but they thought that practically they were. This measure would give them the absolute right to a voice. The Government were aware that there were vast deposits of graphite in a particular quarter of that territory; and, in fact, one of the first things which suggested to them the importance of having the matter settled, was an application from a party in Philadelphia for a grant of land far north, where the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) thought everything was absolutely worthless. There might be something visionary in the project of steam communication from York Factory to England. It was true that it was at present really impracticable, but it might not be so later. The mouth of the Nelson River, at York Factory, was nearer Liverpool than New York was; and it was in the very heart of the continent, as far as longitude was concerned. He had been delighted to hear the patriotic remarks as to the duty of Canada in regard to her position in the empire. It was also pressing that we should have a settlement of our northern boundaries; and every consideration, therefore, pointed out the desirability of adopting the course which the Government had adopted.

MR. MILLS said that if our North-West was to be anything in the future, it was absolutely necessary that we should have possession of these territories, and he had, therefore, been surprised to hear the speech of the hon. member for Northumberland. He (Mr. Mills) was one of those who believed that a northern outlet to Europe would yet be formed through the Hudson Bay territory. The distance between Vancouver Island and Liverpool, through York Factory and Hudson Bay, was 2,200 miles less than the distance by any other route; and even supposing that the navigation remained open for only three months in the year, it would still be of great importance to us. Not only were there very important fisheries—salmon fisheries, etc., but there were also the deep sea fisheries.

MR. MITCHELL: Salmon fisheries in the Hudson Bay?

MR. MILLS said, yes; the most extensive in North America. The rivers were filled with salmon on the east coast of Hudson Bay. There were extensive lead mines in that district. Professor Bell said the most extensive he ever saw. There were immense coal deposits on Cumberland Island and Southampton Island. The coal station in connection with the seal fisheries was on Cumberland and Southampton Islands. In fact, it was obvious to any one who would read the papers, that if we did not acquire these territories, the English Government would not take any trouble about the matter; and before Parliament expired he had no doubt they would be in the possession of another people, and the entrance to Hudson Bay, which would be wholly under our control when these territories were acquired, would practically have passed from us. We would have afterwards no right to exclusive control of the fisheries in that bay, the entrance to Canada and some other country. He thought it was of the utmost consequence that all doubt on the subject of our northern boundaries should be removed.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said he thought it was of the utmost importance that this territory should be acquired by Canada. He doubted if the expense would amount to £1,000 sterling. By the time more expenditure was required a revenue would be derived from that territory in the way of royalty, or in other mode. They had heard that quite lately a cargo of mica, worth $120,000, had been found there, and no doubt there were many other valuable minerals. The Minister of the Interior had spoken of the value of the fisheries in that quarter. No doubt whales and seals were very abundant, but he was not aware of the abundance of salmon in the Hudson Bay. He thought, perhaps, Mr. Bell had mistaken the trout for salmon.

MR. MITCHELL said he had waded through the correspondence, and could see no indication that if we did not accept the responsibility attaching to this territory, the British Government would throw it up. No doubt they were anxious to unite their different groups of colonies under one Government. It involved less trouble; and Confederation, as in the case of the British North American Colonies, consolidated and strengthened the whole. He could, however, see nothing to warrant him in believing that England would give up the possession of that country if we did not accept it. The fact that one application had been made for permission to quarry mica, and another for permission to quarry graphite, was no reason in favour of our acquiring that territory. Before five years were over that territory would be costing us $2,000,000 a year. Municipal institutions would be introduced for the Government of the Esquimaux, and governors would be sent up there to interpret the laws to those ignorant people who probably, were never able to read a single line of the English language. The hon. gentleman said coal abounded in that region, but coal abounded in Nova Scotia; and he thought the Nova Scotians would not feel pleased at another field being brought into competition with them. As to the prevalence of whales, if the hon. gentleman understood international law, and the habits of these sea animals, he would know that it was open to any one to take whales anywhere outside of the three-mile limit, and they did not often go inside that limit. The hon. gentleman was in error as to salmon. There were no salmon there at all. The Hudson Bay Company had a Department on the east shore of Hudson Bay many years ago, and found it so unprofitable that it was abandoned. There were trout, but neither cod-fish nor salmon in this bay; and he had never read of so large a tract of water which was so unproductive with regard to life-sustaining fish. As to making traffic a success by way of the Bay and York Factory, the proposition was all moonshine. The reasons which the hon. gentleman had advanced for assuming the responsibility of this country were insufficient. The natural reason was without foundation; and the present great responsibilities of the Dominion were such that this step was extremely unadvisable. In the course of ten years, our institutions, which had recently been so outraged, would be solidified, and then when the financial condition of the country would be improved, we might say to England that we would be prepared to assume this responsibility. He wished to put his views on record, and he had the satisfaction of knowing that if great extravagance and financial embarrassment and complications resulted from this step, he would be free from all responsibility in this regard.

MR. MacKAY (Cape Breton) said that these resolutions met with his approbation. He did not see how the coal fields in these northerly districts were to interfere with the coal interests of Nova Scotia. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mitchell), was endeavouring to make political capital in opposing these resolutions.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said he was not aware that salmon were to be found in any number at all on the eastern coast of Hudson's Bay. The port they had abandoned was situated on the more northern part of Labrador, near the entrance to Hudson's Bay. As to Port York Factory, he was not at all sanguine as to its becoming a centre of trade. The season of navigation there was rather short, varying from three to eight weeks at the outside. Still, apart from this, he recognized the advantage of having this large territory to the north of it added to the Dominion of Canada. He thought that this was a movement in the right direction.

Resolution agreed to.

On the 5th resolution.

MR. CAMERON said he would suggest that the hon. the Minister of the Interior should amend his numerous and long Bills which were before the House with reference to the registration system, the registration of titles and the granting of municipal institutions in the North-West Territories, so as to include the North Pole. This would save a good deal of printing hereafter, and then in future Sessions it would not be necessary to pass these long Bills, which were thought necessary before the population in question knew how to use them. He thought the objections of the hon. member for Northumberland could be got over if it was provided that a Government should immediately be established at the North Pole, and the hon. the Minister of the Interior would undertake to appoint himself Governor. He had no doubt that if this was done, the hon. gentleman would withdraw all future opposition.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Suppose we make the hon. member for Northumberland a co-ordinate authority.

MR. MILLS: I would observe that the application of the hon. gentleman would receive due consideration.

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second time, agreed to, and referred to a Select Committee.

MR. MILLS, from the Select Committee, reported the draft of an address to Her Majesty, founded on the said resolutions.

Report adopted, and Address agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MILLS, a message was ordered to be sent to the Senate, requesting their Honours will unite with this House in the said Address.

WATER AND GAS SUPPLY TO THE GOVERNMENT OFFICES AT MONCTON.

RESOLUTION TO RATIFY CONTRACT.

MR. MACKENZIE moved:

“That this House do ratify and approve an agreement entered into between the Government of Canada and the Moncton Gas Light and Water Company, providing for a supply of water and gas for the Government workshops and offices at Moncton, in New Brunswick.

Motion agreed to.

SUPREME COURT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.—[BILL No. 68.]

(Mr. Laflamme.)

THIRD READING.

Bill considered in Committee of the Whole, amended, reported, read the third time and passed.

TRAFFIC IN INTOXICATING LIQUORS BILL.—[BILL No. 75]

(Mr. Mackenzie.)

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

Order for the House to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on said Bill, read.

MR. MACKENZIE said that last night, on the motion for the second reading of the Bill respecting the traffic in intoxicating liquors, he had not had an opportunity of making any remarks in reference to the provisions of the Bill, and in moving that the House do now go into Committee on the Bill, he desired to say a few words upon the measure. It was a Bill which was intended to apply to the whole Dominion. The operation of the Temperance Act of 1864, was applicable only to the two Provinces comprising the late Province of Canada, namely, Ontario and Quebec. Various difficulties had been found in working out the Act of 1864, although it had been attempted in many places, and, in some few municipalities, was in operation at the present time. One of the chief difficulties connected with the enforcement of that Act had been the one of obtaining a vote upon it in the usual way. The measure had been submitted, for instance, to the electors of Toronto, and it took several weeks in determining whether the by-law should be sustained or not by the electors of that city. He would not to-night enter into any exact or careful criticism of the defects of that measure further than to say that it was practically a local Bill, and that there was an amount of dissatisfaction with its operation throughout the country which brought it to the notice of the Government of the Dominion on various occasions and under many circumstances. Deputations from all parts of the country had waited on the Government during the last few years, petitioning them to make such amendments as might be consistent with the principle of prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors. He had always felt that while the people had an absolute right to such legislation as would practically prohibit the sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors, yet it was one of those moral questions which must ultimately be determined by the general voice of the people, by the general sympathies of the population; and that however righteous such an Act might be, however beneficial in its general results to the nation, yet it was one that interfered in a certain manner—in the opinion of some, to a great extent—with the liberties of the people in reference to the trade in, and use of, intoxicating liquors of all kinds.

MR. CAMERON.

But a very large proportion of the people of this country—a large majority of them, indeed—believed that the limitation of this traffic was almost essentially necessary for the prosperity of the country. A very large proportion of our people believed that the greatest amount of crime was stimulated by the use of these intoxicating liquors, and that their banishment from general use would be followed by a great improvement in the health and the morals of the people, by a great improvement in everything that ministered to the social, and even to the political welfare of the people. But, in a measure of such vast importance, effecting as it did a sort of social revolution, it was essential that the voice of the people should be strongly and well pronounced in its favour. He had, therefore, on various occasions within the last two or three years, in speaking to those who were instrumental in forwarding the temperance movement, pointed out to them that it was essential that they should use the machinery which they had, in order to manifest, in a practical way, their belief in the statements they made as to the prevalence of public opinion in favour of such a measure. He had said to them that he conceived it was much better to have a stringent license law than any general prohibitory law, until the voice of the people had unmistakably pronounced in favour of a stronger measure—until society and the temperance advocates and their friends showed, by bringing the permissive law they had at their disposal into effect, that they were faithfully and truly representing the wishes of the people in the assertions made respecting the tendency of public opinion. He had been met on these occasions with the statement that it was extremely difficult to get a true expression of public opinion with the law as it stood, and that it could only be partial in any case, as it applied merely to the two Provinces, when they demanded that the law should be extended to the whole Dominion. There was, of course, a question of jurisdiction, as to whether this question rested properly with this Parliament or with the Local Parliaments, and, although a recent decision of the Supreme Court had some effect in settling this question, it could scarcely be said to have been fully determined by that decision. The Government, however, felt that, in a matter of so much importance, when it was evident that the eyes of the country were looking to this Government and this Parliament for some action, it was clear to them that it was desirable to take some step at the present time; and this Bill had been prepared with a view of having an effective permissive measure placed in the hands of the people of all the Provinces, with its machinery adapted to a quick and prompt response to public opinion, where it should declare itself by a majority in favour of this measure. It had been said that during the few contests that had occurred in several counties of Ontario during the last year, and notably in one or two counties in Quebec, it was doubtful whether public opinion had reached the stage when even such a Bill as this might fairly be committed to their hands with a view of putting it in operation. And the fact that the law established, under the Temperance Act of 1864, in two or three of the municipalities had since been repealed was pointed to as an evidence that the carrying of the by-law in the first instance, was only a proof of the excitement existing for a moment and soon passing away. He did not believe that himself, to the extent, at all events, that was asserted by some. He had no doubt whatever, he had never had any doubt, but that moral reforms of this kind must necessarily proceed as a general rule by slow steps. But no one could doubt who had felt the public pulse, who had read the public newspapers, who had followed, in short, the general course of the agitation in favour of a Temperance Bill—no one, could have failed to observe with gratification that there had been a vast progress in public opinion in this matter during the last few years. The Government had endeavoured in this Bill, by repeating some of the sections of the Temperance Act of 1864 of a general character, and providing in it the means by which the public opinion of the country could be readily ascertained to place at the disposal of the temperance community—at the disposal of the general public he should perhaps rather say—the means of testing the prevalence of the view in the existence of which he had just expressed his faith. The provisions of the former Act, which had been prepared by a former gentleman who now graced the Judicial Bench of Lower Canada, were generally of a very stringent character in relation to the carrying out of the law after it was enacted; but there had been serious difficulties encountered, as he had mentioned in the earlier part of his remarks, in obtaining the sanction of the people to the law. It was now provided under this Bill that the measure should only apply to counties and cities—cities being considered as counties in this as in the municipal Acts. The Dunkin Act was made applicable to townships and the smaller municipalities—to every municipality in fact, whether village, township, town, or city. In the present Bill the by-law must be passed to cover a whole county—not an electoral division—but a county which perhaps might include several electoral divisions. The reason for this was obvious. It was quite clear, from the operation of the Act of 1864 that it was practically useless to pass a by-law in a township perhaps ten miles square, when all the townships around that particular one were without the operation of the law—and he had been informed that in some of the townships in which the Dunkin Act was carried, and where there was, of course, an utter absence of all licensing, the sale of intoxicating liquors had, in some instances, reached a higher ratio than under the license system. That was quite natural; but when the law was made applicable over a larger area, and covered an entire county, with an efficient inspection, with efficient means of suppressing the sale of the liquor and punishing those who engaged in the traffic illegally, he ventured to hope that the law might fairly be carried into operation. It was provided, however, in order to ensure that there would be no trifling with the public in endeavouring to put the law into operation, that until 25 per cent. of the entire number of electors in any county should petition the Governor in Council, there should be no proclamation issued for having a vote taken in order to ascertain whether the Bill should be carried out. But if one-fourth of the electors made such a petition, then it should be the duty of the Government to have a proclamation issued naming the time when a poll would be taken, appointing a returning-officer, and committing to him all the machinery necessary to carry the law into effect as to the taking of the votes. If a majority of those voting should decide in favour of the application of the law to the country, then a proclamation should issue within 90 days after the time when the then existing laws expired. It was also provided in the Bill that if the by-law were once carried it should not be repealed within three years; but that at any time after that period if one-fourth of the electors should petition for its repeal the same process would be gone through as when the law was enacted in the first place. The hon. gentleman then described the provisions of the Bill respecting the taking of votes, the repression of bribery and other corrupt practices, remarking that they were substantially those of the General Election Act. After stating seriatim a number of other clauses of the Bill, he said that one part of the measure provided for the kind of prohibition and the tariff in intoxicating liquors which would be enforced under the Bill when it became law. The intention was absolutely to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in any county or city in which the by-law might be carried, except in the case of wholesale dealers or manufacturers of liquors within the municipality, who might sell in quantities not less than ten gallons for exportation from that particular municipality to any other part of the Province or Dominion or out of it. But he should not be at liberty to sell within the municipality any portion of the liquor so held or manufactured. The 99th section provided very fully the extent to which this prohibition should be carried as regarded the nature of the liquors which might be sold, and it might be described generally as providing that no liquor of any kind whatever which contained either wholly or in part intoxicating qualities should be allowed to be sold under the law. It was tolerably evident from the practice and the experience observed in other countries that it would be impossible to carry out a prohibitory liquor law, even in a permissible shape as this was proposed to be, unless there was a total prohibition of all liquors which might colourably be denominated intoxicating liquors. Some people pointed out, no doubt, that certain kinds of liquor were comparatively innocuous, and probably they were so; but they could only serve as a disguise under which to shield and sell the baser kinds of intoxicating liquors, which would be sold under cover of the names of less offensive liquors. It had therefore been deemed necessary to make a total prohibition except as to liquors required for medicinal use and sacramental purposes, and special provisions were made for such exceptions by the licensing of a certain number of individuals, according to the population, to sell for such special purposes. After referring briefly to other clauses of the Bill, he said the Bill was one which the hon. gentlemen were aware had been introduced in the Senate, and had received from that body an early and a very thorough discussion; and he ventured to hope, from a careful perusal of the measure since it had been amended by that body, this House would not have much difficulty in agreeing to the Bill as it now stood. He trusted that every member of the House would approach the discussion of the subject in Committee with a single and a sincere desire to promote the object which the promoters of the Bill had in view. It was a matter of serious import to this country—it was one of the greatest possible importance in its social and political aspects; and there could be no doubt whatever, apart from questions of taxation and other questions which arose, that it was one of the greatest possible importance to this country that we should be able in some way or other to check the torrent of intoxication which for many years had been increasing and pouring in an unlimited stream over the land. It might have been observed by those who had given some attention to statistics in connection with this question, that there had been a steady increase in the consumption of strong intoxicating liquors up, at least, to last year. He had not observed the increase within the last year, but he judged from the returns of excise revenue that there must have been, to a greater or less extent, a reduction. A part of this might, however, fairly be attributed to the comparative poverty of certain classes of our population during the last few years. Since the commercial disasters that had passed over the country, a part of our population had not been so well paid or so fully employed as formerly, these being generally leaseholders or small possessors of property, and there could be no doubt that a reduction in the domestic expenditures of such persons ought to be sought for in this item rather than in other items. He did not, therefore, venture to hope that there had been an increase in the number of abstainers from the use of intoxicating liquors, but the extent of the reduction which the revenue showed, although there would perhaps be an increased consumption in more prosperous times, was assigned undoubtedly to some extent, to the effect that the temperance agitation had produced throughout the country. No one, he thought, could doubt that, and any one who had observed the course of proceedings at great public gatherings must have been satisfied, that the temperance agitation had already resulted, even without the enactment of any law, in materially producing the desire to abstain from the excessive use of stimulants in the shape of spirits. It was the duty of every one who loved his country, and who wished well to all our institutions and to our churches, to endeavour to aid those who had been devoting their voluntary efforts to the accomplishment of this end, and he was sure this House, in common with the other branch of the Legislature, would cordially respond to the invitation which the Government had given by the introduction of this Bill, in aiding to the extent of their power in repressing a traffic which had produced so much disaster of every kind, and which threatened, if left uncontrolled, to exercise a still more disastrous and permanent evil influence on the destinies of this country.

MR. ROSS (West Middlesex) said that before leaving the Chair, he wished to make a remark or two, and he would promise the House that his remarks would be very brief at this hour of the evening and period of the Session. Had this Bill been introduced at an earlier stage, it would have given him very great pleasure to have reviewed, at some length, the progress the temperance sentiment had made in the Dominion of Canada since the first beginning of their agitation in 1873. However, the Session had so far progressed and hon. members were, no doubt, so anxious to return to their homes, that it would be exceedingly out of place for him, he presumed, to occupy much of the time of the House. He would just content himself, however, with saying that, perhaps, to no other member of the House did it afford more pleasure than to himself to find the Government introducing a Bill containing so many provisions to which he could give his most cordial assent, as to the Bill which had been introduced by the hon. the First Minister. The temperance men in the Dominion of Canada had long been agitating for some efficient legislative restriction upon the liquor traffic. The license system which had prevailed in this country ever since we had municipal institutions, had, in their opinion, not been effective in restricting, to a sufficient degree, the evils resulting from that traffic, and it was felt by all of them—and he was now speaking, perhaps, more particularly for the temperance men—that more effective legislation than any previously offered them, was required to restrain the injurious effects of this traffic, and to diminish, if such were possible, the baneful effects of intemperance. Such legislation, they thought, had, to certain extent, been secured by the passage of the Temperance Act of 1864. He was not now going to speak of the good or ill points of that Act, or to criticise its provisions, either in whole or in detail.

MR. BUNSTER: What are they?

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. ROSS: It did not apply to British Columbia, he was sorry to say. He was just going to say that, as an objective point for the agitation connected with this question, he considered that the Temperance Act of 1864, carried through the House by Judge Dunkin, was, in itself, a very valuable concession to the temperance men. It gave them, at least, the assurance that the Parliament of Canada was amenable, not only to public opinion on this point, but was prepared to accept the reasonable demands, and to consider any reasonable demands made on it by the temperance men with regard to the restriction to be imposed on this traffic. It further gave them, at least, this other advantage that they had placed on the Statute Book an acknowledgement that Parliament was prepared and was willing to deal, from a legal standpoint, with this evil with which they were grappling from a moral standpoint, and that whatever strength the temperance sentiment received in the country from the agitation of temperance men, would be guaranteed to them, so far as the Legislature could guarantee it, by Acts placed on the Statute-book. These were some of the advantages of the Temperance Act of 1874; but good as that law was in many respects, as a means for stemming, as far as it could, the evils of intemperance, they felt that something more could be done. In the first place, the provisions of that Act were limited in their application. They only applied to the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Temperance men having that national sentiment, in which they trusted every Canadian shared, and anxious, as far as they could, to cover the whole country with the broad ægis of temperance legislation, sought for a wider and more comprehensive measure. They said, not only are these restrictions good so far as the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec are concerned, but they would be equally beneficial if applied to the whole Dominion. The temperance men from Prince Edward Island and the Maritime Provinces petitioned the House to that effect. They also did so from Manitoba and British Columbia. Ontario was almost unanimous in its demands for more extended restrictions on the liquor traffic. These demands had received, he was happy to say—should he say he was pleased and proud to say—the consideration of the Government; and they had now in their possession a Bill co-extensive in its application with the whole of the Dominion, and embodying, in almost every particular, the matured views of the leading temperance men of this country. This Bill had received, at the hands of the Senate, the most careful consideration. Hon. gentlemen on both sides of politics, had given it, in many of its most important principles, their most cordial support. Temperance men on both sides of politics, outside of the House, had given this Bill their most cordial support, and he trusted that in its passage through this House they would be prepared, from both sides, to give it that cordial support which had been asked for it by the hon. the First Minister of the House in its introduction. He had no doubt that, regarding some of the details of the Bill, there might, and would be, legitimate criticism, but in regard to the main principles, and the method of taking the vote, and the general prohibitory clauses of the Bill, the penalty it imposed, and above all, with regard to the purpose which this Bill had in view, he thought that there was not an hon. gentleman on the floor of the House who could not cordially and heartily approve of its design. We were making strong efforts as a country to build up all our institutions; we were expending largely, year after year, money for the encouragement of immigration, for widening our canals, for the construction of our railroads, and for the increase of our educational facilities; and with all this, if we neglected that moral element, without which any nation could not be prosperous, all our other expenditures and efforts would be comparatively vain; and he trusted that in the broad sense of the word, with a view to the advancement of the moral interests of the country and with a view to securing, for our young men, the protection which the law could secure for them, and which the law was calculated to secure for them, and which they had a right to expect from the protection of the law, that this Bill would receive the cordial assent of the House, and that this year, which we were entering on, an era of prosperity as he trusted, we would have to add to our financial progress this one great evidence that the Dominion of Canada was prepared to assert in the most unmistakable terms that it approved of every measure which had for its advancement the moral prosperity of the country and the protection of our people against the inroads of intemperance and the traffic in intoxicating liquors.

MR. BUNSTER said that this farce was perpetrated on the House year after year. Last Session the hon. member for Lisgar had introduced a temperance resolution against which he as well as the Government voted; and why the time of the House should now be taken up with a Bill, and a voluminous Bill, which neither the Government nor the country wanted, and which the Government had seemed to ignore, he could not understand. The Government had stated that it could not continue if they had not the benefit of the Excise duty in the several departments; and still the Canadian Pacific Railway propositions were not brought down. The hon. member for West Middlesex said that this Bill, at this late period of the Session, might have some consideration from the House though the Canadian Pacific Railway discussion was that day promised them. This was monstrous. He was amazed to see it. If this Bill passed to-morrow, it would be a dead letter throughout the country. It could not be passed anywhere except in a few hide-bound counties.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he thought two years would be a better period than three. After two years' experience of the Bill, people would have an opportunity of making up their minds whether to continue it or not.

MR. LANGEVIN said he was afraid this Bill would not work; it was too cumbrous. It required all the machinery and cost of a parliamentary election to put it in operation.

MR. DYMOND said he believed the Bill met the views of the temperance men, and he trusted it would be adopted.

MR. FORBES said, according to his own feelings, he would much prefer that the Bill should go a great deal further. It seemed to be the general wish and opinion of those gentlemen who were assumed to approve of this measure, that it was impossible, in the present state of affairs, to carry out a measure which would go as far as many people wished. The people of Province of Nova Scotia were better educated, as far as the question of temperance was concerned, than those of almost any other Province. The hon. the leader of the Opposition was in favour of a stringent license law. There was not a more stringent license law in operation anywhere than in Nova Scotia, and there it was found to be inoperative. Under these considerations, it was considered by the temperance body that the people of Nova Scotia would be willing to accept a prohibitory measure; but, under the existing circumstances of the country, the other Provinces not having taken the same interest, or not being as well educated in temperance as Nova Scotia, it would be impossible to carry a law throughout the whole country which would be acceptable to that Province. He (Mr. Forbes) had sent copies of the measure to the different temperance organizations in his county, and not having heard from them, presumed they accepted it; if not, no doubt, they would have communicated with him. A general consultation had been held of the leading temperance people from the surrounding districts, and their views on the question were laid before the committee, who concluded that nothing better could be produced than the Bill now before the House. Furthermore, it carried out the intentions of the commission on the temperance convention held in Montreal some time ago, and which embraced gentlemen from every part of the Dominion, except Manitoba and British Columbia, at which convention it was decided that an Act of this kind was the only one which could be enforced in the Dominion, in the present state of temperance education. He knew this measure would not be looked on as favourably in Nova Scotia as a more stringent one would, for he and they believed in prohibition; but it was one nail in the coffin, and by following this up with others of a more stringent character, we might hope to bind the giant and eventually kill him.

MR. FLESHER said this Bill lessened some of the difficulties under the Dunkin Act. There should be a definition as to what constituted intoxicating liquors, that no doubt might exist. The fact of twenty-five per cent. of the electors being required to demand the Act before a vote could be taken, would deter parties from going into the matter, unless they were satisfied they had public sentiment with them.

MR. CAMERON said the question to be considered was whether the principle of the Bill was right or wrong; whether the bare majority of the people of any county had the absolute right to prohibit the use of intoxicating liquors by the minority. He could not argue with that principle, but he knew it would be useless to attempt to resist a Bill of this kind on the second reading. The temperance organization wielded so much influence in so many constituencies, that hon. members of this House were not prepared to vote according to their deliberate convictions. If that were the true construction of this Bill, the true opinion as to its probable operation, it ought not to be passed. But it would be perfectly useless in this House to propose any amendment. All that could be done was to guard against any unreasonable or improper proposal in matters of detail. He yielded to the opinion of the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) as to the strong desire in the country to put down the evils of intemperance. He agreed with him that if that were the object of the Bill, it was a good and useful one. If he thought this Bill or the Dunkin Bill would attain that object, he would be prepared to yield the principle which he held as to the minority being controlled by a majority, in consequence of the good which would result from the restriction of the evils of intemperance. He did not believe that object would be attained, and his view was therefore opposed to the Bill. He did not propose to move the rejection of the measure in toto, but he believed he would be wanting in his duty if he did not give utterance to the principles he held. A good many members of this House were afraid to express their candid opinion on this point. The power of the temperance organization was very great, and their strength arose from the good object which they had in view, though he did not believe that the means they were taking would result in the attainment of that object. It was also a question of discussion whether it was within the constitutional functions of this Parliament to pass a Bill of this kind, at all events in regard to many of its details. The question had been before the Supreme Court, but had not been disposed of there to any material degree; and a very great doubt would arise as to the constitutional power of this Parliament, and whether it was not within the power of the Local Legislatures to pass upon some of those questions. He had had to discuss this matter before the Courts. The Ontario Legislature had been trying to amend the Dunkin Act, and the Courts had in some cases pronounced their amendments within, and in others beyond their powers. It was a matter which required very grave consideration. It would be for the Courts hereafter to say whether it was within the functions of this House or not. Another point in which it was open to very grave objection in a constitutional point of view, was that it virtually forfeited and sacrificed and destroyed a large business interest in which money had been invested on the faith of the existing legislation, namely, the brewing and the distillery interests, while it contained no provision whatever for compensation. He ventured to say that if this were attempted in regard to any other article except liquor, it would be scouted as an outrage. That, however, might be remedied by some amendments in Committee.

MR. DYMOND.

Mr. GOUDGE said the right hon. member for Kingston had stated his preference for a rigid license law. In the Province of Nova Scotia they had a stringent license law; but although that was the case, yet, in three-fourths of the counties of that Province, they had prohibition in consequence of the Sessions and the grand juries having refused to grant licenses. There was still, he regretted to say, an amount of liquor drunk in that Province, but to show that the people generally respected the law he would call attention to the returns of the Inland Revenue Department. In the Province of Nova Scotia the average per head of liquor drunk from 1868 to 1877 was 1.74 gallons; in the Province of New Brunswick, it was 1.908 gallons; in the Province of Quebec, 3.849 gallons; in the Province of Ontario, 4.353 gallons; and in the Province of British Columbia, 4.905 gallons; showing distinctly that where a prohibitory law, as it practically was in Nova Scotia, existed, the sale of liquor was very materially lessened. The Act now proposed did not go as far as they would desire, but they would accept it as a first instalment, and the whole Province of Nova Scotia was looking to this Parliament for the passage of such an Act. It was a long step in advance, and they might in the future so amend it as to make it a very effective Bill. It would very materially assist in deciding the question of jurisdiction, and that would be a great advantage.

Mr. PLUMB said he fancied no one would underrate the evils of intemperance; but there was, and would be, a very marked difference in the views of gentlemen who were equally sincere as to the manner in which intemperance should be dealt with. He had no doubt that the gentleman who introduced this Bill had done so in all sincerity. It was a foregone conclusion that it would be passed, but it would be the duty of hon. gentlemen to scrutinise it carefully and not to accept it simply because it had been passed by the other side of the Legislature. He had always been of opinion that a stringent license law rigidly enforced, would be the true means of meeting this evil. He had always been of opinion, and in that opinion he was not alone, that there were certain interests which would be sacrificed by legislation of this kind, which should not be sacrificed in this way. The hon. member for Hants said Nova Scotia was a paradise of temperance. He (Mr. Plumb) should like to know if the statistics which he had brought forward showing that only 1½ gallons per capita was drunk in that Province had made it a model Eden, and whether crime was less rife there, so that they might compare what was claimed by gentlemen who were in favour of such acts as these? He should like to know whether there had been a diminution of crime in the proportion of at least 3 to 1 as compared with the benighted Province of Ontario, of which he was one of the representatives. In the State of Maine very deceptive statements had been made. In the city of Bangor, before the passage of the Prohibition Law, there had been a much larger population than now, there was less taxation and fewer arrests for drunkenness than now. A gentleman who, until lately, had been a sincere advocate for legislation of this kind, said that the drunkenness there had largely increased, though it was more secret.

MR. ROSS (West Middlesex): Who says that?

MR. PLUMB: The Mayor of Bangor. On behalf of all people who were not in the habit of using stimulating beverages to excess, he objected that it was claimed in a most pharisaical way by gentlemen advocating prohibitory measures, that they were temperance men. Any one who used stimulating beverages might have just as good a right to call himself a temperance man. There were many gentlemen on both sides of this House who used those beverages whom none would dare to call intemperate men, and it was a misnomer to call prohibitionists temperance men. In endeavouring by the force of a majority to compel the minority to adopt their views, they were intemperate. This Bill was a Government measure. It would be passed as such, but the Opposition did not propose to transfer the legislation or to do anything which would prevent its having a trial. They all agreed that there was a great deal to be remedied. They only differed as to the means. He believed the abuse of intoxicating liquors could only be remedied by the limitation of the sale. The question as to how this would effect the revenue, was of course, in the hands of the Government. In the State of New York in 1855, a Bill, as stringent in its provision as this one, was passed in the State of New York by an overwhelming majority. The Governor himself had been elected on that issue. The Bill was to take effect in July. It was violated the very night it came into operation in almost every town and village and cross road in the State. It was a dead letter from the first, and was repealed the following year.

MR. PLUMB.

The House then resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

MR. SPEAKER: I feel it my duty, as one of the representatives of the people, to say a few words on this Bill. I protest most solemnly against legislation of this kind. I regard it as of the most pernicious and injurious character that can possibly be conceived, and also of the most tyrannical character. It is a declaration that it is the right of the majority in any portion of this Dominion to dictate to the minority of the people what they shall eat and what they shall drink, and what opinions they shall profess, or even what they shall wear. Tyranny more gross than this it is impossible for man to conceive, and, therefore, do I most solemnly protest against this Bill and against the principle upon which it is based. More than that, I not only protest against the Bill, but I will oppose it as far as my single voice can oppose it, because I believe it will, if not absolutely inoperative, be productive of results of the worst kind, and evils of the grossest character. I speak from experience. In our own little Province, more than twenty years ago, a measure of this kind was introduced into our Legislature, but going much further than this Bill; it was a system of prohibition of the manufacture and sale, and consequently of the use of all alcoholic liquors. It passed very much as I presume this Bill will pass. There was an agitation out of doors. There was a temperance organization formed out of doors, powerful, because it worked systematically at all elections, and made itself felt and feared by every representative of the people in the House of Assembly. And yet that organization never did include more than one-fifth of the male adult population of the Province. Here, as there, there is not more than one-fifth of the male population of the Dominion in any organization working for a law of this kind. If we pass this law, we must pass it not at the desire of a majority of the people, but in obedience to the dictation of an organization working outside and in this House, and through this House, unjustly to the best interests of the population. The hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) has stated the result of the passage of such a law in the State of New York. It was the same in our Province; the measure was passed, and the very moment it went into operation, the very day it went into operation, in every part of New Brunswick, in places where the habit of drinking had almost been forgotten, that law was violated. Instead of establishing in our little Province a state of harmony, peace, and order, it brought with it riot, tumult, and disorder, and bitter feelings of the most deplorable character. That state of things continued from day to day, until the Governor of the Province, finding that a state of disorder had arisen from it, called upon the Government of the day either to enforce the law, and restore peace and order, or to call the Legislature together for its repeal. When the Government refused to act upon that advice, he dismissed them. The Legislature was dissolved, new elections were held, and I think only two gentlemen, of all those who were returned, went back to that House not pledged to vote for the repeal of the liquor law. Now, we had that experience there. I, at that time, opposed the passing of the Bill. I was not a member of the Legislature, but whatever influence I possessed I used to prevent the passage of the Bill. I foretold exactly the consequences that would flow from the passage of that Bill. As I predicted those consequences then, I predict now, Mr. Chairman, that if this Bill pass, and if it be not inoperative in nine-tenths of this Dominion, it will lead again to an amount of riot, tumult, and confusion which this Parliament must suffer, and from which I tell the Government, at this day, they will suffer.

MR. MACKENZIE said the hon. member for Gloucester had said this measure might be characterized an act of tyranny, because it enabled a majority to decide what a minority should eat and drink; it did not say anything about eating nor about drinking, but simply that certain liquors, which were believed to be injurious, should be prevented from being sold. The law which enabled a community to do that was just of the same kind as the law which permitted a person, if a house was on fire, to pull down another next it in order to prevent the fire from spreading in the neighbourhood. His mind had always been that the community had a perfect right to protect itself by a law of this kind. On the other hand, he quite admitted that there was almost an absolute necessity that there should be a strong, if not almost universal opinion in favour of the enactment of such a measure as this, which even apparently restricted the liberties and the rights of any portion of the community on general grounds, affecting the whole community, and for this reason he would never favour the enactment of a prohibitory law which was not subjected to the test of the vote of the people, until he was satisfied that there was an overwhelming majority of the whole country in favour of such a measure. On the other hand, he had, no doubt whatever, but what an entire prohibitory law might, could and should be passed when there was a perfectly overwhelming public opinion in its favour. The hon. member for Gloucester would observe that a stringent license law, meant a law to restrict the sale and abridge the right to buy and sell as any person pleased, quite as much as the other. It was one of degree and not of mind; and the same argument that was used against a permissive prohibitory law, might he used with the same effect against a stringent or any license law, and to use the hon. gentleman's argument why should they compel a person to pay a license of $100 to sell certain articles of drink, when they did not impose any license for the sale of a certain quantity of bread or meat. It was upon the ground that the sale of such articles involved the happiness and peace and prosperity of the community. It was because the sale of these articles was believed to produce a state of society which caused the innocent to suffer for the crimes of the guilty, and because the excessive use, at all events, of intoxicating liquors was an evil which extended to every member of the community in its results. These were the reasons why there was any interference in the shape of a license law, and it was because the community believed that the license law was ineffectual in suppressing the dangers and evils complained of that a step further was advocated as necessary in the general interests of society. The hon. member for Victoria had ventured, on very strong assertions, and on the statement that very few members save himself, and, perhaps, none at all, were sincere in their expression of their views in this matter, and he alone had had the manliness to stand up and express his true opinions. It was scarcely, he thought, creditable to the hon. gentleman to make that statement, and scarcely courteous to the House to affirm that he alone was the only man in the House who gave real expression to his own opinions. It was not necessary at all that every member of the House should be satisfied that this measure was one which would be effectual in order to advocate a trial of it, at all events, for a time. Even gentlemen who had spoken without exception had acknowledged the evils which resulted from the excessive use of intoxicating liquors.

MR. BUNSTER: What are they?

MR. MACKENZIE said he thought that the hon. member for Vancouver need hardly ask what they were. Whether this measure would be effectual in restoring another state of matters in the country or not, he admitted, might be questioned. It was, however, an experiment which might fairly be tried, and which the general sense of the community seemed to demand should be tried; and while he was by no means satisfied that the country at present would approve generally of a complete national prohibitory law, he would resist any attempt to legislate in that direction; but that there could be nothing more fair than to afford an opportunity, by a permissive Bill, to the people, to manage their own affairs in this particular measure; and it was in that sense, and in this spirit, that the Government had introduced this Act, and, certainly, not with the idea of trampling upon any person's rights, or doing anything which would be injurious to the general interests of society, or to individuals. It was quite time that the existence of a certain class would be more or less affected by this law; but the interests of all classes were affected, more or less, by all their legislation. This was inevitable, and all they could do was to consult the experience history of this country, and of other countries, and to endeavour to do that which would produce the greatest possible benefit, or do the least possible harm.

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. SPEAKER said he had no intention of arguing this question at any great length, and, he must say, he thought that the argument used by the hon. the First Minister, to prove that the House would be justified in an act of this kind, was rather fallacious. A license, it was true, was given to authorise the sale of spirituous liquors, but that was a mere matter of revenue.

AN HON MEMBER: No.

MR. SPEAKER: Entirely. Restriction was another thing. It was found desirable to restrict the sale of liquors, from the simple fact that the excessive use was in itself a crime. But, if the mere use of them was a crime, then they would be justified in prohibiting the manufacture and sale and use of these drinks. Very few, indeed, said that the mere touching of a glass of wine was an offence against morality. He did not think that the hon. the Premier took this ground. He did not know that any hon. member of the House did so; and this was really the only ground on which a prohibitory liquor law could be justified. If the mere use of alcoholic drinks was in itself an offence against morality, and the law of the Almighty, or if the interests of society were at stake in the matter, it might be reason for absolute prohibition, but the license laws proceeded on the basis that the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage, and, in reason and moderation, was not an offence; and that in order to prevent abuse it was necessary to restrict and regulate the sale, all license laws had this effect and this effect only. The imposition of a fee was simply a mode of collecting additional revenue from the use of an article that all agreed should bear as much taxation as possible.

MR. MILLS said he thought that the fallacy rather lay in the line of argument adopted by the hon. member for Gloucester, than the hon. the First Minister. If the view of the former were sound they ought not to have any law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within two miles of any public work. This was certainly interference with the liberty of the subjects, as this Bill would occasion when given effect to, and yet it was not opposed to the theory that the use of intoxicating liquors to any extent at all was a sin. Then they had the law prohibiting the sale of liquors to Indians, which was the law of old Canada, and in force, he thought, in every part of the Dominion. So far as the moral feature of the question was concerned he supposed that it was no greater sin for an Indian to drink a glass of whiskey than for a white man or any other member of the community. It was not based upon the theory of its being sinful to drink in the case of the Indian. This was police legislation designed for the general well-being of the community; and also the use of any particular article served to disturb society and produce disorder and misery and suffering on the part of any portion of the population, and increased the burdens of the population which was sober and industrious, he thought that the sober and industrious had some rights as well as the others. The carrying of offensive weapons was not wrong in itself, but they knew the use to which these arms were sometimes put. When they looked about the community and considered the large amount of taxation which was imposed to meet the wants of a large portion of the population that were in a somewhat destitute condition, when they saw families reduced to beggary, in consequence of the misconduct of the heads of these families, and when they saw the community at large called upon to support them, and contribute, by taxation upon property, to relieve their wants, the community which was held morally responsible for this condition of things, and called upon to contribute from the products of their industry to support those who ought to have been provided for by others, had a right to interfere. Where responsibility began, right also began. They were commensurate, in this matter, with each other. There was one feature in which no analogy existed between this law and the one that was passed in New Brunswick. The latter was absolute, and public opinion did not sustain it; but this was a permissive Bill. It was left with the community everywhere to support it, if they thought proper. No step had been taken against the Dunkin Act, because it was a permissive measure, and adapted itself to public opinion. Nevertheless, that law was defective, and they now proposed a better and more matured Bill, from which were eliminated the defects which experience had pointed out as existing in the Dunkin Act. He did not see that any person's liberties were interfered with by this Bill. Our whole law and the common law of England proceeded on the principle that such a right did not exist; the whole theory of the law was that no one had the right to sell intoxicating liquors.

AN HON. MEMBER: No.

MR. MILLS: Yes. The law said that one person out of 250 of the population could sell, but denied this right to the other 249. People, however, might drink as much as they pleased if they could get it. There was no reason why this one should not be placed on the same footing with the other 249. A prohibitory liquor law would not fill prisons with criminals, or poorhouses with orphans, or asylums with lunatics, or do any of these things; and those who used their voices against the liquor traffic did so in consequence of the mischief it occasioned, and because it interfered with the means of livelihood in certain cases, resulting in nothing but mischief to the community. He heard no one say that prohibition was a bad thing. The hon. member for Gloucester said this Bill would interfere with individual rights, and hon. members who opposed it stated that it was not practical, would be inoperative, and if tried would fail. Very well; let it be tried, and if it failed the community would be satisfied. This measure would merely enable the people, if they chose, to protect themselves against the mischief which the liquor traffic had occasioned.

MR. MITCHELL said that he did not agree with the statement of the hon. member for Gloucester, or in the entirety with the statement of the hon. members of the Government who had spoken, but he would support and vote for this Bill, not because he believed it would effect all that its promoters and advisers claimed, but because a large and respectable body of people in every portion of the Dominion—and he spoke more particularly with reference to his county and his Province—entertained a deep conviction that a Bill of this character was necessary for the security of the morals and habits of our young men, and our young women, too, he presumed. He did not believe that it would accomplish what the people desired. A Bill of a similar nature was passed in New Brunswick, he thought, in 1856, but it was not in operation long enough to enable the people to judge of its merits. He believed that only one week after the Bill was passed, His Excellency the Governor called upon the Government to recall the Legislature and take into consideration the repeal of this measure. He did not agree with Mr. Speaker that the repeal of this legislation was caused by the tumults, riots and disturbances that were created by the operation of this Bill. It was scarcely then got into operation; but he believed that a plot existed to unseat the Government, and that this was the object of this attempt. The Temperance Bill was made the pretext by which persons then in opposition were enabled to carry out their scheme of unseating the Government of which his hon. friend (Sir Albert J. Smith) was a member. He did not approve of that Bill; and if he had been in the Legislature he would have voted against it; and when the appeal was made to the country, he had the honour of being returned for the county which he now represented. A large proportion of the people in his county, and he believed in his Province, had a deep-seated conviction that such a law was necessary to check the growing evils that arose out of the use of drink. He was not a prohibitionist himself. He would not to-day vote for an absolute prohibitory law, but this measure gave to the people an opportunity to test among themselves whether a majority or not was in favour of putting certain restrictions on the sale and use of liquor; and more particularly on its sale. While he thought that some hardships might be inflicted in carrying out the law, and that some people who indulged to a moderate extent in the use of spirituous liquors, might have some difficulty in doing so under it, nevertheless, he was of opinion that where the large majority of the people in any community desired to put an end to what they considered a positive evil, the right to have an opportunity of testing the efficacy of a law in the way now proposed by the passage of this Bill. Mr. Speaker had stated, he believed, that a very great deal of injustice and turmoil and heart-burning would result from the carrying of this measure into effect; but he (Mr. Mitchell) did not fear this. If it were an absolute prohibitory law, and people thought that their rights were infringed upon by it, and if a majority, perhaps, were against it, or if, as in the case of the New Brunswick Bill, such verdict was obtained without consulting the country, it would be a different matter, but here opportunity was given to them of going to the polls and ascertaining on a fair test the sentiment of the community. He did not think the people could fairly complain of any hardship incurred in carrying it out. At all events it was only reasonable and just to afford to the people an opportunity in this respect in order to put an end to the agitation which had grown up in the country with relation to this question, and the only way to do so was to test this Bill. If successful it would be a positive benefit to the community, and if a failure it would be the means, at all events, of terminating the agitation which was now rife in almost every part of the Dominion, and, therefore, on these grounds he intended to support the Bill. At the same time he must frankly state that he did not think it would accomplish all its supporters believed it would accomplish, although he trusted that this might be the result.

MR. MILLS.

MR. BUNSTER said he had asked the hon. the Premier what he meant, and the hon. gentleman had given him an evasive answer, which did not become the hon. gentleman.

MR. MACKENZIE: Well, I will tell the hon. gentleman what I meant and said. It was that the hon. gentleman ought to know from his own experience in the world what the evils were. I said nothing more and meant nothing more. The hon. gentleman, no doubt, has seen the effects of the excessive use of intoxicating liquors; and should desire or ought to desire, to remove these evils if he could do so without doing any harm to any parties.

MR. BUNSTER said that the explanation so far was so good. He did not intend to allow that statement to go unchallenged. One of the ablest judges in Canada had said that there was not nearly so much crime committed by men who took a glass of liquor once in a while as by the scheming cold-blooded, cold-water and cold hearted, and calculating persons, who carefully laid their plots and plans. They all knew that the Bill was unworthy of their consideration. An hon. and high-minded member, the hon. member for Gloucester, had denounced this measure, three or four years ago, with regard to a similar temperance humbug. The Speaker had placed him in the Chair in Committee, thus closing his mouth on the subject. He had since then entertained hard feelings against Mr. Speaker for that trick, but as the hon. gentleman had that evening acted in a straight-forward, honorable and impartial way, he begged to apologize to the hon. gentleman who, he hoped, would move a three months' hoist to this measure. He would be only too glad to second such a motion.

MR. MACKAY (Cape Breton) said he approved of the general principle of the Bill. It was wise that the majority of the different districts should have an opportunity of passing an opinion as to whether they would prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors or not. But the Government should go further and take to itself the whole control of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, and make all the regulations necessary either for prohibiting the sale or granting licenses.

On the 77th clause,

MR. BUNSTER moved, in amendment, that the word "drink" be struck out, and replaced by the words "spirituous liquors," as the former might include tea, coffee, or other such refreshment.

Amendment negatived.

MR. MACKAY (Cape Breton) said that any person who should give to any one a glass of wine in his house might be committed for six months and fined under this measure.

MR. MACKENZIE: That is precisely the language of the Dominion Election Law.

MR. MACKAY: Is that the intention of the Act?

MR. MACKENZIE: Yes.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 124,

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that if this by-law was adopted, all the expenses of this polling would have to be paid by the Dominion. This might be right enough, but, if so, the penalties collected should also go to the Dominion. There was no reason why they should go to the different Provinces; and this would always be a means of recouping the whole of the expenses to which the country would be put by means of this Act.

MR. BUNSTER said that compensation should be given by the Government for the abolition of vested rights. There were 131 breweries in the Dominion; they represented considerable capital, and if they were to be destroyed by the operation of this obnoxious Act, it was only just and fair to allow compensation.

MR. MACKENZIE said that the 124th section had better be struck out. He would consider, in the meantime, a section regarding penalties. He proposed that the fines should go to the Dominion.

Bill, as amended, ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

MR. CARTWRIGHT delivered a Message from His Excellency the Governor-General.

MR. SPEAKER read the Message, and it is as follows:—

“DUFFERIN.

“The Governor-General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1878; and in accordance with the provisions of ‘The British North America Act, 1867,’ he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

“GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
“Ottawa, 2nd May, 1878.”

MR. CARTWRIGHT moved that the said Message and Supplementary Estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

House adjourned at Twenty minutes after
Two o'clock.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Saturday, 4th May, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION COMMITTEE.

FIRST AND FINAL REPORT.

MR. TROW presented the first and final report of the Select Committee on Immigration and Colonization.

PREVENTION OF CRIMES OF VIOLENCE BILL.—[BILL No. 75.]

(Mr. Blake).

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

On Section 2,

MR. LANGEVIN said he wished to say that he, for one, would not consent to a Bill of this kind, if the hon. gentlemen most interested in this matter, the representatives of the city of Montreal, and others, had not represented that the state of feeling there, and what had passed during the past few months, required a very stringent measure. This was, he knew, a very severe measure. It interfered to a great extent with individual liberty; but, on the other hand, the intention was to strike terror into the minds of those who were disposed to trouble society, break the peace, and, perhaps, commit such violence as might lead to bloodshed, and, perhaps, loss of life. Under these circumstances, it was with the greatest reluctance, he consented to this Bill. There were provisions in it to which he would certainly object, were the measure limited to the space of time that would elapse between now and the end of next Session. Though enacted for a short period, yet, if the proclamations were issued, it would interfere with our rights and privileges; but, on the other hand, it was considered necessary in order to avoid a greater evil.

MR. SPEAKER said he thought it was very much to be regretted that such a Bill should be considered necessary. He believed that there was no right-minded man in Parliament who would not, with very great reluctance, consent to a passage of a Bill of this character. His own impression, he must confess, was that if such a Bill was necessary, it did not go far enough. In the first place, the person should be held more sacred than the domicile; and if the person could be searched without any previous information being laid on each, there ought not to be any serious objection to searching the domicile. Moreover, he believed that if they allowed persons to keep weapons of a dangerous character in their houses, the Bill would be ineffectual in its operation. The man who would go out with the deliberate intention of shooting down another man, would not be deterred from carrying out his intention or his attempt to do so by any dread of being searched for weapons and of having them found on his person; and when a time of excitement occurred, or a riot or tumult in the neighbourhood of persons desirous to use these arms, and if they had them within easy reach in their outhouses, he thought the chance would be very great, indeed, that they would not run to their houses, procure their weapons, and bring them out and use them. He was satisfied himself that if an "Arm Act," as it was called in the Imperial Parliament, was necessary at all in the City of Montreal, or elsewhere, it should go to the full length, and that the whole population, in the first instance, should be absolutely disarmed, and then only persons of known respectability should receive licenses, and under these licenses to have their arms in their houses; but licenses should not be given, as under this Bill, to carry weapons on the person in such places as the City of Montreal, where no man should be required to carry weapons of any kind at any time.

MR. DEVLIN said it was, of course, to be very much regretted that there should exist a necessity for the introduction of a measure of this kind into the House, but, unfortunately, the necessity existed, and it would, in his judgment, be criminal, in fact, on the part of the House to separate without legislating to meet the difficulty that existed in the City of Montreal. He presumed that every member of the House was aware from the newspaper reports which reached them from time to time, of the state of feeling in the city of Montreal, that life in fact was without security there at the present moment, and that it was not safe to leave your house at night, and walk through the streets of Montreal without incurring the danger of assassination. This, of course, was a most unfortunate state of things; but, as he had said, this state existed, and this Bill was intended to apply a remedy, as far as it was possible, for the law of the land to apply a remedy, to the evil under which Montreal now laboured. As Mr. Speaker said, it was, of course, to be regretted that a law of this kind should be found necessary, but it was not the first time that a law as severe as this had been introduced. The Habeas Corpus Act he thought was suspended on more than one occasion; it was found necessary to do so in the interest of the country; and it was now absolutely necessary, in the interests of the peace, welfare and happiness of the leading city of the Dominion of Canada, to press a law and a stringent law to deal with the lawless class who had so far set the law at defiance. He agreed with Mr. Speaker in the opinion he had enunciated as to the necessity of making the law more stringent. He was in favour himself of making the Bill as stringent as possible, and a terror, if possible, to evil doers, and to show those persons who had set the law at defiance, that the law, after all, was strong enough to deal with their offence, and to put them down. It was the intention to move a clause which he thought would meet it to the full extent, at least to a very great extent, the objection, or suggestion rather, of Mr. Speaker, in reference to the search in houses. He might also mention that yesterday a meeting of the City Council of Montreal was held, and at that meeting the city was fully represented in every way, in creed, in class and in nationality; and at that meeting it was resolved to appeal to this House and to the leading and distinguished members of the House who had taken this matter in hand, such as the hon. member for South Bruce, and to ask them to make this Bill as stringent as possible, and to have a clause inserted in the Bill authorizing the police officers to search houses and other places where there might be reason to suspect that arms lay concealed or deposited for unlawful purposes; and this it was now proposed to do. Something was said, though, perhaps, he ought not to refer to it all, but still, perhaps, it was as well under the extraordinary circumstances under what this Bill was now introduced to mention it. A statement was made in some of the Montreal papers that there was no Protestant in this House from the city of Montreal, and some apprehension was expressed or manifested that perhaps this Bill would not receive that attention which the Protestant interests demanded. He took this opportunity of begging the hon. members of the House, who were Protestants, to give their best attention to this Bill, and if they found in it one word, or a clause or anything indicative of hostile intention of that kind, let it be struck out; but he presumed that it was not necessary for him to say that they were not legislating here for Protestants or for Catholics, but in the first place, and principally for the honor and dignity, and the stability, and the safety of all classes who resided in the city of Montreal, and for the good name and fame of the Dominion of Canada; and not on behalf of any class. This Bill had been prepared by the hon. member for South Bruce, who certainly could scarcely be suspected of preparing a Bill which would invade in anyway the rights or liberties of any of his fellow-citizens. Speaking for the hon. member for Montreal East, and in his own name, he desired simply to say that all they asked for from the House was for a law that would meet the unfortunate state of things which now existed in Montreal; and the demand for this Bill came not from any particular class but from all the citizens of Montreal, who valued the good name of the city, and were anxious to live on terms of good will and brotherhood with their fellow citizens, as in times gone by. He really felt ashamed to be obliged to make these remarks. It was only a very short time ago that it was their proud boast that there was no city in the Dominion of Canada, and none on the Continent of America, more distinguished than Montreal for its peaceableness and charitableness and its good will towards all classes of their fellow citizens. But this happy feeling had been changed. He should not avail himself of this opportunity to enter into the cause of the unhappy state of things that exist there now; but he would say that it was their bounded duty to nip the evil in the bud, and to show those who were determined to set the law at defiance that there was power and will and strength enough, and determination in this Dominion to stamp out every lawless attempt calculated to imperil the safety of life and property, and good name and reputation of our Dominion, no matter from what quarter that hostility may come. It was in this spirit that this piece of legislation was conceived by its distinguished author, and it was in this spirit, he trusted, that the Bill would pass through the House, and he also hoped that they would before long be able to do away with this law, that there would soon be no necessity for it; he trusted that Montreal would return to her former condition, and that the happy feeling to which he had referred, and which it was their pride to encourage in Montreal, and to boast of at all places and at all times, would return once more; and that they would hear no more of these fearful and deplorable scenes which were a disgrace not only to Montreal, but a source of shame to the whole Dominion. He could say on behalf of his hon. colleague from Montreal East and himself that this matter was not neglected. Some weeks ago it was brought by himself under the special notice of the hon. member for South Bruce, and under his notice especially, because he had already dealt with a branch of this question when Minister of Justice. He also had the honour of bringing it under the notice of the Premier and of other members of the Government; and he had simply in the name of Montreal to return them their cordial thanks for the interest they were taking in the welfare of Montreal, and to this House for the spirit it was now displaying in support of law and order in Montreal, and in support of charity, brotherhood and neighbourly love.

MR. JETTÉ said he fully concurred in the remarks of his hon. colleague from Montreal Centre. No doubt the Bill now submitted was exceptional legislation; but it was required by the exceptional circumstances in which they stood in the city of Montreal. He knew the nature of the amendment which the hon. member for Montreal Centre was to propose; and he fully approved of this amendment, which was calculated to make the law more stringent and more effective if possible.

Section agreed to.

On Section 7.

MR. DEVLIN submitted that in order to give speedy effect to this Bill, persons charged with offences against the Act should be summarily tried.

MR. BLAKE said this question had been considered by the Committee, and they had not seen their way clear to alter the provisions of the Bill in this respect. The party who elected to be tried by jury, was either held to bail or put in jail, and it was a question whether the painful occurrences which had given rise to this legislation were sufficiently grave to lead Parliament to refuse the right of trial by jury for a criminal offence. The City Council of Montreal had asked the House to provide for a summary trial, but although they were bound to act promptly and severely, and by exceptional legislation, which, under ordinary circumstances, would deserve the term of odious legislation, they must be careful that they were not frightened into doing anything which they might afterwards regret.

MR. LANGEVIN said he agreed entirely with the hon. member for South Bruce. The hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Devlin) should remember that this was not legislation for the City of Montreal alone, but for the whole Dominion. They must not take it for granted that all the parties arrested would be guilty, and it would not be judicious to deprive innocent parties of the great safeguard which they possessed of being tried by jury. They should not be carried away by the impulse of the moment or by the fear of trouble in Montreal.

MR. DEVLIN said an innocent man would be very anxious to be tried immediately. It was only the guilty parties who would like to postpone the trial as long as possible. The absolute urgency of dealing with the difficulty existing at the present moment should be borne in mind, and he feared if they did not deal with these people in a summary manner the effect of the law would be very much impaired. He did not know that they should be so scrupulous in dealing with persons who were found with loaded arms in their possession for the purpose of assassination. If they were tried before the Recorder or the Police Magistrate they would have all the opportunity they could possibly have before a jury. They should bear in mind the necessity which had called forth this legislation, and should remember that it was of the highest importance in regard to the class they intended to control, and the violence they intended to arrest, to apply the remedy as quickly and as stringently as possible. The only way to strike terror into the mind of the evil-doer was to provide that the punishment should follow immediately on the commission of the offence. The loss of one life was a terrible thing, and the saving of one life was a very important thing; and he asked the House to consider what must be the consequence if these persons could escape trial. He was glad that this difficulty was so far confined to Montreal, but they knew not how soon it might extend beyond its limits. It was, therefore, of the highest importance that the disease which had shown itself in Montreal should be stamped out there at once, and should not be allowed to spread throughout the rest of the Dominion.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Devlin) spoke as if this was a law to bring to justice people lying in ambush to commit murder. That was not the fact. It was to prevent the carrying of arms. If a man were charged in addition with lying in ambush to commit murder, he must be charged by a jury.

MR. DEVLIN: If there are three or four persons standing at a street corner, and you find loaded revolvers upon their persons, what are they there for?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he did not think his hon. friend's book on criminal evidence would be trustworthy, if he said that the fact of their being found with arms upon their persons would prove that they intended to commit murder. They might simply desire to protect themselves. If a man was found with arms upon his person, in the first place, the weapon was confiscated; then the man had the indictment hanging over him, and the sureties were interested with him in keeping the peace, because, if he were guilty of any further violence, it would injure his case very much.

MR. HUNTINGTON said that, while there appeared to be no difference in the House as to the grave evil which had caused this legislation now being asked for, it would be regrettable if the impression should go abroad that the public would not be sufficiently protected, after the Bill had passed, by the ordinary process of law. There was no doubt that the people of Lower Canada, as one man were opposed to the system of violence which prevailed in Montreal, and no doubt that violence was not the result of disloyalty, and was not against the Government or the law per se in the minds of the infatuated people who were carrying it on. Directly they understood that the carrying of arms was prima facie evidence that they belonged to the dangerous classes, and would be put under arrest, they would feel that they were outlawed to a great extent, and that would probably be available to stop the illegal proceedings in which they were engaged. He thought it would be regretted if the House and the country were made to believe that the state of things in Montreal was such as require the suspension of the old system of trial by jury. He believed it was not as much the penalty upon which they were to depend for staying this lawlessness which they all deplored, as the fact that the lawlessness would be defined, the men arrested, the arms confiscated, and the stamp of outlawry imposed upon the system now prevailing.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

MR. CAMERON said the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Devlin) seemed to confound the urgency to prevent the commission of crime with the urgency to punish it. This Act provided amply for the prevention of crime. He denied altogether that the urgency to punish existed. He did not think it was desirable that the trial should take place or the punishment be inflicted during a period of great local excitement. He confessed that he had considerable doubt whether the law, as it stood already, was not sufficient.

MR. DEVLIN said that seeing the House was against the proposition, he would not press it.

Section agreed to.

After Section 13,

MR. DEVLIN moved to insert the following in Section 14:—

"Any Justice of the Peace may, on the oath of a credible witness, that he believes that arms exceeding five in number are in any house or place within the proclaimed district, in order to their being carried within the proclaimed district, contrary to the third clause of this Act, shall issue his warrant to any constable or peace officer, to search for and seize the same; and he, or any person in his aid, may search for any arms, and if more than five arms be found in such house or place, he may seize and detain the same.

"2. In case admission into such house or place be not granted after demand, such constable or peace officer or any person in his aid, may at any time between sunrise and sunset, enter the same by force, in order for search and seizure.

"3. Unless the person in whose house or place the same are found do, within four days next after the seizure, prove to the satisfaction of the Justice that they were not in such house or place, in order to their being carried within the proclaimed district contrary to the 31st clause of this Act, they shall be kept and retained for the use of Her Majesty, and otherwise they shall be restored to such person."

Section agreed to.

Bill, as amended, ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Order for House to go again into Committee of Supply, read.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I desire, Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair to make some remarks concerning the position of the Canada Pacific Railway before we enter into discussion in Committee upon the several items which are contained in the Estimates laid before the House. At present it will be readily understood by all who have read the reports published that we have arrived at the period when it becomes necessary to take some definite and decided steps towards making an attempt at the construction of that road, because of the entire completion of the surveys upon the several routes that are most likely to be adopted by the Government from one end of the line to the other. On previous occasions I was obliged to refer to some extent to the difficulties which beset the Government in undertaking such a vast enterprise, and I must, at the present moment, refer to the inception and the character of that enterprise as I felt it to be from the first. I shall not at present enter into a discussion of what may be called the mere political aspect of the question which resulted in the conception of this great enterprise, or the binding obligation which was made with the Province of British Columbia concerning its construction, further than to say that at that time I deemed it an unwise proceeding to make any binding obligation with any one of the Provinces for the expenditure of such an enormous sum of money as this involved, and the undertaking of such an obligation, without any kind of information concerning the character or extent of the enterprise further than might be obtained by placing a pair of compasses on a map and measuring the distances from one point to another over the continent. At the same time, there can be no question of this, that it was in itself a desirable object to obtain railway communication from one end of our Dominion to the other, traversing the continent from east to west. So far as the desirability of obtaining such a connection may be concerned, there can be no real difference of opinion between any two parties in this country, or amongst any class of our population. But, Sir, while that is the case, we have to consider in, entering upon a scheme of that kind, what it involves. It ought to be done with the far-seeing eye of the statesman, and its prosecution ought to be undertaken with a due regard to the capacity of the country to sustain such an enterprise. At the time that this Administration came into office, we found that the work had been fairly entered upon. The obligation was first incurred early in 1871, and, during that year, some arrangements were made for making a commencement of the work of exploration as the necessary preliminary to the execution of a work which the Government of the country was bound to have completed in 1881. I need not refer to the efforts made by myself and others, when we occupied seats in the Opposition side of the House, to obtain some relaxation of what we considered terms which were too onerous to be borne by this country. And when the new Government succeeded to power in November, 1873, it was one of those difficult questions which we had before us—as one which, if not demanding an immediate solution, required such attention as would enable us to present to Parliament, when it met in 1874, some scheme whereby the views we had previously entertained might be, to a greater or less extent, carried out in practice. Those views, as I have already indicated, were that it was an absolute necessity to obtain some modification of the original conditions, and that we should not be placed in the position, if it were possible to avoid it, of having wantonly undertaken to discharge certain obligations, and, at the same time, have made no effort to carry them out, so far as they related to any particular part of the Dominion. I felt, Sir, that the mere wording of a resolution, which provided that this enterprise should be undertaken without increasing the burdens of taxation, was, in itself, scarcely sufficient to justify us in assuming that it would be right to violate what was practically a solemn treaty obligation, although such resolution being passed with the knowledge of all must have weight; and therefore we placed ourselves in communication with the Government of British Columbia with a view of obtaining such a relaxation of those conditions as would justify the Government in proceeding, to some extent, with the execution of the works, and, at the same time, fulfil the other condition which provided that no increase to the burden of taxation should be imposed upon the Dominion generally in carrying out such modified terms as might be made. Now, Sir, I felt all through those negotiations with British Columbia, that we had the moral power and weight of the question on our side, though the letter of the engagement was with them; that the physical fulfilment of the conditions made were practically and utterly impossible; that there could be nothing, as I believed, more foolish than to pretend that we would be able to finish the road within the time that was provided for in the Act of Union. We had already, up to that time, spent somewhat over two years and a half from the time that the obligation was incurred in exploratory surveys, and not one mile of the road was at that time located. It was still a matter of uncertainty what route might yet be adopted, and further than a fact which we find recorded in one of the reports of the engineer, that the pass known as the Jasper House Pass had been selected by the late Administration in April, 1872, as the one by which the Rocky Mountain range was to be penetrated; nothing of any moment occurred which would have justified the Government in assuming that a practical line had been found, or laid down on a map, in any part of the 2,600 miles to be traversed. The modified plan which we suggested was, that we should as rapidly as possible complete the surveys, and when the surveys were completed we should endeavour to complete such initial portions of the railway as would enable us to carry forward our own population and our immigrant population into the interior of the continent, and afford some more rapid means of transit from the West through the Rocky Mountains to the prairie region. And in order to accomplish this we proposed that we should for a time abandon, as not immediately necessary, the construction of the line from Nepigon or the west end of Thunder Bay, as might be, to Lake Nipissing, which was selected as the eastern terminus; and that we should, for a time at least, until our financial condition would enable us to complete the after portion, avail ourselves of the navigation of the great lakes—that is Lakes Huron and Superior—and effect a connection between the western end of Lake Superior, at whatever point might be decided, and touching upon the eastern end of Lake Huron in Georgian Bay; that from that point eastward we should build a short branch to reach the originally projected terminus south and east of Lake Nipissing, and that we should subsidize one of the Ottawa Valley railroads, running as directly as possible in the direction of Montreal in the valley of Ottawa. The original project contemplated was, of course, to connect the two oceans, and the only point which might be looked to as the ocean terminus to the East was the city of Montreal, while on the West a point had to be selected according to the developments which might be made during the progress of the survey. Having this scheme in view which I have briefly noticed, and, I might say, anticipated at the time, knowing too little of the interior of the country to be aware whether we should construct a railway more cheaply or not, we contemplated also using in other parts of the country what has become a proverbial phrase in this House: “the magnificent water stretches” we possessed in that country. The plan, Sir, which we had thus sketched out obtained finally the sanction of the Columbia Government, under the intervention of Lord Carnarvon, the Colonial Secretary, and by those terms it was provided that we should build a line between Esquimalt, or Victoria and Nanaimo, as speedily as possible, as compensation for delays which had occurred or which might occur, but not as part of the Pacific Railway; and as soon as the surveys were completed and the line actually located on the mainland, that we should spend a sum not less than $2,000,000 per annum upon the construction. In accordance with those arrangements a Bill was brought into, and carried through, the House for building the short line upon Vancouver's Island. That Bill was defeated in the other branch of the Legislature, and of course it became impossible for us to carry out that part of the arrangement with British Columbia. In the meantime, we had made considerable progress with the surveys in British Columbia, and over other parts of the route where it was necessary to have an exhaustive survey made in order to decide on what particular line we should ultimately construct the road. I need not advert at any great length to the character of those surveys, nor need I refer particularly to the various phases which the subject assumed as information of a fresh character reached the Government from various quarters as the work progressed. I have been told, Sir, occasionally in this House, during last Session notably, that I have materially changed my views of certain portions of the road from those which I first stated in expounding the policy of the Government in 1874. I stated on those occasions that I had no views to present to the House at any time or during that Session from personal observation, or for which I could personally in any way be held responsible, or which imposed any obligation as to their accuracy upon the Government, because all those statements as to surveys and results of surveys were necessarily predicated upon the information obtained from the engineers who were engaged in them, and concerning which it was manifestly impossible for the Government to ascertain their accuracy or inaccuracy. It was my own firm belief, for instance, for many months after I assumed the duties of this Department—and it was the belief of the Government—that Lake Nepigon, or rather Nepigon Bay, would be the most suitable terminus on Lake Superior, and it undoubtedly would be even yet, in one sense, because the distance from Selkirk, as the objective point in the West, common to all routes, via Rat Portage, would be shorter to Lake Nipissing if we had been able to carry the line direct, or nearly direct, to Nepigon, and thence traverse the country either by the lake shore, which is somewhat rough, or go back to a point north of the end of Long Lake and reach a comparatively easy country far to the north of Lake Superior, or behind that fringe of rough country which borders the lake. But the examination of the country west of Nepigon, especially in the valley of the Sturgeon River, which was found to be the most accessible route leading, not very directly, but still in the direction that we desired to go, showed that the country was exceedingly rough, that the labour would be very great, and that the work of construction would be very heavy. The late Government, I may say, anticipating probably that something of this kind might be found, and, at all events, no doubt, considering it necessary to examine alternative routes, despatched a strong party of engineers to examine the country from Thunder Bay westward. That examination, I may say, was so far completed towards the autumn of 1874 that we found there was no doubt of a favourable route being obtainable by the valley of the Kaministiquia traversing the country west of that, either as was first anticipated by what is known as Sturgeon Falls, and passing in a nearly direct line to Rat Portage, or, what was afterwards found still more desirable, to pass to the northward of Lake Shebandowan and Lac des Mille Lacs, reaching the waters of the latter lake at the mouth, or near the mouth of the Savanne River, which falls into Lac des Mille Lacs from the north-east. This route was found remarkably easy of construction, and, as I will show before I have done, has proved to be in point of construction remarkably cheap. At the same time we reached Lake Superior, as I believe, at a harbour in Thunder Bay of a superior character. I do not pretend to have any personal knowledge of the comparative merits of the two points, that is Nepigon Bay and Thunder Bay; but I have no doubt, from what I have read and heard, that either port would prove a most available harbour for the trade that might be attracted to these points after the construction of the railway. The energies of the Government, then, Sir, were directed towards a matter that I shall refer to very briefly when I come to speak of the details of the work which the Government has undertaken. In the meantime, to give some idea of the vastness of the enterprise upon which the Government of Canada had entered, we have only to observe that we had to traverse a continent, most of it absolutely unknown except by a few Hudson Bay traders and a few Indians, from whom some general information only might have been gleaned. The country from Lake Nipissing, following up towards the Montreal River and behind the border of the mountains on the lake shore, was scarcely ever trodden by any scientific men who left any proper record of its character behind them. And from Lake Superior, on Thunder Bay, westward to Rat Portage, although the country had been traversed for a century by the employés of fur-trading companies in their journeys to the west and return journeys to the east, comparatively little was known of the country. It was only known that it was a country traversed by numerous streams and dotted with many lakes; that it was an extremely rocky country, and densely wooded for the most part, although occasionally there were large tracts of good land in various places, but insignificant as compared with the entire area of the country to traversed. The entire country from Lake Nipissing to Rat Portage, or almost to the Red River, was without a single inhabitant, or only temporarily occupied by trappers, who had penetrated the wilderness at various points in pursuit of their calling. The explorations of Captain Pallister and the other Imperial officers had left us the only accurate information of the country west of Red River we possessed, beyond that obtained by the early missionaries who visited that country on their benevolent enterprises. But still the exploration of that portion of the country was a matter of comparative ease. It was, however, when we reached the Rocky Mountain range that the most serious difficulties of the enterprise presented themselves. One large party of engineers spent nearly two whole years in endeavouring to find a suitable pass through this formidable barrier, and through the hills that lie within the bend of the Columbia River. Much time was afterwards spent in the country north of that river and the Thompson, known as the Cariboo Mountains. At one time, after it was decided by the late Administration that the Yellowhead Pass should be the point for penetrating the Rocky Mountain range, it was supposed that after passing down from Tête Jaune Cache a short distance on the North Thompson River it would be possible to find a nearly direct line across to the Chilicotin Plains by Clear Water Lake, with a view to reaching the Bute Inlet route somewhere on those plains. But the second season developed such numerous and serious difficulties that it became quite impossible to traverse the country in that direction, and the attempt had to be abandoned. The next season we surveyed the country mentioned in an early report as a probable route by Mr. Sandford Fleming, which passes to the north and west of Cariboo Mountains, following down the valley of the Fraser until we reached a point west of Fort George, whence it diverged nearly due south but west of the Fraser, traversing the Chilicotin Plains and taking the pass through the mountains known now as the Homathco Valley Pass. In all of those enterprises we find from Mr. Fleming's report, that we had 47,000 miles of route actually traversed by the various parties who were sent out to explore the country. A very large proportion of this had to be done under circumstances of the greatest difficulty and danger. That difficulty and danger, perhaps, could best be estimated by the statement that there was a loss of life of about forty men during the progress of those explorations. Some were surrounded by forest fires and burnt to death. Others lost their lives in endeavouring to cross dangerous rivers and descending the tumultuous rapids to the Fraser and other rivers little known. In addition to the actual travelling of 47,000 miles of district routes in search of the best way whereon to build the railway, we find that there were actual instrumental surveys, laboriously measured yard by yard, of not less than 12,000 miles, or very nearly five times the length of the road when completed from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean. It is difficult to estimate the amount of labour incurred in this gigantic enterprise, and difficult to over-estimate the zeal, the assiduity, and the diligence of many of the parties who were engaged in this work, unless one should visit the country traversed. On one occasion, for instance, a party was sent in the autumn of the year, in December, from Fort George to survey the northern affluents of the Fraser, which were supposed, from some rumours which reached the Government, to reach some point in the Rocky Mountains north of the Yellowhead Pass which would present a more favourable route for passing the mountain range. This party, under Mr. Jarvis, spent the entire winter in those bleak mountains, and in the midst of the deepest snow which is to be found in that quarter, with only the shelter of the canvas tents at nights. And so, Sir, with regard to other districts which were traversed by parties of engineers in all directions. We find that the greatest amount of labour which could possibly be endured was endured by many of those men in the survey. The Government were compelled, in consequence of the obligatory character of the arrangement which was entered into by the late Government, to press the work in this manner in order to secure at as early a day as possible the best information concerning the character of the country, its natural advantages, as well as its topographical features, before it would be possible for us to come down to Parliament and announce the section of the route upon which to construct the road. In order to give another idea of the amount of labour which was incurred, I may state that in the first year, in 1871, in making the mere preliminary preparations for the survey, there was expended $30,148. In the second year, 1872, the amount spent in surveys was $489,428. In the third year, 1873, $561,813; in the fourth year, $310,224; in the fifth, $474,529; in the sixth, $791,121; in the seventh, $754,634—being a total up to the first of June of last year of $3,411,895. And the expenditure for the current financial year has yet to be presented, but as it is not completed I am unable to state what it will be, except that the estimate was $230,000. But this much we know, that, taking the entire length of the road, and supposing it to be finished now from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific seaboard, it has cost for these preliminary surveys—when I say preliminary surveys I mean all the surveys preliminary to actual construction being commenced—the sum of $1,300 per mile. In order to estimate accurately the nature of the difficulties in British Columbia, I may state that though, I am not able to give the exact division at the moment, out of three and one-half millions spent up to the end of the last financial year not far short of one-half was spent in British Columbia upon an extent of one-fifth part of the entire length of road.

MR. DECOSMOS: One-half of it was wasted.

MR. MACKENZIE: My hon. friend says one-half of it was wasted. I cannot speak as to what was wasted further than to say that it would be very difficult indeed to undertake a work of such vast magnitude without wasting a great deal of money. The necessities of the case were such, then, when men had to be sent into all quarters of the country, and an enormous expenditure had to be incurred in getting in the provisions and supplies necessary for maintenance—I say that under these circumstances it would be a marvel indeed if a large amount of money were not spent upon works which afterwards turned out to be absolutely worthless, but which could not be known originally. I can only say that it would, perhaps, be difficult to find a more energetic staff of engineers than were concentrated on that work, though there might be—no doubt there were—many among them who were not as fit for their position.

as it were desirable they should be. Where we have to pick up at once from one hundred to two hundred engineers to prosecute a work under the stinging impulse of an obligation as to time, which we are anxious to fulfil, it is difficult to avoid an expenditure which, in a more leisurely and deliberate way of examining the country, might have been avoided. When we find that all this work was accomplished practically in the space of six years, we may say also that a feat is presented in the examination of a continent which has never been equalled, so far as I know, in any country. Why, Sir, on a railway from the interior of India to Bombay they spent, in making the survey of a line which traversed a country, except where it crosses one mountain range, comparatively easy for engineering, and covered with a dense population, a period of four years; and they were able to begin no portion of the construction on what is known as one of the great engineering works of that country. Our engineers had to traverse a country entirely without any population, except at one point, where they reached the Red River settlements; and we know from the sparsity of the population even there, that so very small a quantity of produce was then grown in that rich country, that at that time we could not depend on obtaining a large amount, if any at all, and supplies had to be taken into the country by the most laborious process, and at a very great expense. Now, Sir, various estimates have been made at different times by different individuals as to the cost of the construction of this railway. I will, at a future part of my remarks, give some information about the actual cost where we have ascertained it. But, as to the total cost of the enterprise, reviewing it from an initial standpoint, I must confine myself to the official information placed in the possession of the late Government, and of course committed to myself also after I succeeded in office. In Mr. Fleming's report of 1873, to the Government, is a memorandum for the guidance of the Government, made under conditions to which I shall not allude at the present time. The estimated cost at that time was, for the

Pembina branch, \$13,000,000; from Lake Superior to Red River, \$14,700,000; from Red River to the Rocky Mountains, \$26,000,000; from Lake Nipissing to Lake Superior junction, \$23,000,000; from the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific, \$35,000,000—or a total estimated cost of \$100,000,000 to connect the systems of the Eastern Provinces at Nipissing with some ocean port on the Pacific coast. The vastness of the enterprise might be enhanced, or it might be reduced by the particular port selected on the Pacific which it might be determined to reach, and, shortly before the late Government left office, they had practically determined upon reaching the ocean by the port of Esquimalt. To reach the ocean by the port of Esquimalt would, however, require a much larger estimate than the \$35,000,000 which is placed down here as necessary to traverse British Columbia. When I come to speak of the comparative merits of the several routes, I will allude to the expenditure necessary to reach the several points which have to be reached in ultimately finding a suitable harbour for the trade of the country. But I now propose to say a few words with regard to the different lines which have been selected; first, east of the Rocky Mountains, and, secondly, in Columbia. The engineers of the Department, in selecting a route from Lake Superior, had, as I have already stated, to reach Rat Portage as the objective point on the west to which all lines must converge starting from the eastward, and from that point west it was an open question whether the line should traverse the more southern parts of the country, crossing Red River either at the city of Winnipeg or a little to the south or north of it, or whether it should cross the Red River towards its junction with Lake Winnipeg, and cross the country in another direction from that which would be taken if the route south of Lake Manitoba had been selected. Now, some hon. gentlemen will have observed, no doubt, on the map—and we have heard explanations concerning the map and the route by way of the city of Winnipeg during this Session—they will have observed that, by taking the southern route, we would again reach the valley of the Assiniboine, somewhere about 140 or 150 miles west of Red River; and, by taking that route, we would have to bend considerably to the southward of the general line, to avoid crossing the Riding and Duck Mountains at a place where it would require high grades, probably going east as well as west. The other route, which was at one time supposed to be somewhat more difficult, took nearly a straight course from Rat Portage to what is known as Selkirk, a point 22 or 23 miles north of Winnipeg on the Red River, and from that point went in a nearly direct line, crossing the Narrows of Lake Manitoba, to a point at the extreme northern flank of Duck Mountains, and marked on the map as Northcote. From that point there was a slight divergence to the southwards, in order to reach the most favourable point in the Swan River Valley, but following generally the course of Swan River from that point I have alluded to, to the other point from which it took a due west course until it reached very nearly the vicinity of Battle River, on the North Saskatchewan. There had been some controversy about the course adopted in traversing the Province of Manitoba and the territory immediately west of it. It was supposed by some people that Mr. Fleming had made a mistake in selecting the northern route, and it ought to pass through the country south of Lake Manitoba, taking the course I described a few minutes ago. Taking this course, however, would be open to two or three very serious objections. In the first place, it was known that the engineering difficulties would undoubtedly be somewhat serious, and we knew from Mr. Smith's explorations during the last season, that they were even more severe than we had anticipated. We find that the deep valleys cut by the rivers of the country, falling into the Assiniboine, and by that river itself, were so deep and wide as to make bridging upon anything near the average level of the prairie an impossibility. The valleys have a depth of from 200 to 250 feet below the general level, with a width in some places of about a mile on the level. We find that in one place it required a divergence from a straight line or rather involved a curvature which lengthened the line nine miles, thus adding that much to the length and cost of the road, in consequence of having to pass over one only of those rivers. Mr. Smith confirmed in his report the conclusion that Mr. Fleming had arrived at in previous years, and the Government felt that the proper course to adopt was to follow the line projected by Mr. Fleming. We know that besides lengthening the road from twenty to thirty miles, it would involve an expenditure in the neighbourhood of \$1,000,000, because of the more severe character of the works, as well as the additional mileage imposed on passengers and traffic for all time, which is itself a most serious objection. The other objection was that it was desirable, if possible, that a national highway should point in the direction of the greatest amount, and keep near the centre, of the habitable territory, thus fulfilling the conditions of a really national highway through fertile lands. The character of the country for fertility would to some extent—other considerations being equal, to a great extent indeed—determine alike the engineers and the Government in the final selection of the route. We have, therefore, decided without any hesitation, after the most careful enquiry that can be made, to follow the line which is now laid down to the Jasper House Pass. The question which has arisen very lately of adopting another route to the northward even does not alter in any way the conditions that I have referred to as governing the selection of the route east of Livingstone, because it will be seen that if the Government and Parliament should decide upon adopting the Peace Valley Pine River route, as projected by several gentlemen, they would still take the same line that we have now taken to that point north of the Duck Mountains, and from that point they would take a straight line to Fort à la Corne, and pass from there nearly in a straight line to the lower forks of the Smoky River, passing by Lesser Slave Lake on the south, and so reaching Pine River Pass. We are not in a position to discuss this route, for the single reason that that part of the country has not yet been surveyed. Except so far as the travels of Mr. Horeitzky, one of our officials who was sent over a portion of that country to examine and take information regarding the Pine River Pass by Mr. Hunter, may be called a survey, supplemented by the information brought to us from the Peace River Valley by Mr. Selwyn and Mr. Macoun, we have practically no information beyond this as to the character of this route. We knew, indeed, as a general thing, that this route would traverse a favourable country for agricultural pursuits. I think there can be no question about that. Whether it would be more favourable than the southern route—or rather the central route, as we may call it—is a matter of conjecture, as we have no such definite information as would enable us to make an accurate comparison. The experience we have gained from time to time as to knowledge of the country makes me very reticent indeed about venturing on any statements which are not borne out by accurate observations of parties upon whom the Government could place full dependence. There is one thing, however, quite certain, that the adoption of that route, either by Pine River Pass or by Peace River, would, even, on Mr. Smith's estimate—and he is extremely favourable to its adoption—involve an increased length, assuming the percentage of curvature to be the same as on the other line, of about 52 miles, and I fear that the curvature on reaching the country near the base of the Rocky Mountains and the crossing of Smoky River, and other rivers flowing north into the Peace River, I fear the deflections from a straight line and the crossing of those deep valleys, which are described by Butler and other writers as from 500 to 900 feet below the general level, would make this curvature considerably more than on the located route. In fact, the curvature of the selected line is next to nothing, for a large portion of it traverses a prairie country. The cheapness of construction, of course, enters mainly into the consideration of the subject, and must, therefore, be a governing element. It is possible, however, if the road is constructed by the present route, that from a point east and west of Edmonton branch lines might be projected into the Peace River country which would serve all the purposes of reaching that quarter by immigrants and supply the settlers with the means of exit with whatever they produced. When I come to speak of the natural features of the county, I may allude to some matters which are the subject of controversy at the present time. The mileage of the different routes and the grades of the several routes are, of course, important elements to consider. Mr. Fleming set out with the determination, if possible, to obtain a grade not exceeding  $26\frac{1}{2}$  feet per mile, or less than one-half of the maximum grade on the Intercolonial, going eastward from the Rocky Mountains, or one not exceeding 52.80, or one foot to the mile, westward. This determination was arrived at from the consideration that it was exceedingly desirable to have the most favourable grades going eastward, because it was in the direction of the largest amount of traffic. The grain of that country and other natural products will, of necessity, be carried cheaper if there are low grades, and a much larger amount of work can be accomplished by one engine than could be accomplished with a higher maximum grade, which, even of a few feet more, would make a material difference. I am happy to say that, up to the present time, on the 228 miles under construction we have been able to adhere rigidly to those grades. Whether we will be able to do so east of Rat Portage may be a question, but, undoubtedly, it is an object to do it, if it can at all be sustained by a reasonable outlay. The grades from that point westward all the way to the Pacific Ocean, by one particular route, are not in excess of those which are to be obtained from the prairie region from Selkirk eastward to Thunder Bay. The grades upon the other lines are materially different. One of the considerations which must govern us, even in the selection of a road capable of favourable gradients, is whether the cost of obtaining such grades is much in excess of what it would cost to build the road where there are high grades, because, under the circumstances of the country, it may be advisable to adopt a road which would have grades somewhat excessive, if we could construct that road at a very much less cost than those capable of providing very favourable grades at a high cost. This is, of course, an element in the calculations. On the other hand, we must remember if the grades are excessive, the expense of working the railroad will show an enormous increase over those with favourable gradients, and we are therefore driven to the consideration of two questions. The first is on what line we can obtain the lowest grades. The cost of construction westward to the boundary of Columbia on the Yellowhead Pass is, of course, the same for all lines, as they traverse the same country to the east. But from that point westerly to the ocean the distances are different, the works are different, and the grades are different on the two competing routes. Mr. Fleming estimated the construction of the railway which would follow the common line of the Bute Inlet route to a point on the Blackwater Valley, about the middle of the Chilicotin Plains, and passing that point sharp to the westward of Dean Inlet, at nearly \$29,000,000. This also being a shorter line by five miles than that to Burrard Inlet. The cost to Burrard Inlet would be \$35,000,000, and the estimate the cost to Bute Inlet of following the same route to the point I have indicated in the Blackwater Valley, is \$33,000,000. The cost of the routes then will stand in the following order:—No. 8, to Dean Inlet, \$29,000,000; No. 2, to Burrard Inlet, \$35,000,000; the mileage on the respective routes being: 488 from the Columbia boundary in the Rocky Mountains to the sea for the Dean Inlet route; 493 miles to Port Moody by the Burrard Inlet route; and 546 miles by the Bute Inlet route to Waddington Harbour. In the report presented to the House a week ago there is a very careful statement of the grades from the summit of the Yellowhead Pass to all those routes. As Mr. Fleming properly remarks, we may leave Dean Inlet out of the question, because, with the natural difficulties which meet us after reaching salt water, it would be almost impossible to utilize it. We find it is beset with ice during a considerable portion of the winter, while Milbank Sound, by which the ocean would be reached, is a dangerous and difficult place to navigate, and the services of powerful tugs would be required to assist sailing vessels in reaching the harbour. These and other considerations induced us to abandon that route as one, while in one sense practicable, in another sense impracticable, and which therefore ought to be set aside. We are, then, confined to the consideration of the other routes. There is a level—or what is equal to a level, less than a tenth of a foot per 100 feet—line on the Burrard Inlet route of 185 miles, against 137 miles on the Bute Inlet route; over 10 to 20, 11 miles on the Burrard Inlet route, and 19 miles on the Bute Inlet; over 20 to 30, 15 miles on the Burrard Inlet, 21 miles on the Bute Inlet; over 30 to 40, 17 miles on the Burrard Inlet, 16 miles on the Bute Inlet; over 40 to 50—in other words, not a half foot to the hundred feet—30 miles on the Burrard Inlet, 23 miles on the Bute Inlet; from 50 to 60, 12 miles on the Burrard Inlet, 11 miles on the Bute Inlet; from 70 to 80—what we may call three-fourths of a foot per 100 feet—33 miles on the Burrard Inlet route, 25 on the Bute Inlet route; from 80 to 100, or under 52.80 per mile, 66 miles on the Burrard Inlet route, 80 miles on the Bute Inlet route; from 1 foot to 1½ feet per 100 feet there is none at all on the Burrard Inlet route, the maximum there being 1 in 100; there are 5.30 on the the Bute Inlet route; from 1½ to 1¾ per mile, none on the Burrard Inlet route, and 3.84 on the Bute Inlet route; from 1.75 to 2 feet, none on the Burrard Inlet route, and 12.37 miles on the Bute Inlet route. I think if I recollect aright, coming to exact statements, there is somewhere about ten or eleven miles with about 104 to 105 feet to the mile on one route, while on the other there are none in excess of 52.80 feet to the mile. This is ascending eastwards. Ascending westward the proportion is very much the same. I will not go over the details and the small figures, but simply say that there are 27 miles of an ascent of between .80 and 1, or I may say, in order that I may be reported correctly,  $27\frac{3}{4}$  miles from .80 1 foot per 100 by the Burrard Inlet route, and 52 on the Bute Inlet route. So far the comparison is clearly very much in favour of the Burrard Inlet route as to grades. Then the question arises in what distance those grades occur, because while a short grade of a sharp character would be injurious to a route if the engine is unable to maintain its momentum until it reaches the summit, the difficulty increases proportionately in long reaches of grade, as the engine must lose power after starting at the bottom of the hill. In the Fraser River route Mr. Cambie informed us that the profile is singularly undulating, that is, that even the higher grades on that route occur at long intervals, and with level or nearly level reaches between them. This gives a very great advantage in that respect over the route by Bute Inlet. Now, the question arises, after the disposal of the grades, as to the curvature of the several lines. The curvature will be found laid out in Mr. Cambie's report on page 34, from which it will be seen that there is, of straight line on the Burrard Inlet route, 285 miles, and 328 miles on the Bute Inlet route, being as nearly as possible the same proportion. The percentage of straight line on the Burrard Inlet route is about 58, and on the other a little over 60, while the longest curves are pretty much in the same proportion, excepting a radius of 14.33 to 11.46, that is about four to five degrees. There is a larger amount of that curvature on the Burrard Inlet than the Bute Inlet route, the relative distance being 36 miles against 22 miles. There are some curves sharper on the Burrard Inlet route than any to be found on the Bute Inlet route, there being a quarter of a mile with a radius between 955 feet and 819 feet, and a very small portion of a mile with a radius between 819 and 716 feet. If I recollect aright, the shortest radius on any curve of the Intercolonial Railway is about 700 feet. It occurs not far from the city of Halifax, and is, I find on reference, somewhat under 700 feet. This, then, is the shortest curve upon the Burrard

MR. MACKENZIE.

Inlet route. Although there is no curve quite so short on the other, still, if there be only a short distance of this curve, it is a matter of little importance. The entire percentage of curves on both lines is, on the Burrard Inlet, 42.10; on the Bute Inlet, 39.76—showing the difference to be somewhat in favour of Bute Inlet. There is another point of great importance in connection with grades and curves. A high grade in a perfectly straight line is not nearly so dangerous an element or so difficult to encounter as where a high grade and a sharp curve are combined. Mr. Cambie informs us in his report that this occurred on the Burrard Inlet route where the route is either level or the grade low, while the reverse is the case to a considerable extent on the other lines. Now, Sir, as to the cost of construction, various estimates will, of course, be made by parties according to the extent of their actual knowledge of the country, aided, no doubt, by their predilections either one way or the other. The Government, as a matter of course, come to the consideration of the question with a mind entirely unbiassed by partisan opinions on either side, and we depend, therefore, on the accuracy of the estimates made by the engineers of the Department, when they all agree, and when they do not, we have to depend more or less on our knowledge of circumstances which would lead us to any preference for one or the other. The estimates which Mr. Smith forms is as follows: Through the Yellowhead Pass, by the Rivers Thompson and Fraser to Port Moody, Burrard Inlet, \$36,500,000, and if carried to English Bay, some fifteen miles further, \$37,100,000. From the Yellowhead Pass to Bute Inlet he estimates the cost at \$34,000,000, or  $2\frac{1}{2}$  millions less by the Bute Inlet route than by the Lower Fraser route. Mr. Cambie, on the other hand, makes the calculation in a different way. He estimates that the easy access by the Fraser River into the country, with the use of the magnificent roads constructed by the Columbian Government, and passing through a country which is more or less inhabited and productive of cattle and cereals on a plateau between the Cascades and the Rocky Mountains, will lessen the cost of this road in construction, as well as also reduce the cost of materials. From actual calculations he estimates the exact cost to Coal Harbour or English Bay at \$32,000,000, while he estimates the cost to Waddington Harbour at \$33,000,000—deducting a certain amount for the percentage I have alluded to as being claimed by him as a fair allowance for greater ease of construction, and his estimate of the cost to Port Moody is \$31,000,000, as against \$33,000,000 to reach Waddington Harbour. These calculations are all, of course, to some extent conjectural, that is, they all assume that the contrasts would be taken at the fixed price which they use in applying the prices to quantities to make up the figures. These prices may be greater or less, but the quantities will remain practically the same. It is very noticeable, too, that none of the engineers under Mr. Fleming make any appreciable difference in his original calculations after visiting the country. We may, therefore, assume the figures to be proportionally about the same as they were placed by Mr. Fleming when he estimated a difference of some \$2,000,000 in favour of the Bute Inlet route, but making no difference at all for the greater facility of obtaining supplies by the other route. Now, Sir, I propose to direct attention for a moment to the mileage by the several routes, by which it is assumed it would be absolutely necessary to reach some harbour on Vancouver's Island on the outer side as an ocean harbour. If the northern route is adopted, Waddington Harbour can in no sense be considered as a Pacific terminus. But the late Government, acting on this belief, passed an Order in Council selecting Esquimalt as the harbour to be reached. Of course, the Government at present does not feel itself in any way bound to follow this conclusion unless it is found to be in the public interest to do so. In order to reach Esquimalt we have to travel over the following distances: From Yellowhead Pass to Waddington Harbour, 546 miles; from Waddington Harbour to what is known as Frederick Arm—that is, to the port where the ferry has to be taken to Otter Cove, on the island—51 miles, making a total to what may be called the real harbour to be reached at Frederick Arm of 597 miles. From this point there is a ferry of fifteen miles to the island, making a total to the island of 612 miles. But after reaching the island there remains to be constructed 183 miles of railroad to reach Esquimalt—in other words, the distance to Esquimalt from the Yellowhead Pass is 795 miles. Now, there are two other harbours, Quatsino and Albernio, which might be made available, but which are perhaps not in one sense as good or as accessible as Esquimalt. But both furnish abundant accommodation for ocean traffic. The distance, of course, to the island is the same in both cases—that is, 612 miles. The distance from Otter Cove on the island to Albernio Canal is 93 miles, from Otter Cove to Quatsino 107 miles. The relative distances of the three harbours on Vancouver Island which are suitable for ocean termini from Yellowhead Pass are as follows:—To Albernio Canal, 705 miles; to Quatsino 719 miles; and to Esquimalt, 795 miles. If we take the mileage on the other route we find that the length to Burrard Inlet is 493 miles, but if carried forward to English Bay it would be thirteen miles more. The Burrard Inlet harbours may fairly be considered, ocean ports, and the only objection which has been raised to the adoption of that place as the ocean terminus to the railway, is in the fact that in order to reach the open sea we have to pass within a distance not exceeding two or two and a half miles from the shores of some of the islands which are in the possession of the United States Government. From a military point of view, this would, of course, have more or less weight. Indeed, it would be possible, in time of war, for the traffic of the road to reach the island by steamer from English Bay to Nanaimo, a distance of 40 to 45 miles. Or vessels might, by taking the tide and being towed part of the way, find access to the ocean through the straits northwards and past the head of Bute Inlet. I am not at present discussing the question as to what importance should be attached to the merely military idea, further than to say that the control of the waters of the ocean there must be held, not by any island or any batteries upon an island, but by ships of war owned by both nations. And it is, perhaps, not an element of very great consideration in the determination of the proper terminus of a commercial route that we should consider the importance of the military idea as one which would overbalance the commercial. It would be possible, in after years, if it were found desirable to do so, assuming that the Fraser River route is adopted, to reach the ocean at another point, which would set aside all military considerations, and meet the views of the most extreme people holding the views as to the military importance of the question I have referred to. We have then to consider other matters. We have to consider in connection with the distances to be traversed, so far as ocean traffic is concerned, where we are to get that traffic from.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Another objection expressed to the Burrard Inlet route is its vicinity to the United States, and the facility with which railway connection could be made to a harbour in the United States, which would take away the trade from Burrard Inlet to that country.

MR. MACKENZIE: I attach no value at all to that, for the simple reason that if our road furnishes a better highway for traffic eastwards than theirs, I do not think we should object to getting a large amount of United States traffic on our road. If we reached a point where there is no traffic, except what would be created, it would be a very long time indeed before we succeeded in making the road answer the purposes of a commercial road. I am aware, of course, of the political idea that this road is not to be built exclusively for commercial purposes. But we would ill represent the people of the Dominion generally, if we were to set aside all questions of payment and all questions of cost in considering questions of route. I am sure the bulk of the people who have to bear the taxation for the construction of this road, will demand from any Government a strict account of their stewardship, if they select the route on the principle that that consideration is not one of a governing character. I observe that Sir Edward Selby Smyth does not attach very much importance to the question of the vicinity of the United States boundary, while the report of last year, and the report of this year, both show that the naval officers, with singular unanimity, decided in favour of Burrard Inlet, with that single drawback to which I have referred. We have to consider another matter in reference to this terminus. We are not bound by any national consideration entered into with British Columbia to reach any particular point on the ocean, but simply the coast. It is, therefore, perfectly free for the Government and this Parliament to select any point which reaches the Pacific Ocean, and it is, in my opinion, a matter of very great importance that we should reach the ocean by a route which will not only answer the political purposes, but which presents advantages of another kind. I find that Mr. Cambie estimates the cost of maintenance upon the two routes in the following way:—He takes the distances from Yellow Head Summit and contrasts the annual expenditure which would be necessary for maintaining a line on each of them, carrying a traffic equal to that which was carried over the Intercolonial Railway last year. Estimating the working expenses and renewals of that road at $2,327 per mile per annum, he shows that it would cause an expenditure of $123,000 per annum, if the line terminated even at Waddington Harbour, in excess of that required to Port Moody. And if the line extended to Albernio, the nearest harbour on the island, it would cost $483,000 in excess of the amount required to work the Burrard Inlet route. And if carried to Esquimalt it would cost $693,000 per annum in excess of that required in working the Burrard Inlet route. Now, these are extremely important considerations. But that, I fear, is not all. Indeed, I know it is not all, because the trains, which would pass over the southern route, would be very much heavier than those which could pass over the northern route. There is this difference, however, that all the heavy grades on the Burrard Inlet route occur near the sea, and it would be quite possible to have a powerful engine as an auxiliary engine to assist all regular trains to the summit level. And once on the summit level the trains on both routes would be on a par, because the grades from that point westward on the one are very much the same as on the other. That is done on some railways where high grades are absolutely necessary to overcome the natural contour of the country, and it could be done here also. But even that involves a considerable expense—but I think an expense considerably less than that which has been calculated as a natural incident to so high a grade as compared with the other route. The calculations, however, as to mileage cannot possibly be overcome. You have so many miles to traverse. It is 249 miles longer from Yellow Head Pass to Esquimalt by Port Waddington than it is by Port Moody on Burrard Inlet. Besides, there is the inconvenience of fifteen miles ferry, assuming the road to be built to Frederick Arm. If the road is not built to Frederick Arm there are 66 miles to ferry, and the passage of trains on so long a reach of water, I think, is practically out of the question, so that the entire freight and passengers would have to be transferred at Otter Cove into ordinary freight and passenger boats to be carried to Waddington Harbour. Or, if not, it would be necessary to build a road from Waddington to Frederick Arm, and then at enormous cost build bridges across to the mainland. Mr. Smith estimates the cost of the bridges and railway on the route to Esquimalt at $27,500,000.

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. DECOSMOS: I would like to know from the Minister of Public Works why the report of the Chief Engineer with regard to Waddington Harbour was not delivered to the House, I mean as to the expenditure necessary to reach Vancouver Island from Waddington Harbour. The cost of the bridging has, I believe, been magnified to an enormous extent. I understand the engineers have placed a document in the hands of the Government showing that there is no necessity for bridging at all.

MR. MACKENZIE: Of course, if the ferry is used there will be no necessity for bridging, but if not, there must be a necessity for bridging. There are just the two ways of crossing, and I have been speaking of both. As to Mr. Smith's report, in which he refers to the cost as $27,500,000, he was unable to find it himself some weeks ago when we were looking for it. I have not got it, but I know that was the figure. Mr. Fleming says that the cost of extending the railway to Esquimalt would greatly exceed that of taking it to Burrard Inlet. There are no sufficient data to form a proper estimate of cost, but even by leaving a gap near Valdez Islands of fifteen miles, and substituting a ferry in place of the enormous costly bridging at that locality the excess would probably reach $15,000,000 or $20,000,000. The cost of maintenance would be great in proportion, and the annual losses on working the extra mileage under the peculiar circumstances would be serious. These are the deliberate conclusions arrived at by Mr. Fleming, and they do not vary in any important particular as to the cost from those of Mr. Smith. The latter gentleman has strong views in favour of this central route, because it strikes the Island towards its centre, and because there is, perhaps, some advantage, if an outlet to the north was to be obtained of a good character, in reaching the ocean at the north rather than at the south. That led me, in the first instance, to favour Bute Inlet as against Burrard Inlet to a great extent, because we had to look to the ocean traffic that might be realized. If we take the distance from Yokohama as a principle Asiatic port to Yellow Head Pass by Quatsino and Otter Cove, thence to Waddington and Yellow Head Pass, we have to Quatsino 4,040 miles railroad on the island, 107 miles to Otter Cove, then there is the ferry of 15 miles, and 59 miles railway on the mainland, that is from Frederick Arm, making the distance altogether by Bute Inlet and Quatsino to Yokohama 4,644 miles. If we take the distance by Alberni, we have of ocean 4,210 miles, 93 miles of railway, on the island to Otter Cove, the same ferriage of 15 miles to Frederick Arm, and the same distance as before on the mainland, making a total of 4,822 miles. The distance from Yokohama to Esquimalt is 4,265 miles, thence to Otter Cove 183 miles of railway, the ferry 15 miles, and 597 miles on the mainland, making the total distance 4,955 miles. To the same point via Burrard Inlet, from Yokohama to Esquimalt is 4,265 miles, and 68 miles of railway from Esquimalt to Nanaimo, and a ferriage of 50 miles from Nanaimo; the distance on the mainland is 493, making a total distance of 4,796 miles. The distance, therefore, would stand as follows:—From the Yellow Head Pass, 4,644 nautical miles—that is the shortest. The next is by Port Moody, or Burrard Inlet, 4,796 miles. The next is by Alberni Canal, 4,822 miles, and then by Esquimalt, 4,955 miles—showing that the distances are also in this regard very considerably against taking the road to Esquimalt, even if the Bute Inlet route were chosen. Now, Sir, the Government, in considering the question of route, have necessarily to determine on the wisdom of selecting a route which may be open to some objections, but possesses all the other advantages, and a route which has a complete freedom from some of the objections urged—I mean those of a naval and a military character—and the danger, as some consider it, of getting any traffic from the United States—for Bute Inlet would be perfectly safe in that respect—we have to choose, I say, between selecting the route to Burrard Inlet, which is open to these objections, but has all the other considerations in its favour, and the Bute Inlet route, which has none of these disadvantages, but has all the other disadvantages of serious magnitude. In the first place, the mileage is largely in excess, while the cost of construction is but very slightly reduced. In the next place we have not a harbour at all of the same capacity at Fort Wadlington as we have at Burrard Inlet. Then the access to the ocean is difficult, either north or south, and subject to conditions of considerable importance, either as respects the tides or necessary towage which would have to be undertaken. The cost of operation is also very materially reduced by Burrard Inlet as compared with the other. Among other considerations which should guide us, as I stated in my remarks a few weeks ago when speaking of the route west of Red River, if we can serve local purposes as well by adopting a particular route or even by a little sacrifice and without any material increase in mileage and cost, I think we are bound to meet these local views. I have no doubt of this, that the route by Bute Inlet and the North Fraser River would, perhaps, meet with such favour from the mass of the people in the Cariboo and Omineca districts—clearly in the Omineca district, where there is a considerable mining population, and where we may hope for a large increase within a few years. That route, I say, would meet the conditions of those people very much better than the route by Burrard Inlet; but at the same time the considerations which I have adverted to are of such serious moment that I am not able personally to see, nor is the Government able to see, that they could be lightly set aside, when we consider the respective merits of the two routes. In all that relates to cost and cheapness in working the question of grade is so materially involved in the southern route that the question of working must necessarily be so. The mileage is much lower, and there are only two disadvantages; that of, perhaps a slight increase in cost of construction, and that of passing near the boundary of the United States. We have also to consider the other proposition—which is favoured very much, as will be seen, by Mr. Smith—whether it would not be better to change the route east of the Rocky Mountains, making a large digression northwards from the vicinity of Livingstone so as to pass by Slave Lake and reach the great valley of the Peace River near where the Smoky River falls into that stream, and passing thence to Pine River Pass proceed, after crossing the Parsnip River, by McLeod Lake and Canoe River to the low divide at a point near the Fraser River to Giscome Portage. It is a somewhat curious circumstance connected with this route that the real watershed of the continent occurs almost on the banks of the Fraser after this river has flowed for 200 miles towards the Pacific Ocean, there being only fifteen miles, if I recollect aright, between the Fraser River and Summit Lake, one of the sources of Canoe River which flows northward into McLeod Lake. Now, I stated, on a former occasion, that if there were no political considerations governing the action of the Government, and these political reasons referred to our obligations with the British Columbia Government and people to proceed as fast as possible—or, as the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Bunster) says, two or three times every day “proceed immediately”—if there were no considerations of that kind to govern our action, it might be, I have no doubt it would be, desirable to spend another two years exploring the country, which is yet comparatively unknown. But we must remember, supposing all the favourable features to present themselves on this Pine River Pass route which Mr. Smith anticipates, the mileage would be considerably increased—no less than 50 or 60 miles in any case, and it might be much more, and from what we know of the character of the Pass there in the Rocky Mountains, and of the country immediately to the east, it would be increased to probably 100 miles. This is a serious addition to make to the mileage of a road across the continent, and if we are ever to compete successfully for the transcontinental traffic, we must be sure that we have the most favourable route as to distance. Those distances from the Pacific Ocean to the Atlantic are practically as follows:—By the Union Pacific from San Francisco to New York by the Michigan Central, Great Western, and New York Central the distance is 3,363 miles; from New Westminster to Montreal by the Canada Pacific, the line to Montreal by the Ottawa, it is 2,730 miles, or a difference in favour of the Canadian route of 623 miles. From New Westminster to New York by the Canada Pacific, the St. Lawrence and Ottawa, Ogdensburg and Rome and New York Central to New York, the distance is 3,058 miles, or 305 in favour of the Canadian line. From New Westminster to Montreal by the Canadian Pacific, Montreal and Ottawa, the distance is 2,739 miles; and by the Union Pacific, Michigan Central, and Grand Trunk, it is 3,251 miles, showing a difference by the most favourable Canadian route at present existing of 521 miles. That is the most favourable route from the western boundary of Ontario. Then we have from New Westminster to Boston by the Canadian Pacific to Montreal, and from Montreal to Boston, a distance of 3,087 miles, while the best United States line is 3,242 miles, showing a difference in our favour to Boston of 335 miles. Now, Sir, these distances I have given show that by the route which has been described in this early report of Mr. Fleming we have 305 miles in our favour in going to New York. That difference of 305 miles, if we were starting from Esquimalt, would be as nearly as possible equalled. There would be no difference between Esquimalt and New York by that line. This shows the importance of the mileage when we consider the ultimate traffic which we may fairly hope to obtain a share of passing over the Pacific roads. The governing considerations then, Sir, are all in favour, as it appears to me, of adopting the views of the Chief Engineer in respect to this line. The Government have not at the moment formally resolved upon the adoption of this line, but it is the opinion of the Government that the considerations to which I have alluded in these remarks are such as must govern their action if they are to attend to this matter purely in the public interest. I am quite aware that if we came to that decision, it is a decision which will not be concurred in by the bulk of the population residing on Vancouver Island—

MR. BUNSTER: Hear, hear.

MR. MACKENZIE: But there are other considerations besides those which I have mentioned which press very materially upon us in considering the determination of the route. I think if we go to Waddington Harbour, and begin at a place where no person lives, if we traverse a country without population, we have no means of beginning except with the greatest difficulty at but the one point next the ocean. We can commence, on the other hand, at Yale, on the Fraser River, which is 90 miles further within the interior than Port Moody, and from Yale to Kamloops, Mr. Smith informs us, the distance is 125 miles. These 125 miles cover the most difficult portion of the route to be traversed.

MR. DECOSMOS: That is a mistake. From Yale to Kamloops is much more than 125 miles.

MR. MACKENZIE: Well, I am not, of course, acquainted with the exact locality, but 125 miles is the distance which the engineer mentions to me as sufficient to reach the navigable waters near Kamloops.

MR. DECOSMOS: That is another thing; that is correct.

MR. MACKENZIE: That is the point I wish to make, and I am quite certain I am accurate on that point. I am informed that east of that point there is a navigation on the North Thompson of 96 miles, so that by commencing at Yale and building 125 miles we practically get into the very heart of the country for the time being; and, although no railway terminus can be located permanently at Yale, it will suffice to meet the wants of the country in the meantime, and our commencement of the road at that point will also meet the obligations we have incurred with the Province. The distance from the eastern end of that navigation—from the end of that 95 miles stretch to the Yellow Head Pass—is 182 miles, so that by constructing 307 miles of railway and using the water in the meantime to Yale, we get communication to the extent of 493 miles, while by the other route, on which we would have no navigation, we could not possibly reach that point without building at once, and before any portion of the road could be used, 546 miles going eastward. These are the statements I have to make in respect to the position which the matter occupies at the present time. I have only further to say as respects the cost of building the road which we have undertaken—and in connection with it I desire to refer to what I laid down as the policy of the Government on previous occasions—as the House is aware, we obtained permission from time to time from Parliament to let out certain contracts from Thunder Bay westward to Selkirk. Our object was to build some portion of the road necessary to obtain an entrance into the prairie country, in advance of the completion of the surveys over the whole continent, because it was tolerably clear in 1874, that three or four years, at least, would be required to complete our exploratory and instrumental surveys, and if we lay idle entirely during that entire period we would suffer by being so late in getting into the country which we hoped would gradually be filled up by an immigrant population. Mr. Fleming, in his report, pointed out that there was no hope of that railway ever paying its working expenses, until at least three millions of people were thrown into the territory west of Red River, and he pointed out also that if the road were built it would require eight millions of dollars a year to pay the cost of working it. Then, Sir, the Act of 1874 provided for the manner of giving out the contracts for this road. If we gave them out it provided that we should give $10,000 per mile in cash, and 20,000 acres of land as the work progressed. But we proposed, in submitting those contracts to Parliament for this portion to the west of Thunder Bay, to proceed to execute as much work as we could on that section until the surveys were all completed, and when the contracts were let for the whole distance across the continent, we should let the amount expended on these 228 be charged against the contractor as part of $10,000 in cash which he would be entitled to obtain for the construction per mile. I was not able at the time to anticipate with any accuracy what the cost would be of building this part of the road, but, on compiling a statement, we find that the cost is very nearly what I will now state. The 30 miles from Fort William to Shebandowan cost nearly $300,000. The contract for the next section of 86 miles, known as Contract 25, embraced the complete work of this 86 miles, and also the track laying and ballasting of No. 13, and was taken for

MR. MACKENZIE.

$1,037,000. Contract 14, that is 76 or 77 miles from Red River eastward, was taken at $420,000. In that part of the country some unexpected difficulties were encountered. Morasses had to be crossed, one in particular several miles in width, and seventeen or eighteen feet deep, having to be filled up in the centre. The excessive cost of doing this, and of draining these morasses, and building the road to the additional height required in the shape of embankments, will materially increase the cost of this portion, so that it will probably reach not far from $500,000. Contract No. 15, for 31½ miles next Rat Portage, was let for $1,600,000. The cost of the rails laid down on the road was about $1,385,000. The rolling stock at $2,000 per mile will amount to about $500,000; the amount required for right of way and allowance for buildings, about $120,000; the total reaching five and three-quarter millions for 228 miles. That is an average cost of somewhere about $25,000 per mile—not an excessive cost, when we consider the character of the country traversed. It is true that in one respect that country is comparatively easy. The cost of bridging on the Intercolonial reached an average of $8,721 per mile, while the cost of bridging upon the several contracts between Thunder Bay and Red River is as follows:—On contract No. 13, the principle bridge being that across the Kaministiquia, $2,342 per mile. The bridges on that section are all wooden. On contract No. 14, the 76 miles east of Red River, $829 per mile. On contract No. 15, 36 miles, $10,620 per mile, including much very heavy trestle work which cannot be called bridging. On No. 25, about 80 miles, $1,847 per mile. Now, I have asked the Engineer as to the comparative cost of iron and wooden structures for those bridges, and at the low price iron had reached at present he estimates that it would be somewhere between fifty and one hundred per cent. more than the wood, so that the cost of bridging per mile, if they were precisely of the same character as those on the Intercolonial Railway, would be trivial in comparison. The reason for this is obvious. The Intercolonial, in travers-ing the country, crosses its valleys instead of running parallel to rivers, and crosses streams which fall into the Bay of Chaleur and the Straits of Northumberland. The bridging there is consequently of the most excessive character, perhaps, to be encountered anywhere. But here, by following the natural course of the water, and taking some care and exercising prudence in examining the country before the road is located, such works are avoided. In the part west of Keewatin there are comparatively few rivers, and little bridging is required. The cost of the road, therefore, may fairly be estimated between Thunder Bay and Selkirk, taking what has to be done with what is done, as not probably to exceed $30,000 to $32,000 per mile. I give that, however, wholly as my own calculation, for which the engineers are in no way responsible. The average amount of the four contracts in progress is, as I have said, about $25,000, but the amount on one particular contract, the last one let, the 36½ miles west of Rat Portage, will average some $44,000 per mile without cost of rails, while on 70 to 80 miles east of that the work will be quite as heavy. Mr. Fleming's original estimate was nearly fifteen millions from Thunder Bay to Selkirk, and there is no doubt whatever that the ultimate cost will be considerably within his calculations. We may, therefore, fairly assume, if his calculations have turned out to be tolerably accurate, or somewhat in excess of realized facts in that somewhat difficult country which was so little known at the time he made his estimates, that they will not be largely exceeded in the country west of Red River. I have to say, in conclusion, that nothing has given myself and the Government more concern than the matters connected with the Pacific Railway have given. We are alive to this consideration; that it is of vast importance to the country that this road should be built as soon as the country is able to do it without imposing burdens upon the present ratepayers, which would be intolerable. But I do not think anything would justify the Government in imposing a serious taxation for the purpose of even accomplishing this.

On the other hand, it is tolerably evident that the wealth of the country will be much more rapidly increased if we are able to throw a large population into those hitherto deserted plains which contain so much land fit for habitation, and which have been wholly unproductive in the commercial interests of our country. No one, unless he has experienced the want of railways, can estimate the advantages which railways bestow. Those who lived in the western part of Ontario thirty or forty years ago, as some of us did, and remember the long journeys which had to be made in order to reach any place where trade could be done, alone can appreciate the immense advantages which railway communication has conferred on this country. Even on the Intercolonial Railway, although it is built on a route of which I did not then and do not now personally approve, which I believed to be a mistake at first, and which I believe now to have been a mistake—even that road is of the greatest possible advantage to this country in almost every sense, as a commercial road, as a national undertaking which might have to be used in times of danger, and as a road connecting together the people of all the Provinces and infusing a unity of feeling which cannot be over-estimated in considering what is essential to the growth of the nation and the establishment of a true national feeling. And so with regard to this western and more gigantic work—a work which cannot be estimated unless we have given some thought to it. Such is its magnitude—a road which is four times the length of the Grand Trunk from Montreal to Sarnia, which is five times the length of the road from Edinburgh to London, which traverses our whole territory—nothing can possibly exceed the importance that is to be attached to the building of such a gigantic work, either as regards the ultimate prosperity of the country or its bearing upon our several relations to each other in the united Provinces. But we determined, in passing the Railway Act of 1874, that we should strictly confine ourselves to the terms of the resolution which had been twice previously affirmed by Parliament: that in the construction of this road we should not consent to an increase of the taxation of the people for that particular purpose; because, however important that work may be, and none estimates its importance more highly than I do, it is not the only public work in this country. There are other works of magnitude which have to be attended to in a country like ours, where initial difficulties present themselves on every side, where new territories have to be opened almost daily, where new interests have created new wants, and where the revenues of the Local Governments and the revenues of the General Government are taxed more than sufficiently in order to keep pace with the requirements of the country. Under these circumstances we must beware how we venture on a policy of extreme adventure and extravagance, which might press too heavily on our commercial interests and our powers of sustaining taxation. I think, however, it is quite clear to everyone that we are bound to do something, and to do that something in the best possible way according to the light that we have. Now, the Government do not desire in any matter affecting the route to shield themselves, as I have been accused of doing sometimes, behind the opinions of the engineers of my Department; but it would be absurd to employ capable and scientific men, if a company of laymen, as regards engineering matters, should undertake to override their opinions and views, except where matters of public or national policy would naturally set aside all mere technical considerations, and confine us to a course with which engineers as engineers have nothing to do. I do not wish to throw the slightest responsibility upon those officers, except that which they must assume of advising on engineering questions. Whatever we do, we do it undoubtedly after mature consideration of the views presented by the engineers, which we cannot set aside; but it is a gratification for me to be able to say that every step almost that we have taken in this gigantic enterprise has been taken with the concurrence of the chief engineer of the undertaking. We have so seldom differed in our opinions, even in matters of policy, upon any course to be pursued in reference to this gigantic work, that I may fairly claim to have acted in entire harmony with his office throughout. In other words, the policy of the Government and the technical knowledge of the Engineer have so far chimed together so well that there has been no jarring, and, although at present some of our staff entertain opinions different from those entertained by the Chief Engineer, the Government must of necessity adhere to the policy which seems to be borne out by such facts as they have presented to us. Nothing more occurs to me at the moment as necessary to be said in this matter, although it may be necessary for me at a future stage of the debate to make some remarks in reply to any questions which may be raised, and may necessitate further observations on my part.

MR. MACKENZIE.

SUPPLY.

XII. PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS CHARGEABLE TO CAPITAL.

House then again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Railways.

79. Intercolonial.....$20,000

MR. MACKENZIE said that this was to meet expenditures which had to be incurred in connection with the closing of some of the contracts. They owed some contractors balances which the latter refused to accept, and some suits were at present pending for which they had to provide. This was simply to meet the cases unsettled.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Will it meet all the expenses of arbitration?

MR. MACKENZIE said he thought it would. Of course it depended upon the judgment of the Court. Duncan McDonald's case was still pending; all the others, he believed, were either withdrawn or had not been proceeded with. Mr. Murphy had a claim, but had not yet commenced the action; it was for $5,000 to $6,000; but he disputed the measurement and settlement with the engineer. Then there was a small sum due the Fairbairn Engineering Company, which had made a claim against the Government on account of delay and of the rise in prices of iron. The rise in prices, they of course, declined. The firm was now in liquidation. There might be a small claim due for delay, but that was at present pending. A number of thousands of dollars—$7,000 or $8,000—was still due, Mr. McDonald, who refused to accept any settlement: but they held a judgment against Mr. McDonald for non-insurance of a building rented from the Government, and this covered a portion of the amount due.

MR. LANGEVIN said there was the McGreevy case also pending.

MR. MACKENZIE: Yes; it has to come on for a hearing yet.

MR. LANGEVIN: I think that the hon gentlemen will see that there are other cases. Will this sum of $20,000 be sufficient during the year?

MR. MACKENZIE: We expect so.

Vote agreed to.

80. Intercolonial extension into Halifax $20,000

MR. MACKENZIE said that this vote was taken last year to meet the cost of moving the Imperial magazine necessary to enable them to get through the Government reservations in front of the Admiralty House; and they required a new magazine to be built of much larger proportions a mile or two out of town, with certain conditions that he considered altogether out of proportion to the value of what this Government had taken; and the question was at the present moment in dispute. This vote was to cover what they had to do.

MR. LANGEVIN: Is the extension completed and all the works?

MR. MACKENZIE: Yes; the wharf at Richmond may require strengthening to some extent, however, on the outside. It was built originally in large square cribs, and they were built upon a sloping rock; and the result was that, being detached from each other, they canted over seaward. It has had to be strained up and laid with stones, and connected together, and it is now in a tolerably safe condition. I refer to the old wharf.

Vote agreed to.

81. Intercolonial to deep water at St. John..... $100,000

MR. MACKENZIE: This is simply to defray the expenses of the contract with reference to Ballast wharf entered into 1½ years ago.

MR. LANGEVIN: In what condition is that work now?

MR. MACKENZIE said that it was progressing very satisfactorily. He was not able to lay his hand on the exact expenditure on this work at the present moment, but he thought it had been about $120,000. The contract altogether, he recollected, was for about $274,000. Nearly three years were given for its completion from the first, and it began, he thought, in the autumn of 1876. They had kept one part of the work in their own hands. The two large dredges they had could not work in any of their other harbours, owing to the ice in winter; and so they undertook to do the dredging at this point, and had kept these dredges at work during the last two years dredging out a site for the dock. The tide here rose about 30 feet, and although there was water enough at high water at the extreme end seaward of the Dock, it was dry at low water. They had taken the bottom out to a depth sufficient to give 26 feet of water at all stages of the tide. They had done this in the winter, and the contractors had followed with the wood-work as soon as they had the bottom ready, in this way the Government utilized their crews and their dredges when they could not be used elsewhere.

Vote agreed to.

83. Prince Edward Island Railway.. $49,009

MR. MACKENZIE said that this vote was for expenditure they were forced to make at Souris. The Island road terminated in a sand pit, and the station was built where it was totally inaccessible. It reached a point of the harbour where there was at no time more than ten feet of water. The large breakwater there was built on the other side of the harbour seaward, and it sheltered the harbour where they had the water deep enough for vessels drawing from 22 to 25 feet, and it was proposed to remove the station from this place. This had become a necessity. It was the most unsuitable place imaginable; and how the Island Government come to locate the station there was a mystery to every person. They proposed to make a detour around the town and reach the bay where there was deep water, and the estimate of the engineer of the road to accomplish this purpose was somewhere about $36,000, for the grading, bridging and other works of a permanent character, and the wharf inside the breakwater. The additional sum, of course, would be required for station duties, and purposes of that sort; $49,000 would cover the whole cost.

MR. MACKENZIE.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Will it be finished in a year?

MR. MACKENZIE: Yes, easily.

MR. MITCHELL: Who is the engineer?

MR. MACKENZIE: Mr. Cunningham. He has charge of the road; I visited the place myself and went over the Island, so that I am able to speak from my own personal observation of the whole matter. Last year, I examined into the matter carefully with the engineer, and into the necessity for it. The inhabitants of the town are very anxious that we should build it along the shores of the sea. They are formed of a sort of precipitate cliff of red sandstone, and to carry out that scheme would certainly involve the cost of from $50,000 to $60,000 more. We abandon about a quarter of a mile of the old road.

Vote agreed to.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

82. Pacific—Fort William to Sunshine Creek.....	$	5,500
do Sunshine Creek to English River		214,000
do Rat Portage to Cross Lake.....	1,036,000
do Cross Lake to Red River.....		52,500
do Telegraph Lines and Roadway...		164,700
do Fort Frances Lock.....		10,000
do Main Land British Columbia...		500,000
do Pembina Branch		550,000
do Spikes .....		20,000
			$2,549,700

MR. PLUMB said the House had heard with great interest the annual explanation of the First Minister in respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway scheme. He had no doubt the hon. gentleman had given as favourable a statement, as to the condition of that work, as could be produced from his side of the question. This was a time at which the history of the management of the Pacific Railway by the present Government might be very properly summed up. When they came into power, hon. gentlemen found a small expenditure for surveys along the line; and the First Minister had justly stated that not a very great deal was then known about the line which this road was to traverse. The prairie land which extended from Red River to the foot of the mountains was pretty well known, because it had been occupied by the Hudson Bay Company. That comprised a fourth of the whole line. The country north of Lake Superior, north of Georgian Bay and Lake Huron, and north, as well as south, of French River, was not so well understood. But they might call public attention to the fact that although that country was not at all understood, the Government, after they had passed the Pacific Railway Act by which they assumed the whole responsibility of the work, took authority to enter into a contract for the construction of a portion of the work which was not immediately pressing, and which did not seem indispensable, and inaugurated the scheme, of the proposed building of the Georgian Bay Branch. They did this in ignorance so stupendous that they assigned gradients to work which could not be found, and so enabled the contractor to give up the work and withdraw the amount he had deposited as security. As soon as the Government came into power, they entirely abandoned the plan which their predecessors had adopted and assumed responsibility for an entirely different scheme. They were told by the Finance Minister that he had found enormous obligations resting upon him, among which he counted that involved in the building of the Pacific Railway. The only commitment so far as he (Mr. Plumb) could judge, which the Government up to that time had made, was the expenditure of $30,000,000 which was to be extended over ten years, or longer, if in that time it involved additional taxation. The present Government, however, had adopted a scheme which had already involved the expenditure of almost half that amount without obtaining any adequate result, and which would involve besides a vast expenditure which no man could measure. The First Minister in one of his speeches during the last summer, made a most extraordinary statement. He said that in 1874, when the Bill was brought down by the Government for a change in the plan of building the Pacific Railway, no objection was taken, or at least no change was made in the Bill which he introduced. The following were his words:—

“When I introduced the present Pacific Railway Act it passed through the House absolutely without the alteration of a single word or syllable—without the addition of even a comma to its contents. Within the last two years that policy has been attacked with the utmost virulence. We are accused of adopting a different policy with regard to the Canada Pacific Railway from the one we adopted when we took office. Suppose we do, I am adopting the policy we are driven to from circumstances.”

If that meant anything, it meant to convey the impression that the minority of the House in 1874, did not object to the Pacific Railway scheme as introduced by the present Government. He (Mr. Plumb) remembered very well the circumstances under which that Bill passed the House at a very late hour under the pressure of the majority which was then, as it frequently was, unwilling to hear arguments. The majority was restive, and no reasonable discussion was tolerated at that time, and the Bill was driven through. That there were objections to it could be shown by the records. He believed a gentleman was now in the House who offered an amendment to it, which was rejected; and the statement of the Premier that no objection was taken, was not borne out by the facts. The scheme of the present Government, as the First Minister said, had varied according to circumstances. When the Bill was passed he believed the Government had no special plan in view. There was, without doubt, a division in its councils. There was a half-hearted policy which dictated the movements of the Government throughout. In the first place, there seemed to be a pressure under which the Government were compelled to take up certain portions of the road. Possibly to satisfy the urgent solicitation of those who stood behind them, and sought satisfaction in contracts. Probably there were other reasons which induced the Government to take up a scheme which had involved an enormous expenditure which had committed the country to an enormous outlay, and which up to this time had been virtually useless. Not one dollar which had been expended so far upon the Pacific Railway, was likely to be productive of increased good to the country. There was not a mile of the road anywhere that was in operation in any way as to further the interests of the country. Except the amount which had been expended in surveys—and he thought an enormous proportion of that had been thrown away and wasted—not one dollar of the vast sum which stood upon the books charged to that scheme had produced any available results, and they were now four years from the time when the responsibility fell upon the present Government. He could well understand the reluctance with which the First Minister brought down his annual statement, and his desire to put it off to the last moment as every one shirked an unpleasant duty. It was evident that every year the statement was one of additional failure, and of the inability, the incompetency, or the unwillingness of the Government to carry out in any way, which could be advantageous to the country, the great scheme which was entrusted to their hands. In the first instance, they were told that it was absolutely necessary to make an immediate contract for the building of the Georgian Bay Branch, and the subsidizing of the Canada Central Railway. There was so much haste, in fact, that the road was put under contract without a surveyor's instrument having been laid upon it, without the slightest knowledge on the part the Government of the line to be built, or whether the plans and specifications could be carried out. What had become of that? Why, after squandering $109,000, they were told that the contract for that road had been cancelled, and the sum deposited by the contractor as security had been returned. Of that amount $41,000 was for surveys, which were now practically useless, because a different line was to be adopted; and $68,000 had been paid for rails which had proved to be practically worthless—iron rails which had been bought at a higher price than steel rails could now be obtained, and a large portion of which had been wasted. Now, he understood the line was to go further north, and he did not quarrel with that, because it would take a much better route, and would go nearer to the point which Parliament had selected as the terminus of the road. The first idea, no doubt the proper one, was to build the road from Nepigon Bay west to Red River, or, at all events, to Rat Portage. If the road had taken the line from Nepigon, or the south shore of Lake Nepigon, it would have reached about 60 miles north of Fort William. There was, therefore, a waste of money in making the terminus at Kaministiquia. He knew the mouth of the river at Thunder Bay was perfectly accessible. The bay itself was intended by nature for a great outlet of commerce, and he could not understand how the season could be more severe there than on the Kaministiquia. The advantage of adopting that terminus would have been that the road would have terminated much further to the east. However, the Kaministiquia terminus was settled for the present. A large sum of money had been expended to extend the road from Kaministiquia to Port Savanne, the point from which they had been told there was to be a departure for the great water stretches. There was no doubt that the scheme which had been so strongly insisted on by the First Minister had been abandoned. They now heard nothing about it. A large amount of money had been expended, but the First Minister said nothing about it, and from his silence they might conclude that it had been abandoned, and that the money spent upon it had been utterly wasted. From Port Savanne it was supposed to be the policy of the Government to leave a gap of 170 miles of wilderness entirely open for many years, while the road was built from Red River eastward, and to touch at Rat Portage and there to remain. The argument that was brought forward for building two ends of a road that had no centre, and no usefulness at either end; was that it would connect with the Lac des Mille Lacs, and thence with Rainy Lake along Rainy River, and so through Lake of the Woods till it struck Rat Portage, and that this would be a great line for commerce. It was very extraordinary that a contract had been made for extending the road from Port Savanne, 35 miles westward to English River, for what purpose no one had yet been able to understand. It was not pretended that there was any traffic in that region or any inducement for settlement, or the slightest excuse for spending that money. The only excuse he could find was that there were too many steel rails on hand, and that the Government desired to get rid of some of the rusting rails which were piled on the banks of the Kaministiquia. He could understand why the Government did not propose to fill up the intervening gap, why it was not desirable, at present, to send the traffic that way. It would interfere with the profits of some companies that were sending traffic by Red River, and with certain profitable contracts for the carriage of steel rails and other matters. As long as the intermediate link was not finished there would be high prices charged for transportation down the Red River. He believed great pressure would be constantly exercised to keep that gap open and to prevent the expenditure of that money which was necessary to complete the link between English River and Rat Portage. When that link and the Pembina Branch were completed more than half the amount proposed by the late Government to be expended for the entire subsidy to the entire line would have been paid, while increasing deficits were being piled up every year. The First Minister had said that the great object of the Government was to draw population into the North-West. It was certain that a railway could not be successful unless the population of the North-West was sufficient to furnish a traffic; but, on the other hand, the country could not be built up until it had railway communication. The railway must precede and not follow population. There was no greater colonizer or emigration agent than a railway. He believed that any line could be built across the prairies for less than $20,000 a mile, excepting the difficult portions of the road. What had been done by the present Government to obtain emigration? Was there any line through Canada by which emigrants could get into the North-West? The building of the Pembina Branch would be a step in the right direction. But the Opposition when in power had proposed the Pembina Branch as a part of the great system. They did not intend to have the country made subservient to a line of communication through another country. As if it were the determination of the Government to do everything in their power to throttle this great scheme, they had not only postponed it and avoided opening it where it would be an advantage to the public, but they had adopted a scheme which if ratified would postpone the building of the road. He believed the system of colonization roads would draw from the country the best part of the sustenance which should go to the main line. Hon. gentleman said the amount devoted to the land grant was a very small part of the public domain. He (Mr. Plumb) acknowledged that; but that was not the point. It was not that it would exhaust the public land but that it would withdraw from the country that which ought to go to sustain the road; the traffic which ought to go to the Pacific Railway would be taken and carried to these roads. No doubt there was great force in what had been urged upon this House and the country in regard to the adoption of the present line which ran through the narrows of Lake Manitoba and took a northerly direction from Selkirk, running directly out of the range of the settlement of the country. There was no doubt it had been greatly disappointing to the settlers of Manitoba that the road had been turned in that direction; the Government had acted contrary to the interests of the pioneers of Manitoba in locating this line far beyond their reach. Even though it might be a few miles longer, say twenty-four to fifty miles longer, at the rate which it cost to run a road over that prairie country, it would be a matter of not over a million dollars, which it would be interests of the Government to expend and which would be repaid them by the rapid settlement and increase of business in the country. It was still open to the Government to consider whether it would not be to their advantage before laying down the line of road which from the evidence of the engineers would run through a country where a railway ought not to be built if any other line could be found, to throw the line further south and deflect in such a way as to pass through the fertile portions of the country. Settlements must be formed, and Manitoba westwards must be the nucleus from which other settlements would necessarily go. After four or five years consideration, there still seemed to be the same kind of doubt as to the continuance of the line in the west. They had been told that a line had been examined by the Peace River and Pine River Passes and arguments were used in favour of changing the line after it went a distance towards the mountains. Whether that would be done or not it was impossible to say. It was evident there was now no intention of absolutely deciding upon the line of road, but perhaps this was not necessary under the present condition of affairs, the road not being pushed fast enough to make it of consequence whether one or another route was adopted for many years to come. From all the evidence that could be gathered from the reports of the engineers, from what had been stated by the hon. the First Minister and others acquainted with the subject, it was established that a great and unprecedented waste had taken place in every direction in regard to the management of the affair. Preeminently over all, with the exception, perhaps, of the steel rails, stood the telegraph contract, which was forced upon the House at the early part of the present Administration. That telegraph line was not situated on the line of the railway all through. Wherever it was not on the line it might as well not exist. It was absurd to say that if it was within even a mile of the railway it would be of any practical use. The Opposition remonstrated with the Government when the telegraph line was proposed; they asked, at least, to have it put on record that they objected to that line, that no telegraph line should be built until the line of the road was located. They were then laughed at, but nobody could now say that they were not right in their predictions. Over a million dollars had been expended on that line, the whole of which had practically been wasted. As far as the railway line was concerned, after it entered the Rocky Mountain passes, and had passed over the intervening height of land, he had nothing to say. The termination of the road there was one, of course, full of engineering difficulties. He could appreciate the trouble which it had cost and would cost the Government to decide on the line. The responsibility rested with them, and whatever conclusion they came to they would have to settle with British Columbia. Whenever the discussion came up there was always a charge made against the right hon. member for Kingston and his colleagues, that they had entered into a ridiculous, corrupt, extravagant, dissolute, nay, even, some said, infamous bargain with British Columbia to finish that road in ten years. He (Mr. Plumb) ventured to say that, at the time that contract was entered into, there was nothing apparently more reasonable than to undertake to build a line of road like that in ten years. It was well known that one of the greatest undertakings ever carried out on the face of the earth, in respect to railway engineering, was finished within six years by private individuals, not by the Dominion, the great power of this Government, backed as it was, to a certain extent, by the Home Government, but by a few private individuals. It was not extraordinary, then, that this Government, in view of the successful completion of the Pacific Central and Union Pacific Railway, should have undertaken to build a road in ten years from the Atlantic to the Pacific, or, at least, from the River St. Lawrence to the Pacific Ocean. It was a perfectly reasonable undertaking in view of the successful completion of that gigantic work. Those who charged the late Government with undertaking to build the Canadian Pacific in ten years now kept in the background. In that arrangement there was always the condition that it should be built in such a way as not to increase the burden of taxation. That alone showed the wisdom of the policy of the right hon. member for Kingston and his late colleagues. It showed they had a due regard to the interests of the people, that they were not recklessly squandering the public money, and it must be remembered that Canada was then at the flood tide of prosperity, the public revenue was constantly increasing, and millions of dollars were being placed in public works which might properly have been used for the current expenditure; surpluses were being placed to capital account in permanent works. By the statement of the Finance Minister, it was shown that ten millions had been expended in addition to the large sum put aside for the sinking fund. It did not become the present Government, in view of the manner in which they assumed the work, to attempt to throw any responsibilities upon their predecessors, except the responsibility of having incurred the work. The present Government very wisely avoided taking the responsibility of constructing the road. What if the road was unknown? That hazard was taken in regard to the Union Pacific; nobody pretended that engineers had plodded out the road over which the Pacific ran. The Union Pacific and the Central Pacific ran each on a different line, the one considerably further north than the other, but they were brought together at a certain point. Therefore, it was unfair on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to constantly charge the Opposition with having made a reckless bargain, with having recklessly pledged the public faith to carry out an enterprise which would involve an expenditure of 100 to 150 million dollars. What the late Government did in that regard was eminently justified, was wise, prudent and entirely in accord with the experience of that time, with what they had seen carried out under their own observation, in view of the successful termination of the great enterprise of carrying the road from San Francisco to the Mississippi. Having said so much with regard to the original policy of plotting the Pacific Railway, he wished to state emphatically that there was now in the Public Accounts an expenditure, in regard to that scheme, amounting to one-half the cash subsidy proposed by the late Government for the whole scheme. The whole amount of work done consisted of a succession of failures; the carrying out of the work, unfortunately, he did not say designedly, but by a series of misfortunes, involved a waste, unparalleled in the history of any expenditure of public money in the whole of Canada. The Government, having settled upon Thunder Bay as the contemplated termination of the Pacific Railway, decided that the point at which the road should terminate should be the River Kaministiquia, a small stream at the north-west side of the Bay coming down from the mountains, a very rapid torrent, and subject, at its mouth, to all the easterly and south-easterly winds that sweep across the Bay, and subject to being filled up by the washing of the sand. He would not discuss the merits of the Kaministiquia Harbour which had been praised by various masters of vessels, but who, upon cross examination, were found to be in the employment of gentlemen, strong supporters of the Government, and who held large contracts. The hon. the First Minister had said that his idea was that, having selected the Kaministiquia, the terminus of the road should be at a point near the Bay. By looking at the map, it would be found that there was a very corkscrew-looking current there through which it would be impossible to carry vessels, and that it was several miles from the mouth of the river and the present terminus. He did not think its position could have been fairly understood; it could not have been considered practicable to have that place as the terminus of the road on the Kaministiquia. Mr. Sandford Fleming, in his evidence given before the Committee last year, was asked if he selected the terminus upon the Kaministiquia, to which he replied, "I did." He (Mr. Plumb) had produced that evidence before the Committee of Public Accounts, in support of a statement he had made, and, according to the account given by a voracious journal who gave to everything a colour of his own, to be greeted with cheers and laughter. However, the laugh was turned on the other side when on turning a few pages further of the evidence, Mr. Fleming was asked, "Did you select the Fort William town plot as the terminus of the Pacific Railway?" To which the answer was: "No, the Government selected it." Mr. Fleming then went on to say that after the Government had selected the Fort William town plot as the terminus, he laid out the line of the road and took in the town plot. He (Mr. Plumb) had examined that line from the plan which had been made and found that the town plot of Fort William was a square piece of ground laid out in the wilderness containing a certain number of acres and that on the north of it was a small addition called the new town of Neebing. The line of the road, starting from a bend ten or twelve miles above, deflected considerably towards the west in order to take in the whole of the front lots of the town plot of Fort William; when it arrived at its terminus it was within a very short distance of the lower line of the town plot. It had taken in the whole of the town plot, but went very near a farm which lay just below and which offered equal advantages for railway purposes. One would suppose, on looking at the map, that the town plot of Fort William did not offer as great advantages for the terminus as the property just below it, the front of which was somewhat to the mouth of the river. It was nearer the river, and from a common point—ten or twelve miles above was no further than to the terminus which ran through the town plot. This property below could have been bought for a very small sum, some $75 per acre, and the amount which the Government required was about 100 acres, that would equal $7,500, for which amount the Government would have had as good a terminus upon the river, in as good if not a better position than the one selected. The most mysterious part of the whole business was that the road was thrown at this line to run along the whole front of the town plot. According to the land which the Government took, in running through that town plot, $7,000 had been paid indirectly to the owners for costs and to the valuers connected with it; how much more had since been paid he was unable to say. He had asked in the early part of the Session for a return of the amount paid on this item. He had asked the Government to bring down a statement, and was somewhat surprised, when he was informed by the First Minister, the other day, that the accounts and papers which had been brought before the Public Accounts Committee, and which were only a part of the papers called for, were all that would be produced. Those papers were the accounts of Mr. B. J. Brown, who was the Government Solicitor, and as some were papers connected with the valuation of the lands, Mr. Brown was appointed Solicitor for the Government; but it did not appear, from any record, that he had been instructed to instruct the valuers in respect to their duties. From the record in his own accounts, he was interested in those lands. There was an item in the account, which he said: "Having been instructed by the Government to hand over the papers, in respect to the Kaministiquia lands, or town of Fort William, in which I am interested, to Mr. Fenton, of Toronto, I did so and so." There was an entry in his accounts, showing he had instructions, which proved he had personal interest in the lands which he was sent out to value. It seemed to him that, in a matter of this kind, after the Government discovered that they were in the hands of a set of speculators who had laid out a town plot, almost, he might say, for the purpose of catching the Government and extorting money for the property that was perfectly valueless, if it had not been for the terminus of the road, they should certainly have sent somebody there who was not interested in this land, and who would have seen that the rights of the Government were protected. He was not aware that any instructions were given by the Solicitor, on the part of the Government, in order to protect the Government from the charges made for this land. He believed that there was a law under which, with regard to the expropriation of land for the Government, the enhanced value given to this land by the Government improvements could not be considered; and under which they had a right to assess the increased value of the land left, and to consider it in the award. He might be mistaken, but this was his construction of the Statute. They were not told by the Government that this Solicitor was instructed to apply this Act, but the valuers, he thought, had given in their evidence that they applied it, and that under it they obtained the grant of 600 acres. They paid from $700 to $800 an acre for land on the Kaministiquia River, in a wilderness; for lots which were merely laid out on paper, where no improvements had taken place, and on a river where a town could never have possibly grown up, except under the circumstances which stimulated the laying out and the settlement of the place. After the Government—and certainly they must have discovered it—discovered before it was too late—that this property was in the hands of speculators, who had taken it up and laid out town plots; they ought to have refused to accept the valuation made. No set of contractors carrying on their personal business would have ever thought of buying up or building a road if they would thus have placed themselves in the power of a lot of speculators who had laid out a town plot on paper, and put it down as costing $6,000 or $7,000 instead of $70 or $80. No set of private men would ever have conducted their affairs as the Government had done under these circumstances. He charged it openly that nobody who consented to this transaction acted in the interests of the Government. It could not be so. There was no reason that he could see or that was made manifest, why this location should have been persisted in after the circumstances mentioned were known; and it was understood that after the line was established a building was thrown up by the speculators on their land and sold to the Government, which could not possibly be used for any other purpose. The thing was almost incredible. They had been laughed at in the newspapers for calling public attention to this matter, and jeered at for speaking of the Neebing hotel; but he would tell the hon. gentleman that this was a very serious matter, and one regarding which the Government would find out how very difficult it was to escape from the just condemnation of the public. He had been accused of making charges outside which he dare not repeat in the House. The First Minister had been good enough to read him a lecture in the Public Accounts Committee, and to say that he (Mr. Plumb) had conducted himself as no hon. man would regarding this matter. He did not hesitate to state here exactly what he had stated on public platforms, in this relation. He was never afraid to say to the face of any man what he would say anywhere else; and it was unfair in the First Minister, holding the position he did, to attempt to put down an independent private member in the honest discharge of his duty. This was not the only time that the hon. gentleman had attacked him in this House. The hon. gentleman, when he (Mr. Plumb) had risen in the legitimate discharge of his duty, had deliberately let loose his band against him, and attempted to bawl him down. The hon. gentleman said that on the day of the long debate that he had taken up one quarter of the time of the House; if so it was in the legitimate discharge of his duty; but this statement was one of the pleasant exaggerations which the hon. gentleman habitually indulged in. The hon. gentleman had singled him out for his displeasure, though he had always treated the hon. gentleman with the utmost courtesy. He had, however, received very scanty courtesy in return. He had endeavoured to confine himself within the strict limits of parliamentary criticism, and had always documents to produce in support of his statements. Any contractor who managed their affairs as the Government did this Kaministiquia affair would fast go to ruin. The whole matter had been treated with a kind of disingenuousness which could not be accounted for except on the principle which was perfectly understood to be a job that could not be excused or glossed over. With regard to the whole system by which Western matters were carried out, they had a little knowledge with respect to the transaction of one of the purveyors for the North-West. They had thus seen something of the loose manner in which public money was expended. There was an endeavour made to force them to formulate unspecified charges against one of these surveyors; but they declined to do so, as they had every reason to believe that there was irregularity in the manner in which the purchases for the Government were made in the North-West. They had an examination made, but though they failed to have their principal witness brought before them, they showed, by evidence, that their suspicions were justly founded; and he very much mistook the character of the First Minister, and the manner in which the hon. gentleman viewed this evidence, if what they had done did not bring about a change in the system, for there was no doubt that the contract system, the peculiar system under which they were told that the Government made all their dealings, and the much-vaunted system of the First Minister, had been utterly set aside in dealings in the North-West, not to say anything worse. The gentleman who had been employed there by the Government, had been in the habit of dealing personally with the men who were public contractors, and this in a way which was not at all free from suspicion. The very condition in which this gentleman was regarding these dealings rendered him powerless to look out, as he ought to have done, for the public interests; he habitually made bargains and contracts for the Government that he would not have made for himself, and if the money had come out of his own pocket. This was the testimony which they had brought out; and not only so, but there was every reason to suppose that the same loose system prevailed everywhere; and this was the loudly-vaunted Reform system of a Reform Government which came into power to change everything for the better, and to set aside the loose, corrupt and wanton extravagance of their corrupt and profligate predecessors. He trusted that the great scheme of building the Pacific Railway would be carried out, and that the hon. gentlemen from British Columbia would yet find that there would be some Government in power which would keep faith with that Province, and that in some efficient hands this great scheme would be carried to completion. He hoped that the great public domain—the capital and the gold, out of which this road was to be constructed—would yet be utilised for this purpose, and that the time would come speedily when the waste of these lands in every direction would be prevented; when some great scheme of immigration would be formed by which the teeming North-West with its fertility would be brought to bear, and sustain a large population. They could not see, from anything that had been before them in the four years in which this project had been in the hands of the present Government, any hope for the future, as long as this matter rested with them; and he could only express the earnest hope that the time was not far distant when other and more competent hands would take this great scheme in their charge, and carry it out to a successful completion.

MR. PLUMB.

MR. PLUMB.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said it was rather extraordinary to vote two and a half millions in one sum. He saw that for $250,000, with relation to the Intercolonial, there were three separate items. This was not according to practice.

MR. PLUMB.

MR. MACKENZIE said he quite agreed with the right hon. gentleman. He did not know who prepared the vote in this way. The items were sent over, in the usual way, to the financial office. They would take an informal vote on each item, and then afterwards the whole vote.

82	Pacific—Fort William to Sunshine Creek.....	$ 5,500 00 do Sunshine Creek to English River.....	214,000 00
	do Rat Portage to Cross
	Lake.....	1,033,000 00
	do Cross Lake to Red River.....	52,500 00
	do Telegraph Lines and
	Roadway.....	164,700 00
do Fort Frances Lock....	10,000 00
do Main Land British Columbia.....	500,000 00
do Pembina Branch.....	550,000 00
do Spikes.....	20,000 00
		$2,549,700 00

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Regarding the first vote, is the contract about completed?

MR. MACKENZIE: This is for the balance due on the contract.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Is it finished?

MR. MACKENZIE: Yes; long ago. The hon. gentleman will perhaps remember that this is for building 30 miles. It was originally 45, but a change of the route lessening the distance by 15 miles was made. The price was low, and the contractors took as little work as they could.

MR. LANGEVIN said he was very much pleased to hear the hon. the First Minister, before recess, renew the statement that he considered that it was a binding obligation on the Government to build the Pacific Railway. There was a time when it was the custom—he did not, perhaps, on the part of the hon. gentleman, but amongst some of his followers, especially in the Province of Quebec—to say that the Conservatives were in favour of building this road, but that they favoured another scheme. This was the great cry of these gentlemen, who said that they would not consent to the building of this railway; it was a scheme that could not be executed, and, therefore, should be opposed; but hon. gentlemen opposite soon found, after they assumed the responsibilities of office, and became members of a Government, that they must change their policy, and assume the railway policy of their predecessors, and the obligations contracted by them; and, as the hon. the First Minister truly said, these solemn treaty obligations should be fulfilled. True, the hon. gentleman said that these obligations were contracted by the previous Government. No information had been obtained about the route. When British Columbia came over, through its delegates, to confederate with us, the route between the Pacific Province and Old Canada was not known. The intervening country, for the most part, was unknown; but they knew the land was there; but, as long as this territory belonged to Canada, they knew that they could build a road through it; and they bound themselves, with the consent of Parliament, to build the Pacific Railway; and, to use the excellent and very expressive words of the First Minister, it was the far-seeing eye of a statesman that had seen that this scheme was proper and great, and one by which they would settle the future of this great country, this great Dominion of ours, binding together the different Provinces from the east to the west, and forming an iron bond which would make of us a great and prosperous country. The hon. gentleman stated, and truly said, that before he and his colleagues came into office this enterprise had been fairly entered upon. The late Government had caused large surveying parties to be sent into the field on this and on the other side of the Rocky Mountains; and these parties had been working three years when they went out of office. In 1871, only $30,000 was expended on this service, and for this reason: they thought that as British Columbia was coming into this Dominion, only on the 1st or 4th of July, 1871, they should not put their surveying parties into the field until that event had taken place, and the season being very short that year, only this sum was expended, but in 1872, as many surveying parties as could be usefully employed were sent out, and $489,000 were spent in surveying a portion of the line, and in 1873, $561,000 were so expended; so that, before they went out of office, about $1,200,000 were spent out of the $3,411,000 mentioned by the hon. gentleman as having been expended on this service up to the 30th June, 1877, so the hon. gentleman was perfectly right when he said that the late Government had fairly undertaken the enterprise before they went out of office. They had them at work for two and a half years. The hon. gentleman also correctly admitted that these surveys required not two and a half years, but seven years to complete, in order that the whole line might be explored and finally located. The hon. gentleman had stated that when he and his colleagues came into office, they thought these binding and solemn obligations required modification by the Government of Canada, in conjunction with and with the consent of British Columbia. Negotiations took place; and the hon. gentleman said that the terms were modified, and that British Columbia consented, through the instrumentality and the good offices of Lord Carnarvon, to such modification in this way:—that this Government should build the line between Victoria and Nanaimo, and should expend on the main line on the mainland, two millions per annum until the road would be completed. The hon. gentleman added that in consequence of this new arrangement and new binding and solemn treaty obligation, he and his colleagues brought down to the House a Bill to obtain the necessary means and authority to build the railway from Victoria to Nanaimo. This Bill passed through this House by a large majority, but in the Senate it was defeated. And how? It was a matter of history that it was defeated, by friends of the hon. gentleman—friends, whose support to the measure, he (Mr. Langevin) had no doubt that the hon. gentleman could have secured, if the same energy had then and there been shown to obtain a majority that was exhibited here when the hon. gentleman wished to have a measure passed; and then this binding and solemn treaty obligation with British Columbia would have been fulfilled. But no. That energy was not employed, and the result was that the Bill was thrown out by the votes of two of the hon. gentleman's friends, and as the hon. gentleman—

MR. LANGEVIN.

AN HON. MEMBER: Ah, ah.

MR. LANGEVIN said he did not know what an hon. gentleman meant by his "ah, ah's;" but all the hon. gentleman's ah, ah's would not change the facts. These were now historical. One of these friends of the hon. gentleman had just entered the Senate. The Session following, the hon. gentleman did not reintroduce that Bill in this House in order to have it passed through the Upper House. True, the hon. gentleman then tried to obtain leave to take advantage of the clause in the Constitutional Act which empowered the placing of six new members in the Senate, but permission was refused. There was no dead-lock between the two Houses. The Senate had a right to do what it did, though he (Mr. Langevin) really believed that the Bill should have been adopted, and it would have been the greatest wrong that could have been perpetrated towards the Upper House, if the Government had obtained the power and authority to enforce this clause of the Constitution, which was provided to be used only in case of a dead-lock. The hon. gentleman did not reintroduce the Bill, and why? Because there was a power behind the throne and behind the hon. gentleman. The hon. member for South Bruce had opposed this measure, and had shown that he controlled or affected votes by his eloquence or persuasive way of presenting matters to the House. The hon. the Minister of the Interior had voted with this hon. gentleman, and what was the result? The hon. member for South Bruce entered the Cabinet and would not allow it; and this was the reason why the interests of British Columbia were sacrificed on this occasion. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie) said that afterwards the surveys were continued, and the statement stated that in 1874, $310,000 were expended; in 1875, $474,000; and in 1876, $791,000; and in 1877, $754,000; so that during these seven years $3,411,000 were paid out for the surveys, making an average of about $13,000 a mile. He supposed that there had been an expenditure, since the 1st of last July, which of course the hon. gentleman said he could not give.

MR. MACKENZIE: The vote was $230,000.

MR. LANGEVIN said supposing $600,000 were expended, this would bring the total expenditure up to $3,600,000, and he believed the hon. gentleman would find that Mr. Fleming's estimate in February, 1873, of the cost of the Pacific Railway was $100,000,000. If that sum was correct, the surveys would cost a little over 3½ per cent. He believed that in great undertakings of that kind 3½ per cent. was not too much, and he believed the First Minister would admit that the cost of surveys might often go to 5 per cent. without being considered excessive. There was no doubt that the hon. gentleman or the engineers thought that Nipigon Bay was the point which should be selected for the branch line which touched the waters of Lake Superior. He had mentioned reasons why Thunder Bay was preferable to Nipigon Bay. He (Mr. Langevin) would admit that the late Government had ordered a survey from Thunder Bay westward. They wanted all the information possible. He did not remember how far his colleagues had gone into the matter, but he believed that it was considered that Nipigon Bay was preferable to Thunder Bay. The reason being that Nipigon Bay was on the main line of the Pacific Railway, and that thus an expensive branch would be avoided. He regretted that in the long speech of the First Minister, one which, no doubt, had cost him a great deal of labour, and in which he had given a great deal of information to the House, one expression had fallen from his lips which, he thought, he would regret when perfectly master of himself. He referred to the use of the word "foolish," as to the pretension, as he called it, to finish the road in ten years. He might have said that the pretension was exaggerated; that it was not based upon proper facts; but he had no right to call it a foolish pretension. The late Government had adopted the Tête Jaune Cache after full consideration, and with the surveys of the engineers to go upon. He took this opportunity of saying that he had never found an officer more assiduous or more able than the Chief Engineer of the Pacific Railway. He had always shown himself a most able officer, and he was glad he had been kept at the head of the Department, in order that he might, he hoped, complete this great work. He had been the Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway, which was a great credit and honour to him, and he hoped he would live long enough to see the Pacific Railway completed. He had able assistants; the acting Chief Engineer was a most able officer, who had always shown himself to be perfectly au fait, and he hoped he also might be long spared in connection with this great work. He (Mr. Langevin) did not regret the adoption of that pass. It was the proper pass at that time. He was not called upon to decide whether it was so now; other passes had since been discovered. The Pine River Pass was considered a very good one; but he understood from this report of the Chief Engineer that additional surveys would be required before it should be selected. It was not for him to say whether these surveys should be made or not. Hon. gentlemen opposite had the responsibilities of office, and it was for them to decide whether the information they had was sufficient, and whether they should decide upon the line now or not. It was true, as the hon. gentleman had stated, that the late Government held that Esquimault should be the terminus of the Pacific Railway. By all the information they then had, they considered that the proper terminus. Whether the line should go by the Fraser River, by Bute Inlet or Frederick Arm, or Alberni, or Barclay Sound or down to Esquimault, they were not in a position to decide. The surveys were not completed, and had only been going on for two and a half years. Since that, four and a half years had elapsed, and to-day the hon. gentleman said that the Government did not feel themselves bound by the Order-in-Council in reference to Esquimault. That did not alter the position of the late Government. It did not say whether they were wrong or right; but it simply showed that this Government had a different policy from their predecessors. The selection of Esquimault as the harbour did not bind the late Government to any particular route. In regard to the course of the railway in Manitoba, he believed the reports showed that the country, through which it was to run, north of Lake Manitoba, was swampy, and that it would cost a large sum of money to construct it there. That country had been traversed by the engineers only in the winter; whenever they had passed through in summer they had not gone over that portion of the line, but had gone on the lake in canoes. They, therefore, could not judge of the quality of the land; but he understood that a large proportion of the route of the railway was below Lake Manitoba, and, therefore, that the pretension that the land could be drained into the Lake could not be sustained. The hon. gentleman had passed a high eulogy on the Peace River country, and he (Mr. Langevin) believed he was perfectly right. But in order to meet the observations of the acting Chief Engineer (Mr. Marcus Smith) who seemed to be very favourable to the Pine River Pass and Peace River country, the hon. gentleman said that branch railways might be projected from the neighbourhood of Edmonton into the Peace River or Pine River country. There was no doubt about that; but these railways would, of course, cost a large sum of money, and the hon. gentleman must not bring the length of the road by the Pine River Pass against that of the route proposed to be adopted, because the branch railway should enter into the account.

MR. MACKENZIE: I do not propose to build branch lines.

MR. LANGEVIN: The hon. gentleman said they could be built afterwards.

MR. MACKENZIE: Built by the people who went there.

MR. LANGEVIN.

MR. LANGEVIN said he did not think the hon. gentleman would expect the settlers to build these branches, if they could judge of his policy by the Bill of the Minister of the Interior under which it was proposed to build thousands of miles of railway at $10,000 a mile.

MR. MACKENZIE: There is nothing of the kind in the Bill.

MR. LANGEVIN said that by that Bill the hon. gentleman proposed to build colonization railways at the rate of $10,000 a mile, and that at a time when he said we had not enough money to build the main line of the Pacific Railway. He requested the First Minister to repeat the general gradients on the British Columbia routes.

MR. MACKENZIE said that on the Burrard Inlet route there were 185 miles of what might be called level road, against 137 miles on the Bute Inlet route. There was no grade on the Lower Fraser route higher than 1 to the 100; while on the Bute Inlet route there were a little over 21 miles above that, and 11 or 12 miles 2 feet to the 100.

MR. LANGEVIN: Would the hon. gentleman give me the highest grade, and the distance of that highest grade on these two routes.

MR. MACKENZIE said that on the Bute Inlet route the highest grade is from 175 to 2; and on about 10 or 11 miles it was about 2 feet to the mile. There was no grade on the Fraser route more than 1 per cent.

MR. LANGEVIN: Is that east to west or west to east?

MR. MACKENZIE: That is going east. Going west there is no grade on either of them higher than 1 foot to the mile. There are 27 of 1 foot to the mile going west on the Burrard Inlet, and 52 going west on the Bute Inlet route.

MR. LANGEVIN said the grades should be as low as possible; of course, putting them low would necessitate a larger expenditure. But, with a reasonable expenditure, it was better to have low grades than high grades, because, if the grades were low, the road would be for all time, and its maintenance must be smaller than over high grades. If it were only for a short distance, the speed of the engines which had come a long distance would overcome that short distance with a higher grade; but, if it was a long distance it would be quite different, and it would require a stronger engine, as on the Union Pacific in the United States. A stationary engine was required in order to carry over the Rocky Mountains trains up those hollows; therefore, it increased very largely the daily expenses of working the railway. It was very important, as the Chief Engineer had determined the grade from east to west, as far as the Rocky Mountains, 52, from west to east 22, that that gradient should be maintained. If on the route selected there should be a higher gradient than that, which must be the case by what the hon. gentleman had stated, he (Mr. Langevin) hoped it would be for a short distance, so that it might be easily overcome, or, if it could be at the same place, or a very short distance from it, it might be overcome by one engine being placed there, and the efficiency of the route would not be impaired by having that higher gradient than on the upper portion of the line. The hon. gentleman said he had been able to adhere to that grade as fixed by the Chief Engineer up to now, and he still hoped that rule would be followed up to the Rocky Mountains. He (Mr. Langevin) hoped the hon. gentleman would adhere to that. There had been an attempt on section 15 to change that road from 25 feet to 40 feet, which would impair its efficiency. It was better to spend a little more money now on capital and not create a large annual expenditure. The interest of the additional expenditure to keep the grade low would be slight in comparison with the perfection obtained; the line would be complete in all respects and bear comparison with any line in the world. The hon. gentleman stated that according to the reports of the Chief Engineer, the acting Chief Engineer and other officers, there were three routes to be considered, Nos. 8, 6 and 2; the Dean Inlet route for $29,000,000 through the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific, the Bute Inlet route, cost $33,000,000, and the Burrard Inlet route, $35,000,000. The hon. gentleman after explaining these three routes finished by saying that the Government had not yet decided which one to adopt though they were favourable to the Burrard Inlet route. He and his colleagues were inclined towards this route, but had not made up their minds to decide on it. If the Minister of Public Works and his colleagues had not been able to make up their minds—

MR. MACKENZIE: I did not say we had not been able to make up our minds. I said we had come to no formal decision, but it was tolerably clear the considerations I had given were of such a character that they could not be passed over.

MR. LANGEVIN: The hon. gentleman not having come to a formal decision about this matter it cannot be surprising that I, not having all the information possessed by the hon. gentleman, nor the opportunities he has had to ascertain the facts, am not able to pronounce in favour of one line.

MR. MACKENZIE: I may say this much. I intended to discuss the matter in Parliament, Parliament being sitting. Although the Government had the power, and it was their duty, to decide on the route, I thought it would be an act of courtesy to Parliament that I should listen carefully to whatever hon. members had to say in favour of either route; although from the information we have ourselves, and the facts which I have mentioned, there seems but little doubt as to what our course ought to be.

MR. LANGEVIN said he had taken this note, that the Government had not fully decided which line to adopt. He took the explanation which might better convey the idea of the hon. gentleman. On this question the hon. gentleman wished to convey to the House an idea of what the railway might, cost and, according to his statement, the 2,208 miles were likely to cost fifty-five millions, or $25,000 per mile.

MR. MACKENZIE: No.

MR. LANGEVIN: I think I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the line would cost $25,000 per mile.

MR. MACKENZIE: Certainly not.

MR. LANGEVIN: I understood him to say that there were portions of the road which would cost $40,000 to $45,000 per mile.

MR. MACKENZIE: We mean that section 15,36½ miles, will cost $1,600,000, to which has to be added the cost of rails, which amounts roughly to 90 tons per mile, or something over $6,000 per mile additional; so that 36 miles of very heavy work will cost about $50,000 per mi.e.

MR. LANGEVIN said he wished this to be well understood, because the hon. gentleman last year spoke of the few miles of railway that were under contract, which was the easiest portion of the line, the Pembina Branch, and gave the cost of that portion of the road to show how cheaply it could be built. That went through the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite and their friends said that this Government were building a railway equal to the Intercolonial for half its cost, and that the whole Pacific Railway would be completed under their able management at hardly more than half or two-thirds the cost of the Intercolonial. He was glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that that was not the case.

MR. MACKENZIE: I did not say that.

MR. LANGEVIN said he did not say the hon. gentleman said that. But the hon. gentleman was not alone in his party. He had a great many friends, and those friends had stated so. The press, which had supported him and his friends out of Parliament, had stated that the cost of the Pembina branch was so low that it showed what the cost of the Pacific Railway would be.

MR. MACKENZIE: That was quite right.

MR. LANGEVIN said the Pembina branch was a very easy railway to build; it ran through a very level country. But that was not the construction of the country between Lake Superior and the Pacific Ocean, which was very rough. The hon. gentleman had admitted that the portion of the railway under contract, or built already, including that Pembina branch, had cost $5,750,000 for the 228 miles, or $25,000 per mile. He admitted now that a portion of No. 15, was costing at least $50,000 per mile, and that many other sections would cost over that amount.

MR. MACKENZIE: The hon. gentleman has really not presented what I stated at all. I stated that including rolling stock, the whole 228 miles would be built at $25,000 per mile, just about half what the Intercolonial cost.

MR. LANGENIN: The hon. gentleman stated that railway would be built, completely equipped, for $25,000 per mile. But the largest portion built for that amount was the most easy line of the whole, and, therefore, the cost of that could not be compared with the cost of the remainder. It might suit the hon. gentleman to say: "I will take so many miles from Fort Garry, Winnipeg, through the prairie, and the cost of that will be a criterion by which I will judge of the cost of the whole railway." The hon. gentleman himself admitted that here was a rough portion, from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg, that cost $50,000 per mile. He did not find fault with the hon. gentleman, that that portion should cost $50,000 per mile. He only wanted to show that the whole line would not cost such a low sum as the Pembina branch, and therefore, it was not fair that supporters of the hon. gentleman, not himself, should go through the country and say: "See the Pembina branch, see how cheaply the Government have built that; that is the way we will build the Pacific Railway," giving to understand that the price paid per mile for the Pembina branch was the price to be paid for the Pacific Railway all through. It was not so. Other sections of that line would cost $75,000, and, perhaps, more per mile. The hon. gentleman gave as a reason for not completing the Pacific Railway, that he did not want to impose onerous burdens on the people. He was quite right; no one wanted to do that. But without imposing burdens on the people he might go on and build the railway. There were rails on hand for nearly the whole of the line for which the Government was paying a large sum in interest, and which were depreciating every day. Why not use them? Why not go on as fast as possible, consistent with our duty to the country, in such a manner as to reduce that immense sum invested in those rails? In that prairie country, from Winnipeg towards the Rocky Mountains, the railway could not cost very much with the exception of bridges; these rails could be used there, and access being given to that country, thousands of emigrants would flow into it and settle there. He would close by calling attention to the telegraph line which was begun at a time when there had been no proper survey or location of the railway made, and which had cost a larger sum than if it had been built on the located line of the railway. A portion of the telegraph line would be useless, because it was not built on the line of the railway. The contractors had now a large claim against the Government. They had already received a sum of money, but when the contract would have to be settled, a large sum would have to be paid those contractors, because that contract had been given without proper consideration.

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. MACKENZIE: The hon. gentleman is mistaken. There is no telegraph line built except on the located line.

MR. LANGEVIN: The hon. gentleman must remember he gave a contract for the telegraph before he had any location fixed for the railway. He has had to pay an indemnity to the contractor.

MR. MACKENZIE: No.

MR. LANGEVIN said, according to the papers brought down, the contractor, Mr. Bernard, claimed a large sum as indemnity. He had made contracts with others and had to fulfil those contracts; he complained to the Minister and said: "You are ruining me, I cannot pay these men until you pay me." That was the position in which he was placed, and the Government would finally have to indemnify him. That was not the proper thing to do under the circumstances. The hon. gentleman and colleagues should have waited until the line was required. The railway line should be located first, then build the telegraph line. The hon. gentleman seemed inclined to adopt one line in preference to the others. The responsibility rested on him and his colleagues. It was for them to determine that; they had all the information before them. The views of the Opposition, of course have no effect on the decision. They had made representations on many occasions, they had put resolutions before the House, which had been negatived and thrown out; nevertheless, their views were there, and when the time came the people would judge between them and the hon. gentlemen opposite.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said, at this late hour, he would endeavour to confine his remarks as short as possible. He had listened with a great deal of attention to the remarks of the hon. the Minister of Public Works in introducing this resolution. The difficulties were apparent which beset him and his Government with regard to the selection and location of the proper route. They had not only the difficulties presented by the different routes to choose between, but also the difficulties of the Chief Engineer, and the acting Chief Engineer, differing on this point. One fact must be somewhat pleasing to his hon. friend from Yale, namely, that the route had been selected for the survey of which he had successfully contended in this House two or three years ago, before the location was finally decided on. It must have been noticed that the hon. the Minister of Public Works, while alluding to the interests of British Columbia with regard to the selection of the route, did not pass any remarks upon other interests in connection with the selection of the terminus, such as Imperial interests in opening the North-West Territories. The hon. gentleman confined his remarks to the immediate terminus in British Columbia, and left out of view the fact that the one route passed through the North-West, a vastly more fertile country and much better suited for settlement than the southern route, or the one located. He (Mr. Kirkpatrick) did not at present intend to deal with this point, as he agreed with the hon. member for Charlevoix that the Government were responsible for this matter, and, no doubt, felt this responsibility, and would act as they thought best suited to the interests of the country. But he wished to speak more particularly regarding the vote immediately before them from Sunshine Creek to English River. He would like to know whether this vote of $214,000 would complete the work to English River.

MR. MACKENZIE: I am not positive.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said he supposed that it would nearly do so. He thought that the road was now ironed to Savanne. English River was 110 miles or so from Thunder Bay, in the wilderness. But there was no vote asked for the construction of the line beyond, and thus a gap was made until they came to Rat Portage. No estimate was asked to connect these two points; and it followed, no doubt, that there was no intention of commencing this section before the 1st July, 1879. From the next July they would have 110 miles built at one end, and the work progressing for 114 miles at the other end with great rapidity; and it would not be far from being completed on the 1st July, 1879; while in this great gap not the first attempt would have been made nor a vote asked from Parliament to undertake the work of construction. This was most remarkable. Why were the two ends of this portion of the road being built if there was no intention of connecting them? The hon. gentleman admitted that the line between these two points was located and ready for construction; but no contract was entered into, and there was no intention of doing so during the coming year. Was this reasonable? Were they to expend 5½ millions,—which the hon. gentleman said that these 223 miles would cost,—without having any intervening link? Were two lines to be built leading nowhere? He would allude presently to the proposition about these two points. Port Savanne and Rat Portage should be connected by some sort of hermaphrodite system of water and land communication; but he did not believe that the Government intended to adopt any such plan as he was told was actually brought down in the other end of the building in a minority report, for which a member of the Government had actually voted. This was a plan by which it was proposed to expend more public money in order, if possible, to utilize the Fort Frances Lock, and to make the country believe that there was some value and some use in this public work, and that it was intended to expend in this regard $150,000, according to the estimate of Mr. Sutherland, and $350,000 according to the estimate of Mr. Mortimer, a practical engineer. It was proposed to build tramways to improve the water communication, and this would involve the building of dams, the deepening of rivers, and the building of extensive works, steamboats and barges; and for what purpose? To convey from 40 to 50 tons a day of produce between these points. This meant a train of five cars, and he did not believe that 50 tons could thus be transported daily. He did not believe that a tug could be placed on these waters—they were so shoaly—of sufficient power to convey a train of barges carrying 50 tons of produce; but suppose this were possible. Had it then come to this: that they were to expend well nigh six millions to have a train of five cars pass one way a day. The idea was most preposterous. Let them call the Fort Frances Lock a blunder, and say the money was thrown away; but they should not throw away more money in building such useless works of that kind. He hoped that the Government did not intend to do so. He protested against it. There was some hope for them not doing so, as no estimate was made for it; but as a member of the Government had actually brought down a report advocating such a scheme, he must protest against and warn the Government against taking any step of the kind. If some such scheme was not undertaken there was no excuse for not connecting the line between English River and Rat Portage. This must be done sooner or later. It was located and ready for construction; and until this was done the two ends of the railway which were being built, at the enormous expense of six millions, were practically useless. He hoped that the Government would give them some explanation in this regard. Fifty tons amounted to about $1,650 bushels of wheat; and after it was harvested in the West and ready for transportation, say on the 10th of September, there would not be more than 35 days before this water communication would be frozen up; and 35 times 1,650 bushels would make 57,755 bushels, about the produce of a farm of 2,000 acres in the West; and this was what they were building this railway and improving this water communication for in order to have a competing route with the Pembina and Duluth route. He had only to call the attention of the Committee to these facts to show how preposterous was the idea contained in this report; and he hoped and believed that the good sense of the Government would never adopt or carry it into practice. There was a remarkable omission made in not asking for any vote to construct the line westward from Red River. They had there a great country, Manitoba, into which our people were flowing by thousands and thousands. It was being rapidly filled up with a hardy and thrifty population, which would have a large quantity of grain and produce ready for export as soon as the means were provided. This country needed development. The hon. gentleman told us that one great object of the Pacific Railway was to pass through the fertile lands in the North-West, and in this he fully agreed with the hon. gentleman. He believed that Canada would never have undertaken the construction of this great work, had it not been for the North-West Territories, which they desired more than anything else to develop and open up. The hon. gentleman said they had resolved to adhere to the located line in this part of the country. Why not then take a vote and go on with this section? The line was already located, and the cheapest line through the prairie country, and yet there was no intention of obtaining a vote in this relation. This was not treating Manitoba and the North-West fairly, or enabling them to derive any benefit from the great explorations made in the North-West. This was one of the first portions of the road that should be undertaken and built as soon as possible. The line was located from Thunder Bay to Selkirk on the Red River; but the hon. gentleman had not told them that there was any considerable extent of land in this region fit for settlement. They knew that this was not the case. The promised land, the land flowing with milk and honey, lay beyond Red River, and the road from Thunder Bay to Red River merely passed through the portals of the country in question. The distance covered was 400 miles; and for 250 or 270 miles to Fort Pelly, there was no more than 20 or 25 miles of land fit for settlement. They were building a line of 650 miles, from Thunder Bay through land which was practically unfit for settlement. He would ask the hon. gentleman, in view of these facts, to reconsider his decision, if possible, and run the line through a portion of the country which was fit for settlement. They should open up the country west of Red River, either by this road or by one of the colonization roads, which only meant another Pacific road. If they voted lands for this purpose, they represented money's worth. The hon. gentleman had mentioned the heavy work on Section 14, owing to the Julius muskegs which they had unexpectedly come across, and this entailed extra work on the contractor.

MR. KIRKPATRICK.

MR. MACKENZIE: I said nothing about extra work.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said the hon. gentleman had stated that the contract was given out for $400,000, but that in consequence of heavy work required to pass these muskegs, this expenditure would amount to about $500,000. He would ask the hon. gentlemen whether the sum total of the original contract was not about $400,000.

MR. MACKENZIE: I said $402,000, and I stated that the cost would not be far from $500,000.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said that this would cost a great deal of extra work.

MR. MACKENZIE: There is no such thing as extra work.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said that there would be a great deal of additional work, which was not now anticipated to be done on the route westward to Fort Pelly.

MR. MACKENZIE: No: we will not.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said that a return had been brought down the other day of all the reports of engineers, memorials, papers and, correspondence relating to the survey and location of the line between Red River and Battleford, not heretofore laid before Parliament; but only two of these reports were brought down, and it was remarkable that no engineer had been over this portion of the route in summer. There was nothing in the voluminous reports before them from which they could glean any information respecting this route between Red River and the Narrows of Lake Manitoba. One of these reports just brought down was by Mr. Rowan, who said that he went sometime one summer as far as Oak Point on Lake Manitoba, and thence by canoe as far as the Narrows, but he did not go along the located line. Mr. McLeod said that he went over this portion of the country in winter when everything was frozen up, and he could not tell where streams were save as to some large streams. This evidently showed that the whole of the country was frozen up at the time. This was not a satisfactory state of things. A man who had been over this route in summer had told him that he had, in doing so, to cross one of the muskgs on snow-shoes, in July, and even then broke through; he had a 20 feet pole pointed with an iron and could not find bottom in some places, and yet the engineers reported that there was not a muskeg there more than two or three feet in depth. This was a very great discrepancy, and he did not think that they had a satisfactory explanation of it. The fact that additional work was unexpectedly imposed by meeting with the Julius muskeg, which was seventeen or eighteen feet deep, showed that there was a great deal of justification for his remarks, and his impression that the engineers who had passed over this route between Red River and the Narrows had not thoroughly and exhaustively ascertained the nature of the land and muskgs over which they passed. He had not changed his mind respecting the Fort Frances Lock. It was a great mistake. He could see some reason for it when it was intended to run the road to Sturgeon Falls, and this would have given unbroken communication by water to Rat Portage, but when the road was deflected to the northward, it should have been stopped. He was certain that since the change of route took place all the money that was expended on this lock was thrown away and lost to the country. There was no attempt to say that there would be any commercial benefit derived from that lock. The market of the settlers on Rainy Lake would be down towards Rat Portage. They would not go up the river, they would go down with the stream. There was, therefore, no idea that this could be used for commercial purposes. It had been suggested in the Senate that it might be used as a military work; but seeing that it was a canal on one side of a river, on the other side of which was the American boundary, it was in the wrong place to pass troops within a stone's throw of the American frontier. Some good had resulted from the discussion which he had introduced here last year, in the fact that the Government had changed the depth of the canal. There were, however, two obstructions in the Rainy River which prevented steamboats from getting up to the Fort Frances Locks, namely the Long Sault and the Manitou Rapids. It was proposed to expend money in taking out boulders and rocks, but that would not overcome the rapid, and he very much doubted if the steamers could ever be got up to the lock. He contended that the work should be given out by contract. If the Government had not disobeyed the plain letter of the law in this respect, the country would have saved $200,000 which had been lost in consequence of this flagrant violation of the law of the land.

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. TROW said he doubted if the work could have been let by contract. He was satisfied it had been carried on very economically. He doubted if the Government had ever had a more energetic Superintendent. The expenditure of this money would lead to a settlement of 300,000 or 400,000 acres of productive lands. From 80 to 100 townships had been already surveyed and were being rapidly settled. That section could never be settled by the construction of the Pacific Railway proper there must be a road through it. There were very extensive timber limits around there, and that timber was required for the prairie districts of the west. It was of the greatest importance that the work should be completed.

MR. McCALLUM said according to a report which he had read last year, the people of that section had to go to Red River for their timber. Timber had to be procured to build the lock, and yet the hon. gentleman said timber abounded in the neighbourhood.

MR. MACKENZIE said that was some special timber required for the lock gate. There was enough timber in the neighbourhood for a million locks. Did not the hon. gentleman know that the contractors had been unable to find in Canada some kinds of timber required for the Welland Canal?

MR. McCALLUM said they could have got the timber in Canada, but it was cheaper to get it in the United States. His hon. friend from Frontenac had spoken of pushing the road west of Red River. He (Mr. McCallum) would rather they would build the link first. It would take probably three or four years to build that link, and the ties already laid would be rotten before the other portion of the road was built, unless they went on with it at once. He thought the construction of the Fort Frances Lock was a mistake, and considered that, when the Minister of Public Works found it could not be used to transport supplies for the Pacific Railway, he should have come down and said he was mistaken, and would not proceed any further in a useless expenditure.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew) said that if anything were needed to confirm the statement that the connection between English River and Rat Portage should be completed, it was the statement of the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) that more than one road would be required. They had information that immigrants were going into the North-West at the rate of 200 a day, and opening up a communication through our own territories by rail. A mixed land and water route had been spoken of, but the attempt to take passengers and freight over such a route as that would, in his opinion, be a very great failure. When direct communication was completed from Duluth to Winnipeg the number of passengers, or the quantity of freight that would pass over such route, had been mentioned, namely, a system of tramways from Port Savanne to Kettle Falls, and thence by navigation to Rat Portage, would be infinitesimal. It was the duty of this Government to make every effort to complete the portion of the line between English River and Rat Portage, and he was sorry that they had not seen fit to put a sum for this particular portion of the road in the Estimates. The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) had said that the construction of the Fort Frances Canal and Lock would greatly facilitate the carrying of lumber to Manitoba and the North-West Territories. If he (Mr. White) understood the matter aright it seemed to him that no such expenditure would be at all necessary to enable the settlers in Manitoba and the North-West to get their lumber at a much cheaper rate than they got it at present. When the railroad was completed from Rat Portage to Selkirk, and thence to Winnipeg, all the facilities possible for procuring cheap lumber in the North-West would be obtained. He did not object to the necessary expenditure for the completion of the Fort Frances Lock, but he objected to the expenditure of any further sum of money on that route. There was one other thing to which he would like to draw the attention of the Committee. He did not observe in the item now under discussion in this particular vote for the Pacific Railway, that the leader of the Government had asked for any vote for the Georgian Bay Branch, and although the hon. gentleman had been requested during this Session to give information as to what the Government proposed in reference to it, the information had not been given. He (Mr. White) should like to enquire whether the Government proposed to bring down any sum in the Supplementary Estimates for the construction of the road from the South River to Cantin's Bay, or to the mouth of French River, and whether it was proposed during recess to advertise for contracts for that particular portion of the Pacific Railway scheme. He understood from the notice on the paper that it was the intention of the Government to ask for a ratification of the Order-in-Council in reference to the extension of the Canada Central Railway to Lake Nipissing, that it was their intention, at all events, to build the connection from Lake Nipissing eastwards. What he desired to ask was, whether it was the intention of the Government to take a vote for the construction of the Georgian Bay branch, and if so, whether the contract would be advertised for.

MR. MACKENZIE: That is under consideration. The hon. member for Frontenac asked how much was spent upon that section up to the present. There was a sum of $703,000 expended to the end of the year.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Will the hon. gentleman inform us why no sum of money has been mentioned for the road between English River and Rat Portage?

MR. MACKENZIE: The hon. gentleman has scarcely observed what I said to-day. I pointed out that we desired to place the entire road under contract if we could, upon the terms of the Act of 1874, but, as we found in 1874, it would take several years before it could be completed, it was well to advance those portions which could be constructed by the time the surveys could be completed, and we proposed then to let the entire route from Fort William westward, in one contract, deducting from the contract the amount paid on this section as part of the $10,000 per mile, which the Act provided was to be paid to that contractor. If we can succeed during the coming season in our attempt to lay the entire road, the contract would be submitted to Parliament next February for their approval, and these contractors would finish all that remained to be finished of that particular part, as well as that west of Red River. We do not desire to proceed on the last contract any further; the survey being completed, we want to utilise our lines if we can. If we fail to obtain contractors under the terms of the Act for the whole route, we propose to ask Parliament to sanction special contracts for those 180 miles, and also for the section in British Columbia, starting from the navigable waters westward, if we select that route, which is probable. The hon. member for Charlevoix seems to think we have an enormous quantity of rails on hand. Those required for what we have under contract on the Pembina Branch will only leave enough for 180 miles to be laid after that; so there is not so very large a quantity as the hon. gentleman supposed. There are just enough to build the road within two or three miles from Fort William to Selkirk.

On item $164,700, for telegraph lines and roadway,

MR. MACKENZIE: These telegraph contracts are really part of the work of construction. The contractors are bound to clear out all timber to the width of 32 feet on the exact line of railway, and erect a telegraph line. It has been, in the work of construction between Keewatin and Selkirk, of the utmost possible use, as had been stated by the Engineer-in-Chief. As soon as the road is located anywhere, where the contracts extend, the contractors for erecting the telegraph have to proceed and clear out the timber to this width, then the railway contractors follow. In case they should neglect in any way clearing out the track to this width, there is an item in the contract for construction with the contractors, binding them to clear out the timber. If we pay the one contractor, we do not pay the other. So far, the contractors for the telegraph line have kept in advance of the contractors bodies for the regular building of the road.

MR. WHITE.

MR. BUNSTER: In this item is it intended to place a telegraph line from Nanaimo to Victoria.

MR. MACKENZIE: Not in connection with the railway. The hon. gentleman's questions will perhaps come better on Monday.

Vote agreed to.

XXIII. MISCELLANEOUS.

184. For the expenses of Government in the North-West Territories..... $17,000

II. CHARGES OF MANAGEMENT.

Financial Inspector.....	$2,600
Office of Assistant Receiver-General
Toronto.....	7,600
do Montreal.....	5,500
Auditor and do Halifax, N.S.....	10,000
do do St. John, N.B. ....	11,400
do do Fort Garry.....	6,500
do do Victoria, B.C.....	7,000
do do Charlottet'n, P.E.I.	4,000
Country Savings Banks, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and British Columbia.....	12,000
Seigniorial Tenure and Commission.	2,500
	$69,100

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolutions reported.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

QUESTION.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Will the hon. gentleman inform us what measures he proposes to drop.

MR. MACKENZIE: We will drop Bill No. 47, the Registration of Titles Bill, and it is under consideration whether we will proceed with other Bills. It is probable that the Government will not proceed with Bill 32, to facilitate the colonization of Dominion lands by aiding the construction of railways; and we will not go on with the Stamps Bill, No. 40. We propose consolidating the whole of the Stamp Acts at a future time.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: That will be much better.

House adjourned at
Fifteen minutes before
Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 6th May, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

MOTION.

MR. MACKENZIE moved:

"That the Government business shall have precedence on Wednesday next, immediately after Routine Proceedings.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew) said that he found the following paragraph in the Report of the Committee on Immigration and Colonization:—

"On the subject of the Dawson Route, from a consideration of facts stated in evidence by Mr. Hugh Sutherland, the Committee find that it would be advisable to utilize the portions of Railway being constructed and about to be finished by means of tramways around the portages between Port Savanne and Kettle Falls, the tramways being worked by light cars on a narrow gauge drawn by horses, and towed on barges along the water stretches without breaking bulk."

With regard to this particular portion of the report, considerable difference of opinion existed in the Committee, and he thought he was correct in saying that the decision arrived at was that the Committee would express no opinion regarding the desirability of constructing these works, but simply report to the House Mr. Hugh Sutherland's opinion on the matter. As a member of the Committee, he wished to express his entire dissent from the statement contained in this paragraph.

MR. TROW said he did not admit that there was any irregularity in this report.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY ACT
AMENDMENT BILL.—[BILL No. 52.]

(Mr. Mackenzie.)

CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS.

MR. MACKENZIE said that the Senate had so changed the Bill as to require the assent of the Senate as well as the assent of the House of Commons to any contract or agreement made with respect to the lease of the Pembina Branch. The Government could not possibly accept this amendment by which the Senate assumed to itself a right which this House had never conceded, and which he hoped, it never would concede. It was not conceded in England, and he was bound to disagree with the amendment. He would, therefore, move that this House doth disagree in the amendments made by the Senate to the said Bill, for the following reasons :

“Because it is contrary to the uniform practice of Parliament, that contracts into which the Executive is authorized to enter, should be made subject to the approval of the Upper Chamber.

“Because in recognition of the practice the Executive was authorized by the Canadian Pacific Railway Act of 1874, to make all contracts for the construction of that great work subject to the approval of the House of Commons only.

“Because in further recognition of the practice the Executive was by the same Act authorized to make contracts for leasing or working one of the Branch Railways, in connection with any other Railway, subject to the approval of the House of Commons only.

“Because on the principle on which the approval of the Senate was not required to such contracts, it ought not to be required to a contract for leasing or working another of the Branch Railways.”

MR. TUPPER said he was rather surprised to learn the decision at which the hon. the First Minister had arrived, because, if his memory served him right, the statement that this was the uniform practice was not accurate. He thought that their practice had been the reverse, and such as was required by the Senate. They had had, he believed, two, and only two, Acts passed by this House that would bear direct analogy on this subject—one with reference to the transfer of the Windsor Branch Railway, and the other with regard to the transfer of the road from Truro to Pictou. Both of these were dealt with in the way proposed; that was to say, the contract was subject to the approval of Parliament and not of the House of Commons alone.

MR. MACKENZIE said that this was an entirely different matter. The precedents the hon gentleman referred to related, not to a contract, but to the giving away of a certain national property, while this concerned the approval of an arrangement of the nature of a contract exactly such as that which affected the Georgian Bay Branch Railway; that which related to contract with the Moncton Water Company, approved the other night, and the Ottawa Gas and Water Companies and several others that might be named. The resolution which first authorized the Government to act, both with respect to the Pictou and Touro and Windsor roads was passed by this House only, but when it was determined to give away this railroad, this piece of national property, it required an Act of Parliament, and no Act of Parliament, of course, could be passed without the sanction of the three branches, the two Houses and the Chief of the Executive.

MR. TUPPER said it appeared to him that these cases were parallel. It was proposed to make a certain disposition of the Windsor branch and the Truro and Pictou Railways; and, in doing so, it was considered necessary to have the approval of the Senate as well as of the House of Commons. It was, therefore, established, as far as the Government could establish it, that in dealing with public property in this way it was desirable to have the approval of both branches of the Legislature, and he could not see why this was not the sounder course. He could well understand that in approving of comparative unimportant matters, such, for instance, as the ratification of a contract for the construction of a portion of a line, it was different. The disposition of an agreement to pay a certain sum to get a certain amount of work performed, did not appear at all analogous, and he held that the first ground taken failed. Their practice was to reverse and the approval of both branches was necessary in disposing of a line of railway. Then he held that the second objection was faulty because there was no analogy between the approval of the House of Commons of a contract to perform a certain amount of work for a certain sum of money, and the power to alienate a large portion of the Canada Pacific Railway for a considerable term of years. The question was one of public policy, and was very important. He was not at all prepared to say that the House would, and, in fact, he was not inclined to think from the explanations given on the part of the Government to the House that the House would probably approve of the arrangement in question, and that there would be no difficulty in obtaining the concurrence to it of the Senate. He did not see why the Senate should be precluded from having an opportunity to pass its opinion upon a question of very large importance and a very important question of public policy. He thought that this was only in conformity with the general scope of their mode of conducting business, which required that matters of very much less import should have the concurrence of the Senate. He would be very sorry to have the hon. gentleman raise a question in which the other branch of Parliament might feel it would be called upon to surrender concurrence, and which might have the effect of embarrassing the course that, in the public interest, it might be desirable to pursue. He was afraid that on investigation it would be found that the ground of uniform practice could hardly be substantiated; and that the other analogy which the hon. gentleman had mentioned would not bear out the reasoning adopted. As a member of this House, he failed to see why it should not be desirable to have the assent of both branches of Parliament to such arrangement, or in what way this would invade the privileges hitherto possessed and acted upon by the House of Commons.

MR. TROW.

MR. BLAKE said he regretted that a leading member of this House should affirm the view expressed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tupper). He denied altogether that there was any precedent contrary to the view taken by the reasons given for disagreement. In 1875, when fresh from the people, they had not complied with what was now urged by the Senate; and, certainly, in 1878, when on the eve of appealing to the people, they should not surrender the power demanded by the Upper Chamber.

MR. MASSON: It is evident that we are going to the people.

MR. BLAKE said he held that, especially as the Senate had not claimed any exercise in 1874 of the right now put forward by the hon. member, the course proposed by the Government was, according to precedent, also entirely constitutional. For himself, he was prepared to stand by the rule of Parliament which was unanimously assented to in 1874.

MR. TUPPER said that he would remind the hon. gentleman that it was not simply the fact that this House had passed a resolution authorizing the Government to engage to certain terms; of course it then became more necessary to pass an Act, and that Act required the assent of the Senate. The point to which he drew the attention of the House was that, in an Act providing for the disposal of a question of infinitely less importance, the approval of Parliament, and not simply of this House, was required.

MR. HOLTON said it was a resolution, not an Act.

MR. TUPPER said that the resolution in reference to the Windsor Branch or Pictou Branch of the Intercolonial required the approval of Parliament—that was both branches of Legislature. He had had no desire to raise a question of the Pacific Railway, because there was no analogy. The amount of aid to be given in that case was specified, and as to the route, the First Minister had already stated that the Government did not necessarily require to ask the consent of Parliament to that.

MR. BLAKE: But they required to ask the assent of the House to the contract which embodies the route.

MR. HOLTON said the assent of the three branches of the Legislature must be required to every measure declaratory of or founded upon public policy. The Senate had already assented to the question of public policy involved in the leasing of this branch. The simple question that remained was whether the contract made in pursuance of this public policy should be submitted to both branches, or only to one, according to the uniform practice. He could not find a solitary instance among the precedents of the British Parliament, where a contract was made, subject to the approval of the Lords, or in practice of the Canadian Parliament, where a contract was made, subject to the approval of the Senate, or of the old Legislative Council. They might object to the Senate claiming to be a body to which the Executive must account for the administration of public property and the expenditure of public money. His view was that the pretension of that hon. body amounted to an arrogation of the peculiar prerogatives of this House, as regarded the control of the public purse and public property.

MR. LANGEVIN said he failed to see any difference between the case of the Windsor Branch and this Bill. By the Bill before the House, they were asked to make the lease on such terms as may be agreed upon. The Senate had a fair right to ask what those terms were. The terms might be such that the Senate, with full knowledge of them, might refuse to commit themselves to. He agreed with the hon. member for South Bruce in claiming all the privileges belonging to the House, but he did not think they should infringe upon the privileges of the other House. The hon. gentlemen opposite the other day had themselves recognized the principle of the concurrence of the Senate in matters relating to money; for in the Bill for the better auditing of the Public Accounts, they had made it a condition that the Auditor-General should only be removable by an address concurred in by the Senate and the House of Commons. He could not agree that it was infringing upon their principles to insist that the Senate should have no control whatever over the details of what they had agreed to as a general policy, especially when the terms and conditions of leases and contracts were not stated.

MR. BLAKE.

MR. HUNTINGTON: Suppose a contract were submitted to the Senate, and the Senate disagreed with the amount, then it would come to this, that what had been agreed to by the Executive and the House of Commons might be thrown out by the Senate.

MR. LANGEVIN said the Upper House had a right to reject any money Bills.

MR. RYAN said it was quite evident, from the course of the Government in this matter, that they had not intended to complete the Pembina Branch.

MR. BLAKE: Question.

MR. RYAN said, as such a course would leave Manitoba without railway connection for another year, and it must be extremely inconvenient—

MR. SPEAKER: Does the hon. gentleman mean to argue that, because the Branch would not be finished, the House should surrender its privileges?

MR. TUPPER said that this was a question for debate. They had had a speech from the First Minister, giving his reasons for proposing to reject these amendments; and the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Ryan) had certainly a right to urge his view as to why it would not be desirable for the House to adopt the proposal of the First Minister.

MR. RYAN said that, because they knew such a course would be improper, the Government desired to transfer from their shareholders the result of their conduct. In replying to a question of his, last Wednesday—

MR. HOLTON: Order.

MR. RYAN: Hon. gentleman are determined to confine me entirely to the constitutional question.

MR. SPEAKER: Is that raised by the resolution submitted to the House?

MR. TUPPER said the question before the House was, whether this House should rake up the amendments of the Senate or not, and, under that question, the hon. gentleman was perfectly in order.

MR. SPEAKER said the hon. gentleman was not arguing the question raised by the resolution, but an entirely different question. He was endeavouring to show that the adoption of this resolution would defeat the Bill, and, in that way, injure his Province.

MR. TUPPER said the question before the House was, whether we shall adopt the amendment or not.

MR. SPEAKER said the question before the House was, whether we should adopt the resolution submitted by the First Minister or reject it, not whether we shall reject the amendment or not.

MR. HOLTON said the policy of the Bill was not under debate at all. Both Houses had agreed as to the policy of the Bill. The point in debate was whether the Executive shall be vested in this matter of contract in the Senate as well as the House of Commons.

MR. RYAN said the hon. gentleman seemed to be in a very orderly mood and to be determined to adhere very rigidly to points of order and constitutional points. In bowing to the decision of the Speaker, he (Mr. Ryan) could not set himself right in reference to the statement made by the hon. the First Minister last Wednesday, and he would take another occasion to do so. He would merely remark that it seemed to him almost a matter of words, to see the great amount of zeal for the Constitution which had been developed by hon. gentlemen opposite to-day. Only a week or ten days ago these hon. gentlemen, who, to-day, were such advocates of the Constitution, sat by without saying a word while the Constitution was being trampled into the dust.

MR. MACDOUGALL (East Elgin) said that this was an act, as had already been properly observed by the hon. member for South Bruce, to repeal a policy which had been established by the wisdom of Parliament, in connection with the passage of the Canadian Pacific Railway Act. If these amendments, as sent down from the other House to this House, were adopted by this House, then it would be logically consistent and obligatory upon us in pursuance of that to repeal the 15th section of the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, relating to the re-leasing of the Georgian Bay Branch. If the terms of this Bill, now under consideration, were precisely the same as what was contained in the Act of 1874, what reason was there that that policy should be reversed. Was there any reason why this House should act contrary to the course pursued on that occasion? Could any reason be assigned by hon. gentlemen opposite why this Parliament cannot be entrusted with the carrying out of this contract?

MR. RYAN: One reason is that there are hon. gentlemen on the floor of this House advocating the granting of powers to the Government to make a lease with themselves.

MR. MACDOUGALL: The hon. gentleman said this House was asking powers for the purpose of ratifying leases with hon. members of this House. What grounds had he for making any such statement? Did he mean to insult the intelligence of this House by making such an allegation. He had no reason—

MR. RYAN: I have reason.

MR. MACDOUGALL: It ill becomes the hon. gentleman coming from the Province of Manitoba, a Province deeply interested in the Pacific Railway—

MR. SPEAKER said he thought it was unfair that an hon. member should be allowed to comment on what an hon. member previously had attempted to say. He had better confine himself to the subject-matter, which was simply whether the resolution by the hon. the First Minister should or should not be adopted.

MR. MACDOUGALL: This House was asked to reverse the policy sanctioned by Act of Parliament. No reasons had been assigned why we should place less confidence in ourselves, in carrying out these instructions now, than we possessed at the time this Act was passed in 1874. Now, this Bill before Parliament was different from the precedents which had been cited in support of the conduct of the Senate on the other side. It did not ask for the passage of the Bill, it simply asked that this House shall have the power of ratifying the contract, of arranging with other railways for the leasing of this railway. It was strictly consistent with the policy of this Act, as he had already stated. If this House were to adopt these amendments brought down from the Senate, it would be entirely reversing the policy which it had sanctioned. The hon. member for Charlevoix stated that the Bill before Parliament relating to the appointment of the Auditor-General was directly in point, and that it was a case which should be referred to as a precedent for sustaining his argument, justifying the course of the Senate with respect to this measure. With all due respect, he (Mr. Macdougall) begged to differ from the hon. gentleman. What had the appointment of the Auditor-General to do with the ratification of the lease of the Pembina Branch or of any other line of railway? Surely the appointment of an Auditor-General was not the same as making a contract. The passage of that Bill was not the appointment of an Auditor-General, but it was the passage of an Act of Parliament authorizing the appointment of the Auditor-General. If there was any similarity between them, it would be that we have passed an Act of Parliament for the purpose of permitting us to appoint an officer. The House had already passed an Act granting the Government power to make contracts. This Bill asked for authority to make a contract pursuant to the policy already adopted. It seemed to him that this House ought to be the sole judge with regard to the expenditure of money. Means were required to build the railway, and the transactions relating thereto were of a financial character, and strictly within the purview and prerogatives of this House. He felt it to be his duty, therefore, to express his decided opposition to the conduct of the Senate and his full approval of the motion submitted by the hon. the First Minister.

MR. MACDOUGALL.

Mr. DESJARDINS said he thought the Senate when passing a Bill had a right to make such amendments as they deemed necessary. The hon. member for South Bruce said there was a precedent to be quoted against the Senate, namely, their action with regard to the Georgian Bay Branch. Because the Senate did not then require the fulfilment of the condition they now claimed, was probably the reason they claimed it now. The experience of the former contract might have induced them to adopt their present position.

Mr. WHITE (East Hastings) said this matter was one of very great importance. The people of this country were watching with great interest the proceedings of this House and Government with relation to leasing to the Montreal Bank, or any other institution, that line of road. The people would ask: did the Government object that it should be submitted to the Senate? There must be something behind the screen, something that will not bear the light, when the Government refused to accept the Bill amended by the Senate composed of gentlemen selected from among the best men of the country. The hon. member for South Bruce found fault because a certain item, a certain law, had been passed; he remembered well that by that Pacific Railway Act and the letting of that contract the late Government was put out of power. The people of this country were suspicious of letting a contract to any rich corporation. The point he wished to impress on this Government was, that they professed to be a Reform Government, to guard the interests of the people, and to do everything right and just. Why deny the Senate the right to say whether this contract shall be a fair contract or not? He was bound to say that, no matter what the political opinions of the Senate were, if this contract were in the interests of the country, the gentlemen composing that body would be independent enough to pass it. Why prevent them? No man in this house had shown a more independent spirit than the hon. member for South Bruce; when the Government did not do what was right, he left the House and would not vote with the Government. He (Mr. White) hoped the Government would accept this motion, otherwise the people would say they were afraid there was something behind the screen, something detrimental to their interests, and to the interests of the people we encouraged to go into that Province. That road was to be finished during this summer and completed; why should we hand it over to any corporation for ten years to the injury of the people of that Province. Why not let all parties that build roads leading there have the right to compete for running powers.

MR. MASSON said the hon. member for Chateaugay (Mr. Holton), had stated that in England there never was a precedent of a contract being submitted to both Houses for approval. He would cite an example, the Royal dockyard's contract.

MR. BLAKE: That was only to be laid before Parliament, not to be submitted for approval.

MR. MASSON said he would like to know what was the use of laying a contract before a House, if it were not to be approved or disapproved. The law stated it should become law, if not disapproved in the interim.

MR. BLAKE: That is citing from Todd. I asked Todd what the authorities were. I particularly enquired whether there was anything more than laying before the House, whether there was any question of approval and he said, "No."

MR. MASSON: If the hon. gentleman can use Todd, so can I. He told me that was the only example, and that the fact of laying a contract before Parliament implied the right of Parliament to approve or disapprove it.

MR. BLAKE: That is Todd's argument; I want his facts.

MR. MACKENZIE said the Pacific Railway Act which provided that the contract should be approved by this House, also provided in section 19 that copies of all contracts should be laid before the two Houses but only subject to approval of this House.

MR. MASSON: That does not follow at all.

MR. TUPPER: I rise to a question of order, eight hon. members have demanded yeas and nays. Every one demanding the yeas and nays must vote against the resolution.

MR. SPEAKER said our practice differed materially from that of the House of Commons. Our rules said upon a division, the yeas and nays shall not be entered upon the minutes unless demanded by five members.

Motion agreed to on the following division.

YEAS :
Messieurs

Appleby,	Jones (Halifax),
Archibald,	Kerr,
Bain,	Killam,
Béchar,	Kirk,
Bernier,	Lafamme,
Sertram,	Lajoie,
Biggar,	Landerkin,
Blackburn,	Langlois,
Blain,	Laurier,
Blake,	McDonald, (Cornwall),
Borron,	MacDonnell (Inverness)
Bowman,	Macdougall (East El
Boyer,	gin),
Brouse,	McDougall (S. Renfrew),
Brown,	MacKay (Gape Breton),
Bunster,	Mackenzie,
Burk,	McGregor,
Burpee (St. John,)	McIntyre,
Burpee (Sanbury)	McInnes,
Carmichael,	McNab,
Cartwright,	Malouin,
Casgrain,	Metcalfe,
Cheval,	Mills,
Christie,	Norris,
Church,	Oliver,
Coffin,	Paterson,
Coupal,	Perry,
Devlin,	Pettes,
Dymond,	Pickard,
Ferris,	Power,
Fiset,	Ray,
Fleming,	Ross (West Middlesex),
Flynn,	Rymal,
Forbes,	Scatcherd,
Galbraith,	Scrifer,
Gibson,	Sinclair,
Gillies,	Skinner,
Gillmor,	Smith (Peel),
Goudge,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Greenway,	Snider,
Hall,	St. Jean,
Higinbotham,	Taschereau,
Holton,	Thompson (Haldimand)
Horton,	Trow,
Huntington,	Wallace (Albert),
Irving,	Young.—92.
Jetté,

NAYS :
Messieurs

Benoit,	McQuade,
Bolduc,	Masson,
Bourbeau,	Monteith,
Daoust,	Montplaisir,
Desjardins,	Pinsonneault,
Dewdney,	Platt,
Dugas,	Plumb,
Flesher,	Robinson,
Gibbs (North Ontario),	Rochester,
Gill,	Roy,
Hurteau,	Ryan,
Jones (South Leeds),	Tupper,
Kirkpatrick,	Wade,
Langevin,	Wallace (S. Norfolk),
Lanthier,	White (East Hastings),
Little,	White (N. Renfrew),
	—32.

CRIMES OF VIOLENCE PREVENTION
BILL.—[BILL No. 77.]

(Mr. Mackenzie.)

THIRD READING.

Order for third reading read.

MR. WHITE (East Hastings) said that no one in the House regretted more than himself that it was necessary to bring this Bill before the House; and he hoped that it would have its effect. He was very glad that the hon. member for South Bruce had prepared this Bill, and that the Government had accepted it as a Government Bill, and he hoped and trusted that they would carry it out in the interests of the people of this country. He thought that it would not be out of place to enquire whether they could not arrive at some kind of arrangement by which no difficulty would be experienced in putting this Bill into force. It was a well known fact that, on the last 12th of July, in the city of Montreal, a large number of people having equal rights and privileges with others on that day to walk in public, when asked not to do so by clergymen and prominent citizens, and some of these citizens, members of the Church of Rome, consented, but, unfortunately, a young man was killed. It was not necessary now to discuss how this man met his death, further than to say that he was foully murdered, and the only cause for this murder was because he protected a lady who wore an orange lily. In this country, we should bear in mind that we should bear each other's burdens, as it were; and bear patiently one with the other.

MR. SPEAKER.

We should take the fact into consideration that we had our likes and dislikes; and he would not give the snap of his finger for a man who would not stand up for what he believed to be right, and to support and maintain the church and minister of his choice. It was a pity that in this country we could not regard the shamrock and lily as emblems that would hurt no party. The same dew from Heaven that nourished the one, nourished the other; and why should he not stand up in the House to say that if one lady saw fit to wear a shamrock and another a lily, each had a perfect right to do so without being insulted or ridiculed by any party. Unfortunately, owing to the carrying of a lily, this young man lost his life. There was but one opinion to the effect, that if the Mayor of Montreal had, on that occasion, discharged his duty, this life would not have been taken. If this had not occurred, many lives, since lost, would have been saved; and the hon. member for South Bruce would not have been obliged to use his active mind, ingenious brain, in order to prepare this Bill, and the Government would not have been forced to bring it before the House and country. But it was now here; and unfortunate occurrences were happening day after day in Montreal. They must meet these occurrences, and he thought that if they were sensible men and prepared to bear and forbear, they could arrive at some conclusion that would be satisfactory, and that all these matters would be wiped away and, he trusted, forgotten, though they would not be forgotten by those who had lost relatives in these disturbances. Some believed that it was right enough to walk in public procession, and well enough to take the lives of fellow men; but certainly this should not be done because that was what could not be given again. The Orangemen of the city of Montreal had acted very handsomely in consenting not to walk on the last 12th of July. He begged to thank the hon. the Minister of Public Works for having telegraphed to Montreal when the funeral of this young man took place, to say that he would render assistance, if necessary, to protect the citizens in paying the last act of respect to the deceased. He did not think that any party could say that the Government was in any way whatever to blame for that unfortunate event, or for the unfortunate events that had since occurred. In the county from which he had the honour to come the Protestants were largely in the majority; but the adherents of each religion walked, one on the 12th of July, and the other on St. Patrick's Day. No one molested or annoyed them, or said an unkind word to them; and he would ask hon. members, whether either Protestantism or Roman Catholicism was injured or benefitted by those events. Not a bit of it. It did not take away one member from the Church of Rome, or injure it, because the Orangemen walked on the 12th. Then, why could they not arrive at some conclusion and arrangement by which the Orangemen could walk in public procession in Montreal, and let no outside influence, or outside parties, go to Montreal on that occasion, and then no harm or injury would be done. It was in the power of both parties to make such an arrangement. He understood that the hon. member for Montreal Centre, and other parties, had done their duty on the last 12th of July, and all they could to save trouble. He would say, let every party enjoy the freedom and privileges which were purchased, as they all believed, by the blood of their ancestors. Let each one worship as he desired, celebrate what day he wished, and walk as he would, so long as he conformed to the laws of the country. He would unhesitatingly say that, when any Orangemen walked in Montreal, and a band played, or the Orangemen encouraged, the playing of such tunes as "Kick the Pope," and "Croppies lie down," it was injurious to the institution, to society, and unbecoming, and he condemned such conduct in the strongest terms. He did not blame parties for being annoyed at it. If they professed to be liberal-minded and Christians, why should they wish any party kicked; and especially when a man was chosen to be the head of a church, and believed to be the right man to occupy that exalted position, why should they wish him to be kicked? They should not do so. Let each party worship as they pleased, and do as they pleased, as long as they adhered to the rules and the laws of the country. He would say, positively, that, in a quiet way, he had used his utmost exertions—and he still intended to do so—to prevent any Orangemen, with whom he had influence, going to Montreal on the next 12th of July. Why? Because no good could come out of it. They did not want people to go from Upper Canada or other quarters to take away life in Montreal, and they should also say that they did not want rowdies from the United States to come to Montreal and take away life. He believed that the only parties that would be benefitted by these proceedings would be the railway companies and the Montreal hotels. Either parties going there would be so much the poorer for the money expended. The Orangemen in Montreal, and Protestantism, would not be benefitted. What good could be done by going to Montreal? If the Orangemen were allowed to walk quietly and peaceably in that city on the approaching 12th, he was certain they would not play any offensive tunes; and the whole difficulty and all the difficulties that stood in the way would be overcome, and no party would be hurt, molested or injured. It was no harm for him to say that this was the general feeling. The members of the Orange Society were anxious to be courteous to those who differed from them in opinion. In Toronto, not long since, the Orange procession stopped to let some clergymen of the Church of Rome pass; and why should they not have men of talent, ability and education, though differing from them in opinion. It was not long since, when the Orange Young Britons passed the Cathedral in Ottawa, when high mass was in progress in respect for the memory of the head of the Roman Catholic Church, they did not play tunes or in any way disturb this meeting. They threw down the olive branch, and it should be taken up by the intelligent and independent Roman Catholics of Montreal. A word or two from the gentleman who occupied the high position of R. C. Bishop of Montreal, and all would have been quiet and peace. It was an honour to him to have such an influence over his people. If the Bishop of Montreal would say to his people: "Let the Orangemen walk on the 12th July," and if the City Council would guarantee protection, and if the True Witness would advocate it, all the difficulty would be overcome, this Bill would never be enforced, and peace and harmony and good will would prevail. He hoped he had not said a word that would make anyone feel aggrieved; although for one word that he had used he would suffer in some quarters from excitable members of the Orange Order, for he did not think that it was a good thing to go to Montreal on the 12th, nor that this was necessary or would be beneficial. Why should they deny to anyone the right, if they wished to walk in procession on that day; or say to them: "You are the minority, and we, the majority, will crush you?" This would work both ways. In Upper Canada Protestants could say that they would crush out the parties who celebrated St. Patrick's day; but it would not be right. This would place them in an unfortunate, uncomfortable and unjust position. He hoped that the majority of the people of Montreal, and those who represented the Catholics would say: "Let the Orangemen walk and enjoy themselves and do as they like, as long as they did not play insulting and uncalled-for tunes." He hoped and trusted that if such an offer was made, such tunes would not be played, and that the Orangemen would not do what was not right, or sustained by the laws of the country, but what was right and fair in accordance with rules of the society. An hon. gentleman beside him said they had a right to walk. Certainly; but unless some assurance was given by intelligent men on the opposite side, that no objection would be raised to the programme he mentioned, they would go out, doubtless, prepared to shed blood. How would this Bill stop it, or prevent any man from putting a pistol in his pocket, and preparing to shoot down people or hinder armed parties coming from the other side to prevent this procession. It was well known that there was a law prohibiting the carrying of pistols; but it had not prevented these deaths or parties being shot down and sent into the presence of God without a minute's preparation. Who was benefitted or what society was advanced by these proceedings? Was the Church of Rome or Protestantism? Not at all. All this was injurious and wrong, and contrary to the harmony and the prosperity of the people of this country. It would not be right for him to forget that the Hon. Frank Smith and many other prominent Roman Catholic gentlemen in Toronto had used their utmost exertions to prevent interference with the procession in Montreal on the last 12th of July. He hoped that these gentlemen would still continue to act in as liberal-minded a manner and use their good offices in this regard; and show that nothing would make the country prosper more than the guarantee of equal rights and privileges to all. Our Constitution was as free as the air we breathed; and why should not members of both churches associate together and be friendly one with another, supporting and maintaining the churches and societies of their choice. He believed that the hon. member for Montreal Centre had done his duty on the last 12th, and he thanked the hon. gentleman for doing so. Many gentlemen of intelligence had also done their best on that occasion to prevent a riot in Montreal. There never was a time when it was more necessary than now for all citizens to stand shoulder to shoulder. They did not know how soon the time would come when they would be placed in an unfortunate and uncomfortable position; when the Empire which protected, assisted and stood by us, would be plunged into war with one of the most powerful nations in the world; and then it would be necessary and right to give the Mother Country assistance, and not to jump at each other's throats, and take each other's lives. This was not right, and he would join with any party or body of men and use whatever little influence he had to prevent any one, on the coming 12th, in Montreal, from being insulted or injured, and to prevent any outsiders going there to celebrate the day. The leaders on the opposite side should say:—"These men have rights as well ourselves." It possibly might be offensive for men to carry Orange flags ; but it was also offensive to carry the Host. But why quarrel with those who hoisted the Host ? He had no right to say that this should not be done. Then the opposite side should say:—"If you wish to carry a flag or emblem you should have the same right and privileges." If they did so faithfully and in a spirit of charity, they would discharge a duty. He was confident that the hon. member for South Bruce would give his assistance in this matter ; and also the hon. the First Minister. In a conversation that day, with the latter hon. gentleman—which was not private—the First Minister had said that he would do anything he possibly could in this relation. He trusted that hon. gentlemen representing the opposite side would express their willingness to Orangemen celebrating the 12th in the way they believed they should. If this was done, he was assured that this difficulty would be overcome and that this Bill would not be required. He hoped that his remarks would be received in the cordial spirit in which they were made. Let each party pursue the course their conscience dictated, and let each allow the other the same rights and privilege ; and not be offended at the right either of the shamrock or the lily. Let Roman Catholics worship as they wished, and walk and carry the Host if they desired to do so ; and let Orangemen do as they wished. Each party should bear patiently with the other, and the people would then be prosperous and happy. The hon. member for Montreal Centre had said that day that Montreal would be ruined if these things continued, and its commerce would be injured. This spirit would spread to other cities, towns and districts ; friend would be turned against friend, neighbour against neighbour, and Church against Church, and where would all this end ? And after they had done, who would be benefitted or advantaged ? He trusted that some conciliatory arrangement would be made, and the difficulty overcome for the sake of peace and humanity.

Mr. DEVLIN said he presumed it would not be unreasonable for him to say a few words on this subject, after the eloquent speech of the hon. member for East Hastings. He fully appreciated the kind sentiments to which the hon. gentleman had given expression. If the hon. gentleman would only carry them a little further in the right direction, and use his powerful influence with the Order in which he occupied a high position, and point out the advantage of abstaining from a procession in Montreal on the next 12th of July, he (Mr. Devlin) had not the least doubt that the peace and happiness and concordance, which he was sure the hon. gentleman sincerely wished, would be maintained. For his own part, he would be very glad, indeed, if he could give any pledge or promise, such as the hon. gentleman desired to exact in this House, though this was not the place to make such a pledge or promise ; but he was forced to say from his knowledge of transpiring events, that, in his judgment, if the Orangemen persisted in celebrating the 12th of July in Montreal by procession, it would be regarded as an act of offence and insult, and he very much feared that it would be the cause of bloodshed, and riot, and of disorder, which every good man in the Dominion would, no doubt, regret. He would only remark, for the information of the House, though he supposed it unnecessary, that until last year there never was within his recollection an attempt made to have an Orange procession in the streets of Montreal ; and perhaps it would not be amiss for him to say that in the Province of Quebec, the entire English-speaking population, Catholic and Protestant, did not exceed 150,000. It was essentially a Catholic Province, and no attempt was ever made until last year, in his recollection, to have a procession that would give offence to the people of Montreal. It was useless, however, to discuss the question here, and he only hoped that the gentlemen on the opposite side of the House—and there were very many of them who belonged to the Orange Order and who occupied very high offices in it—would use all the influence they exercised with their followers so as to secure the public peace and prevent Montreal being made a scene of riot and bloodshed on the 12th of July next. Whatever could be done to avert that misfortune, he had, no doubt, would be done by those who resided in that city, and desired only its welfare and the maintenance of the public peace. There was a strong feeling in the Protestant as well as the Catholic mind of Montreal, in favour of maintaining the public peace at any cost; as he trusted it would be maintained.

MR. ROCHESTER said that as this subject of the 12th of July had been brought up, and remarks had been made on it from both sides of the House, he desired to say something on the matter. It seemed that his hon. friend the member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Devlin), would ignore the right of one portion of the population of the Province of Quebec. He was in favour of equal rights to all parties and classes, no matter who they were and what they were. On the night of the 11th of July last, he (Mr. Rochester) had taken a great deal of trouble in Montreal to try and prevent a walk and a disturbance. He was sent for that evening, and went and met the Orangemen; and, he believed, that it was his influence that night which prevented the walk in Montreal on the last 12th of July. He worked hard till twelve o'clock at night to prevent it. Not that he did not consider that the Orangemen had as much right to walk in the city of Montreal as the Ribbandmen had to walk in the city of Toronto.

MR. DEVLIN: When did the Ribbandmen walk in Toronto?

MR. ROCHESTER said equal rights and privileges should be granted to all parties. That was all that was asked and required.

MR. DEVLIN: I have asked a question? The hon. gentleman had stated that Ribbandmen had walked in Toronto. He (Mr. Devlin) asked when?

MR. ROCHESTER said if it suited him he would answer it; and if it did not suit him, he would not. The hon. member for East Hastings was correct when he said that it was against the rules of the Orangemen of this country to give offence. Nor did they wish to give offence to any person. But in all classes of the community there were certain parties who would get the worse for liquor, and one man in that state would make a great deal of disturbance. This was a very hard thing to guard against. He thought the Orangemen should not play any of the party tunes which were distasteful to their Roman Catholic friends. He had said this to lodges, and at gatherings on the 12th of July, and he said so here, and he was an Orangeman of over 30 years' standing, though he was an Englishman. His hon. friend from Montreal Centre had asked him a question about Ribbandmen walking. The hon. gentlemen must think that a certain portion of this community were very — he would not make the remark, when he knew that Ribbandmen did walk under the guise of a religious society.

Several Hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

MR. DEVLIN: Have you any authority for making a statement of that kind in the House of Commons. I could understand it if made on a platform or in the lodge-room.

MR. ROCHESTER: I have all the authority you want, but it is not necessary. It is well enough known without my saying anything about it. He said that if their Roman Catholic friends would join with the Protestant community in trying to put down any ill-feeling, and keep it down, no man in the Dominion of Canada would go further to that end than he would. His hon. friend from Montreal did not appear to think that the Protestant community in the Province of Quebec should be allowed to walk in Montreal because they were not Roman Catholics. He thought that was a very narrow and contracted view for the hon. member to take. The Queen's highway should be open to every man, woman and child, no matter to what denomination they belonged. Whatever he could do to promote harmony he would be glad to do.

MR. BLAKE expressed a hope that the discussion would not be much further protracted. While he could not feel any sense of gratification in the House of Commons being called upon to consider such a measure as this, though it was only a temporary measure, it did afford him such gratification as was possible, to find that hon. gentlemen on both sides of the question had concurred in the necessity for the enactment of this law. That was the best evidence: first that they were not proceeding without a due and serious cause; and, secondly, that it could not be conceived by either to be directed against the other party, but was in the interest of peace and order against the violent, the disorderly and the lawless of both parties. This, notably, of all laws, could be operated only by receiving an overwhelming sanction from the locality in which it might be put in force. It was upon the united, earnest, active co-operation of the orderly law-abiding citizens of Montreal of each class of religion, that they must rely, unless this measure was to be on the Statute-book without being useful.

MR. DEVLIN.

Mr. BUNSTER said that was a serious matter for British Columbia, and he asked the hon member for South Bruce to except British Columbia from the provisions of the Act, inasmuch as a few white people could not protect themselves against 160,000 Indians if the use of fire-arms was prohibited.

Mr. DEVLIN said the Bill would not affect British Columbia at present.

Mr. BUNSTER said they had no difficulty between Irish Catholics, or Irish Protestants. Party tunes were offensive, but he was satisfied the shamrock was not offensive to any Irish Protestant, even if he was an Orangeman. He did not think that it was desirable that Orangeism should spread. There was not the necessity for protection to life and property which existed when Orangeism was first established in Ireland. Irish Protestants and Catholics should blend together to celebrate their national day. He looked upon the Catholic priests of the Dominion of Canada as too intelligent to encourage their flock to bloodshed. He thought their duty was to advise their flock to keep quiet.

Mr. DEVLIN: I think they know their duty without being instructed by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BUNSTER said they had done a great deal of good among the Indians. He did not look upon the Orange day as a national day, but he looked upon St. Patrick's day in that light. He again requested that British Columbia might be exempted from the operations of the Act.

Mr. BLAKE: The Bill is intended only to put down large bodies of riotous and lawless persons. It is the unanimous opinion of the House that there is but one person in British Columbia whom it is expedient to put down, therefore the Bill will not be applicable.

Amendments read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. WHITE (East Hastings) said the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Devlin) had appeared to him to use his influence to prevent a procession taking place in Montreal on the 12th July. That he could not do. The only thing he could do was to advise that the Orangemen of Montreal should walk there, and that others should not visit them. The hon. gentleman had said that if they did walk there would be bloodshed. How, then, could he (Mr. White) ask the people in Upper Canada not go to Montreal. They would say they ought to go there to assist their friends. If the Orangemen of Montreal obtained their right he would use his influence to prevent anyone else from going there. He thought charity should enter into the hearts of the people of Montreal, when there were so many thousands of a majority, they ought, surely, to allow a few hundreds to exercise their right. It was his own countrymen who caused this difficulty. He was sure that the French Canadian Roman Catholics would allow the Orangemen of Montreal to walk. Why should not they be allowed to walk in peace? He would say to his friends: "Don't go to Montreal prepared to injure your neighbours by taking the lives of your wife's brothers or their sons." He hoped that this great difficulty which was anticipated would be overcome, and that the Orangemen of Montreal would be allowed to walk in peace. But he could not use any more influence than he had. He could not prevent a great number from going there, but he should advise them to keep within the laws of the country; to give no offence and to be slow to take it. He was sorry that the hon. member (Mr. Devlin) could not have made a statement that this matter would be satisfactorily settled in this way. He thanked the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. Blake) for his speech on the introduction of this Bill, and he hoped the Government would see that this measure was strictly carried out on both sides. He believed that the Orange Young Britons of the city of Montreal had appeared in public oftener than they should have appeared. He hoped, if that were so, that the Government would keep them within bounds. Under present circumstances hundreds of thousands would spend money in going to Montreal, which their families required, simply because a great interest was to be sustained, and they would stand by others and not allow them to be crushed out. He hoped there was nothing in the character of Ribbonism in this country. He did not say there was, and he did not know there was. The conduct of the Roman Catholics of the county of Hastings was a credit to themselves. There were three Roman Catholic parishes there which advocated common schools, and celebrated St. Patrick's day as honourable, decent and sober men. From 10,000 to 15,000 men walked in the city of Belleville on that day, and at six o'clock in the afternoon strangers would not know there was anybody there. In that county both Orangemen and Catholics walked in peace, and why could they not in Montreal? If the people of Montreal did not seriously consider this matter he was afraid a difficulty would arise which would call for Government interference.

MR. ROCHESTER said that as to his remark in regard to Ribbonism, he should have said that it was reported that Ribbon lodges walked under the guise of charitable associations—not, however, that he knew anything about it.

MR. WHITE.

MR. DEVLIN said he thought it was very much to be regretted that the hon. gentleman should state, as he had, that the Catholics here had an organization known as the Ribbon organization, and that they walked under the one or the other guise. A discussion of this question in the House could produce no useful result, and when he made the statement he had made, with reference to a procession in Montreal, on the 12th of July next, he merely stated a fact known to everyone in Montreal, and to most people in the Dominion. The Protestant Bishop of Montreal, and 30 or 40 Protestant clergymen had presented a request to the Orangemen of Montreal, to induce them to abandon their procession in the interest of peace and charity. They had refused that request. They had stated that they would walk, notwithstanding the request of their bishop and clergymen; and his (Mr. Devlin's) opinion was that if they did walk the result would be most disastrous for Montreal, and for the Dominion. Therefore, it was for the gentlemen who stood high in the Orange order, to use their influence to prevent such a result.

MR. ROCHESTER: Why do not you do the same on your side?

MR. DEVLIN: We have.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

CHARGES OF MANAGEMENT.

208 For additional amount required for Seigniorial Tenure Commission ..... $1,500 00

PRISONERS.

209	{	Kingston—Staff, salaries.....	450 00
		Clothing.....	35 00
		Capital Account, new machinery.....	415 00

210	St. Vincent de Paul—Staff, Gratuities to retiring Officers .....	1,100 00
	Convicts' maintenance ...	2,035 47
	Repairs to buildings .....	200 00
	Capital Account, to complete Tramway.....	780 00
	Farm and Stables, to replace loss by fire .....	6,200 06
211	St. John—Staff, salaries.....	360 00
	Convicts' maintenance.....	5,630 00
	Maintenance of machinery	300 00
212	Material for manufacture	600 00
	Manitoba—Convicts' maintenance .....	2,700 00
	Farm .....	827 00
	Maintenance of buildings	357 00
	Capital Account: Furnishings for the new building, lumber, machinery and surgical instruments	1,952 42

LEGISLATION.

213	House of Commons—Amount required for the publication of the Debates.....	10,000 00
-----	--	-----------

ARTS, AGRICULTURAL AND STATISTICS.

214	Criminal Statistics—Balance of Appropriation of 1876-77 unexpended on 30th September, 1877, and carried forward by Special Warrant (Revote).....	4,558 75
215	Sydney Exhibition—Balance of Appropriation of 1876-77 unexpended on 30th September, 1877, and carried forward by Special Warrant (Revote).....	6,959 81
216	Paris Exhibition—Amount required to complete the services for the year.....	50,000 00

IMMIGRATION AND QUARANTINE.

217	Mennonite Loan—Balance of 1876-77 (Revote) .....	7,600 00
-----	--	----------

MR. PLUMB objected to the system of bringing down large Supplementary Estimates, which was calculated to mislead the House.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Our rule is that everything spent after the 1st of July in that way is charged to the present year. Last year is closed. You have the Public Accounts, and I cannot meddle with them. This must go to the expenditure of the current year. The law does not allow us to charge to the past year, but only to prolong the period during which the money can be spent, and it must be charged within the year in which it spent.

MR. PLUMB: Is the whole of this to be charged to the expenditure of the current year?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: And the $188,000 marked as unprovided items was spent last year, and charged in last year's accounts.

MR. PLUMB: Then the amount to be added to the expenditure of the current year is $659,320.49.

MR. CARTWRIGHT; Yes; it appears to be spent; a very large amount always lapses. Last year, for principal and interest, a considerable sum over three millions lapsed; of course, a large proportion of these two millions was on account of capital rates; but a sum fully equivalent to $600,000 or $700,000 and much more will lapse out of the appropriations for the year 1877; and this thing is always occurring. I have traced it all through from 1876, and it was one of several reasons which induced me to lay last year before the House the proposition to which this House, but the other did not concur in altering the period of our financial year. I find it quite impossible in the case of Public Works and Militia, and also pretty largely in the case of railroads, to prevent these things lapsing over and over; and, undoubtedly, whatever other effect it may have, this is a little apt to confuse members in tracing the expenditure of the current year; but as long as we retain the 1st of July, a good deal of that is inevitable.

MR. PLUMB: Then to the expenditure of 23 million odd for 1877-8, we are to add $659,324?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Yes; as estimates. It is only fair to note that almost certainly a very considerable amount of this will lapse. Probably a sum very nearly equal to the sum here voted. The accounts show that this is almost sure to happen, and it is normal.

MR. PLUMB said that this system of bringing down Supplementary Estimates was excessively misleading.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that ever since we had got into public works to any extent, and into the management of railways, these Estimates had been very heavy indeed. In 1873, the first and last of these Estimates had amounted to 1½ millions, part, of course, going to capital, and part to other accounts, and so on during almost all the other years. He did not like it more than the hon. gentleman, but it was practically impossible to avoid it. The vote here for the St. John's fire and the Prince Edward Island Railway could not have been predicted, and the vote for the Halifax Commission would probably be refunded in one way or other.

MR. TUPPER: What do you mean by refunded in one way or other?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: The British Government made an agreement, as the hon. gentleman is aware, to pay a large proportion of it. No doubt this practice is to be deprecated as much as possible.

MR. PLUMB said that in the Imperial House of Commons this practice of bringing down Supplementary Estimates was very strongly condemned. The system was misleading, and important votes were now brought down which, at this late period of the Session, the House was not in a humour to discuss properly and intelligently. The practice was highly objectionable in all respects; and the hon. gentleman had added largely to these Estimates. The practice had grown.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: That is not correct. In 1872 the Supplementary Estimates altogether amounted to $1,823,341—one for $1,134,350 and the other for $688,999. These do not appear to have included unprovided items.

MR. PLUMB said he could not see any necessity for bringing down many of these votes in this manner. The head of a Reform Administration should have changed this objectionable system.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he agreed, to some extent, with the hon. gentleman. The practice was unobjectionable, and he attempted to change it last year, but the Senate, acting, he believed, under a misapprehension, had neglected the Bill.

MR. LANGEVIN said that when the new system was introduced of allowing the Government by Order-in-Council to carry over votes for the previous year which were not expended and were required to meet the engagements of the different debts for three months, July, August and September, it was intended that the expenditure of the Government should be kept within and voted within that time; but he found that such an Order-in-Council had been passed on the 17th October. This was really in his opinion not in accordance with the law. If they had the votes carried over between July and October, and added them to the $688,000, they would see how matters stood.

MR. CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will find, on page 346 the sums total carried over under that Act, a great proportion of which is carried over here, or asked for, is part of those votes. It was not spent before 1st of October. A great proportion less the capital account on simply repetitions of the unexpended balances carried forward; and not spent within the three months, though this was expected. We must allow the Militia vote, and that for a considerable number of public works and buildings in the category.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

MR. LANGEVIN said that although the law allowed the Government by Orders in Council to carry over appropriations of the previous year, to the first of October of the current year, it was intended that on the first of October, the expenditure for the year ending on the 1st July, should cease. He saw by this Supplementary Estimate that a number of revotes were asked, which were evidently beyond the votes carried over.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: In the greater number of cases they are parts of them.

MR. LANGEVIN said it was evident that a portion of the sums carried over for the three months, had not been paid during those three months, and the hon. gentleman now wished to get authority to pay further sums. It was important that the department should be kept within the appropriation and within the time fixed by law, otherwise the House could never know where it stood. The expenditure was said in one year to amount to so much, and then by revotes, and amounts carried over, and Supplementary Estimates, the amount was largely increased. It was that some of the items in the Supplementary Estimates could not be foreseen, but a large number of them ought to have been foreseen with more accuracy.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said this was a more serious question than the hon. gentleman opposite seemed to think. For all these re-votes there were supposed to be special warrants. There had been a decided breach of the law, and the Government had spent large sums of money unconstitutionally and against the express terms of the law. In the first place, with respect to these lapsed balances, before the Act was passed in 1876 allowing an extension of three months, if any balance remained unexpended, it was absolutely gone.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: No; that was not the practice of the hon. gentleman.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I am not talking about the practice, but the law.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: It was disregarded.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the 38th section of the 31st Vic. chap. 45, was as follows:—

“The said Public Accounts shall include the period from the 30th of June in one year to the 30th of June in the next year, which period shall constitute the financial year; all Estimates submitted to Parliament shall be for the services coming in the course of payment during the financial year; and all balances of appropriation which remain unexpended at the end of the financial year shall lapse and be written off.”

That was the Statute, which was obligatory on the late Government, obligatory on the present Government, and until repealed obligatory on all Governments; and whether the present, or the late, or any other Government, disregarded the Statute, it was equally a breach of the law. On the 30th of June in any year, any balance of appropriation voted by Parliament absolutely lapsed as if it had never been made; and any expenditure of any such lapsed balances was illegal and in the teeth of the Statute, and was an expenditure for which the Government required to get a special Act of indemnity. The Act of 1876 provided that upon cause being shown to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, he might by Order-in-Council extend the time for finally closing the appropriation for the period of three months, and that after the expiration of such time, and not before, the balance should lapse and be written off. If the 30th of June passed, the balance lapsed. They could not revive by any Order-in-Council, the right to expend a balance which had once been lapsed; so that, if the Government could not expend the whole of the money within the financial year, they must, before it was lapsed, extend the time by Order-in-Council until the 1st October. If that were not done, they must wait until Parliament met. He found by the return of the 15th of April that the Government were not acting in ignorance of the facts, but were sinning against their own knowledge of the law. He found that on the recommendation of the Minister of Public Works, respecting the Intercolonial Railway, the balance was extended by Order in Council of the 9th June, 1877. That was all right. He found that afterwards, on the recommendation of the Minister of Militia, a balance was extended by Order-in-Council of the 25th of June—that was within the time—as was also an amount required for the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary which was extended on the same date. Then they found a series of Orders-in-Council all of which were illegal and unconstitutional. By an Order-in-Council of the 12th of July—12 days too late—amounts were extended for the St. Peter's Canal, for the Examining Warehouse in Toronto, for the Custom House, Gaelph, for the Military School Kingston, and for the Harbour of Shippegan. All these sums had been spent illegally, because they were lapsed before the Order-in-Council was passed. So he found an amount for the grasshopper relief in Manitoba, extended on the 6th of August. A supplementary vote for the expenses of the New South Wales Exhibition, and one for the preparation of Criminal Statistics, and one for the unexpended balance for census purposes. All expended on the same date. All these were illegal and unauthorized by law. And not only that, the chief amount had been expended not only after the 30th of June but, after the three months beyond that had expired. The utmost extent to which it could be carried on was to the 1st of October, and yet they found that on the 19th of October, there was an Order-in-Council authorizing the expenditure of large sums of money. This was a double irregularity. The Government were aware that they had broken the law and were personally chargeable for the expenditure of this money, and then they passed Orders-in-Council for special warrants. Take one instance in which the Government were authorized to spend $236,587 chargeable to capital, and $34,718 chargeable to income. Here was the report:

"On a memorandum dated the 15th October, 1877, from the hon. the Minister of Finance, stating that having had under consideration the reports of the Ministers of Public Works, Militia and Agriculture, respecting certain balances of appropriations of 1876-77 which have lapsed, and it appearing that the continued expenditure for these services, which are not otherwise provided for, is necessary, he concurs in the recommendations that these appropriations be provided for by the Governor General's warrant in accordance with the provisions of the Act 31 Vic., chap. 5, sec. 35.

There was no necessity for special warrants if the votes had not lapsed. The only thing to do was, before the 30th of June, to extend the time. But no, they had neglected to do so, they tried how they could get round the law, and so they had recourse to a special warrant.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: They could not extend the vote beyond the 1st October in any case, and that was dated subsequently.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: They cannot revive a dead vote; they can only extend a vote when it is alive.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Of course.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The time had gone and the Government had no power to extend it. Then what were the cases in which the Government could issue special warrants.

"If, when Parliament is not in Session, any accident happens to any public work or building which requires an immediate outlay for the repair thereof, or any other occasion arises when any expenditure, not foreseen or provided for by Parliament, is urgently and immediately required for the public good, then, upon the report of the Minister of Finance that there is no Parliamentary provision, and of the Minister having charge of the particular service in question that the necessity is urgent, the Governor-in-Council may order a special warrant to be prepared," etc.

In the Order-in-Council there was no suggestion that this was unforeseen, or that it was not provided for. No Minister could candidly, or honestly, say that these expenditures were not foreseen, because they had been especially provided for by Parliament.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: There was no Parliamentary provision. It had ceased.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the whole meaning of the clause referred to an unforeseen emergency, like that in St. John, where the fire swept away the public buildings, or the case of an inundation by which the canal locks were swept away, so that the Minister could honestly state that there was an urgent and immediate necessity for the expenditure. But this was an attempt to set aside the authority and control of Parliament, because the money had run out. Suppose that, instead of any one of these votes being lapsed, the whole of the money had been expended, and some of the work had been unfinished, would any hon. gentleman, or any constitutional lawyer contend that, because the estimate voted by Parliament was insufficient, the Government could issue a special warrant to finish those works. That was not the principle upon which such votes were made. It would make parliamentary control a farce, and worse than a farce. The hon. the Premier, when in Opposition, had taken the ground that, in the time of the late Government, there was not a sufficient parliamentary control. The statement was rung through the country, that they had exceeded their authority, and expended money for which they had not the authority of Parliament; and it was alleged that the new Government were going to bring Parliamentary expenditure completely within the control of Parliament. It was important that that control should be exercised before the money was expended. The object of these statutes was to have a preventative effect. The whole benefit of these Acts was lost, if the Government could do what they pleased in the way of expenditure, trusting to the subsequent vote of a majority. It was to prevent the Government becoming despotic, because they had a majority behind them, that these statutes were passed. So much was that the fact, that, as they all knew in a similar case, the British Parliament was not satisfied, the Chancellor of the Exchequer was not satisfied, the British Parliament would not allow him to be satisfied by a subsequent insertion in the Estimates of the next year of the unauthorized expenditure of the Government. In such cases there was an Act of indemnity introduced, such as was introduced by the late Government, of which he had been a member, to cover the expenditure which they were obliged to make between the 1st July, 1867, and the first Session of the first Parliament of the Dominion of Canada. This matter was of the very greatest importance, because it had not been done in ignorance. The Government saw that they had by error, or by omission, or perhaps by the neglect of a subordinate officer, omitted to carry on these lapsed balances; but there was no justification for the course they had taken. This was a very serious matter, and deserved to be brought before this Committee, and before the House, in order that any Government, whether present or future, should be prevented from acting in this way. If the late Government had, on any occasion, set a bad example, hon. gentlemen were bound to cure it. They ought not to set a bad example to their successors, whoever they might be, in following what they termed the evil paths of the corrupt, effete Government which preceded them.

MR. CARTWRIGHT, while admitting generally the correctness of the principle contended for by the hon. gentleman, pointed out that there were cases of emergency in which all Governments must depart from the rule laid down in the statute. The evil complained of would be largely ameliorated if the change in the period of the fiscal year which he had recommended had been made.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he could hardly add anything after the admission of the Finance Minister. He might say, though, that there could certainly be no urgency for such works as the tower to the Western Block.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: We did not spend the money there. We only intended to do so.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the hon. gentleman had the intention to do the act, but not the audacity.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Oh, well, they say good intentions pave the road to one place; perhaps bad intentions pave the road to another.

Vote agreed to.

MILITIA.

- |  |             |
|--|-------------|
| 218. Ammunition — Balance of Appropriation of 1876-77 unexpended on 30th September, 1877, and carried forward by Special Warrant (Revote) .....                  | $23,854 99 |
| 219. Clothing—Balance of Appropriation of 1876-77 unexpended on 30th September, 1877, and carried forward by Special Warrant (Revote) .....                      | 10,078 12   |
| 220. Military Stores—Balance of Appropriation of 1876-77 unexpended on 30th September, 1877, and carried forward by Special Warrant (Revote) .....               | 25,642 21   |
| 221. Drill Sheds and Rifle Ranges —Balance of Appropriation of 1876-77 unexpended on 30th September, 1877, and carried forward by Special Warrant (Revote) ..... | 2,771 54    |

222. Ordnance and Equipment of Garrison Artillery — Balance of Appropriation of 1876-77 unexpended on 30th September, 1877, and carried forward by Special Warrant (Revote) ..... 9,626 48

MR. BUNSTER urged that a shed should be erected at Nanaimo for the use of the volunteers there. He complained that the Palliser gun sent to Esquimalt was to be placed at Quebec.

MR. JONES (Halifax) said the gun was not cast yet, but when it arrived the Government would decide as to its destination.

MR. MACKAY said he would draw the attention of the Government to the fact that Sydney Harbour, which was frequented by a large number of vessels, was perfectly defenceless; there were also the mines, which required protection. He felt it his duty to call the attention of the hon. the Minister of Militia seriously to the fact, that there was so much valuable property in and about the port of Sydney. Hundreds, and he might say thousands, of vessels went there annually and they were entirely open to having a raid made upon them by vessels which, under ordinary circumstances, if there were only some means of defence, might be wholly prevented.

MR. JONES (Halifax) said the Government had fully recognised the importance of making preparations for the defence of so important a place as Port Sydney; but, of course, at present, as the hon. gentleman was aware no preparations on any very great scale or expenditure on any great scale had been made in reference to any part of the coast. However, they had in view what had been going on, and the Department had been bestowing attention on this subject. They had already given orders to organize a battery of artillery at Sydney, and were about despatching three or four guns for the battery for the defence of the harbour in case of necessity.

Vote agreed to.

MR. CARTWRIGHT.

	Mounted Police, N. W. T. required to pay for supplies furnished in previous years .....	$10,772 78
223	Amounts required to cover expenditure incurred for buildings in 1875.6 ....	8,110 43
	Amount required for buildings, 1877-78 .....	10,000 00
		<hr/> $28,883 21

In answer to MR. LANGEVIN,

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that the first item $10,772.78 was wholly composed, he was informed, of a variety of supplies furnished at different times and places by the Hudson Bay Company to portions of the force while marching about in that region. Until very recently they could not get in accounts together, much less check them. There were he supposed $2,000 or $3,000 in each year or thereabouts some of it dated back as far as 1874 and 1875 certainly. The remainder was incurred during 1876-7. In travelling over that country it was an object to carry as little supplies as possible, and the force had had to indent, from time to time, on the Hudson Bay stores, which were always tolerably well supplied. The others were sums expended on buildings at Fort McLeod, which was being reconstructed at Wood Mountain, at Milk River Post, at one or two other posts in that vicinity, and at Fort Saskatchewan and other places. Originally these posts, though reasonably well built, as far as the walls went, were roofed with mud, and since they had sent portable mills to these points, they had replaced the roofing in vogue with boards and shingles as fast as the troopers could manufacture them. These four or five posts were where this expenditure had chiefly taken place. The task of providing suitable buildings for so large a body of men with horses, at four or five distant posts, was rather an enterprise. All the work that was possible was done by the men themselves.

MR. LANGEVIN: Could not the accounts for these $10,772 been in before 1878?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: They were applied for, but only sent in within a few weeks, at the outside four or five months.

MR. LANGEVIN: I am afraid that this is due to the bad management of the force. It was very bad at the time. We could not obtain the accounts, and for two years we voted large sums without proper information. We complained of it frequently, and the result is, we find that the accounts are left behind, and now $10,772 is to be paid. How much more is to come?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I am informed that this closes the matter. This force commenced its career under very difficult circumstances indeed. They were sent 1,000 miles from their base of supply, Winnipeg, and back, in all 2,000 miles, as nearly as I recollect. We did not then know the country as well as now; and there was undoubtedly an immense expenditure of horse flesh and a very considerable expenditure of stores and supplies, quite above the ordinary rate. It was not until well in 1876, that we could pretend to get the accounts into anything like regular order, or place the men at regular quarters.

MR. LANGEVIN: The force is most costly.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: It is.

MR. LANGEVIN: It is the most costly service in the world per man.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: The United States force is much more expensive.

MR. LANGEVIN said the expenditure would be found extremely large if all the items were added together. The horse feed cost a very great deal, as would be found if the total was divided by the number of horses.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I have done it often enough.

MR. LANGEVIN: It is enormous.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: It is very heavy.

MR. LANGEVIN said that the expenditure should be reduced in the future. It could be done, and still keep the force efficient.

AN HON. MEMBER: Who are the furnishers?

MR. LANGEVIN: They are numerous. I have no doubt that, after the examination which was made before the Public Accounts Committee, hon. gentlemen opposite will see that the contract system there has to be looked after and remedied with proper care. Undoubtedly, better articles may be furnished and at a lower rate. We should have had this vote of $8,110 for buildings in 1875-6. The hon. gentleman should have known that shelter was required. We should not be asked after three years have elapsed to vote money already expended. Has this item been expended?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I imagine not from the statement here.

MR. LANGEVIN: Where is it required.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: At the several points I have enumerated.

MR. LANGEVIN: For present shelter?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Partly for enlarging considerably these several posts, and partly for putting these buildings in better order. It is necessary to shingle and board them. We have had to surround them in many places with picket fences and provide something in the nature of magazines and officers' quarters.

MR. POPE (Compton) said that the ordinary estimates showed a reduction in connection with this force of $300, and here was an additional expenditure of nearly $29,000.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that the average expenditure was about $1,000 per man and horse, and the total about $350,000 per annum. In the present state of the country he did not consider any material reduction possible; but these expenditures were decreasing, and he hoped that they would decrease very considerably; but under no circumstances, owing to the high rate they must pay for good men, could the expenditure be reduced much below $700 or $800 per man and horse, including all contingent expenses. This might be taken as about the fair nominal expenditure. The bulk of this extra expenditure was for buildings.

MR. KIRKPATRICK: The hon. gentleman said the other day that the cost of this police force arose in a great measure from the cost of transporting supplies, and he noticed in particular the article of oats.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Yes.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said he held in his hand a letter from Battleford, in which complaint was made that all these transactions for oats were made at Winnipeg, and consequently the cost of transporting them to outlying districts was great.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Quite a mistake.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said this letter informed him that oats from Winnipeg up there cost from $2.60 to $3, of which $2.38 was freight, at the rate of 7c. a pound, while the same quality of oats could be got in Battleford for $1.50. Oats, as far as possible, should be purchased at these parts, and thus cultivation should be encouraged.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that they had very few troopers at Battleford. The great bulk of feed was required at Fort Walsh and Fort McLeod, which could not be supplied from Battleford. The cost of oats was, however, reduced to $1.50. At Battleford the total expenditure for this purpose would be small; of course, these officers had instructions to get all the oats possible at these posts, but no small quantity was required, and up to the present very little had been raised in these places.

Vote agreed to.

PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS
CHARGEABLE TO INCOME.

224.	Beaver Rock, B.C.—Unexpended Balance of 1876-7, carried forward by special warrant, re-vote .....	$9,800 00
	{ Guelph Custom House—unexpended Balance of 1876-7, carried forward by special warrant, re-vote.....	6,328 26
225.	{ Toronto Post Office—To pay amount of Official Arbitrators' Award to Contractors, etc., partly paid out of "Unforeseen Expenses, vide Parliamentary Paper .....	20,000 00

MR. LANGEVIN: Is this the last payment?

MR. CARTWRIGHT.

MR. MACKENZIE: Yes; it is really already paid. We have taken $154 for architect's commissions and some small things.

Vote agreed to,

226.	{ Quebec and Lévis Fortifications, Repairs—
	Expenditure required for this service .....	$7,200 00
	Montreal Examining Warehouse—Estimated cost for completion of building .....	$10,000 00
	Montreal Post Office—Amount required for completion of building .....	16,037 07
		33,237 07

MR. MACKENZIE said the last year $20,000 was in the Estimates for ordinary expenditure for repairs on fortifications. Up to 1st January, 1878, they had expended $17,191, and $2,809 was still available. The Chief Architect estimated expenditure, now very desirable, at $10,000, and the above balance with this vote made up the amount. He did not propose, however, to expend much of this vote; though some of it should be spent during the coming two months before the next financial year began. They had only $60,000 for all the fortresses.

MR. LANGEVIN: I approve of it.

MR. MACKENZIE said that the gun traverses for fort No. 1 must be attended to. He hoped they would not need to arm the force; but, if possible, fort No. 1, which commanded the channel, must be armed. These traverses should be built at once.

MR. DESJARDINS: What is the amount of extra work done on the Montreal examining warehouse?

MR. MACKENZIE said he could really hardly tell now, the statement had been prepared last Session. Nothing was then done except to deepen the foundations additionally. The present item was chiefly for engines, boilers and hoisting apparatus, partitions and some stairs, and several matters of that sort. The total sum required to complete the building now was $18,533; and they had on hand about $3,000.

MR. DESJARDINS: Does the vote for the Montreal post-office include the putting of a clock in the tower?

MR. MACKENZIE: No.

MR. KIRKPATRICK: We will not give them any tick.

MR. LANGEVIN: Is there any claim for the contract still standing?

MR. MACKENZIE: I understand not.

MR. LANGEVIN: How much has the whole building cost?

MR. MACKENZIE: I think about $350,000—between $350,000 and $370,000. The land cost about $150,000. The old building was sold for $90,000 or $100,000; $10,000 was paid down and the balance was bearing interest at 6 per cent.

Vote agreed to.

227.	St. John, N.B., Public Buildings—Amount of Special Warrant granted for clearing away debris and rebuilding, during the year, the Public Buildings destroyed by fire.....	$50,000 00
	Buildings, Battleford, N. W. T.—Amount of Special Warrant granted to complete these buildings.....	$30,000 00
228.	Unexpended balance of 1876-7, carried forward by Special Warrant, on 30th September, 1877, (Revote).....	4,587 88
		$34,587 88

MR. KIRKPATRICK said he wished for a statement of the buildings erected on Swan River and also at Battleford.

MR. MACKENZIE said he could not give the information at present as to the cost of the Swan River buildings, but the cost of the Battleford buildings had $58,795, including the Lieutenant-Governor's residence, stables and outbuildings, buildings for the Mounted Police to some extent, with the magazine, and the residences of the Stipendiary Magistrate, the Registrar, and the Clerk of the Council, as well as the Registry Office. All the officers except the Governor paid a rental, but the Government had been obliged to put up the buildings.

Vote agreed to.

229	Penitentiary, B.C.—Amount of Unexpended Balance, 30th September, 1877, carried forward by Special Warrant (Revote).....	$19,106 89
230	Gas, Public Buildings, Ottawa—To pay for increased consumption during the year.....	5,000 00
231	Cobourg Harbour—Part of Unexpended Balance of 1876-77 (Revote).....	6,583 31
232	Shippegan Breakwater, N.B.—Unexpended Balance of 1876-77, carried forward by Special Warrant (Revote).....	9,630 37
233	Cow Bay, C.B.—Unexpended Balance of 1876-77, carried forward by Special Warrant (Revote).....	1,343 87
234	Colville Bay, Souris Breakwater—Balance due to Contractor.....	8,500 00

LIGHTHOUSE AND COAST SERVICE.

235	Maintenance—To replace Di-optic Apparatus for Machias Seal Island Light destroyed in St. John Fire.....	3,000 00
	To replace Oil destroyed in St. John Fire.....	3,500 00
	Repairing damages at Rondeau Lighthouse.....	1,600 00
	Repairing damages to Breakwater, Goderich Light-house.....	2,600 00
	New Light Ship for the Traverse.....	6 000 00

FISHERIES.

236	Fish-breeding, &c—For new Fish-breeding Establishment, Prince Edward Island.....	2,500 00
	For new Fish-breeding Establishment, Cape Breton.....	2 500 00

SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS.

237	To aid in constructing and maintaining Telegraph Line between Matane and Fox River.....	5,000 00
-----	---	----------

STREAMBOAT INSPECTION.

239	To complete remeasurement of Steamers in Inland waters..	300 00
-----	--	--------

INDIANS.

238	Indians, Manitoba and North-West—Further amount required for this service.....	10,927 66
-----	--	-----------

MR. SCRIVER said he desired to refer to the Indians of Two Mountains. He was not present when the discussion took place on the item, and he knew it was not in order to refer to a previous discussion. But he might refer to a letter addressed to the Deputy of the Minister of the Interior, to the agent of the Department at Oka, in which the views and policy of the Government of the day in reference to those Indians were very distinctly laid down. He regretted that the Government had seen fit in that letter to pronounce so absolutely, as they seemed to have done, an opinion in reference to the rights claimed by the Indians settled there. He had nothing to say as to proprietary rights and rights of the soil; but it could scarcely be maintained that these Indians having resided there so long, and made the improvements they had made, had no rights whatever. Indeed, he believed, under the law of the Province of Quebec, they had some rights in regard to improvements, for which, if they removed from that place, they would be entitled to compensation; and the gentlemen of the Seminary, as they learned from this letter, had recognized those rights by offering to give the Indians a sum of money if they would remove. He regretted also to perceive from the letter that the Government were not disposed to treat the Indians with that liberality which they might fairly claim at their hands. He had no doubt that the Indians were not, in a sense, the wards of the Government, and were not entitled to claim at their hands any amount of money; but they were certainly in an exceptional position. The policy of the Government in reference to the Indians had been in some respect an exceptional one. It was no fault of these Indians that they were situated as they were, and that they were dependent as they were upon the good offices of somebody. He had no doubt, therefore, that the House and public opinion generally would sustain the Government in pursuing a more liberal policy towards them than they seemed disposed by this letter to pursue. It was not for him to say whether the amount offered by the gentlemen of the Seminary to the Indians was an adequate sum. He was not sufficiently acquainted with the case to say whether it was or not. But the sum of $20,000, which would not amount to more than $60 or $70 for each family, was not sufficient to enable the Indians to place themselves elsewhere; to provide themselves with comfortable habitations, and to give them a reasonable expectation of making a comfortable livelihood. He was informed that the Government, through their agent, had strongly advised the Indians to accept the offer, and if so, they proposed to secure for them Cockburn Island, in Lake Huron. But that if they accepted that offer they must pay for it at the rate of 50c. an acre out of the money they received from the Seminary. If they took out of that amount the cost of their removal from Oka—for they did not find that the Government proposed to defray that—very little would remain. He was sure that public opinion would sustain the Government in supplementing the offer of the Seminary. These Indians should be provided with a reservation somewhere in the North-West Territories. Let the Government treat them with the same liberality as white settlers. Under the homestead law, emigrants into that territory were provided with a free gift of 160 acres, and there was no reason why the Indians should not be dealt with in an equally liberal spirit, by giving them a certain reservation. Should that be done, should the Government defray the expense of their removal, and give a sum in addition to that offered by the gentlemen of the Seminary, it could be reasonably hoped that the Indians would be enabled to procure a comfortable livelihood in that territory. He noticed also in that letter that the Government threatened, in case a settlement was not arrived at, to withdraw their agent altogether, and leave the Indians to their own resources, or to the protection of those who had assumed to advise and assist them in their troubles. He sincerely trusted the Government would not do this. The presence of the agent had been of incalculable advantage. Since he went there, there had been no troubles or difficulties of any kind, and the agitation which would be certain to arise in no settlement were arrived at, would result in perhaps more serious troubles than any that had yet occurred, and which the presence of the agent would tend to diminish. He was glad the hon. member for North Hastings was here, that the false impression he labored under, regarding the supposed neglect on the part of the counsel for the Indians, might be removed. So far from that being the case, he had been extremely assiduous and attentive, and had made sacrifices, not only of personal convenience, but also of money. The judgment obtained reflected anything but credit on the part of the gentleman employed by the Seminary to defend their case.

MR. CHRISTIE said he thought a liberal policy should be adopted towards these Indians. There was now a large extent of fertile land in the North-West, which the Government were endeavoring to colonize, by means of giving free grants of land to white emigrants, and not only that, but the Government had loaned money to the Mennonites and Icelanders to enable them to effect a settlement in that territory. He did not see why the same liberal policy should not be extended to the Indians, who, if they were settled on good lands, and fairly started, would be able to take care of themselves, and would cease to be in any way a burden on society. This policy would put an end to the existing difficulties, and which had been such a bone of contention in Oka for the past ten or fifteen years. He quite agreed with the previous speaker, that it would be unwise to remove the Government agent from Oka until a settlement had been arrived at.

MR. MACKENZIE said his hon. friend, the member for Huntington, appeared to find some fault with the Department for the letter written by Mr. Murdoch to him, simply as a letter of instructions on behalf of the Government, and when the writer stated that the evidence received by the Department had uniformly been that the Indians had no legal title to the soil, that the gentlemen of the Seminary were not trustees but absolute proprietors, and that no suit against the Seminary, with the view of obtaining possession of the property for the Indians, would be successful, he simply stated what the uniform legal advice had been, and the advice of irresponsible lay gentlemen could hardly be stated to outweigh the opinion of lawyers.

MR. ROCHESTER: Lawyers differ very often.

MR. MACKENZE: No doubt they did; still his hon. friend went to them occasionally when he got into a tight place. It was quite clear the Department could not assume the Indians were proprietors of the soil as long as the Courts declared they were not. There had been one decision in court, and the Department was paying the costs of an appeal from that decision. That appeal had not yet come off, although from a letter of Mr. McLaren's, published in one or two papers, it appeared the fault was not his, as was supposed when the subject first came up in the House a few nights ago. Mr. McLaren stated that the case would come off and be decided, and that, in his opinion, the Seminary had not a legal title to the land. That would be determined when the case would come up for review; in the meantime, the Government could only act on the opinion given by the law officers of the Crown for years back, as well as legal advice obtained elsewhere. That was the whole extent of Mr. Murdoch's letter. As to the question of what it was desirable to do with the Indians, the Government would be prepared to give the utmost consideration to anything reasonable which Parliament might sanction in regard to their removal.

MR. ROCHESTER said there had been a great deal said about this Oka Indian affair, and although the hon. the Leader of the Government had said they had legal opinion that the Indians had no right or title to the soil, he did not say where that opinion came from. Lawyers, like doctors, differed in their opinions. If the Government found that those unfortunate creatures had no legal right or title to the soil, it was to be hoped the Government would take these unfortunate creatures in hand and not deal any worse with them than with emigrants coming to the country, and not send them to that island referred to by the hon. member for Huntington, which had been before occupied for three years by Indians who had then abandoned it. He hoped the Government would see that justice was done to these people, whose forefathers had lived at Oka for generations.

MR. BOWELL said if the hon. member for Huntingdon had been present when he (Mr. Bowell) referred to this subject, he would not have come to the conclusions he had, as to the meaning of the language which he (Mr. Bowell) had used. He had no doubt the hon. member had based his opinions upon a report in a Montreal journal of what purported to be his (Mr. Bowell's) utterances on that occasion. He (Mr. Bowell) took this opportunity to state that that report was as incorrect as it could possibly be, and could only be accounted for by the supposition that it had been made for a purpose. With reference to the case before the court he had particularly found fault with the Government for not taking steps to have it finally settled, and that as it had been stated in a letter of Mr. Laird, Minister of the Interior, that money had been appropriated to test the question of the rights of the Indians, it was unfortunate that they, the Government, as custodians of the Indian interests, and to a great extent guardians of all the Indians in the country, though not, perhaps, entirely of those in Two Mountains as with other tribes, had not taken a more active part in seeing that these unfortunate difficulties had been brought to a final settlement. He had said, further, that it had been stated that a snap judgment had been obtained by the lawyers of the Seminary, by the case having been allowed to go by default, through the negligence of those acting on behalf of the Indians. He had said that he personally did not know that to be the case, but that it had been so stated in the Press. He had called the attention of the Government to the fact that difficulties had arisen in that locality which might possibly have been prevented had the Government taken more decided action. He now found by a letter of Mr. McLaren, the counsel for the Indians, that he denied most positively that any money had been given to him or any one else. So far as he knew, in connection with the matter. He would read an extract from Mr. McLaren's letter, in reply to the Minister of the Interior's statement that $100 had been paid for law costs. He says:—

MR. ROHESTER.

“For instance the hon. Mr. Mackenzie stated that the Government had paid out money for this case, and the hon. Mr. Mills said they had paid something less than $100. The truth is that they have not paid a single cent. On the contrary, when I required in Court some documents in the possession of the Government and which were necessary for the Indians case, they refused to let a clerk of the Department attend the trial with these papers, unless I previously sent them his expenses, and I was compelled to pay money out of my own pocket.”

He (Mr. Bowell) thought he was quite justified in the remarks he had made in reference to the manner in which this whole case had been conducted. From Mr. McLaren's statements as given in the letter from which he had just read, certainly he was not to blame in not having this matter fully settled. He quite concurred in the remarks of the hon. member for Huntingdon with regard to difficulties which had occurred at Oka. The Government was blameable to this extent, that after having taken upon themselves the responsibility of making advances to test that question, they being the guardians to a greater or less extent of these unfortunate people, they should have seen that those difficulties had been brought to an amicable settlement. He knew the Government said they had nothing to do with the matter, but, having offered money to test the rights of the parties, and in view of the troubles that had occurred, the matter should not be allowed to drop. He was afraid the hon. member for Huntingdon had made the same slip of the tongue as he (Mr. Bowell) had been assured of making, and for which a Montreal paper had taken him to task, and upon which Mr. Borland had written a three column letter on the point that stated that the late Minister of Interior had made a report in connection with this question, in which he declared that the right of property was not vested in the Indians, that that report had been accepted by his successor, and that he (Mr. Bowell) on reading it and other documents, had come to the conclusion that if the Indians had no rights in the soil, that is direct legal rights, they had, he (Mr. Bowell) had, no doubt, certain rights of which they had been deprived by those whose duty it was to take care of them. In all the deeds he had read of the cession of this land by the French king, some hundred and fifty years ago, there was always a certain duty devolving upon the gentlemen of the Seminary. He had not been able to find that the gentlemen of the Seminary had been wholly or partially relieved of that responsibility, even by the latest legislation which had taken place. That was the statement he had made before, and the one which he made now. He hoped he was wrong in the view he had taken of the rights of the Indians to the soil; he hoped they had rights which certain legal gentlemen said they had. He hoped they might be placed on a footing by which they could support themselves as respectable members of society, instead of having to meet all the difficulties they had in the past, and he believed all this might be done if energetic steps were taken by the Minister to that end.

MR. LANGEVIN said a settlement of this question, for the sake of peace, should be arrived at as soon as possible. He understood the Seminary was disposed to act liberally towards the Indians by giving the Government a sum of money for them. If a proper place of settlement could be found, the best thing that could be done would be to accept the offer of the Seminary and remove the Indians.

MR. MILLS said if his hon. friend would look at the letter to which he had referred, he would see that it was an official letter from his deputy to an officer of the Department, and which ought not to have appeared in the public prints at all. It contained instructions to an officer appointed there for a special purpose, advising him, owing to the peculiar circumstances connected with the Oka difficulties, to endeavour to secure the assent of the Indians to some compromise. If the Indians had a legal right to the soil, he would advise, if necessary, to go into Court and prosecute that right. But that was not the opinion nor the advice of the Minister of Justice, nor of the legal adviser of the Department. Early in the winter a delegation in favour of those Indians waited on him, consisting of Messrs. Ferrier, Nelson, Chief Joseph, and one or two others, with whom he discussed the question very fully, in which he indicated what he considered the proper course to adopt, and pointed that they could not hold the Government responsible for not having settled the question, and at the same time claim the right to contest the right of the Seminary in a Court of law. He advised them to leave the matter in the hands of the Government, which they agreed to do. When these gentlemen returned to Montreal, he understood, their course did not meet the approval of their friends, and so the matter stood. The Seminary renewed their offer made two years previously, to pay the Indians or the Government on their behalf $20,000 if they would withdraw from the lands. His opinion was that the Indians should accept this offer. If the Indians had accepted, the Government were prepared to ask Parliament for an appropriation to obtain a suitable location on which to settle them. Unless the two parties came to an understanding, he did not see what the Government could do in the matter. The Government could not force the Indians to accept the Seminary's offer, nor the Seminary to agree to the terms proposed on behalf of the Indians. They had done this in the interest of the Indians, and to protect any right they might have to the fullest extent.

In reply to Mr. ROCHESTER,

MR. MILLS said that the legal advisers of the Department, the hon. member for Kingston, the Hon. Mr. Dorion, the present Minister of Justice, Mr. Bernard, when acting Deputy Minister of Justice, and the present Deputy Minister, also legal advisers, had given advice on this question.

MR. ROCHESTER: And the late Minister of Justice (Mr. Blake).

MR. MILLS: He gave no formal opinion on this subject, as it was particularly a question of Lower Canadian law.

MR. ROCHESTER: Was it referred to him?

MR. MILLS: Not since I came into office.

In reply to Mr. ROCHESTER,

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said it had been referred to him. He examined the title as well as he could, and it appeared that the Seigniorship belonged to the Seminary which had no express trust, apparently, as to looking after these Indians. It seemed to be an absolute Seigniorship, like any other, on the face of the instrument; and so he expressed it; but he did not profess to be an expert in Lower Canadian law. Other gentlemen of the legal profession were of a different opinion; and, as it had excited great attention and was a question of great hardship to these poor people, he had recommended, and the Government had adopted and afterwards confirmed the suggestion, that the Indians, and those who took up their course, should have the opportunity of trying a case, the expenses to be paid by the Government. So that the first thing to do was to get a final decision from the Court as to what the relative position of the Seminary and Indians was. Until their respective rights were settled, the Government could take no steps. This once decided, the case of the Indians could be taken up. There was a strong expression of opinion that until this occurred, the Indians should be left undisturbed in every possible way, and the gentlemen of the Seminary had said they would certainly do so, if the Indians would not trespass or commit destruction which was alleged against them.

MR. SCRIVER said he was glad he had brought the matter up. The hon. the Minister of the Interior had stated that the Government were prepared to deal with these Indians in a more liberal spirit than would be supposed, judging from the letter to which he had referred. He understood from the legal adviser of the Indians, that the suit now pending would not result in deciding the question really at issue; and that there had been difficulty experienced all along as to bringing a suit which would determine these questions. He understood that this could only be done on the part of the Crown; and, so far, the legal adviser of the Indians had not succeeded in obtaining the consent of the Crown to it.

MR. MILLS: I suppose you refer to the Attorney-General of Quebec?

MR. SCRIVER said he supposed so.

MR. BOWELL said that there was a discrepancy between the statement of the Minister of Interior and Mr. McLaren respecting the payment of these expenses. Either this statement was true or it was not. Mr. Laird, in a letter stated that he (Mr. Laird) had consented to pay out of the Indian funds, the cost of a suit brought by the Seminary against one of the Indians; the decision of the Court in this case, which was still sub judice, would determine the legality or otherwise of these supposed rights of the Indians, while Mr. McLaren said that so far from the $100 being paid, the Department had actually refused to allow a clerk to go down unless his expenses were paid.

MR. MILLS said as far as he knew no one had ever been refused such permission. Since he had been in office there had been no case. There had been a criminal suit, but not one which concerned the property title. Mr. McLaren must refer to the payment of Mr. O'Neill's expenses to Montreal last fall. If nothing was paid, nothing had been called for. The Department was certainly not going to interfere to prevent the Indians succeeding, if they chose to act against the legal opinion furnished the Department; but it was a very serious responsibility to institute a suit under these circumstances, as the Indians would thus throw away the possibility of receiving anything. They had done everything in their power to receive a settlement on the best possible terms for the Indians. If they had asked Parliament for nothing, it was because they saw no prospect of it being made available.

Vote agreed to.

MR. MILLS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

240. Halifax Commission. — Amount required to cover expenditure (partly to be refunded).....$57,000 00

MR. CARTWRIGHT: The arrangement between ourselves and the Imperial Government is that they and we pay half, pro tem. We had advanced the whole sum. If there is no difficulty about it I suppose that it will come out of the award.

SIR ALBERT J. SMITH said that $30,000 was voted last year, making in all $87,000. The whole expenditure at Halifax amounted to $96,000. The American Government contributed $12,000, its share of the joint expenses. To witnesses were paid $28,000; to counsel, four in number, $28,800; printing and stationery, $3,000; Secretary and assistant about $3,000; and shorthand writers about $3,000. Newfoundland paid her counsel.

Vote agreed to.

241. To pay the Hon. Sir Alex. T. Galt, K.C.M.G., for services rendered as Commissioner, Halifax.....$12,000 00

SIR ALBERT J. SMITH said he considered that Sir A. T. Galt was entitled to this sum for his services; he made no specific charge.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he did not say that the amount was excessive for the services of Sir A. T. Galt. The only question that arose was whether the Government could or ought to pay this to a gentleman who held a judicial position. Was each country to pay its own arbitrator, and Judge a sum of money?

SIR ALBERT J. SMITH: The Treaty provides for it.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said, if so, that met the difficulty.

SIR ALBERT J. SMITH: The third Commissioner was to be paid jointly by the two Governments.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said there could be no objection in the ordinary way to such a proceeding respecting arbitrators, but the objection was this: A Commissioner was supposed to go there as Judge to decide against his own country, if he thought he should do so in honesty, law and justice.

SIR A. J. SMITH: Would you not pay a Judge?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that Judges had salaries for life, and were quite independent, but in these occasional arbitrations, if it was understood that each nation would give a fee to its arbitrator, the consequence would be that if they were successful in getting a very large verdict, and a bigger fee followed, they would work as hard as they could to get a large fee. The principle was not a good one.

SIR ALBERT J. SMITH: The United States paid their Commissioner, I know. Mr. Delfosse behaved very handsomely. He would not accept anything. We deposited $2,500 to his credit, and the United States did the same; but he refused to take anything beyond that.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I have not the slightest objection to the amount Sir A. T. Galt deserves for the care and attention paid to the case.

Vote agreed to.

- 242. Parliamentary Companion.— To pay for 350 copies..... $ 525 00
- 243. Commutation of Duties, Army and Navy.—Further amount required for this service..... 4,000 00
- 244. To pay his Grace Archbishop Taché balance of his expenses incurred on the occasion of his return from Rome in 1870, at the request of the Government of Canada .... 3,000 00
- 245. His Excellency the Governor General's visit to Manitoba. —Balance of expenditure incurred and paid through "Unforeseen Expenses." Vide Parliamentary Paper..... 1,778 45
- 246. Grasshopper Relief.—Unexpended balance of 1876-77 carried forward by Special Warrant (Revote) ..... 381 81

COLLECTION OF REVENUE.

Customs.

247. Amount required to complete this service (Manitoba and N. W. T.)..... 2,500 00

Excise.

248. Preventive Service.—Amount required to complete this service..... 2,000 00

Inspection of Staples.

249. Amount required to complete this service..... 2,000 00

Public Works.

250. Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways.—To meet the expenditure caused by increased traffic..... 100,000 00

In answer to Mr. LANGEVIN,

MR. MACKENZIE said the vote taken last year was $1,600,000. The Superintendent desired at the time to get more than that, but he (Mr. Mackenzie) had cut the Estimate down, hoping that the expenditure could be kept within that amount. The expenditure for 1876-7, for ordinary working expenses, was $1,761,673, and, if to that were added the proportion of expenditure for renewals which belonged to that year—$200,000—the total would be $1,661,673. In 1877-8 the ordinary working expenses would be $1,550,000; or with the amount added for renewals, $1,750,000—an increase of $88,000 over last year. The appropriation, however, had been only $1,600,000. The traffic had largely increased during the current financial year, the increase being a little over $100,000 up to the 1st January, and during the four months since that, somewhere between $75,000 and $90,000. They expected a total increase of $225,000 over last year. This had, necessarily, caused an increased expenditure.

MR. LANGEVIN said the additional $100,000 would only make a total appropriation of $1,700,000, while the estimated expenditure was $1,750,000. What about the other $50,000?

MR. MACKENZIE said he had stated that it would be absolutely necessary to reduce the expenditure, if possible, and as there had been no serious expenditure for the last six or eight weeks, on account of the favourable weather, they might fairly hope that a reduction might be possible.

MR. LANGEVIN: Then the hon. gentleman thinks that with that amount he can go on to the 1st of July.

MR. MACKENZIE: We hope so.

Vote agreed to.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

251. Canals—For payment of one year's salary to Mr. Woodruff in recognition of his services as Superintendent of Welland Canal, after 28 years' services $3,000

MR. MACKENZIE said he had received many letters from this gentleman, who was removed from his position as Superintendent of the Canal, not, as he understood, so much from the views of the Government or of the hon. gentleman who was then Minister of Public Works, as on account of a public clamour which had made him, for a time, unpopular in his position. The petitions presented by Mr. Woodruff from time to time had seemed to him (Mr. Mackenzie) to present a strong claim for consideration, but he had referred the matter to Mr. Page for a report, and Mr. Page took the ground that Mr. Woodruff was very hardly used on that occasion; and that having been a very faithful public servant for so long a period, if he were removed from his position something should be allowed him. He had paid into the Superannuation Fund for a short time, but he had been some twenty-eight years in this office, and appeared to have been a most energetic public servant, and one who, if he had some faults of temper or otherwise, had worked hard and diligently to discharge the duties devolving upon him. He had, therefore, felt justified in recommending to Parliament the payment of one year's salary to Mr. Woodruff as something in the shape of a gratuity in leaving office.

MR. LANGEVIN said he did not remember the circumstances of this case, which occurred in 1872.

MR. McCALLUM said Mr. Woodruff was a most efficient officer for many years, but there had been quite a clamour raised on the Welland Canal to induce the late Government to remove him. He made himself unpopular by carrying out his duties and economizing the public money, and a fund was got up by the mill-owners and others on the Welland Canal, and they subsidized a Toronto paper to write down this man. He was glad to see that the Government was going to do justice in a measure, though it was but tardy justice, to a deserving public officer.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said this should not have been put in the Supplementary Estimates, and the House should have had the papers brought down, because it would appear that some injustice had been done to Mr. Woodruff. His recollection was that he had been a good active officer on the whole; but he had been spoilt. He had had the management so long that he considered himself irresponsible, and there were grave irregularities reported. The first report on them was very strong; but it was thought better that he should be dealt with as mildly as possible, and the Order-in-Council on that subject was greatly modified on account of his past services. It was a bad example that when an officer had been judicially dealt with by one Government their successors should reverse the decision. However, he had no doubt the Government had considered the matter, and he should not oppose the vote.

MR. MACKENZIE said he quite admitted that no Government should rightly reverse the action of their predecessors in a matter of this kind. He did not say that it might not have been thought desirable, even although no charge were proved, to make a change in the management. The papers, however, did not show that any charge was proved against Mr. Woodruff, nor did the Order-in-Council say so.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I know that; it was modified.

MR. MACKENZIE said a newspaper, which at the time was published in Toronto, had seemed to make a speciality for days or weeks in getting up statements against Mr. Woodruff, which, in the newspaper, appeared to be very formidable, but when investigated, turned out to be not very reliable. If there was any irregularity, he did not think there was any approaching a fraudulent character.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: No, I do not think there was.

MR. MACKENZIE said Mr. Woodruff was a man of strong passions and high temper, and with some people who were troublesome about the works, he was not so popular as he might have been, but with the business men and others, he believed he was considered an excellent Superintendent.

MR. McCALLUM said no Superintendent on the Welland Canal before or since had discharged his duties better, he might say, as well as Mr. Woodruff. He had annoyed the mill-owners by refusing to give them the water which was necessary for the navigation of the canal for the purpose of driving their mills. At meetings which they held, they denounced him as being too economical and not expending enough money on the canal. He (Mr. McCallum) never knew of Mr. Woodruff's having been tried, though he was aware that public opinion was against him at that time. He had never heard of any serious charges being made against him, and considered that it was only doing him justice to give him this amount, as he saved money to the public in his management of the Welland Canal for many years, as hon. members would see by referring to the Public Accounts.

Vote agreed to.

252 Telegraph Line—Haro Strait, B.C. .... $3,500 00

Post Office.

253 To pay Grand Trunk Railway for claim for daily transport of mails over 149 miles of railway, between the Canada Boundary Line and Danville Junction (Maine), from 1st July 1867, to 31st December, 1874, when by Postal Convention with the United States, the conveyance of these mails was assumed by the United States Post Office ..... 7,776 22

Dominion Lands.

254 Further required to complete this service ..... 12,500 00

Unprovided Items of 1876-7.

255. Vide Public Accounts, 1876-77, part ii, page 338 188,965 64

MR. CARTWRIGHT said the chief expenditure was for the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway. Both the receipts and expenditure on that road had increased. This year they had taken steps which they hoped would prevent any recurrence of the unprovided items. There was then an item of some $12,000 on account of the Customs expenditure. The Minister of Customs had endeavoured to reduce that below what he found it necessary to expend, though this year he believed he would be able to keep to his original estimate.

MR. LANGEVIN said the first item on page 339 under the heading of collection of revenue was $24,000 for excess of expenditure over appropriation of Customs. That service was increasing yearly though the revenue was decreasing. There was a deficit of nearly one and a half million dollars in the revenue. He did not say the revenue should have decreased in proportion but it should not have increased.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said the actual expenditure in 1876-7 was $721,604, and in 1875-6 it was $621,000. The Estimates had been cut down in 1876-7 to a sum considerably below the expenditure of the preceding year.

MR. BURPEE (St. John) said the Estimates had been cut down \$254,000 in the hope of reducing the expenditure, but certain unprovided charges had arisen. Had the prices of goods remained as high as in 1874-5, the revenue would have been  $1\frac{1}{2}$  millions over the amount received. The depression was due entirely to the decrease in the value of goods, not in the quantity. The service could not be reduced.

MR. LANGEVIN said the hon. gentleman now added $24,000 in addition to the Estimates of last year to cover the expenditure.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said this was included in the $77,000. It was money for which a vote had been taken last year, and, therefore, one had now to be asked.

MR. LANGEVIN said the Estimates this year was $705,836. What guarantee was there that an additional vote would not be required next year for this service. Why not ask at once for the amount required?

Mr. McCallum.

MR. BURPEE said he thought the Estimates for the year would cover the expenditure. Of course there were a few months yet to run, which would reduce the amount. In order to make the service complete they had combined the whole correspondence with Russia—and everything that concerned the boundary and navigation of these rivers on one paper; also the correspondence relating to the carrying of a criminal down the river to a place of security at Victoria. This man was claimed by the United States on the ground that Canada had no right to take him through their territory, and the Imperial Government took this view.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he had no objection to the hon. gentleman calling attention to the fact that amounts paid were in excess of amounts asked for, but it was also fair to call attention to the fact that for the year ending 30th June, 1877, there was an immense amount of lapsed balances, that was to say they spent much less than they asked for. For Civil Government they spent $88,600 less than they asked for; for Department of Justice, $35,000 less; on legislation $44,000 less; and so on through a great variety of cases. They spent $24,000 more in Customs; but it had been expected that certain buildings would be completed. This did not take place as anticipated and $5,000 extra for rent had to be expended; and it could be reasonably expected, besides that, from $7,000 to $8,000 would be saved. They spent $27,000 less in Excise. To a certain extent all these things were unavoidable. Although there had been a certain number of extra votes carried forward, the total amount of lapsed balances much more than counter-balanced all asked for; so that the Estimates though they might be exceeded in one or two particulars, as a whole presented a very fair statement of what the wants of the country really were in gross.

MR. LANGEVIN: Nevertheless we ought to have the exact amounts as far as possible.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Certainly.

Vote agreed to.

Resolution ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolution reported.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

ORDER DISCHARGED.

The following orders of the day were severally discharged and the Bills withdrawn:

"House again to go into Committee of the Whole on the Bill (No. 32) Further to amend the Acts respecting Stamps on Bills and Notes.

House to go into Committee of the Whole on the Bill (No. 43) To facilitate the Colonization of Dominion Lands, by providing for the incorporation of Railway Companies, and aiding the construction of Railways, traversing such Lands.

Second reading of the Bill (No. 47) to provide for the transfer of Lands and Estates and Interests in Lands, in the Territories of Canada by Registration of Titles,

ADULTERATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL

—[BILL No. 76.]

(Mr. Laurier)

THIRD READING.

The said Bill was considered in Committee of the Whole reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

MR. CARTWRIGHT delivered the message from His Excellency the Governor-General.

MR. SPEAKER read the messages and they are as follows:

DUFFERIN.

"The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, further Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the services of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1878; and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

"GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
"OTTAWA, 2nd May, 1878."

DUFFERIN.

"The Governor-General transmits to the House of Commons, further Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the services of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1879; and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

"GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 6th May, 1878."

MR. CARTWRIGHT moved that the said messages and further Supplementary Estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

TRAFFIC IN INTOXICATING LIQUORS BILL.—[BILL No. 75.]

(Mr. Mackenzie.)

THIRD READING.

The said Bill was again considered in Committee of the Whole, amended and reported.

MR. MACKENZIE moved the second reading of the amendments.

MR. ORTON said it was true that the temperance sentiment of this country was very strong, and that it was highly important that our people should become a sober and a temperate people. Those who were honestly and earnestly endeavouring to produce that good effect in this country deserved commendation. They were doubtless patriotic and noble men, and he who would, from selfish, sordid or unworthy motives, put any obstacle in the way of abolishing the evils which arose from the immoderate use of intoxicating liquors, deserve the reprobation of the community. However, he (Mr. Orton) could not help feeling that in a temperance point of view, this Bill would be utterly useless; and, further, that it was an outrage upon the civil rights of a large portion of the people of this country. As a temperance measure, he felt that it would be quite as useless as the Dunkin Act had been proved to be. In regard to that Act the universal opinion on the counties where it had been passed was that, instead of decreasing the evil effects of drinking, it had rather increased them, and, along with that, it had brought other and worse evils of a different description in those counties in which it had been in operation. In the Inland Revenue Department the deputy, the other day, had stated that in those countries where the Dunkin Act had been in operation the consumptions of whiskey had enormously increased. The tendency of the Dunkin Act was to do away with the consumption of malt beverages and to increase the consumption of whiskey. On behalf of the brewers he protested strongly against this Bill.

Amendments read the second time and agreed to.

MR. MACKENZIE moved the third reading of the Bill.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew) said one of the great defects of the Dunkin Act was the five gallon clause. In this Bill the clause providing that a merchant might sell ten gallons of liquor was also a serious offence. Why should a merchant be permitted to sell an article within the limits of a particular locality which no person was permitted to be purchased? He moved that the said Bill be not now read a third time, but be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same by striking out sub-section 8 of clause 99.

MR. BERTRAM said this Bill granted power to a county to prosecute the sale of intoxicating liquors within its own midst. This sub-section went against that power, and if the principle of the Bill were to be agreed to, the amendment of the hon. member for Renfrew that this sub-section should be struck out was correct.

Motion in amendment negatived on a division.

Bill read the third time and passed.

MANITOBA PUBLIC SCHOOLS BILL.

[BILL No. 78.]

(Mr. Mills.)

SECOND READING.

House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:—

MR. ORTON.

"1. Resolved, That by Section twenty-two of the Dominion Lands Act, Sections 11 and 29 of the Public Lands in each township in the Province of Manitoba are set apart, to be sold at some future time in order that a fund may be realized for the maintenance of public schools within the Province.

"2. Resolved, That the Government of Manitoba have applied to the Government of Canada to have the school lands within the limits of that Province transferred to them, to be sold for the purpose of creating an educational endowment.

"3. Resolved, That it is not in the public interest in consequence of the sparseness of the population and its probable rapid increase within a few years, and in consequence of the additional value which these lands are likely to acquire because of that increase in the population, that they should be disposed of at the present time.

"4. Resolved, That it is expedient, however, to assist, in the meantime, the cause of education in the Province, and that with this view the sum of ten thousand dollars be placed at the disposal of the Government of Manitoba, in aid of the public schools therein, annually for a period not exceeding three years, and that the several sums so advanced with the interest thereon, at the rate of five per cent. per annum, be recouped to the Dominion Government from the first sales of the lands so set apart for educational purposes.

(In the Committee.)

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second times and agreed to.

MR. MILLS introduced a Bill (No. 78) To authorize the advance of certain sums to the Province of Manitoba, in aid of the public schools therein.

Bill read the first and second times.

House adjourned at Twenty minutes before
Two o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 7th May, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CANADA CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

RESOLUTION PROPOSED.

MR. MACKENZIE moved:

"That this House do ratify the Order in Council dated April 18th, 1873, respecting a subsidy to the Canada Central Railway Company, passed under authority of 'An Act to provide for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway,' 37th Victoria, chapter 14."

He said it would be remembered that on the 13th of March, 1873, an Order-in-Council passed in November of the previous year had been approved by the House, granting a subsidy of $12,000 per mile to the Canada Central Railway, from a point in the vicinity of Renfrew or Douglas, stretching northwards towards the mouth of the French River, or on a route which was generally described in the Order-in-Council as ascending the valley of the Bonnechère from the vicinity of the village of Douglas via Golden Lake and Round Lake, thence by as direct a line as may be found to Burnt Lake, and thence to the proposed terminus of the Government railway, at about the eighty-fifth mile from the Georgian Bay. For various reasons, which he need not now enter on at length, this Order had failed of its purpose. A considerable tract of the country which had to be traversed was found to be more unsuitable than had been anticipated from Mr. Hazlewood's report, he having reported the whole route as favourable. The Government at that time were desirous of adopting the shortest possible line from Georgian Bay eastward, as the object of subsidizing this road and building the Georgian Bay Branch was to have the most direct line from the eastern waters of Georgian Bay to Montreal, as the converging centre of the railway system. Mr. Foster had become the contractor for the Canada Central Railway, under the operation of this Order-in-Council. He had failed to execute the contract up to the time of his death, and fresh negotiations were entered into in the meantime with the Company, with the view of ascertaining to what extent they were prepared to carry out this order or whether any change that could be made would make it more available for the purpose originally designed by the Canada Pacific Railway Act, and the Order-in-Council based on that Act. Mr. Foster, as the contractor for that road, had been engaged for nearly two years in surveying, not merely the route on which the Order in Council was passed, but the whole country, to a greater or less extent, from Pembroke westward towards Lake Nipissing. A short report of Mr. Murdoch—an engineer employed by Mr. Fleming—deposited in the Public Works Department, seemed to show that there was a considerably more favourable route as to one part, and not much more unfavourable than the best part of the Bonnechère Valley route, though nothing could be better than thirty or forty miles of the Lower Bonnechère route for railway purposes. This route might be said to run parallel to the Ottawa River at a distance of eight or ten miles—sometimes more and sometimes less—from that river, and, generally speaking, following the course of that river and reaching the waters of Lake Nipissing at South River, at what was generally known as the south-east corner of Lake Nipissing. The distance from Pembroke to this point was something over 130 miles. The exact mileage was not ascertained, and by the terms of the Order-in-Council, which he now proposed asking the House to adopt, the Company were to receive a subsidy of $12,000 per mile upon 120 miles, on condition of their building the entire length of the extension from Pembroke to the point he had mentioned on Lake Nipissing, no matter what the mileage might turn out to be. That was the provision which related to the change of route. The provision as to payment was in the original Act as follows:

"That payment of the subsidy shall only be made on the completion of the railway in sections of not less than twenty miles, each payment to be made on the certificate of an Engineer to be appointed by the Government that a section, or sections, is completed. Payment may, however, be made of an amount equal to the subsidy on twenty miles on work extended over a longer distance, which in value will be equivalent to not less than twenty-five miles of finished roadway. Payment will also be made on rails delivered at any point of the line to be constructed to the extent of 75 per cent. of the value thereof, such rails to be property of the Government until they are laid on the road for use.

In the new Order-in-Council an amelioration of the terms of payment was provided for. The terms were as follows:—

“That payments be made to the extent of eighty per cent. of the said bonus of $12,000 per mile on the completion of every ten miles. One-half of such payment may be advanced when work equal to five miles is completed on any one section, on the certificate of the Chief Engineer that satisfactory progress is being made. And payment to the extent of sixty per cent. may be made on work extending over twenty-five miles on the certificate of the Chief Engineer that such work is equal to ten miles of completed track—the balance to be paid on the entire completion of the railway to the Nipissing road at the south-east corner of Lake Nipissing. Provided that payments may be made upon rails delivered to the extent of seventy-five per cent. of the market value thereof, the amount so paid on rails to be deducted from each settlement of ten miles—all payments to be made on the certificate of the Chief Engineer.”

They further recommend that payments be made to the extent of eighty per cent. of the work actually executed on the completion of every ten miles, in the proportion which $13,000 per mile bears to the actual cost of each section. There was a further provision in the order, put in at the instance of the company, which was of opinion that it might serve them much better if they were to have a guarantee of interest on a certain amount of bonds to be issued instead of payment by money. As they did not expect to build the road on anything like the Government subsidy, they thought of issuing bonds for the purpose of completing the balance and obtaining subscriptions of stock to the necessary amount. The order, therefore, provided that the company should have the option of substituting the payment by the Government of the interest, or part of the interest, or bonds of the company running over such term of years as may be hereafter approved by the Governor in Council in lieu of the mileage subsidy referred to. Calculations would, of course, be made so that whatever interest should be paid on the bonds should not exceed on its ultimate results the entire amount of subsidy provided to be paid—that was $12,000 per mile on 120 miles. These were the provisions of the Order-in-Council. The reasons for the change were simply that they found it difficult, if not impossible, to get the extension executed over the original line; that they believed that while this line was undoubtedly longer—the precise additional length he could not state, but it was probably somewhere between thirteen and eighteen miles—it was yet much more favourable to the Government in another way. It was extended westward by the application of this subsidy to a point 10 or 20 miles nearer to the terminus on the Georgian Bay Branch at French River or Cantin's Bay.

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew): What is the distance to Cantin's Bay?

MR. MACKENZIE said he did not know the exact mileage, but certainly it was not in excess of 55, and he did not think it exceeded 50. This took them nearly twenty miles nearer to Georgian Bay, and thereby saved the Government the cost of construction to that extent. During last season two or three parties were engaged west of this point to find out whether there was an available track in a nearly straight line from Cantin's Bay to the mouth of Pic River on Lake Superior. They had a located line, or rather an instrumentally surveyed line, from Pic River to Nipegon. This country was to a great extent somewhat rough, still there was a possibility of getting a fair route there, though it was a question as to what extent it would present favourable features, as it had only been travelled over. But in any case they reached the point they proposed to reach by this route, viz., Cantin's Bay, by constructing a shorter distance west from the end of the subsidized line at the south-east corner of Lake Nipissing at South River. The hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Masson) said it was not the south-east corner of the lake.

There was another point further east, but not so far south.

MR. MASSON: But you stated in your speech at Sarnia that you were going to the south-east shore.

MR. MACKENZIE said that this met that point at any rate, though it might be a matter of opinion which was properly the south-east corner of the lake. One was very much farther east, but the other was a good deal farther south. He thought it was unnecessary for him to say anything further on this point, unless he might be required to give further information or explanations on points on which he had not explained himself as freely as he might have done.

MR. TUPPER asked how much this change would increase the distance from Ottawa to the south-east point of Lake Nipissing.

MR. MACKENZIE said it depended very much on the curvature of the line. If the country, as described by Mr. Murdoch, turned out to be favourable, the curvature must be rather less than usual, and, in that case, he did not think the length would exceed ten or twelve or thirteen miles additional. If the curvature turned out to be larger than on the central line, then, of course, it would increase the length. They might fairly assume that by taking that route the length would be increased by, at least, thirteen miles, but it might not be so. There was another point to which he wished to allude. At the time that they had first discussed this Order in Council, there was a project for building the road—or rather there were arrangements to construct a road—on the Quebec side. That project had not been completed. The Quebec Government had since practically completed that road from Aymer to Montreal, and it was proposed to build it to a point above Portage du Fort. He did not know the precise point, but undoubtedly the extension from Pembroke would be much more suitable for the purposes the Quebec Government had in view,—the opening up of the Ottawa Valley, although some hon. gentlemen in this House believed the branch should be taken up the Ottawa on the north side. But there was no doubt that this was wholly impracticable, and, in fact, it would involve a double crossing of the river. Besides, a crossing could be had comparatively easy from the Quebec railway system to the road not far from Ottawa, and its continuation would be very direct from the city of Montreal to its terminus at the eastern waters of Lake Huron. This would complete the scheme the Government had in view in 1874, in introducing the Railway Bill, the object being to use the waters on Lake Huron and Lake Superior for a time, until the financial condition of the road would be stronger, and they could afford to build the road from that point westerly to the connection with the main line west of Lake Superior. That was the object in view, and he thought that object would be attained perhaps as well by the new route, by the simple addition of a few miles, as it would by the old.

MR. MASSON said that were he disposed to consider this question and what had occurred to-day from an exclusively partizan point of view, he might rejoice at the position in which the hon. the Premier had placed himself. He remembered how he and other hon. members of the Opposition had been badly received last year when they stated how imprudent it was for the hon. the Prime Minister to undertake to build a railway on the heights of land where everybody acquainted with geography knew the road was almost impassable, and without having had any instrumental surveys at all made. He (Mr. Masson) had on that occasion gone further. He had asked this House to vote a resolution that no money should be granted for the Georgian Bay Branch or the whole scheme unless explorations were made on that and other routes. His motion was outvoted by the great mass of the supporters of this Government, including all the Liberal party from the Province of Quebec, and the House decided that no explorations should be made on the North Shore of the River Ottawa to ascertain whether a better route could not be obtained in the Province of Quebec or further north. When the Opposition brought in the report of Mr. Walter Shanly, the engineer of Mr. Foster stated there were difficulties in the proposed route, the hon. the Premier rose and said he had the report of Mr. Fleming, which contradicted that of Mr. Shanly, and he assured the House there were, in the central route which he had now abandoned, any obstacles of any kind; they were entirely fallacious. To the deputation which waited on him, in 1874, of which he (Mr. Masson) was a member, he said the route he had adopted was the easiest one, having the smallest grades, except, perhaps, the Canada Southern Railway itself. The hon. gentleman to-day again committed an error of the same kind. The hon. gentleman had given again his reasons for not following the North Shore of the Ottawa, namely, that part which was in the Province of Quebec, that the route was considered almost impracticable. There had been no reports made to the Government on that route since the report of the Northern Colonization Company, by Mr. Legge himself; none that he (Mr. Masson) knew of. The Government were not now in a position to state whether the route would not have been as easy on the Lower Canada shore as on the Ontario shore, and Mr. Legge's report clearly indicated the Quebec route as the best. There was, he must admit frankly, something in the movement made by the Government which was a little better than their policy of two years ago. It was true it was taken from the policy of the hon. members on this side of the House, but he was glad to be able to compliment the hon. the First Minister, and to say that now and then he took opinions coming from the Opposition, though he did so, in this instance, at least, very tardily. It was time for the hon. gentleman now reluctantly to abandon his famous terminus of forty miles below Lake Nipissing and to come back to Lake Nipissing. What had, however, been the consequence of the whole action? The hon. gentleman had kept this scheme floating upon the country a long time, and large sums of money had been wantonly expended because the hon. gentleman would not yield his point.

Mr. Masson.

He insisted he was right even against the opinions of engineers.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is not the case.

Mr. MASSON: Well, you did not consult them.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I consulted my own.

Mr. MASSON: The hon. gentleman consulted his own. The hon. gentleman now saw that his engineers badly misled him. As a matter of fact the route was chosen by the Premier without the report of any engineer having instrumentally surveyed any portion of the line at first imprudently chosen. Of what use to the country were the $30,000 paid to Mr. Foster for explorations and investigations from his would-be terminus, forty miles north of Lake Nipissing to French River on the Georgian Bay Branch? What was the use of throwing away that $31,000, unless, perhaps, to know something about the country? He admitted it was very important to know something about the country, but that was not the purpose for which this money was voted. It was voted to build the Georgian Bay Branch, not to make an exploration. If the hon. gentleman did not admit, his friends would admit, at the beginning, that he had made a grave mistake, a mistake which had cost money to this country. He would have avoided making a mistake, had he taken, at the proper time, the advice of those who told him that the country through which he wanted his railway to run was almost impracticable for a railway of the class he wanted to build. The deputation which had waited on the hon. gentleman, received as answer that the Engineer, who said there was 700 feet difference of level between the height of lands and the Mattawan or Quebec route, knew nothing about it. To-day the hon. gentleman was obliged to admit he was wrong, and to come back to the plan submitted to him by hon. members of the Opposition. He (Mr. Masson) did not wish to be as severe on the hon. gentleman as the hon. gentleman would be on him were he in the same position. He would recall to the hon. the First Minister what he (Mr. Masson) had told him two years ago, when the hon. gentleman withdrew the million dollars from the Estimates, thereby implying the Georgian Bay Branch would not be built; at all events, that other plans had been substituted, namely, that before the next elections took place, this matter would be decided. When the contract was given for the Georgian Bay Branch, there was a million dollars put in the Estimates; to-day there was but the paltry sum of $100,000. Why? There were two reasons: first, because whatever the amount might be, it would be useless, the road would not be built at present; second, because the hon. gentleman was afraid to increase his Estimates, more than they had been increased, by the enormous sum of one and a half million dollars, according to what he brought down last night. He (Mr. Masson) had heard some gentlemen tell him that the plan adopted to-day was partly a plan which he had suggested two years ago, and that, therefore, he ought to be satisfied. He (Mr. Masson) had always endeavoured to consider this question above party spirit; he had told his hon. friend what he thought would be in the interests of his country and of his Province. The hon. the Minister of Public Works seemed to have adopted one point which had been suggested to him by the Opposition, namely making the terminus of the railway at Lake Nipissing and where it had been placed by the provisions, although he had not placed it at the proper place on Lake Nipissing as it first agreed, viz., the South-east Bay. The whole difficulty between the hon. gentleman and the Province of Quebec, as he (Mr. Masson) understood the case, was whether the road should be located by the north or by the south of Lake Nipissing. The Parliament of Canada in 1872 voted on this question, and it was decided by the unanimous vote of Lower Canada, including Messrs. Dorion, Fournier and every Liberal from the Province of Quebec, that the route by the south and west of Lake Nipissing was not the route proper in the interests of Lower Canada. The route south and west of Lake Nipissing formed the extreme view of some parties interested in that part of the country, while the route by the extreme north by south of Montreal River, might have been considered by some as the extreme views of the Province of Quebec, and the intermediate view taken by the Government was to pass the railway by the north of Lake Nipissing and by the eastern border of the lake, its terminus being at that point. That was the difficulty between the Government and himself (Mr. Masson) then, and it was the difficulty now; he knew he would not be more supported now than two years ago. It was a foregone conclusion, and the best had to be made of it. He did not blame the Minister of Public Works; if there was nobody on the Treasury Benches to advocate the interests of Quebec, he could not blame him. When the hon. the Minister of Public Works entered the Government, he said: "I will enter the Government with my views and ideas, and will determine the route shall pass by the south and west of Lake Nipissing." The whole of Lower Canada had said "the route should pass by the east of Lake Nipissing," in order to have that route by the north shore of the Ottawa, which was now lost forever. At present, however, Canada had not even an inch of the subsidized branch. Sir George Cartier said: "The railway shall pass north of Lake Nipissing, making a curve in favor of Ontario towards the south; but the railway will be completed by the north shore of the Ottawa from Hull, and will reach, not the terminus, but the junction of the railway north of Lake Nipissing, thereby really giving to the great Pacific Railway that character which it should have of bringing, in as direct a route as possible, the trade of the west from the north of Lake Superior to its sea ports, Montreal and Quebec. If, however, Canadians wished to be sectional, they might require the road to pass fifty miles more to the north of the Ottawa, which would give a straight line from Lake Superior to Montreal." Sir George Cartier yielded a part of that, and consented to a compromise, placing the road, as it had been placed, more favourably to Ontario than the topography of the county entitled it to. The hon. the Minister of Public Works had caused examinations to be made from Cantin's Bay to Pic River. What was the use of those examinations if it was not the intention of the Government to continue the line from French River to Pic. In that case the whole of Lower Canada's case was gone through the will of the hon. the First Minister, and the consent of hon. gentlemen Opposite from Quebec. He (Mr. Masson) deeply regretted the energy of the hon. the Minister of Public Works, because he had imposed his will where, certainly, if other persons had been in the place of those gentleman, he would not have imposed it. He (Mr. Masson) could only protest, as he did last year, against that decision. But the hon. gentleman said they wanted connection with the Georgian Bay. What the Province of Quebec required was not so much connection with the Georgian Bay as to be secure of the direct route of the Pacific Railway in the future. He (Mr. Masson) had told the hon. gentleman, two years ago, that the old plan was the one in the interests of Lower Canada, and the one which ought to be followed; but, if it was a foregone conclusion, that that plan was to be abandoned, he then begged the hon. gentleman to fall back on his own programme of 1874, when he came to the electors in Lower Canada and asked the people for their votes by saying he would subsidize lines in Lower Canada and Ontario. How was this pledge carried out? It appeared as if Lower Canada was a limit which could not be reached by this Government Railway. Instead of connecting at Renfrew, our road could now connect at Pembroke with the Canada Central. Why did the hon. gentleman not, at least, take the subsidized line through the Province of Quebec?

MR. MACKENZIE: The hon. gentleman will remember that we agreed to start an improved survey when we accepted the line. He had mentioned to the House it was the intention and desire of the Government to aid in the connection across the river.

MR. MASSON said he knew that would reach the Ottawa, but would not go an inch in Lower Canada. He asked the hon. gentleman to fulfil his own plan, that plan by which the hon. member for South Bruce said he was obliged to stand, especially in relation to the Georgian Bay Branch, and build the railway in Lower Canada as well as in the Province of Ontario. No; the hon. gentleman would either stop at Renfrew, not going so far as Ottawa, or would stop at Pembroke, and tell the people of Lower Canada: "I am sorry to be supposed to be sectional, but we had rights acquired by the almost unanimous consent of this House, and when I do plead the interests of my Province, I am only asking for justice, to build their own connection." The hon. gentleman would not come to the help of the Local Government of Quebec to build the line. He said the old company which would have benefitted by that was no longer in existence. How did he know that this company which asked him to subsidize that line by the valley of the Ottawa would not be to-day in existence if he had tendered it the help he extended to the Canada Central Company, which comprised more of his own political friends? When he (Mr. Masson) asked the hon. gentleman to bring the railway to the east shore of Lake Nipissing, was his intention only to reach Lake Nipissing? No; it was part of the greater scheme which he proposed, and which met the approbation of many hon. members opposite. His scheme was a broader one than that of the hon. gentleman. He (Mr. Masson) said: "You want to reach the waters of Georgian Bay. Well, instead of building that branch from Lake Nipissing to French River, continue the plan you have begun. You have begun by saying you had to improve the navigation of the river some 20 miles, continue your plan; bring the Georgian Bay Branch to Lake Nipissing, spend some $850,000 in extending water communication up to the eastern part of Lake Nipissing, instead of spending that money on the Branch Railway. By that course, you will have acted to good purpose. You will have extended the water communication, your pet scheme, by some 80 or 90 miles." What was the use of the hon. gentleman's plan to-day? What benefit was it to Lower Canada that he reached the waters of Lake Nipissing, if he did not canalize the river which led to it? The only advisable plan to-day, though it would not be nearly as favourable to Lower Canada as the first one, was, the one which he (Mr. Masson) had begged the hon. gentleman to adopt two years ago, and which met the approval of many hon. gentlemen, namely, to build a canal from French River to Lake Nipissing, to put the terminus at the furthest end of the Lake, the south-east bay, instead of the south bay, to subsidize the line of railway which he approved then, and give Lower Canada a chance of having a railway to the north of Nipissing. The hon. gentleman's plan to-day was against that idea. The hon. gentleman had repeated to-day in the face of his friends from Lower Canada, as recorded from the Hansard, that his idea had always been to pass by the south of Lake Nipissing which he thought was the best route and which would be accomplished. None of the hon. gentleman's supporters, from Lower Canada protested against that route which they had all objected to in 1872. He (Mr. Masson) did not blame the hon. gentleman for having gained his point, but he blamed the Ministerialists from Lower Canada for not having made an effort, for not having protested against this route being adopted, for not having said a word in favour of his (Mr. Masson's) proposition which they knew the Province of Quebec approved, as they had themselves approved of it in the past.

MR. MASSON.

MR. HUNTINGTON said the late Government had intended to carry out exactly what the Premier was now carrying out; but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Masson) felt compelled to condemn it, because, in his position of leadership, he must say something which might serve as a rallying cry for his friends in Lower Canada. This extension of the Canada Central Railway was what Lower Canada had asked for in the desire to reach the waters of the great west, and which the late Government had themselves initiated. The hon. gentleman simply desired to raise a sectional cry.

MR. TUPPER said if there was one gentleman more than another, who was least likely to be charged with sectional views, it was the hon. member for Terrebonne; and it was a peculiar thing that the only charge of sectionalism in favour of his own Province made against him should come from gentlemen from the same Province. It showed a remarkable disinterestedness on the part of the gentlemen who made the charge. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Masson), however, was quite justified in pointing out that the route on the Quebec side was the most advantageous. He (Mr. Tupper) did not intend to enter into a long and vain discussion at this advanced stage of the Session, because he knew it was useless. He might say, however, that it was a pity that measures of such great importance should be brought down so late in the Session. He regretted the previous policy of the Government, the only vestige of which now left was the $109,000 which had been thrown away. But this proposition was decidedly an improvement on the proposal of four years ago. He wished, however, to question the advisability of extending the line beyond the south and east of Lake Nipissing towards French River, in the face of the scheme of canalization, by which it was stated that for $886,000 the navigation of the Georgian Bay could be connected with Lake Nipissing. He trusted that the First Minister would pause at the terminus of the Canada Central, and consider whether it was not advisable to build no further in the direction of the Georgian Bay, and to take advantage of the scheme of canalling, by which a great saving could be effected. He also wished to direct the attention of the Prime Minister to the advantage of getting a complete communication across the North-West during the summer as well as winter. This could be done by building a line to connect the terminus south and east of Nipissing with the line from Thunder Bay and Red River. Had the Pacific Railway been carried out as originally intended, there would have been no necessity to subsidize any line from Toronto to Ottawa to connect with it. Before sitting down he wished to ask the Minister if he had in this case satisfied himself as to the ability of the parties with whom he was contracting to carry on the work. This he would remember was a precaution which he had to confess he had neglected to make in a previous case.

MR. MACKENZIE: I never made such a confession.

MR. TUPPER: Yes; I asked the hon. gentleman in the Public Accounts Committee whether he had taken any measures to satisfy himself that the parties were able to complete the work, and he had to confess that he had not.

MR. MACKENZIE: I made no confession.

MR. TUPPER: Yes; I am in the judgment of the House.

MR. MACKENZIE: So am I, as to what is a confession.

MR. TUPPER said that if the hon. gentleman considered the word confession offensive, he would say that he admitted that he had assumed, rather than ascertained, the ability of the parties to carry out contract. He desired the hon. gentleman to give the House some assurance that he would satisfy himself of the ability of the parties before they received any of the public moneys. There was a clause to which exception, he thought, might fairly be taken; that was the mode of payment on rails delivered. He maintained that the authority the Government had to make any payment for rails delivered was to be taken in connection with the evidence that the contractors were carrying on the work vigorously to completion, and would complete it within the time. If, under this clause, the hon. gentleman could do what he did before, the House ought to alter it. He did propose to criticize the other change, giving the option of payment in bonds of the company, but it would have to be taken in connection with other parts of the contract. He assumed that the arrangements had been made by the Government, and that they were in a better position to submit it to the House now than they were when the Opposition took well founded objections to their previous policy.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. McDOUGALL (South Renfrew) said he thought the Bonnechère River route should not have been abandoned by the Government without further information than they now possessed. The only information which they had as to the new route, was, as it appeared to him, just the same as they formerly had with regard to the Bonnechère route, namely, the walking over the road of a competent person. It seemed that Mr. Murdoch had walked over the route from Pembroke, westward to Lake Nipissing. Mr. Hazlewood did the same over the Bonnechère route, and he thought Mr. Hazlewood was as competent to form an opinion as Mr. Murdoch. He thought an instrumental survey of both routes should have been made before any decision was arrived at. He could quite understand that a great deal of pressure had been brought to bear by the Province of Quebec in this matter, and, of course, the people of that Province had a right to be heard. He thought a very strong point in favour of the Bonnechère route was that the Prime Minister's information led him to believe that the route would be shorter than the other. He was afraid, however, that seeing that the hon. member for Cumberland favoured the change made by the Prime Minister, his (Mr. McDougall's) constituents would see that they had no particular persons in this House to look to for sympathy. He, however, desired to bear testimony to the difficulties which he believed anyone occupying the position of Minister of Public Works must encounter in such a matter as this. From his point of view it would be useless to imagine that everything that a person occupying the hon. gentleman's position would do would be the best thing that could be done in the public interest. This would be expecting more than was reasonable from the hon. gentleman. It was as gratifying to him as to anyone in the House that the hon. the Minister of Public Works had not only been able to answer all attacks on him as to personal dishonesty to the satisfaction of everybody in the country, but those made upon him with reference to the want of judgment and interest in the public works of the country.

Mr. DESJARDINS said the hon. member for Cumberland had stated that if there was a member in this House who was above the accusation of being sectional, it was certainly his hon. friend from Terrebonne; but he (Mr. Desjardins) would go further, and say that if there was a member who had not the right to accuse any member of being sectional it was the hon. the Postmaster-General. When the hon. gentleman uttered the word sectionalism, no one could help remembering what that hon. gentleman had himself done in this direction in their Province. The hon. member for Shefford said that no one opposed the policy actually proposed by the First Minister regarding the location of the route to the south of Lake Nipissing; but he would show by the Votes and Proceedings of 1872 that when Mr. Blake, seconded by Mr. Mackenzie, moved that to the words "the line from the terminus east of Lake Nipissing should extend from some point at or near Lake Nipissing on the south shore," be added "passing if practicable south and west of the said lake," it was strongly opposed; and amongst the hon. members who voted against this proposition, were the names of Messrs. Barthe, Richard, Bourassa, Cheval, Coupal, Delorme, Dorion, Fournier, Geoffrion, Holton, Pâquet, Pelletier, Pozer and Pouliot. Another sectional motion was made on the same occasion by Mr. Dorion, seconded by Mr. Holton; when the Province of Quebec, through the great majority of its representatives was willing to compromise with Ontario, and select the south shore of Lake Nipissing as the terminus of the Pacific Railway. Mr. Dorion asked that the terminus should be located on the further east shore of the Ottawa River, and those who voted in favour of this proposition were Béchard, Bourassa, Cheval, Coupal, Delorme, Dorion, Fortin, Fournier, Geoffrion, Godin, Holton, Joly, Pâquet, Pelletier and Smith (Westmoreland). This proved, he thought, that if sectionalism existed anywhere, it was on the part of the Liberals then, and not on the part of the Conservatives of the Postmaster General, favoured the great political policy which had been advocated by his hon.

friend from Terrebonne, since he (Mr. Desjardins) had had the pleasure of hearing the hon. gentleman speak in this House. The hon. the Postmaster General has also denied that that policy was Sir George Cartier's policy in 1872. A letter from Sir Hugh Allan, then President of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, to the Secretary of State at Ottawa, which he would read, would show the value of such denial as we find in his documents, the whole of the policy adopted by Sir George Cartier, now advocated since that time by his friend from Terrebonne (Mr. Masson) and the Conservative party of the Province of Quebec.

"OFFICE OF THE CANADA PACIFIC RAILROAD
"MONTREAL, 9th July, 1872.

"SIR,—With reference to the last communication addressed to you, by the Secretary of this Company, advising that the Company was now prepared to accept of the contract for the building of the Pacific Railroad, on the terms and conditions authorized in the Act of Parliament; I have now the honour to state, that if the building of the Pacific Railroad is given to this Company, it will agree, with such assistance as may be obtained from the Governments of Ottawa and Quebec or such other assistance as may be given us, to build a branch railroad from some point on the main line of the Pacific Railroad, near and north of Lake Nipissing, to Hull, opposite Ottawa, there to connect with the Northern Colonization Railroad. This route will cross the Ottawa at Deep River or some other point as far up on the north shore of the Ottawa, in the Province of Quebec, as the nature of the country will admit.

"This Company will also agree, with such assistance as we may obtain from the Government of Ontario, or other assistance that may be given us, to build another branch railroad from the Nipissing terminus of the Pacific Railway, to such a point in the Province of Ontario, as will connect the Pacific Railroad with the railway system leading to Toronto and other parts of Ontario."

Here was a Dominion policy, and when they desired to see sectionalism exhibited, they had to go to hon. gentlemen opposite. These facts answered pretty thoroughly the remarks of the hon. the Postmaster General. They were promised this year the sum of $100,000 to build the Georgian Bay Branch Railway. He did not consider this a serious vote, because it was well known from the expenses incurred, merely by the surveys, that the Government could not go very far with $100,000. His impression was, the first Session of next Parliament would see this sum proposed as a revote, and that not one cent would be spent. He believed that it would have the same fate as the vote for $1,000,000, which was voted during two years, 1874 and 1875, to show that there was some semblance of sincerity in the promises which had been made on the hustings in the Province of Quebec during the general election in 1874; and now that we were on the eve of a new election, the Government came down and proposed this vote, to show the electors of the Province of Quebec that their anxiety in this direction was now as great as ever, thinking that their former conduct would be wholly forgotten. This vote was not sufficient, and he did not believe that it would be devoted to the end in question, but would seem only to Liberals that the claims of the Province of Quebec had not altogether been set aside by the present Government.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew) said that he did not propose offering any opposition to the motion now before the House, nor to criticize the action of the Government in changing the route from that contemplated by the Order-in-Council of 1874. The grand object which he and those who thought with him desired, and which should actuate the Government in reference to the construction of the road, was the obtaining of the best and cheapest line for the carrying of the products of the great North-West to the seaboard, and it rested with the Government, and the Minister of Public Works particularly, who had special charge of the Department, to be guided by such information as was in his possession concerning the particular route which would best accomplish this object. He had no hesitation in saying that the contemplative change of route would be greatly advantageous to the people of the Province of Quebec, as they would obtain much easier communication with the Canada Pacific Railway than would have been the case had the original project been carried out. Though he did not pretend to any engineering knowledge, he ventured to say that whilst it might be possible to carry the road to the mouth of the Matawan, on the north shore of the Ottawa, from his knowledge of the country it would be almost impracticable to follow that route beyond the mouth of Deep River. The proposition made by the Government to go on with this work, he thought, should have the support of all the members representing constituencies in the Ottawa Valley, though it was true that the Government had been somewhat dilatory in carrying out this undertaking, which they were bound to consider, from the sentiments expressed by the Premier, one of very great importance. This work, under the Order-in-Council of 1874, should have been completed by 1st January, 1877; it had been postponed for a great length of time, but tardy and dilatory as the Government had shown themselves to be in this matter, if they now intended to carry out this particular work, he thought that they deserved the thanks of the representatives of the section interested. He quite agreed with the hon. member for Hochelaga, that the bond fides of the Government was not very strongly indicated by the small vote placed in the Estimates for this purpose. It seemed to him that if the Government honestly intended to carry out this work they would have placed a very much larger sum in the Estimates.

MR. DESJARDINS.

MR. MACKENZIE: The hon. gentleman made the same mistake as the hon. member for Hochelaga. This Order-in-Council is merely to authorize the Government to pay a certain subsidy; the $100,000 is for the expenditure on the branch west of the subsidized line, which is provided for in Order-in-Council before the House.

MR. MASSON: There is no subsidy.

MR. MACKENZIE: Oh! yes, there is.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: After ratification by Parliament.

MR. WHITE said that this only made matters all the worse. The hon. gentleman had taken no vote for the Canada Central Railway Extension.

There was a vote, it was true, for a work which the hon. gentleman did not say he proposed to go in with this year, but there was no vote for the purposes for which he asked the House to ratify this Order in Council. Regarding one paragraph of this Order-in-Council he would like to have some information from the hon. the Minister of Public Works. It was as follows:—

“That the proposition of the Canada Central Railway Company to extend the line to such a point as may be selected by the Government as the terminus of the Canada Pacific Railway at or near the crossing of the Nipissing Road at the South-East Corner of Lake Nipissing for the sum of one million and four hundred and forty thousand dollars ($1,440,000) should be accepted, upon the condition as to grades, recommended by the Chief Engineer—and that the total payment to be made shall not, under any circumstances, exceed the sum of twelve thousand dollars ($12,000) per mile.

“That the Company shall, within three months of the ratification of this Order-in-Council by the House of Commons, satisfy the Minister of Public Works that they have entered into a bonâ fide contract, or contracts, for the building of the Railway, and have provided sufficient means, with the Government bonus, to secure the completion of the line—and also that the Company shall, from the date of such contracts, make continuously such progress as will justify the hope of the completion of the line within the time mentioned.”

Was the House to understand that the time mentioned in which the work was to be completed meant three years from 10th February, 1877, or three years from the date of the ratification of the Order-in-Council. It did not appear to be very explicit on this point. Although the Order-in-Council specified that the work was to be done upon a certain plan with certain grades and curves specified by the Engineer-in-Chief, yet there was no stipulation regarding the quantity of these rails which were to be used on this particular line. If he understood the policy of the Government with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway proper, it was to be a first-class road and built with steel rails from one end to the other, and the proposition now before the House was to ratify an Order-in-Council granting a subsidy to a road without any stipulation as to the quality of rails to be used, and over which the whole of the traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway was expected to pass. He ventured to say that if the rails now lying at Renfrew, and on which the Government had made a payment were used on this road, it would be very far from being at all equal to such a road as one which was so largely subsidized with public money should be. The position in this Order-in-Council, as he understood it, did not increase the amount of subsidy, although the distance was greater from Pembroke to the point proposed as the eastern terminus of the Canada Pacific Railway than the distance formerly in question. He thought that the Minister of Public Works might very fairly consider the proposition made by the hon. member for Terrebonne and the hon. member for Cumberland. With regard to the canalization of French River, this would not only save a very large sum of money, but also carry out what had long been contemplated by the different Governments of this country, and what he thought must, some time or other, become an accomplished fact. Further than this, the Premier had not decided, as he understood it, that the part of the road leading from the terminus on Lake Nipissing, down to Cantin's Bay could be, or would be, utilized in the further construction of the road to the head of Lake Superior. If the hon. gentleman was not satisfied that the Georgian Bay Branch could be utilized on the main line, he ought to give some consideration to the suggestions made with reference to the canalization of French River.

MR. PLUMB said that the First Minister had stated that the late Mr. Foster had, in his lifetime, failed to fulfil his contract. It was well understood, two or three years ago, that Mr. Foster had given up his contract, and received from the Government a very large sum which had been put up as security for the fulfilment of his contract, which had been undertaken without the slightest knowledge of the country over which this road was to be built; and this was done when hon. gentleman opposite taunted hon. members of the Opposition with having agreed to build a railway without having proper engineering knowledge regarding it, when there was pressure on the country to build such a line. It might be, and he did not doubt that would be, ultimately desirable to build this road; but such was the haste shown, that the arrangement was made in November, 1874, and carried out by an Order-in-Council in March, 1875. The terms which had now been made with the Canada Central, were nearly identical with those which were made before, and he had no doubt that if the change of route, if the money had to be expended, and the work done now was desirable, so far as it took up what might be called the parliamentary line, and brought the western terminus to the point where connection with Cantin's Bay might be made, the subsidized line would be simply extended, making the outer line, to be built by the Government, so much the shorter. The First Minister had stated that a line could be run from there to Pic River, and, if so, he could not see the necessity for laying out a large sum of money in opening a connection from that port to the mouth of French River. He did not see that there was any prospect of a considerable amount of trade coming down by the water stretches. It was not likely that a system of this kind could have any large amount of business, when there was another large competing system. The equipment of this line was very important, and could not be too emphatically brought to the attention of the House. Any route subsidized by the Government, should be laid with steel rails, which was to be part of a line in which the Government was interested, and over which must necessarily pass the traffic of the West. If there was anything in this line at all, over it the bulk of the traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway was to come; and it should be insisted upon that this road should be laid with steel rails. The First Minister had made a very strong argument in the House in favour of relaying the Intercolonial Railway entirely with steel rails; and had said that part of the road laid with iron could not be successfully operated when the other portion was laid with steel. Great objection was raised to the taking up of iron rails not worn out, but the First Minister said that this was absolutely necessary to ensure the successful operation of the road. This was much more necessity in this case, as this road would form the intermediate link in the eastern and most important section of the Pacific Railway. Perhaps the subsidy should be somewhat larger; but it was evident that no road laid with iron could be first-class; and he would look with more suspicion on this road in this relation than on any road in Canada. Again, there were four or five ways in which payments of the subsidy could be obtained, and each one was of a more favourable character to the contractor than the one contained in the previous contract. Every one of them, in some way or other, weakened the position and hold of the Government upon the people, who would build the road. In the first place payment was for every 20 miles completed. Now it was for every 10; and a larger proportion of money was to be paid as the work progressed, and not only so, but there was actually a provision by which the Government should pay out money to the road on mere ballasting and grading, work of the most inferior character, which did not involve the final completion of the line; and the Government might find itself in the difficulty of either losing altogether what was advanced or of completing the road. They were told that the company would have the option of requiring the Government to guarantee the interest on its bonds. Nothing could be more objectionable than for the Government to mix itself up at all with the bonded debt of a railway company over which it had no control. The bonds would be sold with the Government guarantee, and in consequence of this a higher price would be obtained. The guarantee might be for a certain number of years, but the Government did not undertake to pay the bonds, though holders would naturally suppose that the Government was in some way or other responsible. The Government would thus be placed in a false position, and if everything was to be paid it should be so paid as to ensure the fulfilment of the contract and the building of a first-class road.

Not a dollar should be expended on this contract, except as the work went on, and this should be done in such a way as to ensure the absolute completion of the work. Railway building was now hazardous, and great railway proprietors and contractors had met with very serious losses. Many of them were not in the condition they used to be. He did not see that the Government, in making this contract, had secured themselves in any way. Every dollar of this subsidy would be thrown away unless the road was completed. It was perfectly certain that if a large amount was expended on the mere grading and preliminary parts of construction, the Government would be in the position of suffering loss if the road was not completed. They had put themselves, so far as could be seen, in the way of every possible trap that an acute railway contractor could set for them; and in this regard the contract needed the most careful revision. He was mistaken if, before they were through with this, they did not find that there were points which should have been guarded; and that some of these were those to which he called attention. He had reason to suppose that there was a very grave reason which had induced the Government to make a contract in the first place, by which the Government had lost, at least, $100,000, at all events, arrangements should be so made as to ensure the road being first-class, as compared with the road with which it was intended to connect.

MR. LAURIER said that while hon. gentlemen opposite on every occasion, pretended to rise above sectionalism, they never lost one occasion of making a sectional point, and of raising sectional feeling against the Government. The hon. member for Terrebonne had been particularly happy in his denunciations of sectionalism and in claiming for himself that he looked on every question only from a national standpoint; and yet the whole position of the hon. gentleman and the gist of his criticism, and, in fact, its very language, simply amounted to this: that the hon. gentleman objected to the resolution for no other reason than because the subsidized portion of the railway happened to be located on the Ontario side of the Ottawa River and not on the Quebec side. If the contrary were the case, the hon. gentleman would have nothing to say. The hon. gentleman complained bitterly of the Quebec supporters of the Government as being remiss in the performance of their duty, in not insisting that the subsidized section should be built on the Quebec side of the river. Could anything be more sectional than that? The hon. gentleman commenced by declaring he would not be sectional, and in the next breath (the whole objection was simply a geographical one) declared that the subsidized portion favoured one Province instead of another. He regretted that the hon. gentlemen opposite from the Province of Quebec maintained that line of argument; in holding their present opinions they were slapping their own faces and turning their backs upon their former conduct. They quoted the policy of Sir George Cartier on this point. The policy of Sir George Cartier and of the whole Conservative party on this point was precisely the same as the policy of the Government now. In 1877, these gentlemen advocated what they now repudiated. The policy which they held to the electors of Quebec, not only during the elections of 1872, but previous to the elections, was precisely that the Canada Central Railway should be subsidized from Lake Nipissing outwards, to connect at Hull, Ottawa or Pontiac, with the Northern Colonization Railway. He held a speech delivered during the celebrated election in Montreal East, which was fought chiefly upon this Pacific Railway. By their policy, the eastern portion of the city of Montreal was to be made practically the terminus of the Pacific Railway. What was their modus operandi? What they offered to the people of Montreal in support of their views, was exactly what was now proposed. He held a speech delivered by a gentleman, who played a somewhat considerable part in these elections, Sir Hugh Allan. He appeared at a meeting in the month of August, 1872, in the eastern division of the city, and there stated that the terminus of the Pacific Railway was to be at or near Lake Nipissing, that negotiations were going on with a view of constructing a branch from that place to Hull, where it would be tapped by the Northern Colonization Railway, thus making the eastern of Montreal, the real terminus of the Pacific Railway, and that Sir George Cartier was in accord with him on that point. This was the language used at a meeting in favour of Sir George Etienne Cartier.

MR. MASSON: Sir Hugh Allan was not the authorized speaker for Sir George Cartier nor for our policy.

MR. LAURIER said his own impression was he was there.

MR. MASSON: He was not there.

MR. LAURIER said, well, he understood the hon. gentleman to say that when Sir Hugh Allan spoke as he did, he was not authorized, and that he did not deliver the true idea of Sir George Etienne Cartier, whom he represented on that occasion. If so, they had only to choose the other alternative, that all the Conservatives who were there, listening, were simply deceiving the people, and endeavouring to make a political point in favour of their candidate. But these gentleman, however, would not attempt to deny the language spoken by Sir George Cartier himself on the floor of the House, on the 17th February, 1872. He stated that without the Northern Colonization connecting with the Canada Central via the Canada Pacific Railway, the road would be an injury to Montreal, rather than otherwise. His views were that the road should be brought from Lake Nipissing by the Canada Central Railway to join with the Northern Colonization Railway. At that time this country was making itself very industrious to establish a railroad from Montreal to Ottawa River with the avowed object to make connection with the Canada Central Railway. The policy of the Government was exactly to subsidize the Canada Central Railway and to let it be stopped by the system of the Province of Quebec, thus bringing all the benefit of the road to the city of Montreal. Though these gentlemen pretended not to be sectional. Yet when the country was on the eve of elections, they would be sectional; but the thing which would work in 1872 would not perhaps have the same effect in 1878. In 1872 their platform was that the policy of the Government was to subsidize the Canada Central to connect with the Northern Colonization, but knew their policy was altered and the sectional point was raised that this Government was doing nothing for Quebec since it had subsidized a line for the sole Province of Ontario instead of Quebec. As far as his opinion went it mattered very little, indeed, whether the subsidized portion of the road happened to be upon the soil of Quebec or Ontario, if the effect of that subsidized railroad were to bring the traffic to the railway system of the Province of Quebec. This is what it was calculated to do; it could not do otherwise. Take the Railway Act of 1875 which had created the railway system of the Province of Quebec, and what did it say? The very first section held at the policy which was being held up by the Government. It said there was to be a railway constructed to commence at the Port of Quebec, extending from deep water in the same port via Montreal to such port in the county of Pontiac as might be most suitable to connect hereafter that railway with the subsidized portion of the Canada Central Railway. Thus the Legislation of Quebec, when it established its railway system confirmed the position of the Government. It was not without astonishment that he saw gentlemen opposite taking the position they now took. Of course, we were on the eve of elections and this would be made a cry at the next elections. It would be the very reverse of what was said in 1872. Then these gentlemen said to the people of Montreal that the Central Railway should be connected with the Canada Central. Now, the cry would be that the representatives of the Province of Quebec had been remiss in their duty in not forcing the Government to subsidize a line upon the soil, a few acres upon the soil of Quebec, instead of subsidizing a few acres on the Ontario side of the River Ottawa. He trusted the people of Quebec would understand this question, and would support the policy of the Government.

MR. LAURIER.

MR. LANGEVIN said the hon. gentleman began his speech by taking to task the hon. members for Terrebone (Mr. Masson) and Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) saying that they would not take a broad view of a question of this kind, that they looked to sectionalism before anything else. It would have been a great advantage to the Province of Quebec for the Eastern portion of Canada, if the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, from the Province of Quebec in this Government, had been a little more sectional than they had been. If sectionalism meant to be in favour of a policy which would not only develop the other Province, but would also develop the Province of Quebec, his hon. friends from Terrebonne and Hochelaga were sectionalists. They did not wish that every other Province might advocate improvements, and their interests not be looked after. Everything good and profitable to the other Provinces should be voted; on the other hand, the member of the Opposition from the Province of Quebec expected a reciprocity; more than that, they expected that the hon. gentleman who represented that Province in the Government would not close their eyes and shut their ears to its petitions and claims, but that, while they advocated the interests of the other Provinces, they would also look after the contents of their own. The hon. gentleman said that all this trouble was about a mere geographical objection; that meant the hon. gentleman had no objection, would never complain so long as the Central Railway, or any other work, went from one end of the Province to the other. Whether it went through the other side of our line or not, he would not complain. Whether a dollar was expended in his own Province or not was a matter of indifference, provided he could see it from his own windows. Quebec was not jealous of the good fortune of Ontario, but could not be blind by its own interests. The Province of Quebec had gone into debt to the amount of ten to twelve million dollars to complete the railway from Quebec to Hull; and whilst the Dominion Government had to build a railway which might connect with it, they refused to build a mile of railway in that Province. No; Quebec had to build every mile of railway at its own cost, and yet this Government built every mile of the railway, Dominion work, towards which Quebec contributed like others, on the territory of the other Provinces. He did not complain of the Government building railways elsewhere, but they should have helped Quebec. When they saw Quebec expending such a large sum of money, running into debt to that amount, they should have helped it, by giving a subsidy to the line from Portage du Fort or Deep River. But, no; nothing was done. The representatives from that Province supporting the Government did not say a word about it. They remained silent, or, whenever they opened their mouths, it was to say they had no claim; the Province of Quebec need not apply for a dollar from this Government. But the railways built by Quebec were not only for that Province, they benefitted Ontario as well, which to-day used the railways constantly, and which tended to the development of Ontario. The Dominion Government should have answered the call of the Quebec Legislature to help them in their great railway undertakings. The hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue said the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House were slapping their own faces and turning their backs on their own professions. He (Mr. Langevin) was glad the time had come when the hon. gentleman now, after having abused Sir George Etienne Cartier when he was living, having declared that he should be hunted out of public life, after having abused his policy, came down to this House and said: Our policy is the policy of Sir George Cartier. If that were the case, why did they abuse and drive him out of the Province at the elections of 1872. But the policy of the Government, though the hon. gentleman might say so, was not the policy of Sir George Cartier. Sir George's policy was not only to make Montreal the eastern terminus of the railway, but he wished to have that railway to go up by the Ottawa, and, as far as possible, on the territory of Quebec and then to cross Ottawa where suitable, and to continue to the east end of Lake Nipissing, and not at the south end of the lake. Not only that; he and the Government of which he was such a distinguished member, had the idea that that route should be extended west, and not stop at Lake Nipissing. The Government, however, thought it was better to build a little bit of railway here, and another little bit there. They were building two sections from Fort William to the west, then they left a tract without a line, and built another bit farther up. That was the good policy of this Government, what they called the policy of Sir George Cartier. The policy of Sir George Cartier and his Government was to build a railway from one end to the other, as fast as possible, not bits by bits, here and there, but one continuous line, all our own territory, and not to pass through the United States and be a tributary to a foreign power. The hon. gentleman had attempted to quote a speech or a letter of Sir George Cartier's in 1872 in Parliament. The hon. gentleman should have remembered that at that time the railway was only being talked of, there was no settled plan and no contract given, and therefore the expressions of opinion on both sides of the House were mere expressions of opinion. They were then only discussing the project. But when the scheme became matured, Sir George Cartier saw it should be one which would commend itself to the whole Dominion, and that we should have as short a line as possible from the eastern to the western terminus. If quotations from letters of speeches of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House were to be indulged in, he might as well quote the hon. the Minister of Public Works against himself. He said at the time, referring to the connection at Lake Nipissing, that it was a mistake, that it would serve no purpose as far as its navigation was concerned.

MR. MACKENZIE: I say so now.

MR. LANGEVIN: The hon. gentleman said so now; nevertheless, he went to Lake Nipissing. Should the hon. gentleman remain in power, he would have to come to the whole of our railway policy. He would see that it was a mistake to begin his railway at Prince Arthur's Landing instead of at Nepigon Bay. He would see it was a long piece of road uselessly built. This was not what the country wanted. The country wanted a line from one end to the other, from east to west, until it reached the Pacific Ocean. The hon. gentleman had shown a map by which it would be seen that the intended line would go south of Lake Nepigon, between Lake Nepigon and Lake Superior. It would strike Nepigon Bay at the point where the branch of the railway should have been completed for the time being, because when the road from the last would have come from Nepigon Bay, that branch would have become a main line, instead of that he built. The line from Thunder Bay to the west. What would be the consequence? A large portion of that branch would be left south of the main line and would not be required, because at Nepigon Bay, Lake Superior would be touched where there was a good harbour, and, therefore, that expenditure of money was not required, and, therefore, could have been devoted to a much better purpose on the main line. The hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue said there was nothing to complain about so long as the proposed scheme brought the traffic to the Province of Quebec. The people of Quebec did not complain that the railway would bring the traffic to the Province of Quebec, but what they complained of was that the Government did not help their railway undertaking. He (Mr. Langevin) saw the words "entire completion" in this Order-in-Council. Now "entire completion" meant the railway not only complete with the iron and rails, but also with the rolling stock. He wished to know whether "entire completion" meant that the road would not only be built, but kept in running order.

MR. LANGEVIN.

MR. MACKENZIE: Yes, certainly.

MR. LANGEVIN said he must warn the hon. gentleman, in the interest of the country, not to have this as it was.

He would warn the hon. gentleman not to pass the order as it was, for he considered the contract was a very loose one as at present drawn. While it was requisite to put everything into the contract necessary to protect the public interest, there was nothing said about the quality of work. He agreed with the hon. member for Niagara that this road should have steel rails, and not iron rails. There was nothing said in the contract about stations, about rolling stock, or about any matter of detail, an omission which would surely involve the Government in trouble in the future. The contract should contain everything comprehended in the intention underlying the granting of the subsidy. He hoped that the Government would make no advances upon rails until they were laid down on the bed of the road.

Mr. CAMERON said that the Ontario railways would, by the Order-in-Council, be excluded from having running powers over the Canada Central, which he contended was illegal. He also complained that the building of the Georgian Bay Branch and the subsidizing of the Canada Central was part of a scheme which would amount to a diversion of traffic from Toronto, Hamilton and other places in favour of Montreal and the Province of Quebec generally. The expenditure was one injurious to the interests of Ontario. The only way in which they could counteract the influence of the Georgian Bay Branch and the Canada Central was to establish feeders to connect with and tap those lines. In Ontario they were doing that work already at their own expense, and it was, therefore, most unfair that they should be excluded from having powers. He thought some account should be given of the 237 tons of rails which had been given, and also that the company should be compelled as a condition of the bonus to lay down steel rails. He contended that no advances should be made with regard to rails until the rails themselves were laid down. He also objected to advances being made upon little pieces of work here and there, which were of no value until they were connected. The advances should be made upon continuous work only.

After the experience they had of the loss to the country from the looseness with which Orders-in-Council had been drawn, it was their duty to see that the same difficulties and losses did not recur. He moved in amendment.

"That all the words after "that" to the end of the said motion be left out, and the following words inserted instead thereof;—

"In the opinion of this House no subsidy should be granted to the Canada Central Railway Company for the construction of a Railway to connect with the Eastern Terminus of the Canada Pacific Railway, or the Georgian Bay Branch thereof, except upon an agreement being entered into by the Company to grant running powers on terms to be approved of by the Governor in Council to all Railways intersecting or connecting with the said Railway, in accordance with the provisions of the Canada Pacific Railway Act, 1874."

Mr. OUIMET said he was glad to understand that the Province of Quebec was better off under this proposal than it was under the previous scheme of the Government. The Minister of Inland Revenue had been very quick in stating that he and his colleagues had at last succeeded in doing something for the Province of Quebec, but the electors of that Province would see that it was due, not to the Ministers, but to nature.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK said he desired to call the attention of the Government to what appeared to him to be a clear departure from the law in this Order in Council. This Order in Council was passed under and by virtue of the 14th clause of the Pacific Railway Act, which provided :

"The Governor in Council may also grant such bonus or bonuses, subsidy or subsidies, to any company or companies, already incorporated or to be incorporated, not exceeding twelve thousand dollars per mile, as will secure the construction of the branch lines extending from the eastern terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to connect with existing or proposed lines of railway."

And, also, that the Governor in Council might do, with respect to giving other roads running powers over the road. This empowered the Government to grant a bonus not exceeding $12,000 per mile to secure the construction of the branch line. This Order-in-Council proposed to do something more; and something which the Governor in Council had no power to do. It granted the bonus of $12,000 a mile to the Canada Central Railway, and assumed to do more. It said that the company should have the option not of taking the bonus of $12,000, a mile, but of substituting for it payment, by the Government, of the interest on the bonds of the company; and, therefore, those payments might extend over twenty or thirty years; which the Government had no right to do. They had no vote out of which this money could be paid. There was no authority in the Statute for forming any fund out of which these payments could be made. They had power to grant a bonus, but no power to grant anything more. To give the company the option of having the interest on their bonds paid was beyond the power of the Government, and would be ultra vires. He did not see how the Governor in Council could make another Order guaranteeing this interest. No authority for it existed in the statute. He thought that this matter had been overlooked. The proposal with regard to the payment of the rails would leave the Government open to the same chance of having old and bad rails foisted on them, and of paying for what would be useless, and of being, so to speak, robbed. They had to pay for rails when delivered. There was a remarkable difference between the two clauses,—first, the work was to be paid for, on the certificate of the Engineer, that satisfactory progress was being made, but for the rails no such certificate was required, as long as they were delivered, the money was to be paid.

MR. MACKENZIE: The hon. gentleman is mistaken. All payments are to be made on the certificate of the Chief Engineer.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said that a certificate was required, with regard to the work, as mentioned, but no such certificate was required with regard to the rails.

MR. MACKENZIE: Nonsense.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said that the Order-in-Council was before them, and they knew what had been done in the past. He would not have thought it necessary to call attention to this, if they had a careful Government; but experience told them that the Government paid for rails, when not a sod had been turned, nor the first commencement of the road made, and when they were dumped down from six to ten or twelve miles from the place where they should be. They were likely to have the same thing occur again.

MR. KIRKPATRICK.

MR. WOOD said that the object of the deputation, which waited on the Government, some three or four years ago, when this scheme was proposed, was not to protest against the building of this Georgian Bay Branch Railway, but to receive, if possible, from this Government the building of two lines running north from Lake Ontario to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The First Minister had refused the request, and, he thought, wisely. If this proposition had been entertained, the Premier would, no doubt, have been besieged by deputations from other sections, asking for similar favours; and the people of Ontario, who paid the larger proportion of the taxes, would have had to pay for the lines from the east as well. The deputation, and some of its members were Conservatives, went away perfectly satisfied that the Government was pursuing a course which was in the interests of the country. He was not at all afraid that this branch railway, when built, would divert trade altogether from Kingston, Hamilton, Toronto or London. The merchants of these places were quite prepared to compete with the people of the east; and, if they could not do so with these privileges, they must stand on one side and let the people of the east do the business. The hon. member for North Victoria had said that it was directly against the interests of Ontario to have this branch built; but he took a different view. This work would necessitate the expenditure of a large amount of Government money in Ontario; it would open up the back-bone of a country which had never been opened up before, and would be of very great advantage to Ontario. He was quite satisfied that the Ontario Government would take the opportunity of subsidising such roads as would be in the interests of the Province, to reach the Pacific Railway when it was constructed. He did not think that this Government would take the responsibility of preventing the Province from connecting with this road; and he was quite satisfied that his hon. friend was mistaken in the view he took of the Act of Parliament on which this Order-in-Council was passed.

MR. BOWELL: How?

MR. WOOD said he was quite satisfied that the Government would adhere to the terms of the Act passed in 1874. So far as Ontario was concerned, he thought that the building of this branch would be in its interests and that it would be against the interests of the Government to entertain the scheme of granting subsidies to the various Provinces, in order to make connection with the Pacific Railway. He, therefore, hoped that the Government would refuse any such proposition. If the various Provinces, however, wished to do so out of their own funds, let them do so.

MR. MASSON: This is a vote of want of confidence in the Government.

MR. WOOD said that Ontario would furnish the funds if she desired to carry out any such project. He merely rose to correct the impression left on the House by the remarks of the hon. member for North Victoria, with reference to the deputation mentioned.

MR. McCARTHY said he had always been opposed to the expenditure of public money to subsidise the Canada Central and build the Georgian Bay Branch. He desired to look at this question, not from a provincial, but from a national standpoint. He quite agreed with his hon. friend from North Victoria, that the construction of this line, the subsidising of the Canada Central and the building of the Georgian Bay Branch would have the effect of diverting trade, from its natural channels through Ontario, that would come from the Pacific Railway. If it was fair to the other portions of the Dominion, and proper and reasonable that these lines should be subsidized, and this money expended in the interest of the whole Dominion he would be very sorry to be opposed to it, but what was the fact? We had undertaken to build the Canadian Pacific Railway, and all parties had agreed that the Eastern terminus of this road should be South and East of Lake Nipissing. He did not think there was any dispute to that. He found in the Act passed in 1872 that this was pointed out as the terminus of the road, and in the Act passed in 1874 this same policy was followed; and this had also been made the terminus by hon. gentlemen opposite. Then why, if this terminus was to be the end of the Pacific Railway, should, and on what principle would this enormous sum of money be granted by the Dominion for the point, in fact, of extending the Pacific Railroad. Let them look at the present position of the Pacific Railway. For the present, at all events, the Government had practically abandoned the building of the section of this road commencing at Nipissing and going to Thunder Bay, so that the terminus, for many years, of this road was to be on the west side of Lake Superior. If this road had an actual terminus at Lake Nipissing it was very possible that it might be necessary, in the interests of the Province of Quebec, and of the whole Dominion, that the road should be extended to connect, and form connection, at Montreal; but for many year to come it was quite plain that if the policy of the Administration was carried out the section of the road around Lake Superior would not be constructed. Then what would be the effect of building this piece of road? They were to build it all at a cost of something near four millions, because it would require one and a half millions in round numbers for the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch, and two and a-half millions more in round numbers to make the French River navigable, and we were to expend this enormous sum of four millions to do what? Not to connect the Canadian Pacific Railway, but to build one line, or rather two lines, through the Province of Ontario, to form a connection with the Georgian Bay. Where was the utility of this?

Take the city of Montreal, and follow the existing line of road, and what did they find coming by the Grand Trunk to Toronto, and from there to Collingwood by the Northern Railway—a distance of about 420 miles was traversed—that was the distance according to this line? When we had spent our four millions, how much nearer to navigation of the commercial centre of the Dominion would we be? About 20 miles, as compared with the line he had indicated; and by the Midland Railway, branching from the Grand Trunk, he believed that the distance was about the same or something less, so that to reach the Georgian Bay by another route, which was not, and would not be, shorter than the existing lines of railway, of which we had quite a number, we were now pledging ourselves to adopt this Order-in-Council and endorse the payment of four millions; and this was the only immediate result, at all events, that could be obtained from that end. If we had abundance of money, and more than we knew what to do with, and if this Pacific Railway was not going to tax all the energies of the Dominion, as we were told time and again; if we had it to spare, perhaps; if we were so pressed, and found it so difficult to find means to construct the Pacific Railway, and had British Columbia calling out year after year, owing to the delay experienced in the construction of this line; and if then we found that, instead of building the section between Lake Superior and Red River, only two disconnected links were being constructed, he thought that under these circumstances they were not justified in building this road, not to extend the Pacific Railway, but to make another line terminating at Georgian Bay. For these reasons which he thought were not provincial, but applied to the whole Dominion, he was opposed to this road, and the expenditure of this money now, as he had always been, and no doubt Ontario would have to pay a very large portion of the expense of constructing this road for the express purpose of diverting traffic which otherwise would go over their road from Collingwood, by Midland, Southampton and Sarnia, where there were quite a number of means of communication between the great West and water communication. This was the case when the matter was looked at from a provincial point of view, but he did not desire to do so. He wished to regard this question from a national point of view; and if it was fair and just for the whole Dominion to pursue this policy, though it was opposed to the interests of the particular Province from which he had the honour to come, he should feel bound to support and vote for it, but because he did not find it in the interests of the whole Dominion that we should spend four millions to build another disconnected link of the Pacific road—for call it what they liked, it was nothing more nor less than an extension of the Pacific Railway, and the Government not satisfied with having to build 2,800 miles of road wanted to build 200 more—and because this line would be only about 15 miles shorter than existing lines, he was opposed to this policy and the Order-in-Council which had been submitted to the House to be ratified. If this order was to pass, and he supposed it would, he would ask the Government to weigh very carefully the objections that had been urged against the language in which it had been couched. A more loosely worded document he thought it impossible to conceive of. Any one provision could, he believed, be made to bear almost two or three constructions, and they knew very well that if this was the way in which the contract based on this order was drawn up, a good deal of difficulty would be created between the Government and the contractors of the road. Not one dollar of this money should be paid until the whole road was contracted. This was the way in which he understood that Ontario Government bonuses were granted.

MR. MCCARTHY.

MR. DYMOND: $2,000 a mile is the ordinary rate, not more than one tenth the cost of the road, assuming the cost to be $20,000 a mile.

MR. MCCARTHY said that from $1,000 to $4,000 a mile were given. If the Government agreed with the Canada Central, to give a bonus of $10,000 or $12,000 a mile, the contractors could finance and raise money on this pledge, for they and financiers knew perfectly well that this was an Act of Parliament, and that the money could not be in danger. If this was done the country would be safe, and would not have to pay the money until the road was built, while the Company would have the benefit of the Government bonus, for investors were willing to advance money on this security. What might result if the other policy were pursued? Ten miles of road only might be built, but would any hon. gentleman vote to give $12,000 a mile for the construction of ten miles of road. He would not intimate that the First Minister would propose such a thing. They would never dream of giving a bonus unless it was to reach the distant terminus of the Pacific Railroad; but only if ten miles were built, according to this Order-in-Council, the contractors would be absolutely entitled to 80 per cent. of the $12,000 a mile. They could go on and set at defiance the Government, and they would have no power to help themselves. Further, according to this Order-in-Council, the contractors could deliver their rails—it did not say where, and they would remember that some difficulty in this regard was experienced, with reference to the last Order-in-Council, respecting this line, and they paid 75 per cent on these rails whether delivered at Montreal or Pembroke or Ottawa. The money in any case was to be advanced on them, and they had no security upon the rails themselves. There was, moreover, nothing to prevent the company disposing of the rails. He would draw the attention of the the First Minister to what appeared to be a contradiction in terms in the Order-in-Council in the latter part of the 4th section. The first provided:—

“That payments be made to the extent of eighty (80) per cent. of the said bonus of $12,000 per mile on the completion of every ten miles—one-half of such payment may be advanced when work equal to five miles is completed on any one section, on the certificate of the Chief Engineer that satisfactory progress is being made—and payment to the extent of sixty (60) per cent. may be made on work extending over twenty-five miles, upon the certificate of the Chief Engineer that such work is equal to ten miles of completed track.

And below:—

“They further recommend that payments be made to the extent of eighty (80) per cent. of the work actually executed, on the completion of every ten miles, in the proportion which ten thousand dollars per mile bears to the actual cost of each section.”

What was the meaning of this? First it was provided that 80 per cent. should be paid on the bonus of $12,000 a mile on the completion of every ten miles, and further that payment to the extent of 80 per cent. of $10,000 be made on work actually executed in the proportion which $10,000 bore to the actual cost of each section. Did this mean that the contractors were to get 80 per cent. whether the work was completed or not? If it meant anything it meant that.

MR. MACKENZIE: That is to provide for this; it might be possible that the company might proceed in the construction of a number of ten miles in places where the work was exceedingly light. There we would not pay in that case the 80 per cent., but have the work averaged over the whole line, and would only pay in proportion to the value of the work done on that particular section. One section might cost $35,000 or $40,000 per mile while another might be built for $15,000 a mile, and it is quite clear that if we had not the provision we have in this section the Government might be in a position which would require them to pay out money that was not really earned.

MR. McCARTHY said he was obliged for the explanation, but he must confess that he was still in the dark.

MR. MACKENZIE: I cannot give the hon. gentleman an understanding.

MR. McCARTHY: Perhaps the hon. gentleman had not any to spare. He thought that the hon. gentleman would have to append and not to express the meaning of this portion of the Order-in-Council. The hon. gentleman said that some sections might cost a good deal and others less, but this Order-in-Council did not say that there was to be any difference in the payments made. It was absolute and conclusive as far as it went. To his mind the portions he had quoted did not bear the construction which the hon. gentleman mentioned, all he regretted was, he could not understand or see it with the same eyes as those with which the First Minister was able to look at it.

MR. McCALLUM said that after the expense which the country had with reference to this work he was in hopes that the Government would let this matter rest for a while, and would devote their energies on the resources of the country to the building of the main line. It was the policy of the Government, if he mistook not, as announced by the Prime Minister to the electors of Lambton at Sarnia in 1873, to build the main line of the Pacific Railway from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg and to utilize the magnificent water stretches. They had had considerable experience with these water stretches; and he would propose that this portion of the road be abandoned unless the section through to Red River was completed. The Premier now proposed to utilize the water stretches from the mouth of French River to Thunder Bay; but what business was this Georgian Bay Branch going to do when built. Suppose it were built to-morrow, in winter when they go to Georgian Bay they could go no further: and in summer he was sure that the undertaking would not be profitable and the passenger traffic would not pay enough to grease the wheels. He protested against the Government doing any thing of the kind. They had had experience enough already in this direction. The country had lost $41,000 in connection with this Georgian Bay Branch, being money paid to Mr. Loster, to say nothing of the waste connected with the purchase of rails for the Canada Central. He did not know what had become of these rails. Suppose that they wanted to ship goods by rail to this part of the country, they already had railways connecting with Sarnia, Collingwood, Goderich, Southampton and Kincardine, and every one of these harbours was far, far preferable to going to the North of French River, which any man acquainted with any of these lakes would say, as it was the worst harbour on Georgian Bay. It was full of rocks, and could not be made in the night. Vessels had to wait outside until daylight to enter. Besides, the country through which this road was to pass was rocky, and the rocks were not flat; they stood up on end, and this was the country which was to be opened up for colonization. He did not know what could be grown there, and he trusted the Government, if they had any money to spare (and he was sure that when they had deficits, they should not undertake any work of this kind) they should not spend it so that it would be of no use, as far as the interests of the country were concerned, for years to come. This expenditure could now be of no possible use, and, therefore, if they were to tax the people heavily, and collect the money of the people to build the Pacific Railway, let them construct what would be necessary for the use of the public first, and push on the road to Red River as fast as possible, thus forming a connecting link between Winnipeg and Lake Superior. If this was not done soon and the contract soon let, the work now in progress there would be very much damaged. The track was being laid there now, as he understood it, though he did not know whether it was being ballasted or not; and, under the present circumstances, he affirmed that, before this link was built, all the ties at both ends of it would be rotten, and then they would have to be renewed. Was it not horrible to see the money of the people wasted in this way? The people would hold the Premier responsible for this useless expenditure. The hon. gentleman would be in a few days before the people, and he would then have to answer for this extravagance and misappropriation of the people's money, which was diverted from the proper purposes for which was intended, as stated by the hon. gentleman himself to the electors of the county of Lambton. The hon. gentleman was spending the public money improperly. In 1874, when the hon. gentleman addressed the electors of Lambton, he said he would devote his services to the building of the Pacific Railway between Winnipeg and Lake Superior.

MR. McCARTHY.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

MR. McCALLUM said he did not wish to detain the House, but he would ask the Government if they had really considered this matter, and had come to the conclusion that they were acting in the interests of the public by taking the power to expend this large amount of money, for which he (Mr. McCallum) believed they could get no adequate return? Would this expenditure be in the interests of the North-West, or in the interests of colonization? He could not account for this measure in any way, particularly the Georgian Bay Branch, except as the insane scheme of an insane Government, and if the Government persisted in carrying it out, all he could do was to raise his voice and vote against it.

MR. DYMOND said he wished to notice what seemed to him to be the remarkable position taken by the hon. members for Victoria and Cardwell on this question. The hon. member for Cardwell spoke as if this policy were something new, to which the country was not pledged as solemnly as it was to any part of the Pacific Railway scheme. If his hon. friend would look at the Act of 1874, he would find that the subsidized line which should connect with the Georgian Bay Branch was as clearly provided for as any other part of the Pacific Railway system. He observed also that his hon. friend found fault with one detail of the contract, that which provided for the payment of a subsidy when portions of the road were completed, and alluded to the Province of Ontario in that respect. He (Mr. Dymond) interrupted him in order to point out that the subsidies granted by Ontario formed an exceedingly small proportion of the whole cost of the road; but if the hon. gentleman would turn to the Ontario Railway Act of 1871-2, he would find that provision was made for the payment of a subsidy to any portion of such railway when completed. It was, therefore, unnecessary that the whole line should be constructed before entitling it to the assistance rendered by the Province of Ontario. He understood this proposition was intended to give to Quebec all the direct advantages which could be given to her in return for her share of the burden of building the Pacific Railway.

MR. MASSON: That is mighty little, then.

MR. DYMOND said if Quebec was ungrateful, it could not be helped. He had heard the hon. member from Terrebonne praise the generous spirit evinced by the people of Ontario in regard to this particular measure.

MR. MASSON: I blame the Government, not the people of Ontario.

MR. DYMOND: The hon. gentleman is like the Irishman who landed in New York. No matter what measure was proposed, he was always "agin the Government." The Province of Quebec had not much to thank the hon. gentleman's predecessors for, even with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway, of which some of them were so proud. Whatever important benefit other portions of the Dominion would derive from this line, every dollar spent on it would be expended to the advantage of Ontario. This measure had received the sanction of the Ontario Legislature, in so far as it had actually voted a subsidy to any line which would connect with the Georgian Bay Branch. Every dollar spent between French River and Pembroke would be spent in the interests of Ontario. Although Ontario bore a little more than her share of the burden, it must be remembered that the whole Pacific Railway scheme of uniting Lake Superior with the Red River was part of a Great Western Canada policy. Under these circumstances, it did not become any member from Ontario to complain either of subsidizing the Canada Central Railway or of building the Georgian Bay Branch, the construction of which he hailed with much pleasure.

MR. BORRON said the hon. member for Monck and others had expressed themselves in terms of such hostility in alluding to the Georgian Bay Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that he felt compelled, in the interest of his constituents, and of what he regarded as the truth, to give a few facts in response to a good deal of fiction that had been talked and written on this subject. From these facts, hon. gentlemen and the public would be able to draw their own conclusions. Comparisons had been made between Midland City and French River, and it had been asserted that the distance by rail from Montreal to Midland City was less than from Montreal to the mouth of French River—the one being 390 miles, and the other about 410 miles. It was inferred from this that so far as the traffic of our North-West Territories with all places eastward of the Georgian Bay was concerned, Midland City was a better point than French River. In consequence, however, of the proposed change in the terminus of the Georgian Bay Branch from near the mouth of French River to Cantin's Bay (some twenty miles higher up the River), the distance to Montreal would be reduced from 410 to 390 miles, making the length of railway from Midland City to Montreal, and from the proposed terminus on French River to Montreal, nearly the same. But they must bear in mind that the mouth of French River was from 100 to 120 miles nearer to Thunder Bay, Duluth and Chicago than Midland City, and that the saving of 100 miles of water navigation was itself, not to be despised, when they took into consideration the immensity of the traffic, and the keen competition there was to attain it. But they had to look beyond the facilities afforded by a combined water and railway communication, with the North-Western Territories. Every one knows or should know, that such a mixed communication was only available for about six months in the year, and that during the winter season, the only communication possible was by railway. He hardly thought there was an hon. member in this House so sanguine as to believe that the section of our Canadian Pacific Railway lying north of Lake Superior would be completed in less than twenty-five years. It will tax the whole energies of this Dominion to construct the railway from the head-quarters of Lake Superior to the Pacific Ocean, and it was impossible to predict when the intermediate section between the head of Lake Superior and Lake Nipissing could be finished. In the meantime, we would be dependent on other lines of communication passing to a greater or less extent through United States territory, and that for nearly six months of each year. He might be allowed to premise that railways were already projected from Sault St. Marie westward along the south shore of Lake Superior, to connect with the Northern Pacific, Duluth and St. Pauls, and other lines radiating from St. Pauls, and that a large grant of public lands had been given by the United States Government in aid of the construction of these lines, and they would, it was confidentially expected, be proceeded with immediately, and completed in a few years. Should this be so, and should the Canada Central Railway, and Georgian Bay Branch be extended to French River, as now projected, there could be no question whatever, that the only remaining link (180 miles in length, from French River to Sault St. Marie) required to complete a through winter communication by railway, from Halifax to Winnipeg, and the North-West would soon be completed. Let them compare this route with that presently available. The distance from Toronto to Fort Garry, in Manitoba, via Detroit, Chicago and Pembina was about 1,589 miles, and from Toronto to the same point via French River, Duluth and Pembina, only 1,296 miles, thus affecting a saving of not less than 293 miles in the distance. Again the distance from Montreal to Fort Garry via Detroit, Chicago and Pembina was about 1,922 miles, whereas the distance from Montreal to Fort Garry or Winnipeg via French River, Sault St. Marie, Duluth and Pembina, would not exceed 1,446 miles, or at least 479 miles of a saving in the distance; and consequently a proportionate saving in the time and the cost of transportation to and from our North-West Territories. Surely the people of Montreal and Quebec could not be so blind to their own interest or to the interest of the people of Manitoba, and the North West, as not to perceive the immense importance of the extension westward of the Canada Central Railway and Georgian Bay Branch, two most important links in this great chain of railway communication. Nor was this all. The distance from Duluth via Sault St. Marie and French River to Montreal by rail, and thence to Liverpool by water as compared with that route by way of New York, showed a saving of 690 miles of railway and 270 miles of ocean transportation, or 960 miles in all. In view of the enormous traffic of the single State of Minnesota the produce of which in wheat alone was estimated, some years ago, at not less than twenty millions of bushels—the immense importation of this Georgian Bay route, as it was seemingly called, could hardly be over-estimated, whether from a Quebec or an Ontario point of view. It would, when completed, feed, so to speak, all the railroads both in Ontario and Quebec, which were fortunate enough to connect with it, and whose lines extended eastward and southward, for this route was destined to secure a large show of the grain and other traffic not only of Minnesota, but other important States of the Union,

MR. BORRON.

MR. ROBINSON said by this Order-in-Council, running powers were given only to the Kingston and Pembroke road and to those roads which were supposed to have their exit north of the shores of Lake Huron. It seemed to him that all other roads running north, although not exactly to Lake Huron, should be included in the running powers given to the Kingston and Pembroke road. If this Georgian Bay Branch were constructed in the interests of a private company, this private company might have particular preferences, which they might indulge in the interests of the Kingston and Pembroke road. Why this company should be indulged in this matter and so many other roads thrown out, was a mystery. The Victoria road was a railway which, by the enterprise shown by its directors, and the assistance given to it by different municipalities and by the Ontario Government, was entitled to equal favour with the Kingston and Pembroke road. The sooner the present Ministry gave up their idea of associating one road entirely with the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch, the better it would be for the interest of the country and of Ontario. He did not agree with what fell from the hon. member for Hamilton with regard to the deputation. That deputation was sent down quite as much in the interest of Hamilton as of Toronto. The City of Toronto should have an equal chance in any assistance given to the Province of Quebec, because Toronto had expended a large sum in the construction of railroads, and had shown an enterprise equal to that of any other city, and was entitled to equal justice. The people of Ontario would ask how it was that out of the funds of Ontario a road was constructed entirely in the interests of Lower Canada. He did not object that a fair proportion of the funds of Ontario should be distributed to promote the interest of Quebec, but, at the same time, Ontario had a claim to an equal share. He had heard the hon. member for Cumberland, in 1876, ask the hon. the Minister of Public Works whether it was his intention to give any encouragement to roads which were likely to extend themselves to connect with this Georgian Bay Branch. If the answer of the Minister of Public Works was correctly reported, he said it was. Why the hon. gentleman now changed his views, it was for him to explain. Only a short time ago it was predicted, realizing the construction of this road, that the day would come when the commerce of Manitoba would be taken over that road, and that the commerce of Toronto would thereby greatly benefit. The different municipalities, in this view, assembled together and subscribed $10,000. These expectations seemed to be doomed to disappointment. He protested against the action of the Government, because it was contrary to the interests of Ontario and of the city of Toronto.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he did not rise to object to finishing this road and the new road at the terminus at the south-east corner of Lake Nipissing as proposed. He would be better satisfied that, instead of a portion of the public funds being diverted to a branch road of this kind, the whole available funds should have been expended on the great main line of the Pacific Railway. However, that had been postponed by the Government for a very long period; meanwhile, there was great expense being occasioned to the country. The Province of Quebec, which sustained a portion of the burden of this road, and, according to the present plan, which gave that Province a western connection to the line, derived a very small degree of compensation for their contribution to the enormous expense incurred and to be incurred, and from which it would likely receive no immediate benefit except as a portion of the Dominion. He regretted extremely that this proposition had not been brought down earlier; it was not fair to bring it down at this late period. He called the attention of the hon. the Minister of Public Works, and of the hon. the Minister of Justice, to the points raised by the hon. members for Victoria and Frontenac. On these two points he was satisfied the Order-in-Council was contrary to the Statute. It would be doing a great injury to the Canada Central to grant them an Order-in-Council, any portion of which was contrary to Statute. It was right and just that all roads having connection with this branch line of the Pacific Railway should have running arrangements; that was merely what the law provided.

MR. MACKENZIE: It is running powers they want, not running arrangements.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Arrangements meant a matter of agreement. But the Statute provided that the Government could lay down conditions upon which all those railways that had connection with the branch line must submit to, before they could get running powers; but the Government had no power by the Statute to exclude any railroad having communication with the branch line. According to the Statute, no railroad was to have the exclusive privilege of these running powers, but they were all to have equal rights, and to be subject to the same conditions. The Government, therefore, had no right to exclude the Midland Railway. If the Government did this, the Midland Railway, or any railway connecting with the branch railway, by putting in force the Statute, could render this Order-in-Council nugatory. He would read the Statute, 14th Section, 37 Vic., Chapter 14:—

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

“The Governor in Council may also grant such bonus or bonuses, subsidy or subsidies to any company or companies, already incorporated or to be hereafter incorporated, not exceeding twelve thousand dollars per mile, as will secure the construction * * * The granting of such bonuses or subsidies to be subject to such conditions for securing the running power and other rights over and with respect to the whole or any portion of the said branch railway, to the owners and lessees of the main line of said railway, or of any section thereof, or to the owners or lessees of any other railway connecting with the said branch railway.”

So that the owner or lessee of any railway connected with said branch shall have running powers as were given to any one railway, but must be subject to the same conditions, however onerous. He pointed out that there was a great difference between guaranteeing the interest and giving a mileage subsidy. The Order-in-Council should not be made a source of weakness and trouble to the Canada Central Railway, for whose benefit it was passed. Parliament had accepted the proposition of the Government, and it was desirable that, having been done, the points raised should be dealt with so that the railway company might be placed on a proper footing when it went into the market.

MR. MACKENZIE said that one hon. gentleman stated that $109,000 had been lost under the previous Order-in-Council. That sum had been composed of $11,000 paid for surveys on the Canada Central Railway, and $68,000 for rails which were delivered and were now the property of the Government, and there was no actual loss, as, under this Order-in-Council, the value of these rails would be deducted from the first payment to be made by the company. The amount paid for surveys had been spent on what was supposed to be in the vicinity of the line, under the contract entered into by Mr. Foster. The money would have had to be spent if the Government and not the company had surveyed the country, so that there was no loss in that respect. One hon. gentleman had spoken of the matter as a contract. It was not a contract, but simply a subsidy of so much per mile, on condition that so many miles were built. The contract was a matter between the company and their own contractors, though, of course, it would be the duty of the Government to see that a satisfactory contract was executed. He had a letter in his hand informing him that the company had entered into a contract with Mr. James Worthington, of Montreal, one of the best contractors in Canada, and one who had satisfactorily executed contracts with the Government. He (Mr. Mackenzie) did not yet know all the details of the contract, but he would, of course, see that it provided a road such as the Government could approve of. Other hon. gentlemen had complained that he had changed his opinion; but he wished, once for all, to say that in this, as in the whole Pacific Railway scheme, he could not pretend to act on technical matters of surveying and engineering, unless on the advice of the professional officers of the Government. The position that he should be held responsible for the opinions of his engineers was an absurd one. He read from Mr. Fleming's report on the Bonnechère route, and said that on these opinions he must unhesitatingly base his decisions and his recommendations to the Government. It was far more important that the railway should be built where circumstances were adapted to its construction, where technical skill said it should be built, than that the opinion of a layman, no matter what his position, should be carried out. He went on to show that the supposition that the road touched Lake Nipissing, in order to secure traffic by the lake was an error. The fact that it touched a point on the lake was merely incidental, for the lake was not of such a size or character that any commercial importance could be attached to communication with it. As to the question of running powers in the Order-in-Council, it simply meant that they should have the right of running trains over the road by arrangement with the Companies. In other words, trains from Montreal would be enabled to run over the road to the West. The general Railway

Act was not intended to confer such powers. It was quite evident that if they were to give running powers to every road touching this line, it would be impossible to work the road. The Victoria Railway and other roads which had been spoken of, touched the road at right angles, and were entirely differently situated from the others. There would be no difficulty in the Ontario lines carrying their traffic to the port with which they connected. With regard to the legal points which had been raised, as they had been brought up by eminent professional men, they were entitled to respect. But he did not think the wording of the clauses referred to would bear out the construction which these gentlemen had put upon them. He noticed that the Quebec members thought the arrangement was not fair to Quebec, while those from Ontario thought it would militate against Ontario. Under these circumstances he thought the Government might assume that they had found the golden mean. He did not deny for a moment—in fact he had stated it to the deputation who had waited upon him—that this road was intended as a short and rapid connection between the east and the west. That was the sole purpose of building it. He had pointed out that the Government had abundantly aided enterprises going through Ontario in former years, and that this was intended to connect the Valley of the Ottawa with what would be a great trans-continental line of railway when completed, though under existing circumstances it would be partly by railway and partly by water communication. It was possible that the views of the right hon. member for Kingston regarding the last clause but one might be correct. He did not think they were, but if so, the matter could be very easily put right by distributing the usual interest over a large amount of bonds. It would be an easy way of raising the money, for when the English capitalists knew that a certain amount of interest was certain a market would be created for those bonds. There was another way in which the matter might be managed, and that was—that the payments should be funded, and the bonus would disappear, and the interest take its place.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew): Will these three years count from the time of ratifying the Order-in-Council.

MR. MACKENZIE: I hope that the road will be completed within that time.

MR. WHITE. Is that the limited time.

MR. MACKENZIE: Certainly.

MR. BOWELL: Why is the difference made between the former and present Order-in-Council as to the payment of 75 per cent on the rails delivered. The former provides that such rails shall be the property of the Government until used on the road, but in the latter no such condition exists.

MR. MACKENZIE: There is no particular reason for it that I am aware of. The rails will, as a matter of course, unless paid for, be the property of the Government until they are laid on the road; and no payment will be made, except on these conditions. There is just this difference between the wording of the two Orders-in-Council. The old one stated that 75 per cent. of the value thereof should be paid; and the present one states on the market value of the rails, meaning at the time when delivered.

MR. BOWELL said that the hon. gentleman's statement was not correct. There was a vast difference between the wording of the two Orders-in-Council. In order that no mistake should be made, he would read the two. The old Order-in-Council stated:—

“Payment will also be made on rails delivered at any point of the line to be constructed to the extent of seventy-five per cent. of the value thereof, such rails to become the property of the Government until they are laid on the road for use.”

And the new order said:—

“That payment of the subsidy should be made on the basis of 80 per cent. of the expenditure, the drawback of 20 per cent. to be added on the completion of every ten miles.”

If that 15 per cent. of the market value of the rails was to be paid at whatever point the rails might be laid down at; and they would remain the absolute and bona fide property, not of the Government, but of the contractor; and would be subject to seizure under execution for any debt the contractor might owe to any person.

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. MACKENZIE: Not if the Government had bonds on the rails delivered.

MR. BOWELL: No; but there is no stipulation here.

MR. MACKENZIE: But we can stipulate it ourselves.

MR. BOWELL: You must enter into a special agreement.

MR. MACKENZIE: Of course, we will. We take bonds every day for the delivery of material. Not only so, but to require to be the actual owners of the land or lessees of the land where such property is situated, and the same care will be taken in this as in other public works contracts.

MR. BOWELL said he had no doubt that some arrangement might be entered into to protect the country and Government, but the question was to ascertain why this change was made in the two Orders-in-Council.

MR. MACKENZIE: There is no reason at all.

MR. BOWELL said then it certainly should have been included in the new Order-in-Council for the protection of the country and Government, as well as in the old one. The hon. gentleman had complained of the criticisms of the hon. member for Charlevoix regarding the quality of the road. It was true that this road was not to be built by the Government as a Government road, and it was also true that the subsidy was to be given to the contractors who were able to build it, and that this subsidy would amount to $12,000 a mile. There was no stipulation whatever made as to the quality of the road; and it was to be restricted no further than to be subject to such grades as might be approved by the Chief Engineer, but beyond this there was no stipulation whatever. They all knew that a road might be built that would cost very little more than the subsidy given, particularly if the grade was not very heavy; while, on the other hand, a road might cost from $20,000 to $25,000 and $30,000 or $40,000 a mile. This was the point to which he thought the hon. member for Charlevoix called the attention of the Government. In an Order in-Council of this kind subsidizing a road to the amount of $12,000 a mile, some stipulation should be made as to the character of the road which was to be built. He understood the First Minister to say that Mr. Hazlewood traversed that section of the country, when there was no smoke as well as when there was smoke. The hon. member for Terrebonne had called attention to the fact that Mr. Fleming's report stated the fact that he was unable even to walk over the road on account of the fires which were then raging in that section of the country; and hence he could not report as to the feasibility of the road. If the First Minister's statement was correct, this was the first time that the House or the country had found out the fact. The House, he thought, would have been a little amused at the apparent innocence and the innocent simplicity that characterised the First Minister in reading a letter from the company, stating that they had entered into a contract with Mr. Worthington. He believed that it was generally known throughout the country, and among the members when the Bill was being passed through Committee, that this whole arrangement was made, and that the union between the two roads was effected in order that the company would be able to give it to the very contractors whose names were freely mentioned. To the House and country he believed it was well known that the matter was pre-arranged before this question came up at all; and when this question of the Georgian Bay Branch and the extension of the Canada Central was brought before the House in 1875, it was then considered of such prominence that time could not be taken in order to have the contract properly surveyed to form some kind of basis for the construction of the road. It had, however, been allowed to remain in abeyance since the failure of Mr. Foster to complete the contract until the present time, and strange to say—it might be very improper to even insinuate that there was anything wrong about its coming up at this time—but it was somewhat singular that it had just dawned upon the Ministry and those interested in that section of the country before the elections came on—that this matter should be taken up and brought not only before the House and country, but particularly before that section of Lower Canada, which would be most interested in the construction of this road by the change of route, and before the North-West constituencies, which were affected by it. This was all to be done on the very eve of the election. Let them hope for that section of the country that this was not what this policy would tend to, and that the road might be completed within the time specified. He was somewhat amused, and he thought the House also, at the remarks of the hon. member for North York, in reference not to the amendment, because to his mind the hon. gentleman astutely avoided discussing the question before the House. The hon. gentleman had given rightly enough as he understood, the laws of Ontario, which granted as subsidy in aid to these roads, whether of colonization or to open up other sections of the country, a certain sum which was to be paid on the completion of every 20 mile section, but the hon. gentleman forgot to tell the House, and this bore particularly on the question now before the House, that there was a provision in this law for running powers over all roads that received Governmental aid. This was one of the stipulations and conditions on which those roads received subsidies from the Ontario Government, and the other roads crossing or running parallel or diagonal were compelled to give running powers over them, and this was all that his hon. friend from North Victoria asked for now in the interest of the western roads and those roads which were now being built in the interior of Ontario, which were colonization roads—many of them were exclusively so—and which would connect with the Canada Central and the Georgian Bay Branch, if it was ever constructed, though he believed it would prove to be utterly useless. The same rights and privileges should be extended to these roads as to those which were specially mentioned in the Order-in-Council. This was the point which they had now to decide, and he thought it was one which the Government, in the interest of the western roads, of the western peninsula, and of the colonization roads, which had been largely subsidized by the Ontario Government, and built by private and municipal enterprise, should grant. These roads should all have the rights and privileges which were extended to the Pembroke road or to any other provided in this Order-in-Council. He would, when the time came, move an amendment in the direction of the manner in which these payments should be advanced upon the rails as they were delivered, in order, at least, that those who had watched the manner in which these subsidies had been paid, and the advantages that had been taken by railways, where Governments were not properly secured, might express their opinion. They saw plenty of it in Ontario, where subsidies were given: the law strictly complied with and the moneys drawn, and yet the work stopped; and they ought, if possible, to prevent the recurrence of acts of this kind in the future. It might be true, as the hon. gentleman had said, that Mr. J. Worthington was a very worthy and able man and a capitalist, and he would succeed in constructing the road, and they might never have any difficulty; but in the past he thought they all knew that contractors who were to-day apparently as solvent as Mr. Worthington and those with whom he was connected, proved, before the work was completed, like Mr. Foster, utterly unable to carry it out.

MR. GIBBS (South Ontario) contended that the Ontario Railway Companies should have running powers over lines subsidized by the Government.

MR. MACKENZIE said he wished to point out to the hon. member for North Hastings, that he would find that the previous Order-in-Council made it imperative to pay 75 per cent. of the price of the rails; but they did not bind themselves in the present Order to pay any amount on the rails. The wording was "may advance," but they did not agree to do so absolutely.

MR. BOWELL.

MR. BOWELL: Surely the hon. gentleman would not pretend to say that, if the rails were delivered, he would not pay the money.

MR. MACKENZIE: That would depend on the circumstances altogether.

MR. BOWELL: I suppose it would.

MR. MACKENZIE said that the hon. member for South Ontario confounded the branch railway with the subsidized railway, and this led to the whole misapprehension. If the hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Kingston read the 14th and 15th sections carefully, they would find that they had both mistaken the terms, and had been applying to the subsidized railway what should be applied to the branch or Government railway proper, which did not belong to the Canada Central, but over which it had to run its trains.

Question put, and motion, in amendment, negatived on the following division:—

YEAS:

Messieurs

Baby,	McDonald (Cape Breton),
Benoit,	McDougall (Three Rivers),
Bolduc,	Macmillan,
Bourbeau,	McCallum,
Bowell,	McCarthy,
Bunster,	McQuade,
Cameron,	Méthot,
Campbell,	Monteith,
Caron,	Montplaisir,
Costigan,	Mousseau,
Cuthbert,	Orton,
Daoust,	Quimet,
Dewdney,	Pinsonneault,
Dugas,	Platt,
Farrow,	Robinson,
Ferguson,	Robitaille,
Flesher,	Rochester,
Gibbs (North Ontario),	Roy,
Gibbs (South Ontario),	Ryan,
Gill,	Short,
Harwood,	Stephenson,
Hurteau,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Jones (South Leeds),	Tupper,
Kirkpatrick,	Wade,
Langevin,	Wallace (S. Norfolk),
Lanthier,	White (E. Hastings)—54.
Little,
Macdonald (Kingston),

NAYS:

Messieurs

Archibald,	Huntington,
Aylmer,	Jetté,
Bain,	Jones (Halifax),
Barthe,	Kerr,
Bécharé,	Kirk,

Feraier,	Lafamme,
Bertram,	Landerkin,
Biggar,	Langlois,
Blackburn,	Laurier,
Borden,	Macdonald (Cornwall)
Borron,	MacDonnell,
Bourassa,	Macdougall (E. Elgin),
Bowman,	McDougall (S. Renfrew),
Boyer,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Buell,	Mackenzie,
Burk,	McGregor,
Burpee (St. John),	McIntyre,
Cartwright,	McNab,
Casey,	Metcalf,
Casgrain,	Mills,
Cheval,	Oliver,
Christie,	Paterson,
Church,	Perry,
Coffin,	Pettes,
Coupal,	Pickard,
Currier,	Power,
DeCosmos,	Ray,
De St. Georges,	Richard,
Dymond,	Ross (West Middlesex)
Ferris,	Rymal,
Fiset,	Scatcherd,
Fleming,	Shibley,
Flynn,	Sinclair,
Forbes,	Skinner,
Galbraith,	Smith (Peel),
Geoffrion,	Smith (Selkirk),
Gibson,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Gillies,	Snider,
Gillmor,	St. Jean,
Goudge,	Taschereau,
Greenway,	Thompson (Haldimand)
Hagar,	Trow,
Hall,	Wallace (Albert),
Higinbotham,	White (N. Renfrew)
Holton,	Wood,
Horton,	Young.—94.

MR. BOWELL said that the explanation given by the Premier with reference to the two clauses in the former and present Order-in-Council was not to his mind at all satisfactory, and he did not think that it was an explanation which would be accepted by the House. The provision in the former was that the rails should remain the property of the Government until laid on the road for use; but under the latter, there was no such restriction whatever. Seventy-five per cent. on the market value could be paid to the contractors; the rails would then be subject to seizure, and could be taken up and laid upon any other road. The First Minister said that they would take good care that this did not occur; and that they would not advance the money; but it must be clear to everyone that these rails would be purchased on the strength of this Order-in-Council. If this was not the object of this Order-in-Council, there would be no object of making this provision for 75 per cent. of the cash to be paid. The contractors could go to England, exhibit the Order-in-Council and obtain from the manufacturers hundreds or thousands of tons of iron or steel rails, and hypothecate the amount coming from the Government, which would be accepted by the manufacturers as security for delivery, and to say that the Government might pay upon them being delivered on the road, simply because the Order-in-Council said it might, was taking a position which he thought that no Government in any country should take advantage of. In order that this might be prevented, he moved:—

“That the following be added to the said motion:—‘That in ratifying the said Order-in-Council this House desires to express its opinion that no payment should be made to the Canada Central Railway Company on account of the subsidy for the construction of a Railway to connect with the Eastern Terminus of the Canada Pacific Railway or the Georgian Bay Branch thereof, upon rails delivered to the extent of 75 per cent. of the market value thereof, except upon rails delivered at some point of the line to be constructed, and upon condition that such rails do become the property of the Government, until they are laid on the road for use.’”

MR. MACKENZIE said he had already stated that no payments would, as a matter of course, be made without abundantly securing the Government on such rails as would be paid. Under the resolution, it would be impossible to get this Order-in-Council adopted at all. This was a motion that could not be amended. It was an agreement between the Company and the Government, subject to the approval of the House, for which he was now moving, and the hon. gentleman's resolution was, in fact, against the approval, by the House, of this Order-in-Council.

MR. TUPPER said the hon. gentleman stated that he would not be bound, under this Order-in-Council, to make any advances upon these rails, except by taking the most ample security that the rails should be the property of the Government until appropriated. That being the case, there could be no objection to the amendment instructing the Government to pursue the course which the hon. the First Minister indicated would be pursued. That would not contravene the Order-in-Council, but would strengthen the hands of the Government. Under the former Order-in-Council, which was much more stringent than this, the Government had made advances of $68,000 on a pile of rails, and the party, who, under that Order-in-Council, had parted with his right to control them, came and modestly requested the loan of a hundred tons, and the Government were not strong enough to say "no," nor to prevent that gentleman from coming back and taking away 127 tons more, without saying "by your leave." Under these circumstances it was desirable to pass this resolution and give the Government a little more backbone.

MR. WHITE said he did not wish to interfere with the ratification of an Order-in-Council, but considering the fact that under the former Order-in-Council the Government had lost 227 tons of rails, he would support the amendment.

Question put, and motion in amendment negatived on the following division:—

YEAS:

Messieurs

Baby,	McDonald (Cape Breton)
Benoit,	McDougall (Three Rivers),
Bolduc,	Macmillan,
Bourbeau,	McCallum,
Bowell,	McCarthy,
Cameron,	McQuade,
Campbell,	Méhot,
Caron,	Monteith,
Costigan,	Montplaisir,
Cuthbert,	Mousseau,
Daoust,	Ouimet,
Dewdney,	Pinsonneault,
Dugas,	Platt,
Farrow,	Plumb,
Ferguson,	Robinson,
Flesher,	Robitaille,
Gibbs (North Ontario),	Rochester,
Gibbs (South Ontario),	Roy,
Gill,	Ryan,
Harwood,	Stephenson,
Hurteau,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Jones (South Leeds),	Tupper,
Kirkpatrick,	Wallace (S. Norfolk)
Langevin,	White (East Hastings),
Lanthier,	White (North Renfrew)
Little,	Wright (Pontiac).—53.
Macdonald (Kingston),

NAYS:

Messieurs

Archibald,	Horton,
Aylmer,	Huntington,
Bain,	Jetté,
Barthe,	Jones (Halifax),
Bécharde,	Kerr,

MR. TUPPER.

Bernier,	Kirk,
Bertram,	Lafamme,
Biggar,	Landerkin,
Blackburn,	Langlois,
Blain,	Laurier,
Borden,	Macdonald (Cornwall)
Borron,	MacDonnell,
Bourassa,	Macdougall (East Elgin)
Bowman,	McDougall (S. Renfrew)
Boyer,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Buell,	Mackenzie,
Bunster,	McGregor,
Burk,	McIntyre,
Burpee (St. John),	McNab,
Burpee (Sunbury),	Metcalfe,
Cartwright,	Mills,
Casey,	Oliver,
Casgrain,	Paterson,
Cheval,	Perry,
Christie,	Pettes,
Church,	Pickard,
Coffin,	Power,
Coupal,	Ray,
Currier,	Richard,
DeCosmos,	Ross (West Middlesex),
De St. Georges,	Rymal,
Dymond,	Scatcherd
Ferris,	Scrivner,
Fiset,	Shibley,
Fleming,	Sinclair,
Flynn,	Skinner,
Forbes,	Smith (Peel),
Galbraith,	Smith (Selkirk),
Geoffrion,	Smith (Westmoreland)
Gibson,	Snider,
Gillies,	St. Jean,
Gillmor,	Taschereau,
Goudge,	Thompson (Haldimand),
Greenway,	Trow,
Hagar,	Wallace (Albert),
Hall,	Wood,
Higinbotham,	Wright (Ottawa Co.),
Holton,	Young.—96.

Question put and motion (Mr. Mackenzie) agreed to on the following division:—

YEAS:

Messieurs

Archibald,	Horton,
Aylmer,	Huntington.
Baby,	Jetté,
Bain,	Jones (Halifax),
Barthe,	Kerr,
Bécharde,	Kirk,
Benoit,	Kirkpatrick,
Bernier,	Lafamme,
Bertram,	Landerkin,
Biggar,	Langevin,
Blackburn,	Langlois,
Blain,	Lanthier,
Borden,	Laurier,
Borron,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Bourassa,	MacDonnell,
Bourbeau,	Macdougall (East Elgin)
Bowman,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Boyer,	Mackenzie,
Brown,	McGregor,
Buell,	McIntyre,
Bunster,	McNab,
Burk,	Metcalfe,
Burpee (St. John),	Méhot,
Burpee (Sunbury)	Mills,
Caron,	Montplaisir,

Cartwright,	Oliver,
Casey	Paterson,
Casgrain,	Perry,
Cheval,	Pettes,
Christie,	Pickard,
Church,	Power,
Coffin,	Ray,
Coupal,	Richard,
Currier,	Robitaille
Daoust,	Rochester,
DeCosmos,	Ross (West Middlesex),
Desjardins,	Rymal,
De St. Georges,	Scatcherd,
Dewdney,	Scrifer,
Dymond,	Shibley,
Ferris,	Sinclair,
Fiset,	Skinner,
Fleming,	Smith (Peel)
Flesher,	Smith (Selkirk),
Flynn,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Forbes,	Snider,
Galbraith,	Stephenson,
Geoffrion,	St. Jean.
Gibson,	Taschereau,
Gill,	Thompson (Haldimand),
Gillies,	Trow,
Gillmor,	Wallace (Albert),
Goudge,	White (Renfrew),
Greenway,	Wood,
Hagar,	Wright, (Ottawa),
Hall,	Wright, (Pontiac),
Higinbotham,	Young.—115.
Holton,

NAYS :

Messieurs

Bowell,	McCallum,
Cameron,	McCarthy,
Campbell,	McQuade,
Costigan,	Monteith,
Cuthbert,	Mousseau,
Dugas,	Ouimet,
Farrow,	Platt,
Ferguson,	Plumb,
Gibbs (North Ontario),	Robinson,
Gibbs (South Ontario),	Roy,
Harwood,	Ryan,
Hurteau,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Jones (Leeds),	Wade,
McDonald (Cape Breton),	Wallace (Norfolk),
McDougall (S. Renfrew),	White (Hastings).—32.
Macmillan,

THE GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL POLICY.

MR. CARTWRIGHT moved, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.

MR. MCCARTHY moved in amendment:—

“That the Speaker not do now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved, That the House regrets that in the face of annual deficits during the period in which the present Administration have been in power, amounting to $3,360,812.72, as appears from the Public Accounts, the annual expenditure has not been curtailed so as to confine it within the Revenue, and instead of practically adopting a policy of retrenchment, the Government have expended more in each of the years 1874-75, 1875-6 and 1876-77, than the largest amount ever expended prior to the year 1874-75.”

He said it was not necessary at this late period that he should support his motion by any lengthy arguments. The financial question had been discussed a very great deal throughout the Session, and in public, sufficient, at all events, to enable an intelligent vote to be obtained on it. Although the question had been discussed, there had not yet been any opportunity to record a vote upon it and he desired, late as it was, to give hon. gentlemen an opportunity to express an opinion on what he considered the very unfortunate position in which the Government was placed. During the period the late Government was in power there were surpluses amounting in all to nearly twelve million dollars. During the period this Administration had been in office, there had been but one surplus, and there had been deficits amounting to $3,360,812 without taking into account the item of $343,581, placed in suspense account, probably for the very purpose of preventing a deficit being larger than what it unfortunately was. He had not thought proper to add that to the acknowledged deficit because it might give rise to a discussion on a question of mere book-keeping, which it would be well to avoid. He merely referred to it for the purpose of clearing himself from being thought to submit that this $3,360,000 was the total amount of the deficits created under this Administration. It would have been more prudent in view of these deficits to keep the expenditure at the lowest possible limit, nevertheless the expenditure had been greater during these three years mentioned in the resolution than it had been before. There had been a great dispute as to who was responsible for the expenditure of 1873-4, of which year the late Administration was in power for four months and the present Administration for eight months. The late Government could not be held responsible for the expenditure of that year; they could only be held responsible for the estimates introduced by them the previous year. During the Session of 1874, the present Finance Minister brought down estimates which were not rendered necessary by the legislation during the period of the late Administration, nor by any of the Public Works to which this country was bound to carry out by the policy of the late Administration. He did not desire to introduce that item of discussion. He, for the sake of argument, started with the expenditure of that year, which was the largest to that time since Confederation. The expenditure in 1874-5 was $396,640, over 1873-4; in the following year it rose to the extent of $1,172,050 over 1873-4, and last year the expenditure was $202,985 over that year. So that during these three years, with a falling revenue, with the country in the most depressed state, they had had an expenditure in excess of 1873-74 by the enormous sum of $1,771,794; or an average expenditure in excess during each of these three years of $590,598. He thought this called for an expression of opinion from this House. When they found that, in the last year, the excess of expenditure was only $202,985 over 1873-74, it was impossible to excuse the enormous expenditure of the two preceding years—one more than a million and the other $400,000 more than the expenditure of 1873-4.

Mr. PLUMB said that no doubt the amount estimated by Mr. Tilley in the last year during which the late Government held office was properly chargeable to that Administration, and Mr. Tilley had also acknowledged that the legislation of 1873 would involve a considerable addition to the expenditure of the year. But the members of the present Opposition declined to assume the responsibility for items which were placed in the Supplementary Estimates of March, 1874, which Mr. Tilley had not the power to revise, and which were placed there without his consent or concurrence. If they did not belong to the expenditure of 1873-4, they must be charged upon the expenditure of the present Administration. They amounted to somewhat over a million dollars, and should be added to the year 1874-5. If that were done, a deficit would be shown in that year, besides a large increase in the expenditure. The Finance Minister had stated in addressing public audiences, not only that the present Government had not exceeded the expenditure of 1873-4, but that the comparative small expenditure of 1872-3 of about $19,000,000 was really larger than the sum expended by the present Government on their Estimates of the year. The Finance Minister had based his arguments upon the Estimates for the current year, but that was a fallacy almost at the last day of the Session, when there was no opportunity to intelligently examine the items. The House was asked to vote an additional sum of $848,000 for this year, chargeable to revenue, making the expenditure for this year, $24,226,000; while the largest amount that was proposed under the late Government was the expenditure of 1873, $23,300,000, and they claimed that at least $1,000,000 should be deducted from that. The Finance Minister had also founded an argument on the ground that the expenditure was so much less per capita. He actually took credit to himself for the increase of the population. That was the style of the hon. gentleman's argument. It could be shown that everywhere the Administration had been conspicuous for its extravagant and reckless expenditure. When the late Government estimated certain amounts as required for the public service, they did so upon a full Treasury. They were at that time justified in a little expenditure, but Mr. Tilley would never have allowed the expenditure to grow until it was uncontrollable, with a falling revenue, and with the deficits which had been aggregating every year since this Government came into power. Mr. Tilley, in 1873, stated that he anticipated a deficit in the following year, and that when the time came he would deal with it by recasting the tariff.

Mr. McCARTHY.

Mr. MacKAY (Cape Breton): Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to the fact that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BOWELL: We could soon make one.

MR. MACKENZIE: Even if not, I hope no hon. member would take that course. We want to do some business to-night.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I have heard an hon. member ask that the House should be counted out, in order to defeat a measure to which he was opposed, but why the hon. gentleman should try to upset the Ministry which he supports, I do not see.

MR. SPEAKER: There is a quorum.

MR. PLUMB said the Opposition were ready to accept the challenge thrown down as to the fiscal policy of the two Governments. The First Minister had once said that nothing was more easy and more proper than to meet a deficit, if one was impending, by proper retrenchment and economy. Where was the economy? Hon. gentlemen had met the deficit in the way that a reckless, extravagant bankrupt met his deficits, by indulging in more expenditure. One would suppose, by the Estimates, that, instead of deficits accumulating year after year, we were in the highest state of prosperity. There had never been any indication of retrenchment on the part of the present Government. They had kept the word of promise to the ear, but had broken it to the hope in every direction. No one could now safely judge what the expenditure would be from the Estimates which were submitted. No one could say that economies would be carried out, because no one knew, as long as the device of Supplementary Estimates was resorted to, what the expenditure would be. The resolution which had been introduced by his hon. friend, was one which deserved the consideration of the House, and he hoped would receive its support. It was based upon principles which had been established by hon. gentlemen opposite, and if they voted against it they would stultify every promise they had made when out of power.

Question put and motion in amendment (Mr. McCarthy) negatived on the following division:—

YEAS :

Messieurs

Baby,	McDonald (Cape Breton),
Benoit,	Breton),
Bernier,	McDougall (Three Rivers),
Bolduc,	Macmillan,
Bourbeau,	McCallum,
Bowell,	McCarthy,
Cameron,	McQuade,
Campbell,	Méthot,
Caron,	Montplaisir,
Costigan,	Mousseau,
Currier,	Ouimet,
Cuthbert,	Pinsonneault,
Desjardins,	Platt,
Dewdney,	Plumb,
Farrow,	Robinson,
Ferguson,	Robitaille,
Gibbs (N. Ontario),	Roy,
Gibbs (S. Ontario),	Ryan,
Gill,	Stephenson,
Haggart,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Harwood,	Wade,
Hurteau,	Wallace (South Norfolk),
Jones (South Leeds),	White (East Hastings),
Kirkpatrick,	White (North Renfrew),
Laagevin,	Wright (Pontiac).—52
Lanthier,
Little,
Macdonald (Kingston),

NAYS :

Messieurs

Appleby,	Jones (Halifax),
Archibald,	Kerr,
Aylmer,	Kirk,
Bain,	Langlois,
Béchar,	Laurier,
Bertram,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Biggar,	MacDonnell,
Blackburn,	Macdougall (East Elgin),
Blake,	McDougall (South Renfrew),
Borden,	McKay (Cape Breton),
Borron,	Mackenzie,
Bowman,	McGregor,
Boyer,	McIntyre,
Brown,	McNab,
Buell,	Metcalfe,
Burk,	Mills,
Burpee (St. John),	Oliver,
Burpee (Sunbury),	Paterson,
Cartwright,	Perry,
Casey,	Pickard,
Casgrain,	Power,
Cheval,	Ray,
Christie,	Richard,
Church,	Ross (West Middlesex),
Coffin,	Rymal,
De St. Georges,	Scatcherd,
Dymond,	Scrifer,
Ferris,	Shibley,
Fiset,	Sinclair,
Fleming,	Skinner,
Flyan,	Smith (Peel),
Forbes,	Smith (Selkirk),
Galbraith,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Geoffrion,	Snider,
Gibson,	St. Jean,
Gillies,	Taschereau,
Gillmor,	Thompson, (Haldimand),
Goudge,	Trow,
Greenway,	Wallace (Albert),
Hagar,	Wood,
Higinbotham,	Young—86.
Holton,
Horton,
Huntington,
Jetté,

SUPPLY.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

CIVIL GOVERNMENT.

270. Required to meet estimated expenditure for extra Clerks in the Department of Agriculture..... $6,000 00

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

271. To provide for sundry expenses in connection with the Maritime Court of Ontario, including Seals for the Court, Judges' travelling expenses, Court Books, &c..... 300 00

SIR JOHN A. MACDCFALD: This must be an error.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I think it is. It seems to have been voted before.

MR. LAFLAMME: It is for the establishment of Courts not contemplated when the other similar vote was taken.

MR. KIRKPATRICK: These Surrogate Judges should be soon appointed at the principal towns on the lakes, as soon as navigation has opened.

MR. LAFLAMME: The matter is under immediate consideration, and it has been decided to place such Courts at the principal towns on the lakes.

MR. LANGEVIN: Then is this an additional sum?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: It is; at first sight I thought it was a mistake.

Vote agreed to.

PENITENTIARIES.

272. Staff—Increase to salary of Surgeon, Manitoba Penitentiary $200 00

LEGISLATION.

273. To meet expenditure in connection with Senate Hansard.... 3,000 00

MILITIA.

274. Additional amount required for Drill Sheds and Rifle Ranges...10,000 00

MR. JONES: This is chiefly intended for St. John, N.B. The old barracks which were formerly used for this purpose were burned down at the great fire, and it is hoped that this vote will be sufficient. The Drill Shed will be built on Government property.

MR. PLUMB.

Vote agreed to.

PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS CHARGEABLE TO CAPITAL.

275. Pacific Railway—
Georgian Bay Branch.....$100,000 00
Between Lake Superior and Keewatin..... 300,000 00

---

$400,000 00

MR. MACKENZIE: This $300,000 is taken on the same principle as the $500,000 for British Columbia. If we do not find contractors to take the entire contract across, as I explained the other evening, we will then have a contract ready at the next meeting of the House for the portion of the 180 miles still to be built between Fort William and Keewatin or Rat Portage. None of this will be expended until the contract is approved and sanctioned by Parliament. The $100,000 is for the real and not the subsidized Canada Central Branch westward to the mouth of French River. This is not under contract. It was, but the contract of the late Mr. Foster was cancelled. Provision for the Canada Central is Statutory under the Order-in-Council recently adopted.

MR. KIRKPATRICK: Is any of this vote of $300,000 for water communication?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: None is to be expended, except the contract is laid before the House. In point of fact, it cannot be expended until after next Session.

Vote agreed to.

PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS CHARGEABLE TO INCOME.

277. { Windsor Post Office and Custom House..... $30,000.00
{ Brantford Public Offices.. 25,000.00

---

$55,000.00

MR. MACKENZIE said that, two years ago, he stated that the policy of the Government was to erect new buildings where they were required by the growth of public business, and pointed out that there were large towns or cities, such as Windsor, Brantford, Guelph, St. Catharines and Belleville, in Ontario, which would have consideration in this respect, and he proposed to take one or two, each year, beginning with those where the largest amount of business was transacted. They commenced with Guelph, which was a very large collection district; and these two were taken as the next most important. The revenue collected at Windsor, two or three years ago, was about a million, though now less, still it was nearly three-fourths of a million. Altogether about 39 inland revenue and customs officers were employed there, besides weights and measures, and post office employees. In Brantford the post office revenue was the fifth largest in Ontario, and the customs collection for the last fiscal year was, he thought, $125,000, and something over $200,000 in excise. The population of Windsor was 7,000 or 8,000, and there was urgent need of this action.

MR. BOWELL said he wished to know whether steps had been taken to erect public buildings in Belleville. Application had been made, and the Minister of Public Works attention was called to vacant land affording the most eligible position in the town for this purpose. Their post-office revenue was quite as large as that of Brantford or other places.

MR. MACKENZIE: Nothing like it. He had taken no steps concerning the other matter, further than to make enquiry and request some parties to send him maps with some lots marked down, which he proposed to make some arrangements to secure, though not knowing the amount, he could not ask for a vote.

Vote agreed to.

278. Fredericton Public Offices.....	$12,000
279. Sydney, C.B., Quarantine Hospital.....	2,000
280. Pickering Harbour.....	10,000

MR. MACKENZIE said that originally this harbour was maintained by local effort. It once was the property of the late John Hillyard Cameron, and was afterwards possessed by the township and sold to another company. The township of Pickering had advanced a loan of $20,000, and given a donation of $13,000. Acting on the same principle that the Government had voted money in aid of the Oshawa and Whitby harbours, which were owned by private companies, they proposed this vote. He thought that $80,000 altogether had been spent by private individuals and municipalities on Pickering harbour. This amount would complete and make it one of the best on the lake.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: This is twice what was given the other harbours.

MR. MACKENZIE: Yes; but it is a much larger work, and a much larger sum has been spent on it by the municipalities than in the other cases. I have no detail of the income, but I think it does not pay.

MR. CAMERON said that this harbour belonged to one individual, who was incorporated as a company. This one stockholder was Mr. McLennan, who had obtained it from the municipality and spent some little money of his own upon it; but he got the property for next to nothing. He thought that Mr. McLellan had paid for it to the late Mr. Cameron, $5,000, and had made a very good paying speculation out of it. This harbour was not one of great public utility. It was a purely private venture. This man had an elevator there, bought grain, and carried on his private business, but no one else used it, and if he had not very strong claims on the Administration for their support, both on his own account and that of his connections—for his son-in-law was a well-known person in Oshawa, whose political influence was found very serviceable against the present member for South Ontario, on a very critical occasion—he (Mr. Cameron) did not think this vote would appear in the Estimates. Oshawa and Whitby Harbours received $5,000 each, he believed; and each belonged to a large town; but this was simply a place whence Mr. McLellan shipped grain, and bought it from the surrounding farmers in the township of Pickering. The Government could not say that it was used as a harbour of refuge. Its position and inaccessibility rendered it useless for any such service. The Government had commenced a harbour of refuge at Cobourg, built one pier, and then refused further aid. This money might be much more usefully spent; $10,000 would make of Cobourg a proper harbour of refuge, and be useful to the whole shipping on the lake, and it should not be spent in this little one-horse place, owned by one man, for his own purposes alone, and not a work of public utility, entitling it to this large sum out of the public Treasury. One could not help having a suspicion that there was an inducement on the part of the Government to give it. This very gentleman was brought down to give evidence to blacken Mr. Murdoch's character, and to endeavour to bolster up the position of the Government in that respect.

MR. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman was wrong in saying this gentleman was brought down to blacken Mr. Murdoch's character. He had no right to say that any person brought as a witness by the Government was brought to blacken anybody's character. A deputation from the neighbourhood came to him (Mr. Mackenzie) in the first place and represented that there were only a quarter million bushels of grain shipped from this place last year; that it was a work which never had paid, and which never was likely to pay, inasmuch as it could not be properly used as a harbour until more money had been expended on it. He (Mr. Mackenzie) found the municipality of Pickering had advanced $32,000 within the last two years, and that it was a fair case to bring before the House to obtain a vote. He had only seen the gentleman a couple of times and was not aware whose son-in-law he was. No political influence or local influence was used with him in regard to this matter.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said when a vote of this kind was brought down, a report of the engineer should be presented, so that the House would be enabled to form a judgment on it, not only in respect to this harbour, but all other harbours. There should be some system by which this aid should be granted. It should not be left altogether to the fancy of the Government as to what harbour should be assisted and what should not. The House did not know what this sum was for.

MR. MACKENZIE: It is to deepen the harbour.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said there was no report from the engineer stating what benefit the public would expect to get from the harbour, or of the amount of work to be done. There should be some statement to show that they had not got the money to make this improvement themselves. The hon. the First Minister should have ascertained the facts, and by this means he would be enabled to tell the House what had been the expense on the harbour and what had been the income.

MR. MACKENZIE said about $80,000 had been expended on the harbour from first to last, $33,000 were stated to have been given as a gift, and $10,000 as a loan. He was also informed that all the revenue collected, and a great deal more besides, had been expended on it.

MR. GIBBS (South Ontario) said one did not like to say anything against a grant for his own particular constituency at any time. He had the honour of being interested in the Port Oshawa Harbour Company, which had paid from ten to fifteen per cent for a number of years past. He had placed his views on the grant of $50,000 to it on the minutes of the harbour company. That amount had been granted in opposition to his wishes, and was not in accordance with the views expressed from time to time by the hon. the Premier when in Opposition. He (Mr. Gibbs) remembered most distinctly the hon. the Premier then entering a solemn protest against all grants of the kind for local works, when upon the shore of Lake Huron, some grants were made to harbour companies. In reference to this particular case it was correct that the municipality of Pickering had given $13,000 in cash, and that this company had obtained their Bill last Session, whereby they asked borrowing powers, and endeavoured to obtain $20,000 on their debentures for an amount said to have been expended. They were unable to do so. The Township of Pickering came to their rescue, exchanged debentures, and thus aided them to a further sum of $20,000, taking their debentures as a guarantee of payment. The Port Oshawa Company got $5,000, the Port Darlington Company got $5,000, and another company got $5,000. Then this Pickering Harbour Company was receiving more than either of the three companies he had mentioned. It had been abandoned a few years ago, and was purchased from Mr. Hillyard Cameron, and the purchasers had expended considerable money upon it. Had the sum been $5,000, the same as was voted to the other harbours, he would not have said one word. With reference to Whitby Harbour, he did not know that, since it became the possession of a private company, any Government aid had been granted to it. He was of opinion that it would be only fair to this company, and none of the other companies would have complained, if the same amount had been given to this company as to the others. However, the Government saw fit in their Estimates to give this company $10,000, believing them to be in need of it. Was that amount to be given on account of expenditure on improvements already made, or in consideration of a further sum to be expended by them in addition to that granted by Parliament.

MR. CAMERON.

MR. MACKENZIE: This sum, if voted, would be expended under the direction of Mr. Kingsford.

MR. GIBBS: Without any corresponding sum on the part of the company?

MR. MACKENZIE: I made no such arrangement.

MR. McCALLUM said this harbour was what used to be called Frenchman's Bay, and was about eight miles from Windsor Harbour, where the Government had expended a large amount of money. Since Windsor Harbour went into the hands of a private company he was satisfied no money had been expended on it. He would ask the hon. the Minister of Public Works what depth of water he expected to get there for this amount of $10,000, and whether surveys had been made. He understood the hon. gentleman to say it would be one of the best harbours on the lake.

MR. MACKENZIE: I said in that neighbourhood.

MR. McCALLUM said he questioned whether $10,000 would make it a harbour of refuge, or as good a harbour as Port Whitby. It was the old story of wasting public money on private property and local works, and by-and-by when it would be necessary to build harbours, there would be no money to do it, if we went on investing private works in this manner.

MR. BLAKE said it would be of interest to the Committee if the hon. member for South Ontario would give information as to the net revenue of this enterprise. It must be a matter of surprise to the Government that a corporation paying ten per cent. per annum should receive a public subsidy. Had the hon. member placed his view on record before the Government previous to the grant, it would have prevented Parliament from granting a sum to assist a corporation in such a prosperous condition. If the hon. gentleman would give anything like the same information with reference to this enterprise, the Government would withdraw their vote.

MR. GIBBS (South Ontario) said he knew nothing whatever of the affairs of this Company. He knew it was an enterprise entered upon by a young man, Mr. McLellan, who deserved credit for what he had done there. It had been a very considerable benefit to that section. With reference to the Oshawa Harbour Company, a dividend had been regularly declared since its construction, of ten to twelve per cent. per annum, and he (Mr. Gibbs) had placed on the minutes of the Company his views relative to the Government grant, which the Company could have sent to the Government, had they seen fit to do so. The Government could have made those enquiries if they had pleased. All he could say was that the $5,000 were thrust upon it.

MR. BLAKE: I am sure that my hon. friend refused to take his share of it.

MR. CAMERON said it was to his knowledge that this Company proposed to borrow $25,000 on the security of this harbour with a mortgage of certain private property at Ottawa, as collateral security. They represented the harbour was paying an income to afford ample security for the loan of the $25,000. The Government should not give aid of this kind to a private enterprise without having officially before it on the records of the Department, thorough information as to the financial affairs of the company, and the character and position of the work they were going to make. The whole principle of affording aid to these private companies was wrong.

MR. McCALLUM said that the hon. member for South Bruce had stated that, of course, if the Oshawa Harbour Company made so much dividend, the Government would not give it any money. He (Mr. McCallum) did not see that the financial position of a company should be made a standard by which the Government should judge whether to give them a money grant or not, or that the Government should grant money to a company because it did not pay a dividend of ten per cent. It might be a better investment for the Dominion to expend $20,000 in that harbour than $5,000, because it was not known what amount of water could be got for $5,000. If $5,000 were sufficient to get a draught of water there so that vessels might have shelter in a storm, it was right enough. But if it took $10,000, $5,000 would not suit. The Government should know the draught of water they would obtain for the money now appropriated for that purpose.

MR. BOWELL said the statement of the hon. member for South Ontario had also been made by him on a similar vote last Session. The Government were taking out of the public revenue an additional sum in order to make that private property valuable, and to make it pay a good dividend to the individual stockholders. It must be evident that those grants were given for a political purpose. Why should individuals receive a grant from Parliament to enhance the value of their own property? The law provided that every dollar raised by tolls upon shipping by Government should be extended in improving the harbours, while individual companies were not subject to such restrictions, but could pocket the money received from tolls.

MR. BLAKE said that while he quite agreed with the principle that wherever a harbour was the property of a private individual or corporation, before giving a grant to improve said property, there should be a strict scrutiny into its affairs, with a view to avoid occurrences such as that which the hon. member for South Ontario had so deeply regretted in private for the past two years, and in public for the first time to-night, still, the circumstances stated by the hon. the Minister of Public Works were tolerably good presumptive guarantee against the harbour being in a remunerative position. Rural municipalities were not very apt to be free with the money raised on their taxes. There were not many who would be willing to pay a bonus of $13,000 towards a harbour which was a paying concern.

MR. CAMERON: There was no harbour.

MR. BLAKE: Then obviously the municipality must have been of opinion that the harbour would not at all have been constructed upon the individual credit of the parties, and that it would not pay, unless they were willing to grant that sum towards it. The hon. the First Minister would take care there would be no recurrence of this case mentioned by the hon. member for South Ontario, by, in the first place, reducing the vote, in accordance with his suggestion, to the same amount as that granted to other harbours, and, in the second place, by assuring the Committee that this reduced sum should not be paid until it was ascertained the harbour was not paying a revenue.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said this was rather a strange state of affairs. Here the Government asked for $10,000 for this Pickering harbour. Upon a simple statement of facts which the Government ought to have known before asking for a farthing, they cut the amount down one-half. The hon. the Premier was asked on what ground he asked for this vote. Well, he said, there has been considerable expenditure there, he understood $80,000. What evidence did the hon. gentleman lay before the House that it was $80,000? He did not know, but he remembered, he knew positively, that $33,000 had been expended. He asked this House to vote a sum of public money, and would not pay it the compliment of preparing the necessary information. The hon. gentleman did not know the depth of water required for that harbour; whether it would be a profitable or unprofitable work; all he knew was that Mr. McLellan was a very praiseworthy gentleman, that he bought this property from Mr. Hillyard Cameron for a song, and asked the Government to help him, and the Government gave twice as much as was given to any other harbour along that coast. Mr. McLellan was well known to be a strong political supporter of the hon. gentleman, and to be the son-in-law of a strong friend of his who was bought over in 1874, Dr. McGill. This transaction being exposed, the hon. gentleman was willing to cut it down to $5,000, and that this should not be expended if the statements made on this side of the House prove to be at all well founded. This hon. gentleman was the careful guardian of the public Treasury; this hon. gentleman who came down here to ask for this vote, without even paying this House the respect of charging his memory with the facts relating to the case. It was, throughout, a most suspicious transaction, one which went far to justify any inference made as to the motives which prompted the Government in placing many of these sums in the Estimates.

MR. MACKENZIE said he had given accurate information. He had stated a sum of $33,000 had been paid by the municipality, and another $20,000 had been advanced as a loan by the municipality. The only thing he was uncertain about was whether the loan was $23,000 or $20,000, and the gift $10,000 or $13,000. He also told the Committee that the company had expended, he believed, about $15,000. He was uncertain what the previous expenditure by the municipality and other local authorities amounted to. His impression was the entire expenditure from local sources amounted to $80,000.

MR. GIBBS: Did $80,000 cover the expenditure before it came into the hands of the present proprietors as well as since?

MR. MACKENZIE. That was my impression, showing it was manifestly of local importance, or so much money would not have been expended on it.

MR. GIBBS: Well, Mr. Cameron spent $30,000 on it and sold it for $5,000.

MR. MACKENZIE said that was the greatest reason why the public should aid it. Another harbour the Government aided in a similar manner, was the Port Burton Company, which was voted $7,500. This company was not able through their revenues to maintain the work, and Parliament came to their relief. In the Maritime Provinces, where there were few harbour corporations, the expenditure was almost entirely from the public purse. Nothing could be more legitimate than to aid those to the same extent as they aided themselves. He had had no communication of any sort to show that it was not a perfectly legitimate enterprise which ought to be aided by the Government. The hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Gibbs) having represented that as far as he knew this harbour was not in a different position from others, he (Mr. Mackenzie) proposed to reduce the vote to $5,000 with the understanding that the money should not be expended if he found that the money would in any way minister to private wants instead of serving public interests.

MR. MCCALLUM said he protested against making it the basis of assistance to harbours, whether they paid as a private speculation or not. The question was not whether this man made money or not, but what benefit the public derived from it.

Vote agreed to.

281. Matane Harbour .....	$10,000 00
Chicoutimi Harbour (to pay St. Lawrence Tow Boat Company for money expended)..	4,151 65
282. Woodward's Cove, Grand Manan .....	2,500 00
Roche Bay Pier, Anderson's Hollow .....	3,000 00
Clifton Breakwater.....	1,000 00
283. Margaree, C.B.....	3,000 00
Lingan Breakwater.....	2,000 00
Port Hood Breakwater.....	10,000 00
Three Fathom Harbour....	3,000 00
284. Big Miminogash, P.E.I.....	4,000 00
Wood Island Breakwater...	4,000 00
285. Purchase of a dredge.....	15,000 00
286. Removing Rock, Victoria Harbour, B. C.....	8,000 00
287. To pay expenses of Survey of Coast in vicinity of Capes Tormentine and Traverse on Prince Edward Island and Mainland, and a suggested Railway connected between said Capes to Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways, with a view to secure winter communication with the Island.....	5,000 00

OCEAN AND RAILWAY SERVICE.

288. To provide for half year's Mail Subsidy between Halifax and Cork, if necessary..	19,770 84
---	-----------

INDIANS.

289. To purchase seed grain.....	$2,000 00
----------------------------------	------------

MR. MILLS said that this was for Indians in the North-West. They were settled, and were pressing for surveys of their reservation.

MR. PLUMB said that the cultivation experiment with the Chippewas, a very intelligent people in the State of New York, had proved unsuccessful.

MR. ROBITAILLE said he wished again to call attention to the destitute condition of the Indians in the Province of Quebec. They required seed grain. They were prevented fishing by the Government, and should certainly be assisted. The policy of the Government seemed to be to let them starve.

MR. MILLS said that the Government had merely to administer the provincial Indian funds.

MR. LANGEVIN said that the principle of aiding these Indians had been recognised.

Vote agreed to.

MR. MCCALLUM.

290. Further amount required in Manitoba and North-West	$5,000.00
291. Further amount, British Columbia.....	12,000.00

In answer to Mr. DeCosmos,

MR. MILLS said that a great deal of difficulty had arisen between the the whites and Indians in British Columbia. It was stated that whites had settled on reservations, and in some cases obtaining leases and then patents; this had led to much ill-felling. Three Commissioners, on behalf of the Local and Dominion Governments, were appointed to examine into these grievances, but as the Province objected afterwards to three, on the ground of expense, Mr Sproat, the umpire, was appointed sole Commissioner, the privilege of appealing to a Judge of the Supreme Court being reserved to the Province in case this was thought desirable.

Vote agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS.

292 To meet expenses of the Ontario Boundary Commission .....	$15,000
293 To meet expenditure estimated to be required to put in force the Act respecting the traffic in Intoxicating Liquors.....	5,000
294 To pay a gratuity to Mrs. Coffin, the widow of the late Lieutenant Colonel W. F. Coffin, Commissioner of Ordnance and Admiralty Lands.....	2,000

COLLECTION OF REVENUES.

Weights and Measures.

295 Amount required to provide for the carrying out of the Act in British Columbia .....	500
--	-----

Public Works.

296 Towards building Telegraph Line from Victoria to Nanaimo, B.C.....	7,000
--	-------

Dominion Lands.

297 {	Surveys—Amount required for Township Surveys, Saskatchewan	10,000
	Surveys Highways Manitoba.....	2,500
	Offices—To provide for rent, stationery, &c., for three new offices..	1,900

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolutions reported.

House adjourned at Twenty minutes past
Two o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 8th May, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MANITOBA PUBLIC SCHOOLS BILL.—
[BILL No. 78.]

(Mr. Mills.)

THIRD READING.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS CHARGEABLE TO CAPITAL.

256. Intercolonial Railway—Balance of appropriation for 1876-77 unexpended 30th September, 1877, and carried forward by Special Warrant on account of freight cars (Revote).....$76,736 72

In answer to Mr. LANGEVIN,

MR. MACKENZIE said that in all 740 box cars were built; 300 by contract; 200 at Cobourg for $520 each; and 100 at London for $530 each; and 440 at the Government shops at Moncton, costing a shade less.

Vote agreed to.

257. Intercolonial Railway—Balance of appropriation for 1876-77 unexpended 30th September, 1877, and carried forward by Special Warrant on account of expenses before Supreme Court (Revote) ..... $8,575 14

In answer to Mr. LANGEVIN,

MR. MACKENZIE said that the expenditure was chiefly made in connection with the Jones case at Halifax; another very important case, that of Berlinquet, Bertrand & Co., was argued before Judge Taschereau, of Quebec. The whole of these cases, some of which had not yet come to trial, exceeded a million in value; but the judgment in the first and second cases practically controlled all the others.

Vote agreed to.

258. Intercolonial Railway — Amount awarded by arbitrators to Chipman estate for land taken for St. John Station..... $33,000 00

MR. MACKENZIE said that this was for 5 4-10ths acres of land, situated in the immediate vicinity of St. John station, bought by the New Brunswick Government when it owned the railway. It was never paid for; this Government offered $20,000 for it last year; offer declined; and arbitrators awarded $24,000 in the interest from 1st January, 1872, which made the judgment $33,000.

Vote agreed to.

259. Intercolonial Railway. Amount required for constructing conductors', cattle, and fish freight cars.....$16,000

260. Intercolonial Railway. Amount required to complete the construction of railway..... 78,500

MR. MACKENZIE said that $75,000 were taken in 1877 8 to complete the road. It was all spent, and further liabilities incurred as follows:—D. McDonald, on account of contract 10, $10,000—admitted balance due, $17,000; Murphy, $10,000—admitted balance due, $17,000; excess of expenditure on passenger cars and snow ploughs, $15,797; balance due Fairhaven Manufacturing Company, $9,133; due E. Jones, $12,228; balance due McDonald on contract for ballasting, $800; Murphy, for Restigouche Bridge, $172.86, on which $10,000 was paid Nelson & McGow, on contract 14, $7,475; other claims, $5,98.

Vote agreed to.

261. Prince Edward Island Railway. To pay Messrs. Schrieber & Burpee in full settlement of all claims in connection with their contract for building the railway $4,551 86

In answer to Mr. LANGEVIN,

MR. MACKENZIE said that Mr. McGadney, who had been Traffic Superintendent of the Midland Railway, was, and had been since the opening of the Prince Edward Railway, its Superintendent.

MR. MITCHELL said as he had been ill and absent from the House, he now desired to call the attention of the hon. the Postmaster-General to a letter he had received from a correspondent at St. John, complaining that the English mail, after delivery at Rimouski, though sent westward by special train, was despatched east on a freight train, occasioning serious delay. He hoped arrangements would be made to send this train east on a special.

MR. HUNTINGTON said he would certainly be very glad to meet the views of the hon. gentleman. He would enquire into the subject with every disposition to afford all possible facilities.

Vote agreed to.

262	{	Pacific Railway—Fort William to Sunshine Creek..	$ 80,000
		Sunshine Creek to English River.....	288,000
		Rat Portage to Cross Lake..	373,000
		Cross Lake to Red River...	13,100
		Telegraph lines and roadway	9,800
		Fort Frances Lock.....	60,000

MR. BUNSTER said he regretted that no provision was made for the construction of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway. Some years ago Government had passed a Bill to build this road, through the House; but the Senate had thrown it out, and the measure had never since been submitted to the Upper Chamber. Hence the intention of the Government was not to construct this line. This was unfair as it had been agreed to make it part and parcel of the Canadian Pacific Railway with Esquimalt as the terminus. The Premier had stated the other day that when they acceded to office they communicated with British Columbia, which accepted the Carnarvon terms. He averred that the Carnarvon terms had not been carried out in good faith by Canada, and that British Columbia was worth more to the Dominion many times that the cost of the railway. He was inclined to suspect that the Government were doing all they could to retard the construction of the railway, fearing that if built it would carry away the people from the other Provinces to British Columbia, which was more favoured in soil and climate. The Esquimalt and Nanaimo Bill should be submitted to the Senate again, as the Government were now stronger in that body than when they had rejected the measure.

MR. MACKENZIE.

Vote agreed to.

263.	Carillon and Grenville Canal
	—Land taken.....	$459 57
264.	Lachine Canal—Further amount required to pay for enlargement.....	485,600 00
265.	Cornwall Canal—Further amount required to pay for enlargement.....	50,005 00
267.	Welland Canal—Further amount required to pay for enlargement....	138,500 00
268.	Rideau Canal—Draw-bridge... Ottawa Buildings—Unexpended balance of appropriation of 1876-7 for "Tower," carried forward 30th September, 1877, by Special Warrant (Revote).....	6,000 00 8,000 00
269	Unexpended balance of appropriation of 1876-7 for "Western Block Extension," carried forward 30th September, 1877, by Special Warrant (Revote).....	142,325 86

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolutions reported.

PACIFIC RAILWAY AMENDMENT BILL.

SENATE AMENDMENTS INSISTED ON.

MR. SPEAKER read a message from the Senate acquainting this House that the Senate doth insist on their amendments made to the Bill No. 52, to amend the Canadian Pacific Act, 1874, to which the House hath agreed, and giving their reasons.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

Resolution reported from Committee of Supply considered.

On Resolution 82, Pacific Railway, $2,549,700,

MR. THOMPSON (Cariboo) said that he did not wish to enter into a long discussion of this matter. He merely wished to say that looking upon it from a British Columbia standpoint, he thought that the policy of the Government with regard to carrying this road was not by any means satisfactory. They had had this work put off from year to year; and every year they were told by the Government that they expected to be in position to commence the railway next season. They were now told that the Government, if they had not adopted a route, had, at least, under serious consideration the adoption of a certain route; but in case this was done, it still involved a delay of almost another year, before the contracts, if any were intended to be awarded, would be let, and this could not be done before the meeting of the first Session of next Parliament. When the Carnarvon compromise was arrived at, between British Columbia and the Government of Canada, it was proposed that two millions annually should be spent on it; all they saw put down now was $500,000, and even this could not be spent until after the next meeting of Parliament. He considered that the policy of the Government was not wise or far-seeing, as to their manner of carrying on this railroad. Detached portions of the road were now being built to the west of Lake Superior, between it and Red River, and other portions, at least one large portion of it, was still left broken in the centre of that chain. West of Red River they found that nothing had been done towards the Rocky Mountains, and now in British Columbia they were told that the Government had under consideration the scheme of commencing this road at Yale, and carrying it forward. He did not come here to advocate any particular route. He had always been willing that the route which should be recommended by the Engineers should be adopted as the route. At the same time he was satisfied, after reading these reports which had been made, that the selection of Burrard Inlet, as the terminus, could not be considered as wise. The First Minister, in giving extracts from the different reports made by Messrs. Smith and Fleming, and other Engineers, did not certainly give the report of an able gentleman of high experience, Admiral Horsey, whose report laid on the table, practically condemned Burrard

Inlet as fit for the terminus of this railway, the importance which it deserved. It was approximate to the American line, and, with regard to navigating through the islands, it certainly offered great disadvantages. However, they knew that this route would be cheaper than it would be to build the road to Bute Inlet, and eventually carry it to Vancouver Island, which would be necessary, he presumed, in case the Bute Inlet route was selected. The Premier had told them that this route would not be so favourable as the other, and in this opinion he fully agreed; and it would have been much more satisfactory if it would have been seen that this road could be carried to proper advantage. They were now opening up large mining areas, which required a great deal of machinery to work, and they had now on the way some two millions, at least, and probably three or four millions of dollars' worth of mills being sent up there this summer. The freight on each of these mills would not be less than $10,000, and this was a very serious item for miners, who did not have large capital, and who have been struggling along for years in the hope that they would have a road by which they could get in machinery through the Province at a cheaper rate. He believed that the people of Cariboo were perfectly willing to accept forever what might be considered the best route, looking at it from all points of view, provided they saw that the Ministry was in earnest, and intended to go on with this undertaking; but he did not think that the people would believe that the Ministry was really in earnest in pushing it on quickly, when the Government now merely talked about commencing it at Yale, and this a year from the present time. He did not think that Yale could ever be considered a good point to start the road from. The navigation of the Fraser River was not the best in the world; and it was only open for nine months in the year. The expense of taking up rails to Yale would also be very considerable. If the Ministry should select the Burrard Inlet route, he certainly thought it would be desirable to commence the work at once at Burrard Inlet, or at least at Harrison

River, a point to which steamers could run at all seasons of the year except a very few days when the river might be blocked with ice; but above Harrison River were numerous rapids, and during winter navigation was there nearly always suspended, at least, for three months. He considered that British Columbia had made many sacrifices for which she had received no reward. In the first place, when they came into the Union, they had the privilege of retaining their own tariff until the railway was completed, or of accepting the Canadian, and they did the latter, though it was then somewhat lower than their own. But the Canadian tariff had since been raised again and again until they were now paying, in this regard, more than they were paying originally. He thought that the figures would bear him out when he said that British Columbia was now paying, at least, $50,000 into the Treasury more than she would have done under the former tariff she had when she came into the Union. It had been raised for the purpose of building the Pacific Railway and of improving the canals and other matters. But what did they find? The Intercolonial Railway was completed, and the Welland and Lachine Canals, and the Fort Frances Locks; all these works were being done, but nothing whatever had been done with regard to British Columbia's interests, and they had only the faint shadow of a promise that, perhaps in another year, the Government might use this money towards building a portion of this road. One point, he thought, had been overlooked to a great extent by the people of the Dominion with reference to British Columbia. They imported, in proportion to their population, much more of foreign goods than any other Province of the Dominion, and the hon. member for Centre Toronto had reminded the House the other day that British Columbia imported less than she exported. Consequently they did not run in debt like the other Provinces were doing. They had no deficit; they were working and feeling their way cautiously and quietly, and, therefore, they were not placed at the heavy disadvantage of being obliged to provide for the deficit incurred by the other Provinces. The total imports of British Columbia last year were $2,393,000, and of this a very large portion was imported from the United States, comprising articles which they could as well import from Canada, and which, if the railway was built, would afford splendid bargains for the Ontario manufacturers. There were imported into British Columbia last year manufactured goods in iron and steel no less than $117,000 worth, 75 per cent. of which came from the United States; of India rubber goods, 93 per cent.; leather boots and shoes and other leather goods, 92½ per cent.; brooms and brushes, 83½ per cent.; carriages and carriage furniture, 87 per cent.; cabinetware and furniture, 97 per cent.; cordage, rope and twine, 95 per cent.; paper, 82 per cent., and stationery, 72 per cent., from the United States; all of which, if they had a railway might be furnished from Ontario. Cottons, woollens and hosiery were also imported to a very large extent, but the greater portion came, however, from Great Britain. He thought that if this road was completed, Canadian manufactures, which were now struggling along and competing with the United States, would find a very valuable market open not only in British Columbia but also in the whole North-West country, which would be traversed by the line all the way from Red River to the Pacific, and he thought that the people of British Columbia certainly were led to believe that the Government would carry this railway on with greater energy in the future than in the past. He did not see that their policy was such as could afford any satisfaction, and he only trusted that the people of this country would rise and showed that they were in earnest, and that any Government which remained in power must do so by carrying out the railway policy which alone could ever build up this country and make it great, united and prosperous.

MR. THOMPSON.

MR. DECOSMOS said it was not his wish to inflict a speech on the House. It was a matter of necessity that compelled him to occupy its attention. The utterance of the First Minister in respect to this railroad was one that the Canadian people of to-day and the Canadian people of the future would condemn. The utterance of the First Minister on this point was neither right nor wrong. It was one of the hon. gentleman's metaphysical efforts, and if he was allowed to say so without doing violence to Parliamentary usage, the hon. gentleman's utterance with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway was a delusion and a snare. The hon. gentleman conveyed the idea to the House that it was his intention to adopt the Fraser River route. He did not believe that this was the hon. gentleman's intention, or that he intended to adopt any other route in British Columbia. He believed that this was one of the hon. gentleman's Machiavellian efforts to deceive the people of British Columbia, and at the same time to try and keep them within the Union, for fear they might take both the Federal and Provincial Governments of the country into their own hands.

MR. HOLTON: Hear, hear.

MR. DECOSMOS said he heard his hon. friend from Chateauguay, who was one of the original Annexationists, he believed, in the Province of Quebec, say "Hear, hear." He (Mr. DeCosmos) had never a particle of Annexationist blood in his veins; but he would make this remark, that unless the people of Canada were prepared to build this railway through that country, they had no other destiny on this side of the Continent, than to take the course of the hon. member for Chateauguay, when he signed that celebrated petition for annexation to the United States. Their whole frontier, from Manitoba all along the Eastern Provinces, and all along the great bend of the Intercolonial, was all tapped by the United States. They had no great back country, no great north country. They had the means of making a country, so far as a manufacturing country might go, but it was only in the great West that they had the backbone and body and the future soul of this north end of the Continent. If there was to be any such thing as a nation in this north end of the Continent, and such a thing as an Anglo-Norman nation, as in Asia and Europe—there was the Russia-Northman nation—they must build this railway. It was railway or absorption into the United States; railway or dissolution. He was astonished at the stupidity of the Canadians in that they could support any Government in this country who were not bold enough to take the thing into their own hands and construct a railway across the continent. He was not, he would remark, making a set speech, but talking as if in private conversation. There was only one portion of this Dominion where they could make a great city, and that was in British Columbia, and this was, first, where this Administration had failed. With millions and tens of millions and thousands of millions around the Pacific Ocean, gathering and commencing with the population of Russia, North of China, floating down to the millions of China, and to the islands still unoccupied, there was an immense trade to be done there to-day and in the future. And what were our Canadian rulers doing? Nothing. The hon. the Minister of the Interior had taken in several icebergs, he believed, recently, near the North Pole, and expected Her Majesty to pass an Act through the Imperial Parliament in order that he might take these icebergs into his possession and utilize the drift, if there was any drift in the Pleocene period, or something of the sort. Speaking a little more seriously, he would say, that if they took the whole route from Livingstone to Edmonton, he was assured by the Commissioner of the Fur Trade branch of the Hudson Bay Company, that there was not 20 per cent. of the land there fit for cultivation. He was assured, on the other hand, by gentlemen belonging to the Hudson Bay Company, and their Commissioner also, that if they took a northern route, they could carry settlement from the borders of Manitoba into the Rocky Mountains, and carry this railway through the Rocky Mountains into British Columbia, and find as good a country as Germany was 1,000 years ago. They could also find on the Pacific a port where they could compete with the United States ports. He would repeat, what he had previously told the House, that there were only three ports on the Pacific Ocean owned by the United States where a terminus could be made for a transcontinental railway—a terminus in the face of 1,000 millions of people such as the 800 millions as our terminus would front. The first point on the part of this Ministry, and of the engineers employed by it to have decided, should have been where this port should be; and when the port had been found, then to construct the railway. The indications given by the First Minister the other day were that this road would run by the Fraser Valley route, moving from the Dominion through a barren country down to Kamloops, through another barren country, and taking the trough called the Valley of the Thompson, and down through a gorge in the mountains and through another gorge, at last finding a small valley about forty miles this side of the Fraser River, where it would be possible for the hon. gentleman to go up and find a little way traffic, forty miles from the terminus at New Westminster. He had in his desk a copy of the North Pacific Railway Bill, and in it was reference to the running of a line north of the existing terminus at Tacoma. When they ran a line north of this terminus and reached Holmes Harbour, there would be nothing more easy than for these people or anybody else—and he knew the people who proposed to do it—to run a line towards the Fraser River and connect with the Pacific at Sumas, and by this means draw all the ocean navigation in sailing and steamships to that certain point; and thus build up one of the greatest cities that by any possible means could be built on the American continent. They would build it on Puget Sound, in Washington Territory, with the aid and assistance of the people, who, in his judgment, did not know how to build up this great nationality. The proper route for this railway to take was the Northern route, and by way of Bute Inlet. When they reached Johnson's Straits, they could there, if they wished, build the Constantinople of this continent, and a historical city that might live for ever; and be protected and have such a history in the coming future as even the Bosphorus and Constantinople possessed; and, to be still more practical, when it reached this point it could be crossed by a ferry. He was very sorry, and he regretted to say that the Premier had not brought down the papers with respect to this matter; and sorry to say, in addition, that the Premier had not brought down the correspondence asked for, and called for, and demanded by this House. The hon. gentleman had dared to keep back the correspondence between the Imperial, Provincial and Dominion Governments in this relation, and they were there to-day without the evidence they should have had in their possession to enable them to form a just conception of this subject. A remark was made the other day about ferries and bridges; but there was no earthly necessity whatever for any expenditure in order to connect the Bute Inlet route with Vancouver Island. Any hon. gentleman who had visited New York within the last 30 years, must know that there were upwards of a million people gathered around the shores of New York harbour; and when he wanted to go to Washington in winter, when the ice was floating down the river, he got on board a steamer and passed over to New Jersey. In their country, where they could connect Vancouver Island with British Columbia, no ice floated. Scarcely a frost was felt there, and we could pick pansies and daisies all the year round, and yet they heard here, over and over again, and read it in the Press, that they must have bridges at this point. There was no necessity for bridging there, and the moment they struck the centre of Vancouver Island, they struck a country full of iron and coal, the most accessible for settlement existing in their Province to-day. And yet this Ministry dared and professed to do what? To bring this railway by a route that would not only make the chief town on the North Pacific, on the American side, but also deprive Canada of the commercial advantages to which she was entitled. He would go further. A map had been prepared, and was in the possession of the Department of Public Works, which indicated and showed the character of the land. It was prepared by the acting Chief Engineer to give information to this country; and why had not this map been brought down to the House and circulated through Parliament, and communicated to the Senate? There was a design in this, and this design he believed was not in the interests of this country. Whatever it might be, it might be to shelter the Chief Engineer. He had no confidence in the Chief Engineer of the Pacific Railway, but he had full and complete confidence in that lion-faced engineer, Marcus Smith, who knew more of the west side of the Dominion than any man on earth. He would repeat again that gentleman knew more of the western portion of this Dominion than any man on earth. If he (Mr. DeCosmos) were Premier of this Dominion, he would relieve himself of an engineer of whom he had stated on the floor of this House that he was more an author than an engineer; and he would take that man who was a thorough engineer, who had explored the country, and had written reports on it year after year, of which he believed the present reports before the House to be a garbled copy. He (Mr. DeCosmos) knew that reports existed to-day in the Department of Public Works which had never been produced before this House. This House was called on to cast a vote for the Pacific Railway, and yet did not get the necessary information. He felt ashamed to see that documents bearing upon one of the grandest undertakings of the country were kept back, in order to prevent hon. gentlemen from using them. Therefore, as far as he could gather, the great object of this Government was to delay the construction of the railway. The great point to be considered was, first, to find the port, then to go on with the work. The late Government found their port, the port of Esquimalt, through, he believed, the sound judgment of the hon. member for Charlevoix, was that there were other ports which could be selected, the ports of Alberni and Quatsino, of all of which the Government could take advantage, if it were willing to adopt the right route. His firm conviction was that this Government had no idea of building the railway. If he recollected, the hon. the Premier, in a letter written to the convention at Toronto last February, stated they would not have attempted to do anything towards building the railway on our western coast, had it not been obligatory on them. In what way were they fulfilling this obligation? There had not been a day since 1870, when this trans-continental railway could not have been commenced on the Pacific coast. It could go on at this moment if the hon. gentleman desired it. British Columbia had contended for the immediate construction of the railway, but last year had made an arrangement with the Imperial Government to give this Government one year's delay. This year had passed, eighteen months had elapsed, and what had they done?

MR. MASSON: Nothing.

MR. DECOSMOS: Probably they did not wish to do anything. When that twelve months' time had been given the Government, it was intended that they would not merely define the route, but would commence the work this year, and yet it was held by the hon. the Premier that in order to commence any work we must wait until next Session of Parliament. Nothing in the shape of fulfilling the obligation on the part of this Government had been done, with the exception of an honest attempt, he believed, to build a portion by sending out rails to British Columbia. He would not occupy the time of the House any longer except to state on behalf of the people whom he had the honour to represent, and other members from British Columbia could put in their protest on behalf of the people they represented, that they wanted that railway commenced this year, and if any further surveys were necessary to be made, let them be made.

MR. DEWDNEY said at this very late period of the Session he did not intend to occupy the time of the House at a great length. Had the hon. member for Victoria not made his remarks, he doubted whether he would have entered into this discussion. He who had lived in the country for many years could appreciate the difficulties which the hon. the Minister of Public Works had to contend with in order to obtain thorough information with regard to that country. He was glad to hear the hon. member for Charlevoix speak in such flattering terms of the Engineer of this road who had, almost from the very inception of this undertaking, shown a great deal of ability and foresight. As early as 1871, after the first surveys had been conducted, the Chief Engineer's idea was that the Yellowhead or Leather Pass should be adopted as far as the passes to the Rocky Mountains were concerned, and the succeeding surveys proved it was right. The three routes mentioned by the hon. the Premier, namely, the Northern route, the Fraser River route, the Bute Inlet route, had been so minutely described, that he proposed only to say a few words about them. The only information obtained with regard to the Northern route was from the reports of Mr. Selwyn, Mr. Smith and Mr. Hunter—information received through the Indians on Hudson Bay grounds. Mr. Smith gave no information with regard to this route, although he very strongly advocated it, and even went so far as to recommend that construction should commence on the Western route in connection with the Northern route. The Bute Inlet route seemed to have been discarded by Mr. Smith. He hardly referred to it; at any rate, he did not refer to that portion which would condemn it entirely, the portion between Tête Jaune Cache and Fort George. With regard to the Burrard Inlet route, which the Government proposed to adopt, he (Mr. Dewdney) had always favoured it, but as the hon. the Premier had gone very minutely into its merits, he did not propose to discuss it. There was one point to be mentioned in connection with its military aspects. Both military and naval testimony were unanimous in declaring that so long as we controlled the naval superiority in these waters, our commerce would not be interfered with. He held a report from an engineer, General Debray, who was sent to report on the San Juan question:—

“The fitness of this Island (San Juan) for a permanent fortification, or for a military station of this kind, depends upon its relation to so much of our water frontier as lies along the Straits of Fuca, and its water communication with the Gulf of Georgia.

MR. DEWDNEY.

“This particular subject was, therefore, kept in mind while I was pursuing my general examination of the north-west coast. It directed the particular course of my inspections of those waters, and led me to extend my explorations as high up as Fraser River.

“I find nothing in the magnitude, form, or position of San Juan Island that will admit of the treatment for such a purpose, separate from general military considerations—those only with which I have anything to do—and I now proceed to give, as briefly as I can, the convictions that have arisen in my mind after mature reflection.

“Great Britain, by owning the whole of Vancouver Island, of which the southern shore bounds the Straits of Fuca on the north, possesses, just within its southern extremity, the admirable man-of-war harbour of Esquimalt, and she now occupies it as a naval station, having present there, at the time of my visit, one line-of-battle ship and four war steamers. This harbour has, in a high degree, every internal convenience, facility of ingress and egress at all times, and perfect defensibility, at a moderate cost, by fortifications, should such defence be considered necessary at future times.

“My first remark on these circumstances is, that, possessing Esquimalt harbour, the ownership of the San Juan Archipelago, or of that Island alone, is not necessary to Great Britain, for her own occupation, either for defensive or offensive purposes; because, while occupying Esquimalt Harbour, and enjoying naval superiority, she will command completely, so far as local position will enable her, the Straits of Fuca, and all other waters within Cape Flattery, including Puget Sound, Admiralty Archipelago. Without that naval superiority, all our commerce and communications therein will be interrupted, or exposed to the greatest hazards.

“With superiority afloat, she will need no fortifications in the Archipelago, in order to command the passages. The quiet and pleasant waters may be much resorted to by her cruisers, but the place of refreshment, rendezvous, and, if need be, of refuge, will, because there can be no better, be Esquimalt itself. Indeed, a fortified anchorage at San Juan Island, for instance, would not be essentially nearer, and would no better overlook our harbours of Dungeness, Port Discovery, Sequin Harbour, Admiralty Inlet, Puget Sound, etc., than that of Esquimalt.

“Neither does Great Britain need San Juan Island, nor any other Island in the group, for the purpose of defending by fortifications, her communications with the Gulf of Georgia.

“Such a system would demand numerous works to overlook the many navigable passages through the group, while the same force that will be indispensable for other purposes, will be precisely the best description of force for this defence, and for interception of, and resistance to, expeditions from distant shores."

He would refer to one more matter in connection with this, namely, the point which had been made by the hon. member for Victoria, with reference to the terminus in the United States Territory. He stated that the line could be connected very easily with the line from Fraser River to Holt's Harbour, and that the American would take our commercial town from us. He (Mr. Dewdney) held a different opinion. One of his reasons in favour of this line was the ease with which it could be connected with the American system of railways in Washington Territory. Should the Northern Pacific Railway be built, the whole of the trans-continental trade would pass from our own port over our own line. It would also give us a harbour on our own territory. The hon. member for Victoria gave as a reason for advocating the Northern route, that it would assist the mines of Cariboo and Omineca. There was something in that, but he would inform the hon. member that there were also mines in that south-eastern country. He might enter into a discussion of the different harbours and answer some of the objections raised against Burrard Inlet, but as the hon. member for Victoria had not gone into this question, no doubt he deemed Burrard Inlet was easy of access and capable of doing the whole business.

MR. DECOSMOS said he believed Burrard Inlet was not a suitable harbour. The only harbours to be found capable to meet our requirements would be found in Vancouver's Island.

MR. DEWDNEY said the naval testimony was in favour of Burrard Inlet.

MR. DECOSMOS said some hon. gentlemen holding the same views as the member for Yale, had presented an address to Admiral De Horsey to influence him, but he had made a report as a disinterested officer of Her Majesty's Navy.

MR. DEWDNEY said he had read that report very carefully, and he could only come to the conclusion that it was made on information received from the friends of the hon. member for Victoria, and also on information which Admiral De Horsey himself admitted he had received from Mr. Marcus Smith. Any one who looked at the maps would find that in one-twentieth of Burrard Inlet there was as much anchorage as in the whole of Esquimalt Harbour. The hon. member for Victoria would recollect when a boat leaving Esquimalt for the last time, just before she was burnt, in entering San Francisco, had to be towed out. That did not speak very highly for the harbour which the hon. gentleman had advocated for so many years.

MR. DECOSMOS said the bad machinery of the Constitution prevented her from moving round, and that was no charge against the harbour of Esquimalt.

MR. DEWDNEY said he had taken very great interest in the route of the railway through British Columbia, and he was glad to see that it was about to be adopted by the Government. He believed no further information could alter the determination they had come to. The only serious objection which had been made to this route was, that the Americans would take our commercial port from us, but he did not think there was much in that objection. He was rather disappointed that the Government had not taken authority to construct some portions of the railway in British Columbia this year. He had no doubt that the Premier was in receipt of requests from British Columbia to commence it at once, and he trusted that it would not turn out as foreshadowed by the hon. member for Victoria, that the Government did not mean business, and did not mean to construct the Pacific Railway for many years to come. He trusted the Government would take an early opportunity of calling for tenders, and that before this time next year, work would be commenced on the road.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. DeCosmos) had stated that the Commissioner of the Hudson Bay Company, for the fur trade, thought that not one-twentieth of the land between Fort Pelly or Livingston and Edmonton was fit for cultivation. He thought the hon. gentleman must have entirely misunderstood the Commissioner, who was not in the habit of making after-dinner speeches, and certainly could not have spoken in that sense. A very great portion, indeed, of the country between Livingston and Edmonton was well fitted for settlement—not one-twentieth, but nineteen-twentieths of it. At the same time, there was no doubt that in the more northern part of the continent, in the Peace River and Arthabaska region, there was much land well fitted for cultivation. He, as a member for Manitoba, representing the important city of Winnipeg and the county of Selkirk, had always been in favour of the road passing by the south of Manitoba; but, of course, it was looked upon in a Dominion point of view by the Government. He could only express his regret that the interests of the people of Manitoba could not be more closely considered in the matter. He had had several representations from his constituents, stating that they would have been very glad to have accepted the Bill of the hon. the Minister of the Interior, providing for colonization roads; and would then not have regretted the Pacific Railway going to the north of Lake Manitoba. Unfortunately, that Bill had not been carried into law. He trusted that next year that or some similar measure would be passed.

MR. DECOSMOS repeated his statement that, within the last fortnight, the Fur trade Commissioner of the Hudson Bay Company had informed him, and he knew it also through the acting Chief Engineer of the Pacific Railway, that there was not 20 per cent. of the land from Livingston to Edmonton fit for cultivation; while 60 or 100 miles farther north there was good land all along.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said that, from his own knowledge of the land, he was convinced there must have been some misunderstanding.

MR. BUNSTER objected to the suggestion of the Chief Engineer, that the building of the road might be postponed. He was astonished that a gentleman who was supposed to be honourable, should have been telegraphed for from the old country, and should make a report for the concurrence of the Government, and that the Government did not dare to pronounce upon it themselves, but wanted to hear what Parliament would say. He (Mr. Bunster) knew full well that the route which the engineer seemed to incline to would never bring the commerce of the Pacific Coast to British Columbia. The Government had one good adviser in Marcus Smith, who not only understood engineering, but navigation, and who had travelled over the country in a canoe and overland during several seasons. Could any one think that his judgment was not superior to that of the Chief Engineer? British Columbia had not been appreciated when Canada first got hold of her, though she was becoming more appreciated, and her wealth and position were claiming the attention of the Canadian statesmen and people. The Government should select the best port, and not an ice-bound port, such as Yale would be. Twenty miles above New Westminster they could not have boats drawing more than 20 inches of water, or sometimes not more than 10 inches of water.

MR. McINNIS: Four feet.

MR. BUNSTER said the only proper route was that by way of Bute Inlet. That had been surveyed by Mr. Waddington, an English engineer who lost his life in this city of Ottawa, when he came here in the interests of his adopted country, British Columbia, and gave the late Government a great deal of information. If the route went by way of Bute Inlet, it would be nearer to the coal mines, and that was an important question. On the Chilicotin Plains there was scarcely any fuel, and in a few years the fuel on the Fraser River would be all consumed by the Indians. Admiral De Horsey had pronounced fairly and squarely in favour of Bute Inlet and against Burrard Inlet. He knew that other Admirals were interested in giving a different opinion. He had been the agent for Admiral Cochrane in purchasing land. These other officers were interested and that interfered with their judgment. Admiral De Horsey simply wanted to do justice to the Government in reference to the best route. Mr. Sandford Fleming said :—

MR. SMITH.

“ I have great faith in the future of a country favoured with a bountiful supply of the natural elements of prosperity. The capabilities of the Territories of the Dominion, on the Pacific Coast, are great. Vancouver Island alone is capable of supporting, by the industries which may be established, a large population.”

Remark the contradiction. This gentleman stated, in the former instance, that a railway in Vancouver Island was not necessary, and then said that this Island was capable of supporting, by industries that might be established, a large population. “ This result might not be obtained for years.” Of course it would not if the Government deprived British Columbia of her rights, which, however, she would yet get. He would read further :

“ When the Island becomes fully inhabited, an independent railway system, which, by that time, might be created within its limits, it may then, with comparative financial ease, be connected with the main land by way of Bute Inlet, as necessity may dictate.”

He wished to point out the injustice done to the Island. Ever since Confederation and the late Government were in power, 20 miles of land, by request of Canada, were reserved on each side of the road by the British Columbia Government in good faith. But had faith been kept by the Government of Canada? No. The population was being driven away from the Island to the American shore and the main land, when it would have settled on the Island if this land was available; and, if sold, this land would pay for more than two such railroads. If British Columbia could assert her rights fairly in a proper court she could, to-day, get against the Dominion a large claim for the way in which the settlement of that country had been retarded by Canada. Twenty miles on each side of the route were still reserved, and the Premier had said that he did not for a moment consider this a part of the bargain; nevertheless, this reserve was not lifted, and good British subjects who came there had to leave their shores and go to the American side and the mainland in consequence of this fact. This was one great injustice. Again the line between Esquimalt and Nanaimo should have been built. They exported, last year, 450,000 tons of coal, and a penny a ton would have paid the interest on this investment. The Government had already had the line surveyed and the rails were landed, but unused, while they had plenty of ties adjacent to the road. With a very little more expenditure it could to-day be put in running order. The Engineer-in-Chief reported—this gentleman, he would observe, used “ if ” very often and made no positive report :—

“ If we abandon the idea of extending the Railway to Vancouver Island, and fall back on Waddington Harbour, we would have for a terminus a point not favoured by the principal naval authorities, and partaking of the geographical objections of Burrard Inlet.”

If the road was brought by way of Bute Inlet, there would be no occasion for any branch, and it would open up a portion of the Dominion that would more than pay for itself, by the increased amount that would be received at the Custom House. The Dominion now received from this source over $500,000 a year, and if this road were built, British Columbia would so contribute over a million annually, and more as the population increased, but here people had no confidence in the commencement of this road by this Government, and they were saying: “ I do not know, but it would have been better if we never had joined the Union.” This was the real feeling in British Columbia. He thought the time was not far distant when the people of Canada would pronounce their verdict and say to the Government “ You must carry out your bargain with British Columbia; we feel proud of her.” A few days ago the former knew nothing of the latter; but now the feeling outside of the House, and in the Press, was more favourable towards that Province than it had been. The Union and Central Pacific Railway had been constructed in about three years and nine months while the American civil war was raging. When California and the Pacific Coast people announced their intention to build a road across the continent they were laughed at by those who considered themselves the older and wiser heads of the Eastern States who said, "No; this could not be done; money to do it could not be found;" and yet a couple of young Englishmen went to England, negotiated the lands, and made a fortune out of it; and the road was built. He pointed out how the railroad engines had driven the wolves and the wild beasts before them, and had now accomplished the task of driving them out of the country and civilizing the Indians, which previously had cost the United States Government millions of dollars. He also contrasted travelling in the palace car which the tourist now enjoyed with the exposure and hardships endured by the early pioneers in their open waggons when entering the country, many of whom lost their lives in the attempt when attacked by Indians; while Indians to-day were completely civilized by the fertilizing and christianizing agency of the steam engine. This enterprise, a few years previously, had been considered impossible by some would-be cautious statesmen, who, to-day, hailed it as the pride of the American continent. It had robbed Canada of 500,000 of her native born subject, just merely for the lack of enterprise of her would-be-nations-makers. The present nation-makers had the ball at their feet and did not roll it. In fact, they had been tried and found wanting, as would be shown by the verdict of the people at the next general elections. He had enough confidence in the people of Canada to believe that they would yet carry out the broken terms of Union with British Columbia, the Province before which every other Province of this great Dominion would fade into insignificance. How easy it would be, with a little combined action on the part of this great Dominion, to build this road according to the terms of Union. He would ask any Canadian statesman, whether he did not think it was his bounden duty to see this contract carried out; and if he would not, and did not consider $500,000 a paltry sum to put in the Estimates for this purpose, and a shame and injustice to British Columbia. There was really no pronounced opinion as to where the road was to be built, and not a sod had been turned. They had been in the Confederation since 1870, and it was in the terms of Union that the work of construction would be commenced within two years; and yet nothing further had been done than to send a few rails out there; and, if a bonus had been offered to a British Columbian Company, they could have made these rails cheaper, because they had all the material in ore and coal. If the Government did not want so to encourage British Columbia, it was his opinion that this should be done. He would, however, bide his time, and see what the Government was going to do, which he did not think would be very much, until after the elections were over. The elections were troubling the Government more now than anything else, and a great deal more than the Pacific Railway. He hoped that whoever would occupy the Ministerial Benches next year would push on this road with greater vigour than had been the case in the past by the Government; and, therefore, he would rest his claim on behalf of British Columbia on the people of Canada, by insisting that whoever was returned at the next elections to govern this country, should be pledged to carrying this great national enterprise to an immediate completion.

MR. McINNES said that the hon. member for Vancouver had stated with respect to the navigation from Fraser River to Yale, that there was only about twenty inches of water in the stream. He could assure hon. gentleman that this was not the fact. At the lowest stage the depth of the water there was from four to five feet. Vessels passed over this route twice a week; and in proof of this he would remark that these boats carried from 75 to 125 tons of freight. The senior member for Victoria had commented on the course adopted and the views expressed by the First Minister, with respect to the location of the line down the Valley of the Fraser, and stated that posterity would blame the hon. gentleman for it, and considered that the hon. gentleman had taken a wrong step and one not in the interests of the Province or of the Dominion generally. He thought that, on the contrary, that if the Ministry had adopted any other course than the Fraser Valley route, they would not only have acted contrary to the true interests of British Columbia, but also of the Dominion; and not only contrary to the true interests of the people of the present age, but also against the true interests of posterity. The Burrard Inlet route, he claimed, was the only one which would ever open up the great mining, grazing and agricultural districts of British Columbia, and the only one that would terminate at a really good harbour. Notwithstanding all that had been claimed for the Esquimalt and some other ports, he unhesitatingly said that Burrard Inlet was the best harbour of British Columbia.

MR. DECOSMOS: Not according to Admiral De Horsey.

MR. MCINNES said that Admiral De Horsey reported on the harbour from a military point of view. This was a harbour which was completely landlocked, and it was sufficiently large to accommodate all the shipping of the Empire. It was also easy of access by day or by night, and at all seasons of the year; and it could be approached without encountering any fog which was very prevalent at certain seasons in approaching Waddington Harbour, which was proposed as the terminus for the Bute Inlet route. The hon. member for Vancouver has said that they were anxious to have the Bute Inlet route adopted, and the terminus taken to Esquimalt to enable parties who bought there to make a little money out of it. This was the true secret of the hon. gentleman's advocacy of this route, and this was also the case with regard to many others who would entirely ignore the interests of the Province and sacrifice the interests of the Province and Dominion to further their own selfish purposes.

MR. DECOSMOS: No.

MR. MCINNES: I say yes.

MR. SPEAKER: The hon. member is wrong in attributing an improper motive to any member for his course in the House.

MR. BUNSTER stated that gentlemen had come to their shores, bought land and invested money on the faith of the Dominion Government building this railroad. He did not say they wanted to make money out of it.

MR. MCINNES said this proved the correctness of the statement he made. These persons thought that the terminus would be placed at a certain point, and that the value of their property would be enhanced by the building of this road. The hon. member for Vancouver had stated that Mr. Smith, whom the hon. gentleman lauded very highly, and no doubt the gentleman was entitled to it to a great extent—knew more than any other man of that portion of this country. He did not doubt that Mr. Smith was a good engineer; but he was wholly in the wrong respecting the agricultural capabilities of the district which he (Mr. McInnes) had the honor to represent. His statement was calculated to injure not only the district he represented, but the Province, and it was not in accordance with the facts. The people there grow good wheat. He had had the honour of attending the district agricultural fair at this point last year, and out of 22 or 23 loaves of bread placed in competition for the first prize, he found that, notwithstanding that the best flour which could be brought from Oregon and California had been used, the flour made from wheat raised in the district won the prize. He would mention, as another proof of what he said, that four years ago, at the general election of 1874, they had only 405 voters on their list, while to-day they had 857. New Westminster was not a mining district, but a lumbering and farming district. Seven-tenths of those who had come in there within the last four years were farmers, from Ontario principally, but also from the Maritime Provinces, and he need scarcely mention that these farmers knew what a good agricultural district was. He trusted that, in view of the difference in the distance, this route being 25 miles shorter than the route to Esquimalt, and the fact that it would cost twenty millions less, besides the inconvenience of a 15 mile ferry, this work would be maintained. Not only so, but the annual maintenance of this road would be $570,000 less than the Bute Inlet and Esquimalt route. He thought these were sufficient reasons in themselves to convince not only the Ministry, but every member of the House, that this was the only true and practicable route for this road in British Columbia. If the other was chosen, $570,000 a year would be thrown away, to a great extent, and this would amount in 56 years to more than the entire sum which the whole road would cost. He trusted that the Government, as they had selected the Burrard Inlet route, would lose no time in calling for tenders and putting the road under contract. They were not so particular in British Columbia. Speaking for the greater number of the people, he believed, whether a couple of millions or three-fourths of a million were spent annually, on the road, for the first two or three years, or not, what they wanted was to have done away with this state of uncertainty in which they had been kept in this regard during the last four or five years. Capitalists had been afraid to go into the country and invest money, for the simple reason that they did not know which route would be selected, and, consequently, they might make a grievous mistake. If the route was selected, the road placed under contract, and construction commenced, every enterprise in the country would be stimulated, new industries would spring into existence, and the Province would launch out on a new tide of prosperity, that would increase with the lapse of time, and in this prosperity it would be impossible for the Dominion generally not to share in a great degree. If the Dominion would not be benefitted directly, she certainly would be indirectly, from this enterprise, and he would, therefore, urge on the Government, as it had decided the route, to call for tenders as early as possible, and put the road under contract.

Resolution agreed to.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. McINNES.

After Recess.

On Resolution 184, for the expenses of Government in the North-West Territories, $17,000.

MR. LANGEVIN said he wished to call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to the action of the Government in the North-West Territories. When the organization of Government took place in Manitoba, the hon. gentlemen opposite found fault with the Government of the right hon. member for Kingston, for the manner in which that was organized. They accused the late Government of having acted without proper consideration of the wants of the Provinces, without having consulted its people, and of having sent up a ready-made Government. The hon. the First Minister said, in his speech at Kingston, of the 27th June, speaking of the right hon. member for Kingston:

“ He sent out Mr. Wm. Macdougall with a ready-made Cabinet to take possession, as if they had been the conquerors of the land, without asking the people what their opinions were as to the mode or nature of the authority under which they were to be placed.”

This was the opinion of the hon. the First Minister, and also of the hon. the Minister of the Interior. Before going further, he would state he did not admit the justice of this criticism. The late Government did not send a ready-made Government to the North-West. They sent a Governor and two officers, who were, in connection with other gentlemen, taken from that region, and who had the confidence of the people, to form a Cabinet. It was natural that the hon. gentleman, in order to make a strong case before the electors of Ontario should have used the words already quoted; but, at all events, the hon. gentleman, after having found fault with the action of the late Government, should have done better. Let us see how the hon. gentleman and his Government acted towards that country. They appointed, as Lieutenant-Governor, the Hon. Mr. Laird, one of their friends, who had been formerly Minister of the Interior, and had dealt with matters connected with the North-West, and whom they had a right, therefore, to send there. But whom did they select as members of the Executive Council of that Territory? Colonel Macleod was appointed at the head of the police and also Stipendiary Magistrate. Colonel Macleod did not possess the confidence of the people.

MR. MILLS: Who were they? Indians?

MR. LANGEVIN: Indians and Half-breeds were people. He wondered would the hon. gentleman feel as he did, were he in Manitoba amongst those people. They were not to be despised though they were Indians. Mr. Matthew Ryan, a lawyer from Montreal, was also appointed Stipendiary Magistrate, and was made also a member of the Executive Council; the next was Mr. Richardson. How were the officers selected for this territory? Mr. Scott, a gentleman from this part of the country, was appointed registrar; Hon. Mr. St. John of Toronto was appointed sheriff; Mr Dixon was sent there as an accountant and inspector; Captain McDonald was sent as Indian agent. This was the Government which had sent there, to use the language of the hon. the First Minister, "a ready-made cabinet to take possession, as if they had been conquerors of the land." The people, not very unnaturally, objected to being presented with this ready-made cabinet. The hon. gentleman could not say that in the Territories or in Manitoba, they could not find a few members of the people who could help in governing that country and who would have the confidence of the half-breeds. But what people had they to govern? Indians? There were Indians and a great many half-breeds and white men as well. These people had been cast aside. The Government said: "We will send a ready-made cabinet; we despise these people and will govern them as we choose." His Excellency the Governor-General formed a very different opinion of these people, and he would refer the hon. the Premier and his colleagues to the remarks of His Excellency concerning those half-breeds. They were a sensitive, proud race, and should not have been deprived of their share in the government of the country. He remembered the time when his race was excluded from the government of the country, when none but people imported from the old country had a right to sit in the Councils of the Government of the Province, and he could imagine the feelings of those half-breeds of the North-West when they saw that none but people from Ontario or Montreal or the Lower Provinces were to have office in their Government. These people had no representative in this House, and it was left to some one to see whether they should be left in that position, or whether they should have their share in the offices and in the Government in that territory. A deputation of half-breeds had lately called on the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province to claim representation in the councils of their country, and he hoped, since the attention of the Government had been called to this matter openly before Parliament, that they would recognize the justice of the claims.

MR. MILLS said the hon. gentleman had made a somewhat extraordinary speech. The hon. gentleman might not have considered the effect which his speech would have on the minds of the people of the North-West. The circumstances were wholly different which governed the action of the late Government and of the present one. The country which Mr. Laird and the other gentlemen were sent to govern, had very few inhabitants, except Indians. But the right hon. member for Kingston sent his Government to a country in which there were several thousand white people, a people from whom rulers had already been chosen, and who had formerly a council and a Government of their own. What was the position in the North-West? Did the hon. gentleman pretend to say that the half-breeds were an educated population, who appointed their chief the same as the Indians did, who followed the buffalo from place to place, and had no fixed habitation? That was the impression the hon. gentleman seemed to wish to create. Yet he must know, if he gave any attention to the condition of things in that country, that the half-breed population, with the single exception of the few who resided in the vicinity of Prince Albert, were, in no respect, different in their modes and conditions of life from the Indians. Mr. Richardson was a member of the Bar, and had occupied a prominent position in the office of the Minister of Justice before he was appointed Stipendiary Magistrate. Did the hon. gentleman say that there were persons residing in the North-West Territories amongst the half-breed population, qualified to take Mr. Richardson's place and administer criminal law, and decide questions relating to civil rights and property? Leaving out of view the Indians and half-breeds, there was a large population, wholly civilized, who had gone there during past years from every Province in the Dominion. In the North-West Act of 1875, this Government did what their predecessors did not do; they provided that every thousand civilized settlers should have the privilege of electing a member to this Council. The hon. gentleman stated that Mr. Laird had been sent out as a ready-made Governor, and he compared him to that distinguished colleague of his own who paid him such flattering compliments on the floor of this House.

MR. LANGEVIN: Never mind that.

MR. MILLS: Who, when he returned, was declared by the hon. gentleman and his colleagues to have been appointed to office under the Crown, and to have, therefore, forfeited his seat. That hon. gentleman stated at the time that his appointment was prospective, that he had never received compensation, that he had been kicked out to make room for the hon. member for Charlevoix as Minister of Public Works, and claimed, therefore, to be entitled to his seat. He kept his seat during the remainder of that Session, and drew his salary the next Session. The following summer he presented himself to his constituents, and failing to be re-elected, he claimed his salary from the 1st December until the 20th May, when Mr. Archibald was appointed Governor. This hon. gentleman received $3,500 salary as Governor before the territory was transferred. Although he had never entered the country except during eight days of the period, he drew his salary as

MR. MILLS.

Representative of the Crown, and during the whole Session, drew his salary as representative of the people. This was a sample of the successful management of affairs in that country by the late Government. The object of the present Government in that territory had been to incur as little expense as possible. On the Council were Messrs. Ryan and Richardson, who were Stipendiary Magistrates and ex-officio members. Except those, the only members appointed to the Council was Mr. Breland, who was well qualified to discharge the duties, from his intimate acquaintance with the territory. The Government had only power to appoint one more, and if they had half-a-dozen half-breeds on the Council, he did not think they would be more ably represented than by Mr. Breland. There was no analogy between the state of things in the Province of Manitoba, where there was a large fixed population, and that in the North-West Territory.

MR. TUPPER said one would imagine, after listening to the Minister of the Interior making a laboured attack upon an ex-Minister of the Crown, who was not here to defend himself, that they were at the opening of the Session instead of its last hours. He thought the hon. gentleman had rather forgotten the position he occupied, and the dignity which belonged to it, when he wasted the time of the House in making that attack upon a gentleman, whose chief crime, in the estimation of hon. gentlemen opposite, was that, having been brought up in the old Liberal Reform school, he had not adhered so closely to gentlemen now on the Ministerial benches as, perhaps, they would have liked. The Minister of the Interior, however, ought not to forget that at the time when a coalition was formed in this country, and the great leader of the Reform party was called upon to select one of his friends as a colleague, he selected the Hon. Mr. Macdougall and took him into the Cabinet, which was to secure the union of the Provinces. The services of that gentleman and the ability he had evinced ought to protect him from attacks such as they had listened to from a Minister of the Crown. This little discussion would, at all events, serve to remind hon. gentlemen opposite how much easier it was to criticize than to discharge the duties which sometimes devolved upon Governments. When the late Government were called upon to deal with the new question of a Government for Manitoba, hon. gentlemen opposite said that question was not dealt with as successfully as the light of subsequent events would lead any party to deal with it. But the First Minister was not quite accurate when he stated that a ready made Government had been sent out for the Government of Manitoba. If the hon. gentleman would refresh his memory by reference to the Act under which that Government was formed, he would find that only a smaller portion of that Government were sent from this part of the country with instructions to select the ablest men there to form a Government for Manitoba. He thought hon. gentlemen opposite might have reduced to practice some of the precepts with which they had favoured the late Government in relation to this matter. He, therefore, thought the compliments of his hon. friend from Charlevoix (Mr. Langevin) were well founded. The Minister of the Interior would lead them to imagine there were nothing but Indians in the North-West. That was not the case. A large settlement had been formed at Battleford before the Lieutenant-Governor went out, and he had no doubt some parties could have been found for the Council if the Government had not wished to use all the positions at their disposal. The hon. gentleman had stated that the people of the North-West would not have been willing to accept the Hon. Mr. McKay as Lieutenant-Governor. Why not? There was not a man in the North-West who had not been taught to respect Mr. McKay for the indomitable energy and ability he had shown on every occasion. He had attained a position, so high, so important, and so influential, that the late Government, and he believed the present Government, on more than one occasion, had sought and obtained his services in difficult and delicate negotiations. If Mr. McKay was eligible why was Mr. Breland eligible? He believed that if hon. gentleman had been disposed to reduce their principles to practice, if they had not been pressed by persons in the Cabinet and outside of it for all the positions of honour, emolument and distinction, which they had to offer as rewards for past political services, they would have found some means of carrying out the precept which they had so generously offered to their predecessors, whom it was their duty to criticize. He did not think it came with a good grace from the hon. gentleman to state that the speech of his hon. friend would be a disturbing speech, calculated to do mischief elsewhere. The hon. gentleman knew that the attention of the people themselves had been drawn to this question. He had no doubt that some of them had an old copy of the Globe newspaper, in which the most incendiary language was used, which did immense mischief in Manitoba at the time. He had no doubt they wondered why they had not the same right now as then, and why those rights had not been respected in the same way by the party represented by that paper now, when they had the opportunity of reducing their principles to practice. They had held meetings, and addressed strong remonstrances to the Government on that matter; and it was idle to say that the subject should not be referred to in Parliament. The painful experience which had been acquired in Manitoba ought not to be lost sight of in dealing with questions of a similar character.

Mr. BLAKE said the House would recollect that the function the Government was called upon to discharge in appointing the Council of the North-West Territories was limited by Parliament. The Government was responsible for the introduction of the Act, but there was no dissent from it as far as he recollected. Parliament provided that the Council should consist of five with the Lieutenant-Governor, that three should be ex-officio members, namely, the stipendiary magistrates. The Government had, therefore, apart from the appointment of stipendiary magistrates, to appoint two other members of the Council one of these appointments had not been filled up but one had been filled up by a half-breed resident in the Territories. There were two allegations made, one that there had been an indiscretion or want of wisdom in not making more of these appointments from old residents of the North-West Territories, and the other that the appointments had been made by reason of political pressure, which had involved the making of other and improper appointments. He believed that no one would pretend, certainly no one had yet done so, that there were persons in the North-West Territories to whom it was fit to entrust the administering of the civil and criminal laws of the Territories. A very large jurisdiction was to be given to the authorities in order to have maintenance of law and order there; and it was necessary to have persons acquainted with the laws and trained to their administration there. Would the hon. gentleman contend that the Government should have selected persons unaccustomed to the laws to administer those laws? If not, it was necessary to select persons who had the necessary familiarity with the laws.

MR. TUPPER: Hear, hear. The hon. gentleman will, perhaps, admit that the same thing applied to the construction of the Government of Manitoba.

MR. BLAKE said, one advocate from Quebec, who was familiar with the English and French language, who was capable of administering affairs, who had a knowledge and experience beyond his mere knowledge of the law, and who was considered a valuable acquisition as a Councillor or as a Judge, was appointed. There was another appointed from Ontario, who from the experience of years in the Department of the Minister of Justice, had acquired some knowledge of the working of the machinery, and whose appointment, it was considered, would be of great value to the Lieutenant-Governor. The third Stipendiary Magistrate was a person who had also followed the profession of the bar for a very considerable time, and had also acquired considerable experience of the Territories, as Commissioner of the Mounted Police. He had been for a considerable time amongst the people, in a very elevated position, had mixed with them in a position of command and trust, and, as the Government understood, had won their confidence. He was appointed upon his merits alone, and was subsequently appointed Chief Inspector of the Police. These officers did not receive any emoluments, as members of the Council. The only nominated member who received an emolument, was a half-breed of the Territory. He denied that the same applied to Manitoba. Law had been administered in Manitoba for a long time. There was a Governor there and a Judge, and an old and settled population; but beyond that the measure itself contained a liberal provision for the local management of affairs, at the earliest moment, when popular election could prevail. And he remembered that there was some comment upon that feature of the Bill from the Opposition Benches, but it was of a hostile character. The leader of the Opposition had then said that the Federal Government ought to retain control for years to come. But the Government, acting upon truly Liberal principles had maintained that provision, and he hoped, that under it, within some few months from this time, they would see two or three members of the Council elected.

MR. BLAKE.

Resolutions agreed to.

INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT BILL.

[No. 47.]

(Mr. Laflamme.)

CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS.

MR. LAFLAMME moved concurrence with the amendment which removed the provision relating to the right of Senators to hold office under the Crown, which had been excluded by the House. The provision excluding Senators from accepting contracts under the Crown was unchanged.

MR. BLAKE said he regretted that the Senate should have made this amendment. The Senate had recognized a distinction between two classes of possible disabilities; they conceived their independence might be impaired by accepting contracts, but not by accepting offices under the Crown. He, however, failed to apprehend the distinction which had induced the other Chamber to come to this conclusion, nevertheless, they should pay some deference to the views of the other branch of the Legislature on this subject. The Senate had struck out the whole clause and introduced a new clause dealing with the subject of contracts. He regretted the wording of it, and he thought the House would agree with him that it would have been expedient that the disabilities of members of the House and Senate should have been as far as possible the same. It would have been very convenient if the phraseology had been adopted. He regretted that the clause regarding the holding of office should have been eliminated, that the portion relating to contracts had not been left as sent up; but he did not propose to object to the acceptance of the amendment.

MR. TUPPER said that the ground as taken by the Senate, as he understood it, was that the British North America Act fixed the qualification of Senators.

MR. BLAKE: And this Act does not alter it.

MR. TUPPER: And they held that nothing that should affect the right of a Senator to sit there, should emanate from the House of Commons. He understood that this feeling had influenced to a considerable extent the Senate in dealing with this measure. They drew a distinction between the right to hold contracts without being subject to penalties, and the right to hold any office under the Crown. He was very glad that the amendment was accepted by the Minister of Justice.

Amendment read the first and second time and agreed to.

MR. LAFLAMME moved that the first amendment, page one, line ten, leave out from "attached" to "No" in line twelve; and the second amendment, page one, line thirteen, leave out "Clerk of the Peace," be disagreed to, for the following reasons:—

"Because the independence of this House (which it is the object of the first Clause amended to secure) might be impaired if persons entitled to superannuation or retiring allowances were eligible for seats in this House, as some of such recipients might be called into active service by the Administration of the day, under the penalty of abandoning their provisions or allowances.

"Because it might lead to the superannuation of Civil servants in order to make them eligible for election to this House, whereby the public service would be injured and the independence of the House affected.

"Because another class, viz: Judges, are entitled to retiring allowances only when suffering from bodily or mental infirmity, disabling them from work or are retired under the discretionary power of the Government for reasons alleged to affect the administration of Justice. It would, therefore, tend to affect the independence of the Bench, as well as interfere with the independence of this House."

As to the second amendment:—

"Because it is contrary to sound policy to the Clerks of the Peace, who are in several Provinces, the custodians of the lists of voters, which must be used at the election of members of the House of Commons to become candidates."

He said that the Senate had struck out the disqualification of Clerks of the Peace for the sole reason that in Nova Scotia they were the custodians of the voters lists; but it was not proper that, under these circumstances, they should be allowed to be candidates.

MR. TUPPER said that, while the Clerks of the Peace were merely custodians of and had nothing whatever to do with the preparation of the lists, the revisors in Nova Scotia were not only the judges, but the absolute and uncontrolled judges, as to what names should appear on or be struck off these lists. There was no appeal from their decisions. He was very sorry that the Minister of Justice had felt it to be his duty to insist upon excluding officers who had really nothing to do with creating the lists or controlling them in any way, while he left untouched those who had absolutely uncontrolled power with relation to these lists.

MR. LAFLAMME said that Clerks of the Peace, if dishonest, might tamper with the lists of candidates. When the lists were revised, no election was at hand, and, if the disqualification were extended, the selection of candidates would be rendered almost impossible.

MR. MACKAY said he did not agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Cumberland. It would be very unwise to remove this disqualification, and he hoped that the Senate amendment would be rejected.

MR. BLAKE said he had been and was still of opinion that the principle upon which these officers were excluded, was rather more germane to the Election Law than to a law having reference to the Independence of Parliament. They had, however, not insisted on their own views with regard to the other branch of the Legislature as the independence of their House; and he did not doubt that on insisting on the maintenance of their views as to the independence of this House, the other branch, acting in the same spirit, would drop the amendment to which they proposed to disapprove.

MR. DESJARDINS said he did not see why the country could not have the political services of superannuated persons if the people desired. He thought that the hon. the Minister of Justice should, at least in this particular, abandon his position and maintain the amendment adopted by the Senate.

MR. LANGEVIN said the hon. member for South Bruce said it was proper that each House should be jealous of its own privileges and independence. This was not a matter which affected members of this House personally, but which affected the electors and persons eligible to the House. It was not the members but the electors who were affected by this provision of the law. The House of Commons said to the electors, "You shall not elect an officer of the Civil Service who has retired on his allowance, or a retired Judge." The Senate had a perfect right to say: "We are of opinion that the people may select these men." It did not touch the independence of this House, but affected the electoral body, and the Senate, therefore, had a right to amend the Bill.

MR. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman stated this affected only the people who chose representatives; so did the election or non-election of contractors and office-holders. If the people should have a free choice, why restrict them from choosing electors and contractors any more than those parties? He was amazed to hear the hon. gentleman say the right of the people to elect whom they pleased should not be interfered with. There would then be an end to all Independence Acts. The clause passed by this House was clearly intended to preserve its independence, which could only be done by limiting the choice to those who were in an independent position, and not subject to Government influence.

MR. CAMERON said the hon. the First Minister was perfectly amazed at the observations of the hon. member for Charlevoix. He was perfectly amazed at such a divergence of opinion as existed between the First Minister and the late Minister of Justice, who had pointed out, on a former occasion, that there was no wrong in the Government giving a contract to a member of this House, but that the wrong consisted entirely in a member retaining his seat while he had a contract. According to the First Minister, the wrong consisted in giving the contract, and it was in order to prevent contracts being given that they passed this Bill.

MR. MACKENZIE: I say we would prevent parties who are Government contractors from being elected.

MR. CAMERON: You also must prevent contractors from having seats in this House.

MR. MACKENZIE: We do both.

MR. CAMERON: But the hon. member for South Bruce had also argued there was no harm in a member of this House taking a contract, but that the harm lay in his sitting here afterwards. That was certainly not the ground taken by the First Minister. However, the merits and demerits of the amendments made by the Senate ought to be discussed, and not raise the childish point as to whether it was their privilege not to make these amendments. The question was, were they right or wrong?

MR. LAFLAMME.

The question of superannuated officers had been discussed at length. He could not agree with the dissent of the Ministers of Justice from these amendments.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

MR. MACKENZIE moved,

"That there shall be to-morrow two distinct sittings; the first to begin at 2 o'clock P.M., and end at 6 o'clock, P.M.,—the second to begin at half-past seven o'clock, P.M., and continue until the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

House s'djourned at Ten minutes after Ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, May 9th, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Two o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BALLOT PAPERS.

QUESTION.

MR. YOUNG said he had received letters from the West, enquiring whether in polling districts, where there was a large German vote as in Waterloo County, the Government would be prepared to direct the returning officers to have the ballot papers printed in German as well as in English. This would be a great convenience.

MR. PLUMB said that such a course would be objectionable.

MR. MACKENZIE said he believed that the returning officers were now empowered to have ballot papers printed in whatever language was prevalent in any county. In order that there might be no misapprehension about the matter, however, in those counties where the German language was prevalent to a singular extent, instructions would be given to the returning officers to have this done.

MR. CASEY said it would be almost more important to have the instructions to voters translated into German.

MR. DESJARDINS said that these instructions should be printed in French for the convenience of French speaking electors in the counties of Kent and Essex, and in those along the South shore of the Ottawa.

MR. MACKAY (Cape Breton) said the claims of the Gaelic-speaking electors should also be considered in this relation.

MR. SPEAKER: I do not suppose that I have anything to say in the matter; but I question the legality of ballot papers printed in German. The French and English languages are legal.

INDEMNITY OF A MEMBER.

MOTION.

MR. DEWDNEY moved:—

"That the Accountant of this House be authorized to pay to T. R. McInnes, M. P., the newly elected member for the Electoral District of New Westminster, the full amount of his indemnity, as if he had been in attendance in this House for the full number of days of the Session."

He said he believed that there were some precedents for a motion of this kind. The right hon. member for Kingston had made a motion at the close of the first Session of this Parliament to the same effect; and the Accountant was authorized to pay J. S. Thompson, S. F. Perry and two others, the full amount of their indemnity.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

Resolutions reported from Committee of Supply read the first time.

MR. MACKAY (Cape Breton) said he desired to call the attention of the hon. the First Minister to the repeated applications made to him in connection with the dredging of the harbor of Lingan.

MR. MACKENZIE said it was impossible for him to make any promise, but it was probable the Government would be able to do some work in that neighbourhood.

MR. CARTWRIGHT moved that the resolutions adopted in Committee of Supply be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Motion agreed to.

House resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

(In the Committee)

The following Resolutions were adopted:—

1. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1878, the sum of $2,721,404.33 cents be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

2. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1879, the sum of $19,458,856.95 cents be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second times and agreed to.

SUPPLY BILL.

(Mr. Cartwright.)

FIRST READING.

MR. CARTWRIGHT introduced a Bill (No. 80) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public services, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1878, and the 30th June, 1879; and for other purposes relating to the public services.

Bill read the first time.

House adjourned at Three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 9th May, 1878.

Second Sitting.

The Speaker took the Chair at thirty minutes past Seven o'clock.

SUPPLY BILL.—[BILL No. 80]

(Mr. Cartwright.)

THIRD READING.

Bill read the second and third times and passed.

MR. MACKENZIE.

PROROGATION.

COMMUNICATION FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

MR. SPEAKER communicated the following letter, which he had received:—

“ GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
“ OTTAWA, 9th May, 1878.

“ SIR,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor-General will proceed to the Senate Chamber to prorogue the Session of the Dominion Parliament, on Friday, the 10th instant, at 3 o'clock, P.M.

“ I have the honour to be, Sir,

“ Your most obedient servant,

“ E. G. P. LITTLETON,

“ Governor-General's Secretary.”

SUPREME COURT BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS.

MR. LAFLAMME said the Government could not agree to the amendments made by the Senate to the Supreme Court Bill, as they virtually destroyed its object, and left the law as it previously existed. The object of the Bill was to remove doubts with respect to the right of appeal from the Court of final resort, and it had not yet been absolutely determined by the Supreme Court whether the right to appeal existed, say from the Court of Queen's Bench, in Ontario, in criminal cases, this Court not being the highest Court of final resort; and this left a doubt as to whether an appeal existed to the Supreme Court from a judgment of this Court; also, in the Province of Quebec, where an appeal existed from the decision of a Judge sitting in first instance to the Court of Review, and the appellant in the Court of Review failed, the law declared that there was no appeal from this judgment to the Court of Queen's Bench, although this was the Court of final resort there. The Bill was intended to remedy this doubt. Another doubt existed as to the right of appeal in matters where in the Province of Quebec the right of appeal existed to the Privy Council. The Bill originally provided for an appeal in cases where the matter at issue had the value of $2,000, and in the Province of Quebec an appeal existed not only where the suit was $2,000 to the Privy Council, but also where questions of title were concerned. The Senate had thought proper to re-establish the state of affairs which it was desired to change, and so to destroy the Bill. He would, therefore, move that this House doth disagree in the said amendments, for the following reasons:—

“ Because the first amendment by inserting the word “ highest ” will in effect destroy this Section, which was intended to remove doubts as to the provisions of the Law as it exists, respecting the Right of Appeal from the Court of final resort ;

“ Because the second amendment would deprive parties of the Right of Appeal to the Supreme Court, in matters wherein an appeal lies to the Privy Council—and because there seems to be no reason why an appeal should be refused in matters relating to titles to land, annual rents, or such like matters or things, where the rights in future might be bound.”

MR. LANGEVIN said that a party could appeal in the Province of Quebec from the decision of one Judge in the Superior Court to the Court of Review, but if unsuccessful there, could go no further. The object of this Bill was to allow such a person to appeal to the Supreme Court; this was not intended by their law and it was not fair.

MR. TASCHEREAU said they had this anomaly: a party could appeal to the Privy Council in certain cases, but not to the Supreme Court. The Bill, as originally framed, was intended to alter this state of things, and he approved of it.

MR. MACDOUGALL (East Elgin) said the word “ highest ” was struck out because, in criminal cases in Ontario, the Court of final resort was the Court of Queen’s Bench or Common Pleas, while the Court of Error and Appeal was really the Court of highest resort in the Province. As doubt might exist as to the meaning of the phrase “ highest Court of final resort ” as to Ontario, the word “ highest ” had been struck out.

MR. MOUSSEAU said he always understood that the object of the Supreme Court was to hear appeals in election, and especially commercial cases. The object of the motion of the hon. the Minister of Justice was to allow parties who had been unsuccessful in both the Superior Court and Court of Review to appeal to the Supreme Court.

MR. LAFLAMME: Instead of to the Privy Council?

MR. MOUSSEAU: There is no such right. Litigants cannot go to the Privy Council before they go to the Court of Queen’s Bench.

MR. LAFLAMME: The right exists.

MR. MOUSSEAU: Not in civil cases.

MR. LAFLAMME: Yes, when the amount equals £500 stg., and many such motions have been granted.

MR. MOUSSEAU: From the Court of Review?

MR. LAFLAMME: Yes.

MR. MOUSSEAU: There is no such appeal.

Motion agreed to on a division.

INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENT.

MR. LAFLAMME said that the Senate had agreed to withdraw the 3rd amendment respecting Clerks of the Peace, but insisted on the 2nd amendment. This he greatly regretted, as the Bill contained provisions which might be of great use in the future, and would remove difficulties which had existed in the past. It was thought proper, notwithstanding the protest entered by the Government against the interference in such a matter of the Senate, to accept the amendment in order to secure the advantages which this Bill would probably confer in removing difficulties which had arisen through the interpretations of the previous Act. He, therefore, moved that this House concur in the amendment made by the Senate to this Bill.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he did not think it lay in the mouth of the hon. gentleman to object to the Upper House dealing with a matter affecting the Independence of Parliament as some of the clauses of the Bill affected that body. If this House had a right to deal with the Senate, they certainly had a right to deal with this House. The Independence of Parliament was a matter of equal interest to both Houses. That principle was always contended for in England, where great regrets were expressed at the time of the great discussion on the Reform Bill, that the House of Lords differed with the representatives of the people, but no question was raised that it did not rest with the Peers to cast their intelligence on questions which affected the Constitution, of which they were the guardians as well as the Lower House.

Mr. MACKENZIE said no one doubted the perfect constitutional right of the Senate to amend a Bill, even if it referred exclusively to the representation of the people. But it was expected that a House which raised the question, that it was an impropriety to introduce any Bill in this House which affected in the most remote degree the Senate, should be the last body to attempt to interfere with the popular branch of the Legislature, in a Bill relating wholly to the representation of the people in this House. It could not fail to be a matter of deep regret to every one that that House should have entered upon the ground upon which it had ventured, to judge from the speeches of its members, of denouncing the introduction of a Bill in this House which changed in any way the privileges or rights of Senators. A Bill having reference to the Independence of Parliament might be introduced in either House. It must be introduced in one House, and could not possibly be introduced in both branches; it must take its origin in either one or the other. It originated here, not as a matter of necessity, but as a matter of simple convenience. This House accepted the amendments made in matters relating exclusively to the Senate, although he thought the working of the clause relating to the Independence of the Senate might have been made conformable to the working of the clause having reference to the exclusion of contractors from this House. In an artistic sense this would have been the better mode; or if the Senate thought better, they might have changed the wording of our section. They not only claimed but exercised the right which, of course, was vested in them, but not in the way expressed by many of their members, to deal exclusively with matters relating to their own House. In addition to that, they claimed also to know what suited this House better than the members of it themselves. In a matter relating wholly to the representation of the people, while they had a perfect constitutional right to make amendments, it was a right which they should exercise with great prudence. They should observe the greatest possible reticence in a matter which passed this House by a large majority, and which related wholly to this branch of the Legislature.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the hon. gentleman had stated that the Bill could not possibly be introduced in both Houses. It could have been arranged so as to get rid of that difficulty. He had been reading the diary of Sir Francis Romilly, who had been the great Parliamentary authority in his day, where he spoke of a Bill introduced by himself, to affect the privileges of members of Parliament as to the right of their being protected from being sued, and to take away from them that absurd right. He drew the Bill altogether confining it to the House of Commons, but stated it should be extended to the House of Lords, to which the latter objected. There was no reason why the leader of the Government should not have moved a Senate clause, as an addition to the Bill, and then there would have been no apparent difficulty.

Mr. MACKENZIE said the same object was accomplished by the Government, accepting the amendment.

Mr. MILLS said Sir Francis Romilly was not at that time a member of the Administration. The Bill introduced by the Government did not stand exactly in the same position with regard to that particular objection, because the Government was a joint committee of both Houses. Both Houses were represented in the Administration, and any measure introduced by the Administration might fairly be considered as equally being a measure of both Houses. It was perfectly certain, as the hon. gentleman indicated, that any member might introduce in either

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

House bills affecting any public question with the single exception that the Senate could not introduce a measure affecting taxation. The objection made by the Senate did not apply to a measure introduced by the Government in the same way that it did to a measure introduced by a private member.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he objected to that doctrine in toto caelo. A Government measure stood on the same basis and was governed by the same constitutional principle as that of any member. The Government was a committee of both Houses in acts of Administration but not in acts of Legislation.

MR. MILLS said if this doctrine were true, no Administration need resign in consequence of an adverse vote upon a question of Legislation. It would always be on an act of Administration and nothing else.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE.

REMARKS.

MR. MACKENZIE: In moving that the House adjourn until two o'clock to-morrow, I desire to say a few words with reference to one of the measures which were introduced this Session. It will be recollected that a few weeks ago I introduced a Bill to amend the Pacific Railway Act, in which it was provided that the Government might lease the Pembina Branch Railway to some company or companies, or make such other arrangements for the working of that line as might be, in the opinion of the Government, suitable and proper, and that before the lease was made it should be subjected to the approval of the House of Commons. This Bill was sent to the other branch of the Legislature, and by that branch amended so as to require that any such lease should be made subject also to the approval of the Senate, as well as the House of Commons. I moved a disagreement from that amendment on the ground that the Senate was usurping the rights of the popular branch of the Legislature, and on the ground that all matters of that kind should have the approval of the members of the House of Commons, who are elected by the people; and I asserted in my motion that that was the uniform practice in England, as well as the uniform practice in this country. There can be no harm, of course, if any Administration please, in sending certain measures to the table of the Senate, but that the Senate should require, or that this House should agree to, the submission of contracts to the Upper House for approval is, in my opinion, a subversion of the principles of the Constitution. And to assert it is, on their part, a usurpation of the rights and privileges of this House. The Senate, however, have informed this House that they adhered to their amendments, and they claim the right, in the message which they sent down to this House, to exercise co-ordinate powers in all these matters with this House. Now, Sir, I cannot, as the leader of this House, or as a member of this House, accede to this extraordinary and unprecedented demand. I will not do it. And I am sure, Sir, this House will not do it. I regret exceedingly that the Senate have acted in this way, as I am one of those who advocated originally, when the terms of our Constitution were under discussion, that that Chamber should be constituted as it now is, not because I was wedded to a nominated Chamber, but because I felt and argued that it was desirable, if an Upper Chamber existed at all, that it should have a different Constitution from that of the Lower House; because I felt it desirable, if there was to be a review of the proceedings of the Lower House, it should be had by a body constituted in a somewhat different manner from the popular branch. I confess, after my experience of ten or twelve years, that my opinions have been greatly modified in that time. Now I regret exceedingly, as one of those who took that part in the original discussion, that I should be compelled to make these statements at the present moment; but my regard for our Parliamentary system, Parliamentary Government as a whole, compels me to make these statements and resist this attempted encroachment on the rights and privileges of the popular branch.

And, Sir, for these reasons I must adhere, to my disagreement, and throw on the Senate the responsibility of defeating a measure which the Government deemed necessary in order to obtain early railway communication with the city of the North-West, which is the centre of immigration for those districts which we hope will be populated some day, and which are at present so difficult of access. I have only now to say, Sir, in response to the action of the Senate, that it will be the duty of the Administration, having the approval of the House of Commons in their policy, to consider what measures, if any, can be adopted in making running arrangements with roads joining that road, and to see what can be done in this matter in order to reach the object which the Government had primarily in view, namely, the securing of that early communication with the centre of our western Province. Whether this may be done or not, I am not at the moment prepared to say, but I think that it is probable that the Government may find means of accomplishing to some extent—if not to the extent that seemed desirable, under the powers given by that Act, of leasing the line, so desirable an object as the opening up of that country for settlement, an object which never can be attained until we have railway communication into its heart. I have nothing more to say further than again to express my deep regret that I should be compelled to take the course I have taken, and express the hope, also, that at another Session the Senate will find some reason for receding from its present untenable and unconstitutional course.

MR. TUPPER said he felt sure the hon. the leader of the Government would never appeal in vain to either side of this House, in any measure necessary to vindicate the rights and privileges of this House against encroachments from any quarter whatever. He thought the hon. gentleman had been singularly unfortunate in the ground chosen on the present occasion. The hon. gentleman stated his reasons for disapproving of the claim of the Senate to have the question submitted to them as it was proposed to be submitted to the House of Commons before the Act could be consummated. He (Mr. Tupper) had no hesitation in saying that his reasons had been not only answered, but overturned. The hon. gentleman had been told that, instead of its having been the uniform practice of this House it was the other way; that, while it was quite true that the consent of the House of Commons in the Canadian Pacific Railway Bill was only required in order to confirm contracts that were made for the expenditure of money already voted by Parliament. Even that matter, after that clause of the Bill had passed, because so important a measure as a Bill containing that clause had been sent up to the Senate at too late a period to enable them to give it attention clause by clause. No person was more to blame than the hon. gentleman, from the fact that this most important measure was not only sent to the Senate at this very late period of the Session, but was withheld from this House, and the most important papers to be submitted were purposely brought under consideration of this House at too late a period to be properly discussed. The hon. gentleman undertook to state that it was the uniform practice of this Parliament. The Senate were able to answer him that in relation to the transfer of the Windsor Branch of the Intercolonial Railway to a company for the purpose of securing the construction of a long line of railway through Nova Scotia, the very act of this Government had been to require, not that the arrangements made by the Government should become operative after they had received the sanction of the House of Commons, but when they had received the sanction of the Senate as well. The hon. gentleman was told that when, in relation to the transfer of the Pictou branch with the like object of securing the construction of a long line of railway through the eastern part of Nova Scotia, the transfer was not proposed to be made, nor were any arrangements proposed to be made by the Government to have the force of binding a contract until they had received the approval of the Senate as well as of the House of Commons.

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. MACKENZIE: Does the hon. gentleman mean to say these were two precedents?

MR. TUPPER: These were two precedents of the strongest and most conclusive character, but they did not stand alone. The hon. gentleman knew, in reference to the postal contract, the assent of the Senate was required as well as that of the House of Commons.

MR. MACKENZIE: No.

MR. TUPPER: Let the hon. gentleman read the statement as sent down by the Senate.

MR. HOLTON: I have read it.

MR. TUPPER: Not only was that the case, but the hon. gentleman was entirely wrong in stating that there were no British precedents. The hon. member for Terrebonne had cited as clear and distinct a case in the British Parliament as possible, the Admiralty contract, which was required to be laid on the Table of both Houses of Parliament.

MR. MACKENZIE: Does the hon. gentleman say the Admiralty contract required the sanction of the House of Commons?

MR. TUPPER said he did. He stated it distinctly, and he left it to the judgment of the House or of any gentleman who knew anything of constitutional practice, whether the terms of a contract requiring it to be laid before the House of Commons did not involve the right of the House of Commons to reject it. Mr. Todd, who had been often quoted in this House as an authority, stated emphatically to the hon. member for Terrebonne that there was no distinction whatever between the Act requiring to be laid before the House of Commons and the assent and sanction of that body. It would be the most arrant stultification to suppose that a contract should be required to be submitted to a body if that body were to be precluded from expressing an opinion on it. The fact of requiring an Act to be laid for so many days on the table of this House before it became operative, gave this House the right to disallow that Act, to interpose and to declare that that contract should never take effect. The English precedent established beyond controversy the question of right and the propriety—

MR. MACKENZIE: No.

MR. TUPPER: The hon. gentleman wanted to know if he called the Picton and Windsor Branch of the Intercolonial Railway a precedent. He did. He thought he could satisfy the House, even if he failed to satisfy the hon. the Premier, or the hon. the member for Chateauguay. He thought there were a good many gentlemen on both sides who would come to the conclusion that the policy was the question in controversy in this case. It was whether a question of important public policy should be dealt with by this House alone, or should require the sanction of the Senate. He would take it as a question of public policy. Of what use was the Windsor Branch of the Intercolonial Railway. It was a burden to the country; it was yielding the country no profit as far as that railway was concerned; it was a great object to utilize it for the purpose of such railway extension as might be secured in that way, to open up a large section of the country, to increase its trade and revenue. Would any person place in the same category the right to transfer the Windsor Branch of the Intercolonial Railway for the purpose of securing the construction of a long line of railway through the country, and the policy of enabling the Government and a moribund Parliament at their last hour, holding power in opposition to the well understood public sentiment of this country, to pass this important measure? What did the ground, taken by the hon. the First Minister, resolve itself into? Into a question of great magnitude, that of getting a line of communication between the great North-West and the outer world for a period of ten years, and which, as matters stood at present, was likely to be the only line for communication for several years. But behind the question there was one of much greater magnitude granted, that this Government had the power, with the sanction of its supporters who could to-day sustain it, but who to-morrow, when they went back to the people to receive their verdict, would not be supported by them, to pass the legislation in this House. To sustain the policy of the Government was to assert its right, without consulting the Senate, to transfer the whole of the Intercolonial to the Grand Trunk to-morrow for any number of years on such terms as they might think proper. It might be very convenient to a Government in the position of this one to have such a power, to be able to act as they pleased, regardless of the sentiments of everybody, except those who sat behind them on the Treasury benches. Under this policy there was not merely the question of leasing 69 miles of a branch of the Canada Pacific Railway, but the right of the Government was asserted to spend a hundred millions of Canadian money in building the Canada Pacific Railway, and, then, without the authority of the Senate, without the authority of anybody except the party majority in the Commons, however small that might be, to transfer to any company for fifty years the whole control of this railway, extending 3,000 miles across this continent.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he desired to add a few words to the remarks made by the hon. member for Cumberland, although it was almost unnecessary for him to do so. The speech of the Premier was a fitting wind up to the many acts of the present Government which were in direct opposition to their professions. Before the taking of office by the present Administration, the country was told that the new Government was to be an honest Government, and that everything was to be left to the control of Parliament. To-day the country was told, when an essential branch of Parliament chose to exercise the authority conferred upon it by the Constitution, it was guilty of an act of usurpation. Why, one would suppose that the Senate was merely a body to register the decisions of the House. One would suppose the Premier was merely doing an act of courtesy to the Senate in sending his Bills to that House at all. The hon. gentleman surely knew that the Senate had a right to reject his measures altogether, and it also had a nominal right to stop the supplies, but that was a measure only to be adopted in case of an extremity. Such an argument as had been applied with regard to this Bill here, was the introduction of a new feature into our railway policy, in which Parliament was asked to confer upon the Government, in its last moments, the power to alienate a portion of our railway system, and to give to a foreign road the control of a branch of our greatest railway undertaking for ten years. If the statement was correct, the first proposed agreement was for twenty-one years. He would like the hon. gentleman to say whether it was or not. He would like the hon. the Premier to say whether that was the case or not; but the hon. gentleman who was once in favour of everything being within the control of Parliament, now said he regretted the necessity of the Government to look round and see if they could not find some means of carrying out their intentions, irrespective of the action of Parliament. Necessity was the tyrant's plea, and never was a more despotie use of power proposed. The hon. gentleman had intimated that he was going to consider whether by hook or crook he could not find some means of getting rid of the constitutional course taken by the Senate. Yes, as history showed, a constitutional course was sometimes very inconvenient to an arbitrary and oppressive Government. All would remember what Charles Fox said to Napoleon the Great when they were discussing the introduction of trial by jury into France. Napoleon objected to it on the ground that "the system was so very inconvenient." "Well," Fox replied, "it is for the inconvenience of the system that the people of England like it." And it was because of the inconvenience to the Government of the constitutional action of the Senate which put a stop to their bargain with the hon. member for Selkirk, to make him a rich man, and to pay him for his servile support, that an unconstitutional course was proposed.

MR: TUPPER.

MR. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman cannot say that an hon. member is paid for his support.

SIR JOHN MACDONALD: Then a reward, a gratuity. As Shakspeare said, "a reward is better than a peculium." All would remember how coy the hon. member for Selkirk was about admitting that he was interested in the Company. He (Mr. Smith) said it was none of his (Sir John A. Macdonald's) business to ask whether he (Mr. Smith) had an interest, but it had to come out at last, and the hon. gentleman who had the astuteness to get the Government into the bargain, had not the astuteness to keep the matter to himself. The circumstances were suspicious. The circumstance of an hon. gentleman getting up and advocating a proposal in which he was interested, was more than suspicious. With reference to the action of the Senate, he (Sir John A. Macdonald) might say it was true that, with respect to the contracts for the Canada Pacific Railway, they had to be laid only before the House of Commons, but if the Senate had chosen to say that the contracts should be laid before both Houses, such a clause should be inserted in the Bill. But the Senate did not require that; probably because the contracts were merely to carry out the details of a measure, the policy in connection with which was set out on the face of it. In the present case the contract involved a question of policy as well as lease arrangements, or, as the Bill said, "otherwise," the word "otherwise" meaning some arrangement not told to the House of Commons nor to the Senate. The hon. gentleman, in bringing up a matter involving a new policy, should have included its terms in the Bill. If he believed that his policy was in the interests of the country, and that it would meet with the sanction of Parliament, why did he not put it on the Bill? If power such as was asked in this Bill were given to the Government, it would prevent this Parliament from resisting a similar but more extended measure, by which power might be given to the Government of the day to lease the whole of our railway system, east, west, north and south.

The proposition to pass a general Bill of this kind was too monstrous. If there was something in the policy of the Government, of which this House would not disapprove, they could put it in the Bill; but, no, a general measure was brought down, dolus latet in generalibus. The hon. gentleman passed it in this House, he was unable to carry it in the Senate, and now he was going to find some similar way to carry out a policy which he was not able to sustain in Parliament. That was the action of a Government in a free country. It was the avoidance by the Government of the constitutional restrictions put upon it. It was the action of a Government led by a constitutional Minister, who prided himself, when he came into power, that he would submit to Parliament a thorough control of all matters. He (Sir John A. Macdonald) warned that gentleman that he would be held responsible for his action by the country.

MR. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman had got up for the purpose of getting a speech upon record which he knew in its terms to be false. Any one would have imagined from the speech of the hon. member for Cumberland that the points in the two cases were similar, and that they had both been submitted to the Upper House. The facts showed that there was nothing in the way of parallel in the cases. In the Canadian Pacific Railway Act there was an express provision to the effect that the contracts shall be approved by the House of Commons, and that they should be laid upon the Table of both Houses. That did not involve that an approval was to be given by the Senate. The cases which had been quoted from British practice had no application, for, although it was true that the returns had to be laid upon the Table of the House of Peers, there was nothing to show that the Peers had any power of veto over them. The Senate had entered upon a course which was most dangerous to the Constitution of the country. It had entered upon a course which every member of the House was bound, from considerations of national safety in a parliamentary sense, to resent and resist, and it had entered upon a course which would be dangerous to the Constitution of that Chamber as it exists, by initiating agitation in the country which could only result in disagreement between the great authorities of the State; and there would be a necessity for changes which every one of them could have wished would not have been necessary.

House adjourned at Thirty-five minutes past
Nine o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, 10th April, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Twenty minutes before Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I notice in one of the public prints of Ottawa that the right hon. member for Kingston—who, I regret, is not now in his place—has spoken of me in this House in a manner which, I think, I can well characterize as most unfair and most unjustifiable. I will read what is stated in the Free Press. It is as follows:—

“The Supply Bill passed. The amendments made by the Senate to the Independence of Parliament Bill and Hon. Mr. Blake's Bill were agreed to, and those to the Supreme Court Bill disagreed to. A brief but violent discussion arose over the action of the Senate with regard to the Pembina Branch. The Premier severely criticised the conduct of the Senate in throwing out this Bill, and was followed by Sir John A. Macdonald, who insinuated that the Bill was merely an arrangement by which the Government could reward a member of the House for his servile support, and that this member had been compelled to admit in the House that he was interested in this monopoly.”

In the first place I say I never did make such an admission in this House to the hon. gentleman, and even had I done so, I think that the hon. gentleman had no right to speak of me as he did on that occasion. Whatever I have done in this respect I have done in the most open manner possible.

MR. MACKENZIE.

When it was found that others could do nothing in the way of getting better railway facilities and completing the railway connection with Manitoba, I certainly, as a member from that Province, did my utmost to effect that. As I said on another occasion in this House, for two or three years back I have laboured earnestly to that end in connection with some friends, and no sooner did it become possible to get that which was so much required—indeed an absolute necessity for the country—than the hon. gentleman and his friends put every obstacle in the way of its being carried out. He comes down to this House and says that the Government are actuated by unworthy motives in proposing to make running arrangements with the St. Paul and Pacific Company over the Pembina Branch, and that it was their intention to reward me in this way for my servile adherence to them. Now, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman the member for Kingston and any member of his Government, if on any occasion they found a disposition on my part to ask or receive any favour from the Government, either for myself or for that corporation which has been so much spoken of, and which I have had the honour of representing—that is the Hudson Bay Company. I would ask the hon. member if I have received one sixpence of public money or one place, either for myself or any other person connected with me, and if at this moment there is one single person related to myself who receives one sixpence of the public money; and I might ask the hon. member if this is so with all those who may have claims upon himself. But perhaps it would not be very generous to refer to these matters particularly.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Refer to what?

MR. SMITH: This is—

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: What would it be ungenerous to refer to?

MR. SMITH: I mentioned that there was not one relative of mine who drew one sixpence of the public money, who held any place in the public service, and said, perhaps, it might be otherwise with those connected with and related to the right hon. gentleman.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Hear, hear.

MR. SMITH: Not that there would be anything wrong even if it were so as regards the hon. gentleman's friends, but I say I always desired to keep myself entirely free and independent with regard to these matters of one Government or of the other Government. I would ask the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House if I have ever desired any favour for myself, or anything for any one except for such of my constituents as have applied to me for places under the Government; and I ask, further, if, on any one occasion, where I have recommended a single individual for any place, or any position, or any appointment, I have done so without the saving clause that it was conditional on his being found in every respect well fitted for it, both as to character and ability. This unwarrantable attack of the right hon. gentleman is but a continuation and a repetition of what he and his friends have been saying of myself both inside and outside of this House for some time back. The hon. gentleman who sits on his left, the hon. member for Cumberland, has not been slow to use my name, as I find by another public print. I find that the hon. gentleman says,—I think it was at what is called the Orangeville picnic. I know very little of these picnics, I have not followed them closely, nor indeed have I followed them at all. I was otherwise I trust honestly and more properly occupied in the pursuit of my duties.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: More profitably engaged, no doubt!

MR. SMITH: I trust so—more profitably and more properly. I find that the hon. gentleman, the member for Cumberland, says here, speaking of certain names that were given in the Globe of those who did not support the right hon. gentleman at a critical moment in 1873—

MR. TUPPER: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

MR. SMITH: It will be remembered that—

MR. SPEAKER: A question of order is raised.

MR. TUPPER: I rise to a question of order, and I put it to you, whether it is not an abuse of the right to read from a newspaper, for the hon. gentleman has had that speech here during the three months that we have been in Session, and to speak at the moment when Black Rod is coming to the door and thus to shelter himself from the answer which he would otherwise get.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: And the punishment he would otherwise get.

MR. SMITH: I had no such opportunity.

MR. TUPPER: A more cowardly thing I have never seen ventured on in this House.

MR. SMITH: I am not surprised at this from the hon. gentleman.

MR. TUPPER: Anything more cowardly I never heard of. I am responsible for every word I have uttered on the platform. I have sat here for three months, and no reference has been made to this by the hon. gentleman or anybody else.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: Neither the hon. gentleman—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: Nor any other hon. gentleman—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: Has ventured to challenge one word I have uttered during the recess of Parliament.

MR. SMITH: The charge of being a coward I throw back on the hon. gentleman.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Let the poor man go on.

MR. SMITH: The hon. member for Cumberland said:—

“He would give his hearers the names mentioned by the Globe as having left because of the scandal, and he asked them to mark them. It would be remembered that the Government had a majority of from twenty-five to thirty, and, in order to gain a majority, the Opposition had to take half of them away. How many of them did the Globe mention? Would his hearers believe it? Three. But who did they suppose were paraded before the people in that connection? He would read their names. For what purpose did Mr. Glass, Hon. D. A. Smith, and Col. Bay, not to mention others—all men who had supported Sir John A. Macdonald in the first session of 1873—desert Sir John, but for his conduct in connection with the Pacific Scandal? Did any one who read the public prints want to know why the independent, high-souled, patriotic Mr. Glass left the party, and where he had been ever since? He, a lawyer, was certainly about the last man one would expect to find up to his eyes in railway and Pacific telegraph contracts with the Government. Yet there he was, and the law was trampled under foot to pay him, as they gave him the contract without first having the road located. Then they said Hon. D. A. Smith. Did the Globe suppose that the people of Canada had no memories, and that they did not know that Mr. Smith gave unqualified evidence that the Canada Pacific scandal had nothing to do with his changed attitude towards Sir John Macdonald? Mr. Smith was a representative of the Hudson Bay Company and he had been pressing a claim on his right hon. friend for public money; Sir John had been holding back, and Mr. Smith came to the conclusion that it would be just as well to jump the fence if there was to be a change of Government. But Mr. Smith was a canny man; he held back and sat on the fence and watched the course, certainly not in the interests of his country, because he did not want to jump too soon and find he had jumped into a ditch. But, when he came to the conclusion that the Government was going out, he made the bolt, and he (Dr. Tupper) had no doubt that he had had a great deal of reason since for congratulating himself on having jumped as he did."

That is the insinuation—the broad assertion made on the part of the hon. member for Cumberland at his picnic, and reiterated here, and I give it the most positive denial, and say—that never was anything received by me or desired by me from the present Government any more than from the former Government. What are the particulars of this affair of 1873, as regards myself? Does the hon. gentleman not know, and does not the right hon. gentleman know too, that members of the late Government approached me before the eventful 4th of November, and that they wished to sound me and know how I was going to vote in this matter; and that some days in advance of that time, I was requested to meet the hon. member for Charlevoix in the Speaker's room, and did meet him there? And do they not know that an hon. gentleman from the other House, the Hon. Mr. Campbell, a gentleman for whom I have a very high respect, personally, also met me there, and that to both of these gentlemen, during a long interview, at which was present also another gentleman who was then, likewise, a member of this House—Mr. Nathan, a personal friend of mine—I declared that I could not vote for the amendment to the amendment that was even offered by Mr. McDonald of Pictou? Do they not know I said—"No, I cannot do so; I cannot possibly do so; I cannot conscientiously do so."

MR. SMITH.

MR. TUPPER: Does the hon. gentleman deny—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: That he telegraphed down here—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: That he would be here and support the Government—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: After he knew everything about the Canadian Pacific Railway affair. Does he deny that?

MR. SMITH: I do deny it. I never telegraphed I would be here and support the Government. Never, never. I know that the right hon. gentleman wrote me, asking me to come down, but the hon. gentleman cannot say—dare not say—I ever telegraphed I would support the Government, and no other hon. gentleman can say so.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I will tell you what I can say—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I telegraphed the hon. gentleman—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: He dare not listen to an explanation.

MR. SMITH: On the occasion referred to in the Speaker's Chamber,

I said that I could not support the Government, but I offered and proposed that there should be another amendment, and a very different one, that is, the Government should frankly confess their fault to the House, and then, if the country condoned it, and Parliament condoned it, it would be a very different thing. That is what I proposed to the hon. gentleman, and this was reduced to writing at the time.

MR. TUPPER: That—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: Is not what you telegraphed.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: That is not what you telegraphed.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Hear, hear.

MR. SMITH: The hon. gentleman is altogether in the wrong. I telegraphed simply in courtesy in reply to a letter that I would be in Ottawa by the 23rd October. I saw the right hon. gentleman himself in one of the rooms. He sent for me. Mr. Mitchell came and informed me that the hon. member for Kingston desired to see me; and let me say to Mr. Mitchell's credit, that he has got up in many an assembly where I have been and said I was perfectly justified in doing as I did, as Mr. Mitchell knew all the circumstances.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I am sure he did not.

MR. TUPPER: Will the hon. gentleman name—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: One single meeting where Mr. Mitchell ever made such a statement anywhere, and where the record of it is to be found, except out of the hon. gentleman's own mouth—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. SMITH: I could do so.

MR. TUPPER: And that goes for a very little in this House or out of it.

MR. SMITH: I can bring forward a number of gentlemen of high respectability, whose word will be taken all over the country and all over the world.

MR. TUPPER and HON. MEMBERS: Name, name. Where, Where?

MR. SMITH: I could mention a dozen.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Name.

MR. SMITH: A dozen most respectable men in Montreal, and some in Ottawa, too.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Name.

MR. SMITH: A dozen of them.

MR. TUPPER: I never heard of these meetings and statements.

MR. SMITH: And, if necessary, I am prepared to do so at another time. On the occasion spoken of I did see the hon. gentleman in the room. I think it was No. 6 or 5, and the hon. gentleman then did try to persuade me to vote for him, but the hon. gentleman will not dare to state I said I could support him; and what did the hon. gentleman say to me then at length—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. SMITH: He said,—“If I am not supported now I will appeal to the country.” The right hon. gentleman during the present Session spoke of Selkirk—the constituency I have the honour to represent—as being a rotten borough, an Old Sarum, but in speaking of me as he did on the evening of that 4th November, he must have counted on the whole of Ontario being one great rotten borough, a veritable Old Sarum, as he said that if he appealed to it he would have Ontario to a man with him.

An Hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: There is not one single word of truth in that statement—not one single word of truth. The hon. gentleman is now stating what is a falsehood.

MR. ROCHESTER: How much did the other side offer you?

MR. SMITH: The hon. gentleman says he did not say so; certainly the spirit within him said it; for the words came out of the hon. gentleman's mouth.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. SMITH: If he did not say so, the spirits within him did. Those words were uttered by the hon. gentleman.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: They were not uttered by me.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: They were not uttered by me.

MR. SMITH: They were, as surely and certainly as the hon. gentleman and I are here.

HON. MEMBERS: Order, order.

MR. SMITH: The hon. member for Cumberland the same evening told me that the right hon. gentleman was not capable of knowing what he said; and will he deny—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. SMITH: The hon. member for Cumberland said next morning—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order, and I want to ask you whether it is competent for any hon. gentleman to stand up in this House and detail what he himself admits are private conversations. Is it competent for a man to detail private conversations, while falsifying them?

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: And his word passes for nothing here or elsewhere.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: I have never witnessed such—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: Cowardly abuse of—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: Of the privileges of this House, as for an hon. gentleman to be guilty of making a speech when there is no possibility of a reply being made to it.

MR. SMITH: The hon. gentleman—

MR. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is defending himself against a very grave charge made against him.

MR. SMITH.

The relating of private conversations may be held to be very improper, but it is not unparliamentary.

MR. TUPPER: I do not complain of the relating of private conversations, I complain—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: I complain of the hon. gentleman falsifying private conversations, and detailing that as a conversation which he knows to be falsified.

MR. SMITH: I do not look upon them as private conversations, and I give the exact truth. I was sent for as a member of the House by the gentleman at that time the head of the Government, and he—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. SMITH: Endeavoured to get me—

MR. TUPPER: Will the hon. gentleman—

MR. ROCHESTER: They could not give you enough.

MR. SMITH: Will he deny that the next morning when I met the hon. gentleman here, who is on the other side—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Give.

MR. SMITH: At Mr. Tupper's office when he was Minister of Customs. Will he deny that he said to me that so soon as it was possible to make the right hon. gentleman to understand right from wrong, or to that effect—

MR. TUPPER: The hon. gentleman has asked if I will make a statement.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: I tell him that if he will allow me five minutes—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. SMITH: Only for an apology.

MR. TUPPER: I will show that the very first statement he commenced with to-day—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: The statement that he never sought a favour from the late Government—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: Is as false a statement—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: As ever issued from the mouth of any man, and he has continued—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: With a tissue—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: Sir, of as false statements as were ever uttered—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: By any man.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: That is what I will show him.

MR. SMITH: I never asked, prayed for, desired, or got a favour from the last Government.

MR. TUPPER: Will the hon. gentleman allow me to tell a favour he asked for?

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: The hon. gentleman begged of me to implore—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: The leader of the Government to make him a member of the Privy Council of Canada.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: That is what he asked for, and he—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: Was refused; and it was the want of that position, and that refusal which, to a large extent, has placed him where he is to-day.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. SMITH: The hon. gentleman knows that he states what is wholly untrue, and, driven to his wit's end, is now going back to a journey he and I made to the North-West in 1869, and I give the most positive denial to any assertion made by him, or any other person, that I asked for or desired any favour from the Government.

THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS: Mr. Speaker, a Message from His Excellency the Governor-General.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. SMITH: I now—

MR. SPEAKER: I have very much pleasure in informing the House that it now becomes my duty to receive the Messenger—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. SMITH: He knows—

MR. TUPPER: Coward, coward; sit down.

MR. SPEAKER: I—

MR. SMITH: He knows—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: Coward, coward, coward.

MR. SMITH: You are the coward.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. SMITH: Nay, further, there were two gentlemen, members of this House—

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. SMITH: The day after that 4th November—

MR. TUPPER: Coward, coward.

MR. SMITH: Who came to me with a proposition to throw over the right hon. gentleman and the present member for Charlevoix, if I would consent to give up the position I had deemed it my duty to take in the House the evening before, and would support the Government by voting against the amendment of the hon. member for Lambton.

Some HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. TUPPER: Mean, treacherous coward.

MR. SMITH: Who is the coward, the House will decide—it is yourself.

MR. TUPPER: Coward, treacherous—

MR. SMITH: I could not support them—

MR. SPEAKER: Admit the Messenger.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: That fellow Smith is the biggest liar I ever met!

A Message from His Excellency the Governor General, by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:—

“MR. SPEAKER:—

“His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this Honourable House in the Senate Chamber.”

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House, went up to attend His Excellency.

In the Senate Chamber.

His Excellency was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:—

An Act to incorporate the Fishwick's Express and Merchants' Forwarding Company (Limited).

An Act further to amend the Act intitled “An Act respecting the Public Works of Canada.”

An Act to incorporate “La Société de Construction du Comté d'Hochelega,” as a Permanent Building Society, and for other purposes.

An Act respecting the Port Whitby Harbour Company.

An Act to provide that persons charged with common assault shall be competent as witnesses.

An Act to grant relief to the Canada Agricultural Insurance Company.

An Act to incorporate the Missionary Society of the Bible Christian Church in Canada.

An Act to amend the Law respecting Deck Loads.

An Act respecting the Duty on Malt.

An Act to provide for the creation and registration of Homestead Exemption Estates in the Territories of Canada.

An Act to amend section sixty-eight of “The Penitentiary Act of 1875.”

An Act respecting persons imprisoned in default of giving securities to keep the peace.

An Act to make provisions for the winding up of insolvent incorporated Fire or Marine Insurance Companies.

An Act to amend “An Act respecting conflicting claims to lands of occupants in Manitoba.”

An Act to grant certain powers to the Agricultural Mutual Assurance Association of Canada, and to change its name.

MR. SPEAKER.

An Act to amend the Acts incorporating the Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company and the Canada Central Railway Company, and to provide for the amalgamation of the said Companies.

An Act to confer certain powers on the Montreal Building Association by the name of “The Montreal Investment and Building Company.”

An Act to authorize the Stadacona Fire and Life Insurance Company to reduce its Capital Stock, and for other purposes.

An Act to amend the Act thirty-seventh Victoria, chapter eight, intitled: “An Act to impose license duties on compounders of spirits; to amend the Act respecting the Inland Revenue, and to prevent the adulteration of Food, Drink and Drugs.”

An Act to authorize the advance of certain sums to the Province of Manitoba, in aid of the Public Schools therein.

An Act to amend the Act respecting the Election of Members of the House of Commons.

An Act respecting the Ontario Express and Transportation Company.

An Act to amend the law respecting Building Societies carrying on business in the Province of Ontario.

An Act to amend the law relating to Stamps on Promissory Notes and Bills of Exchange.

An Act to provide for the better auditing of Public Accounts.

An Act respecting the Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors.

An Act further securing the Independence of Parliament.

An Act for the better prevention of crimes of violence in certain parts of Canada until the end of the next Session of Parliament.

The Speaker of the House of Commons then said:—

“MAY I PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,—

“The Commons of Canada have voted the Supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

“In the name of the Commons, I present to your Excellency a Bill intitled, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial year ending respectively the 30th June, 1878, and the 30th June, 1879, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service, to which I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.”

To this Bill the Royal Assent was signified in the following words:—

“In Her Majesty’s name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.”

The titles to the following Bills were then read :—

An Act to repeal Section twenty-three of “The Merchant Shipping Act, 1876,” as to Ships in Canadian Waters.

An Act for the relief of Hugh Hunter.

An Act for the relief of Victoria Elizabeth Lyon.

An Act for the relief of George Frothingham Johnston.

To these Bills, the Clerk of the Senate, by His Excellency’s command, did thereupon say :

“His Excellency the Governor General doth reserve these Bills for the signification of Her Majesty’s pleasure thereon.”

His Excellency the Governor General was then pleased to address the two Houses in the following Speech:—

“Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

“Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

“I am glad to be able to relieve you from further attendance in Parliament after a somewhat long and laborious Session.

“I shall take the necessary steps, at an early day at the close of the financial year, to give effect to the measure you have passed for the better auditing of Public Accounts.

“I shall call the attention of Her Majesty’s Government to your Address, praying that all of British America, excepting Newfoundland, shall be, by Imperial action, declared to be within the Dominion of Canada.

“I rejoice that during the term of my administration, this final step to consolidate British interests on the continent of America, has been taken with so much unanimity, and that henceforth the Dominion Government will, under Her Majesty, exercise undisputed sway over the northern half of this continent.

“I am happy to be able to state that, pending the final settlement of the question of boundary, a conventional line has been adopted by my Government and the Government of the United States, between Alaska and British Columbia, on the Stickeen River.

“The large sums you have appropriated for the great works of internal improvement will be expended with the most rigid regard to economy, and in the expectation that the principal canals under construction may be nearly completed within the next financial year.

“The settlement of Manitoba and the North-West Territories has been proceeding this year with unexampled rapidity, and if the efforts of my Government to obtain a railway connection with Winnipeg, at a very early day should be successful, I anticipate, next year, a still larger increase to the population.

“It is especially gratifying to find so many Canadians, who had in former years emigrated to the United States, now returning to the newly organized territories of their native land.

“Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

“I thank you for the supplies which you have granted for the various public services.

“Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

“Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

“Nothing could have given me more gratification than the joint Address with which you have honored me on the eve of my departure.

“My interest in Canada shall not cease, when my mission, as Her Majesty’s Viceroy shall have terminated, and I am glad to know that you have taken so favourable a view of my efforts to fittingly represent our most gracious Queen in this the most important of Her Majesty’s Colonial Possessions.

“I now bid you farewell, and earnestly trust that you may find in the future the manifold blessings which I shall ever pray may be continually showered upon you.”

The Parliament of the Dominion of Canada was then prorogued to Wednesday, the 19th June next.

INDEX.

- ABOLITION of Stamp Duty on Pro-missory Notes.*
Question, 355.
- Accidents on Railways.*
Motion for Return, 406.
- Acquisition of North-West unceded Territory.*
Question, 1845.
- Address in Answer to His Excellency's Speech.*
Taken into consideration, 19.
Paragraph 1 agreed to, 306.
Paragraphs 2 to 9 agreed to, 344.
Paragraphs 10 to 17 agreed to, 346.
Referred to Committee, 346.
Reported, 347.
Ordered to be Presented, 347.
- Address to the Governor General.*
Notice of Motion, 1845.
Resolution adopted, 1873.
Reported, 1877.
Message from the Senate, 2008.
His Excellency's Reply, 2055.
- Adjournment for Lady Day.*
Motion, 1359.
- Adjournment, Hour of.*
Resolution Proposed, 393.
- Adjournment of a Debate on The Budget.*
Debate on, 937.
- Adjournment of the House,*
Remarks, 2553.
- Administration of Oaths of Office Bill.*
1<sup>o</sup>, 14.
- Admiralty Survey of Portland Channel.*
Motion for Return, 964.
- Admission of Canadian Ships into French Ports.*
Motion for Correspondence, 360.
- Adulteration of Food Bill.*
1<sup>o</sup>, 2032; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2485.
- Agricultural Banks.*
Resolutions Proposed, 1211.
- Agricultural Mutual Insurance Association Bill.*
1<sup>o</sup>, 567; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1727
- Alaska Boundary Line.*
Motion for Report, 417.
- Alleged Piché Letter.*
Question, 708.
- APPLEBY, Mr.*
Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 609.
Calais and St. Stephen Railway Bridge Company Bill, 663, 711, 1219.
Permissive Liquor Bill, 952.
The Tariff, 1005.
Printing Committee Reports, 2343.
- Appointment of Internal Commission.*
Message from His Excellency, 387.
- Appropriation of Iron Rails.*
Motion for Return, 989.
- ARCHIBALD, Mr.*
Welland Canal Contracts, 1085.
William Wallace Accounts, 1845.
Adulteration of Food Bill, 2033.
- Assimilation of Trade Laws.*
Question, 353.
- Assiniboine and Red Rivers.*
Question, 487.
- Assiniboine River Lots.*
Motion for Statement, 1578.
- Attendance of Voters Bill.*
1<sup>o</sup>, 1582.
- Audit of Public Accounts Bill.*
1<sup>o</sup>, 1218; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1624: Com., 1700; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2606.
- Auditor General of Canada.*
Resolution, 1505.
- Australia, Trade with.*
Motion for Return, 389.

AYLMER, Mr.

Schools of Gunnery, 1578.

BABY, Mr.

Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 602, 1093.

Transmission of Timber on Rivers, 951.

Better Translation of B. N. A. Act, 1087.

Société de Construction du Comté d'Hochelaga Bill, 1163, 1206, 1659.

Question of Privilege, 1313.

Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 1388.

Offices of Receiver-General and Attorney-
General Bill, 1609.

Supply, 1824, 1828, 1830.

Law of Evidence Amendment Bill, 1866.

Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1962.

Election Act Amendment Bill, 2120.

Native Tobacco Duties, 2128.

BAIN, Mr.

The Address, 301.

Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1267.

The Tariff, 1749.

Balances of Appropriation, 348.

Ballot Papers.

Question, 2549.

Bank of Liverpool Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 407; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; Com., 1206; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1290;

Senate amendments concurred in, 1653.

Bankrupt Law Amendment.

Question, 353.

Banque Jacques Cartier Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 663; 2<sup>o</sup>, 887.

BARTHE, Mr.

Insolvency Law Repeal Bill, 18, 349, 1428.

Rate of Interest Bill, 350, 1861.

Superior Court Judges, 352.

Harbour Works at Sorel, 593.

Bay of Chaleurs Railway.

Question, 568, 711.

Beauce Controverted Election.

Judge's Report, 13.

Beauharnois Canal Enlargement.

Question, 1551.

BÉCHARD, Mr.

The Address, 292.

Reciprocity with the United States, 352.

Better Translation of B. N. A. Act, 1088.

Losses by Floods, 1273.

The Tariff, 1815.

Supply, 1825, 2371.

BERTRAM, Mr.

The Budget, 778.

Supply, 1169, 1836, 2294, 2295.

Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1264.

BERTRAM, Mr.—Con.

Independence of Parliament Bill, 1355.

Colonization Railway Bill, 1484.

Rebate of Duties, 1641.

Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1705.

Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2486.

Better Translation of British North America Act.

Motion for Select Committee, 1084.

Committee Appointed, 1663.

Bible Christian Church in Canada Missionary Society Bill.

1<sup>o</sup> and 2<sup>o</sup>, 1860; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2068.

Biennial Sessions.

Resolution Proposed, 617.

BIGGAR, Mr.

Brockville and Ottawa Railway Co. Bill,
1549.

BILLS.

Bill (No. 1) Respecting the Administration of Oaths of Office.—(Mr. Mackenzie.)

1<sup>o</sup>, 14.

Bill (No. 2) To repeal the Insolvency Laws now in force in the Dominion of Canada.—
(Mr. Barthe.)

1<sup>o</sup> proposed, 18; 1<sup>o</sup>, 349; 2<sup>o</sup> proposed, 1428.

Bill (No. 3) To provide that persons charged with Common Assault shall be competent as witnesses in their own behalf.—(Mr. Dymond.)

1<sup>o</sup>, 349; 2<sup>o</sup>, 599; com., 1092; 3<sup>o</sup> ordered, 1304;
com., 1310; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1311.

Bill (No. 4) To amend the Law relating to Stamps on Promissory Notes and Bills of Exchange.—(Mr. Irving.)

1<sup>o</sup>, 349; 2<sup>o</sup>, 616; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2154.

Bill (No. 5) To regulate the Rate of Interest in Canada.—(Mr. Barthe.)

1<sup>o</sup>, 350; Order for 2<sup>o</sup> negatived, 1865.

Bill (No. 6) To authorize and confirm the Scheme of Arrangement of the Canada Southern Railway Company.—(Mr. Thompson, Welland.)

1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 484; Com., 1290; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1381; Senate amendments concurred in, 1727.

Bill (No. 7) Respecting the Ontario Express and Transportation Company.—(Mr. Oliver.)

1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 485; Com., 1860; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1945.

Bill (No. 8) To authorize the National Insurance Company to reduce its Capital Stock, and for other purposes.—(Mr. Desjardins.)

1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 485; Com., 1206; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1290.

Bill (No. 9) To amend the Acts incorporating the Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company, and the Ganaxa Central Railway Company, and to provide for the Amalgamation of the said Companies.—(Mr. Galbraith.)

1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 485; Com., 1543; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1653; Consideration of Senate amendments, 2009, 2069.

BILLS—Con.

- Bill (No. 10) To authorize the Stadacona Fire and Life Insurance Company to reduce its Capital Stock, and for other purposes.—(Mr. Casgrain.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 485; Com., 1206; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1290; Consideration of Senate amendments, 2009.
- Bill (No. 11) To reduce the Capital Stock of the Merchants' Bank of Canada.—(Mr. Jetté.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 486; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1092.
- Bill (No. 12) To Incorporate the Société de Construction Mutuelle under the name of the "Société de Prêts et Placements de Québec," and for other purposes.—(Mr. Malouin.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 486; Com., 951; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1092.
- Bill (No. 13) Further to amend the Act intituled "An Act respecting the Public Works of Canada."—(Mr. Mackenzie.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1221; Com., 1317; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1457.
- Bill (No. 14) Further Securing the Independence of Parliament.—(Mr. Laflamme.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1226; Com., 1327, 2008; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2038; Senate amendments concurred in, 2546, 2551.
- Bill (No. 15) To give jurisdiction to the Court of Queen's Bench of Ontario to pay to John Stuart, of the City of Kingston, Surgeon, One Thousand Dollars, deposited with his Election Petition.—(Mr. Haggart.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 369; order for 2<sup>o</sup> postponed, 486, 885; Bill withdrawn, 951.
- Bill (No. 16) To Incorporate The Ontario Mutual Life Assurance Company.—(Mr. Bowman.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 486; Com., 1206; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1290.
- Bill (No. 17) To amend "The Post Office Act of 1875."—(Mr. Huntington.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 386; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1258; Com., 1464; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1511.
- Bill (No. 18) To authorize certain arrangements between the Dominion Grange Mutual Fire Insurance Association and the Dominion Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry of Canada.—(Mr. Snider.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 387; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; Bill withdrawn, 708.
- Bill (No. 19) Respecting the Port Whitby Harbour Company.—(Mr. Burk.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 387; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1660.
- Bill (No. 20) To amend the Act respecting the Election of Members of the House of Commons.—(Mr. Laflamme.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1844; 2<sup>o</sup>, 2073; Com., 2073, 2116; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2160.
- Bill (No. 21) Further to amend the Charter of the Quebec Fire Assurance Company.—(Mr. Taschereau.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 407; 2<sup>o</sup>, 486; Com., 1206; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1290.
- Bill (No. 22) Respecting the Bank of Liverpool.—(Mr. Forbes.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 407; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; Com., 1206; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1290; Senate amendments concurred in, 1653.
- Bill (No. 23) To establish Township Municipalities in the District of Keewatin.—(Mr. Mills.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 427; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1262; Com., 1384, 1396.
- Bill (No. 24) To amend "The Insolvent Act of 1875" and amending Acts.—(Mr. Bourassa.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 427; 2<sup>o</sup> negated, 1667.

BILLS—Con.

- Bill (No. 25) To regulate the sale and disposal of bottles used in the manufacture of Mineral Water and other drinks.—(Mr. McDonald, Toronto Centre.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 531; Order for 2<sup>o</sup> discharged, 1669.
- Bill (No. 26) Respecting the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada.—(Mr. Mitchell.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 531; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; Com., 1290; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1384.
- Bill (No. 27) Respecting the Northern Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Cook.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 531; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; Com., 1290; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1380.
- Bill (No. 28) To Revive and Amend the Act incorporating the Montreal and Champlain Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. Sriver.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 531; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1206.
- Bill (No. 29) To authorize and provide for the winding up of the Canada Agricultural Insurance Company.—(Mr. Kerr.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 531; 2<sup>o</sup>, 683; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1860.
- Bill (No. 30) To grant certain powers to the Agricultural Mutual Insurance Association of Canada, and to change its name.—(Mr. Macmillan.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 567; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1727.
- Bill (No. 31) To amend the Act incorporating the Sydenham Harbour Company.—(Mr. Gibbs, South Ontario.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 567; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1523.
- Bill (No. 32) To facilitate the Colonization of Dominion Lands, by providing for the Incorporation of Railway Companies, and aiding the construction of railways traversing such lands.—(Mr. Mills.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 567; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1478; Order discharged and Bill withdrawn, 2485.
- Bill (No. 33) To declare Life Assurance Policies non-forfeitable.—(Mr. Trow.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 567; Bill withdrawn, 1670.
- Bill (No. 34) To Incorporate the Calais and St. Stephen Railway Bridge Company.—(Mr. Appleby.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 663; 2<sup>o</sup>, 711; Bill withdrawn, 1219.
- Bill (No. 35) To amend an Act intituled "An Act respecting La Banque Jacques Cartier."—(Mr. Casgrain.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 663; 2<sup>o</sup>, 887.
- Bill (No. 36) To authorize the extension of certain Letters Patent to George B. Burland.—(Mr. Casgrain.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 663; Bill withdrawn, 1425.
- Bill (No. 37) To provide for the greater convenience and safety of passengers travelling on the Railways of Canada.—(Mr. Trow.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 663.
- Bill (No. 38) To extend to the Province of Prince Edward Island "The Railway Act, 1878," and certain Acts amending the same.—(Mr. Mackenzie.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 708; 2<sup>o</sup> and 3<sup>o</sup>, 1262.
- Bill (No. 39) Respecting the Canada Wine Growers Association.—(Mr. Smith, Peel.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 708; Order for 2<sup>o</sup> discharged and Bill withdrawn, 2069.
- Bill (No. 40) For the Amendment of the Law of Evidence in certain cases of Misdemeanor.—(Mr. Kirkpatrick.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 740; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1866.

BILLS—Con.

- Bill (No. 41) To amend the Law relating to Larceny of things attached to or growing on Land.—(Mr. Palmer.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 740.
- Bill (No. 42) To amend the Act intituled "An Act respecting the Intercolonial Railway," passed in the 39th year of the Reign of Her Majesty, Queen Victoria.—(Mr. Tupper.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 801.
- Bill (No. 43) Further to amend the Act respecting Stamps on Bills and Notes.—(Mr. Laurier.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 802; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1262; Com., 1705; Order discharged and Bill withdrawn, 2485.
- Bill (No. 44) To provide for the creation and registration of Homestead Exemption Estates in the Territories of Canada.—(Mr. Mills.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 802; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1523; Com., 1524; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2006.
- Bill (No. 45) Whereby judgments obtained against Railway Companies for debt incurred for Working Expenses may be enforced by execution against railway property, and to authorize the appointment of a Receiver and Manager in certain cases.—(Mr. Irving.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 951.
- Bill (No. 46) To amend "An Act respecting Conflicting Claims to Land of Occupants in Manitoba."—(Mr. Mills.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 951; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1401; Com., 1402; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1464; Consideration of Senate amendments, 2078.
- Bill (No. 47) To provide for the Transfer of Lands and Estates, and interests in Lands, in the Territories of Canada, by Registration of Titles.—(Mr. Mills.)
2<sup>o</sup>, 951; Order discharged and Bill withdrawn, 2485.
- Bill (No. 48) To incorporate "La Société de Construction du Comté d'Hochelaga" as a Permanent Building Society, and for other purposes.—(Mr. Baby.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1163; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1206; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1659.
- Bill (No. 49) To incorporate the Regular Baptist Foreign Missionary Society of Ontario and Quebec.—(Mr. Wood.)
1<sup>o</sup> and 2<sup>o</sup>, 1206; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1523.
- Bill (No. 50) Respecting the Maritime Court of Ontario.—(Mr. Laflamme.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1204.
- Bill (No. 51) Respecting the Offices of Receiver General and Attorney General of Canada.—(Mr. Laflamme.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1204; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1584; Com., 1611; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1811.
- Bill (No. 52) To amend the Canadian Pacific Railway Act.—(Mr. Mackenzie.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1205; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1674; Com., 1675; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2009; Consideration of Senate amendments, 2454.
- Bill (No. 53) For the better Auditing of the Public Accounts.—(Mr. Cartwright.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1218; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1624; Com., 1700; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2006.
- Bill (No. 54) To incorporate the Fishwick Express and Merchants' Forwarding Company (Limited).—(Mr. Tupper.)
1<sup>o</sup> and 2<sup>o</sup>, 1523; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1860.
- Bill (No. 55) To amend the law respecting Building Societies.—(Mr. Gibbs, South Ontario.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1311; 2<sup>o</sup>, 2158; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2212.

BILLS—Con.

- Bill (No. 56) To amend the Acts respecting Controverted Elections.—(Mr. Huggart.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1359.
- Bill (No. 57) Respecting the Montreal and City of Ottawa Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. McNab.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1384; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1427; Com., 1660; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1663.
- Bill (No. 58) For the relief of Hugh Hunter.—(Mr. McCarthy.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1427; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1524; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1659.
- Bill (No. 59) For the relief of George Frothingham Johnston.—(Mr. Fraser.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1427; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1523; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1660.
- Bill (No. 60) To amend the Consolidated Insurance Act, 1877.—(Mr. Killam.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1395.
- Bill (No. 61) Respecting the Duty on Malt.—(Mr. Laurier.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1396; 2<sup>o</sup>, 2006; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2033.
- Bill (No. 62) To amend the Law respecting Deck Loads.—(Mr. Smith, Westmoreland.)
Resolution proposed, 1505; 1<sup>o</sup>, 1505; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2036.
- Bill (No. 63) To repeal Section 23 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1876," as to Ships in Canadian Waters.—(Mr. Smith, Westmoreland.)
Resolution proposed, 1219.
- Bill (No. 64) To make better provision for the Trial of Controverted Elections of Members of the House of Commons, by amending and consolidating the Acts now in force on that subject.—(Mr. McCarthy.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1454.
- Bill (No. 65) To make provision for the winding up of Insolvent Incorporated Fire or Marine Insurance Companies.—(Mr. Blake.)
1<sup>o</sup> and 2<sup>o</sup>, 1539; Com., 2009, 2036; 3<sup>o</sup> postponed, 2036; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2042.
- Bill (No. 66) To secure the attendance of Voters at the Elections of Members of the Commons.—(Mr. McDougall, South Renfrew.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1582.
- Bill (No. 67) To amend the General Railway Act respecting Railways.—(Mr. Ross, West Middlesex.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1636.
- Bill (No. 68) To amend the Act 38 Victoria, Chapter 11, intituled, "An Act to establish a Supreme Court and a Court of Eschequer for the Dominion of Canada."—(Mr. Laflamme.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1636; 2<sup>o</sup>, 2385; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2394; Senate amendments disagreed to, 2550.
- Bill (No. 69) To amend Section 8 of the Penitentiaries Act of 1875.—(Mr. Laflamme.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1637.
- Bill (No. 70) To ensure the better qualification of Public Servants, and the greater efficiency and economy of the Public Service.—(Mr. Casey.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1673;
- Bill (No. 71) To confer certain powers on the Montreal Building Association by the name of the Montreal Investment and Building Company.—(Mr. Holton.)
1<sup>o</sup>, 1807; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1860; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2212.

BILLS—Con.

- Bill (No. 72) To incorporate the Missionary Society of "The Bible Christian Church in Canada."—(Mr. Burke)
1° and 2°, 1860; 3°, 2068.
- Bill (No. 73) Respecting persons imprisoned in default of giving Sureties to keep the Peace.—(Mr. Lafamme.)
1°, 1807; 2° and 3°, 2073.
- Bill (No. 74) For the relief of Victoria Elizabeth Lyon.—(Mr. Cameron.) 1°, 1860; 2°, 1945; 3°, 2068.
- Bill (No. 75) An Act respecting the Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors.—(Mr. Mackenzie.)
1° and 2°, 2385.
- Bill (No. 76) To amend the Act 37 Victoria, Chap. 8, entitled, "An Act to impose License Duties on Compounders of Spirits; to amend the Act respecting the Inland Revenue, and to prevent the Adulteration of Food, Drink and Drugs.—(Mr. Laurier.)
1°, 2032; 3°, 2485.
- Bill (No. 77) An Act for the better prevention of Crimes of Violence in certain parts of Canada, until the end of the next Session of Parliament.—(Mr. Mackenzie.)
1°, 2336; 2°, 2384; Com., 2408; 3°, 2460.
- Bill (No. 78) To authorize the advance of certain sums to the Province of Manitoba, in aid of the Public Schools therein.—(Mr. Mills.)
1° and 2°, 2486; 3°, 2529.
- Bill (No. 79) To declare the Rule of Decision in the Courts of the North-West Territories.—(Mr. Mills.)
1°, —.
- Bill (No. 80) For granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1878, and the 30th June, 1879, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service.—(Mr. Cartwright.)
1°, 2° and 3°, 2550.
- Bills Assented to, 2033, 2564.*
- Bills Reserved, 2565.*
- Bills Withdrawn, 708, 951, 1219, 1425, 1670, 2069, 1669, 2485.*
- Bird Island Lighthouse Keeper.*
Motion for Correspondence, 738.
- BLAIN, Mr.
Hour of Adjournment, 393.
Number of Members in Parliament, 420, 426.
The Tariff, 1746.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1810.
Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 2010.
Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2154.
- BLAKE, Mr.
Points of Order, 152, 153, 987.
Case of Judge Loranger, 371.
Mails between Quebec and Murray Bay, 384, 386.
Boundary Line—Upper and Lower Canada, 392.
Welland Canal Contracts, 635.
The Budget, 841.
Distribution of Old Rails, 987, 989.

BLAKE, Mr.—Con.

- Better Translation of B.N.A. Act, 1088, 1091.
Supply, 1123, 1127, 1131, 1142, 1143, 1155, 1183—1192, 1830, 1832, 1834, 2083, 2216, 2302, 2348, 2378, 2380, 2525, 2545.
Duties Collected at St. John, N.B., 1414.
Post Office Act Amendment Bill, 1470.
Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 1539, 2009, 2039, 2042.
Petitions of Right, 1561.
Officers of Receiver General and Attorney-General Bill, 1598.
Land Claims of John Reid, 1651.
Audit of Public Accounts Bill, 1701.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1811.
Rivière du Loup Branch, G.T.R., 2003.
Northern Railway Bonds, 2006.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 2008, 2040, 2546.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 2073, 2117.
Manitoba Land Claims Bill, 2078.
La Banque Nationale, 2147.
Printing Committee Report, 2202.
Government Officials in Elections, 2216, 2234.
Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2336, 2408, 2464.
Official Reporting of the Debates, 2344.
Ventilation of the Chamber, 2366.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 2454.
Supplementary Estimates, 2525.

BLANCHET, Mr.

- The Address, 267.
Admission of Canadian Ships into French Ports, 355.
Rivière du Loup Branch G.T.R., 358.
Repairs to Military Bridges at Levis, 388.
The Northern Light, 399.
Number of Members of Parliament, 426.
Supply, 1157, 1169, 1181, 1820, 1821, 1827, 1828, 2049, 2086, 2097, 2108.
Offices of Receiver-General and Attorney-General Bill, 1205.
Rivér St. Charles Improvements, 1211.
Pilotage Act Amendments, 1396.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 1520.
Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 1542.
Better Translation of B.N.A. Act, 1663.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 1844.

BOLDUC, Mr.

- Repeal of Duty on Native Tobacco, 355, 2122.
Stadacona Insurance Company Bill, 485.

Bonded Warehouse, Carronbrook Clinton.

- Motion for Correspondence, 724.

BORDEN, Mr.

- Abolition of Stamp Duty 355.
Supply, 1179, 2334.
The Tariff, 1630.
Intercolonial Railway, 2334.

BORRON, Mr.

- Canada Central Railway Company, 2509.

Boswell's Brewery Seizure.

Motion for Papers, 1846.

Boundary Line—Alaska.

Motion for Report, 417.

Boundary Line — Upper and Lower Canada.

Motion for Reports, 389.

BOURASSA, Mr.

Renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty, 367.
Insolvent Act Amendment Bill, 427, 1206,
1667.

BOURBEAU, Mr.

The Address, 70.
Duties on Canadian Tobacco, 711.
Chester East Post Office, 1072.
Supply, 1173.
Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1449.
Postal Facilities at Lavelle Corners, 2056.

BOWELL, Mr.

The Address, 173.
Visit of Governor General to B. C., 520.
Payments for Printing, 530.
Return of Government Advertisements, 532
Imperfect Returns, 533.
Colonization Railway Bill, 568.
Lake Huron Indian Lands, 723.
Northern Railway Commission, 724.
Contract 25, Pacific Railway, 724.
Contract 15, Pacific Railway, 724.
Kingston Election Petition Bill, 885.
Distribution of Old Rails, 976.
Welland Canal Contracts, 1097.
Supply, 1135, 1144, 1145, 1146, 1149,
1153, 1158, 1160, 1164, 1165, 1176, 1180,
1627, 1822, 1823, 1827, 1840, 1841, 2026,
2042, 2051, 2105, 2109, 2141, 2198, 2293,
2296, 2301, 2371, 2380, 2384, 2478, 2552.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 1227,
1231, 1337, 1351, 2040.
Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 1262, 1388,
1397.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1400, 2000.
Muir Post-Office, 1418.
The Manitoba Troubles, 1418.
Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 1474.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 1524.
Question of Privilege, 1537.
Fences on P. E. I. Railway, 1568.
The Tariff, 1627.
Montreal and Ottawa Junction R. R. Co.
Bill, 1662.
Mineral Waters Bottles Bill, 1669.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1681
Rivière du Loup Branch G. T. R., 2003.
Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 2012.
Oka Indians, 2109, 2478.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 2117.
Printing Committee Report, 2202, 2343.
Government Officials in Elections, 2238.
System of Letting Contracts, 2276.
Supplementary Estimates, 2478, 2523.
Canada Central Railway Company, 2514.

BOWMAN, Mr.

Ontario Mutual Life Assurance Co. Bill,
369, 486, 1290.

Breakwater at Main-à-Dieu.

Question, 388.

Breakwater at Rondeau.

Question, 354.

Breakwater, Ingonish Harbour.

Motion for Papers, 726.

British Columbia Fisheries.

Motion for Return, 726.

British Columbia, Indian Reserves in.

Motion for Return, 964.

British Columbia, Money Paid.

Motion for Return, 373.

British Columbia Penitentiary.

Question, 2143.

British Columbia, Telegraph Charges in.

Motion for Correspondence, 961.

British Columbia Terminus, Pacific Railway.

Motion for Reports and Correspondence,
366.

British Columbia, Trade and Commerce of.

Motion for Returns, 368.

British Columbia, Visit of Governor-General.

Motion for Details of Expenses, 570.

British North America Act, Better Translation of.

Motion for Select Committee, 1084.
Committee Appointed, 1663

Brockville and Ottawa and Canada Central Railway Companies Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 485; Com., 1548; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1653.
Consideration of Senate Amendments,
2069.

BROOKS, Mr.

Question of Privilege, 1311.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1918.

BROUSE, Mr.

Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1222.
Post Office Act Amendment Bill, 1467.
Supply, 2300.

BROWN, Mr.

The Tariff, 1626, 1803.
Life Assurance Policies Bill, 1673.
Supply, 2371.

BUDGET, THE, 427.

Debate on, 444, 663, 741, 809.
Amendment Proposed, 854. (See THE TARIFF).

Building Societies Amendment Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 1311; 2<sup>o</sup>, 2158; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2212.

BUNSTER, Mr.

The Address, 1782.
Pacific Railway, 416, 2538.
Alaska Boundary Line, 418.
Number of Members in Parliament, 425.
Biennial Sessions, 616.
Observance of the Lord's Day, 734.
The Budget, 795.
The Tariff, 934,
Pine River Pass Survey, 107.
Supply, 1185, 1198, 2047, 2082, 2095, 2198, 2284, 2239—2291, 2472, 2530.
Chinese Labour on Pacific R. R., 1207, 1210
Independence of Parliament Bill, 1332, 1353
Importation of Malt, 1379.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 1526.
Royal Naval Cadets, 1557.
The Governor General, 1638.
The Tariff, 1797.
Pacific Railway Supplies, 2056.
Question of Privilege, 2066.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 2120.
Welland Canal Improvements, 2152.
The Coal Interests, 2171.
Official Reporting of the Debates, 2344.
Removal of Stipendiary Magistrate, 2350.
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2399, 2407.
Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2465.
Supplementary Estimates, 2472, 2530.

BURK, Mr.

Port Whitby Harbour Co. Bill, 387, 682, 1660
Bible Christian Church in Canada Missionary Society Bill, 1868, 2068.

BURPEE, Mr. (St John.)

Trade and Navigation Returns, 348.
Trade and Commerce of B. C., 368.
New Campbellton Custom House, 725.
Ordnance Lands, 965.
Supply, 1162, 1194, 1806, 1825, 1826, 2218, 2291, 2292, 2484.
Duties Collected at St. John, N. B., 1409.
Rebate of Duties, 1641.
Welland Canal Improvements, 2151.
Government Officials in Elections, 2218.
Names and Salaries of Officials, 2360.
Supplementary Estimates, 2484.

BURPEE, Mr. (Sunbury.)

The Agricultural Interests, 1724.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 2160.

Business of the House.

Motions to Adjourn, 567, 740.
Resolution Proposed, 1507.
Motion, 2549.

Calals and St. Stephen R.R. Bridge Company Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 663; 2<sup>o</sup>, 711; Bill withdrawn, 1219.

CAMERON, Mr.

Claims for Damages on Intercolonial R.R., 510.
Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 612.
Welland Canal Contracts, 642, 646.
The Budget, 940.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 952.
Stamps on Bills and Notes Bills, 1706.
Supply, 1806, 1834, 1836, 2523.
Victoria Elizabeth Lyon Divorce Bill, 1860, 1945, 2068.
Law of Evidence Amendment Bill, 1866.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1967.
Question of Privilege, 2062.
Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2072.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 2074.
Northerly Boundaries of Canada, 2393.
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2400.
Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2412.
Canada Central Railway Company, 2503.
Supplementary Estimates, 2523.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 2548.

CAMPBELL, Mr.

New Campbellton Custom House, 724.
Post Office Changes, New Campbellton, 725.
Ingonish Harbour Breakwater, 726.
Bird Island Lighthouse Keeper, 738.
Enlargement of St. Peter's Canal, 739.
The Tariff, 1803.
Supply, 2031, 2088, 2199, 2214.
The Coal Interests, 2192.
Ingonish Harbour Contract, 2206.

Canada Agricultural Insurance Company Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 531; 2<sup>o</sup>, 683; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1860.

Canada Central and Georgian Bay Branch Railway Companies.

Motion for Papers, 1848.

Canada Central Railway Company.

Resolution Proposed, 2487.

Canada Southern Railway Company Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 484; Com., 1290; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1381;
Senate amendments concurred in, 1727.

Canada Southern Railway Company.

Motion for Returns, 720.

Canada Vine Growers' Association.

Question, 1206.

Canada Vine Growers' Association Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 708; Order discharged and Bill withdrawn, 2069.

Canadian Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 1205; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1674; Com., 1675; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2009;
consideration of Senate amendments, 2454; Senate amendments insisted on, 2530.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

- Motion for Correspondence, 410.
 Question, 408.
 British Columbia Terminus, 366.
 Pembina Branch, 355.
 Route in British Columbia, 495.
 Survey—Red River and Battleford, 570.
 Cost of Construction—Bute Inlet, 618.
 Supply of Spikes, 718.
 Lands—Motion for Return, 718.
 Expenditure on, 722.
 Contract 25, 724.
 Contract 15, 724.
 Route, 863.
 Subsidies to R.R. Co's in connection with, 953.
 Red River Crossing, 1072.
 Chief Engineer's Report, 1932.
 Survey, 1932.
 Supplies, 2056.
 Fort William Extension, 2142.
 British Columbia Terminus, 2142.
 Nepigon and Thunder Bay Branch, 2143.
 Map of Route, 2348.
 Tenders for completion of Pembina Branch, 2349.
 Annual Statement—in Supply, 2413.
- Canadian Pacific Railway Supplies.*
 Question, 2056.
- Canadian Pacific Railway Survey.*
 Question, 1932.
- Canadian Pacific Telegraph Line.*
 Motion for Copies of Specifications, 953.
- Canadian Tobacco, duties on.*
 Question, 711.
- Canals, The Williamsburgh.*
 Question, 712.
- Cape Breton, Iron Rails in.*
 Question, 487.
- Carillon Canal and Dam.*
 Question, 486.
- Carronbrook and Clinton Bonded Warehouses.*
 Motion for Correspondence, 724.
- CARON, Mr.
 The Address, 242.
 Dufferin Improvements at Quebec, 355.
 Admission of Canadian Ships into French Ports, 362.
 Lachine Canal, 510.
 Port Whithy Harbour Company Bill, 683.
 Square Timber Cullers' Pensions, 990.
 Question of Privilege, 1313.
 Supply, 1838, 2048, 2097, 2102, 2219.
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 2119.
 Native Tobacco Duties, 2131.
- Cartridges for the North-West Superintendency.*
 Question, 1845.

CARTWRIGHT, Mr.

- Official Reporting of the Debates, 18.
 Supply, 347, 373, 427, 663, 1120—1202, 1626, 1815, 1818, 1819, 1823, 1828—1831, 1835, 1837, 1842, 1878, 2025-2031, 2103, 2141, 2197, 2286, 2289, 2298—2300, 2368—2370, 2376—2382, 2467—2474, 2481—2485, 2522, 2550.
 Public Accounts, 347.
 Repeal of Duty on Native Tobacco, 355.
 Ways and Means, 347.
 Balances of Appropriation, 348.
 Abolition of Stamp Duty, 355.
 Allowances and Gratuities, 348.
 Unforeseen Expenses, 348.
 Message from His Excellency, 372.
 Money Paid to B. C., 378.
 Duty on Malt, 407.
 Receipts and Expenditures, 427.
 The Budget, 427, 473.
 Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 507.
 Visit of Governor General to B. C., 519.
 Dominion Pensioners, 568.
 Civil Service Superannuation, 718.
 Lapsed Appropriations of 1876-77, 721.
 Uniform Copper Currency, 953.
 Victoria Harbour Breakwater, 977.
 Welland Canal Contracts, 1107.
 Audit of Public Accounts Bill, 1218, 1624, 1700, 2006.
 Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1263.
 Importation of Malt, 1361.
 Twenty-five cent Government Scrip, 1408.
 Insurance Law Amendment, 1408.
 Duties collected at St. John, N.B., 1409.
 Montreal City and District Savings Bank, 1423, 1667.
 Homestead Exemption Bill, 1527.
 The Auditor General, 1584.
 Insurance Act of 1877, 1637.
 Cattle Killed on Intercolonial Railway, 1640.
 Rebate of Duties, 1644.
 Life Assurance Policies Bill, 1670.
 The Loan of 1876, 1855, 2158.
 Northern Railway Bonds, 2005.
 Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 2011, 2036, 2042.
 Governor General's Reply to Address of both Houses, 2055.
 Pacific Railway Supplies, 2056.
 Cascumpec Harbour, 2056.
 Names and Salaries of Officials, 2068, 2360.
 Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2070, 2156.
 Native Tobacco Duties, 2135.
 La Banque Nationale, 2149.
 Intercolonial Railway, 2314.
 Supplementary Estimates, 2408, 2467, 2485, 2552.
 SUPPLY BILL, 2550.
- Cascumpec Harbour.*
 Motion for Engineer's Report, 1562.
 Question, 2056.
- Case of Judge Loranger.*
 Remarks, 369.
 Explanations, 526.
- Cases in Exchequer Court.*
 Motion for Returns, 1561.
- Cases in Supreme Court.*
 Motion for Returns, 1561.
- CASEY, Mr.
 Welland Canal Contracts, 1114.

CASEY, Mr.—Con.

Supply, 1151, 2252.
 Canada Southern R. R. Co. Bill, 1293, 1381.
 Civil Service Bill, 1673.
 Ballot Papers, 2549.

CASGRAIN, Mr.

Reciprocity with the United States, 353.
 Bankrupt Law Amendment, 353.
 Assimilation of Trade Laws, 353.
 Revision of the Dominion Statutes, 353.
 Expenses on account of Sitting Bull, 353.
 Stadacona Fire and Life Insurance Co. Bill,
 369, 485, 1206, 1290.
 Bank Jacques Cartier Bill, 663, 887.
 G. B. Burland Letters Patent Bill, 663, 1425.
 Red River Crossing, C. P. R., 1072.
 The Tariff, 1771.
 Question of Privilege, 1871.
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 2074.
 Supply, 2097.
 Native Tobacco Duties, 2127, 2134.

Cattle Killed on Intercolonial Railway.

Motion for Correspondence, 1640.

Changes in the Government.

Ministerial Explanations, 305.

Channel at Mouth of the Miramichi.

Question, 486.

Chantry Island Contract—Sheriff Sutton.

Personal Explanation, 1303.

Charges against Marine Agent in B. C.

Motions for Correspondence, 1638, 1846.

CHARLTON, Mr.

The Address, 22.
 The Tariff, 906, 2187.
 Canada Southern Railway Co. Bill, 1300.
 Colonization Railway Bill, 1489.
 Rate of Interest Bill, 1863.
 The Coal Interests, 2187.
 Ventilation of the Chamber, 2366.

Chaudiere River Bridge.

Motion for Correspondence, 2152.

Chester East Post-Office.

Question, 1072.

CHEVAL, Mr.

Overpayments by Steamboats, 486.
 Remeasurement of Steam Vessels, 1073.
 Question of Privilege, 2063.

Chinese Labour on Pacific Railway.

Resolution Proposed, 1207.

CHRISTIE, Mr.

Mails on Montreal and Occidental Railway,
 352.
 Observance of the Lord's Day, 727, 731.
 Supply, 2477.
 Oka Indians, 2477.
 Supplementary Estimates, 2477.

CIMON, Mr.

Improvement on the Saguenay, 373.
 Mails between Quebec and Murray Bay, 384.
 Mail to Lake St. John, 387.
 Mail to Notre Dame de Laterrière, 387.
 Mail between Quebec and Chicoutimi, 722.
 Wharf at Ste. Anne, Chicoutimi, 1552.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1976.

Civil Service Efficiency Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 1673.

Civil Service Superannuation.

Motion for Return, 718.

Claims on Intercolonial Railway.

Motion for Statement, 498.
 Motion for Correspondence, 1417.

Coasting Regulations.

Question, 387.

COCKBURN, Mr.

The Address, 28.
 The Coal Interests, 2178.
 Government Officials in Elections, 2247.

COLBY, Mr.

The Tariff, 1025.

Colchester and Cumberland Oyster Beds Lease.

Motion for Correspondence, 1578.

Colchester (N.S.) Mail Service.

Motion for Correspondence, 2349.

Collector of Customs, Port of Rimouski.

Motion for Report, 723.

Collingwood Harbour.

Motion for Papers, 1581.

Colonization Railways Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 567; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1478; Order discharged and Bill withdrawn, 2485.

Commission, Northern Railway.

Motion for Return, 724.

Committee, Printing.

Message to the Senate, 368.

Committees, Select Standing.

Motion, 15.
 Motion for Special Committee, 347.
 Report Presented and concurred in, 349.
 Lists concurred in, 368.

Consolidated Insurance Act, 1877, Amendment Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 1395.

Contract 15, Pacific Railway.

Motion for Papers, 724.

Contract 25, Pacific Railway.

Motion for Papers, 724.

Contracts, System of Letting.

Remarks, 2254.

Contracts, Welland Canal.

Motions for Returns, 623, 714.
Debate adjourned, 662, 1119.
Resuming Adjourned Debate, 1095, 1865.

Controverted Elections Act Amendment Bill.

1°, 135.

Controverted Elections Act Consolidation Bill.

1°, 1454.

Controverted Election, Beauce.

Judge's Report, 13.

Controverted Election, Jacques Cartier.

Judge's Report, 2032.

Conveyance of Kamouraska Mails.

Question, 951.

Conveyance of Mails in Cape Breton.

Motion for Return, 1576.

COOK, Mr.

The Address, 196.
Northern Railway Company Bill, 531, 682,
1290, 1380.
Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1267, 1707.
Montreal and Ottawa Junction Railway Company Bill, 1661.
Government Officials in Elections, 2245.
Supply, 2252, 2296.
Printing Committee Reports, 2344.

COSTIGAN, Mr.

Postal Service, Perth, N.B., 726.
Point of Order, 944.
Supply, 1174, 1176, 2100.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 1349.
Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 1392.
Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1452.
Indian Agent at Tobique Reserve, 1552.
The case of Sergeant Hart, 1554.
Question of Privilege, 1867.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1996.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 2077.

Cow Bay Breakwater.

Motion for Return, 2154.

Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill.

1°, 2336 ; 2°, 2384 ; Com., 2408 ; 3°, 2460.

Cullers' Remuneration.

Question, 1073.

CURRIER, Mr.

Carillon Canal and Dam, 486.
Square Timber Cullers' Pensions, 990.
The Tariff, 1070.
Supply, 1165, 2028, 2104, 2200, 2226, 2295,
2370.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 1229, 1257.
Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1267.
Supervisor of Cullers' Office, 1269.

CURRIER, Mr. - Con.

Post Office Act Amendment Bill, 1477.
Brockville and Ottawa Railway Bill, 1549.
Rebate of Duties, 1643.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1682.
Welland Canal Improvements, 2152.
Government Officials in Elections, 2242.

Customs Entries of Railway Rolling Stock.

Motion for Statement, 1418.

Daily Mail Between B. C. and Puget Sound.

Motion for Correspondence, 1270.

Dallas and Stonewall Postal Facilities.

Question, 2056.

Damage to Mills.

Question, 1269.

DAVIES, Mr.

Victoria Harbour Breakwater, 967.
Supply, 1168, 1193, 2026, 2033, 2092, 2109.
Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1451.
Winter Navigation of the St. Lawrence, 1283.
Post Office Act Amendment Bill, 1477.
Business of the House, 1509.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 1515.
The Agricultural Interests, 1722.
Foreign Trawls off Nova Scotia, 2153.

Dawson Route, The.

Motion for Papers, 722.

Death of Militia Veterans.

Motions for Return, 426.

Debates, Official Reporting of.

Remarks, 16, 531.
Committee Appointed, 16
Report Concurred in, 409.
Motion to Adopt Report, 2344.

Deckloads Act Amendment Bill.

1°, 1505 ; 2°, ; 2°, 2036.

Deckloads Act Amendment Bill.

Resolution, 1505.

DECOSMOS, Mr.

Official Reporting of the Debates, 18, 2346.
B. C. Terminus Pacific Railway, 366.
Trade and Commerce of B.C., 368.
Money paid to B.C., 373, 380.
Pacific Railway, 410, 2532.
Alaska Boundary Line, 417.
Pacific Railway Route in B.C., 495, 497.
Visit of Governor General to B.C., 518, 524.
Pacific Railway, Cost of Construction—Bute Inlet, 618.
British Columbia Fisheries, 726.
Indian Reserves, in B.C., 964.
Survey of Portland Channel, 964.
Pine River Pass Survey, 1077.
Pensions for Public Officers, 1211.
Daily Mail between B.C. and Puget Sound, 1270.
Supply, 1195, 1197, 2091, 2219.
Printing Committee Reports, 2344.
Map of the Pacific Railway Route, 2348.

DELORME, Mr.

Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 1541.
Supply, 1822.

Deepening Miramichi Channel.

Question, 486.

Departmental Regulations Bill.

Question, 863.

Depot at St. John, N.B.

Question, 569.

DESJARDINS, Mr.

Official Reporting of the Debates, 17, 410, 532
The Address, 65.
Mails on the Montreal and Occidental Railway, 354.
National Insurance Company Bill, 369, 485,
1206, 1290.
Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 605,
1092, 1307.
St. John's Bridge, River Richelieu, 1273.
Losses by Floods, 1273.
Question of Privilege, 1314.
Insurance Law Amendment, 1408.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 1518, 1529.
Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 1542.
Supply, 1825, 2112.
Oka Indians, 2112.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 2118.
Native Tobacco Duties, 2131.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 2458.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 2548.
Ballot Papers, 2549.

DE ST. GEORGES, Mr.

The Address, 19.
Mails between Quebec and Three Rivers, 355
Lake St. George Railway, 712.
Government Purchase of Railway Stores,
1417.
Government Contracts since 1867, 1417.

DEVEBER, Mr.

New Brunswick Military School, 961.
Question of Privilege, 1871.

DEVLIN, Mr.

Montreal City and District Savings Bank,
1420.
Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1438.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 1535.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1810, 1955.
Law of Evidence Amendment Bill, 1866.
Supply, 2044.
Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2409,
2463, 2466.

DEWDNEY, Mr.

Pacific Railway Route in B.C., 496.
Governor General's Visit to B. C., 524.
Telegraph Charges in B. C., 961.
Post Office Act Amendment Bill, 1511.
Nanaimo and New Westminster Mail Service,
1557.
Charges Against Marine Agent in B.C., 1638, 1846.
Pacific Railway, 2535.
Indemnity of a Member, 2549.

Dismissal of Agent of Government Savings Bank, Glace Bay, C. B.

Motion for Correspondence, 1577.

Dismissal of D. McDonald.

Motion for Correspondence, 1577.

Dismissal of James Corbell.

Motion for Correspondence, 1577.

Dismissal of J. Cadigan.

Motion for Correspondence, 1578.

Dismissal of R. J. M. Lacaine.

Motion for Correspondence, 1569.

Dismissal of Shipping Officer, Little Glace Bay, C. B.

Motion for Correspondence, 1577.

Dismissal of Train Despatcher at Truro.

Motion for Correspondence, 1573.

Distribution of Old Rails.

Motion for Correspondence, 968.

District of Quebec Marine.

Motion for List of Employés, 738.

DIVISIONS.*Better Translation of the British North America Act.—(Mr. Frechette.)

Motion for Special Committee (Mr. Frechette)
p. 1084. Yeas, 80; nays, 66; p. 1664.

Brockville and Ottawa and Canada Central Railways Amalgamation Bill.—(Mr. Galbraith.)

Motion in Amendment to third reading (Mr.
McDougall, South Renfrew), p. 1653. Yeas,
50; nays, 101; p. 1658.

Canada Southern Railway Co. Bill.—(Mr.
Thomson, Welland.)

Amendment (Mr. McDougall, East Elgin),
p. 1381. Yeas, 60; nays, 74; p. 1382.

Amendment (Mr. Stephenson), p. 1382. Yeas,
42; nays, 99; p. 1383.

Canadian Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill.
—(Mr. Mackenzie.)

Motion to disagree with Senate Amendments
(Mr. Mackenzie), p. 2454. Yeas, 92; nays,
32; p. 2459.

Concurrence.

Motion in amendment (Mr. Stephenson), p.
2380. Yeas, 40; nays, 86; p. 2383.

Election of Speaker.

Motion (Mr. Mackenzie), p. 2. Yeas, 116;
nays, 53; p. 11.

Hunter, Hugh, Divorce Bill.—(Mr. McCarthy.)

Motion for first reading (Mr. McCarthy).
Yeas, 70; nays, 53; p. 1428.

Motion for second reading (Mr. McCarthy).

Yeas, 78; nays, 51; p. 1624.

Motion for third reading (Mr. McCarthy).

Yeas, 84; nays, 61; p. 1659.

DIVISIONS—Con.

Independence of Parliament Bill.—(Mr. Laflamme.)

Motion in amendment to third reading (Mr. Ouimet), p. 2039. Yeas, 69; nays, 96; p. 2039.

Ingonish Harbour Contract.

Amendment to Supply (Mr. McDonald, Cape Breton), p. 2203. Yeas, 49; nays, 98; p. 2212.

Insolvent Act Amendment Bill.—(Mr. Bourassa.)

Motion for second reading (Mr. Bourassa), p. 1667. Yeas, 68; nays, 72; p. 1668.

Insolvent Law Repeal Bill.—(Mr. Barthé.)

Motion in amendment to second reading (Mr. Wood), p. 1433. Yeas, 99; nays, 55; p. 1453.

Johnston, George Frothingham, Divorce Bill.—(Mr. Fraser.)

Motion for first reading (Mr. Fraser.) Yeas, 70; nays, 52; p. 1427.

Motion for second reading (Mr. Fraser.) Yeas, 78; nays, 51; p. 1523.

Motion for third reading (Mr. Fraser.) Yeas, 84; nays, 61; p. 1660.

Lyon, Victoria Elizabeth, Divorce Bill.—(Mr. Cameron.)

Motion for first reading (Mr. Cameron.) Yeas, 79; nays, 60; p. 1860.

Motion for second reading (Mr. Cameron.) Yeas, 60; nays, 48; p. 1945.

Motion for third reading (Mr. Cameron.) Yeas, 68; nays, 33; p. 2069.

Names and Salaries of Officials.

Motion for Return (Mr. McCarthy), p. 2067.

Motion in amendment (Mr. Kirkpatrick), p. 2363.

Motion in amendment to the amendment (Sir John A. Macdonald), p. 2363. Yeas, 47; nays, 81; p. 2365.

Motion in amendment (Mr. Kirkpatrick) negatived on same division.

Official Reporting of the Debates.

Motion to adopt Report (Mr. Ross, West Middlesex), p. 2344. Yeas, 51; nays, 69, p. 2348.

Printing Committee.

Motion to adopt Reports (Mr. Ross, West Middlesex), p. 2385.

Motion in amendment (Mr. Young), p. 2385. Yeas, 53; nays, 69; p. 2386.

Quebec Provincial Crisis.

Amendment to Supply (Sir John A. Macdonald), p. 1878. Yeas, 70; nays, 112; p. 2025.

Rate of Interest Bill (Mr. Barthé.)

Motion for second reading (Mr. Barthé), p. 1861. Yeas, 24; nays, 122; p. 1865.

Receiver General and Attorney General Bill.—(Mr. Laflamme.)

Amendment to third reading (Mr. Mitchell), p. 1813. Yeas, 64; nays, 105; p. 1813.

Motion for third reading (Mr. Laflamme.) Yeas, 108; nays, 66; p. 1814.

DIVISIONS—Con.

Supply.

Motion in amendment (Sir John A. Macdonald) p. 854. Yeas, 77; nays, 114; p. 1071.

Motion in amendment (Mr. Brown), p. 1626. Yeas, 28; nays, 148; p. 1804.

Motion in amendment (Mr. Béchard), p. 1815. Yeas, 54; nays, 144; p. 1818.

Motion in amendment (Mr. Boudac), p. 2122. Yeas, 32; nays, 90; p. 2140.

Motion in amendment (Mr. MacKay, Cape Breton), p. 2163. Yeas, 27; nays, 135; p. 2196.

Dominion Active Volunteer Corps.

Motion for Return, 1274.

Dominion Grangers Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 387; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; Bill withdrawn, 708.

Dominion Lands Office in Manitoba.

Motion for Return, 712½

Dominion Pensioners.

Question, 568.

Dominion Statutes, Revision of.

Question, 353.

DEMVILLE, Mr.

Stadacona Insurance Company Bill, 485.

Communication with West Indies, 494.

Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 509.

Visit of Governor General to B.C., 519.

St. John Harbour Commission, 568.

Depot at St. John, N.B., 569.

Welland Canal Contracts, 655.

Intercolonial Railway Returns, 708.

Kings County, N.B., Postal Service, 711.

New Campbellton Custom House, 725.

Observance of the Lord's Day, 733.

Rails for N.B. Railroads, 951.

Distribution of Old Rails, 968, 981.

The Tariff, 1048.

Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1320,

1462

Duties collected at St. John, N.B., 1408.

Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1436.

Supply, 1805, 2048, 2108

Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1983.

Question of Privilege, 2062.

Drill Sheds in Manitoba.

Question, 1845.

Dufferin Improvements at Quebec.

Question, 355.

DUGAS, Mr;

Native Tobacco Duties, 2133.

Duties collected at St. John, N.B.

Motion for Return, 1408.

Duties on Canadian Tobacco.

Question, 711.

Duty on Malt.

Question, 408.

DYMOND, Mr.

The Address, 199.

Personal Explanation—The Globe, 324.

Points of Order, 337, 1779.

Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 349, 599, 615, 1093.

Payments for Printing, 356, 529, 1271.

Employment of Shorthand Writers, 407.

Welland Canal Contracts, 651.

Observance of the Lord's Day, 733.

The Tariff, 864, 887.

Kingston Election Petition Bill, 886.

Distribution of Old Rails, 978.

Supply, 1120, 1126, 1129, 1178, 1836, 2141.

Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1264.

Questions of Privilege, 1314, 1871, 2066.

Importation of Malt, 1365.

Deckloads Act Amendment Bill, 1406.

The Coal Interests, 2192.

System of Letting Contracts, 2262.

Official Reporting of the Debates, 2344.

Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2399.

Canada Central Railway Company, 2509.

Eboulements and Murray Bay, Mails to.

Motion for Returns, 388.

Election Act Amendment Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 1844; 2<sup>o</sup>, 2073; Com., 2073, 2116; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2160.

Election Act Amendment Bill.

Question, 952.

Election of New Members.

Announcement, 2, 1867.

Election of Speaker.

Motion, 2.

Employment of Shorthand Writers.

Motion and Remarks, 407.

Enlargement of St. Peters Canal.

Motion for Correspondence, 739.

Esquimalt Graving Dock.

Motion for Correspondence, 410.

Estimates, The.

Message from His Excellency, 373.

Evidence in Common Assaults Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 549; 2<sup>o</sup>, 599; Com., 1093; 3<sup>o</sup>, ordered, 1304; Com., 1310; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1311.

Examining Witnesses on Oath.

Proposed Resolution, 1807.

Expenditure on Pacific Railway.

Motion for Statement, 722.

Expenditure on Public Works.

Motion for Return, 722.

Expenses at Philadelphia Exhibition.

Motion for Return, 419.

Expenses at Sydney Exhibition.

Motion for Return, 419.

Expenses of Special Committees.

Motion for Return, 388.

Expenses on account of Sitting Bull.

Question, 353.

Exploration of Bic and Petit Métis Harbours.

Question, 1552.

Express Freight on Government Railways.

Question, 355.

Extradition Act of 1870, Imperial.

Message from His Excellency, 427.

Extra Postal Service.

Question, 952.

FARROW, Mr.

The Address, 236.

The Tariff, 1010.

Welland Canal Contracts, 1106.

Twenty-five Cent Government Scrip, 1407.

Supply, 2252.

Fences on P. E. I. Railway.

Motion for Correspondence, 1563.

FERRIS, Mr.

Distribution of Old Rails, 970.

FISSET, Mr.

The Address, 291.

Payment of Labourers on Public Works, 352.

Rivière du Loup Branch, G. T. R., 366.

Survey of Matane Harbour, 393.

Death of Militia Veterans, 426.

Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 503.

Leases of Rivers in Quebec, 718.

Collector of Customs, Rimouski, 723.

Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1326.

Fishing in Rivers Rimouski and Metis, 1418.

Bic and Petit Métis Harbours, 1552.

Survey of Bic Harbour, 1579.

Matane and Fox River Telegraph Line, 1579.

The Tariff, 1635.

Supply, 2217.

Government Officials in Elections, 2217.

Fish-Breeding Establishments at Miramichi.

Motion for Report, 1274.

Fishing in the Rivers Rimouski and Metis.

Motion for Correspondence, 1418.

Fishwick Express Company Bill.

1° and 2°, 1523; 3°, 1860.

FLEMING, Mr.

Accidents on Railways, 406.
The Tariff, 1743.

FLESHER, Mr.

Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 1307.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 1528.
Supply, 2049.
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2400.

FLYNN, Mr.

Supply, 1168.
The Coal Interests, 2167.

Fog Whistle on Race Rocks.

Question, 569.

Forbes' Claim on Intercolonial Railway.

Motion for Correspondence, 1645.

FORBES, Mr.

Bank of Liverpool Bill, 407, 682, 1206, 1290, 1653.
Communication with West Indies, 488.
The Tariff, 1629.
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2400.

Foreign Tracts off Nova Scotia.

Motion for Correspondence, 2153.

Fort Frances Locks.

Motion for Report, 366.
Motion for Return, 964.

FRASER, Mr.

George Frothingham Johnson Divorce Bill, 1427, 1523, 1660.

Fraser River Salmon Hatchery.

Question, 2143.

FRÉCHETTE, Mr.

The Address, 262.
Personal Explanation, 284.
Square Timber Cullers' Pensions, 990.
Better Translation of B.N.A. Act, 1084, 1091, 1663.
Gun Platform, Levis fort, 1270.
Winter Navigation of the St. Lawrence, 1275, 1664.
Chaudiere River Bridge, 2152.

French Ports, Admission of Canadian Ships into.

Motion for Correspondence, 360.

Further Supplementary Estimates.

Messages from His Excellency, 2485.

GALBRAITH, Mr.

Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company Bill, 369, 485, 1543, 1653, 2009, 2069.
The Budget, 796.

G. B. Burland Letters Patent Bill.

1°, 663; Order for 2° discharged and Bill withdrawn, 1425.

General Railway Acts Amendment Bill.

1°, 1636.

George Frothingham Johnson Divorce Bill.

1°, 1427; 2°, 1523; 3°, 1660.

Georgian Bay Branch.

Question, 409.

GIBBS, Mr. (North Ontario)

The Address, 216.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1676.
The Tariff, 1739.

GIBBS, Mr. (South Ontario)

Sydenham Harbour Company Bill, 567, 682, 1523.
Port Whitby Harbour Company Bill, 682.
Supply, 1165, 1169, 2524.
Building Societies Act Amendment Bill, 1311, 2158, 2212.
Importation of Malt, 1363.
Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 1390.
Montreal City and District Savings Bank, 1423.
Life Assurance Policies Bill, 1672.
Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1707.
The Tariff, 1768.
Malt Duty Bill, 2033.
Question of Privilege, 2057.
Supplementary Estimates, 2524.

GIBSON, Mr.

The Williamsburgh Canals, 712.

GILLMOR, Mr.

The Tariff, 1016.
Supply, 2296.

GILL, Mr.

Resident Judge at Sorel, 1407.

GOUDGE, Mr.

The Address, 295.
Observance of the Lord's Day, 727.
Tupper House, Halifax, 1073.
Forbes' Claim on Intercolonial Railway, 1646, 1652.
The Tariff, 1780, 1784.
Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2072.
Supply, 2085, 2093.
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2401.

Government Business.

Motion for Precedence, 663.
Question, 2453

Government Changes.

Ministerial Explanations, 350.

Government Contracts since 1867.

Motion for Statement, 1417.

Government Financial Policy.

Amendment to Supply, 2519.

Government Officials in Elections.

In Supply, 2215.

Remarks, 2227.

Personal Explanation, 2293.

Government Purchase of Railway Stores.

Motion for Statement, 1417.

Government Railways, Express Freight on.

Question, 355.

Governor General, The.

Motion for an Address to the Queen, 1638.

Motion of regret at approaching departure, 1874.

Reply to Address of both Houses, 2055.

Grand Trunk Railway.

Rivière du Loup Branch, 357, 366.

Grand Trunk Railway Company Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 531; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; Com., 1290; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1384.

Grant for Veteran Militiamen.

Question, 355.

Graving Dock at Esquimalt.

Motion for Correspondence, 410.

GREENWAY, Mr.

The Tariff, 1729.

Mails on London, Huron and Bruce Railway, 2150.

GUTHRIE, Mr.

Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 607, 1305.

Welland Canal Contracts, 1103.

Independence of Parliament Bill, 1332, 1356.

Homestead Exemption Bill, 1529.

Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2070, 2154.

HADDOW, Mr.

The Tariff, 1063.

Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1323.

North River Navigation, 1407.

Question of Privilege, 1538.

Inter-Provincial Ferry on the Restigouche, 1552.

HAGGART, Mr.

Kingston Election Petition Deposit Bill, 369, 486, 885, 951.

The Budget, 701.

Controverted Election Act Amendment Bill, 1359.

Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company Bill, 1545, 1655.

Supply, 1806, 2295.

Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1999.

Independence of Parliament Bill, 2041.

Hamilton to Barrie, Mails from.

Question, 952.

Harbour Commissioner, St. John.

Question, 568.

Harbour Master at Collingwood.

Motion for Papers, 1640.

Harbour Works at Sorel.

Remarks, 493.

HIGINBOTHAM, Mr.

Importation of Cattle into England, 593.

Importation of Horses, Cattle, etc., into Dominion, 726.

The Militia Service, 951.

Welland Canal Contracts, 1111.

Importation of Malt, 1370.

Supply, 2054.

Hochelaga Building Society Bill.

First Reading proposed, 301.

Hockley Post Office Mails.

Question, 953.

HOLTON, Mr.

Seat for Northumberland, 12.

Official Reporting of the Debates, 16, 17, 531, 2345.

Stadacona Insurance Company Bill, 485.

Visit of Governor General to B.C., 513; 521.

Case of Judge Loranger, 526.

Payments for Printing, 529, 530.

Alleged Piché Letter, 710.

Notice of Motion, 740.

The Budget, 938.

Point of Order, 943.

Audit of Public Accounts Bill, 1219.

Reports on Private Bills, 1219, 1636.

Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1266.

Questions of Privilege, 1316, 1843, 1867.

Independence of Parliament Bill, 1356.

Controverted Election Act amendment Bill, 1360.

Importation of Malt, 1362.

Montreal City and District Savings Bank, 1421.

Controverted Elections Act Consolidation Bill, 1455.

Business of the House, 1507.

Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 1541.

Attendance of Voters Bill, 1583.

Montreal and Ottawa Junction Railway Company Bill, 1662.

Canada Southern Railway Company Bill, 1727.

Montreal Investment and Building Company Bill, 1807, 1860, 2212.

Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1809, 1992.

Supply, 1839, 2367.

Rivière du Loup Branch, G.T.R., 2003.

Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2070, 2156.

Printing Committee Reports, 2202, 2254.

Quebec Building Societies Act, 2226.

Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2341.

Pacific Railway Act amendment Bill, 2456.

Homestead Exemption Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 802; Order for 2<sup>o</sup> read, 1512; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1523;
Com., 1524; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2006.

HORTON, Mr.

Carronbrook Bonded Warehouse, 724.

Hour of Adjournment.

Resolution proposed, 393.

Hugh Hunter Divorce Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 1427; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1524; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1659.

HUNTINGTON, Mr.

The Address, 89.
Personal Explanation, 193.
Report of Postmaster General, 348.
Mails on Montreal and Occidental Railway,
352, 355.
Mails between Quebec and Three Rivers, 355
Mails between Quebec and Murray Bay, 383.
Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 386, 1258,
1464, 1511.
Mail to Lake St. John, 387.
Mail to Notre Dame de Laterrière, 387.
Communication with West Indies, 493.
Welland Canal Contracts, 633.
Mails between Quebec and Chicoutimi, 722.
Point of Order, 944.
Conveyance of Kamouraska Mails, 951.
Mails from Hamilton to Barrie, 952.
Extra Postal Service, 952.
Newcastle and Chatham Mails, 952.
Hockley Post-Office Mails, 953.
Chester East Post-Office, 1072.
Tupper House, Halifax, 1076.
Supply, 1173—1180, 2107, 2213—2219, 2371,
2530.
Daily Mail between B.C. and Puget Sound,
1270.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 1335.
Colonization Railway Bill, 1496.
Nanaimo and New Westminster Mail Service,
1557.
Conveyance of Mails in Cape Breton, 1576.
Dismissal of D. McDonald, 1577.
Dismissal of James Corbell, 1577.
Dismissal of J. Cadigan, 1578.
Offices of Receiver General and Attorney
General Bill, 1607.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1972.
Postal Facilities at Lavelle Corners, 2056.
Dallas and Stonewall Postal Facilities, 2056.
London, Huron and Bruce Railway Postal Service, 2150.
Government Officials in Elections, 2217, 2230
Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2412.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 2456.
Canada Central Railway Company, 2493.
Supplementary Estimates, 2530.

Immigration and Colonization Committee.

First and Final Report, 2408.
Remarks on Report, 2453.

Imperial Extradition Act of 1870.

Message from His Excellency, 427.

Importation of Cattle into England.

Question, 593.

Importation of Horses, Cattle, etc.

Motion for Statement, 726.

Importation of Malt.

Resolution, 1360.

Importation of Tubing.

Motion for Return, 726.

Importing Meat from United States.

Motion for Return, 1084.

Imprisonment in Default of Sureties Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 1807; 2<sup>o</sup>, ; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2073.

Improvement of the River Sydenham.

Question, 354.

Improvements on River St. Charles.

Motion for Statement, 1211.

Improvements on the Saguenay.

Question, 373.

Incomplete Returns.

Remarks, 533.
Intercolonial Railway, 708.

Indemnity of a Member.

Motion, 2549.

Independence of Parliament Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1226; Com., 1327, 2008; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2038;
Senate amendments concurred in, 2546,
2551.

Indian Agent at Tobique Reserve.

Motion for Correspondence, 1552.

Indian Education in Ontario.

Question, 1072.

Indian Lands, Lake Huron.

Motion for Return, 723.

Indian Reserves in B.C.

Motion for Return, 964.

Ingonish Breakwater, Lights at.

Motion for Return, 739.

Ingonish Harbour and Breakwater.

Motion for Papers, 726.

Ingonish Harbour Contract.

Amendment to Supply, 2203.

Insolvent Act Amendment Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 427; 2<sup>o</sup>, negated, 1667.

Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill.

1<sup>o</sup> and 2<sup>o</sup>, 1539; Com., 2009, 2037; 3<sup>o</sup>, postponed, 2037; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2042.

Insolvent Law Repeal Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, proposed, 18; 1<sup>o</sup>, 349; 2<sup>o</sup> proposed, 1428.

Inspection of Fish.

Question, 953.

Insurance Act of 1877.

Question, 1637.

Insurance Law Amendment.

Question, 1408.

Iron Rails in Cape Breton.

Question, 487.

IRVING, Mr.

Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 349, 616, 2154, 2169.

Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 602, 608.

Judgment against Railway Companies Bill, 951.

Independence of Parliament Bill, 1339, 1352, 2008.

Northern Railway Company Bill, 1380.

Homestead Exemption Bill, 1517.

Brockville and Ottawa Railway Co. Bill, 1551.

Isle Brulée Wharf.

Question, 568, 712.

Intercolonial Railway.

Motion for Return, 510.

Debate in Supply, 2307.

Intercolonial Railway Act Amendment Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 801.

Intercolonial Railway Act Amendment Bill.

Question, 2365.

Intercolonial Railway Claims.

Motion for Statement, 498.

Motion for Correspondence, 1417.

Intercolonial Railway Returns.

Question, 708.

Intercolonial Railway Valuers.

Motion for Statement, 2154.

Internal Commission, Appointment of.

Message from His Excellency, 387.

Interprovincial Ferry on the Restigouche.

Question, 1552.

JETTÉ, Mr.

The Address, 86.

Merchants' Bank of Canada Bill, 369, 486, 1093.

Hochelaga Building Society Bill, 801.

Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1448.

Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1950.

Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2411.

John Reid Land Claim.

Motion for Correspondence, 1647.

JONES, Mr. (Halifax)

The Address, 124, 325.

Report of Militia and Defence, 348.

Grant for Veteran Militiamen, 355.

Military Camps of Instruction, 570.

Military College, Kingston, 736, 737.

Personal explanations, 803.

The Militia Service, 951.

Tupper House, Halifax, 1073.

Dominion Active Volunteer Corps, 1274.

The Case of Sergeant Hart, 1555.

Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company Bill, 1654.

Drill Shed in Manitoba, 1845.

Supply, 2045, 2047—2054, 2091, 2115, 2298, 2370—2376, 2472, 2552.

Oka Indians, 2115.

The Coal Interests, 2179.

Government Officials in Elections, 2227.

Supplementary Estimates, 2472, 2552.

JONES, Mr. (South Leeds)

Official Reporting of the Debates, 409.

Supply, 1172, 1806, 1828, 1836, 2026, 2249.

Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1262, 1705.

Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1449.

Post Office Act Amendment Bill, 1511.

The Thousand Islands, 1580.

Rebate of Duties, 1641.

Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1693.

Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2069.

Election Act Amendment Bill, 2118.

Welland Canal Improvements, 2151.

The Coal Interests, 2195.

Judge Loranger, Case of.

Remarks, 369.

Explanations, 526.

Judgments against Railway Companies Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 951.

Kamouraska and St. Pascal Mail Service.

Motion for Statement, 1569.

Kamouraska Mails, Conveyance of.

Question, 951.

Keewatin Municipalities Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 427; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1262; Com., 1384, 1396.

KERR, Mr.

Canada Agricultural Insurance Company Bill, 531, 683, 1860.

Evidence in Common Assaults Bill, 1094, 1308.

The Tariff, 1801.

Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 2012.

The Coal Interests, 2195.

KILLAM, Mr.

Admission of Canadian Ships into French Ports, 360.

Petitions from Aliens, 950.

KILLAM, Mr.—Con.

- Consolidated Insurance Act Amendment Bill, 1395.
- Insurance Act of 1877, 1637.
- Stamps on Bills and Notes B II, 1707.
- Measurements of Shipping, 2056.
- Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2070.
- Supply, 2095.
- Foreign Trawls off Nova Scotia, 2153.

Kings County, N.B., Postal Service.

- Question, 711.

Kingston Election Petition Deposit Bill.

- 1<sup>o</sup>, 389; 2<sup>o</sup>, postponed, 486, 885; Bill withdrawn, 951.

Kingston Military College.

- Motion for Return, 735.

KIRK, Mr.

- Distribution of Old Rails, 984.
- The Tariff, 1058
- Importation of Malt, 1378.

KIRKPATRICK, Mr.

- Seat for Northumberland, 12.
- The Address, 273.
- Official Reporting of Debates, 409.
- Visit of Governor General to B.C., 518, 521.
- Case of Judge Loranger, 526.
- Payments for Printing, 526.
- Pacific Railway Survey, 570, 596.
- Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 610, 1092, 1309.
- Law of Evidence amendment Bill, 740, 1866, 2158.
- Welland Canal Navigation, 952.
- Fort Francis Lock, 964.
- Supply, 1129, 1152, 1182, 1186, 1806, 1821, 2026, 2047, 2289, 2366, 2375, 2474, 2552.
- Neebing Hotel, 1207.
- Independence of Parliament Bill, 1250, 1346.
- Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1262, 1707.
- Questions by Members, 1269.
- Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1318.
- Post Office Act Amendment Bill, 1511.
- Homestead Exemption Bill, 1516, 1526.
- Offices of Receiver General and Attorney General Bill, 1619.
- Better Translation of B.N.A. Act, 1663.
- Life Assurance Policies Bill, 1672.
- Pacific Railway Act amendment Bill, 1675.
- Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 2012, 2042.
- Question of Privilege, 2060.
- Permanent and Extra Clerks and Messengers, 2156.
- Names and Salaries of Officials, 2361.
- Pacific Railway, 2447.
- Supplementary Estimates, 2474, 2552.
- Canada Central Railway Company, 2503.

La Banque Nationale.

- Motion for Correspondence, 2144.

Lachine Canal.

- Motion for Correspondence and Contracts, 510.
- Tenders—Motion for Return, 722.

LAFLAMME, Mr.

- The Address, 70.
- Report of Department of Justice, 348.
- Supreme Court Judge for Richelieu District, 352.
- Bankrupt Law Amendment, 353.
- Revision of the Dominion Statutes, 353.
- Independence of Parliament Bill, 369, 1226, 1247, 1350, 2008, 2038, 2046, 2551.
- Case of Judge Loranger, 371.
- Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 499, 508.
- Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 614, 1092, 1304, 1327.
- Kingston Election Petition Bill, 886.
- Bank Jacques Cartier Bill, 887.
- Supply, 1120, 1149, 1182—1190, 1196—1201, 1805, 1806, 1830, 2081, 2087, 2107, 2552.
- Ontario Maritime Court Bill, 1204.
- Offices of Receiver General and Attorney General Bill, 1204, 1584, 1609, 1811.
- Resident Judge at Sorel, 1407.
- Homestead Exemption Bill, 1529.
- Brockville and Ottawa Railway Bill, 1545 1655.
- Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, 1551.
- Supreme Court Act Amendment Bill, 1636, 2394, 2550.
- Penitentiaries Act Amendment Bill, 1637.
- Imprisonment in Default of Sureties Bill, 1807, 2073.
- Election Act Amendment Bill, 1844, 2073, 2116, 2160.
- Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1966.
- Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2069.
- Native Tobacco Duties, 2129.
- La Banque Nationale, 2144.
- Supplementary Estimates, 2552.

Lake Huron Indian Lands.

- Motion for Returns, 723.

Lake St. John, Mail to.

- Question, 387.

Lake St. John Railway.

- Question, 712.

LANDERKIN, Mr.

- Welland Canal Contracts, 641, 1116.
- Chantry Island Contract—Sheriff Sutton, 1303.
- Question of Privilege, 2065.
- Supply, 2216.
- Government Officials in Elections, 2216.

Lands Damaged by Water.

- Question, 1268.

LANGEVIN, Mr.

- The Address, 58.
- Rivière du Loup Branch, G.T.R., 357.
- Admission of Canadian Ships into French Ports, 360, 363.
- Mails between Quebec and Murray Bay, 382.
- Personal Explanation, 386.
- Mails to Eboulements and Murray Bay, 388.
- Boundary Line—Upper and Lower Canada, 391.
- Official Reporting of the Debates, 410, 532.
- Communication with West Indies, 427.
- Visit of Governor-General to B. C., 517.

LANGEVIN Mr.—Con.

Welland Canal Contracts, 623, 714, 1095, 1865.
 Supply of Spikes, Pacific Railway, 718.
 Lachine Canal Tenders, 722.
 The Dawson Route, 722.
 Mails Between Quebec and Chicoutimi, 722.
 Military College, Kingston, 735, 737.
 The Budget, 835.
 Inspection of Fish, 953.
 Postmaster at Montmagny, 961.
 Telegraph Charges in B.C., 961.
 Ordnance Lands, 965.
 Supply, 1140, 1155—1164, 1170, 1171, 1180, 1182, 1184, 1200, 1201, 1805, 1806, 1819, 1821, 1823, 1828—1833, 2029, 2050, 2081, 2087, 2096, 2100, 2104, 2111, 2214—2217, 2225, 2248—2250, 2280, 2289, 2291, 2296, 2329, 2331, 2367, 2370, 2375—2379, 2468, 2472—2475, 2478, 2482—2484, 2542.
 Independence of Parliament Bill, 1248, 1333, 2039, 2548.
 Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1264.
 Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1324.
 Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 1387, 1396.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1395, 1933.
 Pilotage Acts Amendment, 1396.
 Payments for Land for Canal purposes, 1408.
 Business of the House, 1507.
 Homestead Exemption Bill, 1520, 1524.
 Attendance of Voters Bill, 1582.
 Montreal and Ottawa Junction Railway Company Bill, 1660.
 Better Translation of B.N.A. Act, 1663.
 Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1677, 2009, 2456.
 Audit of Public Accounts Bill, 1702.
 Canada Southern Railway Company Bill, 1727.
 The Tariff, 1774.
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 1844, 2074, 2117, 2162.
 Rate of Interest Bill, 1861.
 Law of Evidence Amendment Bill, 1837.
 Address to the Governor-General, 1876.
 Question of Privilege, 2060.
 Manitoba Land Claims Bill, 2080.
 Oka Indians, 2111, 2479.
 Native Tobacco Duties, 2125.
 Public Accounts Committee Report, 2201.
 Government Officials in Elections, 2215, 2227.
 Quebec Building Societies Act, 2226.
 Printing Committee Reports, 2254, 2343, 2385.
 System of Letting Contracts, 2254.
 Intercolonial Railway, 2329.
 Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2342, 2408.
 Northerly Boundaries of Canada, 2391.
 Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2399.
 Pacific Railway, 2441, 2542.
 Supplementary Estimates, 2468, 2529.
 Canada Central Railway Company, 2500.
 Supreme Court Act Amendment Bill, 2551.

LANTHIER, Mr.

Services of William Taylor of Coteau du Lac, 383, 1269.
 Boundary Line—Upper and Lower Canada, 389, 390.
 Port Whitby Harbour Co. Bill, 683.
 Ordnance Lands in Soulanges, 1845.

Lapsed Appropriations of 1876-77.

Motion for Orders-in-Council, 721.

LAURIER, Mr.

Insolvency Law Repeal, 18, 19.
 The Address, 50.
 Inland Revenue Report, 348.
 Weights and Measures Report, 348.
 Adulteration of Food Report, 348.
 Admission of Canadian Ships into French Ports.
 Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 802, 1262, 1705.
 The Budget, 822.
 Inspection of Fish, 953.
 Square Timber Cullers Pensions, 991.
 Cullers Remuneration, 1073.
 Better Translation of B.N.A. Act, 1089.
 Supply, 1165, 1167, 1169, 1172, 2218, 2292, 2293, 2294—2304.
 Canada Vine Growers Association, 1206.
 Independence of Parliament Bill, 1234.
 Supervisor of Cullers Office, 1269.
 Importation of Malt, 1360.
 Malt Duty Bill, 1396, 2006, 2033, 2035.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1401, 1916.
 The Tariff, 1773.
 Seizure of Boswell's Brewery, 1847.
 Address to the Governor-General, 1876.
 Native Tobacco Duties, 2122.
 Government Officials in Elections, 2218.
 Adulteration of Food Bill, 2485.
 Canada Central Railway Company, 2498.

Lavelle Corners, Postal Facilities at
 Question, 2056.

Law of Evidence Amendment Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 740; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1866; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2158.

Law relating to larceny of things attached to or growing on Land Amendment Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 740.

Law respecting Building Society's Amendment Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 1311.

Leases of Rivers in Quebec.

Motion for Return, 718.

Levis and Dorchester, Mail Service in Counties of

Motion for Return, 725.

Library Committee.

Motion for Select Committee, 349.

Life Assurance Policies Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 567; Bill withdrawn, 1670.

Lights at Tignish Breakwater.

Motion for Return, 739.

Lincoln, The Seat for

Personal Explanation, 167.

Lingan Harbour, Survey of

Motion for Copy of Report, 722.

Liquor Law.

Question, 863.

LITTLE, Mr.

Importation of Horses, Cattle, etc., 726.
 Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1449.
 The Tariff, 1737.
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 2118.

London (England) Emigration Agent.

Motion for Return, 1552.

London, Huron and Bruce Railway Postal Service.

Motion for Correspondence, 2150.

Losses by Floods in St. Athanase Parish.

Motion for Correspondence, 1273.

MACDONALD, Mr. (Centre Toronto).

Mineral Waters Bottles Bill, 531, 1668.
 The Budget, 695.
 Explanations, 743, 744.
 Supply, 1151.
 Toronto Harbour, 1207.
 Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1265.
 Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1433.
 Question of Privilege, 1537.
 Rebate of Duties, 1643.

MACDONALD, Sir John A.

Vacancies (Question of Privilege), 1.
 Election of Speaker, 2.
 Seat for Northumberland, 12.
 Official Reporting of the Debates, 16, 2345.
 Insolvency Law Repeal Bill, 18, 19, 349.
 The Address, 29, 334.
 Points of Order, 152, 808, 943, 1652, 1815.
 Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 349.
 Changes in the Government, 351.
 North-West Boundary of Ontario, 352.
 Case of Judge Loranger, 372.
 Alleged Piché Letter, 708.
 Civil Service Superannuation, 718.
 Windsor and Annapolis Railway, 721.
 Lapsed Appropriations of 1876-77, 721.
 Pembina Branch Railway, 721.
 North-West Mounted Police, 721.
 New Campbellton Custom House, 724.
 Observance of the Lord's Day, 732.
 Notices of Motion, 740.
 Homestead Exemption Bill, 802, 1527.
 Minister of Militia, 803, 805.
 The Budget, 851; Amendment to, 854.
 The Tariff, 854, 937, 1794.
 Pacific Railway Route, 863.
 Departmental Regulations Bill, 863.
 Liquor Law, 863.
 Speaker's Ruling, 949.
 Distribution of Old Rails, 979.
 Upper House, Halifax, 1075.
 Better Translation of B.N.A. Act, 1090.
 Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 1093, 1304.
 Welland Canal Contracts, 1108.
 Supply, 1120, 1123, 1128, 1138, 1142, 1152, 1179, 1202, 1805, 1819, 2053, 2082, 2097, 2149, 2197, 2216, 2248, 2284, 2285, 2290, 2293, 2367, 2373, 2380, 2469, 2471, 2480, 2552.
 Audit of Public Accounts Bill, 1218, 1700.
 Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1224, 1225, 1318.

MACDONALD, Sir John A.—Con.

Independence of Parliament, Bill, 1228, 1234, 1327, 1348, 2008, 2038, 2040, 2551.
 Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 1259, 1466.
 Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1263, 1706.
 Payments for Printing, 1273.
 Questions of Privilege, 1314, 1537, 1837.
 Importation of Malt, 1369.
 Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 1386.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1408, 1807, 1878.
 Duties Collected at St. John, N.B., 1411.
 Montreal City and District Savings Bank, 1425, 1667.
 Controverted Elections Acts Consolidation Bill, 1456.
 Business of the House, 740, 1579.
 Royal Naval Cadets, 1558.
 Petitions of Right, 1560.
 Collingwood Harbour, 1581.
 Attendance of Voter's Bill, 1582.
 The Auditor-General, 1584.
 Offices of Receiver-General and Attorney-General Bill, 1587, 1614.
 Audit of Public Accounts Bill, 1626.
 Charges against Marine Agent in B. C., 1638.
 The Governor-General, 1639.
 Section 12 Intercolonial Railway, 1640.
 John Reid Land Claim, 1650.
 Mineral Waters Bottles Bill, 1668.
 Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1675.
 Imprisonment in Default of Sureties Bill, 1807.
 Address to the Governor General, 1874.
 Rivière du Loup Branch G. T. R., 2002.
 Malt Duty Bill, 2036.
 Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 2037.
 Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2069, 2155.
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 2073, 2161,
 Manitoba Land Claims Bill, 2079.
 La Banque Nationale, 2148.
 The Coal Interests, 2193.
 Printing Committee Reports, 2202, 2343.
 Government Officials in Elections, 2216, 2218, 2229, 2243, 2293.
 Names and Salaries of Officials, 2359, 2362.
 Northerly Boundaries of Canada, 2389.
 Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2399,
 Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2412, 2460.
 Government Business, 2453.
 Oka Indians, 2480.
 Supplementary Estimates, 2469, 2522, 2527.
 Canada Central Railway Company, 2511.
 The Government Financial Policy, 2520.
 Adjournment of the House, 2556

MACDONNELL, Mr.

Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 509.
 Supply, 1135, 1193, 1197, 2092, 2282.
 Independence of Parliament Bill, 1343.
 Controverted Election Act Amendment Bill, 1360.
 Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 1467.
 Questions of Privilege, 1538, 1842.
 Supreme Court Act Amendment Bill, 1636.
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 2074, 2117.
 The Coal Interests, 2169.
 Ingonish Harbour Contract, 2205.
 Official Reporting of the Debates, 2344, 2346.

MACDOUGALL, Mr. (East Elgin).

The Address, 254.
 Canada Southern Railway Co. Bill, 485, 1381, 1290, 1298, 1727.

MACDOUGALL, Mr. (East Elgin)—*Cm.

- Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 604, 1305.
- Canada Southern Railway Company, 720.
- Observance of the Lord's Day, 730.
- Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 1259.
- Point of Order, 1976.
- Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2070, 2154.
- Supply, 2088, 2376, 2472, 2549.
- Election Act Amendment Bill, 2116.
- System of Letting Contracts, 2269.
- Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 2457.
- Supreme Court Act Amendment Bill, 2551.

MACKEY, Mr. (Cape Breton).

- Iron Rails in Cape Breton, 487.
- New Campbellton Custom House, 725.
- Enlargement of St. Peter's Canal, 739.
- Distribution of Old Rails, 983.
- Appropriation of Iron Rails, 989.
- The Tariff, 1069.
- Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 1095.
- Supply, 1197, 2093, 2108, 2285, 2287, 2370.
- Main-à-Dieu Harbour, 1408.
- Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 1478.
- Dismissal of Shipping Officer, Little Glace Bay, 1577.
- John Reid Land Claim, 1632.
- Question of Precedence, 1815.
- Provision for Dredging, 1846.
- Foreign Trawls off Nova Scotia, 2153.
- Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2153.
- The Coal Interests, 2163.
- Ingonish Harbour Contract, 2211.
- Names and Salaries of Officials, 2360.
- Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2407.
- Supplementary Estimates, 2472.
- Independence of Parliament Bill, 2548.
- Ballot Papers, 2549.

MACKENZIE, Mr.

- Election of Speaker, 2, 9.
- Consideration of Speech from the Throne, 15.
- Official Reporting of the Debates, 16, 2345.
- Insolvency Law Repeal, 18.
- The Address, 36, 342.
- Points of Order, 152, 502, 593, 808, 943, 1269.
- Railway Iron Return, 253, 373.
- Select Standing Committees, 15, 347, 349, 368.
- Public Works Report, 347.
- Petitions for Private Bills, 348.
- Library Committee, 349.
- Changes in the Government, 350.
- North-West Boundary of Ontario, 352.
- Reciprocity with the United States, 352, 353, 367.
- Payment of Labourers on Public Works, 352.
- Assimilation of Trade Laws, 353.
- Expenses on Account of Sitting Bull, 353.
- Improvement of the River Sydenham, 354.
- Express Freight on Government Railways, 355.
- Dufferin Improvements in Quebec, 355.
- Pembina Branch of Pacific Railway, 355.
- Rivière du Loup Branch G. T. R., 358, 366, 2004.
- Admission of Canadian Ships into French Ports, 355.
- Engineer's Report on Pacific Railway, 367.
- Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 369, 1221, 1223, 1225, 1317, 1460.
- Case of Judge Loranger, 372, 526, 529.
- Improvements on the Saguenay, 373.
- Messages from His Excellency, 387, 427.

MACKENZIE, Mr.—*Cm.

- Breakwater at Main-à-Dieu, 388.
- Boundary Line—Upper and Lower Canada, 389, 390.
- Survey of Matane Harbour, 393.
- Hour of Adjournment, 394.
- Accidents on Railways, 407.
- Employment of Shorthand Writers, 407.
- Pacific Railway Construction, 408.
- Alaska Boundary Line, 417.
- Expenses at Sydney Exhibition, 419.
- Number of Members in Parliament, 424.
- National Insurance Company Bill, 485.
- Kingston Election Petition Deposit Bill, 486, 885.
- Carillon Canal and Dam, 486.
- Deepening Channel at Mouth of the Miramichi, 486.
- Iron Rails in Cape Breton, 487.
- Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 504.
- Red and Assiniboine Rivers, 487.
- Lachine Canal, 510.
- Visit of Governor General to B. C., 510, 516, 522.
- Return of Government Advertisements, 533.
- Business of the House, 567, 740, 1507, 2549.
- Isle Brulée Wharf, 568, 712.
- Bay of Chaleurs Railway, 568, 711.
- Miramichi Valley Railway, 569.
- Telegraph Line from Chatham, 569.
- Depot at St. John, N.B., 569.
- Pacific Railway Survey, 587, 590, 596, 593, 1933.
- Importation of Cattle into England, 593.
- Harbour Works at Sorel, 594.
- Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 616.
- Pacific Railway (Bute Inlet), 622.
- Welland Canal Contracts, 625, 631, 644, 716, 1111.
- G. B. Burland Letters Patent Bill, 663, 1425.
- Government Business, 663, 2453.
- Port Whitty Harbour Company Bill, 682.
- Bill to extend Railway Act, 1868, to Prince Edward Island, 708, 1262.
- Intercolonial Railway Returns, 708.
- Alleged Piché Letter, 708.
- Calais and St. Stephen Railway Company Bill, 711.
- Duties on Canadian Tobacco, 711.
- King's County, N.B., Postal Service, 711.
- Lake St. John Railway, 712.
- The Williamsburgh Canals, 712.
- Supply of Spikes, Pacific Railway, 718.
- Canada Southern Railway Company, 720.
- Windsor and Annapolis Railway, 721.
- Pembina Branch Railway, 721.
- Observance of the Lord's Day, 727.
- Enlargement of St. Peter's Canal, 739.
- Notices of Motion, 740.
- Intercolonial Railway Act Amendment Bill, 801, 2365.
- Homestead Exemption Bill, 802, 1533.
- Pacific Railway Route, 863.
- Departmental Regulations Bill, 863.
- Liquor Law, 863.
- The Budget, 939.
- Speaker's Ruling, 948.
- Petitions from Aliens, 950.
- St. Paul and Pacific Railway, 950, 1072.
- Transmission of Timber on Rivers, 951.
- Transportation of Rails, 951.
- Rails for N.B. Railroads, 951.
- Permissive Liquor Bill, 952.
- Welland Canal Navigation, 952.
- Railway through Cape Breton, 952.
- Election Act Amendment Bill, 952.

MACKENZIE, Mr.—Con.

Subsidies to Railway Companies in connection with Pacific Railway, 953.
 Surveys in the North-West, 959.
 Telegraph charges in British Columbia, 961.
 Fort Frances Lock, 964.
 Admiralty Survey of Portland Channel, 964.
 Victoria Harbour Breakwater 966.
 Distribution of Old Rails, 974.
 Red River Crossing, Pacific Railway, 1073.
 Pine River Pass Survey, 1080.
 Supply, 1170, 1175, 1182, 1192—1806, 1807, 1819, 1827—1842, 2030, 2089, 2098, 2111, 2142, 2198, 2216, 2220—2226, 2248—2252, 2280—2290, 2307, 2318, 2431, 2367—2370, 2378—2384, 2474—2477, 2482, 2522—2529, 2549.
 Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1205, 1206, 1674, 2009, 2454.
 Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, 1207.
 Toronto Harbour, 1207.
 Transportation of Rails, 1207.
 Neeking Hotel, 1207.
 Chinese Labour on Pacific Railway, 1209.
 Pensions for Public Officers, 1211.
 Audit of Public Accounts Bill, 1218, 1704.
 Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 1261.
 Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 1262, 1397.
 Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1262, 1708.
 Lands damaged by water, 1269.
 Damages to Mills, 1269.
 Services of William Taylor, 1269.
 Losses by Floods, 1273.
 Winter Navigation of the St. Lawrence, 1285, 1287, 1665.
 Canada Southern Railway Co Bill, 1301.
 Rondeau Harbour Return, 1304.
 Questions of Privilege, 1315, 1537, 1869.
 Independence of Parliament Bill, 1328, 1347, 2552.
 Adjournment for Lady Day, 1359.
 Controverted Election Act Amendment Bill, 1359.
 Importation of Malt, 1371.
 Northern Railway Company Bill, 1380.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1395, 1400, 1408, 1760, 1808, 1902.
 North River Navigation, 1407.
 Main-à-Dieu Harbour, 1408.
 Payments for Land for Canal Purposes, 1408.
 Duties Collected at St. John, N.E., 1409.
 Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 1418.
 The Manitoba Troubles, 1418.
 Colonization Railway Bill, 1496.
 Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company Bill, 1549.
 Beauharnois Canal Enlargement, 1551.
 Recognition of Naturalized Subjects, 1551.
 Winter Communication with P.E.I., 1552.
 Interprovincial Ferry on the Restigouche, 1552.
 Wharf at Ste. Anne, Chicoutimi, 1552.
 Exploration of Bic and Petit Métis Harbours, 1552.
 Royal Naval Cadets, 1558.
 Cascumpec Harbour, 1563.
 Fences on P.E.I. Railway, 1566.
 Dismissal of R. J. M. Lecaine, 1569.
 Services of H. G. Hill, 1570.
 Pugwash Branch Railway Scheme, 1571.
 Removal of Intercolonial Railway Assistant Superintendent, 1573.
 Dismissal of Train Despatcher at Truro, 1574.
 Matane and Fox River Telegraph Line, 1579.
 Pictou Branch Railway, 1579.

MACKENZIE, Mr.—Con.

The Thousand Islands, 1580.
 Rideau Hall, 1581.
 Receiver General and Attorney General Bill, 1590.
 Charges against Marine Agent in B.C., 1638.
 The Governor-General, 1639.
 Forbes' Claims on Intercolonial, 1646.
 John Reid Land Claims, 1653.
 Address to the Governor-General, 1845, 2008.
 William Wallace's Accounts, 1845.
 Provision for Dredging, 1846.
 Canada Central and Georgian Bay Branch, 1849.
 Rate of Interest Bill, 1861.
 Imperial Cattle Bill, 2000.
 Saturday Sitings, 2072.
 Oka Indians, 2111, 2113, 2477.
 Pacific Railway (B.C. Terminus), 2143.
 British Columbia Penitentiary, 2143.
 Pembina Branch Railway Crossings, 2143.
 Pacific Railway (Route from Nipigon to Thunder Bay Branch), 2143.
 Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2156.
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 2162.
 Printing Committee Reports, 2201, 2254, 2343.
 Ingonish Harbour Contract, 2205.
 Government Officials in Elections, 2216, 2238.
 System of Letting Contracts, 2259.
 Intercolonial Railway, 2318.
 Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2340, 2384.
 Map of the Pacific Railway Route, 2348.
 Tenders for completion of Pembina Branch, 2349.
 Names and Salaries of Officials, 2362.
 Ventilation of the Chamber, 2366.
 British Territories in North America, 2384.
 Northerly Boundaries of Canada, 2391.
 Water and Gas Supply at Moncton, 2394.
 Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2385, 2394, 2403, 2485.
 Pacific Railway (Annual Statement), 2413.
 Canada Central Railway Company, 2487, 2512.
 Supplementary Estimates, 2474, 2522—2529.
 Ballot Papers, 2549.
 Adjournment of the House, 2553.

MACMILLAN, Mr.

Agricultural Mutual Insurance Bill, 567, 682, 1727.
 Pacific Telegraph Line, 953.
 Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1436.
 Rate of Interest Bill, 1862.
 Supply, 2198, 2292.
 Government Officials in Elections, 2243.

Mail Communication with West Indies.

Motion for Correspondence.

Mails between Quebec and Chicoutimi.

Motion for Correspondence, 722.

Mails between Quebec and Murray Bay.

Motion for Return, 382.

Mails between Quebec and Three Rivers.

Question, 355.

Mail Service in Levis and Dorchester Counties.

Motion for Return, 725.

Mails from Hamilton to Barrie.

Question, 952.

Mails on the Montreal and Occidental Railway.

Questions, 352, 354.

Mails to Eboulements and Murray Bay.

Motion for Return, 383.

Mail to Lake St. John.

Question, 387.

Main-à-Dieu, Breakwater at.

Question, 398.

Main-à-Dieu Harbour.

Question, 1408.

MALOUIN, Mr.

Société de Construction Mutuelle Bill, 369, 486, 951, 1093.

Malpeque Breakwater.

Motion for Return, 738.

Malt Duty Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 1360; 2<sup>o</sup>, 2006; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2033.

Malt, Duty on.

Question, 407.

Malt, Importation of.

Resolution, 1363.

Manitoba Conflicting Claims to Lands Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 951; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1401; Com., 1402; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1464; Senate amendments concurred in, 2078.

Manitoba Public Schools Bill.

1<sup>o</sup> and 2<sup>o</sup>, 2486; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2529.

Map of Route of Pacific Railway.

Remarks, 2348.

MASSON, Mr.

Points of Order, 47, 892, 943.
 Official Reporting of the Debates, 17, 531.
 Insolvency Law Repeal, 18.
 The Address, 39.
 Personal Explanation, 167.
 North-West Boundary of Ontario, 352.
 Admission of Canadian Ships into French Ports, 365.
 Fort Francis Locks, 366.
 W. B. O'Donoghue, 366.
 Case of Judge Loranger, 369, 526, 529.
 Number of Members in Parliament, 423.
 Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 505.
 Visit of Governor General to B. C., 515, 521.

MASSON, Mr.—Con.

Pacific Railway Survey, 598.
 Alleged Piché Letter, 709, 710.
 The Tariff, 890, 939.
 Better Translation of B. N. A. Act, 1088.
 Supply, 1138, 1139, 1140, 1144, 1147, 1148, 1150, 1154, 1160, 1826, 1829.
 Independence of Parliament Bill, 1228, 1328, 1352.
 Losses by Floods, 1273.
 Winter Navigation of the St. Lawrence, 1286.
 Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 1306.
 Questions of Privilege, 1315, 1844, 1868.
 Importation of Malt, 1361.
 Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 1386, 1396.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1395, 1400, 1810, 1908.
 Deckloads Acts Amendment Bill, 1406.
 Customs Entries of Railway Rolling Stock, 1418.
 Montreal City and District Savings Bank, 1420.
 Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 1476.
 Colonization Railway Bill, 1491.
 Business of the House, 1507.
 Homestead Exemption Bill, 1527.
 The Case of Sergeant Hart, 1556.
 Attendance of Voters' Bill, 1582.
 Offices of Receiver-General and Attorney-General Bill, 1613.
 Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1678, 2459.
 The Tariff, 1772, 1817.
 Canada Central Railway Company, 2489.

Matane and Fox River Telegraph Line.

Motion for Correspondence, 1579.

Matane Harbour, Survey of.

Motion for Papers, 393.

MCCALLUM, Mr.

The Address, 200.
 Welland Canal Contracts, 715.
 The Budget, 787.
 Distribution of Old Rails, 987.
 Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1225.
 Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1676.
 The Agricultural Interests, 1726.
 The Tariff, 1728.
 Supply, 2082, 2088, 2140, 2223, 2250, 2253, 3291, 2303—2306, 2378—2384, 2482, 2525.
 Fort William Extension, 2142.
 The Coal Interests, 2177.
 Government Officials in Elections, 2242.
 System of Letting Contracts, 2274.
 Pacific Railway, 2451.
 Supplementary Estimates, 2482, 2525.
 Canada Central Railway Company, 2508.

MCCARTHY, Mr.

The Budget, 534.
 Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 613.
 Welland Canal Contracts, 656.
 Kingston Election Petition Bill, 886.
 Independence of Parliament Bill, 1244.
 Hockley Post Office Mails, 953.
 Hugh Hunter Divorce Bill, 1427, 1524, 1609.
 Controverted Election Acts Consolidation Bill, 1454.
 Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 1477, 1511.
 Homestead Exemption Bill, 1521.
 Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, 1551.
 Harbour Master at Collingwood, 1640.

McCARTHY, Mr.—Con.

The Loan of 1876, 1851, 2158.
 Names and Salaries of Officials, 2067, 2354, 2364.
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 2074, 2117.
 Supply, 2142, 2199, 2222, 2250—2252, 2330.
 Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2157.
 Government Officials in Elections, 2244.
 Intercolonial Railway, 2330.
 Canada Central Railway Company, 2505.
 The Government Financial Policy, 2519.

McCRANEY, Mr.

Observance of the Lord's Day, 731.
 Mails from Hamilton to Barrie, 952.
 Indian Education in Ontario, 1072.
 The Tariff, 1789.

McDONALD, Mr. (Cape Breton).

Breakwater at Main-à-Dieu, 388.
 Survey of Lingan Harbour, 722.
 Extra Postal Service, 952.
 Railway through Cape Breton, 952.
 The Tariff, 1063.
 Conveyance of Mails in Cape Breton, 1576.
 Quarantine Hospital at Sydney, C.B., 1576.
 Dismissal of Shipping Officer at Little Glace Bay, C.B., 1577.
 Removal of Postmaster at Cow Bay, C.B., 1577.
 Dismissal of Agent of Government Savings Bank, Glace Bay, C.B., 1577.
 Dismissal of D. McDonald, 1577.
 Dismissal of James Corbell, 1577.
 Dismissal of J. Cadigan, 1578.
 Post Office Affairs, Victoria, C.B., 1578.
 Supply, 2052, 2214, 2283—2285, 2288.
 Cow Bay Breakwater, 2154.
 The Coal Interests, 2168.
 Ingonish Harbour Contract, 2203.

McDOUGALL, Mr. (South Renfrew).

Square Timber Culler's Pensions, 990.
 Quillers Remuneration, 1073.
 Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 1511.
 Homestead Exemption Bill, 1515.
 Brockville and Ottawa Railway Companies Bill, 1543, 1653.
 Attendance of Voters Bill, 1582.
 Supply, 1824, 2295.
 Canada Central and Georgian Bay Branch Railways, 1848.
 Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2156.
 Tolls on the Upper Ottawa, 2349.

McDOUGALL, Mr. (Three Rivers).

Questions of Privilege, 1312, 2060.
 Independence of Parliament Bill, 1331.
 Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1442.
 Offices of Receiver-General and Attorney-General Bill, 1614.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1974, 1978.
 Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2070.

McGREGOR, Mr.

The Budget, 1070
 Supply, 1810, 2223.
 The Coal Interests, 2136.

McINNES, Mr.

Supply, 2094, 2291.
 Pacific Railway (B.C. Terminus), 2142.
 British Columbia Penitentiary, 2143.
 Fraser River Salmon Hatchery, 2143.
 Pacific Railway, 2540.

McINTYRE, Mr.

The Northern Light, 400.
 The Tariff, 1793.

McKAY, Mr. (Colchester).

Observance of the Lord's Day, 727.
 Dismissal of Train Despatcher at Truro, 1575.
 Colchester and Cumberland Oyster Beds Lease, 1578.
 Forbes' Claim on Intercolonial, 1646.
 Supply, 2099, 2114.
 Oka Indians, 2114.

McNAB, Mr.

Montreal and Ottawa Junction Railway Co. Bill, 1384, 1427, 1660.
 Supply, 2046.

McQUADE, Mr.

Meat Importations from United States, 1084
 The Tariff, 1633.

Measurements of Shipping.

Question, 2056.

MEETING OF PARLIAMENT, 1.*Merchants' Bank of Canada Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 486; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1093.

Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Bill.

1<sup>o</sup> proposed, 1219; 1<sup>o</sup>, 1407; 2<sup>o</sup>, ; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2036.

Messages from His Excellency.

The Estimates, 372.
 Appointment of Internal Commission, 387.
 Reply to the Address, 427.
 Imperial Extradition Act of 1870, 427.
 Bills assented to, 2033.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1380, 1395, 1760.
 Supplementary Estimates, 2408.
 British Territories in North America, 2384.
 Further Supplementary Estimates, 2489.

METHOT, Mr.

The Address, 172.
 Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1451.
 Rate of Interest Bill, 1863.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1979
 Question of Privilege, 2066.

Military Bridges at Lévis.

Motion for Return, 388.

Military Camp of Instruction.

Question, 570.

Military College, Kingston.

Motion for Return, 735.

Military Schools, N.B.

Motion for Return, 981.

Militia Service.

Question, 951.

Militia Veterans, Death of.

Motion for Return, 426.

MILLS, Mr.

Report of Department of Interior, 347.
Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 427, 1262, 1384, 1396.
Colonization Railway Bill, 567, 1478.
Minors' Lands in Manitoba, 623.
Dominion Lands Office, Manitoba, 713.
North-West Mounted Police, 722.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 802, 1512, 2006.
Conflicting Claims Bill, 951, 1401, 2078.
Transfer of Lands and Estates Bill, 951.
Ordinance Lands, 965.
Indian Education in Ontario, 1072.
Welland Canal Contracts, 1104.
Supply, 1138, 1144, 1152—1156, 2104—2115, 2141, 2368, 2376, 2479, 2528, 2543.
Audit of Public Accounts Bill, 1218.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 1241, 1330, 1354, 2552.
Indian Agent at Tobique Reserve, 1554.
John Reid Land Claims, 1648.
Life Assurance Policies Bill, 1671.
Cartridges for N. W. Superintendency, 1845.
Ordinance Lands in Soulanges, 1845.
Acquisition of N. W. Unceded Territory, 1845.
Question of Privilege, 2966.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 2074, 2163.
Manitoba Land Claims Bill, 2079.
Oka Indians, 2109, 2479.
Government Officials in Elections, 2243.
Names and Salaries of Officials, 2359.
Northerly Boundaries of Canada, 2386, 2392.
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2405.
Manitoba Public Schools Bill, 2486, 2529.
Supplementary Estimates, 2479, 2528.
Pacific Railway, 2543.

Mineral Waters Bottles Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 531; Order for 2<sup>o</sup> discharged, 1639.

Minister of Militia.

Personal Explanations, 803.

Minors' Lands in Manitoba.

Motion for Return, 622.

Miramichi Valley Railway.

Question, 569.

Missing Papers.

Explanation, 1407.

MITCHELL, Mr.

Questions of Privilege, 11, 1314, 1539.
Personal Explanations, 12, 863.
Rivière du Loup Branch, G. T. R., 359.
Admission of Canadian Ships into French Ports, 361.
Number of Members in Parliament, 424.

MITCHELL, Mr.—Con.

Deepening Miramichi Channel, 485.
Communication with West Indies, 494.
Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 505.
Governor-General's Visit to B. C., 510, 522.
Grand Trunk Railway Co. Bill, 531, 682, 1290, 1394.
Official Reporting of the Debates, 532, 2340.
Imperfect Returns, 533, 1304.
Miramichi Valley Railway, 569.
Telegraph Line from Chatham, 569.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 861, 2013.
Newcastle and Chatham Mails, 952.
Distribution of Old Rails, 931, 984, 987, 988.
Supply, 1137, 1200, 1818, 1826, 1827, 1829, 1835, 1839, 1840, 2052, 2054, 2090, 2098—2108, 2115, 2197—2201, 2213, 2225, 2281—2283, 2294—2303, 2307, 2370, 2378.
Merchant Shipping Act Amendment, 1219.
Deckloads Act Amendment Bill, 1220, 1403, 1505.
Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1222, 1224, 1318, 1457.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 1238.
Railway Acts Extension (P. E. I.) Bill, 1261.
Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1263, 1705.
Lands Damaged by Water, 1268.
Damages to Mills, 1269.
Fish-breeding Establishment at Miramichi, 1274.
Winter Navigation of the St. Lawrence, 1285.
Importation of Malt, 1361.
Canada Southern Railway Co. Bill, 1383.
Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 1389, 1399.
Pilots Act Amendment, 1396.
Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1452.
Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 1471.
Colonization Railway Bill, 1485.
Business of the House, 1508.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 1513.
Rideau Hall, 1581.
Supreme Court Business, 1532.
Attendance of Voters Bill, 1593.
The Auditor-General, 1594.
Offices of Receiver-General and Attorney-General Bill, 1585, 1611, 1812.
The Governor-General, 1639.
Rebate of Duties, 1642.
Better Translation of B. N. A. Act, 1633.
Mineral Waters Bottles Bill, 1668.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1679.
Audit of Public Accounts Bill, 1709.
Personal Explanation, 2000.
Rivière du Loup Branch, G. T. R., 2064.
Malt Duty Bill, 2035.
Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2069, 2157.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 2075, 2119, 2161.
Oka Indians, 2115.
Foreign Trawls off Nova Scotia, 2154.
The Coal Interests, 2166.
Government Officials in Elections, 2216, 2241.
Printing Committee Reports, 2344.
Northerly Boundaries of Canada, 2386, 2392.
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2406.

Money Paid to British Columbia.

Motion for Return, 373.

Montmagny, Postmaster at.

Motion for Papers, 961.

Montreal and Champlain Junction Railway Company Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 531; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1266.

Montreal and City of Ottawa Junction Railway Company Bill.1<sup>o</sup>, 1384; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1427; Com. 1660; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1663.*Montreal City and District Savings Bank.*Motion for Return, 1419.
Adjourned Debate, 1666.Montreal Investment and Building Company Bill.1<sup>o</sup>, 1807; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1860; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2212.Morpeth, Projected Harbour near.

Motion for Return, 367.

Motions of Want of Confidence.

Speaker's Ruling, 946.

Motions to Adjourn.

Remarks, 567, 740, 937.

MOUSSEAU, Mr.Insolvency Law Repeal, 19.
The Address, 78.
Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 605.
The Budget, 809.
Supreme Court Act Amendment Bill, 2551.Muir Post Office.

Motion for Correspondence, 1418.

*Names and Salaries of Officials.*Motion for Return, 2067.
Adjourned Debate Resumed, 2353.Nanaimo and New Westminster Mail Service.

Motion for Correspondence, 1557.

National Insurance Company Bill,1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 485; Com., 1206; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1290.Native Tobacco Duties.

Amendment to Supply, 2122.

Navigation of Saskatchewan River.

Motion for Report, 954.

Neebing Hotel.

Question, 1207.

New Brunswick Military Schools.

Motion for Return, 961.

New Campbellton Custom House.

Motion for Papers, 724.

New Campbellton Post Office.

Motion for Papers, 725.

Newcastle and Chatham Mails.

Question, 952.

*New Members, Election of. 2.New Members Introduced, 2, 13, 1932.NORRIS, Mr.Personal Explanation, 167.
Welland Canal Contract, 715.
The Budget, 792.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 1257.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1693.
Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2070.
Welland Canal Improvements, 2151.
Supply, 2222."Northern Light."

Motion for Accounts, 395.

Northerly Boundaries of Canada.

Resolutions Considered in Committee, 2386.

Northern Railway Commission.

Motion for Return, 724.

Northern Railway Company Bill.1<sup>o</sup>, 531; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; Com., 1290; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1380.Northern Railway Bonds.

Notice of Motion, 2005.

Northern Railway Company.

Resolution Proposed, 2038.

North River Navigation.

Question, 1407.

Northumberland, Seat for.

Personal Explanation, 12.

North-West Boundary of Ontario.

Question, 352.

North-West Mounted Police and Indians.

Motion for Copies of Tenders, 721.

North-West, Surveys in the.

Motion for Report, 954.

Notices of Motion.

Enquiry, 740.

Notre Dame de Laterrière, Mail to.

Question, 387.

Number of Members in Parliament.

Resolution proposed, 420.

*Observance of the Lord's Day.*Resolution Proposed, 727.
Amendment Offered, 731.O'Donoghue, W. B.

Motion for Orders-in-Council, 366.

Official Reporting of the Debates.

Remarks, 16, 531.
Committee Appointed, 16.
Report Concarred in, 409.
Motion to adopt Report, 2344.

Oka Indians.

Debate in Supply, 2108, 2475.

Old Rails, Distribution of.

Motion for Correspondence, 968.

OLIVER, Mr.

Express Freight on Government Railways, 355.
Public Works Chargeable to Capital, 356.
Ontario Express Company Bill, 369, 485, 1860, 1945.
The Budget, 676, 684.
Expenditure on Public Works, 722.
Montreal and Ottawa Junction Railway Co. Bill, 1660.
Mineral Waters Bottles Bill, 1668.
Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1705.
The Tariff, 1731.
The Coal Interests, 2175.
Names and Salaries of Officials, 2361.

Ontario Express Company Bill.

1°, 369; 2°, 485; Com., 1860; 3°, 1945.

Ontario Maritime Court Bill.

1°, 1204; 2° and 3°, 1506.

Ontario Mutual Life Insurance Company Bill.

1°, 369; 2°, 486; Com., 1206; 3°, 1290.

OPENING OF PARLIAMENT.

Speech from the Throne, 14.

Ordnance Lands.

Motion for Return, 965.

Ordnance Lands in Soulanges.

Question, 1845.

ORTON, Mr.

The Address, 274.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 1346.
Importation of Malt, 1367.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1678.
The Agricultural Interests, 1709.
Supply, 1837.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1983.
Question of Privilege, 2064.
System of Letting Contracts, 2270.
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2485.
Questions of Privilege, 1313, 2061.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 1328, 2039.
Montreal City and District Savings Bank, 1421.
Life Assurance Policies Bill, 1672.

OUMET, Mr.

Rate of Interest Bill, 1862.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1987.
Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 2037.
Canada Central Railway Company, 2503.

Overpayments by Steamboats.

Question, 486.

PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Annual Statement (Mr. Mackenzie),
2413.

British Columbia Terminus.

Motion for Reports and Correspondence,
366.
Question, 2142.

Construction.

Question, 408.
Motion for Return, 618.

Contract 15.

Motion for Papers, 724.

Contract 25.

Motion for Papers, 724.

Expenditure on.

Motion for Statement, 722.

Fort William Extension.

Question, 2142.

Lands.

Motion for Return, 718.

Map of Route.

Remarks, 2348.

Nepigon and Thunder Bay Branch.

Motion for Report, 2,143.

Pembina Branch.

Questions, 355, 2143, 2349.
Motion for Copy of Tenders, 721.

Red River and Battleford Survey.

Motion for Papers, 570.

Red River Crossing.

Question, 1072.

Route.

Question, 833.

Route in British Columbia.

Motion for Return, 495.

Supplies.

Question, 2056.

Supply of Spikes.

Motion for Return, 718

PALMER, Mr.

Communication with West Indies, 493.
Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 508.

PALMER, Mr.—*Con.

- Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 602, 1310.
 Port Whitby Harbour Co. Bill 683.
 Law relating to larceny of things attached to or growing on Land Bill, 740.
 The Tariff, 937, 942, 991, 1741.
 Supply, 1133, 1188, 1189, 1190, 1192, 1193, 1839, 1840, 2082, 2092.
 Independence of Parliament Bill, 1252, 1707.
 Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1265.
 Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1317, 1343, 1459.
 Deckloads Act Amendment Bill, 1404.
 Duties collected at St. John, N.B., 1412.
 Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 1472, 1511.
 Homestead Exemption Bill, 1514, 1528.
 Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 1541.
 Brockville and Ottawa Railway Co. Bill, 1549.
 Offices of Receiver-General and Attorney-General Bill, 1602.
 Law of Evidence Amendment Bill, 1866.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1957.
 Question of Privilege, 2066.
 Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2072.
 Manitoba Land Claims Bill, 2079.
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 2120.
 La Banque Nationale, 2147.
 Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2155.

Paris Exhibition, Expenses of Canada at.

- Motion for Return, 1419.

Parliament, Number of Members in.

- Resolution Proposed, 420.

PATERSON, Mr.

- The Address, 228.
 The Budget, 552.
 Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1268, 1706.
 Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1446.
 Native Tobacco Duties, 2139.

Payment of Labourers on Public Works.

- Question, 352.

Payments for Land for Canal Purposes.

- Motion for Return, 1408.

Payments for Printing.

- Motion for Return, 356.
 Motion to refer Return, 529, 1271.

Pembina Branch of Pacific Railway.

- Question, 355.
 Motion for Copy of Tenders, 721.

Pembina Branch Railway Crossing.

- Question, 2143.

Pembina Branch, Tenders for Completion of.

- Question, 2349.

Penitentiaries Act Amendment Bill.

- 1<sup>o</sup>, 1637.

Pensioners, Dominion.

- Question, 563.

Pensions for Public Officers.

- Motion for Correspondence, 1211.

Permanent and Extra Clerks and Messengers.

- Motion for Statement, 2150.

Permissive Liquor Bill.

- Question, 952.

PERRY, Mr.

- The Address, 299.
 The Northern Light, 395.
 The Budget, 1062.
 Cascumpec Harbour, 1562.
 Fences on P.E.I. Railway, 1563.
 Winter Navigation of the St. Lawrence, 1665.
 The Tariff, 1793.
 Cascumpec Harbour, 2055.

Petitions of Right.

- Motion for Return, 1558.

Petitions.

- Private Bills, 348.
 From Foreigners—Speaker's Ruling, 348.
 From Aliens, 950.
 From Township of Temiscouata, 1163.

Philadelphia Exhibition Expenses.

- Motion for Return, 419.

Piché Letter, Alleged.

- Question, 708.

Pictou Branch Railway.

- Motion for Correspondence, 1579.

Pilotage Acts Amendment.

- Notice of Motion, 1395.

Pine River Pass Survey.

- Motion for Reports, 1076.

PLATT, Mr.

- The Coal Interests, 2193.

PLUMB, Mr.

- The Address, 146, 154.
 Railway Iron Return, 253, 372.
 The Northern Light, 405.
 Duty on Malt, 407.
 Official Reporting of the Debates, 410.
 Personal Explanation, 495.
 Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 509.
 Governor-General's Visit to B.C., 522.
 Payments for Printing, 530.
 Pacific Railway Survey, 585.
 Welland Canal Contracts, 638, 714.
 The Budget, 707, 741.
 Pacific Railway Lands, 718.

PLUMB, MR.—*Con.

Observance of the Lord's Day, 731, 733.
 Supply, 1140, 1152, 1158, 1162, 1178, 1179, 1187, 1200, 1202, 1824, 1826, 1829, 1838, 1840, 2051, 2052, 2094, 2109, 2220, 2298, 2363, 2467, 2528.
 Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1225.
 Independence of Parliament Bill, 1253.
 Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1264, 1707.
 Canada Southern Railway Co. Bill, 1297.
 Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 1389, 1397.
 Duties Collected at St. John, N.B., 1413.
 Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1453.
 Post-Office Act Amendment Bill, 1473.
 Colonization Railway Bill, 1497.
 Homestead Exemption Bill, 1522, 1526.
 Question of Privilege, 1539.
 Dismissal of Train Despatcher at Truro, 1575.
 Offices of Receiver-General and Attorney-General Bill, 1620.
 Rebate of Duties, 1641.
 Montreal and Ottawa Junction Railway Co. Bill, 1660.
 Life Assurance Policies Bill, 1673.
 Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1677.
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 1845, 2119.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1974.
 Question of Privilege, 2063.
 Native Tobacco Duties, 2137.
 Welland Canal Improvements, 2152.
 The Loan of, 1876, 2159.
 The Coal Interests, 2190.
 System of Letting Contracts, 2263.
 Ventilation of the Chamber, 2366.
 Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2401.
 Pacific Railway, 2433.
 Canada Central Railway Co., 2497.
 Supplementary Estimates, 2467, 2528.
 The Government Financial Policy, 2520.
 Ballot Papers, 2549.

Points of Order.

The Address, 47, 152, 153, 197, 337.
 Governor General's Visit to B.C., 520, 521.
 Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 502.
 Harbour Works at Sorel, 593.
 The Budget, 808, 820, 892, 935, 936, 942, 1017.
 Distribution of Old Rails, 971, 987.
 Welland Canal Contracts, 1102.
 Questions by Members, 1269.
 The Tariff, 1779.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1976.
 The Coal Interests, 2192.
 Official Reporting of the Debates, 2347.
 Question of Privilege, 2502.

POPE, MR. (Compton).

Boundary Line—Upper and Lower Canada, 392.
 Expenses at Philadelphia Exhibition, 419.
 Expenses at Sydney Exhibition, 419.
 Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 510.
 Visit of Governor General to B.C., 521.
 Welland Canal Contracts, 635.
 Supply, 1150, 1181, 1182, 1831, 1837, 2025, 2030, 2104, 2106, 2295, 2369, 2473.
 Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1226.
 Independence of Parliament Bill, 1344.
 Expenses of Canada at Paris Exhibition, 1419.
 Colonization Railway Bill, 1495.
 Business of the House, 1509.
 Homestead Exemption Bill, 1525.
 London (England) Emigration Agent, 1552.
 Life Assurance Policies Bill, 1672.
 Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1676.

POPE, MR. (Compton)—*Con.

The Tariff, 1816.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1999.
 Independence of Parliament Bill, 2040.
 Question of Privilege, 2065.
 Manitoba Land Claims Bill, 2079.
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 2118.
 Supplementary Estimates, 2473.

POPE, MR. (Queen's, P.E.I.),

The Address, 240.
 The Northern Light, 400.
 Victoria Harbour Breakwater, 965.
 The Tariff, 1067, 1783.
 Winter Navigation of the St. Lawrence, 1282.
 Importation of Malt, 1372.
 Winter Communication with P.E.I., 1552.
 Cascumpec Harbour, 1562.
 Fences on P.E.I. Railway, 1564.
 Pictou Branch Railway, 1579.
 Supply, 2029.

Port Hastings Mail Service.

Motion for Papers, 965.

Portland Channel, Admiralty Survey of.

Motion for Return, 964.

Port Whitby Harbour Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 387; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1660.

Postal Facilities at Lavalle Corners.

Question, 2056.

Postal Service, King's County, N.B.

Question, 711.

Postal Service, Perth, N.B.

Motion for Copies of Petitions, 726.

Postmaster at Montmagny.

Motion for Papers, 961.

Post-Office Act Amendment Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 386; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1258; Com., 1464; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1511.

Post Office Affairs at Victoria, C.B.

Motion for Correspondence, 1578.

Post Office, New Campbellton.

Motion for Papers, 725.

POULIOT, MR.

The Address, 280.
 Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 498, 500.
 Official Reporting of the Debates, 531.
 Port Whitby Harbour Company Bill, 683.
 Supply, 1149.
 Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1222, 1227, 1321, 1462.
 Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 1542.
 The Tariff, 1785.

Prince Edward Island Railway, Fences on.

Motion for Correspondence, 1563.

Printing Committee.

Message to the Senate, 363.
 Motion to adopt Reports, 2201, 2342, 2385.
 Reports Concurred in, 2253.

Private Bills, Reception of.

Motion to Extend Time, 368.

Private Bills, Reports of.

Motions for Extension of time, 1219, 1636.

Projected Harbour near Morpeth

Motion for Returns, 367.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.

Communication from His Excellency, 2550.
 His Excellency's Address to Both Houses, 2565.

Public Accounts.

Referred to Committee, 484.

Public Accounts Committee.

Sutherland Report Presented, 2201.

Public Works Act Amendment Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1221; Com., 1317; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1457.

Public Works Chargeable to Capital.

Motion for Return, 356.

Public Works, Expenditure on.

Motion for Return, 722.

Pugwash Branch Railway Bill.

Motion for Papers, 1571.

Quarantine Hospital at Sydney, C.B.

Motion for Correspondence, 1576.

Quebec and Chicoutimi Mails.

Motion for Correspondence, 712.

Quebec and Murray Bay Mails.

Motion for Returns, 382.

Quebec and Three Rivers Mails.

Question, 355.

Quebec Building Societies Act.

Bill in amendment proposed, 2226.

Quebec Cullers' Office.

Motion for Correspondence, 1557.

Quebec Fire Assurance Company Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 407; 2<sup>o</sup>, 486; Com., 1206; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1290

Quebec Marine, District of.

Motion for List of Employés, 738.

Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway.

Question, 1207.

Quebec Provincial Crisis.

Personal Explanation, 863.
 Messages from His Excellency, 1380, 1395, 1760.
 Remarks, 1399.
 Question, 1408.
 Proposed Notice of Motion, 1807.
 Debate Adjourned, 1932, 2000.
 Adjourned Debate Resumed, 1933, 2013.

Questions by Members.

Remarks, 1269.

Questions of Privilege.

Press Correspondence, 1311, 1536, 1867, 2057.
 Precedence, 1842.
 Personal Explanation, 2558.

Race Rocks Fog-Whistle.

Question, 569.

Rails for N.B. Railroads.

Question, 951.

Railway Act Extension (P.E.I.) Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 708; 2<sup>o</sup> and 3<sup>o</sup>, 1262.

Railway Passenger Safety Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 663.

Railways, Accidents on.

Motion for Return, 406.

Railway through Cape Breton.

Question, 952.

Rate of Interest Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 350; Order for 2<sup>o</sup> negatived, 1865.

Re-adjustment of the Tariff.

Amendment to Supply, 854.

Rebate of Duties on American Goods.

Motion for Statement, 1641.

Receipts and Expenditure.

Statement, 427.

Receiver-General and Attorney-General Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 1204; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1584; Com., 1611; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1811.

Reception of Private Bills.

Motion to Extend Time, 369.

Reciprocity with the United States.

Question, 352, 353.
 Motion for Correspondence, 367.

Recognition of Naturalized Subjects.

Question, 1551.

Red and Assiniboine Rivers.

Question, 487.

Red River Improvements.

Question, 2057.

Regular Baptist Foreign Missionary Society Bill.

1° and 2°, 1206; 3°, 1523.

Regulations, Coasting.

Question, 387.

Reid Land Claims.

Motion for Correspondence, 1647.

Re-measurement of Steam Vessels.

Motion for Returns, 1073.

Removal of Intercolonial Railway Assistant Superintendent.

Motion for Correspondence, 1572.

Removal of Postmaster at Cow Bay, C.B.

Motion for Correspondence, 1577.

Removal of Stipendiary Magistrate at Nanaimo.

Motion for Return, 2350.

Remuneration of Cullers.

Question, 1073.

Repairs to Military Bridges at Lévis.

Motion for Return, 388.

Repeal of Duty on Native Tobacco.

Question, 355.

Reply to the Address.

Message from His Excellency, 427.

Reports.

Librarian of Parliament, 16.
 Accountant, House of Commons, 16.
 Public Works, 347.
 Marine and Fisheries, 347.
 Interior, 347.
 Public Accounts, 347.
 Penitentiaries, 348.
 Trade and Navigation, 349.
 Postmaster General, 348.
 Inland Revenue, 348.
   Supplement No. 1, 348.
   Supplement No. 2, Weights and Measures, 348.
   Supplement No. 3, Adulteration of Food, 348.
 Militia, 348.

Reports on Private Bills.

Extension of Time, 1219.

Resident Judge of Sorel.

Question, 1407.

Return of Government Advertisements.

Remarks, 532.

Returns.

Railway Iron, 253.
 Rondeau Harbour, 1304.

Revision of the Dominion Statutes.

Question, 353.

Richelieu District Superior Court Judge.

Question, 352.

Rideau Hall.

Motion for Statement, 1531.

River Richelieu, St. John's Bridge.

Motion for Correspondence, 1273.

Rivers in Quebec, Leases of.

Motion for Return, 718.

River St. Charles Improvements.

Motion for Statement, 1211.

River Sydenham Improvements.

Question, 354.

Rivière du Loup Branch G.T.R.

Motion for Return, 357.
 Motion for Correspondence, 366.
 Government Notice of Motion, 2002.

ROBILLARD, Mr.

Beauharnois Canal Enlargement, 1551.

ROBINSON, Mr.

The Address.
 Welland Canal Contracts, 650.
 Homestead Exemption Bill, 1516.
 The Coal Interests, 2171.
 Supply, 2376.
 Canada Central Railway Company, 2511.

ROBITAILLE, Mr.

The Northern Light, 404.
 Claims on Inter-colonial Railway, 501.
 Bay of Chaleurs Railway, 568, 711.
 Supply, 1174, 1177, 1178, 2528
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 2077.
 Supplementary Estimates, 2523.

ROCHESTER, Mr.

Welland Canal Contracts, 632, 637.
 Supply, 1166, 1167, 1168, 1173, 2213, 2224, 2296, 2301, 2477.
 Importation of Malt, 1363
 Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1445.
 Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 1542, 2037.
 Montreal and Ottawa Junction Railway Co. Bill, 1663.
 The Tariff, 1785.
 Seizure of Boswell's Brewery, 1846
 Malt Duty Bill, 2035.
 La Banque Nationale, 2144.
 Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2464.
 Oka Indians, 2477.
 Supplementary Estimates, 2477.

ROSCOE, Mr.

Pine River Pass Survey, 1081.
Supply, 2291.

Ross, Mr. (East Durham).

The Tariff, 1627.

Ross, Mr. (Prince Edward).

Government Officials in Elections, 2241.
Supply, 2370.

Ross, Mr. (West Middlesex).

Official Reporting of the Debates, 16, 17,
409, 531, 2344.
Printing Committee — Message sent to Senate, 368.
Intercolonial Railway, 510.
Observance of the Lord's Day, 732.
The Budget, 825.
Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1264.
Question of Privilege, 1314.
Colonization Railway Bill, 1501.
General Railways Act Amendment Bill,
1636.
Printing Committee Reports, 2201, 2253,
2342, 2385.
Supply, 2300.
Names and Salaries of Officials, 2355.
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2393.

ROULEAU, Mr.

Mail Service in Lévis and Dorchester, 725.
Supply, 1177.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1929.

Royal Navy Cadets.

Motion for Address, 1557.

ROY, Mr.

The Address, 285.
Grant for Veteran Militiamen, 355.
Isle Brulée Wharf, 568, 712.
Conveyance of Kamouraska Mails, 951.
Kamouraska and St. Pascal Mail Service,
1569.
Intercolonial Railway Valuations, 2154.

RYAN, Mr.

Pacific Railway Construction, 463.
Pacific Railway Survey, 575, 569.
Expenditure on Pacific Railway, 722.
Surveys in the North-West, 955, 959.
Supply, 1179.
Conflicting Claims Bill, 1401, 2079.
The Manitoba Troubles, 1418.
Colonization Railway Bill, 1481.
Lots on Assiniboine River, 1578.
John Reid Land Claims, 1647.
Point of Order, 1652.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1687,
2456.
Tenders for Completion of Pembina Branch,
2349.

RYMAL, Mr.

Reception of Private Bills, 368.
Distribution of Old Rails, 985.
The Tariff, 1760, 1797.

Saguenay, Improvements on the.

Question, 373.

Saskatchewan River, Navigation of.

Motion for Report, 954.

Saturday Sittings.

Motion, 2072.

Schools of Gunnery.

Motion for Return, 1578.

SCHULTZ, Mr.

Pembina Branch of Pacific Railway, 355.
Minors' Lands in Manitoba, 622.
Dominion Lands Office in Manitoba, 712.
St. Paul and Pacific Railway, 950, 1072.
Transportation of Rails, 951.
Red River Crossing, Pacific Railway, 1072.
Transportation of Rails, 1207.
Colonization Railway Bill, 1501.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 1515.
John Reid Land Claims, 1652.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1679.
Drill Sheds in Manitoba, 1845.
Cartridges for N. W. Superintendency, 1845.
Acquisition of N. W. Unceded Territory,
1845.
Supply, 2031, 2052, 2141, 2199.
Dallas and Stonewall Postal Facilities, 2056.
Red River Improvements, 2057.
Conflicting Claims Bill, 2078.
Pembina Branch Railway Crossings, 2143.

SCRIVER, Mr.

Montreal and Champlain Junction Railway
Co. Bill, 531, 682, 1206.
Uniform Copper Currency, 953.
Rebate of Duties, 1644.
Supply, 2371, 2475.
Oka Indians, 2475, 2480.
Supplementary Estimates, 2475.

Seat for Lincoln.

Personal Explanation, 167.

Seat for Northumberland, 12Section 12 Intercolonial Railway.

Motion for Papers, 1610.

Seizure of Boswell's Brewery.

Motion for Papers, 1846.

Select Standing Committee.

Motion, 15.
Motion for Special Committee, 347.
Report Presented and Concurring in, 319.
Lists Concurring in, 363.

Services of Wm. Taylor, of Coteau du Lac.

Motion for Return, 388, 1269.

Shorthand Writers, Employment of.

Motion and Remarks, 407.

SINCLAIR, Mr.

The Address, 170.
 The Northern Light, 397.
 Victoria Harbour Breakwater, 967.
 Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1326.
 Fences on P. E. I. Railway, 1565.
 The Tariff, 1788.
 Supply, 2081, 2214, 2287.
 Election Act Amendment Bill, 2119.

Sitting Bull, Expenses on Account of.

Question, 336.

SMITH, Mr. (Peel).

Canada Vine Growers Association Bill, 708, 2069.
 The Agricultural Interests, 1719.

SMITH, Mr. (Selkirk).

Red and Assiniboine Rivers, 487.
 Governor-General's Visit to B. C., 525.
 Pacific Railway Survey, 590.
 Navigation of Saskatchewan River, 954.
 Surveys in the North-West, 954, 958.
 Colonization Railway Bill, 1493.
 Homestead Exemption Bill, 1518.
 John Reid Land Claims, 1650.
 Life Assurance Policies Bill, 1672.
 Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1682.
 Supply, 1825.
 Northernly Boundaries of Canada, 2392.
 Question of Privilege, 2558.

SMITH, Sir Albert J.

Marine and Fisheries Report, 347.
 Breakwater at Rondeau, 354.
 Coasting Regulations, 388.
 The Northern Light, 402.
 Overpayments by Steamboats, 486.
 St. John Harbour Commission, 568.
 Fog Whistle on Race Rocks, 569.
 Leases of Rivers in Quebec, 720.
 Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Bill, 1219, 1407, 2036.
 Fish Breeding Establishment at Miramichi, 1274.
 Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1319.
 Independence of Parliament, 1328, 1345.
 Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 1389.
 Pilotage Acts Amendment, 1395.
 Deck Loads Act Amendment Bill, 1220, 1403, 1505.
 Fishing in Rivers Rimouski and Metis, 1418.
 Charges against Marine Agent, B. C., 1846.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1998.
 Measurements of Shipping, 2056.
 Red River Improvements, 2057.
 Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2072.
 Supply, 2081, 2103, 2218, 2289, 2481.
 Fraser River Salmon Hatchery, 2143.
 Foreign Trawls off Nova Scotia, 2154.
 Supplementary Estimates, 2481.

SNIDER, Mr.

Dominion Grangers' Bill, 387, 682, 708.

Societe de Construction du Comte d'Hochelaga Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 1163; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1206; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1859.

Societe de Construction Mutuelle Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 486: Considered in Committee, 951; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1092.

Sorel Harbour Works.

Remarks, 593.

Speaker, Election of.

Motion, 2.

Personal Explanation, 167.

SPEAKER, Mr.

Election as Speaker, 12.
 Seat for Northumberland, 12.
 Controverted Election, 13.
 New Members, 13, 1867.
 Report, 16.
 Insolvency Law Repeal, 19.
 Points of Order, 47, 152, 153, 197, 337, 521, 593, 808, 820, 832, 935, 936, 942, 945, 971, 978, 987, 1017, 1102, 1269, 1652, 1779, 1872, 1976, 2068, 2191.
 Unparliamentary Expressions, 195, 197, 265, 524, 630, 777, 790, 1017.
 Relevant Testimony, 102, 152.
 Petitions for Private Bills, 348.
 Petitions for Foreigners—Ruling, 347.
 Messages from His Excellency, 373, 387, 427, 2408, 2384.
 Hour of Adjournment, 393.
 Boundary Line—Upper and Lower Canada, 390.
 Employment of Shorthand Writers, 407.
 Case of Judge Loranger, 526, 529.
 Payments for Printing, 531.
 Alleged Piché Letter, 709, 711.
 Observance of the Lord's Day, 733.
 Hochelaga Building Society Bill, 801.
 Quebec Provincial Crisis, 864, 1380, 1395, 1400, 1760, 1976.
 The Budget, 941, 942, 945, 946.
 Want of Confidence Motion, 946.
 Petitions from Aliens, 950.
 Victoria Harbour Breakwater, 966.
 Township of Temiscouata—Ruling, 1163.
 Supply, 1197, 1820, 1821, 1822, 2082, 2099, 2216, 2282, 2286.
 Questions of Privilege, 1315, 1844, 1869, 2056.
 Northern Railway Company Bill, 1380.
 Missing Papers, 1407.
 Montreal City and District Savings Bank, 1423.
 Attendance of Voters' Bill, 1583.
 Canadian Southern Railway Company Bill, 1727.
 Question of Precedence, 1815.
 Rivière du Loup Branch G. T. R., 2002.
 Address to the Governor-General, 2008.
 Names and Salaries of Officials, 2068.
 Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2157.
 The Coal Interests, 2189.
 Public Accounts Committee Report, 2201.
 Printing Committee Reports, 2292, 2254, 2343.
 Government Officials in Elections, 2216, 2247.
 System of Letting Contracts, 2267.
 Official Reporting of the Debates, 2347.
 Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2402.
 Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2409.
 Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 2456, 2530.
 Ballot Papers, 2549.
 Prerogation, 2550.
 Supply Bill, 2564.

Speaker's Rulings,

Petition from Foreigners, 348.
 Governor-General's Visit to B.C., 521.
 Payments for Printing, 531.
 Harbour Works at Sorel, 593.
 The Tariff, 941, 942, 945, 946, 1017, 1815.
 Township of Temiscouata Petition, 1163.
 Mineral Waters Bottles Bill, 1669.

Special Committees, Expenses of.

Motion for Return, 388.

Speech from the Throne, 14.

Address to His Excellency, 347.
 Reply to the Address, 427.

Spikes for the Pacific Railway.

Motion for Return, 718.

Square Timber Culler's Pensions.

Motion for Correspondence, 990.

Stadacona Fire and Life Insurance Company Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 369; 2<sup>o</sup>, 485; Com., 1206; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1290.

Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 892; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1262; Com., 1705; Order discharged and Bill withdrawn, 2485.

Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 349; 2<sup>o</sup>, 616; Com., 2069; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2154.

St. Ann's (N.S.) Post Office.

Motion for Correspondence, 965.

Steam Vessels, Remeasurement of.

Motion for Return, 1073.

STEPHENSON, Mr.

Improvement of the River Sydenham, 354.
 Breakwater at Rondeau, 354.
 Projected Harbour near Morpeth, 367.
 Coasting Regulations, 387.
 Imperfect Returns, 533.
 Malpeque Breakwater, 738.
 Lights at Ingonish Breakwater, 739.
 Wrecking in Inland Waters, 953.
 Dominion Active Volunteer Corps, 1274.
 Canada Southern Railway Co. Bill, 1300, 1382.
 Rondeau Harbour Return, 1394.
 Question of Privilege, 1536.
 The Tariff, 1804.
 Supply, 2087, 2249, 2253, 2389.
 Native Tobacco Duties, 2137.

St. John Harbour Commission.

Question, 568.

St. John's Bridge, River Richelieu.

Motion for Correspondence, 1273.

St. Pascal and Kamouraska Mail Service.

Motion for Statement, 1569.

St. Paul and Pacific Railway.

Question, 950, 1072.

St. Peter's Canal Enlargement.

Motion for Correspondence, 739.

Subsidies to Railway Co.'s in connection with Canada Pacific Railway.

Question, 953.

Superannuation, Civil Service.

Motion for Return, 718.

Superior Court Judge for Richelieu District.

Question, 352.

Supervisor of Culler's Office.

Question, 1269.

Supplementary Estimates.

Messages from His Excellency, 2408, 2485.
 In Supply, 2466.

SUPPLY.

Motion, 347.
 Amendments to, 854, 1626, 1815, 1878, 2122, 2163, 2203, 2519.

THE ESTIMATES—Civil Government:*

Governor-General's Secretary's Office, 373
 Privy Council Office, 1072.
 Department of Justice, 1120.
 Penitentiaries Branch, 1137.
 Dept. of Militia and Defence, 2291.
 " Secretary of State, 1137.
 " Interior, 1152.
 " Receiver General, 1157.
 " Finance, 1157.
 " Customs, 1162, 1163.
 " Inland Revenue, 1163.
 " Public Works, 1170.
 Post-Office Department, 1170.
 " Agriculture, 1180.
 " Marine and Fisheries, 1180.
 Treasury Board Office, 1180.
 Departmental Contingencies, 1180.
 Stationery Office for Stationery, 1182.
 Possible Extension of Staff, 1182.

Administration of Justice, 1182, 1183, 1184, 1185, 1187, 1189, 1192,
Police, 1199.

Penitentiaries:

Kingston, 1200.
 Halifax, 1805.
 St. John, 1805.
 St. Vincent de Paul, 1806.
 Manitoba, 1807.
 British Columbia, 1807.

Legislation:

Senate, Salaries, etc., 1818.
 House of Commons, Salaries, etc., 1819, 1826.
 Miscellaneous, 1828, 1830.
Arts, Agriculture and Statistics, 1830, 1831, 1835, 1842.

Immigration and Quarantine, 2025.

Pensions, 2032.

Militia:

Ordinary, 2042.
 Extraordinary, 2054.
 Special, 2054, 2197, 2291.

SUPPLY.—Con.Public Works and Buildings Chargeable toCapital :Railways :

Intercolonial, 2431.
Pacific, 2433.
P. E. Island, 2432.

Canals :

Lachine, 2220.
Cornwall, 2220.
St. Lawrence, 2220.
Welland, 2220.
St. Anne's Lock and Canal, 2223.
Carillon Lock and Canals, 2224.
Grenville, 2225.
Culbute, 2226.
St. Peter's, 2291.
Miscellaneous, 2226.

Public Buildings. Ottawa, 2248.Public Works and Buildings Chargeable toIncome :

Improvement of Navigable Rivers, 2248.
Public Buildings :
Ontario, 2248.
Quebec, 2249.
New Brunswick, 2249.
Nova Scotia, 2249.
British Columbia, 2249.
Public Buildings Generally, 2249.
Penitentiaries, 2249.
Rents, Repairs, etc., 2250.

Harbours and Breakwaters :

Ontario, 2250.
Quebec, 2280.
New Brunswick, 2281.
Nova Scotia, 2282.
Prince Edward Island, 2286.
Dredging and Dredge Vessels, 2287.
Miscellaneous, 2287, 2289.

Ocean and River Service :

Dominion Steamers, 2081.
Mail Subsidies, 2289.
Montreal Water Police, 2083.
Quebec River Police, 2086.
Miscellaneous, 2082, 2083, 2086.

Lighthouse and Coast Service :

Salaries, etc., of Lighthouse Keepers, 2087.
Maintenance and Repairs, 2089.
Completion and Construction of Lighthouses and Fog Alarms, 2289.

Fisheries :

Salaries, etc., Fishery Overseers and Wardens, 2090.
Maintenance and Repairs of Steamer for protection of Fisheries, 2096.
Fish-breeding, etc., 2099.

Scientific Institutions :

Observatories, 2100.

Marine Hospitals, &c. :

Quebec, 2101.
Montreal and other Ports, 2103.
St. Catharines and Kingston, 2103.
Halifax and other Ports in N.S., 2103.
St. John and other Ports in N.B., 2103.
British Columbia Ports, 2103.
Prince Edward Island Ports, 2103.
Expenses of Shipwrecked and Disabled Seamen, 2103.

Steamboat Inspection, 2103.Inspection of Insurance Cos., 2103.Geological Survey, 2104.Indians :

Quebec, 2109.
Blankets for Aged Indians, Ontario and Quebec, 2114.
Nova Scotia, 2114.

SUPPLY.—Con.

New Brunswick, 2115.
Prince Edward Island, 2115.
British Columbia, 2115.
Manitoba, 2116.
Expenses Manitoba Superintendency, 2140.
Little Saskatchewan, 2116.
North-West Territories, 2140.
Miscellaneous Expenditure, 2141.

Miscellaneous :

Canada Gazette, 2141.
Miscellaneous Printing, 2141.
Unforeseen Expenses, 2142.
Commutations, 2142.
Expenses of Government, North-West Territories, 2453.
Expenses of Government, District of Keewatin, 2142.
Construction of Barracks, North-West Territories, 2142.

Collection of Revenues :

Customs, 2291.
Excise, 2292.
Culling Timber, 2293.
Weights and Measures and Gas, 2296.
Inspection of Staples, 2303.
Adulteration of Food, 2303.
Public Works, 2303, 2306, 2307, 2336.
Post Office, 2212.
Dominion Lands, 2336.
Minor Revenues, 2336.

Charges of Management, 2453.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES for the year ending 30th June, 1878—

Charges of Management, 2466.
Penitentiaries, 2466.
Legislation, 2467.
Arts, Agriculture and Statistics, 2467.
Immigration and Quarantine, 2467.
Militia, 2471.
Public Works and Buildings Chargeable to Income, 2474.
Lighthouses and Coast Service, 2475.
Fisheries, 2475.
Scientific Institutions, 2475.
Steamboat Inspection, 2475.
Indians, 2475.
Miscellaneous, 2481.

Collection of Revenues :

Customs, 2481.
Excise, 2481.
Inspection of Staples, 2432.
Public Works, 2482.
Post Office, 2483.
Dominion Lands, 2483.
Unprovided Items, 2483.

FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES for the year ending 30th June, 1878—

Public Works and Buildings Chargeable to Capital, 2529.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES for the year end-

ing 30th June, 1879—
Civil Government, 2522.
Administration of Justice, 2522.
Penitentiaries, 2522.
Legislation, 2522.
Militia, 2522.
Public Works and Buildings Chargeable to Capital, 2522.
Public Works and Buildings Chargeable to Income, 2522.
Ocean and Railway Service, 2528.
Indians, 2528.
Miscellaneous, 2528.

SUPPLY.—Con.

- Weights and Measures, 2528.
- Collection of Revenues :
Public Works, 2528.
- Dominion Lands, 2528.
- CONCURRENCE, 2366, 2530, 2549.

Supply Bill.

- 1<sup>o</sup>, 2<sup>o</sup> and 3<sup>o</sup>, 2550 ; Royal Assent, 2565.

Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act.

- Question, 1551.

Supreme Court Act Amendment Bill.

- 1<sup>o</sup>, 1636 ; 2<sup>o</sup>, 2385 ; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2394 ; Senate Amendments disagreed to, 2550.

Supreme Court Business.

- Motion for Return, 1582.

Survey of Bic Harbour.

- Motion for Reports, 1579.

Survey of Lingan Harbour.

- Motion for Copy of Report, 722.

Survey of Matane Harbour.

- Motion for Papers, 393.

Survey of Pacific Railway—Red River and Battleford.

- Motion for Papers, 570.
- Debate Adjourned, 593.
- Debate Resumed, 595.

Surveys in the North-West.

- Motion for Report, 954.

Sydenham Harbour Company Bill.

- 1<sup>o</sup>, 567 ; 2<sup>o</sup>, 682 ; 3<sup>o</sup>, 1523.

Sydney Exhibition Expenses.

- Motion for Return, 419.

System of Letting Contracts.

- Remarks, 2254.

TASCHEREAU, Mr.

- The Address, 65.
- Quebec Fire Insurance Company Bill, 407, 486, 1206, 1290.
- District of Quebec, Marine, 738.
- Montreal City and District Savings Bank, 1419, 1666.
- Quebec Cullers' Office, 1557.
- Petitions of Right, 1558.
- Cases in the Exchequer and Supreme Courts, 1561.
- Election Act Amendment Bill, 2077.
- La Banque Nationale, 2148.
- Supreme Court Act Amendment Bill, 2551.

Telegraph Charges in B.C.

- Motion for Correspondence, 961.

Telegraph Line, Canadian Pacific.

- Motion for Copies of Specifications, 953.

Telegraph Line from Chatham to Escuminac.

- Question, 569.

Tenders for Gun Platform, Levis Forts.

- Motion for Copies of Tenders, 1207.

The Agricultural Interests.

- Amendments to Supply, 1626, 1709, 1815.

The Auditor-General.

- Resolution Concurred in, 1584.

The Case of Sergeant Hart.

- Motion for Correspondence, 1554.

The Coal Interests.

- Amendment to Supply, 2163.

THE ESTIMATES.

- Message from His Excellency, 372.

The Government Financial Policy.

- Amendment to Supply, 2519.

The Imperial Cattle Bill.

- Amendment, 2000.

The Loan of 1876.

- Motion for Statement, 1851.
- Adjourned Debate Resumed, 2158.

The Manitoba Troubles.

- Motion for Correspondence, 1418.

The Quebec Provincial Crisis.

- Personal Explanation, 863.
- Messages from His Excellency, 1380, 1395, 1760.
- Remarks, 1399.
- Question, 1408.
- Proposed Notice of Motion, 1807.
- Amendment to Supply, 1878.

THE TARIFF.

- Amendment to Supply (Sir John A. Macdonald), 854. (See THE BUDGET.)
- Amendment to Supply (Mr. Brown), 1626, 1709.
- Amendment to Supply (Mr. Béchard), 1815.
- Amendment to Supply (Mr. Bolduc), 2122.
- Amendment to Supply (Mr. MacKay, Cape Breton), 2163.

The Thousand Islands.

- Motion for Statement of Sales or Leases, 1580.

THOMPSON, Mr. (Cariboo).

- The Address, 293.
- Fog Whistle on Race Rocks, 569.
- Telegraph Charges in British Columbia, 961.
- Pine River Pass Survey, 1076.
- Supply, 1197, 2199, 2288, 2289, 2290.
- Chinese Labour on Pacific Railway, 1209.
- Daily Mail between B.C. and Puget Sound, 1210.
- Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1440.
- Election Act Amendment Bill, 2073.
- Pacific Railway, 2530.

THOMPSON, Mr. (Haldimand).

- Military Camps of Instruction, 570.
- Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1221.
- Supply, 2053, 2304.

THOMSON, Mr. (Welland).

Canada Southern Railway Bill, 366, 484,
1290, 1303, 1381, 1727.
Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 508.
Welland Canal Contracts, 716.
Agricultural Banks, 1211.
Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1705.

Tolls on the Upper Ottawa.

Motion for Orders-in-Council, 2349.

Toronto Harbour.

Question, 1207.

Trade and Commerce of British Columbia.

Motion for Returns, 368.

Trade Laws, Assimilation of.

Question, 353.

Trade with Australia.

Motion for Return, 389.

Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill.

1<sup>o</sup> and 2<sup>o</sup>, 2385; Com., 2394; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2485.

Transfer of Lands and Estates Bill.

1<sup>o</sup>, 951; Order discharged and Bill withdrawn, 2485.

Transmission of Timber on Rivers.

Question, 951.

Transportation of Rails.

Questions, 951, 1207.

TROW, Mr.

Employment of Shorthand Writers, 407.
Life Assurance Policies Bill, 567, 1670.
Pacific Railway Survey, 591.
Railway Passengers Safety Bill, 663.
Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1264.
Colonization Railway Bill, 1500.
Business of the House, 1508.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 1527.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1678.
Supply, 2200, 2370.
Immigration and Colonization Committee, 2408.
Pacific Railway, 2451.

Tubing, Importation of.

Motion for Return, 726.

Tupper House, Halifax.

Motion for Return, 1073.

TUPPER, Mr.

Insolvency Law Repeal, 18.
The Address, 95, 306.
Personal Explanation, 139.
Points of Order, 152, 593, 808, 1654.
Balances of Appropriations, 348.
Public Works Chargeable to Capital, 356.
Rivière du Loup Branch, G.T.R., 359.
Engineer's Report, Pacific Railway, 367.
Money Paid to B.C., 382.
Post Office Act Amendment Bill, 387, 1259,
1465.
Expenses of Special Committees, 388.
Boundary Line, Upper and Lower Canada,
389, 391.

TUPPER, Mr.

Hour of Adjournment, 394.
The Northern Light, 398.
Official Reporting of the Debates, 409.
The Budget, 444, 941.
Claims on Intercolonial Railway, 503.
Visit of Governor General to B.C., 513, 521.
Case of Judge Loranger, 528.
Pacific Railway Survey, 590, 597, 1932.
Harbour Works at Sorel, 595.
Welland Canal Contracts, 627, 633.
Intercolonial Railway Act Amendment Bill,
801, 2266.
St. Anns, N.S., Post Office, 965.
Port Hastings Mail Service, 965.
Victoria Harbour Breakwater, 966.
Distribution of Old Rails, 971.
Tupper House, Halifax, 1073.
Supply, 1146, 1818, 1821, 1826, 1831, 1832,
1834, 1835, 2193, 2105, 2108, 2197, 2213,
2282, 2285, 2287, 2298, 2307, 2367, 2544.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1205,
1206, 1694, 2454.
Canada Vine Growers' Association, 1206.
Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental
Railway, 1207.
Chinese Labour on Pacific Railway, 1210.
Public Works Act Amendment Bill, 1222,
1225, 1317, 1320, 1461.
Canada Southern Railway Co. Bill, 1302.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 1339, 1346,
2547.
Importation of Malt, 1362.
Keewatin Municipalities Bill, 1398.
Quebec Provincial Crisis, 1399.
Deckloads Act Amendment Bill, 1405.
Missing Papers, 1407.
Duties collected at St. John, N.B., 1411.
Fishwick Express Co. Bill, 1523, 1860.
Fences on P.E.I. Railway, 1567.
Dismissal of R. J. M. Lecaine, 1569.
Services of H. G. Hill, 1569.
Pugwash Branch Railway Scheme, 1571.
Removal of Intercolonial Railway Assistant Superintendent, 1572.
Dismissal of Train Despatcher at Truro,
1573.
Offices of Receiver-General and Attorney-
General Bill, 1592.
Cattle Killed on Intercolonial Railway, 1640.
Rebate of Duties, 1641.
Forbes' Claim on Intercolonial, 1645, 1655.
Land Claim of John Reid, 1649.
Audit of Public Accounts Bill, 1700.
Canada Central and Georgian Bay Branch
Railways, 1850.
The Loan of 1876, 1851.
Question of Privilege, 1872.
Native Tobacco Duties, 2138.
Pacific Railway (Nepigon and Thunder Bay Branch Route), 2143.
Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill, 2155.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 2162.
The Coal Interests, 2173.
Printing Committee Reports, 2202, 2343.
Ingonish Harbour Contracts, 2209.
Government Officials in Elections, 2232.
System of Letting Contracts, 2279.
Intercolonial Railway, 2307, 2327.
Official Reporting of the Debates, 2344.
Map of the Pacific Railway Route, 2348.
Names and Salaries of Officials, 2356, 2362.
Ventilation of the Chamber, 2366.
Canada Central Railway Co., 2493.
Pacific Railway, 2544.
Adjournment of the House, 2554.

Twenty-five Cent Government Scrip.
Question, 1407.

Unforeseen Expenses.
Statement, 348.

Uniform Copper Currency.
Question, 953.

United States, Reciprocity with.
Question, 352, 353.
Motion for Correspondence, 367.

Unparliamentary Expressions.
The Address, 195, 197, 265.
Governor General's Visit to B. C., 524.
Welland Canal Contracts, 630.
The Budget, 777, 790.

Upper and Lower Canada Boundary Line.
Motion for Reports, 389.

Vacancies.
List of, 1.

Ventilation of the Chamber
Remarks, 2366.

Veteran Militiamen, Grant for.
Question, 355.

Victoria Elizabeth Lyon Divorce Bill.
1<sup>o</sup>, 1860; 2<sup>o</sup>, 1945; 3<sup>o</sup>, 2068.

Victoria Harbour Breakwater.
Motion for Engineer's Report, 965.

Visit of Governor General to B. C.
Motion for Details of Expenditure, 510.
Amendment Proposed, 521.
Amendment to Proposed Amendment, 521.

WADE, Mr.
The Address, 259.
Supply, 1199.

WALLACE, Mr.
The Budget, 663
Colonization Railway Bill, 1504.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 1519.
The Tariff, 1747
Supply, 1824, 2026.
Independence of Parliament Bill, 2039.
The Coal Interests, 2186.
Printing Committee Reports, 2344.

Wallace, William, Accounts of.
Question, 1845.

Want of Confidence Motion—The Budget.
Debate on, 937.
Speaker's Ruling, 946.

Water and Gas Supply at Moncton.
Resolution to Ratify Contract, 2394.

W. B. O'Donoghue
Motion for Orders-in-Council, 566

Ways and Means.

Motion, 347.

Welland Canal Improvements.

Motion for Return, 2151.

Welland Canal Navigation.

Question, 952.

*Welland Canal Tenders.*Motions for Returns, 623, 714.
Debate Adjourned, 662, 1119.
Resuming Adjourned Debate, 1095, 1865.West Indies, Mail Communication with.

Motion for Correspondence, 487.

Wharf at Ste. Anne, Chicoutimi.

Question, 1552.

WHITE, Mr. (East Hastings).Supply, 1155, 2026.
The Tariff, 1629.
Rebate of Duties, 1643.
Montreal and Ottawa Junction Railway Co. Bill, 1661.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1692, 2458.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 2116, 2118.
Government Officials in Elections, 2236.
Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill, 2460, 2465.WHITE, Mr. (North Renfrew).Georgian Bay Branch. 409.
Subsidies to Railway Co.'s in connection with Pacific Railway, 953.
Square Timber Cullers' Pensions, 991.
Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1265, 1705.
Keeewatin Municipalities Bill, 1385, 1397.
Insolvent Law Repeal Bill, 1451.
Homestead Exemption Bill, 1522, 1532.
Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company Bill, 1657.
Canada Central and Georgian Bay Branch Railways, 1849.
Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill, 2009, 2037, 2042.
Supply, 2224, 2287, 2293—2295.
Tolls on the Upper Ottawa, 2319.
Pacific Railway, 2451.
Immigration Committee's Report, 2453.
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill, 2486.
Canada Central Railway Company, 2496.Williamsburg Canals.

Question, 712.

William Taylor, Services of.

Motion for Return, 358.

Question, 1269.

Windsor and Annapolis Railway.

Motion for Papers, 721.

Winter Communication with P.E.I.

Question, 1552

*Winter Navigation of the St. Lawrence.*Motion proposed, 1275.
Adjourned Debate, 1664.

WOOD, Mr.

- Insolvency Law Repeal Bill, 349, 1430.
- Admission of Canadian Ships into French Ports, 366.
- Port Whitby Harbour Co. Bill, 633.
- Supply, 1167, 1837, 2252, 2302.
- Regular Baptist Foreign Missionary Society Bill, 1206, 1523.
- Independence of Parliament Bill, 1229, 1355.
- Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill, 1267, 1705.
- Question of Privilege, 1537.
- Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill, 1676.
- The Tariff, 1797.
- The Coal Interests, 2171.
- Canada Central Railway Co., 2504.

Wrecking in Inland Waters.

- Motion for Returns Withdrawn, 953.

WRIGHT, Mr. (Ottawa County).

- Question of Privilege, 2064.

WRIGHT, Mr. (Pontiac).

- Visit of Governor-General to B.C., 515, 517.
- Evidence on Common Assaults Bill, 607.

YOUNG, Mr.

- The Address, 207.
- Expenses of Special Committees, 388.
- Trade with Australia, 389.
- Duty on Malt, 407.
- Public Accounts, 484.
- Welland Canal Contracts, 648.
- Supply, 1166.
- Question of Privilege, 1315.
- Importation of Malt, 1364.
- Insolvent Law Repeal, 1440.
- Recognition of naturalized Subjects, 1551.
- Rebate of Duties, 1642.
- Examining Witnesses on Oath, 1807.
- Point of Order, 1872.
- Malt Duty Bill, 2036.
- The Coal Interests, 2170.
- Public Accounts Committee Report, 2201.
- System of Letting Contracts, 2271.
- Printing Committee Reports, 2343, 2385.
- Ventilation of the Chamber, 2366.
- Ballot Papers, 2549.