

Technical and Bibliographic Notes / Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming are checked below.

L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

- Coloured covers /
Couverture de couleur
- Covers damaged /
Couverture endommagée
- Covers restored and/or laminated / Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée
- Cover title missing /
Le titre de couverture manque
- Coloured maps /
Cartes géographiques en couleur
- Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black) / Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)
- Coloured plates and/or illustrations /
Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur
- Bound with other material /
Relié avec d'autres documents
- Only edition available /
Seule édition disponible
- Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin / La reliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distorsion le long de la marge intérieure.
- Blank leaves added during restorations may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming / Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.
- Additional comments /
Commentaires supplémentaires:

- Coloured pages / Pages de couleur
- Pages damaged / Pages endommagées
- Pages restored and/or laminated /
Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
- Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/
Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
- Pages detached / pages détachées
- Showthrough / Transarence
- Quality of print varies /
Qualité inégale de l'impression
- Includes supplementary materials
Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
- Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image / Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une pelure, etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.
- Opposing pages with varying colouration or discolourations are filmed twice to ensure the best possible image / Les pages s'opposant ayant des colorations variables ou des décolorations sont filmées deux fois afin d'obtenir la meilleure image possible.

Pagination is as follows: [i]-xxii, [1], 1395-2565, i-xxxix p.

Pages 1435, 1574, 1624, 1789, 1980 & 2249 are incorrectly numbered pages 143, 574, 6124, 178, 980 & 224.

DEBATES
OF THE
HOUSE OF COMMONS
OF THE
DOMINION OF CANADA.

---

T. J. RICHARDSON AND G. B. BRADLEY
Editors and Chief Reporters.

---

FIFTH SESSION—THIRD PARLIAMENT.

---

41 VICTORIA, 1878

---

VOL. V

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TWENTY-SIXTH DAY OF MARCH, 1878
TO THE TENTH DAY OF MAY, 1878.

---

SECOND VOLUME OF THE SESSION.

---

OTTAWA:
PRINTED BY MACLEAN ROGER & CO., WELLINGTON STREET
1878.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TO

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES.

VOLUME V.

TUESDAY MARCH 26TH.

Message from His Excellency—

QUEBEC PROVINCIAL CRISIS..... 1395

Consolidated Insurance Act, 1877, Amendment Bill—

Introduced (Mr. Killam) and read the first time [Bill 60]..... 1395

PILOTAGE ACT AMENDMENT—Moved—

“That it is expedient to provide that the Montreal Harbour Commissioners may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, make provision for licensing a second class of pilots for all steamers and for other vessels, not exceeding 250 tons register, and for other vessels exceeding 80 and not exceeding 250 tons register, navigating the River St. Lawrence between the harbour of Quebec and the upper limits of the harbour of Montreal, and may establish rates of pilotage to be paid by such steamers and vessels compulsorily, except ferry boats and steamers having on board a second class pilot as master or mate thereof, or vessels not exceeding 250 tons register when in tow of a steamer in charge of a licensed pilot; and to amend the Pilotage Acts of Canada accordingly.”—(Mr. Smith, Westmoreland.)

Motion agreed to..... 1395

Malt Duty Bill—

Introduced (Mr. Laurier) and read the first time [Bill 61]..... 1396

Keewatin Townships Municipalities Bill [BILL 23]—

Considered in Committee (Mr. Mills)..... 1396

QUEBEC PROVINCIAL CRISIS—Remarks..... 1399

Manitoba Land Claims Bill [BILL 46]—

Read the second time..... 1401

Considered in Committee and reported..... 1402

MISSING PAPERS—Remarks ..... 1407

	PAGE
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 27TH.
NORTH RIVER NAVIGATION—Question, Mr. Christie ; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie ...	1407
RESIDENT JUDGE AT SOREL—Question, Mr. Gill ; Answer, Mr. Laflamme .....	1407
TWENTY-FIVE CENT GOVERNMENT SCRIP—Question, Mr. Farrow ; Answer, Mr. Cartwright . . . . .	1408
MAIN-A-DIEU HARBOUR—Question, Mr. MacKay (Cape Breton) ; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie . . . . .	1408
INSURANCE LAW AMENDMENT—Question, Mr. Desjardins ; Answer, Mr. Cartwright . . . . .	1408
QUEBEC PROVINCIAL CRISIS—Question, Sir John A. Macdonald ; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	1408
PAYMENTS ON LAND FOR CANAL PURPOSES—Motion for Return ( Mr. Langevin ) —Motion agreed to.....	1408
DUTIES COLLECTED AT ST. JOHN, N.B.—Motion for Return ( Mr. Domville )— After debate, motion agreed to. . . . .	1408
GOVERNMENT PURCHASE OF RAILWAY STORES—Motion for Statement ( Mr. De St. Georges )—Motion agreed to.....	1417
GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS SINCE 1867—Motion for Statement ( Mr. De St. Georges )—Motion agreed to.....	1417
CLAIMS ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Mitchell ) —Motion agreed to.....	1417
CUSTOMS ENTRIES OF RAILWAY ROLLING STOCK—Motion for Statement ( Mr. Blanchet )—Motion agreed to. . . . .	1418
FISHING IN THE RIVERS RIMOUSKI AND METIS—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Fiset )—Motion withdrawn.....	1418
MUIR POST OFFICE—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Macmillan )—Motion agreed to . . . . .	1418
THE MANITOBA TROUBLES, 1869-70—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Schultz ) —Motion agreed to.....	1418
MONTREAL CITY AND DISTRICT SAVINGS BANK—Motion for Return ( Mr. Taschereau ) . . . . .	1419
Debate suspended at Six o'clock.
G. B. Burland Letters Patent Bill [BILL 33]—
Order for second reading read ( Mr. Casgrain ), and after a short debate, order discharged, and Bill withdrawn.. . . .	1495
Montreal and Ottawa Junction Railway Bill [BILL 57]—
Read the second time ( Mr. Smith, Peel ).....	1427
George Frothingham Johnston Divorce Bill—
Motion for first reading ( Mr. Fraser )—Motion agreed to on division. Yeas, 70 ; Nays, 52. Bill read the first time [Bill 59].....	1427
Hugh Hunter Divorce Bill—
Motion for first reading ( Mr. McCarthy )—Motion agreed to on division. Yeas, 70 ; Nays, 53. Bill read the first time [Bill 58].....	1427

	PAGE
Insolvent Law. Repeal Bill [BILL 2]—
Second reading proposed ( Mr. Barthe ).....	1428
Moved in amendment—
“ That the Bill be read the second time this day six months.”—( Mr. Wood )
After debate, amendment agreed to on division. Yeas, 99; Nays, 55.....	1453

---

THURSDAY, MARCH 28TH.

Controverted Election Acts Consolidation Bill—
Introduced ( Mr. McCarthy ) and read the first time [Bill 64].....	1454
Public Works Act Amendment Bill [BILL 13]—
Motion for third reading ( Mr. Mackenzie ).....	1457
Moved in amendment—
“ That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the said Bill, by providing that parties suffering damages by the neglect or misconduct in the management of the Intercolonial Railway, or any of the officers thereof, shall have remedy for such damages in the ordinary Courts of Law.”—( Mr. Mitchell ).
Amendment negatived on a division.
Bill read the third time and passed .....	1464
Manitoba Land Claims Bill [BILL 46]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Mills ).....	1464
Post Office Act Amendment Bill [BILL 17]—
Considered in Committee ( Mr. Huntington ) .....	1464
Colonization Railway Bill [BILL 32]—
After debate, Bill read the second time ( Mr. Mills ).....	1478
AUDITOR-GENERAL OF CANADA—Resolved—
“ That it is expedient to appoint an officer to be called the Auditor-General of Canada —salary not to exceed thirty-two hundred dollars per annum.” .....	1505
Deckloads Act Amendment Bill—
Resolution considered in Committee and Bill introduced ( Mr. Smith, Westmoreland ) and read the first time [Bill 62]. .....	1505
Ontario Maritime Court Bill [BILL 50]—
Considered in Committee, read the third time and passed ( Mr. Laflamme )	1506

---

FRIDAY, MARCH 29TH.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—Moved—
“ That Government business shall have precedence immediately after routine proceedings on Mondays for the remainder of the Session.”—( Mr. Mackenzie ).
After debate, motion amended by adding “after Monday next” before “Government business,” and agreed to on division.....	1511

	PAGE
Post Office Act Amendment Bill [BILL 17]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Huntington ).....	1511
Homestead Exemption Estates Bill [BILL 44]—
After debate, Bill read the second time ( Mr. Mills ).....	1512
Sydenham Harbour Company Bill [BILL 31]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Gibbs, South Ontario ).....	1523
Regular Baptist Foreign Missionary Society Bill [BILL 49]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Wood ).....	1523
Fishwick Express Company Bill [BILL 54]—
Read the second time ( Mr. Tupper ).....	1523
George Frothingham Johnson Divorce Bill [BILL 59]—
Motion for second reading ( Mr. Fraser )—Motion agreed to on division.
Yeas, 78; Nays, 51. Bill read the second time.....	1523
Hugh Hunter Divorce Bill [BILL 58]—
Motion for second reading ( Mr. McCarthy )—Motion agreed to on division.
Yeas, 78; Nays, 51. Bill read the second time.....	1524
Homestead Exemption Estates Bill [BILL 44]—
Considered in Committee ( Mr. Mills ).....	1524

---

MONDAY, APRIL 1st.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—Newspaper Correspondence ( Mr. Stephenson ).....	1536
Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill—
Introduced ( Mr. Blake ) and read the first and second times [Bill 65].....	1539
Brockville and Ottawa and Canada Central Railway Companies Bill [BILL 9]—
Considered in Committee ( Mr. Galbraith ).....	1543
BEAUHARNOIS CANAL ENLARGEMENT—Question, Mr. Robillard ; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	1551
THE SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURTS ACT—Question, Mr. McCarthy ; Answer, Mr. Laflamme .....	1551
RECOGNITION OF NATURALIZED GERMANS AND OTHER CANADIAN SUBJECTS—Question, Mr. Young ; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	1551
WINTER COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—Question, Mr. Pope (Queen's, P.E.I.); Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	1552
INTER-PROVINCIAL FERRY ON THE RESTIGOUCHE—Question, Mr. Haddon ; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	1552
WHARF AT STE. ANNE, CHICOUTIMI—Question, Mr. Cimon ; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	1552
EXPLORATION OF BIG AND PETIT MÉTIS HARBOURS—Question, Mr. Fiset ; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	1552

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

vii

	PAGE
LONDON EMIGRATION AGENT—Motion for Return ( Mr. Pope, Compton )—Motion agreed to.....	1552
INDIAN AGENT AT TOBIQUE RESERVE—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Costigan )—Motion withdrawn .....	1552
THE CASE OF SERGEANT HART—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Costigan )—After a short debate, motion agreed to.....	1554
QUEBEC CULLERS' OFFICE—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Taschereau )—Motion agreed to.....	1557
NANAIMO AND NEW WESTMINSTER MAIL SERVICE—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Dewdney )—Motion agreed to.....	1557
ROYAL NAVY CADETS—Motion for Address ( Mr. Bunster )—After a short debate, motion agreed to.....	1557
PETITIONS OF RIGHT—Motion for Return ( Mr. Taschereau )—After a short debate, motion agreed to.....	1558
CASES IN EXCHEQUER COURT—Motion for Return ( Mr. Taschereau )—Motion agreed to.....	1561
CASES IN SUPREME COURT—Motion for Return ( Mr. Taschereau )—Motion agreed to.....	1561
CASCUMPEC HARBOUR—Motion for Engineer's Report—( Mr. Perry )—After a short debate, motion agreed to .....	1562
FENCES ON PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Perry )—After a short debate, motion agreed to.....	1563
ST. PASCAL MAIL—Motion for Statement ( Mr. Roy )—Motion agreed to.....	1569
DISMISSAL OF R. J. M. LECAINE—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Tupper )—Motion agreed to .....	1569
SERVICES OF H. G. HILL—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Tupper )—After explanation, motion withdrawn.....	1569
PUGWASH BRANCH RAILWAY SCHEME—Motion for Papers ( Mr. Tupper )—Motion agreed to.....	1571
REMOVAL OF INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY ASSISTANT SUPERINTENDENT—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Tupper )—Motion agreed to.....	1572
DISMISSAL OF TRAIN DESPATCHER AT TRURO—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Tupper )—After a short debate, motion agreed to.....	1573
CONVEYANCE OF H. M. MAILS IN CAPE BRETON—Motion for Return ( Mr. McDonald, Cape Breton )—Motion agreed to.....	1576
QUARANTINE HOSPITAL AT SYDNEY, C.B.—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. McDonald, Cape Breton )—Motion agreed to.....	1576
DISMISSAL OF SHIPPING OFFICER AT LITTLE GLACE BAY, C.B.—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. McDonald, Cape Breton )—Motion agreed to.....	1577
REMOVAL OF POSTMASTER AT COW BAY, C.B.—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. McDonald, Cape Breton )—Motion agreed to.....	1577
DISMISSAL OF AGENT OF GOVERNMENT SAVINGS BANK, GLACE BAY, C.B.—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. McDonald, Cape Breton )—Motion agreed to.....	1577
DISMISSAL OF POSTMASTER AT LITTLE GLACE BAY, C.B.—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. McDonald, Cape Breton )—Motion agreed to.....	1577
DISMISSAL OF JAMES CORBELL, POSTMASTER AT LORWAY MINES, C.B.—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. McDonald, Cape Breton )—Motion agreed to...	1577

	PAGE
DISMISSAL OF J. CADIGAN—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. McDonald , Cape Breton)—Motion agreed to.....	1578
POST OFFICE AFFAIRS AT VICTORIA, C.B.—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. McDonald , Cape Breton)—Motion agreed to.....	1578
LEASE OF OYSTER BEDS AND MUD FLATS IN COLCHESTER AND CUMBERLAND—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. McKay , Colchester)—Motion agreed to .....	1578
SCHOOLS OF GUNNERY—Motion for Return ( Mr. Aylmer )—Motion agreed to....	1578
LOTS ON ASSINIBOINE RIVER—Motion for Statement ( Mr. Ryan )—Motion agreed to.....	1578
SURVEY OF BIG HARBOUR—Motion for Reports ( Mr. Fiset )—Motion agreed to.	1579
TELEGRAPH LINE BETWEEN MATANE AND FOX RIVER—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Fiset )—Motion agreed to.....	1579
PICTOU BRANCH RAILWAY—Motion for Correspondence ( Mr. Pope , Queen's, P.E.I.)—Motion withdrawn.....	1579
THE THOUSAND ISLANDS—Motion for Statement of Sales or Leases ( Mr. Jones , South Leeds)—Motion agreed to.....	1580
JOLLINGWOOD HARBOUR—Motion for Papers ( Mr. McCarthy )—Motion agreed to.....	1581
RIDEAU HALL—Motion for Statement ( Mr. Mitchell )—Motion agreed to.....	1581
SUPREME COURT BUSINESS—Motion for Return ( Mr. Mitchell )—Motion agreed to .....	1582

---

TUESDAY, APRIL 2ND.

Compulsory Voting Bill—

Introduced (Mr. McDougall, South Renfrew) and read the first time [Bill 66] 1582

THE AUDITOR-GENERAL—Resolution concurred in..... 1584

Offices of Receiver General and Attorney General Bill [BILL 51]—

Read the second time, considered in Committee, and reported (Mr. Laflamme) ..... 1585

Audit of Public Accounts Bill [BILL 53]—

Read the second time (Mr. Cartwright)..... 1624

SUPPLY—THE TARIFF—Moved “That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair, for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.”—(Mr. Cartwright)..... 1626

Moved in amendment—

“That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved, that whereas a large quantity of wheat and flour has been imported into Canada within the last few years, this House is of opinion that the interests of Canadian farmers would be promoted by the imposition of a duty on these articles.”—(Mr. Brown.)

Debate adjourned on motion of Mr. Mills..... 1636

---

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 3RD.

PRIVATE BILLS—Motion for extension of time (Mr. Holton)—Motion agreed to ..... 1636

Railway Act Amendment Bill—
 Introduced (Mr. Ross, West Middlesex) and read the first time [Bill 67]... 1636

Supreme Court Act Amendment Bill—
 Introduced (Mr. Laflamme) and read the first time [Bill 68] ..... 1636

Penitentiaries Act Amendment Bill—
 Introduced (Mr. Laflamme) and read the first time [Bill 69] ..... 1637

INSURANCE ACT OF 1867—Question, Mr. Killam; Answer, Mr. Cartwright..... 1637

CHARGES AGAINST MARINE AND FISHERIES AGENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—
 Motion for Correspondence (Mr. Dewdney)—Motion allowed to stand... 1638

THE GOVERNOR (GENERAL)—Motion for an Address to the Queen (Mr. Bunster)
 —After a short debate, motion withdrawn..... 1638

HARBOUR MASTER OF COLLINGWOOD—Motion for Papers (Mr. McCarthy)—
 Motion agreed to..... 1640

SECTION 12 OF THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Motion for Papers (Sir John A. Macdonald)—
 Motion agreed to..... 1640

CATTLE KILLED ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Motion for Correspondence
 (Mr. Tupper)—Motion withdrawn..... 1640

REBATE OF DUTIES ON AMERICAN MERCHANDISE—Motion for Statement (Mr. Jones, South Leeds)—After a short debate, motion agreed to..... 1641

ALEXANDER FORBES' CLAIM FOR WORK ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Motion for Correspondence (Mr. Tupper)—After a short debate, motion withdrawn..... 1645

LAND CLAIM OF JOHN REID—Motion for Correspondence (Mr. Ryan)—After debate, motion withdrawn ..... 1647

Bank of Liverpool Bill [BILL 22]—
 Senate amendments concurred in (Mr. Forbes)..... 1653

Brockville and Ottawa and Canada Central Railway Companies Bill [BILL 9]—
 Motion for third reading (Mr. Galbraith)..... 1653 Motion in amendment (Mr. McDougall, South Renfrew) negatived on division. Yeas, 50; Nays, 101..... 1658
 Motion in amendment (Mr. Palmer) negatived on a division..... 1658 Motion in amendment (Mr. Jones, South Leeds) negatived on a division.. 1659
 Bill read the third time and passed.

Société de Construction du Comté d'Hochelaga Bill [BILL 48]—
 Read the third time and passed (Mr. Baby) ..... 1659

Hugh Hunter Divorce Bill [BILL 58]—
 Considered in Committee ..... 1659
 Motion for third reading (Mr. McCarthy)—Motion agreed to on division.
 Yeas, 84; Nays, 61. Bill read the third time and passed..... 1660

	PAGE
George Frothingham Johnston Divorce Bill [BILL 59]—
Considered in Committee.....	1660
Motion for third reading ( Mr. Fraser )—Motion agreed to on division. Yeas, 84; Nays, 61. Bill read the third time and passed.....	1660
Port Whitby Harbour Company Bill [BILL 19]—
Considered in Committee, read the third time and passed.....	1660
Montreal and City of Ottawa Junction Railway Company Bill [BILL 57]—
Considered in Committee, read the third time and passed ( Mr. McNab ) .	1660
BETTER TRANSLATION OF THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT— Adjourned debate on Mr. Fréchet 's motion for special Committee resumed—Motion agreed to on division. Yeas, 80; Nays, 66 .....	1664
WINTER NAVIGATION OF THE ST. LAWRENCE— Adjourned debate on Mr. Fréchet 's proposed motion, resumed—Motion withdrawn.....	1664
MONTREAL CITY AND DISTRICT SAVINGS BANK— Adjourned debate on Mr. Taschereau 's proposed motion, resumed .....	1666
Motion amended and agreed to.....	1667
Insolvent Act Amendment Bill [BILL 24]—
Motion for second reading ( Mr. Bourassa )—Motion negatived on division. Yeas, 68; Nays, 72. ....	1667
Sale of Mineral Water and other Drinks Bottles Bill [BILL 25]—
Second reading proposed ( Mr. Macdonald , Centre Toronto)—After a short debate, Order discharged.....	1668
Non-forfeitable Life Assurance Policies Bill [BILL 33]—
Second reading proposed ( Mr. Trow )—After a short debate, Order dis- charged and Bill withdrawn .....	1670
—
THURSDAY, APRIL 4TH.
Civil Service Bill—
Introduced ( Mr. Casey ) and read the first time [Bill 70].....	1673
Canadian Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill [BILL 52]—
Read the second time ( Mr. Mackenzie ), considered in Committee and reported .....	1674
Audit of Public Accounts Bill [BILL 53]—
Considered in Committee ( Mr. Cartwright ) and reported.....	1700
Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill [BILL 43]—
Considered in Committee ( Mr. Laurier ) and reported.....	1705

FRIDAY, APRIL 5TH.

SUPPLY—THE TARIFF—

Adjourned debate on proposed motion, "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," (Mr. Cartwright) and Mr. Brown's amendment thereto resumed ..... 1709

Debate suspended at six o'clock.

Agricultural Mutual Assurance Association of Canada Bill [BILL 30]—

Considered in Committee (Mr. Macmillan), read the third time and passed 1727

Canada Southern Railway Company Bill [BILL 6]—

Senate amendments agreed to..... 1727

SUPPLY—THE TARIFF—

Debate resumed.. ..... 1728

Debate adjourned on motion of Mr. Rymal..... 1760

MONDAY, APRIL 8TH.

Message from His Excellency—

QUEBEC PROVINCIAL CRISIS..... 1760

SUPPLY—THE TARIFF—

Adjourned debate on proposed motion "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair," (Mr. Cartwright) and Mr. Brown's amendment thereto, resumed ..... 1760

Motion in amendment (Mr. Brown) negatived on division. Yeas, 28; Nays, 148..... 1806

SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—

VI. PENITENTIARIES..... 1805

Votes 36 to 40 agreed to.

TUESDAY, APRIL 9TH.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE—Motion to examine witnesses on oath (Mr. Young)—Motion agreed to..... 1807

Imprisonment in Default of Sureties Bill—

Introduced (Mr. Laflamme) and read the first time [Bill 73]..... 1807

Montreal Investment and Building Company Bill—

Introduced (Mr. Holton) and read the first time [Bill 71]..... 1807

QUEBEC PROVINCIAL CRISIS—Notice of motion (Sir John A. Macdonald)..... 1807

Offices of Receiver General and Attorney General Bill [BILL 51]—

Order for third reading read (Mr. Laflamme) ..... 1812

	PAGE
Motion in amendment—
“That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be resolved that this House, while approving of the abolition of the office of Receiver-General as a step in the direction of retrenchment, is of opinion that the creation of an additional office in the Department of Justice entails upon the country an unnecessary charge and expense, not justifiable by the requirements of the Public Service, and, therefore, that this Bill be referred back to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to strike out all clauses relating to the Department of Justice.”—( Mr. Mitchell ).
Motion in amendment ( Mr. Mitchell ) negatived on division. Yeas, 64; Nays, 105.....	1813
Bill read the third time and passed in division. Yeas, 108; Nays, 66 ....	1814
SUPPLY—THE TARIFF—Moved, “That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair,” etc. ( Mr. Cartwright ) .....	1815
Moved in amendment—
“That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that if it be resolved that a large quantity of corn and oats having been imported into Canada within the last few years, this House is of opinion that the interests of Canadian farmers would be promoted by the imposition of a duty upon the importation of those products.”—( Mr. Béchard ).
Motion in amendment ( Mr. Béchard ) negatived on division. Yeas, 54; Nays, 144.....	1818
SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—
VII. LEGISLATION.. .....	1818
Votes 41, 42, and 45 to 53 agreed to.
VIII. ARTS, AGRICULTURE AND STATISTICS.....	1830
Votes 54 to 59 agreed to.
— — —
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10TH.
QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—Precedence ( Mr. MacKay , Cape Breton).....	1842
Election Act Amendment Bill—
Introduced ( Mr. Laflamme ) and read the first time [Bill 20].....	1844
ADDRESS TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—Notice of motion ( Mr. Mackenzie )....	1845
DRILL SHEDS IN MANITOBA—Question, Mr. Schultz ; Answer, Mr. Jones , Halifax.) .....	1845
CARTRIDGES FOR THE NORTH-WEST SUPERINTENDENCY—Question, Mr. Schultz ; Answer, Mr. Mills .....	1845
ORDNANCE LANDS IN SOULANGES—Question, Mr. Lanthier ; Answer, Mr. Mills .....	1845
ACQUISITION OF UNCEDED TERRITORY IN THE NORTH-WEST—Question, Mr. Schultz ; Answer, Mr. Mills . .....	1845
WILLIAM WALLACE'S ACCOUNTS—Question, Mr. Archibald ; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	1845
PROVISION FOR DEEDING—Question, Mr. MacKay , (Cape Breton); Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	1846
ACCUSATIONS AGAINST BRITISH COLUMBIA AGENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES—Motion for correspondence ( Mr. Dewdney )—Motion agreed to.....	1846
SEIZURE OF MR BOSWELL'S BREWERY—Motion for Papers ( Mr. Rochester )—Motion agreed to.....	1846

	PAGE
CANADA CENTRAL, AND GEORGIAN BAY BRANCH RAILWAYS—Motion for Papers, ( Mr. McDougall , South Renfrew.)—After a short debate, motion withdrawn .....	1848
THE LOAN OF 1876—Motion for Statement ( Mr. McCarthy ).....	1851
Debate suspended at six o'clock.
Canada Agricultural Insurance Company Bill [BILL 29]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Kerr ).....	1860
Fishwick Express Company Bill [BILL 54]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Tupper ).....	1860
Ontario Express and Transportation Company Bill [BILL 7]—
Considered in Committee ( Mr. Oliver ).....	1860
Bible Christian Church in Canada Missionary Society Bill [BILL 72]—
Read the second time ( Mr. Burk ).....	1860
Montreal Building Association Bill [BILL 71]—
Read the second time ( Mr. Holton ).....	1860
Victoria Elizabeth Lyon Divorce Bill —
Motion for first reading ( Mr. Cameron )—Motion agreed to on division. Yeas, 79; Nays, 60. Bill read the first time [Bill 74].....	1860
Rate of Interest Bill [BILL 5]—
Second reading ( Mr. Barthe ) negatived on division. Yeas, 24; Nays, 122	1865
WELLAND CANAL TENDERS—Adjourned debate resumed on Mr. Lanjevin's proposed motion in reference to lowest tenders—Motion agreed to.....	1865
Law of Evidence Amendment Bill [BILL 41]—
Motion for second reading ( Mr. Kirkpatrick )—Motion agreed to.....	1866

THURSDAY, APRIL 11TH.

ELECTION OF A NEW MEMBER—Certificate of Election and Return of Thomas Robert McInnes —( Mr. Speaker ).....	1867
QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—Press Correspondence ( Mr. Costigan ).....	1867
ADDRESS TO THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL—Moved—

“That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, expressing the deep feeling of regret of this House at his approaching departure from Canada, and it is our duty to assure His Excellency that the zealous devotion of his great abilities on all occasions to the public interests is held in high appreciation; and that especially the visits to each of the Provinces and Territories of the Dominion, by which His Excellency has familiarized himself with the character of the people and the resources of the country; and the eloquent speeches in which His Excellency has enlarged on those topics have been attended with the most beneficial results in attracting attention to Canada; and that we are highly sensible of the great degree in which literature and art and the industrial pursuits have received encouragement from His Excellency's efforts and liberality; and assuring His Excellency and his distinguished Consort that they will bear with them on leaving us our warmest wishes for their future welfare and happiness; that we rejoice in the conviction that, though Canada may no longer possess the advantage of His Excellency's experience and knowledge of public affairs in so exclusive a degree as she has enjoyed them in the past, she will continue to have in His Excellency a friend and advocate; and that it is our heartfelt wish that, for many years, the Empire at large may have the benefit of His Excellency's ripe wisdom, experience and eminent abilities."—( Mr. Mackenzie ).

	PAGE
Motion agreed to.....	1873
QUEBEC PROVINCIAL CRISIS—Moved—
" That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair, for the House to go again into Committee of Supply."—( Mr. Cartwright ).
Moved in amendment—
" That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved that the recent dismissal by the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec of his Ministers was, under the circumstances, unwise and subversive of the position accorded to the advisers of the Crown since the concession of the principle of Responsible Government to the British North American Colonies."—( Sir John A. Macdonald ).	1878
Debate adjourned on motion of Mr. Langevin .....	1932
FRIDAY, APRIL 12TH.
INTRODUCTION OF A MEMBER—Thomas Robert McInnes .....	1933
CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY SURVEY—Question, Mr. Tupper; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	1933
QUEBEC PROVINCIAL CRISIS—Adjourned debate resumed on Sir John A. Macdonald's amendment to Supply (Mr. Langevin) .....	1933
Debate continued until six o'clock p.m. of the 13th inst., and further adjourned until ten o'clock p.m. of the 15th inst.....	2000
Ontario Express and Transportation Company Bill [BILL 7]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Oliver ).....	1945
Victoria Elizabeth Lyon Divorce Bill [BILL 74]—
Motion for second reading ( Mr. Cameron )—Motion agreed to on division. Yeas, 60; Nays, 48.....	1945
THE IMPERIAL CATTLE BILL—Announcements of certain modifications (Mr. Mackenzie) .....	2000
MONDAY, APRIL 15TH.
PERSONAL EXPLANATION—Quebec Provincial Crisis (Mr. Mitchell) .....	2001
PROPOSED ACQUISITION OF THE GRAND TRUNK RIVIÈRE DU LOUP BRANCH—Moved—
" That the Government be authorized to enter into an arrangement during the recess with the Grand Trunk Railway Company for acquiring control of the Rivière du Loup branch of the said Company's line, by lease, purchase or otherwise, in order to obtain complete control of the Intercolonial Railway to the City of Quebec. Any such arrangement to be subject to the ratification by Parliament at the next Session."—( Mr. Mackenzie ).....	2002
After debate, motion withdrawn.....	2005
NORTHERN RAILWAY OF CANADA FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS—Moved—
" That it is expedient that the Government be authorized to subscribe the sum of £15,000 sterling first mortgage bonds of the Northern Railway Company of Canada, at the rate of ninety per cent., in satisfaction of the sum of £13,500 sterling, being balance remaining due by the said Company to the Dominion of Canada."—( Mr. Cartwright )
Motion agreed to.....	2005

	PAGE
Homestead Exemption Estates Bill [BILL 44]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Mills ) .....	2006
Audit of Public Accounts Bill [BILL 53]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Cartwright )... ..	2006
Malt Duty Bill [BILL 61]—
Read the second time ( Mr. Laurier ).....	2007
ADDRESS TO THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—Message from the Senate.....	2008
Independence of Parliament Bill [BILL 14]—
Considered in Committee ( Mr. Laflamme ).....	2008
Canadian Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill [BILL 52]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Mackenzie ).....	2009
Brockville and Ottawa and Canada Central Railway Companies Bill [BILL 9]—
Consideration of Senate Amendments ( Mr. Galbraith ).....	2009
Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill [BILL 65]—
Considered in Committee ( Mr. Blake ).....	2009
QUEBEC PROVINCIAL CRISIS—Adjourned debate resumed on Sir John A. Macdonald's amendment to Supply ( Mr. Mitchell ).....	2013
Amendment ( Sir John A. Macdonald ) negatived on division. Yeas, 70; Nays, 112.....	2025
SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—
IX. IMMIGRATION AND QUARANTINE.....	2025
Votes 60 and 61 agreed to.
X. PENSIONS.....	2032
Votes 62 to 65 agreed to.
—
TUESDAY, APRIL 16TH.
JACQUES CARTIER CONTROVERTED ELECTION—Judge's Report ( Mr. Speaker )....	2032
Adulteration of Food Bill —
Introduced ( Mr. Archibald ) and read the first time [Bill 76].....	2032
Message from His Excellency —
BILLS ASSENTED TO.....	2033
Malt Duty Bill [BILL 61]—
After debate, read the third time and passed ( Mr. Laurier ).....	2033
Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Bill [BILL 63]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Smith, Westmoreland ).....	2036
Deckloads Act Amendment Bill (BILL 62)—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Smith, Westmoreland ) .....	2036

	PAGE
Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill [BILL 65]—
Third reading postponed ( Mr. Cartwright ).....	2036
NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY—Resolution reported.....	2038
Independence of Parliament Bill [BILL 14]—
Ordered for third reading ( Mr. Laflamme ).....	2058
Motion in amendment ( Sir John A. Macdonald ) negatived on a division.
Motion in amendment ( Mr. Ouimet ) negatived on a division. Yeas, 69; Nays, 96.....	2039
Motion in amendment ( Mr. Wallace , South Norfolk) negatived on a division.....	2039
Bill read the third time and passed.
Insolvent Insurance Companies Bill [BILL 65]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Cartwright ).....	2042
SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—
XI.—MILITIA.....	2042
Votes 66 to 75 and 77 agreed to.
—
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17TH.
THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S REPLY TO THE ADDRESS OF BOTH HOUSES—Pre- sented by Mr. Cartwright.....	2055
CANADA PACIFIC RAILWAY SUPPLIES—Question, Mr. Bunster; Answer, Mr. Cartwright.....	2056
CASCUMPEC HARBOUR—Question, Mr. Perry; Answer, Mr. Cartwright.....	2056
POSTAL FACILITIES AT LAVELLE CORNERS—Question, Mr. Bourbeau; Answer, Mr. Huntington.....	2056
MEASUREMENTS OF SHIPPING—Question, Mr. Killam; Answer, Mr. Smith (Westmoreland).....	2056
DALLAS AND STONEWALL POSTAL FACILITIES—Question, Mr. Schultz; Answer, Mr. Huntington.....	2056
RED RIVER IMPROVEMENTS—Question, Mr. Schultz; Answer, Mr. Smith (Westmoreland).....	2057
QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—Press Correspondence (Mr. Gibbs, South Ontario)...	2057
NAMES AND SALARIES OF OFFICIALS—Motion for Return (Mr. McCarthy) .....	2067
Debate suspended at six o'clock.
Bible Christian Church in Canada Missionary Society Bill [BILL 72]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Burk ).....	2068
Victoria Elizabeth Lyon Divorce Bill [BILL 74]—
Motion for third reading ( Mr. Cameron )—Motion agreed to on division. Yeas, 68; Nays, 33. Bill read the third time and passed.....	2069
Brockville and Ottawa and Canada Central Railway Com- panies Bill [BILL 9]—
Senate amendments concurred in ( Mr. Galbraith ). .....	2069

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xvii

PAGE

Canada Vine Growers Association Bill [BILL 39]—
Order discharged and Bill withdrawn ( Mr. Smith, Peel ) . . . . .	2069
Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill [BILL 4]—
Considered in Committee ( Mr. Irving ) . . . . .	2069

THURSDAY, APRIL 18TH.

SATURDAY SITTINGS—Motion ( Mr. Cartwright )—Motion agreed to . . . . .	2072
Imprisonment in Default of Sureties Bill [BILL 73]—
Read the second and third times and passed ( Mr. Laflamme ) . . . . .	2073
Election Act Amendment Bill [BILL 20]—
Read the second time and considered in Committee ( Mr. Laflamme ) . . . . .	2073

SATURDAY, APRIL 20TH.

Manitoba Conflicting Land Claims Bill [BILL 46]—
Motion to disagree with Senate amendments ( Mr. Mills )—After a short debate, motion agreed to . . . . .	2078
SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—
XIII. OCEAN AND RIVER SERVICE . . . . .	2081
Votes 113 and 120 to 126 agreed to.
XIV. LIGHTHOUSE AND COAST SERVICE . . . . .	2087
Votes 127 and 128 agreed to.
XV. FISHERIES . . . . .	2090
Votes 130 to 132 agreed to.
XVI. SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS . . . . .	2100
Votes 133 to 138 agreed to.
XVII. MARINE HOSPITALS FOR SICK AND DISTRESSED SEAMEN . . . . .	2101
Votes 139 to 147 agreed to.
XVIII. STEAMBOAT INSPECTION . . . . .	2103
Vote 148 agreed to.
XIX. INSPECTION OF INSURANCE COMPANIES . . . . .	2103
Vote 149 agreed to.
XXI. GEOLOGICAL SURVEY . . . . .	2104
Vote 150 agreed to.
XXII. INDIANS . . . . .	2109
Votes 151 to 165 agreed to.

	PAGE
TUESDAY, APRIL 23RD.
Election Act Amendment Bill [BILL 20]—
Considered in Committee ( Mr. Laflamme ).....	2116
SUPPLY—THE TARIFF—
Moved “That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.”—( Mr. Cartwright ) .....	2122
Moved in amendment—
“ That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved, that, whereas, one million dollars worth of tobacco is imported every year, and, whereas that plant might be cultivated to advantage in this country, this House is of the opinion that the cultivation thereof should be encouraged by the abolition of duties on tobacco grown in Canada. ”—( Mr. Bolduc .)
Motion in amendment ( Mr. Bolduc ) negatived on division. Yeas, 32; Nays, 90 .....	2140
SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—
XXII. INDIANS. .....	2140
Votes 167 to 179 agreed to.
XXIII. MISCELLANEOUS .....	2141
Votes 180 to 183 and 185 and 186 agreed to.
—
WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24TH.
CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY (FORT WILLIAM EXTENSION)—Question, Mr. Mc- Callum; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	2142
CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY (BRITISH COLUMBIA TERMINUS)—Question, Mr. McInnes; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie.....	2142
BRITISH COLUMBIA PENITENTIARY—Question, Mr. McInnes; Answer, Mr. Mac- kenzie.....	2143
FRASER RIVER SALMON HATCHERY—Question, Mr. McInnes; Answer, Sir Albert J. Smith .....	2143
PEMBINA BRANCH RAILWAY CROSSINGS—Question, Mr. Schultz; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie. .....	2143
CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY (ROUTE FROM NEPIGON TO THUNDER BAY BRANCH) —Motion for Report (Mr. Tupper)—Motion agreed to.....	2143
LA BANQUE NATIONALE—Motion for Correspondence (Mr. Rochester)—After a short debate, motion agreed to.....	2144
MAILS ON THE LONDON, HURON AND BRUCE RAILWAY—Motion for Corres- pondence (Mr. Greenway)—After explanation, motion withdrawn.....	2150
PERMANENT AND EXTRA CLERKS AND MESSENGERS—Motion for Statement (Mr. Kirkpatrick)—Motion agreed to.....	2150
WELLAND CANAL IMPROVEMENTS—Motion for Return (Mr. Jones, South Leeds) —After a short debate, motion agreed to.....	2151
BRIDGE ON THE RIVER CHAUDIÈRE—Motion for Correspondence (Mr. Fréchette) —Motion agreed to.....	2152
FOREIGN TRAWLS OFF THE COAST OF NOVA SCOTIA—Motion for Correspondence (Mr. MacKay, Cape Breton)—After a short debate, motion agreed to...	2152

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xix

	PAGE
COW BAY BREAKWATER—Motion for Return ( Mr. McDonald , Cape Breton)— Motion agreed to.....	2154
VALUATORS EMPLOYED ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—Motion for Statement ( Mr. Roy )—Motion agreed to .....	2154
Stamps on Promissory Notes Bill [BILL 4]— Considered in Committee, read the third time and passed ( Mr. Irving )....	2154
Law of Evidence Amendment Bill [BILL 40]— Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Kirkpatrick ).....	2158
Building Societies Law Amendment Bill [BILL 55]— Read the second time ( Mr. Gibbs , South Ontario).....	2158
LOAN OF 1876—Adjourned debate on Mr. McCarthy's proposed motion for Statement, resumed.....	2158 Motion, slightly amended by consent, agreed to.

---

THURSDAY, APRIL 25TH.

Election Act Amendment Bill [BILL 30]— After a short debate, Bill read the third time and passed ( Mr. Laflamme )	2160
SUPPLY—THE TARIFF— Moved, "That the Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply."—( Mr. Cartwright ) Moved in amendment— "That all the words after 'that' to the end of the said motion be left out, and the following words inserted instead thereof:—'In the opinion of this House, it is advisable to impose a duty of seventy-five cents per ton, upon all coals imported into the Dominion, so as to help to meet the financial deficiency, and, at the same time, give a stimulus to a most important industry.'"—( Mr. MacKay , Cape Breton).....	2163
Motion in amendment ( Mr. MacKay , Cape Breton) negatived on division. Yeas, 27; Nays, 135.....	2196
SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE— XI. MILITIA.....	2197
Vote 78 agreed to.

---

FRIDAY, APRIL 26TH.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE (PETER SUTHERLAND)—Report presented ( Mr. Young ) .....	2201
PRINTING COMMITTEE (DISTRIBUTION OFFICE)—Motion to adopt Reports ( Mr. Ross , West Middlesex)—Motion, with leave of the House, withdrawn..	2201
INGONISH HARBOUR—Moved— "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair, for the House to go again into Com- mittee of Supply."—( Mr. Cartwright )

Moved in amendment—

- “That by a Return of the House of the 16th February, 1877, dated 1st March, 1877,—and also by a Return to an Order of the House of the 19th March, 1877, and dated 20th March, 1877, for copies of all tenders and contracts, plans and other correspondence, relating to the Ingonish Harbor contract, in Nova Scotia, it appears :—
- “That on the 10th of May, 1873, the contract for building Ingonish Harbour was awarded to F. W. McKenrie, for the sum of $78,208.60; that in pursuance thereof an agreement was entered into, on the 22nd July, 1873, between F. W. McKenrie and the Minister of Public Works; that under the terms of the agreement, afterwards renewed between Ross and McKay, to whom the contract was transferred by the said F. W. McKenrie and the present Government on the 5th February, 1874, it was stipulated, that any change which the Government Engineer deemed necessary to be made in the original plans, should be so made by the contractor; and if extra expenses were entailed by such changes, the contractor should be paid extra for them; but should the change lessen the original expense, then such should be deducted from the amount of the contract;
- “That by the said contract, the said Ross and McKay were bound to build a Breakwater 700 feet long, and were to make good all damages it might sustain during its construction; that they were to dredge a channel into the harbour 200 feet wide, and fifteen feet deep; that the contract was to be finished on or before the 31st December, 1874; that the contractor was liable for any salary or wages due the person superintending the work, in behalf of the Government, for any time he might serve in so superintending beyond the 31st December, 1874;
- “That on the 30th September, 1875, Mr. Perley, Government Engineer, six months after the work should have been finished, recommended extra work, estimated to cost $2,000;
- “That it appears the said Breakwater was not taken off the hands of the contractors before the 17th February, 1877; that at that time there was but 565 feet of the Breakwater the contractor was to construct completed—or 135 feet less than allowed by the terms of the contract;
- “That it does not appear that the channel has been dredged 200 feet wide and 15 feet deep, as per terms of contract, and as recommended on the 26th January, 1876, both by Mr. Perley and Mr. Baillarge; but on the contrary, the papers go to show that it has been dredged only 60 feet wide and 12 feet deep;
- “That it appears the sum of $1,975 was paid one Angus McLeod, superintendent on this work, in behalf of the Government, for attendance subsequent to the 31st December, 1874, the time at which the work should have been completed;
- “That notwithstanding the reduction in the length of the Breakwater, and that the dredging was not done to the width of 200 feet, and to the depth of 15 feet, but only to 60 feet wide and 12 feet deep, and the extension of the time for building it to over two years, the Government paid the full amount of contract, $78,208.60; and also extras to the amount of $3,643, without deducting therefrom the allowance for the Breakwater being less in length, and the dredging less in width and depth as aforesaid, and without deducting the $1,975 paid for the services of Superintendent after the time allowed for the completion of the contract.
- “That, in the opinion of this House, there was paid to the contractors a great deal more than ought to have been paid, causing serious loss to the country.”

2203

After debate, motion in amendment (Mr. McDonald, Cape Breton) negatived on division. Yeas, 49; Nays, 98.....

2212

Building Societies Law Amendment Bill [BILL 55]—

Read the third time and passed (Mr. Gibbs, South Ontario).....

2212

Montreal Building Association Bill [BILL 71]—

Read the third time and passed (Mr. Holton).....

2212

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xxi

PAGE

SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—

XXXI. Post Office.....	2212
Vote 205 agreed to.
XII. PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS CHARGEABLE TO CAPITAL.....	2220
Votes 84 to 91 and 93 agreed to.

SATURDAY, APRIL 27TH.

QUEBEC BUILDING SOCIETIES ACT—Bill in amendment proposed ( Mr. Holton ). . . . .	2226
GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS IN ELECTIONS—Remarks.....	2227

SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—

XII. PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS CHARGEABLE TO CAPITAL .....	2248
Vote 94 agreed to.
XII. PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS CHARGEABLE TO INCOME .....	2248
Votes 95 to 104 agreed to.

MONDAY, APRIL 29TH.

PRINTING COMMITTEE—Motion to adopt Report ( Mr. Ross , West Middlesex)— Motion agreed to.....	2253
SYSTEM OF LETTING CONTRACTS—Remarks .....	2255
Debate suspended at Six o'clock.

SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—

XII. PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS CHARGEABLE TO INCOME.....	2280
Votes 105 to 112 agreed to.
XIV. LIGHTHOUSE AND COAST SERVICE.....	2289
Vote 129 agreed to.
XIII. OCEAN AND RIVER SERVICE.....	2289
Votes 114 to 119 agreed to.
XI. MILITIA.....	2291
Vote 76 agreed to.
XII. PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS CHARGEABLE TO CAPITAL .....	2291
Vote 92 agreed to.
III. CIVIL GOVERNMENT .....	2291
Vote 6 agreed to.
XXIV. COLLECTION OF REVENUE: CUSTOMS .....	2291
Vote 187 agreed to.
XXV. COLLECTION OF REVENUE: EXCISE .....	2292
Vote 188 agreed to.

	PAGE
TUESDAY, APRIL 30TH.
GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS IN ELECTIONS—Personal Explanation ( Sir John A. Macdonald ).....	2293
SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—
XXVI. COLLECTION OF REVENUE: CULLING TIMBER.....	2293
Vote 189 agreed to.
XXVII. COLLECTION OF REVENUE: WEIGHTS AND MEASURES AND GAS....	2296
Votes 190 to 192 agreed to.
XXVIII. COLLECTION OF REVENUE: INSPECTION OF STAPLES .....	2303
Votes 193 to 195 agreed to.
XXIX. COLLECTION OF REVENUE: ADULTERATION OF FOOD .....	2303
Vote 196 agreed to.
XXX. COLLECTION OF REVENUE: PUBLIC WORKS .....	2303
Votes 197 to 204 agreed to.
XXXI. COLLECTION OF REVENUE: DOMINION LANDS... ..	2336
Vote 206 agreed to.
XXXII. MINOR REVENUES .....	2336
Vote 207 agreed to.

---

WEDNESDAY, MAY 1ST.

Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill—
Introduced ( Mr. Blake ) and read the first time [Bill 77].....	2336
PRINTING COMMITTEE—Motion to adopt Report ( Mr. Ross , West Middlesex)—
Motion agreed to.....	2342
OFFICIAL REPORTING OF THE DEBATES—Motion to adopt Report ( Mr. Ross , West Middlesex)—Motion agreed to.....	2344
MAP OF THE ROUTE OF THE PACIFIC RAILWAY—Remarks .....	2348
TENDERS FOR THE COMPLETION OF THE PEMBINA BRANCH—Question, Mr. Ryan ;
Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .. ..	2349
COLCHESTER (N.S.) MAIL SERVICE—Motions for Correspondence ( Mr. Tupper )
Motions agreed to.....	2349
TOLLS ON THE UPPER OTTAWA—Motion for Orders-in-Council ( Mr. White ,
North Renfrew)—Motion agreed to.....	2349
REMOVAL OF COUNTY JUDGE AND STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATE AT NANAIMO—
Motion for Return ( Mr. Bunster ).....	2350
Debate suspended at six o'clock.
NAMES AND SALARIES OF OFFICIALS—Debate resumed on motion for Return
( Mr. McCarthy ).....	2353
Moved in amendment—
“That the said resolution be amended, by adding to it the following words; and that such return be referred to a Special Committee of seven members to report on the same, with power to send for persons, papers and records.”—
( Mr. Kirkpatrick .)

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xxiii

PAGE

Moved in amendment to the amendment—

“That inasmuch as is alleged that the report submitted to the Department to be answered, is different from the return asked for by this House, and, inasmuch as it is further alleged that such return as made omits matters asked for, and adds matters not asked for, and, inasmuch as it is alleged that such omissions and additions are calculated to mislead this House, and are a contempt of this House, be it resolved that the return be referred to a Committee to enquire into and report upon.”—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

Motion in amendment to amendment ( Sir John A. Macdonald ) negatived on division. Yeas, 47; Nays, 81.....	2363
Motion in amendment ( Mr. Kirkpatrick ) negatived on same division.
Motion agreed to.....	2365

THURSDAY, MAY 2ND.

VENTILATION OF THE CHAMBER—Remarks .....	2366
SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE .....	2366
Motion in amendment to Resolution 109 ( Mr. Stephenson ) negatived on division. Yeas, 40; Nays, 86.....	2383
Message from His Excellency—
TERRITORIES IN BRITISH NORTH AMERICA.....	2384
Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill [BILL 77]—
Read the second time ( Mr. Mackenzie ).....	2384
Supreme and Exchequer Courts Bill [BILL 68]—
Read the second time ( Mr. Laflamme ).....	2385
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill [BILL 75]—
Read the second time ( Mr. Mackenzie ).....	2385

FRIDAY, MAY 3RD.

PRINTING COMMITTEE—Motion to adopt Report ( Mr. Ross , West Middlesex)...	2385
Motion in amendment ( Mr. Young ).....	2385
Amendment ( Mr. Young ) negatived on division. Yeas, 53; Nays, 69....	2386
THE NORTHERNLY BOUNDARIES OF CANADA—Motion to consider Resolutions ( Mr. Mills )—Motion agreed to.....	2386
WATER AND GAS SUPPLY AT GOVERNMENT OFFICES AT MONCTON—Motion to ratify contract ( Mr. Mackenzie )—Motion agreed to.....	2394
Supreme and Exchequer Courts Bill [BILL 68]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Laflamme ).....	2394
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill [BILL 75]—
Considered in Committee ( Mr. Mackenzie ).....	2394
Message from His Excellency—
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.....	2408

	PAGE
SATURDAY, MAY 4TH.
IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION COMMITTEE—First and final Report—Presented by Mr. Trow .....	2408
Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill [BILL 77]—
Considered in Committee ( Mr. Mackenzie ).....	2408
CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—ANNUAL STATMENT ( Mr. Mackenzie ).....	2413
SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—
XII. PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS CHARGEABLE TO CAPITAL.....	2431
Votes 79 to 83 agreed to.
XXIII. MISCELLANEOUS.....	2453
Vote 184 agreed to.
II. CHARGES OF MANAGEMENT.....	2453
Vote 1 agreed to.
GOVERNMENT BUSINESS—Question, Sir John A. Macdonald ; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	2453

MONDAY, MAY 6TH.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS—Moved—
“That the Government business shall have precedence on Wednesday next, immediately after Routine Proceedings.”
Motion agreed to.....	2453
IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION COMMITTEE REPORT—Remarks.....	2453
Canadian Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill [BILL 52]—
Motion to disagree with Senate amendments ( Mr. Mackenzie ).....	2454
Motion agreed to on division. Yeas, 92; Nays, 32 .....	2460
Crimes of Violence Prevention Bill [BILL 77]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Mackenzie ).....	2460
SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR THE YEAR 1878.....	2466
Votes 208 to 225 agreed to.
GOVERNMENT BUSINESS—Orders discharged....	2485
Stamps on Bills and Notes Bill [BILL 43]—
Order discharged and Bill withdrawn ( Mr. Laurier ).....	2485
Colonization Railways Bill [BILL 32]—
Order discharged and Bill withdrawn ( Mr. Mills ).....	2485
Transfer of Lands and Estates Bill [BILL 47]—
Order discharged and Bill withdrawn ( Mr. Mills ).....	2485
Adulteration Act Amendment Bill [BILL 76]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Laurier ).....	2485

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

XIV

	PAGE
Message from His Excellency—
FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.....	2485
Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors Bill [BILL 75]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. Mackenzie ).....	2485
Manitoba Public Schools Bill [BILL 78]—
Read the first and second times ( Mr. Mills ).....	2486

TUESDAY, MAY 7TH.

CANADA CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY—Moved—

“That this House do ratify the Order in Council dated April 18th, 1878, respecting a subsidy to the Canada Central Railway Company, passed under authority of an Act to provide for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, 37th Victoria, chapter 14.”—(Mr. Mackenzie)..... 2487

Moved in amendment—

“That all the words after ‘that’ to the end of the said motion be left out, and the following words inserted instead thereof:—

“‘In the opinion of this House no subsidy should be granted to the Canada Central Railway Company for the construction of a Railway to connect with the Eastern Terminus of the Canada Pacific Railway, or the Georgian Bay Branch thereof, except upon an agreement being entered into by the Company to grant running powers on terms to be approved of by the Governor in Council to all Railways intersecting or connecting with the said Railway, in accordance with the provisions of the Canada Pacific Railway Act, 1874.’”
(Mr. Cameron)..... 2503

Motion in amendment (Mr. Cameron) negatived on division. Yeas, 54; Nays, 94..... 2516

Moved in amendment—

“That the following be added to the said motion:—That in ratifying the said Order-in-Council this House desires to express its opinion that no payment should be made to the Canada Central Railway Company on account of the subsidy for the construction of a Railway to connect with the Eastern Terminus of the Canada Pacific Railway or the Georgian Bay Branch thereof, upon rails delivered to the extent of 75 per cent. of the market value thereof, except upon rails delivered at some point of the line to be constructed, and upon condition that such rails do become the property of the Government, until they are laid on the road for use.”—(Mr. Bowell).

Motion in amendment (Mr. Bowell) negatived on division. Yeas, 53; Nays, 96..... 2518

Motion (Mr. Mackenzie) agreed to on division. Yeas, 115; Nays, 32..... 2519

THE GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL POLICY—Moved—

“That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to again into Committee of Supply.”—(Mr. Cartwright).

Moved in amendment—

“That the Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved, that the House regrets that in the face of annual deficits during the period in which the present Administration have been in power, amounting to $3,360,812.72, as appears from the Public Accounts, the annual expenditure has not been curtailed so as to confine it within the Revenue, and instead of practically adopting a policy of retrenchment, the Government have expended more in each of the years 1874-75, 1875-76 and 1876-77, than the largest amount ever expended prior to year 1874-75.”—(Mr. McCarthy)..... 2519

	PAGE
Motion in amendment ( Mr. McCarthy ) negatived on division. Yeas, 52; Nays, 80.....	2521
SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—
SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1879.....	2522
Votes 270 to 297 agreed to.

---

WEDNESDAY, MAY 8TH.

Manitoba Public Schools Bill [BILL 78]—
Read the third time and passed ( Mr. (Mills) ).....	2529
SUPPLY—IN COMMITTEE—
FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1878.....	2529
Votes 256 to 269 agreed to.
Pacific Railway Act Amendment Bill [BILL 52]—
Senate amendments insisted on.....	2530
SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.....	2530
Independence of Parliament Bill [BILL 47]—
Senate amendments concurred in ( Mr. Laflamme ).....	2546

---

THURSDAY, MAY 9TH.

BALLOT PAPERS—Question, Mr. Young ; Answer, Mr. Mackenzie .....	2549
INDEMNITY OF A MEMBER—Motion ( Mr. Dewdney )—Motion agreed to.....	2549
SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE .....	2549
Supply Bill—
Introduced ( Mr. Cartwright ) and read the first time [Bill 80].....	2550

---

SECOND SITTING.

Supply Bill [BILL 80]—
Read the second and third times and passed ( Mr. Cartwright ).....	2550
PROBATION—Communication from His Excellency ( Mr. Speaker ).....	2550
Supreme Court Bill [BILL 68]—
Motion to disagree with Senate amendments ( Mr. Laflamme )—Motion agreed to on a division.....	2550
Independence of Parliament Bill [BILL 41]—
Senate amendments concurred in ( Mr. Laflamme ).....	2551
ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE—Remarks.....	2553

---

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

xxvii

FRIDAY, MAY 10TH.

PAGE

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—Remarks ( Mr. Smith, Selkirk ).....	2558
MEMBERS SUMMONED TO ATTEND HIS EXCELLENCY IN THE SENATE CHAMBER	2564
BILLS ASSENTED TO.....	2564
SUPPLY BILL ASSENTED TO.....	2564
BILLS RESERVED.....	2565
His Excellency's Speech .....	2565
PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.....	2565

---

ERRATA VOL. V.

---

Page 1412, 1st col., at the end of Mr. Tupper's speech, insert the following :

" They might be sent to St. John by water at one-tenth the cost, and, in fact, it would be far better for the Government to hire vessels and send them that way than by railway, and they would make more money by it.

" MR. MCKAY (Colchester) said they might be sent that way for $12 a car-load, and the lowest cost on the railway would be $25 a car.

" MR. MACKENZIE—And that is very low.

" MR. MCKAY said it was very low, but he contended that the brick-makers of this country should be placed on a level with those of the United States. If the duty was taken off then the Canadian brick-maker might compete."

Page 1621, 2nd col., line 15, for "$12" read "50c."

Page 1640, 1st col., line 52, for "MacDonnell" read "McDonald (Cape Breton.)"

Page 1659, 2nd col., line 4, for "Jetté" read "Baby."

Page 1813, 2nd col., line 3, before "now" insert "not."

Page 1975, 2nd col., lines 11 and 12, for "The Government" read "L'Evenement."

Page 2009, 1st col., line 4, for "Taschereau" read "Mackenzie."

Page 2009, 2nd col., line 18, for "Cartwright" read "Blake."

Page 2086, 2nd col., line 28, for "Stephens" read "Stephenson."

Page 2140, 1st col., insert in Division the following names—Yeas :

"Baby,	Caron,	Langevin,	Pinsonneault,
Benoit,	✓ Casgrain,	Lanthier,	Platt,
Bernier,	Flesher,	Little,	Plumb,
Blanchet,	Fraser,	Macdonald (Kingston),	Pope (Compton),
Bolduc,	Gibbs (Ontario North),	Monteith,	Robinson,
Bourassa,	Haggart,	Montplaisir,	Rochester,
Bowell,	Harwood,	Orton,	Ryan.
Campbell,	Jones (Leeds),

Page 2558, 1st col., line 14, for "April" read "May."

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 26th March, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE QUEBEC PROVINCIAL CRISIS.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

MR. MACKENZIE delivered a Message from His Excellency the Governor-General.

MR. SPEAKER read the Message, and it is as follows:

“DUFFERIN.

“The Governor-General transmits to the House of Commons a Memorandum from His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, with accompanying documents, containing explanations in reference to the recent Ministerial changes in that Province.

“GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
“OTTAWA, 26th March, 1878.”

MR. MASSON said he would like to know whether the correspondence relative to the De Boucherville Ministry, as it was printed, could not be placed at once in the hands of members.

MR. MACKENZIE said he had but one copy printed.

MR. MASSON: Then it was printed in Quebec.

MR. MACKENZIE: Yes.

MR. MASSON: That is extraordinary. There must be copies somewhere.

MR. MACKENZIE: That is likely.

MR. MASSON: Does the hon. gentleman think it is too long to be printed in the Votes and Proceedings?

MR. MACKENZIE: I do not think that it should be so printed; but, by understanding, it might be printed and distributed to-morrow.

MR. LANGEVIN: I would suggest that the Address from the Legislative Assembly of Quebec, which was brought down, should be printed as well.

MR. MACKENZIE: I think that would do very well. The two can be printed together.

MR. MASSON: Is the correspondence which took place just before the dismissal of the Ministry included?

MR. MACKENZIE: I suppose so. The Government have nothing else in their possession, but I think it is there.

BILL INTRODUCED.

The following Bill was introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 60) To amend the Consolidated Insurance Act, 1877.—(Mr. Killam).

PILOTAGE ACTS AMENDMENT.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

MR. SMITH (Westmoreland) moved that the House, on Thursday next, go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:

“That it is expedient to provide that the Montreal Harbour Commissioners may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, make provision for licensing a second class of pilots for all steamers and for other vessels, not exceeding 250 tons register, and for other vessels exceeding 80 and not exceeding 250 tons register, navigating the River St. Lawrence between the harbour of Quebec and the upper limits of the harbour of Montreal, and may establish rates of pilotage to be paid by such steamers and vessels compulsorily, except ferry boats and steamers having on board a second class pilot as master or mate thereof, or vessels not exceeding 250 tons register when in tow of a steamer in charge of a licensed pilot; and to amend the Pilotage Acts of Canada accordingly.”

He said that this resolution contemplated the introduction of a Bill making a change in the Pilotage Law as concerned the River St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec, inclusive. At present all vessels under 250 tons register, registered in Canada, were exempt from paying pilotage dues; and all vessels below 250 tons, wherever they may have been registered, were also exempt. Experience had shown that, in connection with vessels below this size navigating the River St. Lawrence between these two points, a great many collisions had arisen; and on this subject a petition had been received from the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, which, bye-and-bye, he would read; and also a communication from Sir Hugh Allan, who was a large steamboat owner, and largely interested in shipping and the navigation of the river, recommending that second class pilots should be established, and that all sailing vessels between 80 and 250 tons should be made subject to pilotage dues, as well as all steamers of whatever size they might be. Practically, this resolution would require that all steamers, of whatever description, below 250 tons, and other vessels engaged in that service, should take the services of second class pilots; and all vessels below 80 tons would not require a pilot on board at all.

MR. MITCHELL: Will any discrimination be made in the rate of pilotage fees between first and second class pilots?

MR. SMITH: It is left entirely to the Harbour Commissioners to make rules, which, however, are subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. That power is now possessed.

MR. LANGEVIN: Is the pilotage rate now fixed by law or left entirely to the Harbour Commissioners?

MR. SMITH: They have the power; yes.

MR. LANGEVIN: In this case is a rate to be established by the Bill?

MR. SMITH: No; it will be established by the Harbour Commissioners, subject, however, to the approval of the Governor in Council. This is intended to secure the services of skilful men on board of all steamers and of the smaller class of vessels. They will require to have a second-class license, and it will be sufficient if one of the hands or the captain or mate has the certificate of a second-class pilot.

MR. MITCHELL: Am I to understand that the Bill which the hon. gentleman intends to introduce will provide that the owners of decked vessels and the smaller class of steamers, or any steamers under a certain class, shall be entitled, if they choose to hire a holder of a second-class certificate as an officer, a captain or a mate or a hand?

MR. SMITH: Yes.

MR. BLANCHET: Will this proposed amendment to the Pilotage Act affect the pilots below Quebec.

MR. SMITH: No.

Motion agreed to.

MR. SMITH.

MALT DUTY BILL.—[BILL No. 61.]

(Mr. Laurier.)

FIRST READING.

Resolution reported from Committee of the Whole (March 22nd) read the first and second time and agreed to.

MR. LAURIER introduced a Bill (No. 61) Respecting the duty on malt.

Bill read the first time.

KEEWATIN MUNICIPALITIES BILL.—
[BILL No. 23]

(Mr. Mills.)

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the said Bill.

(In the Committee)

On Section 21,

MR. LANGEVIN suggested that the ballot system, as adopted in the Province of Quebec, should be introduced into the Bill.

MR. MILLS said the Bill provided against frauds. The ballots were initialed and endorsed with the name of the returning officer, and it was impossible to carry them out of the poll house without being detected. The provision in the Bill was sufficient to prevent them being taken away, which was all that could be accomplished by the scheme proposed by the hon. member for Charlevoix.

MR. LANGEVIN said that a voter after coming out of the compartment in which he went to mark his ticket, might rush out, unperceived by the officer, with his ticket in his pocket. The result of which act might be fraud. That ticket would be marked by an outside party and given to another elector to deposit, who would return with a similar blank ticket to be marked and handed to another voter in the same manner, and so continue until the end of the election. True, the offender could be punished, but the fraud continued. Under the system adopted in Quebec this was avoided.

Mr. MILLS said the provision was in the Municipal Law of Ontario. It had been suggested that there might be an understanding between a voter and a candidate, or the agent of a candidate, that he, the voter, should profess his inability to read with a view to allowing the party to see how he marked his ballot. The agent might exercise undue influence over voters in that way, and might practically do away with the secrecy of the ballot in some instances. To prevent that undue influence or fraudulent votes being given the provision was inserted.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

On Section 96.

Mr. PLUMB said it would be wise to consider whether the children should be brought up to speak English. If we were to give them our institutions, it was necessary the children should have a thorough knowledge of the English language, unless the Government intended to have all their laws translated.

Mr. MASSON said he did not see any inconvenience in allowing these people to maintain their own language. They would be clever enough to see that it was to their advantage to learn the English tongue.

Mr. MILLS said that it would be time thrown away to educate them in any other language except the one spoken by their own people. They would learn other languages afterwards.

Mr. WHITE (North Renfrew) said the English language should be specified as one of the requisite branches to be taught in those schools. It was strange that a complex machinery should be framed for the benefit of these people, and no provision made to teach them the language in which those laws were framed.

Mr. MACKENZIE said those people would quickly learn the English language. They had to live, as a whole, among a large English community growing around them, and, no doubt, would be quite as anxious to learn English as Englishmen would be to learn their language under similar circumstances.

Section agreed to.

On section 105,

Mr. BOWELL said that without desiring to discuss the question of separate schools, either Protestant or Catholic, he would simply state that he objected to the legislation embraced in the present Bill, as well as that in the North-West Territories Act. He had no objection to the people of Keewatin or the North-West establishing separate schools, and to having all the rights and privileges of the law in managing them, and in exempting certain classes holding different views in regard to education, but he questioned the propriety of Parliament imposing upon any section of the country a school system which that section might not desire or require.

Mr. PLUMB said he thought the Dominion Parliament had a perfect right to impose that kind of legislation upon territories under its own control, and the point raised by the hon. member for North Hastings (Mr. Bowell) was not well taken. It was quite proper that Parliament should adopt the measures contained in the Bill, because the people of Keewatin would not have the power to do it for a long period, and they should be protected in the meantime.

Section agreed to.

On Schedule C,

Mr. PLUMB said the arrangements provided in the Bill for making the ballot secret were quite unnecessary. In the United States, where the system originated, there was no secrecy. The ballots were printed and distributed by thousands to show the candidates of the parties, and the names of the candidates for whom an elector voted were fully known, unless he had pasted other names on the ballot. There was no secrecy about the voting, and never had been. He wished that to be distinctly understood, because there was an impression abroad that the system of voting in the United States was a secret one. On the other hand, the whole of the legislation by the Dominion Parliament had been to endeavour to make the ballot secret. The system of the ballot was a harmless one, but it was unnecessary, especially in the present Bill, and it would never be carried into effect.

MR. TUPPER: Before we pass from Schedule C, I may say, I suppose, that the real object of this mode of action, which is somewhat new and which is not in our Election Law, is to provide against a ballot being taken out, and yet it is not carried so far as to provide means of identification as to the party by whom the vote was given. Under the Ontario law, as I understand it, every ballot is so marked that it can ultimately be discovered by scrutiny by whom the vote was cast in each case; but that is not our law.

MR. MILLS: The main object is to prevent an improper ballot paper being deposited in the ballot box. The initials of the returning officer are placed on the ballot paper, and, therefore, he knows that it is the genuine paper which he has given to the voter so that the ballot box cannot be stuffed.

MR. TUPPER: In fact, the voter cannot put in any paper other than the ballot handed him by the officer.

MR. MILLS: Yes.

MR. TUPPER: I would like to ask the hon. the First Minister whether it is proposed to amend the Ballot Act for the House of Commons in some such mode as this, by which the same fraud on the ballot, which obviously can take place without some such protection, would be entirely prevented.

MR. MACKENZIE: Well, we have been considering some such amendment.

MR. PLUMB: Will this Bill be translated into language that these people understand.

MR. MILLS: Undoubtedly that can be done.

MR. MACKENZIE: The Council can do that or not, as they please. They can take care of themselves.

Section agreed to.

MR. PLUMB.

On the motion to report the Bill,

MR. MITCHELL said the Bill was one of such an extraordinary character that it should not be allowed to pass without a protest being made. While its details were being described, he had not raised a single objection which would impair its efficiency or prevent its becoming as efficient a law as possible. No one on either side of the House could say that he had in any way attempted to limit the judgment of hon. gentlemen in their action in relation to the Bill, and he therefore felt that the insinuation thrown out by the hon. the First Minister was quite unwarranted and uncalled for. He wished publicly to disclaim any desire to protract the business of the House, but he did feel it his duty as a representative of the people, when a measure of such an extraordinary character was applied to a section of the country, to show that it was not wanted. The district for which this legislation was intended comprised, he was informed, about 1,500 souls altogether, of whom something like 80 were voters. Now, if such a piece of machinery was proposed to be introduced into the city of London, would not the utmost consideration and the gravest deliberation be given to it by the most careful lawyers? If it was offered to Montreal, Halifax, Toronto, St. John, Quebec or Hamilton, would it, he asked the House and the country, be adopted? He must say that the attempt of the Government to place a measure of that kind at work for 1,500 ignorant Icelanders, who had never had the opportunity of understanding the administration of municipal affairs or exercising the powers to be vested in them, was the most preposterous piece of legislation which had ever been submitted during his experience as a public man. Let anyone consider what this legislation would cost and look at what the working of the Bill would involve. He was told there was only one English-speaking man in the district. How, then, were these people to learn the language? Was the Bill to be translated into Icelandic? Were the people to have tutors to teach them, or were men to be sent from Ontario and Quebec for that purpose? He presumed none would be taken from the Maritime Provinces as tutors, because the measure was founded on the municipal institutions of Ontario. How were the people to work out the innumerable provisions of a municipal law which was based upon the experience of an independent community like that of Ontario or Quebec, or the older Provinces of this Dominion? How was it possible that these people destitute of all knowledge as to the working of such institution could judiciously work out such a piece of machinery as was contained in the Bill? But he would assume that they had intelligence, that they would be educated, that men would be sent there to inform them. Under those circumstances he asked what the country would think of the Government now in power that had created the enormous expense which would necessarily be involved and which would likely be perpetuated for the sake of governing 1,500,000 people when they should have been attached to Manitoba district? He asked how they could justify the establishment of such an elaborate piece of machinery in a wilderness like that? The Government had a majority which could carry out their design, and thus saddle the country with an immense expenditure in addition to the sums expended in relation to other matters. All, therefore, the Opposition could do was to endeavour to improve such Bills as much as possible. For his own part he had not endeavoured to embarrass the passage or perfection of the measure. His friends and himself had endeavoured to meet the wishes of those on the other side, and he must say that their representations had been frankly viewed by the hon. Minister who had charge of the Bill. He objected to it however, as entirely unnecessary. There might be some other and more simple means whereby the temporal government of that section of the country might be established until it was prepared by its increased population, by the extent of its settlement, by its civilization and by the education of its people, to obtain and carry out a great measure such as this. The House, and particularly the Opposition, should not be asked to take upon themselves the responsibility of such a measure of legislation. They should not assume the responsibility of throwing on the country an amount of expenditure which was unwarranted, unjustified by necessity, and uncalled for by the people of Keewatin. He had felt it his duty to speak out plainly on this matter. He opposed the extravagance of such legislation and the expenditure it would necessitate, and predicted that total failure would be the result of giving to a people who did not understand our institutions, the responsibility of working out such a measure.

Bill ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

THE QUEBEC PROVINCIAL CRISIS.

REMARKS.

MR. TUPPER said that, before they proceeded with the next business, he would draw the attention of the hon. the First Minister to an act which he thought the right hon. gentleman who led the Opposition (Sir John A. Macdonald) had some reason to complain of. An important document, namely, the explanation of the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, that day presented, was brought down by the hon. Minister and submitted to the House, and it was assumed that, being brought here by the Government, that the members of the Government had already had an opportunity of knowing the contents of that document. It was asked for by the right hon. gentleman (Sir John A. Macdonald) who wished to make himself acquainted with the contents of this extremely important document, and he had just received it when the Clerk of the House asked for it for the purpose of docketing it in the usual manner, giving the right hon. gentleman to understand that it would be returned in two minutes. Immediately afterwards, the document had been taken possession of by a Minister, he believed, for the purpose of communicating it to a portion of the Press and excluding it from another portion of the Press. He thought this was a matter which claimed the attention of the Government.

MR. MACKENZIE: I really do not think there is much ground of complaint. I asked the Chairman of the Printing Committee with regard to it, and he told me it was in the printers' hands at four o'clock, or the translator's hand, I forget which.

MR. MASSON said it was not in the printers' hands, because it had not left the translator's hands yet.

MR. BOWELL: The document has not yet been placed before the Printing Committee.

MR. SPEAKER said his attention had been called to the matter a short time ago. He believed that when the document was brought in it was laid on the table, and was taken possession of by the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Masson), who handed it to the right hon. member for Kingston (Sir John A. Macdonald.) The Clerk informed the latter that it was to be printed immediately, and requested it to be handed to him for the purpose of recording it. At six o'clock the document was in the hands of the Clerk, who did not understand that the hon. member for Kingston wished to have it returned to him. On the way to his room the Clerk was met by the Minister of Inland Revenue, who asked for the document for a moment. He could scarcely refuse, and he gave the hon. gentleman the document for a few moments. Then, not finding the document returned to him at the time he expected, he sent to enquire for it, and the Minister of Inland Revenue informed the messenger that some other member had taken it. Afterwards the Clerk, in looking up the document, found it in one of the rooms, where a gentleman was making a precis of it, an hon. member of the House being present at the time. The document went immediately to the hands of the translators, who were now working hard at it with a view of getting it at once into the hands of the printers, ready for to-morrow. He did not suppose it was the intention of anyone to do wrong, and the Clerk had no intention of treating the hon. member for Kingston with any discourtesy, and had no idea at all that he wished the document handed back to him.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. TUPPER said he did not wish to be understood as complaining of any discourtesy on the part of the Clerk; he had no intention of doing so; but he did complain that a document of a public character, brought down here by the Government, should be taken out of the hands of the right hon. gentleman who led the Opposition in this House, and communicated to that part of the Press which was in accord with the opinions of the hon. Minister, before a record was made of the document. They complained that no opportunity was permitted the Opposition to become acquainted with the document before it was communicated to members of the Press.

MR. MACKENZIE said the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Tupper) seemed to think no one had any right to the document except the hon. member for Kingston (Sir John A. Macdonald). The hon. member for East Quebec (Mr. Laurier) had just the same rights in this House as the member for Kingston. The hon. member for East Quebec had no opportunity of seeing the document before it was brought down, and he had precisely the same right to look at the paper as the hon. member for Kingston had. The document was not taken out of the right hon. gentleman's hands by the member for Quebec East, but by the Clerk, who was not aware that it was to be returned. He (Mr. Mackenzie) was surprised that such a charge should have been brought.

MR. MASSON said he admitted that the hon. the Minister of the Interior had a perfect right to obtain the paper, but he had not the right to take it out of the hands of the Clerk, who would, otherwise, have returned it to the right hon. member for Kingston, from whom he had borrowed it for a few moments. The hon. Minister, it appeared, handed the paper over to the Press; the consequence was, if it were necessary to have it translated to-morrow the translators would be delayed a whole evening waiting for it. The reproach he had to make to the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue was that he had taken this document and had given it to his party Press to the exclusion of that part of the Press representing the Opposition.

MR. MACKENZIE said he offered every facility to the Press to get every document, as soon as possible, which came before the House.

MR. LAURIER said he had not known the document had been in the possession of any hon. member. He had asked it from the Clerk as a matter of courtesy, and he had communicated it to the gentlemen of the Press as a matter of courtesy. He had handed it for a few moments only to the gentlemen of the Press, and thought to have had it back after a few minutes. As the time elapsed he was reminded of it by the Clerk, and immediately set to work to get it back. He could not have done more.

MANITOBA CLAIMS BILL—[BILL No. 46]

(Mr. Mills.)

SECOND READING.

Order for second reading read.

MR. MILLS said this Bill was very short and the object very simple. In Statute 38 Vic., chap. 53, 7th section, there was the following provision in relation to the functions of the Commissioner for the purpose of settling disputed land claims in Manitoba:—

“The Commissioners shall not receive or proceed upon any claim until each of the adverse or conflicting claimants has made before the Commissioners, an affidavit or affirmation in writing, signed by him, that such claim is just and well founded, to the best of his knowledge and belief, &c., and that he has, at least one month before the making of the affidavit or affirmation, caused to be served on the party having, or supposed to have, such adverse claim, notice in writing of his claim, and of his intention to bring the same before the said Commissioners, and of the time when it is intended to be so brought, and a copy of such notice shall be annexed to the affidavit or affirmation.”

The House would see, by this particular section, that if any party desired to prevent the Commissioners from proceeding to decide conflicting claims of the respective parties to any lands in the Province of Manitoba, all that was necessary to do was to refuse to give the requisite notice. The result was that no action could be taken, except in the case of those who volunteered to comply with the provisions of the law, and appear before the Commissioners, for the purpose of having their respective claims determined. This Bill provided for the removal of this defect in clause 17, which stated:

“The Commissioners shall not receive or proceed upon any claim until the party by whom or on whose behalf the same is made, or if such party consists of more than one person then until some one of such persons has made and produced before the Commissioners an affidavit or affirmation in writing, signed by him, that to the best of his knowledge and belief his claims are well founded, that he is not aware of any adverse claims (if there be none), or if he is aware of any adverse claim, that he has, at least one month before the making of such affidavit, caused to be served on the party making, having or supposed to have such adverse claim, a notice in writing of his claim and of his intention to bring the same before the Commissioners at the time appointed by them for hearing the claims of the respective parties, and a copy of such notice shall be affixed to the affidavit or affirmation.”

This would put the parties in the same position as they would be in an ordinary suit. The Bill also provided that the Commissioners shall have power to enforce the attendance of witnesses, and to compel them to give evidence and so forth. There might be parties who could give evidence which would enable the Commissioners to determine in whom the title was properly vested, and it was necessary that power should be given to the Commissioners to compel such parties to give testimony. This Bill enabled the Commissioners to proceed without delay in the settlement of disputed claims.

MR. RYAN said he quite agreed with the hon. the Minister of the Interior, as to the necessity of this amendment. Last year, it had been found that several cases were not tried merely because one of the parties in each case, and the one who, probably, had no just claim to the land, was unwilling to give notice, and the trials could not be proceeded with on that account, and had to be postponed. Would the hon. the Minister inform him whether there were any Commissioners appointed to decide those claims, or whether Hon. Mr. Morris was still a Commissioner?

MR. MILLS said there were commissioners appointed, and Mr. Morris had resigned.

Bill read the second time.

House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on said Bill.

(In the Committee).

In reply to Mr. MITCHELL,

MR. MILLS said there were two or three hundred cases in Manitoba where different parties claimed the same property, and the Bill was for the purpose of enabling the Commissioner to report on the merits of their respective claims, and decide to whom the patents should be issued. The law provided that in cases of conflicting claims, advertisements should be inserted in newspapers calling upon the parties to submit their claims to the Commissioner. A time was appointed at which the Commissioner was to consider the claims and take evidence; but from a defect in the provisions of the law, the Commissioner was unable to proceed except with the concurrence of the parties interested. The great majority of the cases were therefore postponed, and the sitting of the Commission was postponed until the 1st May. The Commissioner made his report, and three months were allowed to elapse before any decision could be given by the Department upon any case, so that the claims of any party who might not have been notified were not likely to suffer.

MR. RYAN explained that claims were registered at the Land Office, and one of the officials was present, with all documents relating to the property in question, at each sitting of the Commission. He wished to guard the interests and position of non-residents who had claims to land in that section of the country, but who had no patents. The statement made by the hon. gentleman was very likely correct. Turning to 38 Vic., cap. 53, he found the following provision:

"The Governor may, from time to time, issue a Commission under the Great Seal, to such person or persons as he shall see fit, empowering him or them, or a majority of them, to investigate such cases as may be referred to them by the Minister charged with the administration of Dominion Lands, in respect of the following matters:

"1. Any such cases as may arise under the first and second sub-sections of the thirty-second section of the Act Thirty-third Victoria, chapter 3, and

"2. Any cases of adverse or conflicting claims between different persons to lands mentioned in the third and fourth sub-sections of the last mentioned Act, as the same are defined by the Act passed in the present Session of Parliament, intituled: 'An Act to amend an Act respecting the appropriations of certain lands in Manitoba,' in respect of which also it has been previously established to the satisfaction of the Minister charged with the Administration of Dominion Lands, that there has been undisturbed occupancy of the same as defined as last aforesaid."

Four distinct Acts were referred to. He held that when a Minister rose to explain the meaning of a short Act—as the hon. gentlemen termed it—such as this was, he should give some explanation to the House as to the effect of it before it was passed, as was proposed, sub silentio. Owing to the statement made, his objection was very much lessened, but he did hold that this Act, of which this Bill was an amendment, and of which it purported to be a remedial section, was most arbitrary, and he thought that it ought not to be continued in its present shape. It gave to the Minister, and the Minister alone, the power of making reference to the Commissioner of the matters in dispute that arose, when the only tribunal competent to settle titles as to property in such a case, should be the ordinary Courts of law. It should not rest with the will of any Minister, who might act arbitrarily, to have the power to refer to a tribunal to settle and determine claims between individuals. This point had struck him since he had referred to the Acts of which this Bill was an amendment. He hoped that when the hon. gentleman again brought forward an Act or Acts amending North-West Acts, he would have the whole of these Acts at hand and explain to the House the effect and bearing of the different Acts in question.

In reply to Mr. MCCARTHY,

MR. MILLS said, in the Act, provision for notice being given of the Commissioner's intention to sit and determine claims was made. He believed that in almost every case the names of the parties concerned were filed in the office, and inserted in a newspaper. All possible notice in this respect had been given.

Bill ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

MR. MILLS.

DECKLOADS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

(BILL No. 62.)

(Mr. Smith, Westmoreland)

FIRST READING.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider the following Resolution :

“ That it is expedient to repeal Section 23 of The Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, as respects all ships in Canadian Waters, from and after the time which may be fixed for that purpose by the proclamation of the approval and confirmation by Her Majesty in Council of the Act to be passed for effecting such repeal.”

(In the Committee.)

MR. SMITH said the object of his resolution was to authorize the introduction of a Bill to repeal a certain portion of The Merchant Shipping Act of 1876, passed in England, wherein it was provided that deck cargoes shall be measured and added to the registered tonnage of the vessel ; that the Custom House Officers enter the measurement in a log-book and give a kind of certificate to the Captain. What was specially desired to be repealed was that part of the law which applied to vessels while in Canadian waters, and he thought it would be admitted by all who had any personal knowledge of the matter that great inconvenience would be obviated thereby.

MR. MITCHELL : Will the hon. gentleman tell us the amount of revenue which the passing of this measure will deprive the country of. I may state that I approve of the measure, but I want to know by how much the revenue will be decreased.

MR. SMITH : It will affect the dues of a particular port only, not the general revenue of the country. When vessels go to England they have, under the Act of 1876, to pay duties on deck cargoes and on the registered tonnage. We cannot deny the fact that the Imperial Parliament has the right to legislate in connection with this matter, so far as vessels in their own waters are concerned, but I propose to repeal that portion of the law which applies to vessels in Canada. But I go further, because I think it unwise to make any distinction between vessels registered in Canada and others coming into our ports, and I propose, therefore, that the law shall be general, so that all vessels may be treated alike.

MR. MITCHELL : But I want to know to what extent the revenue will be affected.

MR. SMITH : The revenue will not be affected at all. If a vessel goes into the harbour of St. John or any other harbour she has to pay dues according to her registered tonnage. These dues will, therefore, be affected, but the ordinary revenue of the country will not be influenced in any way.

MR. MITCHELL : Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that, if a vessel is registered 900 tons and a reduction of 50 tons takes place on the deck cargo, that the Treasury of the country will not be affected? The harbours of Quebec and Montreal are public institutions ; besides all vessels have to pay towards the fund for sick seamen, so that the revenue of these public funds must be affected by a diminution of tonnage.

MR. SMITH : How is it possible to tell how much the Bill will affect the trade or the tonnage dues when they are not paid now? The Imperial Parliament has sought to impose tonnage dues on vessels in our waters, which, I think, it has no right to do. I think we are quite able to regulate that matter ourselves. I have, through my Department, had a good deal of correspondence with the Imperial Parliament in reference to this subject, and I seek to have the inconvenience which has been experienced removed.

MR. MITCHELL said the hon. gentleman was begging the question altogether. No one had attempted to dispute the propriety of the resolution ; he had no objection to the legislation which the hon. gentleman sought, because he thought the Canadian Government ought to have control over everything connected with their own ships and tonnage. Indeed, he (Mr. Mitchell) had asserted that principle many years ago, when his hon. friend was less loud in expressing his opinions. He (Mr. Mitchell) stated that they derived revenue from these ships, and he gave instances: the Sick Seamen's Fund, the dock dues of Quebec and Montreal, the river police and the pilotage perhaps, but he was not so sure of the latter; and the hon. gentleman disputed that it affected the revenue in any way. Now, the hon. gentleman admitted that it affected the revenue, but asked how much? He could easily ascertain that. If he referred to the Merchant Shipping Act, he would not find it exactly as he described it. He believed that, in the re-measurement of ships, the owners had a right to select whether they would have deck tonnage measure for the purpose of taking deck cargo or not.

MR. SMITH: The hon. gentleman is quite wrong.

MR. MITCHELL said he might be wrong, but he contended that, if a Minister came here with a proposed alteration of the law, he should be prepared to explain exactly what the alteration was. The hon. gentleman could not deny now that the change would affect the revenue.

MR. SMITH: We never collected anything at all under the Merchant Shipping Act of 1876.

MR. MITCHELL said that if they had allowed the Act to remain a dead-letter, so much the worse. He was surprised to hear this. It was a matter with which he should not have thought of charging the hon. gentleman. It was his first duty to have put this Act into force, and to have collected the revenue. It was evident to everyone that this Act was going to lessen the amount of revenue which was likely to be collected through the change in the measurement, and he thought the hon. Minister should have asked his deputy to make an approximate estimate of the difference so that the House would have some information to go upon.

MR. SMITH: He has something else to do.

MR. MITCHELL said he contended that it was the duty of the Department to furnish the House with such information, and not to tell them that the alteration did not affect the revenue, and then practically admit that it did.

MR. MITCHELL.

MR. PALMER said he was sorry to differ from his hon. friend (Mr. Mitchell), but he believed this to be a move in the right direction.

MR. MITCHELL: I say it is a move in the right direction: wherein do we differ.

Several HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. PALMER said it struck him that the adoption of this Imperial legislation was what they wanted in this country, and he was glad the Government had shown some attention to it in reference to this matter. They could make the dues and the measurement in any way they liked, and he could see no practical interference with the rights of the ship-owners.

MR. MITCHELL said he wished to correct his hon. friend (Mr. Palmer). It had been said that they had to send down an officer to measure the ship every time the vessel was loaded, to see what the duty was. This was not the fact. The officer did not go down for that purpose, but to see that the vessel had not more deck load than the law permitted. He (Mr. Mitchell) had stated that he approved of the resolution brought forward the other day in reference to this, and he still contended that the House had a right to know how, and to what extent, the change would affect the trust funds. The Merchant Shipping Act, section 23, laid down:

"If any ship, British or foreign, other than home-trade ships, as defined by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, carries as deck cargo, that is to say, in any uncovered space upon deck, or in any covered space not included in the cubical contents forming the ship's registered tonnage, timber, stores or other goods, all dues payable on the ship's tonnage shall be payable as if there were added to the ship's registered tonnage the tonnage of the space occupied by such goods at the time such dues became payable. The space so occupied shall be deemed to be the space limited by the area occupied by the goods, and by straight lines enclosing a rectangular space sufficient to include the goods. The tonnage of such space shall be ascertained by an officer of the Board of Trade or of Customs, in manner directed by sub-section four of section twenty-one of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and when so ascertained shall be entered by him in the ship's official log book, and also in a memorandum, which he shall deliver to the master, and the master shall, when the said dues are demanded, produce such memorandum in like manner as if it were the certificate of registry, or, in the case of a foreign ship, the document equivalent to a certificate of registry, and, in default, shall be liable to the same penalty as if he had failed to produce the said certificate or document."

Now, to held, in relation to this matter that, while it was desirable to assimilate the legislation with that of the Imperial Government in relation to the tonnage and shipping of Canada, this Parliament should not be without control. He had never disputed for one moment that proposition; he believed in this House legislating for itself whenever it could do so without any serious interference with the interests of the Empire; and they should confine those interests to as small a space as possible, particularly when they affected their tonnage and shipping. But he held that it was the duty of his hon. friend, when he propounded a measure such as this, to tell the House how far it affected the revenue, and he should like to have an approximate statement showing to what extent it would diminish the revenue or sick seamen's fund, river police fund, and the several dock trusts throughout Canada.

Mr. SMITH (Westmoreland) said he had told his hon. friend it would not diminish the revenue a single cent. He had assumed his hon. friend was acquainted with the provisions of the Act of 1876, but now he could only infer that the hon. gentleman was not aware of that law. He talked about what an owner could do after getting the original register. This Bill had nothing to do with the register, except for the necessary dues. His hon. friend had charged him with being recreant to his duties, but that was not a question for him to decide. He had no other object than to serve the public interest. He had never taken any course inconsistent with his present one, and when the hon. member for Northumberland had introduced a Bill in 1872 relating to deckloads, he had given that Bill his entire support. That law had worked admirably and had been copied in England to a very considerable extent. He was quite prepared at all times to give all information in his power, but he thought, in this case, the House had all the information necessary.

Mr. MITCHELL said he understood the Act of 1876. The hon. gentleman had stated this Bill only affected the dues and did not affect the revenue. Did the hon. gentleman pretend that it could affect the dues without affecting the revenue derived from these dues to support those trusts? The hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had challenged his (Mr. Mitchell's) action in relation to the Act he carried with respect to deckloads in which he received that hon. gentleman's cordial support, and which the British Government had copied as being useful legislation. The hon. Minister had challenged a comparison of his administration of the Department and that during the seven years he (Mr. Mitchell) was in charge—a comparison which he had not provoked, for he never attempted to decry the administration of the hon. gentleman and never cast a slur upon any officer in the Department.

Mr. MACKENZIE rose to a question of order. The hon. member, during five minutes over which his speech had extended, had not discussed the resolution before the Committee, and it was not proper to permit that extraordinary diversion into topics having no connection with the subject under discussion.

Mr. TUPPER said it was the first time he had heard of such a position being taken by the First Minister. On two or three occasions, when the hon. member for North York (Mr. Dymond) had improperly raised questions of order, the Chairman had ruled that the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) was strictly in order, and that he had not dealt with a single question which the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had not opened up, and having opened up it was right he should receive his reply in as extended a form as the hon. member desired to give it. It would become a tyranny if hon. gentlemen on the Ministerial benches were permitted to raise questions outside of that under discussion and hon. members of the Opposition were not allowed to reply.

Mr. MILLS said the hon. member for Northumberland had proceeded to answer a speech made by the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries during another debate.

Mr. TUPPER said that, while such was true, the hon. Minister had reiterated his former statements.

Mr. DYMOND said he had not understood the Chairman to rule that the hon. member for Northumberland was in order. He, therefore, called upon the Chairman to rule whether that hon. member was in order or not.

Mr. MASSON said the hon. the Premier had told the Chairman he had no right to rule as he had done, and the hon. member for North York had expressed surprise at the ruling.

Mr. DYMOND said that all he desired was a ruling by the Chairman, and he would willingly bow to it.

Mr. MITCHELL said that, while he admitted that in the course of his remarks he had not spoken strictly to the question before the Chair, he had been led by the remarks of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to defend his action in a previous Session. He claimed he had a right to follow the hon. Minister in the reference he had made.

The CHAIRMAN: I hope the hon. member will confine himself to the resolution before the Committee.

Mr. MITCHELL said he was pointing out that the hon. Minister had chosen to refer to the subject in a manner that justified his (Mr. Mitchell's) administration of the affairs of the Department in connection with legislation on the question now before the Committee.

Mr. SMITH (Westmoreland): I did not say I undertook to justify the hon. member's administration of the Department while he was at its head. I pointed to a particular Act.

Mr. MITCHELL said he could point to more than one Act. He was endeavouring to show his (Mr. Mitchell's) justification, and that the hon. Minister had allowed an Act, which he had defended and extolled in the House, to remain a dead letter on the Statute-book.

Mr. TUPPER.

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask the hon. member to speak to the question.

Mr. MITCHELL said he had shown that his hon. friend was not consistent in carrying out the measures which the hon. gentleman himself had advocated and supported, and which had been introduced by him (Mr. Mitchell). The hon. gentleman, therefore, need take no particular credit to himself when he said that he supported the Deck Load law, which was putting money in the pockets of the hon. gentleman and his friends here, and of other ship-owners in the Dominion.

Mr. SMITH (Westmoreland): How?

Mr. MITCHELL: By lessening the dues on your ships, by increasing your profits, and by making greater returns; that is how, and it is a very practical way.

Mr. SMITH: The ship-owners did not think so.

Mr. MITCHELL said he was in favour of this measure, but the hon. gentleman had chosen to say that he would not give this House any further information. He had known gentlemen in this House say they would not give information or details and he had afterwards known them to do so, and this not very long ago either. It was quite possible, too, that when the hon. gentleman had this measure before the House again they would obtain some more information respecting it. He (Mr. Mitchell) did not desire to protract the discussion. He had said what he had to say respecting this measure; he had done so in an intelligent manner, and he had endeavoured to make himself understood, and comprehended and felt. But when the hon. gentleman, or any other hon. gentleman opposite told him that he was not going to get information regarding a matter on which he had a right to procure information, particularly when the finances of the country were affected by it, he would endeavour to get it out of him by hook or crook before the hon. gentleman could have his measure passed through. He would reserve any further remarks he had to make, unless he was again called up, until the matter came before them in another shape.

Mr. SMITH: I have simply to say that I will reserve a good many remarks which I have to make regarding this matter until a fitting occasion presents itself.

Mr. MITCHELL: All right.

Resolution ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolution reported, read the first and second times and agreed to.

Mr. SMITH introduced a Bill (No. 62) to amend the law respecting Deck Loads.

Bill read the first time.

THE MISSING PAPERS.

Mr. SPEAKER: The Clerk wishes me to give an additional explanation. He states that when he went to Sir John A. Macdonald for the papers, the right hon. member for Kingston was not then reading the papers, and that they were lying under a Bill which had just then been brought before the House in Committee of the Whole. When he asked for the papers, the right hon. gentleman said, "Very well, hurry up the translation as fast as you can," and did not, at the time, intimate that he wanted to see the papers again.

Mr. TUPPER: I think it is right for me to say that I think the Clerk entirely misunderstood Sir John A. Macdonald, because he requested me to make the communication I did to the House with reference to the matter before he left this evening.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is but just to the Clerk to say that, at all events, this was what occurred to him at the time.

House adjourned at
Two o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 27th March, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

NORTH RIVER NAVIGATION.

QUESTION

Mr. HADDOW, for Mr. CHRISTIE, enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to recommend, in the Supplementary Estimates, the sum of $1,000 to improve the navigation of the North River as far as St. Andrews, in order to complete the work done by the Government before Confederation, thereby securing to St. Andrews and surrounding country the advantage of uninterrupted summer navigation.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The Government have no present intention to do so. Money was expended on this small river formerly by the Local Government, or the Government of old Canada, and it has not been looked upon as a work for the general advantage of the Dominion. Enquiry will, however, be made, if there is time to do so, but at present I can only give a negative answer to the question.

RESIDENT JUDGE AT SOREL.

QUESTION.

Mr. GILL enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to appoint a resident Judge at Sorel, in place of Mr. Justice Loranger, who has retired; and when the appointment will be made?

Mr. LAFLAMME: I would call the attention of the hon. member to the allegation he makes in his question — "who has retired." The hon. Judge has not retired. There is, however, a conditional offer of resignation, the conditions of which are under consideration by the Government, and, as soon as the vacancy takes place, the appointment will be made.

TWENTY-FIVE CENT GOVERNMENT SCRIP.

QUESTION.

Mr. FARROW enquired, What amount of Government scrip of the denomination of 25 cents is still in circulation, and whether it is the intention of the Government to call the balance in; if not, is it their intention to issue more?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: The amount of Government scrip of this denomination still in circulation is $116,505. It is not at present the intention of the Government to call this in, and any party who desires to obtain these small fractional notes can obtain them on application to the Receiver-General or Assistant Receiver-General.

MAIN-À-DIEU HARBOUR.

QUESTION.

MR. MACKAY (Cape Breton) enquired, Whether the Government intends to cause the necessary survey to be made of part of the harbour of Main-à-dieu, in the county of Cape Breton, with a view to the construction of a breakwater there?

MR. MACKENZIE: There has been a survey made, to some extent, of this harbour, with a view to locate a breakwater at one or other of two points,—either the one on the outside of the bay, or the one a little farther to the north; but it may be necessary to make some further examination, and I will ascertain whether that is the case or not when I see the engineer, and will give directions accordingly.

INSURANCE LAW AMENDMENT.

QUESTION.

MR. DESJARDINS enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce, during the present Session, such amendments to the general law respecting insurance as will permit and facilitate the amalgamation of fire insurance companies?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: It is not the intention of the Government to introduce legislation on this subject during the present Session.

THE QUEBEC PROVINCIAL CRISIS.

QUESTION.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD enquired, Whether any correspondence had taken place between the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec and the Governor-General or the Government respecting the events in Quebec alluded to in the Message from His Excellency yesterday; and if so, whether the Government would bring it down; and if so, when?

MR. FARROW.

MR. MACKENZIE: There is no correspondence, that I know of, with the Governor-General, and there is none with the Government, except, I may say, a private note which accompanied these papers.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Exactly.

MR. MACKENZIE: That was informal. There was no correspondence of any kind.

PAYMENTS ON LAND FOR CANAL PURPOSES.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

MR. LANGEVIN moved for a return showing:

“1st. The several sums of money paid out of the $39,256.01, deposited in the Bank of Montreal, to pay certain parties for land taken for Canal purposes and payable on certificates of the Department of Justice; 2nd. The names of the parties to whom such several sums of money have been paid, and the dates of such several payments.”

MR. MACKENZIE: I think that I gave the hon. gentleman this return in the Committee of Public Accounts.

MR. LANGEVIN: I think that it did not cover this matter.

MR. MACKENZIE: I recollect that I brought it down; but no harm will be done by passing the motion.

Motion agreed to.

DUTIES COLLECTED AT ST. JOHN, N.B.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

MR. DOMVILLE moved for statement of duties collected by Customs and Inland Revenue Departments at St. John, N.B., from 1st July, 1876, to 1st January 1877, and from 1st July, 1877, to 1st January, 1878. He said that the object of this motion was to show, as far as possible, the Customs dues that had been collected at St. John, N.B., since the great fire last year. They believed that this amount was very large. The hon. the Minister of Finance had given the excess, in this relation, over ordinary receipts as being only $200,000; but they were led to believe that the amount was certainly $700,000 extra, while, perhaps, one or one and a-quarter millions had been received in consequence of the occurrence of this fire. Of course, this would naturally increase the burdens of the people there, who felt that if they had to pay so large an amount into the Treasury, they should obtain something in compensation therefor. In the Estimates, $200,000 were put down to rebuild the public buildings destroyed at St. John by the fire; but it was only natural to suppose that, even if those had been private buildings, they would have been replaced, as nearly two-thirds of the city had been rebuilt, while up to the meeting of Parliament, not a blow had been struck on the public buildings in question. It would seem that, with such a large amount collected and on hand, some steps should be taken to encourage the people to build. Those buildings should, ere this, have been begun and something should have been done. They were told that work on these buildings had been kept back for election purposes; but he, of course, did not believe this story. He wished to give the Government fair play, and he thought that the minds of the people should be disabused on this point by not having these buildings started on the eve of the election. What he found fault with was the fact, that so much stress should have been laid on the vote of $200,000 for the erection of public buildings in the city of St. John when a very large amount had been received in this relation in the Treasury.

MR. BURPEE (St. John) said it had occurred to him that a misapprehension existed as to the amount collected at St. John in consequence of the fire. The amount mentioned by the hon. the Finance Minister in his speech was, up to the present time, a little over $200,000 in addition to the natural increase which had taken place there as in other parts of the Dominion. The papers asked would, of course, show the exact amount, but he made this explanation with the view of pointing out that the large amount spoken of was far in excess of the actual sum.

MR. DOMVILLE: I should like to ask the hon. the Minister of Customs if he can state the amount of increase up to the present time over that of last year?

MR. BURPEE: About $240,000 up to the present time. The natural increase in other places has been from 8 to 10 per cent., and, no doubt, there has been an increase of a similar character in St. John.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he wished to make a remark or two, because it seemed to him that some considerable misapprehension prevailed as to the total amount of goods imported into the Province of New Brunswick. The total amount for the year 1876-7 was very little more than $5,000,000, and the duty on that was just $1,000,000; this amount was not likely to be exceeded. He could not tell what the imports would amount to during the next four or five months, nor had he the means of ascertaining exactly how many months' consumption in advance might have been stored in St. John in the month of June. Speaking generally, however, he thought about $200,000 of duty on goods would be the average amount gained. That, of course, was matter of conjecture, but the exact information would be brought forward in answer to the motion of the hon. member for King's.

MR. MACKENZIE said he was sorry the hon. member for King's should have indulged in the insinuation, which he very plainly made use of, that the Government had delayed commencing the buildings at St. John for political purposes. He could not conceive how it would benefit the Government in any way to delay the erection of the buildings, which were required in the public interest. It seemed to him that such a proceeding would have a decidedly opposite effect. He could assure the hon. member that no time was lost in ascertaining how much of the ruins could be utilized in the erection of the new buildings, and two firms of architects in the city of St.

John, were employed to prepare plans and specifications for the work. Without waiting till these plans were completed to place the preliminary work in the contract, the Government at once contracted for the work connected with the new foundations, which was now being vigorously carried on. The plans for the superstructure were not yet completed, but he believed they would be during the present or next week, and tenders would then be asked for in order to replace the buildings destroyed by the calamitous fire in the city of St. John.

MR. DOMVILLE said that before this motion was carried, he would like to make a few remarks. The hon. member for the county of St. John had that the amount up to the present date was $200,000.

MR. BURPEE: I said about that.

MR. DOMVILLE said that the hon. the Minister of Finance had told them four or five weeks ago that the amount was $200,000. Now, what he wished to say was this: that, in consequence of the fire in St. John, and the property consumed, the extra amount paid into the treasury would be something like $700,000. He had the whole of the figures with him, but could not put his hand upon them at the moment. The Minister of Customs had referred to the natural increase of the trade in St. John, and partly accounted for the increase of revenue in that way, but he (Mr. Domville) did not think that was in accordance with the financial statement made by the Minister of Finance. It was admitted on all sides that trade had been bad and that the revenue was falling off. But immediately when he enquired about the extra money paid into the treasury of St. John, the House was asked to believe that part of that extra money might be attributed to the natural increase of trade in that city. That, he thought, was a mistake, and he hoped his hon. friend would withdraw the statement altogether. With regard to the insinuation referred to by the Minister of Public Works, he (Mr. Domville) made none. He said it was currently reported in the city of St. John that these works were kept back for political purposes. He stated that, while two thirds of the city had been rebuilt, not a blow had been struck in connection with the Government buildings. He could not see how that could be accounted for on the ground that the architect could not get their plans ready, because if private individuals could build whole streets, there was no reason why the Government work should not be equally energetically pushed forward. From 1,800 to 2,000 houses had been erected by the citizens, and the Government might, therefore, have put up even a small building, four storeys high, as a savings bank. They might have done something also in the way of erecting a post-office even though the Custom-house had to be delayed. The people of St. John would have been content to do without the Custom-house for a time; it would have been some consolation to them to have seen at least one of the public buildings started. But nothing had been done, and the ruins of the Government buildings still existed in the midst of newly-erected buildings. He was willing to believe that the treasury was drained to the utmost, and that the Government could not see its way to carry out public works for the present, but he thought if $200,000 had been collected, as was admittedly the case—that sum should have been expended at a time when there was no employment to be had and the people required some stimulus. If the new buildings were to be undertaken as soon as the plans were ready, they would not be finished this year, and he thought the Government were to blame that they had fallen short of their duty; but he attached more blame to the members for the city and county of St. John, and also the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. People could not expect much from some of the Ministers who represented them in the House, because these members were absent from duty month after month, evidently thinking that their own business was more important than that of the country. It was all very well to say to the House that the plans could not be got, but so long as some of the Ministers acted as they did, so long would it continue to be an impossibility to obtain plans. He thought it was a crying shame that nothing had been done for New Brunswick, and he believed the real reason why the work was delayed was that which he had mentioned.

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. BURPEE (St. John) said he rose to answer the question regarding the excessive amount of the collections at St. John. He thought that amount would spread over one and a half or two years, or perhaps longer, before the increase would be made up. Up to the present time, so far as any neglect of duty was concerned, he did not think any blame was attachable either to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or himself. The work had been done as fast as possible, and as there was no want of labour in St. John—everybody being able to obtain employment—there was no ground for complaint in that respect. Of course, he should like to see the buildings gone on with, and as the foundations had now been laid, no time would be lost when the plans were received. He was satisfied there had been no dereliction of duty on the part of the Government.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said it had been stated by the hon. the First Minister that the delay of the work would be more likely to operate against the Government than its speedy prosecution. Now, at his last election at Kingston, it was suddenly discovered that there was an immediate necessity to pull down the Market Battery, situated about twenty yards from where the election was taking place. The workmen of Kingston were told that they could get work; they were at once marched off and were soon engaged in pulling down the Market Battery and repairing the Fort, which it had been found at that particular moment requisite to do. True it was that, soon after the election was over, the zeal and interest taken in the work waxed very thin indeed, and he had no doubt that, just as that work was undertaken in Kingston for the purpose of defeating him, so the Conservative candidate for the city of St. John would find that the Government work there would be proceeded with, and that workmen—masons, carpenters and bricklayers—could have plenty of employment, at election time.

MR. MACKENZIE: That is very small.

MR. TUPPER said the House would hardly agree with the hon. the Minister of Customs that any portion of the increased revenue should be deducted in consequence of the ratio of increase in other towns and cities. Every person must, he thought, arrive at the conclusion that a great calamity like the fire at St. John would, while rendering necessary the importation of a large amount of goods to supply the necessities of the case, impair the ability of the importers. Great loss would be suffered by the trading community of St. John and those who purchased goods—so great, indeed, would be the loss that any natural increase would be prevented. On the contrary, nothing like the same amount of natural importation could be looked for, and he held that all the increase must be attributed to the great calamity which overtook that city. Throughout the country the sympathy for the sufferers was universal, and the only failing was the inability of the Government to meet the exigencies of the occasion. The very fact that the necessities of the case would involve such a large increase of the revenue of the country, made it desirable that the Government, with the means of meeting the distress thus occasioned, should have given a much larger and more liberal contribution than was made. He thought they would have met with the heartiest support of every person if they had exhibited greater liberality than they exhibited on that occasion. He wished, at that moment, to draw the attention of the Government to what he thought was a very unfair discrimination made in connection with the assistance which they furnished to the people of the United States in preference to the subjects of the Dominion. The demand for building material after the fire was very great, and it was thought desirable that those who had suffered enormous losses, and who, consequently, possessed only diminished means, should be relieved as much as possible, and it was resolved to remit the duty on bricks imported into St. John. That remission was made in order that the city might be rebuilt, and the assistance came directly out of the public Treasury. It was very unfair, therefore, that an advantage should be given to the brick-makers of a foreign country, to the exclusion of those in Nova Scotia, who were just as able to supply the market in St. John, as those in the United States. He held that, as money had been given from the public Treasury for the purpose of assisting the sufferers in St. John, the Government should have enabled the manufacturers of Nova Scotia at least to compete with those of the United States, and he felt certain that if equally favourable terms had been afforded to the Nova Scotia brick-makers, they could have sent bricks to that city at a reduced price.

MR. BURPEE said he need not enter into what his hon. friend had stated as to the sufferings endured by the people of St. John. Their people required the sympathy, not only of the House but of the country, and he was sure they got it. With regard to the importation of bricks, he might say that he did not know whether they were carried from the brick-yards of Nova Scotia direct to St. John, but if so, the cost would be a little more, if anything, than the freight from Boston. He was told several times that, while there building of St. John was going on, bricks were purchased from all quarters—from Nova Scotia as well as from the United States—as fast as they could be obtained. He had nothing more to say on that point; but with regard to the collection of revenue he might remark that, last fall, the insurance gave a very large increase to the circulation of money. He did think that, if there was an increase at all, a greater increase would take place in the first six months, and the six months following, and the same period following that again, while for the last one month or so there would be scarcely any increase at all. The spring trade would revive, and the first six months would probably enable people to restock their warehouses.

MR. MACKENZIE said that, as regarded the carrying of bricks, the hon. gentleman must be aware that it was a very heavy article to transport.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. PALMER said he was obliged to the hon. gentleman who had brought forward this motion, because he thought it was for the benefit of the country to know how much money the people of St. John had been taxed by reason of this fire; and while he was thankful to the Government for the small help they had rendered, yet, he thought that help fell far short of what the St. John people had a right to expect. It would be in the recollection of most hon. members that, during the fire in Quebec, in 1845, or about that time, the Government of Canada went to work and borrowed money, he believed, at five per cent. interest, and loaned something like $400,000 at three per cent. interest, to aid the city of Quebec to repair the damage caused by the fire. They all knew that the sum granted by the Government to St. John was a mere nothing to the loss which had been sustained, besides which the Government had actually charged duty upon the materials used for repairing the damage. For this the people of St. John had actually been taxed to the extent of $300,000. He held that every dollar of this sum ought to have been returned, if not by taking the duties off the goods, in some other form.

MR. MACKENZIE: How much did the insurance companies pay?

MR. PALMER: I do not know.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Six millions.

MR. PALMER said he did not know what the amount paid by the insurance companies was, but he did not believe there was a single man insured to the extent of his goods, without the duty.

MR. MACKENZIE: I can only say to the hon. gentleman that some of the merchants told me they were.

MR. PALMER said he was satisfied the hon. the Premier had been misinformed. The amount of the insurance was about nine millions; of that, about one million was lost, on account of the insurance companies being unable to pay. Of course, it would be difficult to get at the actual loss, but, although everybody might be more or less insured, they would lose nearly 100 per cent. above the insurance. The whole of this amount of money had been taken up in some form, and he held that the giving of the paltry sum of $20,000 was not at all what the people of St. John had a right to expect under the circumstances. At the very least, the Dominion of Canada ought not to have made money out of the misfortunes of the city. He held that this Government, whether they gave anything or not, never ought to have put into the coffers of the Dominion one single dollar arising out of that calamity. They might have loaned money to the city or assisted it in any way they could without loss of money, but he protested against the Dominion of Canada making money out of the misfortunes of the citizens of St. John.

Mr. PLUMB said the hon. gentleman who introduced this subject (Mr. Domville) had complained that the Government had been guilty of inexcusable delay in putting up some of the public buildings which were destroyed by the fire, also that the streets were still obstructed, and that great inconvenience was caused to the people from the want of the Government post office, Custom house, and other buildings of that kind. The hon. gentleman also complained that this was setting a poor example to those who were putting up buildings and helping to reconstruct the ill-fated city, and that if the Government had shown greater promptitude in commencing their works, the labour would have given a certain measure of relief. In connection with the claim referring to the revenue, he (Mr. Plumb) had a statement in his hand which might probably throw some light on that subject. This showed that the merchandize stock destroyed by fire was $3,000,000.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: How much was the insurance?

Mr. PLUMB said he was not speaking of the insurance, he was speaking of the relation of Government, not the relation of the insurance companies, to that destruction, and the duty paid on that merchandize, which would amount to something like $500,000. The amount of duty paid in St. John, from July, 1876, to January, 1877, was $415,798, and the amount of duty paid from July, 1877, to January, 1878, was $650,392, and of this last mentioned amount, $50,275 was paid in the six months by a single man. These figures showed there had been an increase during the last half year of $230,000 in the duties paid. The conclusion was that the duty on building materials which would be required would give the Government at least $700,000 more than if there had not been a fire, so that we should be actually receiving that sum over our regular yearly revenue from the duties of that port. Now, Boston gave $61,000 to assist the sufferers in the St. John fire, while this Government gave only $20,000. He thought the latter a paltry sum to contribute to one of the principal sea-ports of this Dominion. Of course, he was perfectly aware that, however small this sum might appear to some people, there might be others who would consider it large, and he remembered that the First Minister had considered it necessary to justify the giving away of this sum. He said they had been blamed for having such a quantity of steel rails, and he justified this by saying that the Government had also given $20,000 to the city of St. John. He (Mr. Plumb) was unable to see the connection between the two things at the time, and he was unable to see it now. But it seemed as though the Premier considered it a large sum, for he not only spoke of it in one place, but several times, during his summer excursion. He said great complaint had been made of the Government having loaned a certain quantity of rails to the contractor of the Canada Central Railway, "But," he added, "We gave $20,000 to St. John on account of the fire."

Mr. MACKENZIE: I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. PLUMB: Well, I believe it is to that effect.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Read it.

Mr. PLUMB: At least you are reported to have said it.

Several Hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. PLUMB: I will undertake to read it. It was made use of at several meetings. On one occasion he said:

"For example, we gave the sum of $20,000, without the immediate authority of Parliament, to alleviate the distress which followed the St. John fire. (Hear, hear, and cheers). And, I believe that, under the circumstances, we were right in doing so. I contend that we had a perfect right to lend, or allow the Canada Central Railway to use, a portion of the rails on which we had a lien."

I contended that, in this case, one is intended to justify the other.

MR. MACKENZIE: Not at all.

MR. PLUMB said then he did not understand English. The two things were put in juxtaposition in such a manner that no other conclusion could be drawn. He thought this was quite sufficient to substantiate the statement he had made. With regard to the motion now under discussion, he considered it was very unfortunate that this great delay had taken place in the execution of the Government buildings destroyed by the fire, and he did not think it fair to charge the hon. member for King's (Mr. Domville) with making improper insinuations when he said it was rumoured that the delay was made for political purposes. He showed expressly that such a thing had been stated, and not that he stated it himself. But it was, to say the least, most unfortunate that such a delay had occurred; it should have been the duty of the Government to reconstruct the Government buildings at once; they should not have waited until private enterprise had almost built up the city before they had laid a stone. He (Mr. Plumb) considered that his hon. friend was fully justified in any remarks he had made with reference to the delay.

MR. BURPEE said that, as soon as possible after the fire, all the débris and material was cleared away. No effort of the Government could have enabled them to get the plans, specifications and tenders asked for, to enable the buildings to be erected in the winter season. The Government would have had to wait until the spring to start building in St. John; but, he presumed, the plans would be so completed now that tenders would soon be asked for, and the buildings would be commenced as soon this spring as possible. There had been no efforts spared on the part of the Government, nor had they been actuated by any political feeling, nor had any time been lost. Last fall was occupied in laying the foundations of the different buildings. On no principle could the Government be justified in remitting the duties on the imports into St. John after the fire. There had been fires in Woodstock, St. Stephen's, Quebec, and all over the Dominion, and, in every case, the sufferers would have just as much right to have the duty remitted. The principle adopted in one instance would have to be extended to every case. The goods destroyed in St. John were not all the property of the people of that city, but had been sent there from other parts of the Province. The Government subscription, $20,000, was given immediately after the fire, before any subscription was started, and they gave substantial benefit to the people in another respect by remitting the duty on bricks. He did not think the Government could be censured in any way for anything in relation to the great disaster.

MR. PLUMB.

MR. BLAKE said he understood the complaint against the Government to be, first, that the amount of pecuniary assistance, directly granted out of the public Treasury, was inadequate. It must be remembered that it would be quite out of the question for the Government to interfere at all in the way of pecuniary aid, except in a case altogether exceptional in its magnitude. Unfortunately, in this country and on this continent, disastrous fires occurred very frequently; and, although great local disasters were occasioned, and an enormous disparity between the insurance and the loss existed in every instance, yet no proposal was ever made, nor could reasonably be made, in such circumstances for any relief at all. The principle upon which alone the Government could interfere was, where the disaster was so appalling that the common necessities of life were required to be supplied at once in order to prevent distress and suffering, where the calamity was of such magnitude that the charitable subscriptions of the neighbouring towns were inadequate to deal with it—then, only, could the Government interfere. Hon. gentleman said $20,000 was too little. What sum would be adequate to repair the financial losses of the people of St. John? Who would attempt to give it? All the Government could do was to provide, at once, for the immediate distress, want of food, clothing and shelter. It was upon that basis the Government made their subscription, which was not confined to the $20,000 alone, but which also extended to the indirect measure of relief which had been referred to. The second ground of complaint was, that the Government did not proceed with what hon. gentlemen opposite thought sufficient diligence, in the reconstruction of the public works, and the claim was made that, because a certain amount of duties, an exaggerated amount, would be received by the Government, which would not have been received had it not been for the fire, the whole of this estimated amount was due to the people of St. John, and should have been expended at once there. He would consider first, what the position of the Government was with reference to this power to expend public money in the reconstruction of these buildings. There was a law applicable to such emergencies, but that law was wisely limited in its character. It provided only for the necessity, in the public interest, of expenditure not provided for by Parliament, to the extent to which public interest might require the money to be expended. In the repairing or reconstruction of public works which had been destroyed, the Government was at liberty to proceed upon a special warrant signed by the Governor and brought down to the House. What the hon. the Minister of Public Works proposed to the Government was, that such steps should be taken forthwith, under this clause of the law, as would be necessary to enable him to proceed with their construction in the spring of the year, as soon as a vote had been taken. He took the authority, under this clause, to proceed with the clearing away of the débris, with the purchase of a small portion of land necessary to effect a proper reconstruction, and with excavations and making foundations of the buildings. That was all the Minister of Public Works could do before the Session, and all that was necessary to be done in the public interest at that time. Now, what was the reason given by hon. members for the proposed extra parliamentary action of the Government? The proposal was that the Government, without the sanction of Parliament, should have expended a very large sum on public buildings in St. John more rapidly than the public interests required, and the reason given was, that the local interests of St. John required this expenditure, because the people had been thrown into a state of distress by this fire and they required employment. If he was rightly informed, not only were the mechanics of St. John fully employed, and at high wages, immediately after this fire, in the necessary works of reconstruction, through private enterprise, but they were wholly inadequate in point of numbers to meet the demand. No less than four or five thousand were brought into St. John, besides its own population, to do the building required. That fact entirely displaced the proposition that the Government could have aided the people of St. John by proceeding to erect these buildings more rapidly. On the contrary, in attempting to build more buildings than there was labour for at the time, the Government would have increased the demand for labour, and the wages of labourers would have increased, thus causing an increase expenditure to private individuals of St. John, who were, then, suffering under difficulties and embarrassments quite sufficient, without adding any additional burden. The price the Government paid for labour at St. John was $1.40, against $1 in the city of Ottawa, at the same time. The local population was not sufficient to do the work required, and, therefore, there was no reason for the Government to overstep the law and impose an additional difficulty on private individuals, who were, already, sufficiently embarrassed, in order to precipitate the erection of these public buildings.

MR. PALMER said that, although fires were, unfortunately, very common, the one at St. John was of such an extraordinary character, that it was not likely a similar one would occur in this Dominion for another two hundred years. This country had never seen a fire so destructive as that; and, therefore, if a precedent were made, he did not think there would be any danger in it, as there would not likely be an occasion to use it for two centuries. The point taken by his hon. friend was that the duties referred to could not be remitted. The point he made against the Government was, that whether these duties could be remitted or not, the people of St. John had a right to ask that no money should be made out of their misfortune. The people of Canada would have said that this money, whatever the amount was, should not have been taken from the people of St. John; and if the Government were obliged to take it, by law, they should have extended relief to St. John in a greater measure. In other words, the Government should have extended to the people of St. John relief equal to the amount of the excess of revenue they received. The people of Canada were spirited enough to be unwilling to make money out of the misfortunes of the people of St. John. If there was a case in which a man had lost five million dollars' worth of goods, on which he had paid duty the day before, and wanted to replace them, it would be no more than just for the Government to refund those duties. The same principle should extend to the sufferers by the St. John fire. He did not pretend to say it could be carried out in the case of every individual. But the amount ought in some way to be refunded to the community, in a manner somewhat similar to that adopted with regard to the Quebec fire, which could not be compared in extent to this one. An immense number of new buildings had been put up since the fire, which accounted for the great amount of revenue collected there. Every man who erected a house had to pay the duty on the materials used, which had been already paid on the house that had been burnt down; so that in reality he was taxed on account of his misfortune. The Government should have met this matter in a somewhat similar form to the one adopted in Quebec. They should have guaranteed the money to build or loaned it on real or personal estate, so that the people could have built at low rates of interest. There was a good deal in what the hon. member for South Bruce had said, that since the fire, it had been difficult to get labour, and that the price of labour had been increased, and the increased rate fell heavily on those who were re-building their houses. With reference to the Government buildings, if the Government wanted to use them during the election, let them do so. He was prepared to meet them. He did not see the difficulty pointed out by the hon. member for South Bruce, that the Government could not have acted without the assent of Parliament. The Government had a perfect right to advance in a matter like that, which could not be provided for by Parliament. The Government would be of no use unless they could take the responsibility of acting in the interim and then appeal to Parliament. He thought some of those buildings could have been erected at an earlier date. If the object of the Government was to run an election on the head of them, let them do so; he had too much confidence in the good sense and intelligence of the people to dread the result, or to believe it would have much effect, one way or the other. The hon. member for King's knew that, shortly after the great fire, a great number of people who had lost their houses were looking about for means to rebuild. It was thought a society could have been established by which mortgages could have been given on property, and guaranteed by the Government to some extent, by which money could have been raised. If the Government had come forward, they could have assisted materially in that manner.

MR. PALMER.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said the Government were themselves very heavy losers by the fire at St. John. He believed it would cost from $500,000 to $600,000 to replace the buildings which had been destroyed, and he did not think they would receive any more, if, indeed, they received as large, an amount of duties from the goods which had been destroyed. As to the other proposition, which was practically that it would have been proper for the Government to have returned the amount of duties on goods destroyed, if they could have ascertained it, there would have been very great difficulty in carrying out such a proposition practically. The parties who would have been entitled to receive the refund of duties would have been the insurance companies, which had lost the money, not the merchants, who had received their insurance money. In the next place, although it might be true that a large portion of those goods were owned by merchants in St. John, it must be remembered that all those duties were duties practically collected by the merchants on account of goods distributed all over New Brunswick and a considerable portion of Nova Scotia; and a very large portion of those goods were in bond, and on those the Government collected no duty, but remitted the duty. Very considerable claims had come up since the St. John catastrophe for the remission of the duties which would otherwise have been collected, and those in all cases had been granted by the Government. If three million dollars' worth of goods had been held in stock, as the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Palmer) had remarked, a very large proportion would have been in bond. If it were desired to make a return of the money lost, the greater part must go, not into the pockets of the sufferers at St. John, but, of necessity, into the pockets of the insurance companies, who were really losers to an enormous extent by that calamity.

Mr. DOMVILLE said he took issue with the statement of the hon. the Finance Minister, that the money would have to pass into the hands of the insurance companies. The people of St. John lost by that fire goods to the value of from $25,000,000 to $35,000,000.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: That is four times the total annual importations of the Province of New Brunswick.

Mr. DOMVILLE said that, while he mentioned goods he was about to add property, when he was inter-raptured. From twenty-five to thirty-five million dollars worth of property had been destroyed, a large portion of which, such as furniture, clothing and knick-knacks, would have to be replaced. The hon. the Minister of Finance had argued that not much was doing at St. John when the fire occurred, while the hon. the Minister of Customs mentioned that an extensive business was being prosecuted, and both hon. gentlemen could not be correct in their statements. The people of St. John should have some consideration shown them, and it was not too late to manifest it. If they had paid duties which they should not have paid, the Government should take measures to remit them, and should also endeavour to ascertain who had goods in bond, and return duties which had been twice paid.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASE OF RAILWAY STORES.

MOTION FOR STATEMENT.

Mr. DE ST. GEORGES moved for a statement showing:—the average price paid each year since 1867, for locomotives, cars, iron and steel rails, fish-plates, bolts and iron in general, wood and all furnishings purchased by the Government;—also the quantity bought each year since 1867.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS SINCE 1867.

MOTION FOR STATEMENT.

Mr. DE ST. GEORGES moved for a statement, showing all contracts given since 1867, including those of the Intercolonial Railway, those awarded to the lowest tender, and those given to others; the difference between the price given and that stated in the tender, and the reasons why the contract was not awarded to the lowest tender; and all Orders in Council relating to the same.

Motion agreed to.

CLAIMS ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. MITCHELL moved for copies of correspondence between Mrs. Edward Murphy, of Barnaby River, Miramichi, N.B., and officers of the Intercolonial Railway, in relation to the killing of a cow on said railway; also copies of all evidence and reports in relation to the same. He said he hoped the correspondence would be brought down at as early a day as possible.

MR. MACKENZIE: There is no correspondence in the Department; it will, however, be obtained from the railway officers and submitted as soon as possible.

MR. MITCHELL: It would be more satisfactory if the damages were paid.

MR. MACKENZIE: If the damages were caused by the Government, they will be paid.

MR. MITCHELL: As the damages were caused by the Government, I am satisfied with the explanation, and they will, of course, be paid.

Motion agreed to.

CUSTOM ENTRIES OF RAILWAY ROLLING STOCK.

MOTION FOR STATEMENT.

MR. MASSON, for MR. BLANCHET, moved for a statement of the names of Railway Companies which entered in bond, since the 1st July, 1867, railway locomotives, engines, cars and other railway rolling stock, the date of such entry, a statement of the articles so entered, and the date of payment of Custom duties;—Also the names of such companies whose said locomotives, engines, cars and other rolling stock were ordered to be sold by the Minister of Customs.

Motion agreed to.

FISHING IN THE RIVERS RIMOUSKI AND METIS.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. Fiset moved for copy of the correspondence between the Government and the Seigniors of Rimouski and of Metis, respecting their right of fishing in the Rivers Rimouski and Metis.

MR. SMITH (Westmoreland): I think that the case with regard to the River Rimouski, is practically settled.

MR. MITCHELL.

A good deal of consideration has been given to this matter, both by my Department and that of the Minister of Justice; but, with regard to the other case, no decision has been arrived at. It is still pending. I hope, however, in the course of a few days, to have the matter settled; and, in the meantime, I would ask the hon. gentleman not to press for the papers.

Motion, with leave of the House, withdrawn.

MUIR POST OFFICE.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. BOWELL, for MR. MACMILLAN, moved for correspondence in relation to closing Muir Post Office; correspondence in relation to dismissal of Charles Lilley as Postmaster in London East, and the appointment of Mr. Mills as Postmaster in his stead; also the cause of the change of location of Post Office from original to present locality.

Motion agreed to.

THE MANITOBA TROUBLES.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. BOWELL, for Mr. SCHULTZ, moved for copies of all correspondence between the Hudson Bay Company and the Dominion Government relative to alleged losses at the Red River Settlement connected with the insurrection of 1869-70.

MR. MACKENZIE said that many claims for losses had been presented; and, perhaps the hon. member for Marquette would know precisely what was meant by the motion.

MR. RYAN said, from conversation with the hon. member for Lisar (Mr. Schultz), he knew that it was the hon. gentleman's intention to enquire respecting the losses of the Hudson Bay Company during the rebellion of 1869. He had also heard the hon. gentleman say that his attention was more particularly drawn to this matter, than otherwise would have been the case, owing to a statement made by the Governor of the Company to the Board of Directors at the last annual meeting, viz.: that although the dividend for the year was not satisfactory, yet he had very good hope that a more satisfactory dividend would be declared for the coming year, inasmuch as they were in correspondence with the Dominion Government relative to the rebellion losses, and they had good hope of having these losses adjusted.

Motion agreed to.

PARIS EXHIBITION EXPENSES.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

MR. POPE (Compton) moved for a return giving statement in detail of all moneys paid or obligations incurred to the 1st of January last, in connection with the Paris Exhibition, showing to whom the money was paid, or is to be paid, and for what service.

Motion agreed to.

MONTREAL CITY AND DISTRICT SAVINGS BANK

MOTION FOR RETURN.

MR. TASCHEREAU moved for an Address to the Governor-General praying him to apply the 9th sub-section of Section 6, Chap. 7, 34 Victoria, in order to obtain from the City and District Savings Bank of Montreal, and to cause to be laid before this House, when so obtained :

1st. A statement showing in detail the position of the Bank at the period of its re-organization in 1871, viz: all the amounts due to the Bank; the names of parties by whom due; the collaterals held as security; the rates at which said collaterals were taken, and their actual value at the time they were taken.

2nd. A statement in detail of other assets possessed by the Bank at the time of its re-organization.

3rd. A statement showing how the Directors fixed at $180,000 the surplus or poor Fund, and by what process they arrived at that figure, and if said surplus was limited to aforesaid amount.

4th. A statement showing how the capital stock was taken up, the names of shareholders, and if said stock was subscribed before or after the day and hour when the books should have been opened according to law.

5th. The sums paid by the shareholders upon their subscription of stock since 1871, and date of re-organization.

6th. A statement showing which of the shareholders paid in cash; those that did not; and how they did pay; if by promissory notes, and if so, when discounted and whether retired at maturity.

7th. A statement in detail of all the loans made by the Bank since its re-organization, to whom made and upon what collaterals; at what price such collaterals were taken, and what interest was charged on said loans.

8th. A statement in detail of all the losses made by the Bank and what portion of said losses were written off, giving names of parties and the collaterals held by the Bank.

9th. A statement of all monies now due to the Bank, by whom and how secured, giving the collaterals taken, at what rate and their present cash value; and also other assets presently possessed by the Bank.

10th. A statement of all the dealings the Bank has had with parties who have become insolvent prior to the paying up of their loans to the Bank.

11th. A statement showing what advances the Bank made upon American securities, names of parties, the particular stocks, the prices at which they were taken and how the loans were settled.

12th. A statement of the lowest quotation at which the various stocks taken by the Bank fell to during the currency of the loans advanced on them.

13th. A statement of the names of the Directors, if any, who since the re-organization, borrowed from the Bank, the enumeration of the securities upon which said loans were effected, the rate of interest charged and how their redemption took place; also the dates at which said loans were made and repaid.

14th. A statement of the dividends paid each year since 1871, date of re-organization.

15th. A list of the present Directors and what amount of stock they respectively hold in the Bank.

16th. A list of the present shareholders and what amount of stock they respectively hold in the Bank.

He said he wished to impress on the House the fact that, in making this motion, he was only guided by motives to secure the public good. Every one in the community, in times of commercial depression, watched our monetary institutions to see whether they adhered strictly, not only to the conditions of their charter, but also to sound business-principles, and whether they avoided all such transactions as might be of a character tending to speculation. The large number of failures of savings banks under private control, which had lately occurred in the United States, and the difficulty in which the depositors in all similar institutions were constantly placed in the direction of securing sound information with respect to their general standing, made it the duty of Parliament to interfere whenever the rule had been transgressed, imperilling the savings of the poor. The City and District Savings Bank of Montreal was, he was happy to say, from the date of its foundation to the date of its re-organization in 1871, a well managed and deservedly prosperous institution. Its directorate was composed of the best elements that could be secured. Prudence and shrewdness were the distinctive qualities of its members. During this period, which embraced fifteen years, an uninterrupted series of fortunate and prosperous transactions were the result of the wise policy followed, which excluded all tendency to speculation. In 1871, the Directors, in accordance with the terms of Sec. 6 of the Ontario and Quebec Savings Bank Act, resolved to transfer the assets of the bank to the Government, as they then stood, and to continue the business of the bank under a new charter. The manner in which the stock was subscribed, as indicated by the charter, was at the time strongly commented upon, and had since been the subject of many re-primations. It was done contrary to the established rules of sound banking; it was really of very doubtful security to the depositors, and it inflicted a severe blow upon the public confidence in the institution. Ten per cent. of the voluntarily subscribed capital of two millions was then paid in, and to this day the profits yielded by the bank, reaching four or five per cent., paid in each year to the poor had increased, and the deposits had exceeded the amount of stock subscribed by the above-mentioned directors. A more equivocal transaction could scarcely be imagined, and it had been, he was sorry to say, very severely criticised by the people of Montreal. It was not his intention to dwell at length on this phase of the existence of the bank; but, it stood to reason, he believed, that in thus appropriating to themselves the good will of the bank, and, as was currently stated, a large portion of its accumulated profits, under the cover of its charter, the above-mentioned directors not only failed to carry out the object of its founders and first patrons, but also acted in violation of all established fiscal rules. If the poor who came there to deposit their hard-earned savings were not legitimately entitled to all the profits accruing to the bank, either with regard to the charitable institutions of Montreal or themselves as depositors, the revenue of the country should, at least, have benefited by it. The establishment of the bank, or the principle upon which the above-mentioned clause of the law was based, was a direct spoliation of the public revenue; and the institution itself changed its character, becoming a private banking house, and ceasing any longer to be a savings bank. This was only one of the many incidental features attending the reorganization of this bank. Encouraged by immunity, and having, by the bold attempt, successfully made, secured the good will, and, as he had already said, as was currently reported, a large portion of the accumulated profits, which resulted from many years of safe management, increased by the unprecedented profits and dividends that resulted from careful administration, the new Board of Directors launched into a highly speculative policy, and effected loans on inflated and, in many cases, dangerous security.

Mr. TASCHEREAU.

MR. MASSON: Does the hon. gentleman wish to have these papers brought down, or does he desire, before this is done, to decry the credit of one of our banking institutions?

MR. TASCHEREAU: I am only explaining why I make this motion, and I am perfectly in order in doing so.

MR. MASSON: This is a downright shame.

MR. TASCHEREAU said that American stocks were freely taken by the bank as collateral securities; syndicates or cliques were encouraged, and the Directors encouraged this policy, which ensured large profits at great risk to the bank.

MR. DEVLIN said that, as the representative of Montreal Centre, and as one who was closely identified with a very large number of the depositors in this institution, he respectively submitted to the House and the hon. member for Montmagny that he ought to wait until the papers were brought down before making these observations, because he was satisfied that no one would regret more than the hon. gentleman the consequences, if the effect of his speech should be to cause a run upon the bank to-morrow or the next day, which would prove very disastrous to those who had perhaps their all locked up in it at the present moment. He was bound to say that, while he believed there was good ground for an investigation into certain matters connected with this institution, a question which would no doubt receive the attention of the House when the House was placed in possession of information that would authorize it to investigate the management of it, he also held that they owed something to this institution and to those who were its depositors. It was a serious thing to charge an institution of this kind with gross mismanagement, because such a charge had a tendency to shake public confidence in its soundness. Speaking, therefore, in the interests—not of the directors or those who controlled the institution—but in the interests of the depositors, he would most earnestly ask his hon. friend to content himself with asking for the papers he desired, in the meantime. If this was agreed to, he (Mr. Devlin) could assure the hon. gentleman, that when these papers were brought down, he would discharge his humble part in the investigation, and use no effort to screen the directors if there was any evidence of wrongdoing on their part. But until that evidence was before the House, he thought nothing further should be said. Let it be borne in mind that they were dealing with a public institution in which were deposited the savings of thousands of the poor and industrial classes of Montreal. Nothing should be done which would have the effect of destroying their confidence in that institution or impair its credit, thus placing the savings of these people in jeopardy. He thought they would be doing wrong if they took such a course. All they wanted were the papers; these must be brought down, and brought down quickly, so that the House might have an opportunity of dealing with this important question. He had to apologize for this interruption, but coming direct from the city of Montreal, he thought it his duty to bring this matter before the House because there was no hon. member upon whom the obligation rightly rested as upon himself. He was perhaps specially the representative of that large class of depositors who placed their money in that institution, and it would be clearly his duty to protect them if he found their interests were in danger.

Mr. TASCHEREAU said he was afraid that, in moving for so many returns, he must justify himself by relating to the House the facts which were now before the people of Montreal. He was merely stating what was the subject of general conversation, and what had been proved before the courts of justice in Montreal, quite recently. He had merely stated that the City and District Savings Bank of Montreal had forgotten its peculiar, distinctive policy, and he had called attention to the enormous losses the bank had incurred during the year 1876-7. If, however, the hon. member for Montreal Centre felt that it would not be desirable to make any remarks regarding the bank in the meantime, he would defer to his wishes and content himself with making the motion in the hands of Mr. Speaker.

Mr. OUIMET said that, as one who had taken some interest in the matter, which he believed was a very important one, he wished to make a remark regarding it. For his own part, he had no objection to the papers asked for being submitted to the House and investigated by all the hon. gentlemen present, but he thought the hon. member for Montreal Centre should be thanked for having stopped the reading of the printed speech by the hon. member for Montmagny. That printed speech was not new to himself or to other hon. members of the House, or to a great many parties even in the city of Montreal.

Mr. TASCHEREAU : I stopped my remarks because the hon. member for Montreal Centre thought I should not go on with my speech now.

Mr. HOLTON said he wished to make a suggestion, which he thought was obviously in the interest of the public. He took a very deep interest in the soundness of the bank, and he believed, with the hon. member for Montreal Centre, that all discussion relative to the position of that institution should be postponed until such of the papers as the hon. the Minister of Finance thought it his duty in order to be brought down, were before the House. He thought the institution in question had nothing whatever to fear, so far as its ability to meet its obligations to the public was concerned. He had not been connected with it personally for about six years—though he had previously been connected with it—and his conviction was that these papers should be brought down and placed on the table of the House before the discussion was continued. He thought the hon. member for Montmagny, instead of being subjected to reproach, was entitled to credit for adopting so promptly as he did the suggestion of his hon. friend from Montreal Centre, that further remarks at present might provoke a discussion which would be untimely and injurious to the public interest.

MR. MASSON: His second thought was better than his first.

MR. OUMET said he was not going to answer the whole speech—though he knew all about it—but only the part read to the House. More especially did he wish to answer that part because, though he was not sent there in the interests of the bank, he wished to state that the bank had nothing to conceal from the House or the public, and that its directors were ready to investigate its affairs in the sight of the whole Dominion. He held in his hand the whole speech that was to have been made before the House by the hon. member for Montmagny—in fact, it was known ten days previously in Montreal. It was well to know that the step taken by the hon. gentleman had been at the instigation of some parties in Montreal who were litigating with the Montreal City and District Savings Bank. It was said that the bank had lost something. In fact, it was well known that it had lost a good deal in transactions with certain parties in Montreal, more especially with some persons connected with the City Passenger Railway, who had obtained some loans from the bank, while they gave as security stocks nominally amounting to over $200,000. It was discovered, however, by the public of Montreal—and that was not the first discovery of the kind made for some years—that that stock, which was quoted at 240 was only worth about 70 per cent. Well, the bank had lost a large amount, which had been, for the most part, covered by new calls on shareholders who were well able to pay any calls that might be made on them, in order to secure the deposits in the bank. These shareholders were not numerous, but their means were equal to any emergency that might arise. Considering that they had been defrauded, especially by the late directors of the City Passenger Railway, the directors of the bank entered an action against the latter, as he had said, in order that they might be reimbursed. This action was now pending before the courts of Montreal, the amount claimed being over $100,000, that was the amount lost by the bank in consequence of the false representations made by the late directors of the City Passenger Railway. A similar suit was pending on the part of the Montreal Bank.

MR. HOLTON said he was surprised that a gentleman having the interests of the bank at heart should persist in an argument which must provoke discussion and bring on a discussion which the House was anxious to avoid.

MR. MASSON agreed with the hon. gentleman in thinking that the matter should be dropped at present. It was right that some explanation should be made. A good deal had now been said on the matter and he trusted, therefore, that the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) would allow the subject to pass in the meantime.

MR. TASCHIEREAU said the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) had referred to his speech. He did not know whether the hon. member had seen any memoranda of his with reference to the Montreal City and District Savings Bank, but he could say for himself that he had never shown his notes to the hon. gentleman. He did not read his speech, but only referred to his notes with regard to figures. His speech was not written, and if the hon. gentleman had seen notes of his speech it was more than he had himself.

MR. HOLTON.

MR. OUIMET said that hon. members might be of opinion that the credit of the bank had been fully vindicated by the declaration of the hon. member for Chateauguay, and he himself was of that opinion. The hon. members for Chateauguay and Montreal Centre must be in a much better position to speak on the subject than the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Taschereau) or other hon. members from Ontario, or from remoter places of this Dominion. He (Mr. Ouimet) was perfectly satisfied of the solvency of the bank, but in his humble opinion it might be of some interest to the members of this House to know how private parties could come before this House and use, for private purposes, the authority which statements made by hon. members in the House must have before the public.

MR. SPEAKER: I think the hon. gentleman goes a little too far. He has made a charge against the hon. member for Montmagny of having been employed by outside parties to make charges here.

MR. OUIMET said he did not impute to the hon. member bad motives in bringing up this motion, but when an hon. member knew outside facts that might justify a certain way of thinking, he was justified in stating those facts, although not with the intention of charging the hon. member with bad motives. If he had imputed such motives to the hon. member he would at once apologize, in order to show that such an intention was never in his mind. He (Mr. Ouimet) repeated what he said, that, according to the knowledge he had of the transaction, the hon. member for Montmagny had been imposed upon by private parties outside of this House. He believed that insinuations brought before the House were sufficient to impugn the credit of the bank, and it was, therefore, necessary to put the public in possession of the facts of the case. According to his own knowledge the attack made from outside was only to force the bank to come to a settlement with those people belonging to the Montreal City Passenger Railway.

MR. GIBBS (South Ontario) said that, while he agreed with the hon. members for Chateauguay and Montreal Centre as to the impropriety of discussing matters in reference to the bank so as to damage it in any way before the House, at the same time he could not but think the speech made by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Taschereau) was in the direction of injuring the bank, and it was necessary that some one should speak in reply, so far, at any rate, as that hon. gentleman had presented his case to the House. The remarks of the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet) were of a reassuring character. He had stated to this House that the bank did not fear any investigation; that the directors were quite willing to have its affairs examined by this House and exposed to the whole country; that its position was such as must commend it to the confidence of the country; that the parties who had taken the management in hand, and were stockholders of the bank, were parties of such reputed wealth that, although the bank might have suffered loss of capital, yet they would be able to repair by the infusion of new capital, any loss the bank might have suffered. So far as the speech of the hon. member for Laval went, it was in the right direction.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I think it will be obvious to every hon. member of this House who will take the trouble to read the motion which my hon. friend for Montmagny (Mr. Taschereau) has moved, that to grant the various propositions which he makes would be to subject this bank to an inquisitorial investigation to which no bank has ever been subjected, and which would afford a most dangerous and mischievous precedent. I am bound to say I cannot recommend the House to grant more than a very few items contained in this motion, as, unfortunately, some degree of suspicion might attach in the minds of some persons as to the solvency of the bank. I may remark that, as far as it is possible to judge, the steps which were taken in constituting this bank some seven years ago, appear to have imparted to it a very great deal more of strength and stability than it previously possessed. Under the late form of government, nobody was responsible, I believe, for one single dollar; under the present incorporation, a capital of two million dollars has been subscribed, most of which, I believe, is held by persons of considerable wealth, and a very considerable amount of which, about $600,000 only have been paid up, leaving, therefore, in addition to all the other assets possessed by the bank, the sum of $1,400,000 to provide for any depreciation or injury to their securities. I believe, also, that it is a rule on which the operations of the bank were conducted, that no advance be made to any one unless substantial or collateral security be given. Now, under these circumstances, although it is true that a very considerable power is granted to Government to demand all kinds of returns from the directors of this bank, I must say that I should require very strong cause to be shown before I should be brought to exercise the inquisitorial power sought to be exercised by this motion. We are asked, in the very first clause of the motion, to obtain all the amounts due to the bank in 1871, together with the names of the parties by whom due, their collaterals held as security, the rates at which the collaterals were taken, and their actual value at the time. Well, it is possible that information might be obtained, I suppose; but, at the same time, I must say I know of no case in which the affairs of a bank, having assets to the extent of four and a-half millions, have been subjected to a scrutiny like this. As to the second, third, fourth, fifth, and also the sixth clause, as far as my memory serves me, all this information was laid before the Committee of Banking and Commerce in 1871, at the time the bank was reorganized, and it may be this information can be supplied without any particular inconvenience. On these points, therefore, I will reserve judgment for the moment; but in the seventh and eighth clauses it is asked that a detailed statement of all loans made by the bank since its reorganization, together with the names of the parties to the collaterals, with the price of the collaterals and the interest on them. I must say that, again, is entirely without precedent. I think the general rule we can afford to lay down in these cases is, that this bank should be called upon to give the information as to its actual position that any other bank is called upon to give under the Banking Act. If not sufficiently given in the Gazette, I should feel it my duty to obtain this information, and it might be that a great number of depositors, who are supposed to be persons of the poorer classes of the community, might wish for some extended information; and this might be obtained and required, although not to the extent demanded here. Neither do I think that the statements asked for in clauses nine, ten, eleven and twelve, should be granted in the shape, at any rate, that they are now moved for. As to clause thirteen, I presume that a statement, showing the amount of money owed by the Directors at present, would sufficiently meet the wishes of the House. As to clauses fourteen, fifteen and sixteen, those cover the ordinary items of information granted with respect to other banks, and, therefore, can fairly be called for if desired. On the whole, I think that I would recommend my hon. friend, for the present, to withdraw his motion. If he should persist in it, I should feel it my duty to propose that half of the clauses, at any rate, should be struck out, and that one or two of the others should be considerably modified. Should he require further information than that already given in the published Gazette returns, which would appear to be of a kind which persons having an interest in it might fairly claim, it might be a question to consider how far that could be granted; but knowing, as we all do, how utterly disastrous it would be to the business of the bank, which is necessarily conducted with more or less secrecy, that the names of all persons with whom they are carrying on business, the exact losses, or even all the securities, though it may be possible, should be published to the world, I think the House, and particularly those members who are experienced in banking transactions, will agree it would be a precedent of the most dangerous nature to allow the motion to pass in its present state. I do say that, for the private transactions of a great number of persons, who have nothing whatever to do with the quarrels of parties outside of the House, to be brought into public light, might lead to untold mischief, and might have the result of gravely injuring the standing of the bank.

MR. CARTWRIGHT.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that, if the statements asked for came within the Act, they must be received, if not, they were illegal.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said a very special power was granted, no doubt, to the Minister of Finance, with respect to this class of bank, under the 9th sub-section of section 6th,* but it was a power to be exercised with great care.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the 6th section of the Act laid it down that returns should be made by banks to the Government or Parliament, including the list of stockholders. The first thing to be understood was whether there was a clause of this kind in the charter, by which certain information was to be given. If it was, then, of course, this information asked for should be given under the terms of the charter. If the bank was not obliged to make any of these returns asked for in this motion, by the charter, this House could not require it to do so. Either these returns asked for would come within the charter, or they would not.

MR. HOLTON said he was quite sure this bank would furnish any information and details which the Finance Minister might think it was desirable in the public interest to call upon them to supply. As to the charter, he (Mr. Holton) was connected with the bank at the time of its reorganization, and he was certain it was the counterpart of the Act, so far as the returns were concerned.

MR. TASCHEREAU said he thought it was desirable that this debate should be adjourned, in order that these amendments should be put into writing and considered by the House.

MR. MACKENZIE said the House might tacitly agree to allow the motion to pass, as arranged by the Finance Minister, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taschereau) would agree to that.

MR. DEVLIN : It is merely putting it into form, that is all.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he believed the object of the Act 30 Vic., cap. 7, was to limit the right of the Government to require information simply of the subjects specially specified on the charter. He was a member of the Banking and Commerce Committee in 1871, and remembered that point was rather fully discussed. It might be found that the hon. member for Kingston (Sir John A. Macdonald) was right in saying that the right of the Government to require information was strictly limited, but that was not the intention of the Committee at the time it passed. This was an Act for Savings Banks, and not the general Act, and the wording of it would, he believed, give a right to the ordinary returns.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

G. B. BURLAND LETTERS PATENT BILL.

[BILL No. 36.]

(Mr. Casgrain.)

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Order for second reading read.

MR. MACKENZIE said he had to ask his hon. friend to withdraw this Bill. It was one for a simple extension of patent, the patentee having already enjoyed his full term under the law. He had looked at the memorandum which his hon. friend had been good enough to give him, and there was nothing in it to justify the House in allowing the law to be violated in extending the patent. It was only in the case where a doubt existed as to whether the party might have had the full extent of time under the terms of the law, whether he might have been prevented by accident or mistake from enjoying the benefit of the full term, that the Bill could go before a Committee to determine whether there was really any reason why further indulgence should not be given. In this case there was absolutely nothing except the assertion of the patentee that he believed it to be in the public interest that his patent should be continued in himself. He (Mr. Mackenzie) did not think it was in the public interest. The patentee had obtained the full award which the law allowed, and it was not desirable to introduce a system to allow in special cases an extension of the time which the law contemplated. There had been no instance of such a Bill obtaining the sanction of Parliament since the organization of the Dominion. There was nothing in it which would justify them in setting aside the wise provisions of the law. If it were allowed to pass, a dangerous precedent would be established which would apply to every possible case; therefore, he must ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw it.

MR. CASGRAIN said he thought this Bill might have been entitled to go to a Committee, at least, under the law which guided the House in these matters. He had been struck at first with the same idea which had been stated by the hon. the Premier, that this Bill ought not to obtain a second reading. But, as there was a matter of fact involved in the preamble of the Bill, he thought that it might have had a chance of going before the Committee, and he desired to lay before the House the reasons which induced him to introduce this Bill. He concurred entirely with the principle asserted by the hon. the Premier, that patents in general ought not to be extended. But, in this particular case, he was of opinion that a Bill of this description, far from being against the interests of the public, by extending the right of the patentee, was, on the contrary, a protection to the public, and that was the only ground upon which he thought that the Bill might be brought before the House and carried. As to the right of extending the power of a patent, this was recognized not only in Canadian legislation, but had been recognized also, and was recognized to-day, in Great Britain and in France. From a work which he had before him on letters patent, he could quote a number of precedents which took place, even in England, in which patentees had been granted an extension of the time allowed for their patents. It was well known that in England to-day the power was conferred on the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, exactly as Parliament would do in the same case. He would cite, in order to maintain his views, a number of cases which had occurred, all of which were founded on public utility. And in this very case, he thought the public interests would be advanced in keeping this patent within the control of a private individual, and in order to prevent the counterfeiting of bank notes an extension of time ought to be granted either to the patentee or to some other person, or to the Government itself, in order that security might be afforded against counterfeiting bank notes in this country. It was well known that in England and France, the Government had entire control of the paper on which these notes were printed, thereby preventing counterfeiting. In the Province which he had the honour of representing there was such confidence placed in our bank note system that there was hardly any counterfeiting at all, and, therefore, all the farmers and men of business took these notes in circulation, because they accepted them as bona fide genuine notes; whereas, in the United States, the shin-plasters, as they were called, were so spurious, and there were so many counterfeits of them, that the counterfeits passed current in the market quite as well as good notes; it was not worth while examining whether they were genuine or not. If this patent could be secured in such a way as to prove a benefit, it would, instead of being against the principle advocated by the hon. the Premier, assert that principle itself. It would be an advantage to the public to have this patent secured. It would certainly be a privilege granted to a particular individual, and might be looked upon as a monopoly to a certain extent, but it was not a monopoly. Though he was prepared to use all his efforts to carry the Bill, yet as he could not hope to succeed, he would be obliged to adopt the course suggested by the hon. the Premier. At the same time he desired to express his views, and thought they were worthy of being considered.

MR. MACKENZIE.

Order discharged, and Bill withdrawn.

MONTREAL AND OTTAWA JUNCTION RAILWAY BILL.

(Mr. Smith, Peel.)

SECOND READING.

MR. SMITH (Peel) introduced a Bill (No. 57) (from the Senate) Respecting the Montreal and City of Ottawa Junction Railway Company.

Bill read the second time.

GEORGE F. JOHNSTON DIVORCE BILL.

(Mr. Fraser.)

FIRST READING.

MR. FRASER moved the first reading of a Bill (No. 59) (from the Senate) for the relief of George Frothingham Johnston.

Motion agreed to on the following division :—

YEAS :
Messieurs

Archibald,	McDougall (South Renfrew)
Bain,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Bertram,	McKay (Colchester),
Biggar,	Mackenzie,
Blain,	McCallum,
Borron,	McCarthy,
Bowell,	McCraney,
Bowman,	McGregor,
Buell,	McNab,
Bunster,	Metcalf,
Burk,	Mills,
Campbell,	Mitchell,
Carmichael,	Monteith,
Charlton,	Oliver,
Coffin,	Orton,
Dymond,	Paterson,
Ferris,	Pettes,
Fleming,	Platt,
Flesher,	Ray,
Fraser,	Robinson,
Galbraith,	Ross (East Durham),
Gibbs (North Ontario),	Ross (West Middlesex),
Gillies,	Ross (Prince Edward),
Gillmor,	Rymal,
Goudge,	Scatcherd,
Greenway,	Scriven,
Guthrie,	Shibley,
Horton,	Skinner,
Kerr,	Smith (Westmoresland),
Kirk,	Thompson, (Haldimand),
Kirkpatrick,
Landelkin,

Macdonald (Kingston), Trow, Macdonald (Centre Tupper, Toronto), White (North Renfrew), Macdougall (East Wood, Elgin), Young.—70.

NAYS :

Messieurs

Aylmer,	Jetté,
Barthe,	Jones (South Leeds),
Bécharde,	Lafamme,
Benoit,	Lajoie,
Bernier,	Langevin,
Blanchet,	Lanthier,
Bolduc,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Bourassa,	McDonald (Cape Breton),
Brooks,	McDougall (Three Rivers),
Brown,	McIsaac,
Caron,	Malouin,
Casgrain,	Masson,
Cheval,	Méthot,
Cimon,	Montplaisir,
Costigan,	Mousseau,
Coupal,	Quimet,
Cuthbert,	Pinsonneault,
Delorme,	Pope (Compton),
Desjardins,	Robillard,
De St. Georges,	Robitaille,
Devlin,	Rouleau,
Forbes,	Roy,
Geoffrion,	Short,
Gill,	Stephenson,
Harwood,	Taschereau.—52.
Hurteau,
Irving,

Bill read the first time.

HUGH HUNTER DIVORCE BILL.

(Mr. McCarthy.)

FIRST READING.

MR. McCARTHY moved the first reading of a Bill (No. 58) (from the Senate) for the relief of Hugh Hunter.

Motion agreed to, on the following Division :—

YEAS :
Messieurs

Archibald,	McDougall (South Renfrew),
Bain,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Bertram,	McKay (Colchester),
Biggar,	Mackenzie,
Blain,	McCallum,
Borden,	McCarthy,
Borron,	McCraney,
Bowell,	McGregor,
Bowman,	McNab,
Buell,	Metcalf,
Bunster,	Mills,
Burk,	Mitchell,
Carmichael,	Monteith,
Coffin,	Oliver,
Davies,	Orton,
Dymond,	Paterson,
Ferris,	Pickard,
Fleming,	Platt,
Flesher,	Ray,
Fraser,	Robinson,
Galbraith,	Ross (East Durham),
Gibbs (North Ontario),

Gibbs (South Ontario),	Ross (West Middlesex),
Gillies,	Ross (Prince Edward),
Goudge,	Rymal,
Greenway,	Scatcherd,
Guthrie,	Scriven,
Higinbotham,	Shibley,
Horton,	Sinclair,
Kerr,	Skinner,
Kirk,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Kirkpatrick,	Thompson (Haldimand),
Landerkin,	Trow,
Macdonald (Kingston),	Tupper,
Macdonald (Centre Toronto),	Wood,
	Young.—70.

NAYS :

Messieurs

Barthe,	Jetté,
Bécharde,	Lafiamme,
Benoit,	Lajoie,
Bernier,	Langevin,
Blanchet,	Lanthier,
Bolduc,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Bourassa,	McDonald (Cape Breton),
Brooks,	McDougall (Three Rivers),
Brown,	McIsaac,
Caron,	Malouin,
Casgrain,	Masson,
Cheval,	Methot,
Cimon,	Montplaisir,
Costigan,	Mousseau,
Coupal,	Ouimet,
Currier,	Pinsonneault,
Cuthbert,	Pope (Compton),
Delorme,	Robillard,
Desjardins,	Robitaille,
De St. Georges,	Rouleau,
Devlin,	Roy,
Donahue,	Short,
Forbes,	Stephenson,
Geoffrion,	Taschereau,
Gill,	Wallace (South Norfolk).—53.
Harwood,
Hurteau,
Irving,

Bill read the first time.

INSOLVENT LAW REPEAL BILL.

[Bill No. 2.]

(Mr. Barthe.)

SECOND READING PROPOSED.

Order for second reading read.

MR. BARTHE said, last year he had introduced the same Bill, but, to the regret of the majority of the people of this country, it was defeated, and in reintroducing it this year, he believed the opinion of the majority of the people of this Dominion was favourable to it. This was not a question of politics, though it was his humble opinion that the Government should have a policy on this subject. He submitted respectfully to the House and the Government that, on so important a subject as this one, the Government should be prepared to state whether they were in favour of such an insolvent law or of its repeal. If the Government was not ready to express such opinion, as this question was not a political one, but one of general advantage, he held the leaders on both sides of the House ought to put it in that shape before this House and the country. The majority of the people were in favour of the repeal of the law, because experience taught them that the more it had been amended, the more unsatisfactory it had become. The discussion last year, on both sides, was important. The reasons for the existence of the law and for its repeal had been given very eloquently. He would not repeat what had been said in favour of the repeal of the law last year, but would say this: that the reason his Bill was defeated last year was on account of the amendment proposed by the Government. The Government had then proposed an amendment which, in the opinion of many hon. members, would be a panacea, a remedy for the evils of the law as it existed. The amendment proposed by the then hon. Minister of Justice was that no insolvent who could not pay fifty cents on the dollar should get a discharge. The law was intended to be stringent, that every estate should give to the creditors fifty cents on the dollar or no discharge should be granted. They had had an experience of the amended law for one year, during which time only one estate in the Province of Quebec had paid a dividend of 50c. on the dollar, and that was very recently. He had the official statistics of the Government and also those of Dun, Wiman & Co., which showed that so far from estates having paid 50c., the average dividend was less than 14c. over the insolvent estates of the Dominion. Here was what the Journal of Commerce, which was an authority on different subjects, said.

MR. MCCARTHY.

Several Hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

MR. BARTHE said he did not refer to that journal as a political, but as a commercial authority.

MR. MACKENZIE: And political.

MR. BARTHE said he did not now refer to political questions. That newspaper said :

"The Government report gives $31,346,154; Dun, Wiman & Co., $25,517,971—a difference of nearly $6,000,000. The average of net assets for dividends and composition are somewhat less than fourteen cents on the dollar of liabilities."

That was a statement which nobody could deny, and the expectation of the hon. the Minister of Justice, expressed last year, that estates would pay 50c. on the dollar, had not been fulfilled according to the official statistics. He observed in a newspaper the suggestion that a remedy would be found in compelling insolvents to pay dividends of 75c. on the dollar. No estate in the Dominion could pay that dividend and the assignee's costs; indeed, no estate was able to pay 50c. and assignee's costs, as matters were now managed. With those statements made public, it was desirable to ascertain in how many cases discharges were refused to reckless and dishonest debtors. Experience had shown that, as the law was now framed, it was nearly impossible to contest with success the discharge of an insolvent, because the assignee and insolvent worked together; a statement was prepared before the meeting, and the majority of the creditors did not make it their business to watch the estate. It was said, in reply, that if estates were not well managed, the fault was that of the creditors and they should make it their business to look after them. In those cases, however, where they guarded their interests, and went into Court to protect their rights, they had, generally, been compelled to pay the costs. The law, at all events in the Province of Quebec, was, that if one creditor contested the discharge of an insolvent, it was not fair that the discharge should be refused. That was the decision given by the Court of Appeal. He did not, of course, desire to combat that decision; he knew it was in accordance with the law, but a law which enabled such a decision to be given was a bad one and should be repealed, for it was unjust to creditors and encouraged reckless and dishonest debtors. The experience of the working of the law during previous years had been of the same character. It was a benefit only to reckless and dishonest debtors, and conferred no advantage on creditors, with the exception of a few large creditors in cities, and who appeared to think they had the right to control the whole business of the country by that law. The Journal of Commerce contained a résumé of the working of the Act throughout the country; it placed the subject in a clear light, and contained the following paragraphs:

"There is not one among the wholesale merchants of Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton, Halifax, St. John, and other cities, who is not conversant with the country merchant, who, to build up a business and destroy that of his honest neighbour, will sell cotton for 6c. to 7c. a yard and other goods in proportion, (which his honest and careful competitors cannot afford to sell for less than 9c. to 10c.,) well aware that the Insolvent Act is ready to relieve him when at the end of a year or two he finds himself owing his creditors some $15,000 or $20,000 and has only $12,000 to $15,000 wherewith to pay it. He calls on his creditors and tells his story very humbly. But he has an uncle or other wealthy friend who will secure him, and, if they would accept 50c. on the dollar, he 'would be a good customer in the future.' The result is that in nine cases out of ten he returns with his composition all arranged, and enabled to continue underselling his honest neighbours, who see with regret that the 'white-washed' dealer is none the less respected in his vicinity, because he has not, like themselves, paid his twenty shillings in the pound. 'As a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump,' so does one such compromise infect a whole neighbourhood; others who had continued able and willing to pay their indebtedness in full are tempted into similar recklessness in trading and buying, until at length the sound business men in the place are the exception and not the rule. Indeed, the ease and certainty with which compositions and discharges are obtained are a continual premium offered to recklessness and dishonesty. There is scarcely an upright country storekeeper who has not had sad experience of the state of things we here describe, and upon the head of the wholesale merchant at last descends the accumulated load, when he finds his customers one after another failing or offering to compromise, and this in a business where profits are scant enough through over-competition, "slaughtering," heavy taxation, embezzlement and other causes.

"The remedy for this state of things must be found in the cause; and there is little doubt left in the minds of practical business men that, rather than allow matters to remain as they are, it would be advisable to totally repeal the Insolvent Act, leaving cases of insolvency to be dealt with by the common law of the country, with all its attendant evils, unless such amendments can be provided as will lessen this great evil. Merchants, as a rule, are but too ready to extend every leniency to the customer who is unfortunate in business, except where great want of capacity is shown, when the sooner he is out of business the better for all concerned. A hint towards abrogating the Act would doubtless cause a precipitancy among dishonest dealers that would amount to almost a panic, but better such should occur than that they continue to drain the life-blood of the business community—than that the honest country dealer be entirely supplanted by a class of men who are honest only when it is the best policy. It is a strange fact that of the 1,758 failures in the Province of Ontario during the past two years, but few have been refused a discharge. There are a few exceptions to this in the Province of Quebec, chiefly in this city, but they are cases of the most glaring dishonesty. Those who fear for the working of the common law in cases of insolvency to the detriment of the unfortunate honest trader know but little of the practical side of the question, of the tendency on the part of merchants generally to a too favourable view of the circumstances of a customer calling for indulgence on their part; and as the Insolvent Act was originally framed with a view to the protection of honest insolvents, it is high time, now that it has outlived its usefulness and become the shield of dishonest dealers, to abrogate it altogether ere it be too late, and the commercial morality of the business community exist only in name."

He submitted that that opinion should receive the favourable consideration of the majority of the House, as it would that of a majority of the people. Recent statistics showed that since 1873 there had been 7,546 failures, with liabilities of upwards of $100,000,000; the yearly average was 1,509 bankruptcies, with assets of $20,000,000 per annum. In 1877 there was one insolvent for every thirty merchants. There was no other country which furnished such an example. Those facts were very damaging to the credit of Canada, and showed that our commercial morality was rapidly diminishing, and that the repeal of the Insolvent Act was required to prevent its further deterioration. He had often heard it stated that the large merchants desired the Insolvent Act. It was a law for merchants; if they wanted it, let it apply to merchants alone. He saw no reason why farmers, professional men and mechanics, the great majority of the people, should be subject to class legislation merely to suit the convenience of large city merchants. Moreover, he failed to perceive what advantage those merchants gained by it, but, of course, they were the best judges; at all events they had no right to have a majority of the people as their victims, because experience demonstrated that large creditors always acted so as to secure themselves, while the balance of the estate went into the pockets of the assignee. Such was their experience of the operation of the Act in the Province of Quebec. He believed the voice of the people would be heard on this question at the next election, and that the great majority of candidates returned would be compelled to state before the people that they were opposed to the Insolvent Law, because it had proved to be ineffectual in its working and unjust towards them. Every day creditors failed on their own compositions, some had done it on two or three occasions, and were always sufficiently fortunate as to be honourably discharged. He would not longer address the House, because hon. members must have formed their opinions on the subject. Entertaining the views he had expressed, he was convinced that, as the law was ineffectual when it was first introduced, and was not now effective, the best course to adopt was to suspend the Act for at least two years as an experiment, because it had been proved that not only was the Act ineffectual, but it was also injurious to the majority of the people. He would conclude by citing the opinion of an English Judge, who recently defined bankruptcy as the case of a man who owes a lot of money and the lawyer and assignee divide the estate between them.

MR. BARTHE.

MR. WOOD said he regretted the hon. member for Richelieu should have seen fit to re-introduce this Session the Bill which was defeated last Session by a majority of two to one, and which should have proved a sufficient indication that the feeling of the House was still in favour of retaining the Insolvent Act on the Statute-book. The hon. gentleman had stated that public opinion was much more in favour of the proposed repeal than last year. If such was a fact, he (Mr. Wood) was not aware of it. Certainly no petitions had been presented by the hon. member, or others holding the same views, for the repeal of the Act, and if the country had been as much in favour of the Insolvent Law as the hon. member indicated, such petitions would have been presented. The fact of a Bill for the repeal of the law having been brought forward a year ago, and there being a possibility that it would pass, led some traders to take advantage of the Insolvent Act, who, if left to themselves, would have paid their debts. In that view of the case, the hon. member for Richelieu had done an injury to the business of the country which he could not comprehend. The hon. gentleman had referred to the amendments to the Act brought in by the Government last Session, and adopted, and had mentioned that, if they had not been submitted, the Act would have been repealed. As only one year had elapsed since they became law, he (Mr. Wood) submitted they had not had a fair opportunity of being tested. Moreover, the hon. member had not stated the amendments fairly when he said that, under them, no person could obtain a discharge unless he paid 50c. on the dollar. If he remembered them rightly, they were simply to this effect: that a person feeling himself unable to pay his debts, might submit the state of his affairs to his creditors, and if they did not then take charge of his estate, he would have the opportunity of obtaining his discharge, whatever dividend the estate might realize. The hon. gentleman had complained that the Insolvent Law was class legislation, because the farmers could not take advantage of it. That, however, was a fortunate circumstance for the agricultural classes. Suppose a farmer, in the present hard times, of which they heard so much from some hon. members, was unable to pay the bill of a storekeeper, and could be made an insolvent, his farm might be taken from him. As it stood now, the farmer must be sued in the regular way, and an execution be issued; and, if there were not chattels enough to satisfy the execution, the farm could not be sold under one year, but if the farmer were allowed to go into insolvency, his farm would, perhaps, be taken away before he had time to redeem it. In this case he thought it was of great advantage to the farmer that he was not able to go into insolvency. The principle of the Insolvent Law was a good one. It enabled the creditors of an insolvent estate to have it distributed regularly and fairly amongst them. The whole of the machinery of the law was perfect, so far as it enabled the creditors, if they would only discharge their duty to each other and the insolvent, to distribute fairly the estate. If a merchant did not take the pains to look after an insolvent estate, the law could not be blamed for that. It was ample and perfect in every respect. If the official assignee got more of an estate than he ought, this was not the fault of the law. It was simply the fault of the creditors, who suffered in consequence. He had often heard it said that the great anxiety exhibited on the part of certain gentlemen to secure the repeal of the law was due to the fact that official assignees obtained, perhaps, a greater part of these estates than a certain class of lawyers; and, therefore, these gentlemen desired to go back to the old days of snap judgments, when these lawyers got hold of the whole estate, instead of the official assignee. He did not say that this was the reason; but such a statement was made outside of the House. They were told if they had no insolvent law there would be no failures. If the hon. gentleman would guarantee this, he (Mr. Wood) would vote for this Bill. He contended that, whether we had an Insolvent Law or not, we would have failures in business. Incompetent men would obtain credit without, as much as with it. Incompetent men would make failures whether the law existed or not; and, therefore, he held that it was no argument to say that, if this law were repealed, there would be no failures. Without it we would have as many as with it; and then, as now, goods would be sold at a sacrifice, because merchants would fail, and the sheriff would be called in; and, in that case, goods would be sold at auction, and parties fortunate enough to secure the first judgment would obtain the whole of the proceeds of the sale, and all the rest of the creditors would be wiped out, or rather, would not get a single farthing. The hon. gentleman said—and he believed truly—that they had a law in the Province of Quebec which enabled them to take hold of and distribute estates without the aid of an insolvent law. Very well. He had no objection to their working under that system. He did not have the slightest objection to the setting aside of the Insolvent Law, as far as the Province of Quebec was concerned; but he had a decided objection to the people of Quebec, who had a law which would answer the purpose in case of the repeal of the Insolvent Law, forcing those who had no such other law, to do away with this law. Why should the people of Ontario be placed in a position different to the residents of the Province of Quebec? If the latter had such a law as was mentioned, let them work under it; but they, in Ontario, who were perfectly satisfied with the Insolvent Law—and no petition had been presented from Ontario to secure its repeal—should not be forced to repeal it to their great disadvantage. A meeting of the Dominion Board of Trade took place a short time ago, and then it was supposed that the wisdom of the merchants and manufacturers of the country was assembled to discuss these matters. The question of the repeal of the Insolvent Law was brought up, and the leading merchants both from Upper and Lower Canada, totally opposed it. He thought he could do nothing better, or so well, as to read a part of the speech which was delivered on the occasion by Mr. Andrew Robertson, a leading merchant of Montreal. Mr. Robertson was well known to the merchants of the country, and to a great number of the members of the House, as being largely engaged in the commercial business, and as a man of vast experience in the commercial affairs of the country; and, if the repeal of this law would have benefited the commercial community, he thought that Mr. Robertson would have been the very first man to advocate it; but he took quite a different course. He said:

“ If I understand Mr. Green’s amendment, it repeals the Act and does away with preferential assignments in Ontario. I do not know how we could get on in Quebec without the Insolvent Act. At a meeting of large merchants in Montreal lately, this question was brought up in an informal manner, and out of about twenty persons present, only five voted for the repeal of the Act, and fifteen for its retention. These represented the most important establishments in Montreal. In a joke, this story was told: The creditors of an estate, to avoid expense, had a private assignment, and appointed some of their own number to manage the estate, and they found, after exhausting all the assets, they not only had no dividend, but had to pay for the rent of the store. I do not believe any has done as badly as that, and yet I believe these gentlemen did the very best they could for the creditors of that estate. Mr. Green’s proposal might suit Ontario very well, but not Quebec. I have no wish to go back to the time when we had the game of grab in Upper Canada, and when, according to my experience, we could not receive a dividend once in ten or fifteen cases, and then only a shilling in the pound. What has been the result of the Insolvent Act? By a return made to the House of Commons in the year, $27,000,000 of failures had yielded 22½c. in the dollar, which is a much larger sum than we ever got under the old law. Then in the Province of Quebec, if you repeal the Insolvent Act, it is useless to sue at all. I never, under the old system, attempted to sue, because I found I had simply to pay the costs. What with separations des biens and other modes of evading payment, it was impossible to get anything. I have known men, at the very time we were getting judgment, having a separation from their wives to get out of paying a dollar of their indebtedness. I hope the law will not be repealed.”

Other gentlemen who attended that meeting, spoke in a similar strain, and in the face of all this, and of the fact that not a single petition from the commercial community had been presented in favour of the repeal of this law, he considered that it would be doing a great injustice to attempt its repeal. They were told that the people of Lower Canada could get along without this law. It would be remembered that the present Minister of Justice addressed the House when the amendment of the law was discussed last year, and the hon. gentleman then pointed out that, even without an insolvent law, the costs incurred in contesting a case in Lower Canada were actually greater than they were with it. He would read what the hon. gentleman said on that occasion :—

“ He had some experience in commercial cases and had known estates worth twenty shillings in the pound, which after this process would not yield enough to pay twenty shillings in the pound to the lawyers. There was not an action on a promissory note where there was a contestation that would not entail, without any appeal to a Court of Revision, expenses amounting to at least fifty pounds.”

Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barthe) now tell the House and country that the repeal of this law would benefit Lower Canada, if this was a true statement of affairs in that section when no such law existed? He contended that, even for Lower Canada, it would be a sad calamity to have it repealed.

MR. BLANCHET: No; but the contrary.

MR. WOOD said that a very large amount of capital was invested in commerce in this country at the present time; and not one of the people so engaged, who had large sums so invested, and who were doing business throughout the length and breadth of the land, and doing it on credit, had petitioned for the repeal of this law. They were perfectly satisfied with it as it stood; they felt that it was as good as it could be made; and not a single petition for its repeal had been presented. He believed that, in the interests of the commercial community, it should not be repealed; and, therefore, he appealed to the House and to the Ministry to call upon their supporters to vote down the Bill. He begged leave to move that the Bill be not read the second time, and that it be read the second time this day six months.

MR. MACDONALD (Centre Toronto) said that the hon. member for Richelieu had stated that the Government ought to have a policy on this subject. Surely the hon. gentleman had not forgotten the care bestowed upon the amendments to the Insolvent Law by the late Minister of Justice last Session, and how well these were calculated to secure the benefits of the law to all those engaged in trade. He could not himself believe that the Government were prepared to take the responsibility of allowing this law to be repealed, an act that would have such disastrous results upon the trade of the country. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barthe) had stated that experience had shown that the more this law was amended, the worse it became; but the hon. gentleman had furnished the House with no proof whatever in this regard, save his mere statement. The hon. gentleman asserted that the majority of professional men, and farmers, and mechanics were opposed to the law; but in this instance, also, he had not furnished the House with one practical proof that such was really the case. The hon. gentleman said that last Session one of the amendments made provided that no discharge could be obtained unless 50c. on the dollar were paid. surely it must be in the recollection of every hon. member that it was then held to be simply an impossibility that any man, however disastrous his case was, could possibly secure a discharge until this amount was paid; and yet that hon. gentleman had that night read from the Journal of Commerce to show that, under the discharges obtained, the dividends had only amounted to 14c. on the dollar. He asked the hon. gentleman and the House whether he (Mr. Barthe) was prepared to state that, if the Insolvent Law had not been in existence, these estates would have paid more? The hon. gentleman stated that it was impossible to contest a discharge. This was not the case. If the creditors allowed unprincipled men to meet together and defraud them, they had themselves to blame; and he claimed that the provisions of the Insolvent Act contained all that was necessary to prevent an unprincipled man from obtaining his discharge, and to secure to the creditors the utmost farthing that the estate would pay. If merchants did not take the trouble to look after their affairs in this relation, they must take the consequences; but surely the law was not to be repealed to suit those who would not carry it out, and merely to place at a serious disadvantage those who were disposed to take the trouble to carry out its provisions. The hon. gentleman went on to say that there were some who sought to control the business of this country by the agency of this law. Well, this was the most extraordinary way of making money that he ever heard of. There was not an enlightened man in the country who did not regard a meeting of creditors as a calamity, and as a means of loss of some capital; but without the Insolvent Law, and without its provisions, this loss would be much more serious than it was. The hon. gentleman read from the Journal of Commerce to show that when a man failed under this law, he did so to defraud his creditors, and made use of his uncle or some wealthy friend to do so. If the hon. gentleman's logic meant anything at all, it meant that, if there were no Insolvent Law, such a person would be deprived of this means of defrauding, and that his uncles and other relatives could not do, lacking an insolvent law, precisely what they could do with it. The hon. gentleman had told them the number of failures that had taken place under the law; but he had not attempted to deal with what would have been the case without the law. The hon. gentleman had stated—and he was very glad that in this he could agree with the hon. gentleman—that the proportion of failures in Canada was greater than it was in any other country in the world, but he (Mr. Macdonald) could not see that the repeal of the law would at all alter the case. This simply showed the truth of what he had stated in the House on another occasion, that the great want of this country was character. They wanted the merchants who failed to wish to do right, and not to desire to defraud their creditors out of what was justly and properly due to them. The hon. gentleman stated again that the large creditor was paid under the law, and the smaller creditor defrauded. But let the hon. gentleman point out a clause in the Insolvent Act which pointed to any such conclusion. The hon. gentleman was utterly unable to do so, and he (Mr. Macdonald) maintained that, since this was the case, the hon. gentleman should not make that statement to the House before hon. gentlemen who, perhaps, did not take the trouble to read the Act. The fact was that the small creditors were not unfrequently, by the consent of the other creditors, paid in full, and the great loss under this Act fell upon the merchants of the country. The hon. gentleman concluded by reading a statement from an English Judge, to the effect that these estates were eaten up by the lawyers and assignees. Thanks to the wisdom of our legislators such a result was not possible in Canada. If men would but use the machinery with which this law furnished them, no such result could possibly take place. The law was on the Statute-book, and the hon. gentleman knew very well that it would not work itself. It was there and it must be put in force. Merchants interested must attend the meetings of creditors and carry out its provisions. What were the provisions of this Act? They were to give relief to the debtor and to protect the creditor. Relief did not necessarily imply composition. Many men simply wanted time. Many were embarrassed perhaps at the instance of some unreasonable creditor, and they required time; and this granted, they could so manage their estates as to save not only themselves but all others interested from loss. The Insolvent Act enabled him to make such an arrangement as would restore him to his position, discharge his liabilities, and deal equitably with his creditors.

MR. MACDONALD.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.

MR. MACDONALD said that hon. gentlemen might say "no," but he would ask them to prove their assertion. He did not know how the law was administered in Quebec, but take a case such as might happen in Ontario. There, a man might have twenty or thirty creditors. Some of these might be unreasonable, some might be selfish, and some might wish to obtain a preference. Now, the Insolvent Act prevented such proceedings and any attempt at fraud. He would ask the House, was it right that fraud should prevail? Was it right that honesty should be regarded? Was it right that an estate should be equitably distributed in the event of a distribution taken place? He maintained that to these questions there was but one reply. The solution of the whole was to be found in the working of the Insolvent Law. What did it propose? It proposed to prevent one creditor from getting preference over another; that no debtor might be oppressed after he obtained his discharge, if his statement was an honest one. Now, what did the Insolvent Law say on these points? It said:

"The insolvent shall not be entitled to confirmation of his discharge, or a deed of disposition and discharge, if it appears to the Court or the Judge that he has not obtained the assent of the proportion of his creditors in number and value required by this Act, to grant such discharge, or that he has been guilty of any fraud or fraudulent preference within the meaning of this Act, or of fraud or evil practice in procuring the consent of the creditors to the discharge, or the execution of the deed of composition and discharge, as the case may be, or of fraudulent retention and concealment of some portion of his estate or effects, or of evasion, prevarication or false swearing upon examination as to his estate and effects, or that the insolvent has not kept an account-book showing his receipts and disbursements of cash, and such other books of account as are suitable for his trade, or that if, having at any time kept such book or books, he has refused to produce or deliver them to the assignee, or is wilfully in default to obey any provision of this Act, or any order of the Court or Judge."

Now, was it right that that class of men should be let loose on the community? There was the law, and if men would not make use of its provisions they had themselves to blame. He was quite aware that creditors had been robbed, that dishonest men had been enriched. He was quite aware that creditors and debtors had sometimes practised collusion; sometimes it was the assignee and debtor, and sometimes the debtor proved too much for the whole of them together. But that was not the fault of the law, and he maintained that, if creditors would carry out the meaning of the law, these men would be punished. Reference had been made to the law of Quebec. One of the most intelligent and influential merchants in the city of Montreal had told him the other day that a creditor paid to an assignee for assets in an estate, $1,500, and by resolutely taking hold of the estate he rescued $2,500 which would have been lost had it not been for this Insolvent Act, as, under the law of Quebec, it would have been impossible to recover any portion of the sum he had mentioned.

MR. DEVLIN: That is a very rare occurrence.

MR. MACDONALD said the same gentleman to whom he had referred, told him, also, that in the city of Quebec, a person who failed without assets was put in prison for three months, and yet, from that man, no less a sum than $30,000 was extracted. Was it in favour of such men that the hon. gentleman wished to alter the law? The law that creditor wanted was one which would enable them to get a settlement without much trouble, without attending creditors' meetings, without going to official assignee's; and the law the debtor wanted was one to enable him to get off by paying five cents, or as much less as possible. But the law, as it at present stood, was, he maintained, an equitable one for creditor and debtor, and beneficial to the trade of the country. He wished the House to consider what the effect would be of repealing the law. He claimed, in the first place, that it would bring about wide-spread confusion. In Ontario there was no law similar to that which existed in the Province of Quebec, and he contended that, in order to be perfectly logical, the hon. gentleman would require to make an uniform law—to move the repeal of the law of Quebec, which was altogether dissimilar from that of Ontario.

MR. DEVLIN: It is infinitely more just.

MR. MACDONALD said if it was more just, the benefits of it should be extended to all the Provinces and not be confined to Quebec. The result of the repeal of the present law would be this: He would suppose that a debtor had about twenty creditors. One of these he owed about $10,000, and an additional $10,000 he owed to the other nineteen. The result would be that the smaller creditors might press for judgment and strike out the large creditor, or the large creditor might collude with the debtor and thus cut out the small ones. That would certainly have a most demoralizing effect, it would lead to chicanery and fraud, and would in every respect prove disastrous. He would ask the House, before they voted upon the Bill, to consider the care that was bestowed on the amendments of last Session. He would ask them to consider the calm way in which these amendments were considered, and how conducive they had been, when properly worked out, to the benefit and protection of trade. He asked whether it was good policy to repeal a law so recently amended? He would ask gentlemen connected with the banks if it was possible that merchants might lose and banks not suffer? And was it possible that these might lose and farmers and mechanics not feel the pressure of that loss throughout the whole country? Rest assured it would be felt, and he called upon every independent member of the House to vote against the motion of the hon. member for Richelieu.

MR. DOMVILLE said the hon. member for Centre Toronto had really amused him that evening. He would not say that he intended to vote against the hon. gentleman; it was probable he would vote with him, because there was method in everything, even in madness. He was satisfied as regarded the Insolvency Act. He thought the Bill was a bad one. Last Session, when it was first introduced, he had the honour of voting with the Premier, and perhaps, he was the only one of his party who did so, in order that a compromise might not be effected whereby a debtor might obtain his discharge on payment of 33 $\frac{1}{3}$  c. or the dollar instead of 50c. as had been the custom previously. He opposed that proportion because he believed it would offer a great inducement to traders to compromise the law. He did not think they should be allowed to get through very easily, preferring that the law of England should be followed by the legislators of Canada—namely, that no man should obtain his discharge who could not pay 10s. in the £. It had been laid down as an axiom in trade that any man should fail when he became unable to pay over 75 per cent. The policy of this Bill, therefore, would be, not only a great injustice to the mercantile community, but also to the banking interests of the country. It would wipe away the only chance a man had, and legitimate creditors would be unable to get that redress to which they were entitled. To show that the law was bad, he would give a case in point. A certain insolvent offered 10c. in the dollar, but did not pay a single cent, and, of course, was put into insolvency. Afterwards, he and his partner brought in suits in their individual names claiming \$5,000 each from the creditors for maliciously endeavouring to put them in court, and one of the parties obtained a verdict for damages. What was the good of this law? If a person proceeded against a debtor he was told that the man had good assets, though not able to pay his debts—that he had ships, mines or something of that description, and, consequently, the debtor paid no one. That had been demonstrated in New Brunswick in open court, where a person got damages to the extent of \$5,000, and his partner was still in a position to sue for the same damages. Evidently, then, the law did not meet the requirements of the people. He believed the hon. member who proposed the Bill had the best interests of the trading community at heart, but, at the same time, he thought it would be a great injustice to creditors if they were deprived of the present means to obtain redress. The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Macdonald) deprecated the principle that farmers should get relief. Now, as representing an agricultural constituency, he (Mr. Domville) disagreed with the hon. gentleman, for he believed that farmers were just as much entitled to relief as traders. It was not fair that a manufacturer or trader should swindle his creditors, and go through the Court, getting clear of everybody, while the honest farmer was denied all relief. He was prepared to sustain the mover of the amendment, because the repeal of the Bill would, he thought, be calculated to do grave injustice to the whole country.

MR. MACDONALD.

MR. MACMILLAN said that no law was ever placed upon the Statute-book of the country that was more necessary than the Insolvent Act of 1864, when it was placed there; because, after the crisis of 1857, in which almost every speculator, as well as every commercial man, had become bankrupt by over-speculating or over-trading, it was necessary to relieve the unfortunate. The method of carrying on business then was very different from what it is now. If a retail merchant went to one of those wholesale merchants, known as merchant princes, and asked to purchase a bill of goods, the first question asked him was, what security can you give? Because, no credit at that time was given to retail dealers without the price of the bills of goods being secured. In this way the speculator and the retail merchant, in so many cases, induced their farmer friends to go their security, and, failing themselves, as they almost invariably did, they left these friends security for so much that they eventually became hopelessly insolvent. In fact, the whole country seemed to be in a state of bankruptcy, and, in order that many honest debtors should be enabled to get into business again, an Act of this kind became absolutely necessary. When, in 1869, this Act was being repealed so as to apply to the traders only, to the utter exclusion of the farmer, it seemed to be a great injustice, for, a farmer having a desire to assist his sons in going into business, knew well that by paying cash for goods, they can obtain them on more favourable terms than if they purchased them on credit. He mortgages his farm and advances all the money to them that he possibly can; business is, or becomes dull; new indebtednesses are entailed. He assists them further by endorsing for them; business still gets worse; bad debts are made, and, in the end, the sons are thrown into insolvency; the amount realized from their assets is not sufficient to pay the liabilities; even after the father's assets are realized upon, there is a considerable discrepancy. And what was the result of it? Because the sons are traders, they get their discharge, whereas, the father, who is equally honest, has used every exertion to pay the liabilities, yet, because he is a farmer, he is not entitled to relief. This seemed to him to be a great injustice. He remembered well in 1875 or 1876, when an amendment to the present Act was being introduced to extend it to farmers, the hon. the Premier opposed it strenuously, stating that it would be a very bad thing to extend the Act to farmers, in fact, that it would be ruinous to them to be able to force them into insolvency. He (Mr. Macmillan) at that time contended, as he did now, that, if it would be beneficial to one farmer in the country, he ought to be entitled to avail himself of the Act. In fact, as affairs in Canada are now, a farmer can borrow as much on mortgage as his farm would sell for under a forced sale, and he would still be able to retain the equity of redemption, and might eventually work himself out of the trouble. He was very glad to see that the amendments increased from time to time the amounts of dividends that debtors had to pay before they could possibly obtain their discharge. It was too often the case, however, that wholesale merchants proposed, instead of taking the goods away from the debtor, to accept whatever they could pay, say 30c. or 40c. on the dollar, and allow him to go into direct competition with his next-door neighbour who had to pay 100c. on the dollar. In many instances, also, debtors said to creditors: If you do not accept our proposition, or pursue a certain course which we wish you to do, we will succeed in taking advantage of the Insolvency Act. So that often the debtors exercised control over the creditors in that way. As a remedy, he suggested that the Absconding Debtors Act of Ontario be extended to insolvents; that a writ of attachment should issue, be placed in the sheriff's hands, and the assets realized upon, and any creditor proving his claim within three months from the date of the writ of attachment should receive his pro rata share of the debtor's assets; that the debtor should be compellable to give information as to the creditors and assets, and any other matter in connection with his estate, when called upon to do so, and be amenable to the law, as he now was, for fraud, etc. If, at the expiration of a certain period, it was thought desirable to re-enact the present law or some other in its place, that could be very easily done; in the meantime, the existing law ought to be abolished. The cause of many instances of insolvency, as they at present exist, was from over-importation by the merchant princes, who, when the goods arrive, send out travellers through the country, some paid by salary, others by commission, who have nothing to care for but to effect sales of goods to persons worthy or unworthy of credit, honest or dishonest, so long as the sales are made; and so long as the Act remains in force and these wholesale merchants pursue the course they do we will never get back to a healthy commercial state. The machinery of the Insolvency Act may be good, but so long as it is put into the hands of political partizans, and, in many cases, broken-down merchants as assignees, who carry it out in a most villainous manner, having had the experience of insolvency themselves, and canvass weak merchants, who are not exactly able to pay their liabilities, and induce them to go into insolvency, promising them to use every exertion they can on their behalf to obtain the insolvent's discharge, if they will take advantage of the Act, rather than let them go on and meet the obligation, which they, no doubt, would use every exertion to do, if this Act were not in force. An hon. gentleman who had a seat on the floor of the House, and was probably the largest wholesale merchant in it, and one of the largest in the Dominion, who opposed the repeal of the Act last Session, stated in conversation with him (Mr. Macmillan) a short time since, that he feared he could not be present at the debate owing to pressure of business elsewhere, but, if he were there, he would certainly, this Session, vote for the repeal of the Act. It seemed to him that the repeal of this Act would be in accord with the feelings of the vast majority of the people of this country, and believing that, if the Act had not been continued in force, that the commercial affairs of the country would not have been carried on in the reckless style which they had, and that, even now, the sooner the Act was repealed the better it would be for the country, he (Mr. Macmillan) had now determined to vote for its repeal.

MR. MACMILLAN.

MR. DEVLIN said the constituency which he specially represented in this House, and indeed the whole city of Montreal, was deeply interested in the question now under discussion. It was a matter of vital importance to the commercial community of this Dominion, and in dealing with it now it was the plain duty of hon. members to bear in mind the important interests which must be largely affected, either for good or evil, upon their action with regard to the repeal of this Bill. In Montreal, the metropolitan commercial city of this Dominion, opinion was very much divided in reference to this Insolvency Act and its advantages. He believed that if a vote were taken the following day in that city, providing the same law prevailed as in the Province of Ontario, there would no doubt be an overwhelming majority in favour of the absolute repeal of the Insolvency Act. But the commercial men of the Province of Quebec would find themselves in the same position as that in which they were placed before the passing of the Act; they would find it difficult to collect their debts. It was a fact well known, of course, to every hon. member of this House, that in Ontario there was a chattel mortgage law and a preferential assignment law also. They had no such chattel mortgage law in Quebec, and if this obstacle were removed, so that the two Provinces could be placed upon a proper footing with regard to each other, he believed the merchants of Montreal would vote for the repeal of the Insolvency Act. But as the law stood in Ontario, remembering how much they suffered under the operation of these preference assignments which parties could obtain in Ontario to their advantage, one could not but feel surprised that there should exist a desire, and a very strong desire, to retain the law as it at present stood on the Statute-book. He was himself of opinion that it was an odious law. He thought that, in this new country, with so many advantages staring us in the face on every side, that we ought to be able to get on without the aid of an Insolvency Act such as this. In the speech of Mr. Robertson, of Montreal, a merchant of high standing, and a prominent and respected member of the Board of Trade, which was quoted by the hon. member for Hamilton, they had evidence of the desirability of retaining the Insolvency Act, but he (Mr. Devlin) was also aware that other gentlemen, occupying positions on the Board of Trade of Montreal, were opposed to the continuance of it, and he knew, also, a number of leading merchants who held the same opinion. In fact, as soon as notice was given of an intention to apply for the repeal of the Insolvency Act, he placed himself in communication with twenty of the leading mercantile houses of the city, and asked for their opinion with reference to the measure. The majority were in favour of its repeal, and those who desired its continuance referred to the danger which was certain to accrue, and the loss they were certain to sustain, if the Act was repealed without a change being made in the law of Ontario. At a meeting of the Dominion Board of Trade, the other day, the opinion of the Board was so much divided on the question that they could not come to a conclusion in favour of repealing or of continuing the law, and they, therefore, resolved to appoint a Committee to enquire further into the matter, and report to the next meeting of the Board. This went to show that there was a diversity of opinion on the subject, and that mercantile men, the very class to which the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Macdonald) referred, were, to a large extent, willing and anxious to see the law repealed. What, then, became the duty of a representative of this community on the floor of this House,—a representative of a city in which large commercial interests were at stake. Should he vote for the repeal of the law, or should he vote against its repeal? With his knowledge of the opinions which prevailed in Montreal, his position was a very embarrassing one. He felt that he would give satisfaction to a very large number of his constituents if he voted for a repeal of the law, while, on the other hand, he would, perhaps, dissatisfy a very large portion by voting for it. The position was an embarrassing one, and what he apprehended was that the duty of a representative, under such circumstances, was to exercise his wisest and best judgment on the question, and to record that vote which, in his opinion, was best calculated to conduce to the interests of his constituents generally. A remarkable fact in connection with the speech of Mr. Robertson, ought, perhaps, to be referred to. That gentleman, in arguing in favour of the continuance of the Insolvent Act, had said that, by a comparative statement of the case, it appeared that failures amounting in one year to $27,000,000, averaged the large dividend of 22½c. on the dollar. But was that a matter of congratulation that out of $27,000,000, 22½c. on dollar were paid, showing a loss somewhere in the neighbourhood of $20,000,000? It struck him as being a most astonishing fact that a merchant could be found in this country lauding an Act which gave them such an advantage. They received about $7,000,000 out of $27,000,000, and were satisfied and delighted that the law should force upon them such an advantage. One of two things was clear; either merchants must buy their goods at a very low price, or sell them at a very high price, if they were satisfied with a dividend of 22c. in the dollar. This was a matter which concerned them more closely than those who were not strictly engaged in trade. But, as to the question now before the House, he was of opinion that if the law were repealed at the present moment, as the hon. mover of the Bill desired, very great confusion would be introduced into the mercantile business of this country. He held it would not be prudent or safe, under existing circumstances, to repeal the law as the hon. mover desired. Therefore, under all the circumstances, he believed it would not be to the advantage, certainly, to the commercial men of the Province of Quebec, to have this law repealed until such a change was made in the law in Ontario as would place the creditor residing in the Province of Quebec upon the same footing as creditors in the Province of Ontario. Until the law was so changed in Ontario as to place them on an equal footing, he deemed it his duty to vote for the continuance of the present law, as that which was best calculated to promote their interests. These were the reasons he had to urge in support of his vote against the repeal of the Act, although as he had said, he believed the Act had a demoralizing effect and tended to make bankruptcies. He thought that, when men found themselves reduced in circumstances, instead of making a bold struggle to go on and work successfully through their difficulties, they ran to the Insolvent Act to get relief. He did not desire to detain the House with further arguments on this branch of the subject, but as he had made up his mind to vote against the repeal of the law, he merely desired to personally state his reasons.

MR. THOMPSON (Cariboo) said that the hon. member for Montreal Centre had stated that the Insolvent Act should not be on the Statute-book, yet he came forward here and said he was prepared now to vote against its repeal. This subject had been argued by hon. gentlemen from Ontario and Quebec who had experience in commercial business. He did not wish to give his opinion in addition to theirs, but as a member for one of the outside and smaller Provinces, he might be excused for explaining the reasons which would induce him to give his vote in favour of the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Richelieu. When the law, which it was now desired to repeal, was introduced, he, as a member for British Columbia, had opposed it. He had introduced several amendments to the effect that it should not extend to British Columbia, where they were working under the old English law. He had moved that miners should be included in that law. This, it was true, was carried. He had voted that farmers should be included, and that was lost. So far, the law had been of no effect in British Columbia, for the simple reason that they had no occasion for it. On looking at the commerce of the whole Dominion of Canada, they would find that the imports exceeded the exports by 33 per cent. Was it, then, any wonder that people should be insolvent, and come forward every day trying to find relief in the Insolvent Courts, when wholesale merchants persisted in pushing their goods throughout the country, and, finally, became insolvents themselves? In British Columbia, the exports exceeded the imports by 10 per cent., owing to which, they had no occasion for this Insolvent Law. If the whole Dominion would only take the same stand as British Columbia, and reduce their imports and discontinue this system of sending men through the country to sell goods to insolvents, there would be no occasion for this law. Under these circumstances, he would vote for the motion of the hon. member for Richelieu.

MR. YOUNG said this was a matter of very great importance to the commercial public, and the vote about to be taken was, probably, the most important one, in the interests of the business of the country, which had been called for during the Session. He regretted that this Bill had been introduced at the present time. Whatever difference of opinion there might be with regard to the Insolvency Law, and a very considerable difference of opinion did exist on that question, he thought that all must be agreed, on a review of the circumstances of the case, that the present time was most inopportune to introduce this Bill. The country was now emerging from a period of serious commercial depression, and one of the most necessary things to restore prosperity was a return of public confidence. He was very much afraid, if this Bill passed, that it would have a prejudicial effect and shake the returning confidence which was seen springing up in different parts of the country. It would have an injurious effect on many business houses which were struggling on under heavy liabilities, and which, with the return of good times, would pass over the crisis successfully. If this law should be repealed, not a few of those people might possibly see fit to avail themselves of the advantages of the present law before it went out of operation, and the result might be that something like a commercial panic would ensue. There were a number of people who thought that, when a law of this kind had been on the Statute-book for a number of years, it would be well to repeal it for a number of succeeding years. He had heard, on some occasions, the hon. the Premier state that that was his view; and he was aware that other hon. gentlemen, who had not been of that opinion in previous years, had now come to believe that it would be wise to allow the law to lapse for a short time. But all agreed there should be a law of that kind for the winding up of insolvent estates during a time of commercial depression, or during the time this depression was passing away, as at present. Therefore, its repeal would now be most inopportune. The hon. gentleman who had moved this Bill had said himself that it might be well to repeal it for a couple of years. But he (Mr. Young) would point out to him that, even if that course were thought desirable, this was not the time to adopt it; rather wait for a more prosperous period, when such repeal could be effected without injury to the general interests of the country. Some evils had possibly arisen under the working of the present law, but he believed most of the difficulties which had occurred arose from the fact that creditors had not sufficiently understood the law to put its provisions into successful operation. Very many difficulties had arisen on account of the amendments made, from time to time, to the law, and which prevented creditors from thoroughly understanding its provisions. As he (Mr. Young) understood it, the law, at present, gave the whole estate of the debtor into the hands of the creditors. What more could be done? Under what law could the creditors be placed in a more favourable position? The hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill referred to the great number of failures that had taken place, and then endeavoured to deduce the argument that these failures arose very largely from the existence of an insolvent law. It was not, in his (Mr. Young's) opinion, the law which produced the failures; the law was simply intended for the winding up of estates after failures had occurred. The real cause of so many failures was, no doubt, the large amount of overtrading in the country and the readiness of the commercial community to give credit loosely to every one who asked it; and failures would continue to exist, under these circumstances, whether this law remained on the Statute-book or not. Any law of this kind would always be cavilled at so long as the creditor did not get a hundred cents on the dollar. He failed to see that, after the repeal of the law, failures would not continue to be as numerous as before, while there would not be as satisfactory a means of realizing assets as at present. People were very apt, in matters of this kind, to recollect the ills they had, and not think of those which might come upon them. It had long been his opinion that every commercial community required to have some kind of an insolvent law. If this present law were repealed, he believed before two years, the House would be strongly petitioned to re-enact it. When this matter was brought before the Dominion Board of Trade, a long discussion took place upon it, and it was well known that the Board decided, by a vote of 25 to 7, that such a law was a necessity and should not be repealed. He thought this House should give very considerable heed to the views of those gentlemen who had attended that meeting, who represented all the great business interests of this country, and whose opinions were undoubtedly valuable on a question of this description. It appeared to him, and, he thought, it would appear to the great majority of the members of this House, that the adoption of this Bill, at present, was practically impossible, because the effect of its adoption would be to restore, in the largest Province of the Dominion, one which had business relations with all the other Provinces, the old state of things which existed before the law came in force in 1864. There would be a return to preferential judgments and preferential assignments, the result of which would be that those who were most successful in getting judgments first, would get the entire assets of the debtor, and the other creditors would get nothing whatever.

MR. DEVLIN.

Mr. ROCHESTER: They do now, in nine cases out of ten.

Mr. YOUNG said he thought the hon. member was entirely mistaken. No one individual got the whole of the estate now, which, whether large or little, was divided equally among all the creditors. If they had a return to preferential judgments and assignments, those who first got hold of the estate of the debtor would receive all, and the rest would receive nothing. Another important fact to which he would draw attention was, that the moment it became the interest of any one creditor to take the assets of those who were his debtors, there would be writs issued all over the country against those who were indebted, and a commercial panic would almost certainly result. Every creditor would feel it was his duty to enter a suit at once, on the ground that if he were first, he would get paid in full, whatever the others might do. The result would be suits innumerable, exciting distrust throughout the whole commercial community. It was impossible the Bill of the hon. member (Mr. Barthe) should be adopted, unless some other machinery were provided by which the assets of debtors could be equally divided, and justice done to all the creditors; and, if that were done, they would simply have another Insolvency law, and it would be better to amend the old one, when amendments were shown to be necessary, than to adopt a new measure. It appeared to him that, whatever opinions might exist with regard to this question, some hon. members having apparently changed their minds and believed the law ought to be rescinded, he maintained this was a most unfortunate time in which to rescind it. He feared very much, as he had already said, that if it were repealed, something like a commercial panic would result, and very serious injury be inflicted on the commercial community of this country. Under these circumstances, he felt it his duty to vote for the six months' hoist.

Mr. MACDOUGALL (Three Rivers) said he would vote against the motion for the six months' hoist, and in favour of the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Richelieu. He had always, since the introduction of the law in 1864, entertained the opinion that it was very injurious in its effects, and he had considerable experience, as a lawyer, in working it. He had the good fortune to take out the first writ under the Act, on 17th September, 1864, a few days after it had come into force. The insolvent was undoubtedly a fraudulent debtor; he obtained a very large quantity of goods in Montreal from good-natured creditors, who were willing to sell to him, notwithstanding his poor antecedents. At that time the goods in his possession would have paid 20s. in the £, but when the writ was served, a quantity disappeared, and only 6s. 8d. in the £ was realized. After a time, they placed the insolvent in gaol, but that did not give them any money. That was the first case that occurred under the Insolvent Law of 1864, and since then, the cases had been going on from worse to worse. He had never before taken an opportunity to express his views on the Insolvent Act, because he thought he might, perhaps, have been influenced, as a lawyer, in coming to the conclusion at which he arrived very soon after the introduction of the law, from selfish motives, because the Insolvency Law had the effect, in the first instance, of depriving collecting lawyers of a very large amount of income. It was not proper to come to Parliament and advocate the abolition of any law from such motives; but lawyers were not always found at a loss to work a law of that kind to their own profit. Since the Act had been in operation, lawyers had found that, as a matter of profit, they might as well keep the law on the Statute-book; but, being relieved from the first selfish motives that induced him to come to his convictions, and having arrived at a result by which he could make just as much money by the present law as by the restoration of the old law, he felt he was quite at liberty to express his opinions in the House. He failed to understand what were the difficulties in regard to the repeal of the Insolvent Act. They had a perfect law in the Province of Quebec, except that the costs were found to be very considerable in realizing a large estate, and might sometimes prove inadequate to lay hold of the whole assets of an insolvent debtor.

Mr. ROCHESTER.

But that could be very easily remedied by adding to the Civil Code an article providing that the moment an insolvent debtor should be sued and execution issued, that execution should have the effect of placing the whole estate in the hands of the sheriff for equal distribution among the creditors. The Quebec law was amply sufficient to distribute the proceeds of the estate to the creditors, the only objection that could be made to it in its present form being that it might be somewhat expensive. Take the case of a debtor having a large estate. The first creditor who sued might do so for an insignificant sum, such as $100 or $200, whereas the estate might be worth $10,000. The moneys that were levied under the execution were paid into Court, and they were afterwards distributed. The expenses of levying and of distributing the amount frittered away a considerable sum, because the sheriff could not go beyond the command contained in his writ and levy more than was mentioned therein. Under the present system, therefore, an estate might be frittered away in that manner, and that was one, among other reasons, which induced Quebec originally to join with Ontario to enact an insolvent law. But, as he had already pointed out, that could easily be remedied by a provision that the moment an execution issued against a trader, his whole estate should fall into the hands of the sheriff for distribution. Since the question of the Insolvent Law came before Parliament he had spoken with several Ontario lawyers, and they seemed to find difficulty in meeting the case. They seemed to think that if the law were swept away from the Statute-book they would have to fall back on the law as it existed before the introduction of the Insolvent Act. He could not, however, understand why that should be the effect. The legislation might either be enacted by the Local Legislatures or by the Dominion Parliament, but it must be made by Parliament if the questions were connected with purely commercial matters. It did not seem to be difficult to frame a short measure introducing into Ontario the Quebec law respecting insolvent estates, with the alterations he had suggested. They could take four or five articles of the Civil Code, and declare they should be law in Ontario, or any other Province, if other Provinces required the law. Those gentleman made a mountain out of a mole-hill, for the matter was as simple as possible. Another point to be considered was that an Insolvent law was intended, not only to distribute the proceeds of insolvent estates among creditors, but also to enable the honest trader to obtain his discharge after a certain prohibitory term. What difficulty was there in enacting a clause by which an insolvent debtor should, after a certain period, one year, for instance, as was now provided in the Insolvent Law, obtain his discharge by proving to the Court that he had divested himself of all his property in favour of his creditors? They could obtain a complete law in the Quebec Civil Code, and, if they did not find it as perfect as they desired, they need only go back to the old civil law, the Roman law, to obtain all that was required for distributing the assets of an insolvent debtor among his creditors. There were, however, a great many defects, not in the Insolvent Law itself, but in the administration of it, and insolvent debtors, as well as lawyers, had found means to get round the law for their own benefit. He might mention a flagrant case, in which one of his clients was made to suffer severely. It was done in this way: His client was a genuine creditor to the amount of $16,000; there were two or three other genuine creditors, having claims amounting to $700 or $800 each; the whole of the other genuine claims did not exceed $2,300 or $2,400. But, wonderful to say, when the writ was taken out against the party, who was an hotel keeper, they found that claims amounting to $10,000 were put in by servants of the establishment, each servant claiming from $100 to $2,400. Those bogus claims were entered for the purpose of defeating his client and obtaining control of the estate. The consequence had been that the estate had been taken possession of by an assignee duly named, of course, by that meeting of bogus creditors, and the Insolvent Act furnished scarcely any machinery for setting aside their claims. The assignee so appointed had realized all he could out of the estate, and had squandered it in law costs to fight the only genuine creditors with respect to a valuable piece of real estate. They had been contesting the case for more than a year, and it was now in the Supreme Court. That was one of the modes by which frauds were perpetrated by a majority of dishonest creditors. Creditors very frequently acted in collusion, not only with the insolvent, but also with the assignee, and obtained an unscrupulous lawyer to assist them to defraud the only genuine and honest creditors. They knew what assignees were. They frequently obtained their appointment because of their political affinities, and from assistance rendered by them at elections; in fact he thought the whole crowd of nominations made after the last elections, and when the present law went into effect, comprised political friends of the Government. He did not complain of that, because, if another Government had been in power the same course would have been followed, for that kind of patronage was exercised for the benefit of the Government in office. The class from which assignees were taken was not one composed of reliable men, and the result of the operation of the Insolvent Law had proved they were not so. The view entertained in regard to assigneeships by Hon. Mr. Dorion, when he introduced his measure, was the proper one. He intended to throw the estate into the hands of the sheriff, but, unfortunately, he did not carry through his measure; and the following Session he had disappeared from the political arena, and his successor did not entertain the same opinion. The only objection he had heard Mr. Fournier make to the proposal was that, in large centres, such as Montreal, the sheriff had already sufficient work to do, and it would be overloading his office with extra duties. It never appeared to him (Mr. Macdougall) that this was a sound objection. If additional work was thrown into a public office, such as the sheriff's office, more officials would be required, and there were always men ready to fill situations of that kind. If the Insolvent Law had to remain on the Statute-book he ventured to throw out the suggestion that they should return to the view held by Mr. Dorion, and amend the law in that direction, thereby placing the property of insolvent debtors in hands of the regular officials of the Court and more under its control. Under the present system, it was never known where the assets of an estate were to be found; they were distributed round the country to assignees living in holes and corners, and merchants and lawyers who had to attend to that kind of business were kept on the move the whole time. Even in small towns a lawyer had sometimes to appear before meetings of creditors at half a dozen places on the same day, in addition to attending to his business in Court. It was an intolerable system, and gave rise to an enormous amount of mischief. Another class of officers under the law, which merited some attention, was the inspectors. When the idea of appointing inspectors was first conceived, it was argued they would be very efficient officers. Had they turned out to be worth anything? In his practice, he knew the first act an assignee did was to give $25, $50 or $100, according to the size of the estate, to each inspector, and they were immediately tamed down and fell into the game of the assignee. The inspectors never looked into the assignee's accounts; their whole interest in the administration of the estate was to pocket their fees and look pleasant. Another defect in the administration of the Insolvent Act was the misinterpretation of the law by the Judges with respect to the discharge of debtors. Under section 56 of the Act of 1875, a debtor, in order to obtain his discharge, had to produce a set of books regularly kept, and especially a cash-book; that was to be an absolute condition, without fulfilling which he could not obtain his discharge. But the Judges had overriden that, and granted discharges against the express terms of the Statute. There could be no doubt as to the absolute nature of the expression contained in that section of the law, and in similar sections of the previous Act. Nevertheless, it was useless arguing the point before the Judges, and even now, with the more stringent provisions of the amendments introduced since 1875, the Judges still continued to grant discharges, no matter what kind of books insolvents had kept. With regard to the penal clause, there was an express provision made to punish insolvent debtors who behaved wrongly, but it was a dead letter. He had endeavoured, on several occasions, to obtain an enforcement of that clause, and, singular to say, the Quebec Government—that was under the DeBoucherville administration, but probably the practice might be changed now—would not allow any proceedings to be instituted under that law unless the creditor, entering the complaint, deposited sufficient money to cover all preliminary expenses until a bill was found by the Grand Jury. They even went further. In one case he obtained a true bill against the insolvent and the case was still pending. They had to send a constable from Three Rivers to Coaticooke to arrest the debtor, and the high constable's bill was $180. They made a claim against the Government for it, but they refused to allow the bill, and the high constable had sued his client for the amount. He resisted, of course, and lost the case in the Court of original jurisdiction, but fortunately the judgment was reversed on appeal. All this went to show—though he did not say that the law was defective in any way—that this law was inoperative, and could not be put into effect; and if inoperative, and if it did not do any good in any shape whatever, they should sweep it from the Statute-book and adopt a shorter law, which would confer the same advantages and not entail the same misery, trouble and loss; and, therefore, he would vote most assuredly for this Bill.

MR. MACDOUGALL.

Mr. ROCHESTER said the hon. member for Centre Toronto had told the House that this was a good law. He agreed with the hon. gentleman to a certain extent. He believed that it was so to the honest trader. There was no doubt that the honest trader, under circumstances over which he had no control, might be compelled to assign; but this was not generally the case. Again, it might be said to be a good law for the dishonest trader, and about this he thought that there was no doubt, although, at the same time, he believed that the late Minister of Justice last Session, had taken a great deal of pains to make it workable, but as had been explained by the hon. member for Three Rivers, it appeared to be unworkable. Some persons said that this was due to the fact that the mercantile community did not understand it. His opinion was that that community understood it to their sorrow, so much so, that commercial men who were now in the House would be perfectly satisfied, he believed, to have it abolished. The law as it stood did nothing more or less than hold out inducements to commit roguery. There was no question about that. The hon. member for South Waterloo had said that traders did not understand the law; but they understood it perfectly well. Some men found it to their advantage to make over their property to others and so avoid the Act. He knew of this having been done. Several instances had occurred within his own knowledge, where large corporations, or a large creditor, up to an amount exceeding one-half of the total liabilities of the individual, would get a lien on his property; this lien would be held for a month or a little over that period, and the next thing they would hear of, was, that the individual in question was bankrupt. He knew of two cases at the present time in Ottawa where this had been done. One of these individuals had offered his creditors, independent, he believed, of the preferential claims of $120,000 or $131,000, one cent on the dollar; another individual owed somewhere about $40,000 and he offered two cents on the dollar. This was why he said this law was certainly nothing more or less than the holding out of an inducement to make—if he could say so—an honest man dishonest. At all events it encouraged roguery. There was another way in which a good many traders worked. In looking over the reports of Dun, Wiman & Co's commercial agency's reports for the last five months—which reports were carefully prepared—he found that failures to the amount of from five to six million dollars had been those of men who had been highly reported by the agency. The fact was that dishonest traders would go to these agencies, pay them a certain amount for their book, get a rating, go to the wholesale merchants and avail themselves of this rating to get credit. As soon as this was accomplished, they would carry on business so long as it suited them, and when they had made away with a certain amount of their goods to an uncle, cousin or someone else, they would throw themselves into bankruptcy. It was high time that this should be prevented. He did not know when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barthe) intended to have this Bill enforced, if it was carried, but he hoped that, in this event, it would be enforced immediately. If this Bill were deferred, he very much feared that one-half of the commercial community would go into bankruptcy. There were many reasons why this law should be abolished. A large number of men compounded under it with their creditors and, perhaps, thus obtained their stocks for 50c., 15c. or 10c. on the dollar; and it was utterly impossible for the honest trader who paid 100c. on the dollar, to hold his own and compete with such men. He knew of shops in Ottawa where boots and shoes could be bought for 50 per cent less than first cost; and, while this was the case, it was utterly impossible that trade could prosper, or that an honest man could do business; and the longer the law was in force the worse it would be, because the honest trader was thus forced to succumb. Under these circumstances, it would be well to do away with the law for a year or two years, at all events, and try how this would work. He believed that this would save the country, and, also, that, if this law continued in force for six months longer, if the present depression continued, as had been the case during the last three or four years, one-half of the commercial community of the country would become insolvent.

MR. PATERSON said that no great amount of argument was needed on this question. Some hon. gentlemen had entered into an explanation of the Act as it stood; but as he understood it, the question before the House was not whether this law as it stood could be amended or not, but the abolition of it altogether, and it was to this one point alone that they had to direct their attention. It appeared to him that the views enunciated by the hon. members from Hamilton, Toronto and Waterloo, and some others, were those which must commend themselves to the intelligence of the House. This question was up last year, when the same motion was moved by the same hon. gentleman, in the same able manner. Expression was then given to the opinion that it would be very inopportune to repeal this Act at the present time, even if it were desirable, that it should be done. He thought that precisely the same argument would now apply. It might be replied: "When will the opportune time come?" Opinions might differ on this point. It appeared to him, viewing it as he now did, that the opportune time could scarcely ever come when they could dispense with a law that had for its main feature the equitable distribution of the assets of an insolvent estate among the various creditors. It would be disastrous in the extreme to have to return to the old system of preferential assignments when the man who first entered suit and secured judgment, took the whole of the estate and left the other creditors without any share. He would not deny that it was a question which the Government might fairly consider—whether it would not be advisable to move in the direction in which they had moved during the past two years—the increasing of the amount which the insolvent was required to pay, or they might even reach the point at which the insolvent would be unable to procure his discharge unless he paid the full amount of his liabilities; or, in other words, that they should have the machinery, provided under the present law, for the equal distribution of assets, while it would be no part or necessity of the law that the insolvent should be relieved from the obligations he had undertaken. Last year the depression was more severe than this year, but still a considerable amount of depression existed, and no Canadian could help feeling a degree of pleasure when he contemplated the fact that we had passed through the depression which had, moreover, manifested itself in all parts of the world, without experiencing some of the most disastrous features that had been exhibited in connection with it in other countries. He meant that, during this depression, no want of confidence had been manifested. Confidence had been shown on the part of the trading community, of the banks, the wholesale men and retail men; and it was desirable, above all things, that this confidence should be maintained, for, when confidence was lost, what was depression suddenly became a panic. We had passed through a period of depression, but not through a period of panic. While it was true that the depression had been almost as great, perhaps, as that which existed in 1857-8, there had been nothing approaching a panic, for the very reason that in 1857-8 there was loss of confidence. Banks had no confidence in wholesale men; wholesale men none in retail men; retail men none in their customers; and the result was a complete and universal panic over Canada. He submitted that any hon. gentleman, looking at it from his standpoint, who would vote for the motion of the hon. member for Richelieu, would vote for a resolution that would inevitably produce a panic in this country, and inevitably destroy the confidence that at present existed in the different branches of commerce; and he would remind hon. gentlemen that the effect of such a panic would not be found alone among commercial men in this country. He sincerely believed that the effect of it would be found to permeate the masses of the people. What would be the result? It was easy for any one to determine it. At present we had confidence in one another, and no suits were entered; because a man that entered Court to crowd a customer knew that he injured his own interest by doing so. And if they repealed the Insolvent Law, which secured to the creditor an equal distribution of the assets, whether he took effectual means to obtain it or not, what would be the result? It would be what was formerly experienced—self-defence was the first law of nature: if a debtor was behind with a creditor, the latter, however generous he might be, would say: "Well, I am willing myself to extend leniency, but the other creditors must be considered. They may be actuated by the same feelings as myself, but will not extend it; they may enter suit, secure judgment, seize this man's property, sell it, put the proceeds in their pockets, and secure themselves in full, and I will be left completely out." A man would reason thus, and though generous, self-defence would compel him to take the very action he anticipated that his neighbour would do. The moment that this law was repealed, it would be a race on the part of the creditors to the nearest and sharpest law officer they could find, in order that they might secure judgment and thus save themselves. In other words, commercial confidence would in this way be at once destroyed. The banks would withdraw their confidence from the wholesalers, and the latter from the retailers, and hence the retailers would be unable to give credit to their customers as they had done in times past. In consequence of these facts, the passage of this Bill would inevitably produce a panic that would affect every one in this country. He did not wish to speak deprecatingly of the business interests of the country, but from the observations he had taken, he ventured to say that there were not seven business men out of ten in Canada today who were in a position to pay all their debts at the moment they matured, though they might, nevertheless, be perfectly solvent. If the law were repealed under these circumstances, a man in arrears, solvent though he might be and possessing assets a great deal in excess of his liabilities, but so locked up that he could not at once realize upon them, would find a suit entered against him; his property would be taken possession of under judgment summons, and so his credit would be effectually destroyed, and he would be robbed of what means he possessed. What would be the effect of this? The wholesale house which was thus summarily closed up, would be unable to extend leniency and give credit, and to carry the various retail houses, as in times past; the downfall of this house would follow, and with it down would come their customers. If the consequences stopped there, some hon. gentlemen might not care very much, as the great mass of the people they represented were not traders but farmers, mechanics and others; but what would be the result of this closing up of stores at which the farmers and merchants and all the population had been getting their supplies? These people were largely in the merchants' books. How many of the constituents of hon. gentlemen were in arrears with the merchants and in debt? Amounts would be due from them to the merchants, who would be summarily closed, and the latter would then be perforce compelled to enter suits against their customers. This would be the effect of the repeal of the law at the present time. He was willing to admit that, while many business men had taken advantage of this law, it was disastrous in the extreme, and many cases of hardship had occurred under it. He spoke warmly because he felt deeply on the subject. But to repeal the Insolvent Act until a law providing suitable machinery for the equitable distribution of the estate of a debtor, was desired and proposed to be substituted for the present Act, would not be wise, and he would oppose such an attempt. At one time there was no limit fixed at which a debtor might have his discharge. An amendment was brought in, however, fixing the limit at 33 $\frac{1}{2}$ c. on the dollar, and that was still further amended by another clause which provided that a debtor must be able to pay 50c. on the dollar before he could obtain his discharge. And if the Government went still further, and, after providing machinery for the equal distribution of estates, declared that a debtor could not obtain a discharge unless he paid 100 cents on the dollar, they would only be following the direction in which they had already been proceeding. It would be for the House to say whether they would, another year hence, consider whether some alteration might not be made in the law. At present the question was not as to an amendment of the Insolvent Law, but an actual repeal, which he believed would be followed by disastrous results.

MR. ROCHESTER,

MR. JETTÉ said that although he was of opinion that the existing law was not perfect, he was not disposed to vote for its repeal, pure and simple, because it seemed such a step would tend to favour class and exceptional legislation. In most civilized countries a law similar to that of the Dominion of Canada existed, and that law applied only to traders. If he was not mistaken, such was the case in England, France, Spain, Portugal, also in Brazil and many other States in South America. It could not be said surely that the collected wisdom of all these countries would retain a law which was not an equitable one. There were two reasons why people should have such a law, and two reasons, therefore, why he would oppose the Bill. It had been argued by hon. members who had spoken on the question that there was no provision, according to the civil or common law, in the Province of Ontario, and other Provinces, for an equal distribution of an estate in cases of insolvency. In the Province of Quebec they had special legislation, and would not suffer from the repeal of the Act on that point; but they would suffer, inasmuch as their trade was not confined to the limits of their own Province, but extended to others. There was another point upon which, he thought, the law ought to stand. As far as the Province of Quebec was concerned, he would not consent to return to the old legislation as to the discharge of a debtor. Before the Insolvent Act there was no provision for the discharge of a debtor, and he was obliged, therefore, to make some compromise with his creditor. The provision contained in the present law was, he thought, a very wise one. According to the old law a debtor was obliged to have the consent of all his creditors before he could obtain his discharge, and frequently through the ill-will of a single man, who refused for years to grant him his discharge, he could not resume business. This was certainly very hard, and he thought the present law should be retained. If some measure, which would have proved a good substitute for the existing law, had been proposed, he would have voted for it; but to vote for the repeal, pure and simple, of the present law would, he thought, be unwise.

MR. JONES (South Leeds) said amendments had been suggested by the hon. member for Montreal East, and the member for South Waterloo. Now, the fact was the existing law had been so often amended that people did not understand it. He would like to give an illustration of the working of the Act which had come under his notice during the last few days. Before doing so, however, he wished to state that he did not want to revert from the position he assumed last year when he recorded his vote against keeping the Insolvent Law on the Statute-book. It could be amended in various ways, as suggested by the hon. member for South Waterloo, and being consolidated made it easier to comprehend. The illustration he spoke of was this. On the 20th of this month he received a notice of the sale of a large estate in the Province of Quebec that same day; it was advertised, however, on the 16th of March in a newspaper. It might be said that this arrangement was made at the consent of a number of creditors representing a certain value, but as collision sometimes occurred in connection with these matters, longer notice should be given. Seeing that so many amendments had been proposed, he thought it might be proper to add an amendment providing that from four to six weeks notice of the sale of a debtor's estate should be given. He believed that under the present law an estate might be sold en bloc with the consent of creditors of a certain number and value by giving only 24 hours' notice. That was certainly a very improper law, and one which had caused him some loss during the past week. It was certainly not right that an estate should be sold by certain creditors who only gave about 24 hours notice to a person being, perhaps, 400 or 500 miles distant, and who was precluded therefore from offering for the estate. He would vote for the amendment.

MR. CURRIER said that hitherto he had always voted in the direction of repealing the existing Bankruptcy Law when it came up for consideration, but, at the present time, he was not so sure that it would be wise to repeal it. The hon. member for Montreal East had suggested that it should remain on the Statute book for another year, and he was every much inclined to the same opinion. The country was at present, and had been for some time, in a chronic state of panic, and it might not be judicious, under these circumstances, to vote for a repeal of the law. He was inclined to let it remain on the Statute-book, at all events, for another year.

MR. LITTLE said the law encouraged a good deal of fraud and collusion between a debtor and the official assignee or between the debtor and some of his creditors. This, of course, must be deprecated, but at the same time it was unfair that such a large and influential class as the farmers of this country should be purposely excluded from participating in the privilege accorded to other sections of the community. It was said that the farmer's occupation was not a hazardous one, but he contended that no occupation was attended with more risk than that of a farmer. His produce might be in excellent condition to-day and completely destroyed to-morrow; his cattle might be in first rate condition and they might suddenly be rendered worthless or they might die. It was a shame that this large class, which was becoming more numerous every year, should be purposely excluded, and for that reason he would vote for the repeal of the Act. If it was a benefit to any portion of the community, that benefit should be extended to the whole.

MR. BOURBEAU said that, being a merchant himself, he had had the opportunity of acquiring some experience in connection with this Insolvent Law, either from some of his debtors who failed, or from merchants in town, who were in the habit of selling goods, no matter how much under cost, or from merchants in the country who were less scrupulous, and who did not desire to act honestly, and sold their goods at such low prices that honest merchants, who had establishments near by, were sometimes forced to tell their customers that such and such goods, in their shops, could not be sold at these prices. And why? Because the former acted recklessly and dishonestly; and, sometimes, the honest merchant also sold his goods, with a merely reasonable profit, and was obliged, as it were, to refuse the sale of certain merchandize—not willing to make a sacrifice of the same—for fear that, in asking the real price, he should obtain the reputation of selling dearer than his neighbour. They would also conceal the good notes that they obtained from farmers, or other customers, and hand over to their creditors such notes as came from irresponsible parties. He had seen tradesmen, who had thus been eager to undersell their goods, conceal the best part of their stock, show the remainder to their creditors, and obtain a discharge or a composition and defrauded their creditors. It was known that, in the country, stocks of very great value were not held; and the wholesale dealers in the cities, rather than go to the trouble of making an investigation into the affairs of a person, who went into bankruptcy in this manner, would place the matter in the hands of an official assignee; and, it was generally the result, that the assignee did not get enough to pay the costs attending these proceedings. As soon as the difficulty was arranged, the merchant, who, in bad faith, had succeeded in effecting a composition with his creditors, at 25 or 30 cents in the dollar, and secured a discharge, procured the goods that he had secreted, and brought them back to his store; he would give to a lawyer for collection the good notes he had secreted; and, at once, was thus placed on a footing of equality with the honest merchant, long in business, who had always paid strict attention to business, economized, and honoured his bills when they became due. It sometimes, however, happened that these bankrupt estates were not settled in this way. If the creditors did not wish to grant a composition to their debtor, they would put the notes which the bankrupt had handed over to them, on the eve of failure, into the hands of a collector. Costs were thus incurred, and, as a consequence, great damage was caused to the farmers who had had the misfortune to deal with a man who had always intended to go into bankruptcy, on a favourable opportunity offering itself. There was a class of men in this country who had not the right to enter into bankruptcy. He now referred to the farmers, who were honest and respectable men, if any such were to be found, and who could not become insolvent under this law, and to whom the right of so doing in an honest way was refused by the Government, but who were always compelled to honour their bills and were under obligation to pay the whole of their debts. He concluded, in view of this fact, that, if merchants who were in the habit of failing, did not have the advantage of relieving themselves from the payment of their liabilities in full under the law, they would industriously endeavour to carry on their business carefully and properly, and overlook it closely, and would thus succeed in honouring their obligations, and paying their creditors in full. What did they see occur throughout the country, generally speaking? As soon as a young merchant obtained a certain degree of credit he became above his business; he was met in the streets, well dressed, and with a good carriage and horses; he would say: "Let us amuse ourselves, if business is bad; we will fail, pay 25c. on the dollar, and commence over again."

Some Hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BOURBEAU said that this mode of proceeding had occurred in the village where he lived, generally once or twice in the year; and the same statement was true with regard to the Province of Quebec generally. Merchants failed or effected compositions at 25c. or 30c. on the dollar, and even at less rates. These stocks were sometimes sold at very low prices and, at auction, at 50 or 60 per cent. below their value. Such stocks were brought from the city into the country and so sold, and the honest merchant had to suffer from this state of things. In view of these facts, he thought that he would be acting for the good of the merchants, who, in his county, were endeavouring to honour their obligations, and of the farmers, in order to protect them against fraudulent dealers, in voting for the repeal of the Insolvent Law; and, in so doing, he believed he would be rendering a great and important service to his constituents.

MR. BOURBEAU.

Mr. WHITE (North Renfrew) said he thought the promoters of this measure for the repeal of the Insolvency Act should first show how the assets of a large debtor could be distributed at a less cost than under that Act. The hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. McDougall) had admitted that it was impossible to distribute the assets of a debtor under the provisions of the Quebec law as economically as under the Insolvency Law; therefore, it seemed to him (Mr. White) that until they were able to suggest some equitable provision for the distribution of the assets of the debtor, which should be less costly than under the Insolvency Act, the law had better remain as it stood. He did not think it could be successfully contended, for a moment, that those who became embarrassed and unable to pay their debts, would be better able to pay them if the Insolvency Act was wiped from the Statute-book. Until some suggestion was made by which the debtor's estate could be realised at less cost than at present, he must vote against the repeal of the present law.

Mr. DAVIES said he quite agreed with the last speaker, and at the same time considered that under the law, as it at present stood, the realization of a debtor's estate entailed too heavy an expenditure. In the Province that he came from (Prince Edward Island) the law was carried out so strongly and so efficiently that neither the debtors nor their lawyers could drive a coach and four through it, and the creditors, as a rule, had to resort to assignments. They said, "If you put us in the bankruptcy court you will be subject to an expense of from twenty-five to thirty per cent; we offer you fifty cents in the dollar;" and very generally this compromise was accepted. He thought the law was very good as it stood at present. Of course, in a new country, there must be a great deal of credit, and, so long as merchants gave credit, they must put up with loss now and then. He believed it was the custom of merchants to charge more for credit than for cash purchases; therefore, they had some margin for bad debts. He remembered the time when an unfortunate debtor was thrust into gaol, and treated as a criminal; if he did not find bail, he was kept in gaol, and, even if he did find bail, he was like a ghost walking about, not daring to venture beyond the limits of the town. He thought the large increase of insolvencies was owing, in a large measure, to the facilities for getting rid of debts. These were much greater than they used to be, and he did not think the repeal of this Act would lessen them, because the same facilities would be open to the trader who went into business and subsequently found himself unable to pay 100c. to the dollar; he could still resort to the pleasant system of assignments, and so on. It was alleged by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Rochester) that this Act encouraged fraud. It did not, as far as he could see, at all increase the assignments and compositions. He knew that before they had the Bankruptcy Act at all in his Province, these courses were often resorted to by dishonest people, and, even more so than under the present Act. He thought, as had already been stated, that it was inadvisable to repeal this Act at the present time, when the country was just recovering, as he hoped, from great commercial depression, and that it would be a very unwise policy to do so at present, whatever they might do a year hence. He doubted very much if they could make any better or more economical distribution of the effects of the unfortunate debtor, than was possible under the present law.

Mr. METHOT said he had attentively listened to the discussion that had taken place regarding the measure which was at that moment before the House, and he had particularly remarked that in all the course of the debate those who desired the abolition of the Insolvent Law pretended that it was of no use, and that it had only brought demoralisation and ruin upon this country; while those who wished to secure the continuance of the law dared not affirm that it was a good measure, and were forced to admit that it was extremely injurious in its action, and that up to the present time it had not fulfilled the end for which it had been devised. For his part, it concerned him very little, whether the law was good or bad. It was requisite to see how it worked, and whether it worked well. If the law was a good one it should be left on the Statute book, and if it was practicable, it should be made use of; if it worked badly it ought to be repealed. But hon. members had asked that a respite of a year should be again given it. It was now thirteen or fourteen years since it had been passed, and it had been several times amended. Last year, the law was so amended as to improve it and make of it a perfect law according to the pretension of its advocates. Bankrupts were obliged by these amendments to pay at least fifty cents in the dollar on what they owed before they could obtain a discharge. In consequence of these amendments, hon. members had consented to give the law a trial for another year. The year had passed and no good result had been obtained, and yet the hon. gentleman who had just preceded him, had asked them to try it for still another year, and had said that they would endeavour to so amend it as to make it unfavourable to bankrupts, efficacious in obliging bankrupts to pay 75 or 100 cents in the dollar. But if debtors were able to pay 20 shillings in the pound, there was no necessity for their going into bankruptcy, and no need for their obtaining discharges under this Act when they no longer owed anything. Why then did hon. gentlemen ask that the repeal of a bad law should be delayed for another year? Hon. members from the Province of Ontario pretended that they did not have in their Province a law which could replace the Insolvent Act. If this were the case, the remedy was easy; the Province of Quebec did have such a law, and they were ready to lend it to these hon. gentlemen, in order that they might take a copy of it. If these hon. gentlemen were not able to devise such an enactment, let them adopt that of the Province of Quebec. In view of those considerations he, for his part, supported with all his power the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Richelieu.

MR. MÉTHOT.

Mr. COSTIGAN said he never could understand why the Act should extend to only one section of the community, and why one party doing business in this country should legally pay from five to twenty cents on the dollar for his goods, while other parties had to pay 100 cents. He believed it was intended to relieve all persons unfortunate in trade, no matter what their occupation might be. He would call the attention of the Minister of Justice to this fact. Before the present Government came into power he drew the attention of the Minister of Justice of that time to the same fact; it might be a trifling matter, but in his opinion it deserved the attention of the Government. There was a clause in the Act which said that there should be at least one assignee in each county in the Dominion. In New Brunswick no such assignee had been appointed. He took the liberty of drawing the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice to this fact; he made no comment, he merely said that as the law laid down the principle that such an officer should be appointed in each county, one should be appointed in New Brunswick.

Mr. MITCHELL said he had consistently opposed for the last five years every amendment to this Bill. He believed the Bill had done its work five years ago and ought to have been repealed, and that every amendment made had been an amendment in a wrong direction. The principle ground of objection to the Bill, as it stood, was that it favoured one class of the community to the disadvantage of another, and that while the farmers were required to pay one hundred cents to the dollar, other persons to whom they sold their goods got off with paying 25 or 30 cents. He believed that the Bill had done its work, and that the longer it remained the more bankruptcy there would be. Under it the money was squandered away and the real creditors got little benefit from it. Last year he took the same exception to it, as he did now, and he should vote in favour of the motion of the hon. member for Richelieu. He believed the same system should be adopted as once obtained in New Brunswick, namely a periodical Bankruptcy Law, a white-washing law that would last for a couple of years and then be repealed. They had not so many bankruptcies in those days, and they did not find the people suffering so much. Then, everyone tried to pay 100 cents to the dollar, but now he was told that scarcely anybody paid more than 45 or 50 cents to the dollar, and the whole average was 14 cents to the dollar.

MR. PLUMB said that he had been, on one occasion, in favour of Insolvency Laws, and he thought such laws were desirable to a commercial community; but a law so defective and so harsh as the one under discussion should not be left on the Statute-book. He discovered that the alteration of the law had been one which had done no good to the community, and he now felt he was reluctantly compelled, from what he knew of the operations of the law, to vote for the motion to repeal it.

Several HON. MEMBERS: Question.

MR. PLUMB said he believed he had a right to speak on the subject, and he should not be deterred by any small noises from the other side. He knew hon. gentlemen, who had sat on the other side of the House for four or five years, who were not able to discuss any question intelligently; and they made a point of interrupting gentlemen who rose, in the performance of their duty, to make a few remarks upon a question of great public importance, such as this. He recognized, in the uncouth sounds that were made to interrupt him, the intelligence, the brains of those gentlemen. These were their only utterances and he had no doubt that their constituents would appreciate, at its true value, that sort of eloquence. This, he considered, was an important matter, and he held every hon. gentleman who had found it necessary to change his vote, had a right to be heard in this House. The Insolvent Law should be so framed as to induce an honest trader to embrace it whenever he found himself in the position of an insolvent. It should not be a law of terror, but such an one as would induce him to take advantage of it. Such a law as that was one he should be very glad to support in this House. With these remarks, he was compelled, reluctantly compelled, to support the measure brought in by the hon. member for Richelieu. He might say, also, that he was very much indebted to the other side of the House for the extraordinary courtesy they had shown him, and we would endeavour to merit that courtesy.

Amendment (Mr. Wood) agreed to, on the following division:—

YEAS :

Messieurs

- |                        |                        |
|------------------------|------------------------|
| Appleby,               | Huntington,            |
| Archibald,             | Irving,                |
| Bain,                  | Jetté,                 |
| Bertram,               | Jones (South Leeds),   |
| Biggar,                | Killam,                |
| Blain,                 | Kirk,                  |
| Blake,                 | Kirkpatrick,           |
| Borden,                | Lafamme,               |
| Borron,                | Lajoie,                |
| Bowell,                | Landerkin,             |
| Bowman,                | Macdonald (Cornwall)   |
| Boyer,                 | Macdonald (Kingston)   |
| Brouse,                | Macdonald (Centre      |
| Buell,                 | Toronto),              |
| Burk,                  | Macdougall (East       |
| Burpee (St. John),     | Elgin),                |
| Burpee (Sunbury),      | Maekenzie,             |
| Carmichael,            | McCarthy,              |
| Cartwright,            | McCraney,              |
| Casey,                 | McGregor,              |
| Casgrain,              | McIntyre,              |
| Charlton,              | McIsaac,               |
| Christie,              | McNab,                 |
| Church,                | Metcalf,               |
| Coffin,                | Mills,                 |
| Davies,                | Norris.                |
| Dawson,                | Paterson,              |
| De St. Georges,        | Perry,                 |
| De Veber,              | Pickard,               |
| Devlin,                | Platt,                 |
| Domville,              | Ray,                   |
| Dymond,                | Richard,               |
| Ferris,                | Robillard,             |
| Fleming,               | Robinson,              |
| Flesher,               | Ross (East Durham),    |
| Flynn,                 | Ross (West Middlesex), |
| Forbes,                | Ryan,                  |
| Galbraith,             | Scatcherd,             |
| Geoffrion,             | Scrifer,               |
| Gibbs (Ontario North), | Shibley,               |
| Gibbs (Ontario South), | Short,                 |
| Gillies,               | Sinclair,              |
| Gillmor,               | Skinner,               |
| Goudge,                | Taschereau,            |
| Greenway,              | Thompson (Haldimand)   |
| Guthrie,               | Trow,                  |
| Haddow,                | Wallace (Albert),      |
| Hagar,                 | White (North Ren-      |
| Higinbotham,           | frew),                 |
| Holton,                | Wood,                  |
| Horton,                | Young.—99.             |

NAYS :
Messieurs

Baby,	McDonald (Jape
Barthe,	Breton),
Bécharde,	McDougall (Three
Benoit,	Rivers),
Bernier,	McKay (Colchester)
Blanchet,	Macmillan,
Bolduc,	McCallum,
Bourassa,	McQuade,
Bourbeau,	Malouin,
Brooks,	Masson,
Bunster,	Méhot,
Campbell,	Mitchell,
Caron,	Monteith,
Cheval,	Montplaisir,
Cimon,	Mousseau,
Costigan,	Ouimet,
Goupal,	Pinsonneault,
Cuthbert,	Plumb,
Daoust,	Pouliot,
Delorme,	Rochester,
Desjardins,	Rouleau,
Farrow,	Roy,
Fiset,	Rymal,
Fraser,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Gibson,	Wallace (South Nor-
Gill,	folk),
Hurteau,	White (East Hast-
Langevin,	ings),
Lanthier,	Wright (Pontiac).—55.
Little,

Ordered that the said Bill be read this day six months.

House adjourned at Half-past Twelve o'clock

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 23th March, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACTS CONSOLIDATION BILL.

(Mr. McCarthy.)

FIRST READING.

MR. MCCARTHY introduced a Bill (No. 64) To make better provision for the trial of controverted elections of members of the House of Commons, by amending and consolidating the Acts now in force on that subject. He said that controverted elections were now tried, in the first instance, by a single Judge of one of the Provinces where the election might be in question. From his decision, an appeal could be taken to the Supreme Court, which might be called upon to determine the validity or invalidity of the election without having opportunity of seeing the witnesses who were examined in the first instance. The appeal was not merely on questions of law, but also on all questions of matters of fact. It was, no doubt, felt very unfortunate that the tribunal, which might in the end have to determine the validity of the election, had no opportunity, nor had the Judges of it an opportunity, of seeing the demeanour of the witnesses and judging of the weight that ought to be attached to their testimony, having no more than the bald statement of the evidence as taken down at the trial before them. He thought the House would probably agree that this was not a very proper or satisfactory way of having these matters disposed of. In England it had not been deemed satisfactory that one Judge should determine so important a matter as the question of the validity of an election, and, perhaps to hon gentlemen, the more important question whether they were to be disqualified or not by the verdict of a single man. This matter was referred in England to a Special Committee of the House of Commons, which, after taking evidence, resolved that this was an unsatisfactory system, and that in the future, so far as the recommendation of the Committee went, the trials should take place before, at least, two Judges. In Ontario, this recommendation had been acted upon, and the Legislature there had amended their law by enacting that, for the future, no person should be found guilty, either as candidate or agent of corrupt practices except upon the concurrence of two Judges. The difficulty that arose here was this: that if two Judges were sitting and trying an election petition, they might come, upon important matters, to diametrically opposite conclusions, so that the result of the attempted trial might, in that case, prove abortive. In the Ontario Legislature they had a right in that event to appeal to the Court of Appeal, and that the Judges of the Court of Appeal should see the demeanour of the witnesses, placing them, so far as was possible, in the same position as the two Judges who tried it, as to the credibility that ought to be attached to the witnesses whom the latter had examined. This was one of the courses which suggested itself to him when he thought of introducing this Bill; but, to his mind, it was not a very satisfactory one, because it involved, in a great number of cases, the necessity of appeal to the Supreme Court, which was attended with very great expense and very considerable delay. He thought the House would concur with him that, in the trial of these election petitions, it was very important that they should be disposed of speedily; that gentlemen should not sit in this House for a longer period than was absolutely necessary, and, in point of fact, that they should not sit in the House at all after it was found that they were not properly elected; and that those who were properly elected should not be excluded from the House longer than was absolutely necessary; and if an appeal was required or became a necessity, owing to the fact that the two Judges who tried the case might not concur, the result was that there must be a very great delay, which, he thought, if possible, ought to be avoided. He, therefore, proposed in this Bill that the trial should take place before three Judges, and that one of these three should be a Judge of the Supreme Court, and that the other two should be Judges of the Province in which the question as to the election arose. This would not tax the judicial strength of the Province more than Ontario was willing to be taxed in this relation and in this way, and a Judge of the Supreme Court would be able to determine at once and conclusively, so far as matters of fact were concerned, whether the election was valid and proper or not. He quite agreed with what the hon. member for South Bruce had said—that it was important that they should know exactly what, in all the Provinces of the Dominion, the law was that governed these questions, and that there should not be one mode in Ontario and another in Quebec, by which Judges might arrive at different conclusions, so that, on matters of law, he would give to any party not satisfied with the decision in this regard, by these three Judges, an appeal directly to the Supreme Court, but only on matters of law. The result of the amendments would be that, instead of the trial taking place before one Judge, it would be had before three Judges; that, instead of there being appeal on questions of fact, the decision of these Judges, one of whom would be a Judge of the Supreme Court, would be final and conclusive and end the matter; and that, in order to have one mode of law prevailing and one construction of this law throughout the whole of the Dominion, there should be an appeal at the instance of any of the parties to the Supreme Court here. There were some other matters of detail in the Bill. One of them provided this: The law of evidence differed in the different Provinces. In Quebec, as he understood it, the law of evidence did not permit the respondent to be a competent witness, either on his own behalf, or to be called by the other party, so that in the trial of an election petition there, the mouth of the respondent was closed. In that Province, so far as the local elections were concerned, they had introduced the rules of evidence prevailing in England, for the trial of these election petitions. He proposed the same thing in this Bill. Again, as the law stood, if Parliament was dissolved while an election petition was pending, no matter at what stage it might be, or, if it had been determined upon by the Judge below, and though it was still only a matter of appeal, and the questions had engaged the attention of the different Judges to the Supreme Court, nevertheless, although the evidence had been taken, and, although the parties might still be only waiting for judgment, if the House was dissolved, the petition dropped, and the party who otherwise might be condemned as having been guilty of corrupt practices, and his agents, escaped from the judgment which his conduct had merited. He did not propose to extend those provisions to the Provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia, but to the other Provinces.

MR. PLUMB.

Mr. HOLTON said that the hon. gentleman must be quite aware that there was no possibility of carrying this Bill through this Session; and why, then, should they go to the expense of printing this Bill, which was very voluminous. If the hon. gentleman really desired to improve the law in this regard, he ought to have introduced his Bill six weeks ago. He did not say that the existing law was not susceptible of improvement—for he thought it was; but, why introduce the Bill now? The hon. gentleman could have no reasonable hope of advancing it, even another stage, at the present period of the Session; and, therefore, it seemed to him that this was simply an ambitious effort on the part of the hon. gentleman to place his legislative capacity before the country in a way which could lead to no practical results. If the hon. gentleman sought the improvement of this law, he ought to have introduced his measure earlier. There might then have been a chance of the measure passing through the House; but no one of any experience in the House could fail to know that there was no possibility of a measure of this kind, in the hands of a private member, reaching any result whatever during the present Session.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said because the hon. gentleman (Mr. Holton) did not choose to introduce Bills himself, though he was quite able to criticize other hon. gentlemen's Bills, yet was not able to draw Bills himself, this was no reason for making the attack on the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. McCarthy). This attack on his hon. friend was improper and unparliamentary. The hon. member for Chateauguay said that his hon. friend wanted to show his parliamentary ability, and, therefore, introduced this Bill. He thought that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Holton) might remember that, after it was known that by no possibility could the Controverted Elections Act be passed, which was introduced by the hon. member for South Bruce in 1871 or 1872, still that Bill was introduced, and the hon. gentleman had a right then to do so. The hon. member actually said that this Bill should not now be introduced for fear it would cost too much for printing. Even if the hon. gentleman had no idea of its becoming law at this Session, still it was a matter to be incited rather than checked, that hon. members who had their own ideas upon great questions of public policy or public practice or parliamentary practice or the machinery of Government or the administration of legislation, should submit their views in the shape of Bills and allow the country to have them before it, and to dwell upon and digest and consider them; and that the mere question of the cost of printing should be brought up by the hon. gentleman, was worthy of him. A Bill introduced by the hon. the Minister of Finance for the better auditing of the Public Accounts was read the first time on the 19th of March, 1878, and the second reading took place on the 20th of March, only a few days ago.

MR. HOLTON.

MR. HOLTON: Of course, that will be passed. It is in the hands of the Government, which is a very different matter.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that the Government had no more possession of the House than anybody else, and the moment that this principle was given up, such action would be found to be detrimental. It was true that the practice had been to give it up too much, and to hand everything over to the Government of the day, instead of the more wholesome rule being followed, that the Government should principally deal with matters of administration, leaving to the independent action of the House, all matters of general legislation; and the more that this was done, the better it would be for legislation, the better for the permanence of the Government, and the better for the beneficial action of the Government. Every hon. gentleman stood in the same position in this House as a Minister; the Ministry of the day was simply a Committee of both Houses of Parliament to administer the country's affairs.

MR. MILLS: Hear, hear.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that, in matters of legislation, every member stood on the same footing, and, instead of any hon. member being checked in the manner which his hon.

friend from Chateaugay had unguardedly checked his hon. friend from Cardwell for introducing his Bill, this kind of thing should be encouraged; every hon. member should be encouraged to lay his well-matured views—as they must be so before they could be reduced practically into a Bill—before the House; and the more they were encouraged to do so, the better for the country; and, instead of having Bills sprung upon us in the third, fourth, fifth or sixth week of the Session by the Government, they could then have measures laid before the country at each Session, considered for a whole year, and afterwards brought up for practical legislation and action at the next Session.

Bill read the first time.

PUBLIC WORKS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

[BILL No. 13.]

(Mr. Mackenzie.)

THIRD READING.

Amendments reported from Committee of the Whole read the first and second times and agreed to.

MR. MACKENZIE moved the third reading of the Bill.

MR. MITCHELL said he wished to suggest an amendment that he desired to insert. He had stated his views at some length in this regard when the resolution was under consideration. He desired that those who suffered damages by reason of the misconduct of the officials on any public work, should have the opportunity of going for redress before the ordinary Courts of the country. For his part, he had no confidence in the officers who had been appointed to investigate these claims in his section of the country, in the past; and he was sure, from his experience, that he would not be likely to have much more confidence in any officer who might be so appointed by the Government in the future. He intended to propose that these damages be not ascertained by Commissions, as suggested in this Bill; but that persons sustaining such damages should go before the ordinary Courts of law, where they would have a fair and judicial tribunal to decide whether their claims were just or not. He moved:

“That the Bill be re-committed to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the said Bill, by providing that parties suffering damages by the neglect or misconduct in the management of the Intercolonial Railway, or any of the officers thereof, shall have remedy for such damages in the ordinary Courts of law.”

He felt it due to the interests which he represented, that he should inform the House that the claims which, from time to time, he presented to the Government, had not received that amount of consideration to which they were entitled. The remedy which the Government had hitherto proposed, was not one within the reach of the poorer classes of the community, and he felt it his duty to endeavour to obtain some other method of redress which would be within the reach of all in the different localities. He need not again go over the cases which he had brought under the notice of the Government; but he ventured to say that, although they were perfectly just, he had never been able to obtain even a fair investigation into them. He was unable to lay his hand upon a letter which he had received from one of his constituents—Mr. Thomas Flynn. That person had a field of four acres, which was taken by the Government for the purpose of bringing water to the station at Newcastle. Pipes were laid down through the field, which, of course, was destroyed—or, at all events, rendered useless—and he had received a most doleful letter, calling attention to the fact that the Government had not, since the time the damage was done, given Flynn any compensation, or even investigated into the circumstances of the case. By the extension of the same water-pipes, the fields of two others—Mr. Quigley and Mr. Grimley—similarly situated, though in a high state of cultivation, were destroyed also, and no redress was afforded them. Thus a very considerable portion of the means whereby several families derived their support was taken away, and not the slightest consideration was given to their cases by the people in charge of the Railway Department in their locality. There were others, whose land adjoined that of those persons, who had complained to him under similar circumstances. In fact, whenever representations of this kind were made by injured persons, they were referred to some subordinate railway official, who would not take the trouble to examine into the circumstances. He must say, however, that, when the Manager, Mr. Brydges, was applied to, a reasonable answer was at least vouchsafed; but no sort of reparation could be obtained even from that quarter. A still more flagrant case than any he had mentioned, was that of Mr. William Jones and Brothers, whose property was situated about a mile from Newcastle, and consisted of a grist mill and a saw mill. These were situated on the stream from which the water was taken to supply the station at Newcastle; and the fountain head of that stream was actually dammed up and diverted from its course for the purposes of the Intercolonial Railway. The mills had, in consequence, been rendered practically useless, and the property, which was worth some thousands of dollars, was thrown on the hands of the owners. Now, that kind of thing had been going on for two years, and yet he had not succeeded in obtaining for such persons the slightest compensation. The Bill of the hon. the First Minister did not provide for any compensation being made in a case where the legal liability of the Government was not established. He would only sanction some payment being made on the fact being established. What he (Mr. Mitchell) desired by his proposition to combine in such cases the question of the law with the question of fact, and to obtain for the people some public tribunal where they might claim their rights, as in the case of a dispute between private individuals. Such a plan would obviate the necessity of keeping up this constant demand for justice, and relieve the representatives of particular counties from the labour of constantly answering letters received in relation to this matter. It would render it impossible for the Government to say that hon. gentlemen who supported claims presented against the Administration were obstructing public business. Although some people might think this a trifling matter, he considered it one of vital importance to the people whom he represented, and he would be lax in his duty if he did not, on an occasion like this, endeavour to obtain some tribunal or Court, in various localities, where claims could be presented at no great expense, where witnesses could be in attendance without much trouble, where the lands on which the mishap occurred might be examined, and where all might be satisfied that they would obtain justice. What remedy was proposed to meet the cases of these people? He was told the other night by the hon. the First Minister that there was a remedy in the Supreme Court of this country. We all knew what that meant. Some of the gentlemen sitting round him, who had to go there in connection with election matters, had been obliged to pay from $5,000 to $10,000, and how could these poor people, whose very sources of maintenance, it might be, had been destroyed, go to such a costly tribunal? How could they be expected to come to Ottawa—perhaps a thousand miles from their home and run the risk of paying, at least, from $800 to $1,000? The Bill was incapable of meeting the exigencies of the case, because it did not enable people to obtain redress in some simple and cheap form, such as was desired by all. He was not going to dilate on that matter, because he had already done so at considerable length, thereby bringing upon himself odium and unpopularity from the other side of the House. He had rendered himself obnoxious, no doubt, to hon. gentlemen opposite, but that would not deter him from taking every legitimate means in his power to press the claims of those persons whom he imagined to have been wronged. He was taunted the other day by an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, who said he did not prostitute his position as a Minister to get claims settled. He (Mr. Mitchell) did not think he was guilty of such a thing. What he wished to obtain was justice. He might not always be right like other hon. gentlemen, neither was he always in order, not knowing the rules of the House so well, perhaps, as those who invariably invoked them when he was pressing his claims. But he would take this justification for occupying the time of the House so often on this matter: that his efforts had resulted in one thing at least, they had resulted in the introduction of the measure which the hon. the First Minister had laid before the House. At the same time, he (Mr. Mitchell), felt that the hon. gentleman would give more satisfaction and do that which would be more conducive to a just settlement of these claims if he would introduce the suggestion now made—to give poor people the ordinary remedies to be had in the ordinary Courts of law in the several counties against the Government, just the same as against private individuals. He hoped the hon. the Premier would take into consideration the suggestions made, and consent to the Bill going back again to the Committee for the purpose of amending it in the manner he (Mr. Mitchell) had proposed.

MR. MITCHELL.

MR. PALMER said he had always been in favour of the principle which his hon. friend from Northumberland had advocated, believing it to be one of importance; consequently, he did not like to let this opportunity pass without giving one or two reasons why he thought the principle his hon. friend contended for could be carried out effectively, to the great benefit of the country. A law of this description was enforced in New Brunswick almost from the time the railway was constructed down to the time of Confederation, and a person could bring an action against the Government, instead of against the railway employés. The Government held back for a long time and were unwilling to pass such a law for exactly the same reasons as had operated in that House—that persons would turn out their cattle to be killed for the purpose of making all kinds of claims against the Government, who would thereby lose a large amount of money. Well, what was the result? During the time that Act was in force, the amount of money paid by the Government in settlement of claims was actually less than it had been previously. The reason was obvious. Before that time, any person in New Brunswick possessed of political influence, who pressed a claim was almost certain to obtain what he demanded, while another person who possessed no influence, received no consideration. The Government could scarcely help themselves, but they were placed in a position which caused a great deal of scandal to come upon them. Afterwards, however, they could say to any man, no matter whether he possessed influence or not, "We have looked at your claim and we have decided in point of law that you have no grounds for asking compensation," or they could say, "We have made provision that you can, if you like, go to the ordinary and cheapest tribunals and try the matter there, but if so, you must give us security for the costs." The result was that, before a man undertook to give security, he took good care that his claim was a right and just one; consequently, there were few actions entered. Hon. gentlemen had objected to the proposition made, on the ground that people might turn out their cattle to be killed in order that they might have a claim of some kind against the Government. But surely it could not be considered for a single instant that because a man's cattle were killed, he must necessarily have a claim against the Government. The railway employés must first be proved in Court to have been at fault. He thought the suggestion of his hon. friend from Northumberland would require to be elaborated in some more distinct and absolute scheme than in a mere amendment. That amendment, no doubt, affirmed the true principle, but the machinery was lacking. He held that it was improper for the rights of the people of Canada to be dependent on the mere will of any Government. In the case of some claims which he himself advocated, parties recovered in cases where he did not think there was any likelihood of their doing so, while others, whom he believed to have clear cases against the Government, received no redress whatever. There ought, therefore, to be a tribunal in which there would be no mere discretionary power exercised and in which nothing but the pure truth would be admitted. If such a tribunal could be obtained, he would support it. He was in favour of his hon. friend's amendment, because there did not seem to be any other remedy. It was not right that the power of making an investigation should rest entirely with the Government, because although in the great majority of cases they would give their consent to such investigation, in others their refusal would occasion heart-burnings, and that refusal itself would be ascribed to political influences. Some hon. gentlemen—and among these was the hon member for Kingston—entertained the fear that if these claims were decided in the ordinary Courts, damages would be given against the Government unnecessarily. But there would be this check: The Government were not always to blame for these mishaps; generally they were due to the fault of employes, who were liable to be dismissed. That, of course, was a serious position for a servant to be placed in, and that consideration sometimes had greater influence with a jury than any other. "On the other hand," they would say, "here is this poor man doing the best he could; if we find against him he will be turned out of his employment. But, on the other hand, there is the claim made by this person who seems to have suffered loss." He had faith in the Judges and juries of this country that they would act impartially in such cases as far as they were guided by the facts before them. He knew of no cheaper mode by which small claims could be settled than in the ordinary courts of law, and larger claims could be dealt with in the higher courts. Any one who had had experience in connection with these matters must know, that the system of arbitration now in force was not so cheap a method of procedure as the settlement of claims in the ordinary Courts.

MR. MACKENZIE said he had no doubt a tolerably strong case might be made out in favour of the proposal which the hon. gentleman had submitted. It would be utterly nugatory to carry the amendment which he proposed because, as any lawyer would tell him, there would require to be a special Act for the purpose of providing a mode of procedure—something like the Petition of Right Act. The advisability of adopting that method might be considered, but it would be useless to add a provision such as that proposed by the hon. gentleman to the Bill. The Bill was not intended to deal with the mode of procedure at all, but simply to amend the Public Works Act so as to enable the arbitrators to employ stenographers to take notes. It was suggested, however, by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Tupper), that something might be done to facilitate the rapid termination of cases. He (Mr. Mackenzie) informed the hon. gentleman that he believed they had that power already, under the amendment of 1871, and, under these circumstances, the Bill passed its second reading. He gave that opinion hurriedly, not having had time the day before to consult the Minister of Justice; but, on referring it to the hon. Minister, he considered the power was somewhat doubtful, and this clause was prepared in order to make the power definite and conclusive. It should, therefore, be accepted by hon. gentlemen as a means of obtaining evidence in such matters irrespective, altogether, of the railway authorities. The hon. gentleman must not assume, as he had assumed, that the Government was desirous of resisting claims based upon accidents caused by railway officials; the Government was as anxious as any hon. gentleman could possibly be, to pay all just claims, but, on the other hand, they knew from experience that there were a great many unjust claims. They knew that animals had been driven on the track for the purpose of killing them; they had evidence in their possession to show that the greatest carelessness had prevailed, that people, having land abutting the line, had left their gates open, under the impression that they might safely do so, as it was a Government line, and it would be very difficult for the Government to resist payment. From the districts of Rimouski and Temiscouata, there appeared to be a greater number of accidents, from some cause or other, than anywhere else, and the hon. members for those places had interested themselves in more claims that had been resisted, than even the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). He mentioned this to show the strict impartiality of the Government with respect to those claims; anything else but strict impartiality would be monstrous, whether on the part of the Inspector of Railways, the Minister of Public Works, or the Government. There could be no possible object, on the part of the Government, but to guard the public interests, and endeavour to do justice to private interests as well. He thought the Bill would accomplish that object, and, therefore, it was quite out of the question to accept the amendment.

MR. PALMER.

MR. TUPPER said he trusted his friend the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) would not press his amendment. As a member of the late Government, he (Mr. Tupper) resisted such a proposal as that contained in the amendment, and he saw no reason to change that opinion now. But, apart altogether from the question as to whether it might be desirable to have an Act framed for the purpose of enabling litigation to take place in such cases, he was of opinion—and would hold the opinion until it was shown that the Act had failed to accomplish its object—that the parties would stand in a better position under the Act now proposed, than under the proposal of his hon. friend the member for Northumberland. And, for this reason: the difficulty itself arose in these matters, in regard to large and important claims. The law provided that, having submitted these claims to the Board of Arbitrators, and, having submitted evidence, full and substantial justice should be done, and, he had not heard it alleged, under this Government, or any previous Government, that parties had failed to obtain substantial justice if their claims were of such a character as enabled them to be submitted to the Arbitrators. But they had also to consider the small claims; and he was just as anxious as his hon. friend the member for Northumberland to provide the means of doing complete and speedy justice to the sufferers in those cases. He was not surprised at the feelings of his hon. friend (Mr. Mitchell) because, down to the present time, parties having claims in regard to these small matters, and, knowing that these claims were practically decided by persons they held to be interested, had felt deeply aggrieved, and, no doubt, a great deal of dissatisfaction had arisen, and, in many cases, not without just cause. They must remember, however, that most of these cases were for small amounts. He wished to ask his hon. friend whether, if a poor man consulted him as to an ox or a horse he had had killed on the Intercolonial Railway, he would advise the man to have a proper investigation of his case, not by persons connected with the railway department, but by a gentleman entirely independent, a man of standing and position, sent there by the Government, without any cost to himself, to obtain proper testimony for and against the claim, and to lay a report before the Government which would enable justice to be done? Would he advise the man to take this course, or to go to law? He believed his hon. friend would say, "I should try the milder measure first," because, a private individual, in small claims, went into law in a very unfavourable position; and, his hon. friend from St. John, in citing the New Brunswick Act had brought forward an argument fatal to his case, for under that Act the first step was to give a guarantee for costs. The man was poor, perhaps living in an isolated district, with no persons of means in his neighbourhood to guarantee for him, and his opponent in the Court was the Government of the country. He (Mr. Tupper) held that such parties would be in a better position to get speedy justice under this Act than under an authority that would allow them to go into litigation. He supposed that his hon. friend the member for St. John would not propose that a single magistrate, living in the neighbourhood, should deal with such cases. If the decision of the magistrate went against the parties, they would appeal against it, and if the Government did not think it was a correct judgment, he presumed they would appeal against it, and the case would be carried into another Court; and everyone knew that that meant that the party making the claim must have money for prosecuting it, which in many cases they would not have. He hoped the hon. gentleman would accept the Bill offered by the Government, regarding it as a means of getting independent examinations of the cases, and in which the party making them could have no possible interest in doing anything but presenting the facts to the Government as they were. The interests of the Government would always be in favour of paying these claims if they were well founded, rather than to leave them as a source of complaint. He trusted his hon. friend would consent to give this Government measure a trial, and if it did not succeed, some other means might be taken to secure the object in view. He must say that, taking into consideration that the Government had seven hundred miles of railway—

MR. MACKENZIE: Nine hundred.

MR. TUPPER said that, having nine hundred miles of railway in operation at the present moment, and a great many hundred miles more in course of construction, he regarded this action on the part of the Government as a serious step; but if every individual case was to be carried into a Court of law, it would commence a system of litigation which would not increase the comfort of those on the Treasury benches.

MR. POULIOT said that he must state that the Bill would not be satisfactory except with the addition proposed. The people must have facilities for bringing their cases before a Court of law. He could mention several cases where claims had been made, but nothing had been done by the Government in the matter. In one case a party made a claim, and the engineer went to look at the place, but nothing further was done. A party in Quebec, through whose property the line passed, had given up a part of his land for the use of the railway, and was now unable to obtain payment for it. He contended that the present measure did not meet the difficulty, and that it would not be satisfactory to his constituents.

MR. DOMVILLE said he had brought several cases before the House where damages had been sustained through accidents, but nothing had been done by the Government with regard to them. A man could not, however, always be running after the Government, and for this reason he supported the measure. His constituents were largely interested in this matter. Before Confederation they had three Commissioners in Halifax. That worked very well. Small claims might be allowed to be brought in the Courts, but he had no doubt that, if they did not go into the Courts, they would be settled without great expense. Another point was that it took these matters out of the hands of hon. members, who might unduly press the Government sometimes for a settlement of the claims in which they were interested. All an hon. member had to do now, was to tell his constituents to go to the Courts or to the Commissioners. Therefore, it would give him pleasure to vote for the motion.

MR. MITCHELL said that, strictly speaking, he had no right to address the House again on this question; but he wished to answer the points that had been raised by the Minister of Public Works and the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Tupper.) The Minister of Public Works had pointed out that the present Public Works Act gave the power of having this investigation by the Commissioners. The object of this Bill was to appoint a shorthand writer; this would not accomplish anything, except give facilities to the Commissioners for taking the evidence, and he did not see how it affected the question. He (Mr. Mitchell) pointed out the other day that the Commissioners would not settle points of law, and in all instances where judicial questions arose they refused to pay these claims. Then the hon. member for Cumberland stated that there would be no costs in these matters; but the Act said that, "the costs of this action should be taxed and charged as such." It was very clear the costs would be enforced on these poor people under the existing law, and he did not perceive how this Bill would affect it, because it only gave power to appoint shorthand writers.

MR. MACKENZIE said he thought that he had made himself sufficiently explicit. What he said was this: that where the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Tupper) raised the question about sending some party, independent of the railway authorities, to make enquiries with regard to these claims, he (Mr. Mackenzie) informed the hon. gentleman that, though it had never been exercised, the Act of 1871, amending the Public Works Act, would enable them to do this. Subsequent investigation by the Minister of Justice showed that the Act of 1871 would not really do it in so effective a way as would be desirable, and this clause was then prepared by the hon. Minister of Justice, in order to accomplish what he (Mr. Mackenzie) had stated, that he believed the Act of 1871 would do, which was to give power to send one or more arbitrators over the line to examine all cases where claims were made for accidents of this kind. It was entirely different to what was intended in the Act brought down, but being an amendment of the Public Works Act, it was competent to be inserted.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. MITCHELL: Then the existing Public Works Act does provide for holding these investigations.

MR. MACKENZIE said that was not the meaning of what he had said; it was not the meaning his words would convey to anyone who paid attention to them, he felt sure. He did not usually fail to make himself explicit in his language. What he had said was that the Act of 1871 had been stated by him to be, as he thought, sufficient to enable the Government to send one of the arbitrators upon a mission never undertaken before by them, to hold an examination in the case of an accident; but on the law officers of the Crown looking at the Act more carefully, it was found that it imposed preliminary conditions, which would practically defeat the object. For instance, in every case, the petition would have to be sent to the Secretary of State and have a report of the Council upon it, and obtain an Order in Council before action could be taken in any one case. Therefore, this Bill was brought in to enable one of the arbitrators to be sent without those preliminaries, the moment an accident was reported, to examine into the facts and report them to the Government. Had the Act provided for this, there would have been no need for those amendments, because the Government could have acted upon it; but, finding it was insufficient for this purpose, the Government introduced this Bill to remedy it.

MR. MITCHELL said the effect of this Bill was then simply to avoid the necessity of this report to the Council and the Order in Council or authorization and to go on with the examination, as under the existing Act, and that the Minister, or his agent, might order this examination on his own motion. That remedy did not apply to the real difficulty which he had pointed out. The objection he had taken was that any official of the Government should settle whether parties were entitled to their claims or not.

MR. MACKENZIE: A Judge is an official of the Government.

MR. MITCHELL: A Judge was independent of the Government. Any person who depended on the will of the Government for office was not a fit and proper party to settle and adjudge claims between the Crown and the subject. The hon. member for Cumberland might be right, and the hon. the Minister of Public Works might be right, though on opposite sides of the House, the one on the Treasury benches, and the other expecting to get there very shortly. They were right in their arguments from their stand point; no doubt they wished to avoid occasioning the Government any trouble, and to give it control, as much as possible, in these matters. But the people had a right to go to an independent Court to have their claims adjudged. With reference to the question of costs, the hon. member for Cumberland had stated that security for costs being required, would practically be a barrier to the poor man against bringing his case before the Court. It would be one of the greatest securities to the Government possible. No man would give security unless he felt his claim was right and just. It would prevent dozens of cases from coming into consideration or being brought up at all, while, in cases where the claims would be rejected, the Treasury would not suffer any loss by the trials asked for, the costs having been secured. He saw no impropriety in his amendment, and as to the point that it would not give what it contemplated, he was not tied to the form of that resolution, but had merely made it for the purpose of bringing it under the notice of Parliament and of the Government, in the hope, which he feared was a vain one, that it would be taken into consideration, and so amended that, it would cover the ground contemplated in it. He was satisfied that if this Bill passed in its present shape, without any other remedy than it contained, the sufferers would be just as far from justice as they ever were. While he knew it was useless to press on the consideration of the Government anything they did not like to adopt, he deemed it his duty to his constituents that he should put on record what he desired to have done, and, he believed, a very large minority supported his opinions. He did not want to divide the House on his resolution, and if the hon. the Premier would say that the Government would take into consideration the propriety of preparing such a measure, he would withdraw his motion; otherwise, he must insist on a division being taken.

MR. MACKENZIE said, with regard to the question of costs, he had already mentioned that there was no instance in which costs were paid to the Arbitrators. There were, really, no costs to be paid. The Government paid a salary of $1,000 per year to such Arbitrator, and travelling expenses, and they usually had a large number of cases in each locality.

Amendment negatived on a Division.
Bill read the third time and passed.

MANITOBA LAND CLAIMS BILL.—
[BILL No. 46.]

(Mr. Mills.)

THIRD READING.

Amendments reported from Committee of the Whole, read the first and second times and agreed to.

Bill read the third time and passed.

MR. MITCHELL.

POST-OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.
[BILL No. 17.]

(Mr. Huntington.)

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

MR. HUNTINGTON said that the general instructions to postmasters were, under no circumstances, to open letters. The Bill did not attempt, in any way, to change those instructions. There was no intention to weaken that regulation in any possible way. The section to be amended placed it within the power of the Postmaster-General to prohibit and prevent the transmission of certain mail matter recognised as objectionable. So far as the Post-Office Department was concerned, there had been no instance, under this clause, in which letters had been opened, nor was there any intention to open letters, nor any expectation that the opening of them would be necessary. Of course, as the right hon. member for Kingston had stated the other night, letters stopped in their immediate course would naturally go to the dead-letter office to be dealt with according to the provisions of the Post-Office Act. In a case like the one which occurred lately in New Brunswick, and to which he had referred the other night, where something like a quarter of a million of letters were transmitted, the volume of this correspondence would suggest to the Department the nature of the trade going on, and, in most cases, the superscription would give indication of the character of the correspondence. In point of fact, there was no doubt that the existence of the power had been sufficient to prevent improper mail matter going into the mails. There was no intention or expectation that there would be anything like the opening of letters as the result of the provisions of this Bill, but the Postmaster-General might, under circumstances sufficiently grave, have power to deal in some way as regarded the transmission of mail matter, as to make it embarrassing to those who sought to make the mail subservient to improper purposes, and nothing more. The want of attempts to transmit this prohibited matter had been so apparent, that there had been no need of any regulations. If this authority were given, the same experience would be found with reference to the provisions of the present Bill.

MR. TUPPER said the explanations of the hon. the Postmaster-General did not at all reassure him on the subject. The hon. the Postmaster-General had stated that it was not contemplated, under this Bill, that any official of the Post-Office Department should have authority to open a letter. So far that was very satisfactory. But he went on to say that the power rested in the Post-Office Department of dealing with a letter, otherwise than sending it to the person to whom it was addressed, existed only in transmitting it to the dead-letter office. That was a very serious power indeed.

MR. HUNTINGTON: That power exists already.

MR. TUPPER: That existed now, it was true, but it was proposed to extend it very much. No official in the Department, he assumed, could transmit a letter, properly stamped, to the dead-letter office. It was proposed to make a most serious and extensive change in the law and practice of the Department; because, if it was not intended to allow officials all over this wide Dominion, instead of sending letters to those to whom they were addressed, to intercept them, and transmit them to the dead-letter office, the law was a dead letter itself.

MR. HUNTINGTON said he thought his hon. friend has lost sight of a statement he had made, which was important. He had said the Post-Office authorities would never think of permitting postmasters to exercise any jurisdiction in this respect. But, when it became apparent, as in the case at New Brunswick, that a great fraud was being perpetrated, the Postmaster-General interfered.

MR. TUPPER said he was just coming to that. Surely, this was intended to extend the power and change the law at present, under which every post-office official was bound to deliver every letter properly stamped.

MR. HUNTINGTON: There are prohibitions in the law; we are only adding one item.

MR. TUPPER said, under the power conferred in this Bill, the effect would be that the official, instead of delivering the package of letters to the party entitled to receive it, would be obliged to transmit it to the dead-letter office. What was done with all the letters the moment they reached the dead-letter office? They were opened. Suppose the Government, for any reason of their own, had letters sent to the dead-letter office, and the official in charge had marked on them the authority of the Post-Office Department that they should go to the person to whom they were sent, incredible mischief might, in the meantime, have occurred. How could the hon. the Postmaster-General know they were a swindle? Who was to sit in judgment in all these cases? Not the Postmaster-General, with all his intelligence and his knowledge and information, but a host, a vast multitude of very indifferently-informed persons all over this country. Those postmasters were very respectable men, well qualified to carry out the plain instructions that, when a letter came to their hands, it should be sent forward, but who were very poorly qualified, in point of knowledge on this subject, to undertake to sit in judgment on the communications which came to their hands, and to decide whether they should go forward to the persons to whom they were addressed, or to intercept any communication and send it back. He did not say the Government would knowingly, for a single moment, permit any official in their service to act improperly, or do anything not absolutely necessary to carry out this law.

MR. HUNTINGTON asked if the hon. gentleman would allow him to ask one question. The amendment they were discussing was an amendment to fourth sub-section, which he would read:

“ Make regulations declaring what shall and what shall not be deemed to be mailable matter for the purpose of this Act, and for restricting, within reasonable limits, the weight and dimensions of letters and packets and other matters sent by post, and for prohibiting and preventing the sending of explosive, dangerous, contraband or improper articles, obscene or immoral publications, or obscene or immoral postcards."

In what respect did the principle which underlay the amendment at all deviate from the clauses which existed in the law?

MR. TUPPER: If it is not proposed to alter this law there is no necessity for the amendment.

MR. HUNTINGTON: It is a deviation as to an additional item, but not as to the principle of the existing law.

MR. TUPPER said he thought it extended the principle very much, and would be very much misconceived. It was intended to violate the secrecy of correspondence, or it was not. The hon. gentleman knew that, as the law now stood, obscene publications and a certain class of newspapers, whose character was very easily ascertained, as they were not enclosed like letters, were prohibited. All the official had to do was to cast his eye on those papers to obtain prima facie evidence that they came under the prohibition of the law, and the hon. the Postmaster-General could give instructions relating to them. But the violation of the secrecy of correspondence was one of the most vital things that could be proposed in any Act. He would again state that this was a most inopportune time to present the Bill. Would any hon. gentleman who expected to present himself again before his constituency for election to this House, be willing to have the Bill passed, just on the eve of a general election, a Bill which would enable any postmaster, among the thousands of persons discharging that duty, to intercept any package of letters, perhaps thirty or forty letters or circulars of a party character, sent for political purposes. There was a time when hon. gentlemen opposite held that coalitions were immoral. They, on the Opposition side of the House, did not hold that doctrine; and, therefore, if they sent out documents to show that it was proper to have coalitions, the hon. the Postmaster-General might say they came under the clause as to immoral publications because they propounded immoral doctrines. As a member of the House and member of one of the great political parties, he was unwilling, at this time, that there should be placed in the hands of any of the thousand post-office officials in this country, among whom were many very officious people, and many who were anxious to promote the interests of their party, the power of opening letters under the pretext that they came within the scope of the law, or of sending them to the dead-letter office at Ottawa to be opened, and then sent back to be marked as not having been properly intercepted, and then sent forward. Most valuable time would have been lost—time that might be fatal to a candidate running his election for a seat in Parliament. There was great objection to extending the powers the Post-Office authorities now possessed, and still greater objection to doing that at the present time. He had entertained the hope that the same reasons that induced the hon. gentleman's predecessor in the Post-Office Department, when he introduced the Post-Office Act, to yield the legislation he had in contemplation, would have induced the hon. the Postmaster-General to have omitted that proposal on a mere suggestion being made.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he did not entertain such grave apprehensions as did the hon. member for Cumberland, in regard to the opening of letters. He was used to that.

MR. HUNTINGTON said it was the opinion of the officers of his Department that the power already possessed by the Department had been of great use, without exercising any authority, in preventing the distribution of immoral publications which threatened to flood the country. The first intimation the Department had was that 250,000 letters, or a postage of $8,000, was paid in a few months at a little country office, and it was thought proper the Department should have the power to stop the circulation, through the post, of such improper publications. They had been able to stop their circulation in a harmless way without opening any letters, by being able to advise the promoters of such literature that the

MR. HUNTINGTON.

Department had the power to stop the transmission.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he desired to know whether letters had been opened, and whether, as a matter of fact, the power given in the Act had been exercised?

MR. HUNTINGTON said he did not know of any instance of a letter having been stopped; but, no doubt, there had been some exercise of the power as regarded immoral publications.

MR. MACDONNELL said that great caution should be exercised in extending the powers of postmasters, for experience showed there were some very curious officials among them. There was a case from the county which he represented now before the hon. the Postmaster-General, involving the opening of a letter deliberately by the postmaster, his only excuse or apology for doing so being that he possessed such authority. As regarded packages or printed matter, which did not contain private information, it was of little importance whether such power was taken; but it would be found very inconvenient to give to any postmaster the power to deliberately open, on his own suggestion, all letters coming to his office. He had no objection to extending the powers asked to the Postmaster-General and those under him to all mail matter, except letters. He considered it was his duty, from what he knew by experience of the character of some of the postmasters, to oppose that part of the Bill.

MR. BROUSE said he did not perceive that the Bill proposed that the Postmaster-General should have the power of opening letters. He (Mr. Brouse) knew, from his residence in a town lying near the boundary line between the United States and Canada, that a very large quantity of immoral publications was transmitted through the mail, and that no Act of the late Government was more satisfactory to the country than that which gave postmasters the power to stop such matter from going forward to its destination, but transmitting it to the Department at Ottawa. Large packages of that nature had been sent to the dead-letter office which, if sent through the country, would have had a most immoral tendency. The United States had passed a law to prevent lotteries and the large circulation of literature which had taken place with a view to deplete the pockets of innocent dupes. That law had driven those parties out of the United States, and they had made Canada the basis of their operations. At St. Stephen's, in New Brunswick, that business had been carried on to an alarming extent, and notification had been given that the parties intended to carry on the same operations at St. Thomas, Ontario. At St. Stephen's, from $35,000 to $40,000 was received in reply to communications sent respecting lotteries. If the Government could reach those persons and prevent the Canadian people being swindled, it was their duty to adopt such a course. He regretted that some of the newspapers inserted notices and advertisements of a nature such as to injure the morality of the people, and he would be glad if a law were passed that would reach such cases. He was gratified that the hon. the Postmaster-General had adopted measures to suppress the lotteries in this country. The present Bill did not give postmasters additional powers, but gave to the Post-Office Department additional means to secure the desired object.

MR. HUNTINGTON said it was entirely a misapprehension on the part of hon. members to suppose that any power was taken in the Bill to allow country postmasters to open letters, and that it increased the powers of postmasters as to the treatment of contraband mail matter. They proposed simply to deal with the law which existed, and had existed for many years on the Statute-book, by which the Postmaster-General had power to prevent or regulate the transmission of certain mail matter. Country postmasters could not, under any circumstances, open the letters of the right hon. member for Kingston to ascertain where he would speak on a certain night. The Postmaster-General could have no power over letters which the law did not give him. The Post-Office Department could issue regulations with the view of giving country postmasters the power. The law had been in existence some years, and the only changes the Government proposed to make was to add to the list of contraband mail matter, communications respecting lotteries. If they were commencing ab initio, and discussing new principles, he could quite understand the objections, which he also respected now; but they were changing the law in no respect, but simply adding to prohibited matter letters from promoters of lotteries. The Government had changed no principle in the present Act, and had added no power except the simple one to which he had referred.

MR. PALMER: Does the present Act allow the opening of letters?

MR. HUNTINGTON: It does, undoubtedly, through the dead-letter office, and that only.

MR. PALMER: By this law, you will have the right to open letters?

MR. HUNTINGTON: No.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the hon. the Minister had very truly said that the Bill did not extend its operations beyond the Post-Office Act, 1875. It extended, however, the objects to be prohibited. It would not give additional power to the hon. the Postmaster-General, but it enlarged the area of subjects over which he could act. The Post-Office Act of 1875 did not give the Postmaster-General the power to open letters or to stop letters or papers as an act of administration, whether immoral, obscene or irreligious. All he could do was to pass certain regulations prohibiting the passage through the mails of obscene, irreligious, etc. matter, and that power was conferred by sub-section 4 of clause 10. Although the hon. gentleman had possessed that power since 1875, there had not been any regulation passed. The Postmaster-General had taken no action whatever, although the Act was passed for the very proper purpose of suppressing the circulation by mail of that literature, and if any letters or papers had been stopped or delayed, it had been an improper interference by the country postmasters or the hon. the Postmaster-General or Inspector because no regulation had been passed by the Department with respect to that clause. Although the hon. gentleman at the head of the Post-Office Department admitted that this had been a great evil, yet he had not put in force any regulations or taken any legal steps to prevent immoral and improper books being circulated; nevertheless the hon. gentleman thought it was necessary to extend the area of his powers. Surely, if the Act existed, the first thing to be done was to pass regulations for the purpose of preventing the circulation of that literature. The hon. the Postmaster-General, however, declared that the very fact of such a provision being on the Statute-book had had the effect of stopping the business. A Statute was not passed as a brutum fulmen and a mere threat. When it was passed, and when they enacted clauses like this, they were to be carried out; and, if they were merely to put on the Statute-book a clause which was not to be placed in operation, but to be held as a wand over the public, this would be an abuse of the whole principle of legislation. Legislation must be carried into action, if made at all. Besides this principle, they objected, the other day, to a portion of this measure. When he asked the hon. the Postmaster-General, during the discussion of this Bill the other day, the question, the hon. gentleman actually did not know whether any regulations had been passed under this clause of the Act of 1875, but rather thought it was the case, and promised to bring them down on the next discussion of the Bill. It appeared that this clause had been absolutely a dead letter on the Statute-book; it was never put in force; it had never been acted upon; it had never been used from 1875 to 1878, and yet, such were the great evils suffered during all these years, when it had been utterly neglected, from 1875 to 1878, that the hon. gentleman wanted additional powers; and, he dared say, that during the past three years, the hon. gentlemen knew of no regulations having been passed requiring extended powers, any more than were required the powers sought for in this clause.

MR. HUNTINGTON.

MR. HUNTINGTON: To remove misapprehension, I may mention that there are no general regulations; but there have been regulations to meet specific cases, if there were any specific cases to deal with. I stated that in my opening remarks.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that this was exactly what this clause would lead to. The hon. gentleman had no right to make a distinct order for a distinct case. The Statute was for the purpose of passing general regulations, which were, generally, supposed to be included in the clause.

MR. HUNTINGTON: That is the rule, we believe.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he had no doubt that, as a matter of law, this clause did not give the hon. gentleman power to say: "I shall pass a regulation, and I shall open this letter. Here is a letter which I suspect to be immoral or obscene; it may be in favour of a lottery; and I will make a regulation that I shall open this letter." This was not what the Statute meant. The hon. gentleman must make general regulations, and these regulations should be carried out. As regarded the additional clause, he thought that it was too vague, as he had pointed out to the hon. gentleman, who seemed to think that this was the case. This added to the power of the Act of 1875, by providing for a prohibition to prevent the sending and delivery by post of letters, circulars, or other matter concerning illegal lotteries. This language admitted, to a certain extent, that there were legal lotteries. It also mentioned "so-called gift concerts." On this point there might be a great deal of difference of opinion; gift concerts might be fraudulent in their character or quite innocent. The Press of the country offered to make a gift of a book, or watch, or chain, or chromo, or a number of things of that kind to a number of persons clubbing together to subscribe to their papers. He did not think that the action of those who subscribed a certain sum to hear music, and so much to get a chromo of the leading singer at a concert, came under this clause; and he did not believe that these should be excepted. The clause continued, "nor illegal lotteries." Of course, if illegal, they were illegal; and, if there were legal lotteries—if there was such a thing, and he believed that there were such things in Lower Canada, specially protected by law—these were excepted. The clause continued, "so-called gift concerts, or other illegal enterprises of a like character." Who was to judge of the "like character?" There was no similarity between any legal lottery and a gift concert. His hon. friend (Mr. Tupper) said this was worded so that it meant everything. Enterprises of what character? Of the character of a lottery or a gift concert? What did this mean? The clause went on, "offering prizes—" Why should they not offer prizes? "Or concerning schemes devised or intended to deceive or defraud the public." Who were to judge of this? Was the hon. the Postmaster-General to decide whether a scheme, which might be honest or benevolent and, perhaps, for the purpose of building a church, or for any charitable purpose, was fraudulent, or a sham, or a humbug? And, therefore, this was not a subject to be taken by the neck, throttled and put down. They were, in this clause, handing themselves over, body and bones, with all their liberties and franchises, to the hon. the Postmaster-General. It was said a long time ago, when the Excise laws were passed in England with severe and stringent rules, according to which the Excise officers were permitted to enter breweries and distilleries, and to have most inquisitorial power,—that they granted to the dipping rule what they denied to the sceptre, and that the power which they would not give to the Crown, they gave to the Excise officer and gauge-man. Here they were actually giving to the hon. the Postmaster-General or his subordinates or whoever he appointed to carry out the regulations, the power to stop letters because they concerned gift concerts or lotteries or illegal enterprises of some kind or other, and because they offered prizes or concerned schemes devised or intended to defraud the public for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretences. The question as to obtaining money under false pretences was one that could only be decided before a jury; no man, no one man had, or ought to have, the right in a free country to say that a person was acting under false pretences. If this were allowed, this would no longer be a free country. The clause continued: "Whether such letters, circulars or other mail-matter be addressed to or received by mail from places within or without the Dominion of Canada." Looking at the fact that, for three and almost four years, the Post-Office Department had had the power to make regulations on cognate subjects of this kind, that it had altogether neglected to make regulations of any kind and that they were now without protection against the circulation of such illegal matter, under the Act of 1875; it was too much to be called upon to pass a general clause of this kind at this time. This was calling upon them to surrender too much of the sanctity of the Post-Office and the security which every man felt in this country and in England—and which was perhaps felt in no other country save England and her colonies—the sanctity of the letter which had always been protected by our laws. This provision would go very far indeed to infringe upon it, to create a suspicion which was disastrous to the interests of the post-office, disastrous to communication between the different parts of the country, and a direct infringement, in his opinion, upon the liberties of the people.

MR. BLAKE said that, if he was rightly informed, the clause which it was proposed to amend was not for the first time inserted in the Act of 1875; it existed in the previous Act. He was sure that some provision of the kind must have existed because his hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Brouse), had a moment ago stated that several years since—about eight years ago, bushels of immoral and obscene publications were, owing to instructions or regulations of some description, sent from the post-office at the town in which the hon. gentleman resided to the Post-Office Department. He presumed that his hon. friend the Postmaster-General—if he was correctly informed—owing to the fact that such a regulation had existed before 1875, had not made any new regulations or instructions on the subject; and some regulations there must have been, or otherwise, what his hon. friend from Grenville said did in fact take place eight years ago, could not possibly have taken place.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The Postmaster-General said that he would bring down any such regulations to-day.

MR. BLAKE said he did not know about this, but they had the fact mentioned before them, and it was indisputable testimony. His hon. friend personally knew that, at the post-office in question, there were, under instructions from the Post-Office Department, or under regulations or an order, large numbers of obscene and immoral publications stopped and transmitted to the Postmaster-General; therefore, whether the hon. the Postmaster-General was able to find the regulations or not, such must have existed. The argument of the right hon. member for Kingston, that the clause was a dead letter, was, therefore, answered, and answered by facts. It had turned out that this clause had been operated, and he was sure that many hon. members would recollect, with himself, that, within the last two or three years, some excitement was created in the daily Press of the country respecting the allegation that the old practice, which had been repressed, as was alleged, for some years, of transmitting immoral and obscene publications into this country, had been revived, and an attack was made on the present Government, on the ground that it had been remiss in the exercise of the powers with which it was entrusted, to prevent the recurrence of this abuse. The discussion went on, and it was said fresh orders were given. All this appeared in the public prints within the last two or three years. He concurred in the view taken by the hon. the Postmaster-General that nothing in the law, or in the law which it was proposed to amend, would give any local postmaster, or to any but the central authority, the power of opening a letter. There was, as far as he could see, in the Post-Office Act, power to open a letter.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: At the Dead Letter Office.

MR. BLAKE: Yes; and there was one power besides, which related to the case where letters were supposed to contain dutiable goods. The Postmaster-General was then authorized to instruct the postmasters to open them in the presence of the party concerned, under certain specific regulations made for that specific purpose. With this exception, the only power under which a letter could be opened was, when letters prevented from being delivered were sent to the dead-letter office, where regulations might be made for the opening of them, but nowhere else, and they were returned. This, of course, only mitigated, it did not destroy, the objection; but it mitigated it enormously, and it entrusted, under the most precise regulations, he apprehended, such discretionary power as it was now proposed to entrust to the postmasters throughout the country. It mitigated, therefore, very much, and removed a cause of objection, which would be a very serious matter, if it existed; but it left the question which the hon. member for Kingston had brought forward in a mitigated shape: namely, first of all, the power that was given with reference to letters, and, secondly, that, under the operation of the law, these letters might afterwards be opened and re-transmitted to the senders.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: It is quite true that, under the clause which has operated, the letters are returned to the dead-letter office before they can be opened; but the Postmaster-General cannot make distinct regulations for the stopping and the sending on of papers, without reference to their being opened, and without their being returned to the dead-letter office.

MR. BLAKE said it was now proposed that the Postmaster-General might make regulations for preventing the sending of these letters. Then they lay in the office, and letters which lay in the office undelivered, for any cause, under the operation of the dead-letter clause, the 38th, were sent to the central office; and, there, under regulations which the Postmaster-General might make, they could be transmitted by the postmaster to the Post-Office Department, to be opened there, etc. So that it was perfectly plain that, under the operation of this clause, these letters, which were transmitted by the postmaster to the central office, and this was all that he could do—would be, under regulations to be made by the Postmaster-General, there opened and returned.

MR. BOWELL: Does not that apply to letters already sent to their destination?

MR. BLAKE said that the clause related to:

“Letters or other articles which from any cause remained undelivered in any postoffice, or which having been posted cannot be forwarded by post.”

He presumed that this would not be made operative until a regulation was proposed to prevent a letter being forwarded by post. It came to the post-office and could not be forwarded.

MR. BOWELL: The postmaster must be the judge of what it is proper or improper to send.

MR. BLAKE: Subject to the regulations. The postmaster's discretion was limited by the regulations of the Postmaster-General; subject to that discretion he could stop and must transmit certain letters to Ottawa; this was the routine that would be pursued. The Act which the hon. member for Kingston said was novel in 1875, or, rather wide, was, in fact, passed in 1867; and this was not the first of it, for it was passed in 1839. It was a mere repetition of an Act which had been on the Statute-book for many years, and he dared say that the difficulty which the Postmaster General had experienced in finding the regulations, had been simply due to the fact that they were old. He supposed that they were of many years' standing, applied from time to time as occasion arose; and if there had been a very great neglect on the part of the Postmasters-General since 1875, in not performing their duty under the Act of Parliament, in not making these regulations, and in leaving this as a brutum fulmen on the Statute-book, let them multiply the neglect that had taken place between 1875 and 1878 by the neglect which had thus occurred from 1859 to 1875, and ascertain how great had been the neglect of the hon. gentlemen since that time.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Vous avez changés tout cela.

MR. BLAKE said he believed they had. He merely made these observations to remove what seemed to be an unfounded objection as to the extended powers proposed. He did not, however, think that this disposed of the real question. They were proposing, as the hon. member for Kingston had stated, a most serious change, and they must remember that the clause which had appeared in these Acts since 1859 had been confined to the power only of stopping publications, and what might be almost equally considered for this purpose a publication, post-cards, which, on their face, contained immoral or obscene matter. The difficulty which they had to grapple with, it must be confessed, was very serious. They had for a long time read of swindles perpetrated, and that a very large sum of money had been obtained from gullible people by these operations; and he thought it would be admitted that if some unobjectionable step, could be found out, it ought to be taken in order to do this. He held himself quite free to concur with any hon. gentleman in Committee on the Bill, if a more unobjectionable way than the present could be discovered, in this regard; nor was he prepared at this moment to say that they ought to adopt this clause in its present shape in Committee. He believed, however, that something ought to be done and some step taken to give the same power to protect the people of this country against transactions, which had not merely now been threatened, but actually been accomplished. One way had occurred to him by which some relief might be given—by authorizing the Postmaster-General, or the local postmaster, to print a stamped announcement on the envelope of what he believed was the true character of the transaction, and then let it go forward with this official announcement to the party to whom it was addressed; and if the latter was then cheated, why, it could not be helped. This, it seemed to him, would remove the objections taken with reference to the opening and the delay, to any serious extent, of letters. They ought to satisfy themselves about this, and provide some remedy and convenient mode for the purpose in Committee, and, therefore, he considered that this discussion would be more satisfactorily continued in Committee of the Whole.

MR. BLAKE.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: That is a good and friendly suggestion.

MR. PALMER said he quite agreed with the statement that this was a very great evil, which ought to be remedied; but, with reference to this Act, he had asked the hon. the Postmaster-General whether the former Act authorized the opening of letters. He was under the impression that it did not, and so he was answered; and, so he thought on reading the Act. He apprehended that, if this Bill were passed in the terms proposed, the Postmaster-General would have the power to make regulations and open letters, and he would state why he thought so. His hon. friend knew, of course, that the rule for the construction of Statutes was that a person was not only authorized to do what the Statute directed, but also everything that was absolutely necessary for the purpose of carrying out what the Statute directed. The fourth section of the Act—which had been altered—read thus:

“ Make regulations declaring what shall and shall not be deemed to be mailable matter, for the purposes of this Act, and for restricting, within reasonable limits, the weight and dimensions of letters and packets and other matters sent by post, and for prohibiting and preventing the sending of explosive, dangerous, contraband, or improper articles, obscene or immoral publications, or obscene or immoral post-cards.”

His hon. friend would see that this said nothing with regard to letters. True, it might be said that letters of a certain description might come within that general statement; but, if any Judge undertook to construe this Statute, he would say that, in order to carry it out, it was not necessary to open a letter. But, a letter was not a publication, and he apprehended that the Bill could not apply to a letter at all. Now, see how his hon. friend proposed to alter it. Sub-section 4, of the Post-Office Act, 1875, was amended by adding thereto, "and for prohibiting and preventing the sending or delivery by post, of letters, circulars or other mail matter, concerning illegal lotteries, etc." How was that to be done? By refusing to send any letter of the description here referred to. But, how could that be done, unless the letter was opened? He affirmed it could not be done. He affirmed that any postmaster would be perfectly authorized by this Act to open any letter. He would like, however, to hear from the Postmaster-General how he proposed to prevent the sending of a letter of a certain character unless it was opened.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: He makes a regulation to stop all suspected letters.

MR. PALMER: And, therefore, the postmasters must determine whether a letter is of that character or not. Is a postmaster to have the right of opening a letter which I send because he suspects it? I apprehend not. The passing of such a regulation would give the Postmaster-General power to authorize the opening of the whole correspondence of this country. If it is necessary, in order that the people may be protected from fraud, to stop certain communications, of course the difficulty must be met. I have not the slightest objection to approve of the legislation up to that point; but to give the Postmaster-General the power, in this free country, not only to stop, but to open any man's correspondence, is asking power which the people will never grant to this or any other Government.

MR. PLUMB did not think that any evil complained of in respect of sending letters was so great as this. If they once began in the direction proposed, there was no saying where they would stop. It was impossible not to see that, if a power of this kind was put into the hands of the Postmaster-General, it must be liable to very great and serious abuse. It was a very serious matter to empower a postmaster even to detain or intercept a letter, but it was still more dangerous to permit him to open communications passing through the post-office. There was great force in the remarks made by the hon. member for South Bruce, and he thought they met a difficulty in the way of limiting the extreme measures proposed by the Bill. That proposal would not, if adopted, do any harm in the case of letters which were not of a character which would justify their being stopped, or such as it was desirable, for public morality, to interfere with.

MR. HUNTINGTON said he quite concurred in the suggestion made by the hon. member of South Bruce as well as the member for Kingston, but he thought it would be better to discuss the matter in Committee, that alterations might be made in the Bill, if required.

MR. PLUMB said that, before the House went into Committee, he wished to say that the suggestion made by the hon. member for South Bruce would, to a certain extent, meet the difficulties of the case. Of course, there were great difficulties connected with the whole subject, but they must not do one wrong to cure another. He could not agree to power being given in any quarter which would lead to an interference with the sanctity of private correspondence to such an extent as to open letters, or to take them out of their proper course, or to detain them in any way except as dead letters. The power proposed to be granted was a very serious one, and might be attended with greater evil than that which it was intended to remedy. He heard an hon. gentleman on the other side say that certain lotteries had been prohibited in the United States, that in consequence a swarm of adventurers had found their way to Canada from that country, and that they were carrying on their nefarious business here. Now, he begged to inform the hon. gentleman that lotteries were still legalized in many of the United States; that there was no law of Congress or of general legislation which could affect questions of this kind. Every State was left to take care of its own interests in that respect, and he knew that in Louisiana and Kentucky lotteries were legalized. Indeed, some of those were Government lotteries and attached to their prospectuses were the names of some of the principal people in Kentucky. Of course, the lottery system was one liable to great abuse, and he had no doubt that, by checking the sending of such publications, a great many innocent people would be saved from risking or losing their money. The stoppage of improper publications and books was a different matter altogether. He trusted the Postmaster-General would accept, in some form the suggestion made by the hon. member for South Bruce, which he had no doubt could be put in a workable form, and thus the great objection which attended the Bill as it at present stood would be removed and the measure be made acceptable to the House.

MR. BLAKE said he was glad that his suggestion had received such general acceptance. What he proposed was that on the covering of letters, circulars and other mail matter suspected to be forwarded in connection with illegal lotteries, a warning should be stamped.

MR. PLUMB: Who is the stamp to be affixed by?

MR. BLAKE: By the postmaster in the district from which the letter is sent.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: There can be no objection to a person stamping a letter if the Postmaster-General says he suspects it to be of a fraudulent character.

MR. MASSON: The person who marks the warning on a letter may be a very inferior man to the one who receives it.

MR. MITCHELL: There is this difference: The person who receives a letter having no intimation may not know that there is any fraud in it; but a person who receives thousands of letters every day, who knows the circumstances, the localities, the people and the rumours about them, has some foundation on which to judge.

MR. PLUMB.

MR. HUNTINGTON: It will only be when a statement of facts has been submitted to the Postmaster-General that he will give authority for persons being warned. I dare say this power might obviate the evil.

MR. TUPPER: There is, no doubt, room for a difference of opinion as to how much good this will do, but I do not think it can do any harm. I think it entirely relieves the Bill from its objectionable character, and I do not now see the least objection to a measure of this kind, because, if it has any effect at all, as my hon. friend from Northumberland stated, it gives district postmasters an opportunity to warn persons who might otherwise become the victims of fraud.

MR. HUNTINGTON: I accept the suggestion for the purpose of meeting the views of hon. gentlemen, and if it should prove inefficacious, subsequent efforts of legislation may be necessary.

MR. PLUMB: When a person receives a warning of this kind, he may, if the letter evidently emanates from a fraudulent source, see the postmaster about it.

MR. BOWELL: The amendment suggested destroys altogether the object which the Postmaster-General or his Department had in view in suggesting a clause of this kind.

MR. MACKENZIE: No.

MR. BOWELL: It is a matter of opinion. The Prime Minister, as usual, says "no," but if he allows me to state my views, I think I can give some reason for the opinion I hold. The object I understand the Department has in view is, to prevent the circulation of immoral productions or letters which might induce people to purchase improper lottery tickets, by which they might be swindled. But by the adoption of the suggestion made by the hon. member for South Bruce, the object of the Bill is destroyed, because every letter, whether suspected or not, will be delivered to the person to whom it is directed. Besides these propositions from fraudulent lotteries, I have seen letters asking persons to purchase counterfeit money, such letters have been brought to his office by parties who received them, and it is just possible that, despite the warning stamped on the envelope, the person to whom a letter of this kind is directed will enter into transactions of that nature.

MR. MITCHELL: If a man chooses to pay no attention to the warning, just let him alone.

MR. KIRKPATRICK: Certainly.

MR. BOWELL: I take the object of the law to be to prevent temptations being put in the way of people who are likely to accept propositions of that kind; and, I repeat, that a man is just as likely to do so when an envelope is stamped with a warning, as when it is not. It seems to me that you might as well withdraw the Bill altogether, as introduce this amendment, because it will thereby be rendered utterly useless so far as the object which the Government had in view was concerned.

MR. HUNTINGTON said the hon. gentleman must remember that, to a transaction of this kind, there must be two parties—knaves and fools; the knaves sent the letters and the fools received them.

MR. BOWELL: The receiver may be as big a knave as the sender.

MR. HUNTINGTON said they did not want to protect a man who, with his eyes open and aware of a fraudulent attempt being made, should choose to risk his money improperly. Of course, the fool would lose his dollars, the object of the sender of a fraudulent letter being merely to gull him. It was with the view of giving him a warning that this Bill was introduced. We were face to face with a very considerable evil, and we desire to do the best we could to remove that evil. Objection had, however, been taken by hon. members to any interference with the sanctity of private correspondence, and it was with the view of obviating, if not altogether removing that objection, that this amendment had been generally adopted. He believed the plan suggested would have a very good effect, and, if any fool, after receiving such a warning stamped upon a letter by a post-office official, persisted in sending money, he deserved to lose it.

MR. BOWELL said no doubt that the hon. member for South Bruce was correct, so far as the evil was concerned; but no man would be deterred from entering into a speculation of that kind, because a warning was stamped on the envelope.

MR. BLAKE: It is not a speculation.

MR. BOWELL: It is. A man buys a lottery ticket in the hope of making money.

MR. BLAKE: It is a fraud. There are no prizes.

MR. BOWELL: But that does not meet the point. I think, if the Postmaster-General withdraws his Bill altogether, it will be more creditable for him.

MR. MITCHELL enquired whether, if a letter was not sufficiently stamped, it would be sent to the dead-letter office.

MR. HUNTINGTON: My impression is that it is the custom.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: If a letter is not sufficiently stamped it should be sent on to the parties to whom it is addressed, and a fine imposed.

MR. TUPPER said he was satisfied the Postmaster-General was wrong as to the law, but he was right as to the practice as he (Mr. Tupper) knew from experience of a great many cases, and it was desirable that the practice should be corrected. He remembered a case in which a letter partially stamped was sent to the dead-letter office and opened, and that took place in a great many cases; but as his hon. friend had stated, it was illegal, the letter must be delivered, and be subject to a fine. He wished to draw the Postmaster-General's attention to a practice in connection with the Post-Office Department that he thought was very unfair. He had a letter addressed to him in Toronto, where he resided, with a stamp on it of one cent which the law required to be placed on it; but in the meantime he had gone to Halifax, and had left instructions at the post-office that his correspondence was to be forwarded to that place. What he held was that the letter should be forwarded to Halifax, charging him with the additional two cents; but instead of that, the uniform practice, as far as he was acquainted with it, was to impose a fine of five cents on that letter. He did not know whether this was legal or illegal, but he held that it was unfair. If a letter was sent to him with a three-cent stamp on it, and if he went to Halifax, and from there to St. John, and from there to Toronto, having left his address at each place, that letter ought to come back to Toronto and no additional charge be made. He held that when a letter had a sufficient stamp upon it to pay its delivery at the place to which it was addressed, it should be forwarded to the address given. He held that it was manifestly unjust to make any further charge, and he doubted very much if it was not illegal.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that when this Act was being discussed, there was a provision that all letters without stamps, and all letters insufficiently stamped, should be returned to the dead-letter office. They had a long discussion here, and it was amended, it being pointed out by very many hon. members on both sides of the House that they could not expect people in the country to know exactly what was the postal rate or the weight, and that it was too bad that a man making a mistake in the stamping of a letter, having nothing to weigh it, should have his missive sent to the dead-letter office. The power still remained to forward letters not stamped at all to the dead-letter office, but those that were insufficiently stamped were sent on a penalty of twice the amount of the deficient stamp being imposed.

MR. MITCHELL said he was very glad that he had called attention to this matter, because it was one of very great importance, and to allow the present practice to continue would lead to serious inconvenience, not only to commercial men but to the whole of the community. He had no doubt what the practice was. He knew that the gentleman who attended to his business was very particular about putting the proper stamps on letters, and yet he had known instances where, after waiting for a reply to a letter for a couple of months, he had had the letter returned through the dead-letter office. He could only imagine from this that there must be some discrimination between one office and another.

MR. TUPPER.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that sometimes the stamps came off through their not being sufficient adhesive matter upon them, and then these letters had to be sent to the dead-letter office.

MR. MASSON said it was placing great power in the hands of the postmasters to allow them to open these letters. They might be ignorant men, or ill-disposed men, and might open communications with reference to political matters, or with reference to the lotteries for religious purposes.

MR. HUNTINGTON said the hon. gentleman surely did not think that there was any administration of post-office affairs, except by the Postmaster-General. A postmaster could not open letters until he had communicated with the Department and received instructions. As to the communications with reference to charitable institutions, the Act did not apply to them at all; although there ought not to be any charitable lotteries, if the hon. gentleman chose to construe the law that way. This provision, with regard to opening letters, only applied to glaring frauds. As to the construction to be put on the law with reference to the point raised by the hon. member for Kingston (Sir John A. Macdonald), he had not time to give it before six o'clock. He supposed the letter of the hon. member for Cumberland, which was sent to Toronto and afterwards to Halifax, was charged with two transmissions.

MR. TUPPER said that, instead of charging him three cents, they charged him five.

MR. HUNTINGTON said this was the first case of complaint of this kind that had come before him, and he would make enquiry into it.

MR. MITCHELL: I would like the hon. Minister to state what the practice, and what the law is.

MR. HUNTINGTON: I will read the law. The 19th clause of the Act is as follows:

"On all letters transmitted by post for any distance within Canada, except in cases herein otherwise specially provided for, there shall be charged and paid one uniform rate of three cents per half ounce weight, any fraction of a half ounce being chargeable as a half ounce; and such postage rate of three cents shall be prepaid by postage stamp or stamps at the time of posting the letter, otherwise such letter shall not be forwarded by post, except that letters addressed to any place in Canada, and on which one full rate of three cents has been so prepaid, shall be forwarded to their destination charged with double the amount with the postage thereon not so prepaid, which amount shall be collected on delivery."

I have no doubt the practice is quite in consonance with the law as I have read it; but, if a case arises in which the law has not been carried out, I shall be glad to consider it upon its merits, or the general regulations in the same way.

MR. CURRIER said that, at the time the Act was amended by Lieutenant-Governor Macdonald, then Postmaster-General, two cents more had to be paid on letters over half an ounce. He opposed this at the time, on the ground that the Department would gain nothing by this additional sum, because commercial men who had hitherto sent their accounts by post would not forward them that way, having the extra postage to pay; and it would also be a great inconvenience to the commercial men.

MR. MACKENZIE: You would make it a parcel delivery more than a post.

MR. CURRIER said he thought a one cent stamp should be sufficient for one letter.

MR. McCARTHY said that if one stamp instead of two was placed on a drop letter, it went to the dead-letter office; but in the case of another letter being insufficiently stamped, it was forwarded to the address and an extra charge made. He could not see why this distinction was made.

MR. BOWELL said he thought there should be a provision made to extend the clause, so that both letters, in a city or town, having insufficient stamps should not be sent to the dead-letter office, but that a fine should be imposed on their delivery, of double the amount of the insufficiency.

MR. HUNTINGTON said there might be an isolated case, but his impression was that it was not the general practice.

MR. TUPPER said that, evidently, the practice was against the law, and, therefore, it might be better to amend the law to make the practice uniform with it.

MR. MITCHELL said he would like to see an alteration made so that all letters partially paid should be forwarded, the extra charge being paid on delivery, and that was how he understood the operation of the law when it was passed.

MR. DAVIES said that people doing business in a foreign country suffered great hardship in consequence of this practice. In the Province of Prince Edward Island a great many young men went to sea, and it was not to be supposed that in country districts they would know the exact number of stamps to put on a letter to a foreign country, and yet if they did not put on sufficient, their letters were returned through the dead-letter office. Of course, the merchants could guard against this; but even they had letters returned sometimes. He considered it was a harsh regulation, and ought to be abolished, and that a partly-paid letter should be sent forward, and the balance collected at the place to which it was directed.

MR. PALMER said it was not only the weight of the letter, but in the country districts of the Maritime Provinces, the postmasters themselves did not know the rate for foreign countries.

MR. HUNTINGTON; We shall settle all this by the Berne conference.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

MR. MAC KAY (Cape Breton) said it seemed to him that the Post-Office Department was for the special purpose of forwarding letters to the parties to whom they were addressed, and that, having that end in view, it would be found more desirable that unpaid letters should be presented to the parties on payment of a fine, than that they should be sent to the dead-letter office. He had had a great many instances brought to his notice, in which letters, through the stamps having fallen off, or through inadvertence or carelessness on the part of some of the officials or others entrusted with them, had been sent to the dead-letter office and weeks had passed before the parties who sent the letters were made aware that they had not reached their destination. The existing law might be of service to the postal authorities, might give them a little less to do, but the inconvenience which resulted to the general public, he thought, should be more considered than the ease or comfort of officials of the Department. He was perfectly satisfied that the inconvenience and annoyance and delay that arose were such that, eventually, if not this Session, at any rate at some future Session, that portion of the Act to which he referred would be repealed. This portion of the law was not of very great moment to those residing near the Capital, as they were easily communicated with from the dead-letter office; but to those who resided at a great distance, it was a matter of much moment that they should be made aware, as soon as possible, that their letters had not reached their destination. He suggested that this clause should be repealed, and that, in its place, a merely nominal fine, by way of additional postage be charged; but that, at any rate, the letter should be forwarded to its destination without being sent to the dead-letter office. As a matter of course, certain letters addressed to foreign countries, on which, inadvertently or otherwise the postage had not been paid, should be sent to the dead-letter office. But when addressed to places in the Dominion, it was certainly very desirable that they should be delivered to those to whom they were addressed on the payment of a slight additional postage, and not be sent to the dead-letter office, thereby causing so much inconvenience, and, in many instances, loss and annoyance, the writer not being made aware of the fact for weeks afterwards that his letter had not gone on as he expected.

MR. HUNTINGTON.

Bill, as amended, ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

COLONIZATION RAILWAY BILL.—

[BILL No. 31.]

(Mr. Mills.)

SECOND READING.

Ordered for second reading read.

MR. MILLS said he supposed it would not be necessary to state the general provisions of the law and what it was intended to accomplish. In introducing the Bill, he had informed the House of its general features, and had stated in what way the Government proposed to assist in the construction of lines which had been incorporated by articles of association. Copies of the Bill were distributed several days ago, and hon. gentlemen had, no doubt, made themselves familiar with its contents. They were, no doubt, aware that the Bill presented a novel feature in this particular: It provided for the incorporation of railway companies upon certain conditions set forth, such as the subscription of a certain amount of stock, and the payment of a certain percentage on the stock so subscribed. This was a novel feature here in the incorporation of a railway company, but it was not a novel feature elsewhere. It had been the principle long recognized in the neighbouring Republic. Almost every hon. gentleman was aware that, after a railway was once incorporated, extending through a considerable portion of the territory, having acquired a considerable amount of local influence, it would always use that influence adversely to any corporation or any other railway company that was likely, in any way, to become a competitor for traffic or travel. Those who remembered the legislation which took place in the Province of Ontario after the construction of the Grand Trunk Railway from Toronto westward to Sarnia, and yet more recently for the construction of the Canada Southern from the Detroit River to the Niagara frontier, would understand how very strenuously existing corporations were likely to oppose capitalists seeking incorporation for the purpose of railway construction, and how very difficult it was sometimes to succeed in securing those charters of incorporation which might or might not be advantageous to those who sought them; but which, certainly, were of the greatest possible advantage to the country. This Bill proposed to provide for the voluntary incorporation of railway companies. There was no possibility, once the principle was adopted for railway companies seeking incorporation, to come to this House and to seek to influence it in favour of this or that line. There was, perhaps, no safer principle that could be adopted than this one, that if parties who had money to invest, and who believed they could make a profitable investment by building a road upon any particular line, they should be as free as possible to fulfil their intentions. No railway company could invest capital properly, unless it was to the public advantage. The money was only invested for the purpose of enabling the company to secure a dividend upon their investment by accommodating the public, either by furnishing facilities for travel or for traffic. If, then, a number of capitalists believed that, by the construction of a railway between two objective points, they could profitably invest a considerable amount of capital, which, certainly, they would not do unless there was a numerous population from which the road was to be supported, he saw no reason why they should not have an opportunity of doing so. They were, in this respect, the architects of their own fortune. They determined for themselves whether their investment was wise or unwise, and all this Bill proposed to do, was to give them an opportunity of determining whether they would invest their capital or not. Until very recently, the country was a hunting ground; it was without a civilized population; the questions with regard to the suitability of its soil for the purposes of agriculture, and the suitability of its climate, were unsettled questions. The emigration which had taken place during the past five or six years, had, in a great measure, settled those questions. All the Government proposed to do by this Bill was to give those who were seeking homes in the North-West an opportunity to find an outlet for the products of their industry. The Government did not propose to say to the population that they should settle in this or that particular vicinity, or they would be left without railway communication. The Government did not propose to say to the population: "You must go to this or that particular locality." They knew by the experience of the progressive settlement and development of the adjoining country, especially that section which lay west of the Mississippi River, during the past fifteen or twenty years, how largely railway accommodation contributed to the progress of colonization and settlement. Everyone who had looked at the census returns of the United States, during the present century, knew right well that, before a railway system was adopted, the settlement was largely confined to the vicinity of navigable rivers. The construction of railways had completely changed that characteristic of American settlements. There were, now, in the adjoining Republic, nearly 80,000 miles of railway in operation, which had contributed largely to the colonization and settlement of the country. He had looked into this question cursorily, and he would just call the attention of the House to the intimate connection which existed between the railway development of the United States during the past ten or twelve years, and the settlement of that country:

State of Minnesota—Area, 83,000 sq. miles. Population in 1850, 160,000; in 1870, 446,000. Miles of Railways in 1850, 157; in 1870, 1,092.

State of Iowa—Area, 55,000 sq. miles. Population in 1860, 644,000; in 1870, 1,200,000. Miles of Railway in 1860, 1,809; in 1870, 3,683.

State of Missouri—Area, 65,000 sq. miles. Population in 1869, 1,000,000; 1870, 1,721,000. Miles of Railway in 1860, 925; 1870, 2,000.

State of Arkansas—Area, 52,060 sq. miles. Population in 1860, 300,000; 1870, 500,000. Miles of Railway in 1860, 38; 1870, 300.

He might continue to cite a large number of States lying on the Mississippi River which would show a like result. But what he called the attention of the House particularly to was this fact: the intimate connection which existed between the progress of railway construction and the settlement of the country. The average increase of population and miles of railway per year, during these ten years, was as follows:—

	Average increase of Population per year.	Miles of Railway Construction per year.
Minnesota.....	27,000 .....	92
Iowa .....	51,900 .....	180
Missouri .....	65,000 .....	107
Arkansas .....	16,000 .....	20
Kansas .....	26,000 .....	146
Illinois .....	82,000 .....	166

Hon. gentlemen would see from these statistics that there was an intimate connection between the progress of railway construction and the progressive settlement of a country. Now, if it had been in the power of the Federal Government of the United States to have undertaken to determine where the emigration should go, instead of leaving it perfect liberty to flow in any direction in which it might be carried by the adventurous spirit of its population, by the energy and enterprise of the people, no such progress in the development and settlement of the country could have taken place. It would be found that the progress of any one State had in no way interfered with the progress of settlement of another. He had no doubt, whatever, that if our territories in the North-West were opened to the people, free to go in any direction they chose, settlements would rapidly grow in extent, which would form a nucleus for the development of all the Provinces. The only effect of undertaking to prevent people from settling where they chose, to confine them to particular localities, would be to exclude a large population from the territories, which would, no doubt, under different circumstances, settle there. Look at the population which had gone into those various States, averaging from 20,000 to 80,000 per year; according to which there was no reason why, during the next decade, the North-West Territories should not have an increased population of 50,000 per year. He did not think it an exaggeration to assume this, if no impediments were thrown in the way of settlement, if the people were permitted to seek homes where they pleased in this broad Dominion. If they were offered facilities for egress and ingress, and if the prices of their products were increased by affording them facilities for their transportation, he saw no reason why the rapid progress that had attended the settlement of the the Western States of the adjoining Republic, should not attend the development of the settlement of our North-West Territory. He knew it was said that it was important to avoid railway communication with the adjoining Republic. Under the existing circumstances, we must, for a brief period at least, have railways connected with those roads or not at all, and he did not think it would be possible, after the provision made by the late Government for the early construction of railways to the American frontier to make an objection of that kind. The whole experience of all countries was that the form of institutions was always stronger than individual opinions. Whether settlers came from Europe or from the Republic of the United States, it would be found that they very rapidly adapted themselves to our institutions and preferred them to any others, and instead of Americanizing our institutions, the tendency would be that they themselves would be moulded by the institutions we had established. If there were capitalists ready to come and invest their money in railway construction in our northern territories it would be very unwise to forbid them doing so; indeed, every opportunity should be afforded them. The policy of the Bill rested on the very obvious principle that the Government should give the people an opportunity of helping themselves; and, in a country which had free institutions, a spirit of self-reliance could not be better promoted than by offering inducements to settlers coming into the country, and to capitalists to invest their money. Under the provisions of the Bill, the Government were giving no money, but were giving land. It was undoubtedly true that there was a provision which authorized the Government, if it thought proper, and with the approval of Parliament, to convert the land into money and to pay that over to the corporation. But it was money obtained from those who settled in the immediate vicinity of the railways; it was not money taken out of the pockets of the people at large, but it was paid by those people who took possession of the land which had no value except for purposes of settlement. An opportunity was thereby given to immigrants to make those lands valuable, and at the same time shoulder their share of the general burdens of taxation. If railways could be built by the aid of public grants of land or money obtained by the sale of that land, the country could not make a better use of the public lands than thus to open them up for settlement, and to give capitalists the opportunity of investing money there. It was largely by the construction of railways that the lands of the North-West were to be made valuable; their value depended upon the facilities afforded for the transport of the products of the settlers. By constructing railways through the North-West, reaching to every fertile point where a colony could be established, we would largely contribute to increase the traffic and travel over that railroad, which must, for many years to come, be a single line from Winnipeg eastward to the shores of Lake Superior. The larger the settlement in the North-West, the greater the traffic coming from that country and the vicinity of Winnipeg, and finding its way to Lake Superior, by so much the more would the cost of maintaining that section of the railway be diminished, and in the same proportion would inducements be held out to a company for the construction of the Pacific Railway, if they found the traffic of the entire North-West was to find its outlet by that single line. It was not necessary to detain the House with a discussion of the reasons which had induced the Government to propose this measure, but he would merely say it was one in the interests of colonization and development of the North-West territories.

MR. MILLS.

Mr. RYAN said the principle on which this Bill was based was that, under the present circumstances of the Dominion, it was advisable to grant a portion of the public lands in Manitoba and the North-West Territories to aid the construction of such railroads as may be necessary to open up these lands. Since he had the honour of a seat in the House, he had always advocated this principle. The proposed Bill was not a mere experiment in legislation; similar Acts had been passed by other Legislatures and had been followed by favourable results. In 1850, Stephen A. Douglas, one of Illinois greatest sons had, after encountering strenuous and continued opposition, after failing in the Sessions of 1848 and 1849, succeeded in getting Congress to pass an Act granting 2,595,000 acres of land in the State of Illinois, to aid in the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad. At that time the population of the State was very small and was confined exclusively to the neighbourhood of navigable streams and waters. The whole centre of the State, through which the Illinois Central runs, and where the land grant was given to the road, was a howling wilderness, never trodden except by the hunter and the trapper. For 23 years prior to 1850, those magnificently fertile prairie lands had remained in the market unsold, although the Government price was only $1.25 per acre. The Government of the United States did not give the grant to the road in a continuous block, but in alternate sections, as was proposed by the Bill under consideration. Having thus given to the Illinois Central one half of the land along the road, the Government at once doubled the price of the remaining half and held it for sale at $2.50 per acre. No sooner was the construction of the road begun than an astonishing demand arose for these lands; the Government was compelled, in the public interest, to increase the price, and finally in 1857, the last of the Government lands had pass into the hands of purchasers at the price of $7 an acre. The lands held by the company also increased rapidly in value and were sold at 30, 40 and 50 dollars per acre. The results exceeded the most sanguine expectations of Stephen A. Douglas and the other advocates of the land grant. An ever-surging sea of population flowed into the State; well tilled farms, flourishing settlements, thriving villages, busy towns and stately cities sprung up as if by magic all along the road. A writer who has given considerable attention to the question, estimates the increased value of each acre within ten miles of the road at $7.50, on the average; or, in other words, the Illinois Central Railroad increased the value of the lands within ten miles of its track at the rate of $96,000 for every mile of its length. The example so happily inaugurated in Illinois had been successively followed throughout the whole of the Western and North-Western States. The progress of settlement and increase of population in these States had surpassed everthing in the history of the world. If the fertile plains of Manitoba and the North-West Territories were ever to be settled—and who could doubt their settlement,—it could only be effected through the instrumentality of railroads. The experience of the Western States had proved the locomotive to be the true pioneer of settlement in a prairie country. Nature seems to have adapted the prairie for the railroad; it was the natural road of the prairie, and could be there constructed for almost as small an amount as it took in some countries to construct a waggon road. In such countries settlement would not progress much beyond the sound of the whistle of the locomotive, because beyond that distance profitable farming could not well be carried on. At Portage La Prairie, where he resided, the distance from Winnipeg was 61 miles. The price of wheat at Winnipeg was 60c. per bushel. Freight from Portage La Prairie to Winnipeg was 50c. per 100 lbs., or 30c. on a bushel of wheat. After paying freight to Winnipeg there remained 30c. per bushel for the farmer. In a new country everything a farmer had to buy was dear, labour was dear, and the result was that farming would not pay under such circumstances. West Marquette could, with proper facilities for exporting grain, easily have raised half a million of bushels of wheat as the surplus for 1878; but as matters stood it was doubtful whether the surplus for 1878 would be greater than that of 1877, about a quarter of a million of bushels of grain. Our farmers have to compete in the grain markets of the world with the farmers of the Western and North-Western States. These States were competing with us for immigrants. Our farmer could not compete with the American farmer, unless his facilities for exportation nearly equalled those afforded to the American. We could neither expect to secure a share of the immigration from the east, nor could we even expect to keep the immigrants already settled in Manitoba, unless we could give them the necessary amount of railroad accommodation. Unless we were prepared to do so much, we might as well throw up the sponge at once, and allow Manitoba and the North-West to remain without settlers—a sealed book in the future, as in the past, until such time as we were prepared to adopt a different policy. He believed that some of the members were opposed to giving a grant of land to railroads. The scheme had some disadvantages. If we were in a position to give a grant of money instead of land, he would prefer it, because then the increased value of the land would benefit the country and not the corporation, and the danger of the lands being held longer than the true interests of the country demanded would be avoided. But we were not in a position to give assistance to the needed roads in money, and, as our lands were of no value without roads, and, as these roads would not be built without assistance of some kind, it followed that we would have to give lands. Two charters for local roads had been obtained from the Legislature of the Province of Manitoba. One was for the Manitoba Southern, a road proposed to run from Winnipeg to Rock Lake, in the south-western portion of Manitoba. This road would open up the Boyne and Pembina mountain country, one of the most beautiful and fertile portions of the North-West, into which an energetic and intelligent population was fast pouring. The other was for the Manitoba Western, a road proposed to run from Winnipeg, in the centre of the Province, to near Palestine in the north-western part of Manitoba. This line would open the fine country south of Lake Manitoba, where the Canada Pacific ought to have been located, and where the settlements were even now sufficiently numerous to afford a considerable amount of local traffic. A rumour had obtained currency—he knew not how, for it was a silly rumour—that he had opposed a land grant to the Manitoba Southern, and was indifferent about a similar grant to the Manitoba Western. He would take the occasion to state—and he challenged contradiction—that the rumour was untrue; he had always advocated the making of land grants to those roads. He had, on more than one occasion, urged the matter on the Government, and in the House. Even now, if he were permitted to choose between the benefits likely to flow from the Bill under consideration, on the one hand, and a direct land grant of 6,400 acres per mile, in favour of these two roads, he would choose the latter alternative, because he knew the direction of these two roads, and knew that they would open up precisely those portions of Manitoba which at present required to be opened, and that they would both be feeders of our own Canada Pacific, when built; but he did not know either the direction of such lines as might be built under the provisions of the Bill introduced by the Minister of the Interior, nor did he know what their effect might be upon the traffic of the Canada Pacific road. But, as he was not in a position to choose, he could only accept for his Province what it was in his power to get for it. Under the provisions of the Bill the Government would have, practically, the control of the construction of railroads in Manitoba and the North-West for some years to come; because it was evident that, while any portion of the country remained through which a road could be built so as to obtain a land grant under the Act, no other road would be built. He hoped the Government would make a wise use of this power. In no country did the different lines run upon the best natural and commercial lines; at some points competition was too keen; at others, not sufficiently strong. An engineer could, in any country, so dispose the same number of miles of rail that existed in the country as to be of more benefit to the public and more profit to the owners than was afforded by their present arrangement. He hoped the Government would keep the matter in mind, and see that those lines were chosen which would be most beneficial to the country and most profitable to the builders. There was one other point in connection with the subject to which he desired to call the attention of the Government: the question of controlling or regulating the freights on roads to be constructed under the Act. This subject had occupied much public attention recently, both in the United States and in Europe. A joint Committee of both Houses in England had also lately considered it; and, although no practical solution of the difficulties which surround the question had been aimed at, although the varying circumstances of the time and the natural features of the country through which freight was carried, render it impossible to hit upon a fixed or uniform freight tariff which would be at the same time fair to the public and to the railroad, yet he thought it only fair, when the State aided very materially in constructing a road, that some measure of power should be retained to protect the citizens from extortionate or unreasonable charges for freight and traffic. He believed that the hon. the Minister of the Interior was actuated by the best motives and a sincere desire to improve the position of the settler in Manitoba, in framing and introducing the Bill. But he (Mr. Ryan) regretted that, if the Bill passed in its present form, it would not, in his opinion, at all, or in any event materially benefit the farmers of his Province. The first lines needed, the ones at present actually needed, were a couple of short lines taking the same, or nearly the same, general directions as the Manitoba Western and Southern. Whether the Manitoba Western ran from Winnipeg or from Selkirk to the West was not of very great import. But under the provisions of the proposed Act, neither of these roads would obtain much advantage. Those portions of the Province through which these lines would run were, in a great measure, no longer owned by the Dominion. They had been mostly sold by the Dominion for cash or its equivalent, or they had been paid away by the Dominion upon various accounts and for the purposes of the Dominion; 1,400,000 acres had been given to the children of the half-breeds—thousands of acres, yes, hundreds of thousands had been located by half-breed scrip and military bounty warrants. These were strictly payments upon the national account made to extinguish the Indian title to lands not in the Province of Manitoba alone but also to lands throughout the whole North-West, and to provide for the safety against Fenian invasion and internal troubles as well in the Territories as in the Province. Wherever the alternate sections, which under the provisions of the Bill would fall to either of the local roads mentioned, had passed out of the ownership of the Dominion, the land would be absolutely lost to the road, because the Act did not, like the Act from which it was copied, reserve to the Government the right to give other lands in lieu of those so lost to the Company. It followed, that as these roads would, for a great portion of their length, run through half-breed reserves, and land located under scrip and bounty warrants, and sold for cash, they would, for those portions of their lines, derive no benefit whatever from the proposed legislation. This was unfair, and had the appearance of a blow directly aimed at the settlers of the Province, the men who, more than any others, were entitled to consideration and fostering care. If the lands had been given away to actual settlers under the provisions of the Homestead Act, then the case would be different, because the Province would have been benefited by being settled. But the lands had been given away in payment of claims against the Dominion, and it would be only fair that the Bill should reserve the right to the Government to give other lands to aid the construction of the road, when those which under the Act would fall to the lot of the road, had been so given away. Lands could be given at a greater distance, say within 20 miles of the road in the Province, or a greater proportion might be given outside the Province. Unless the Bill was amended in this respect, it would not be of any or at least of much use to the Province. The time allowed for the commencement and completion of roads under the Act was too long. When the Bill reached Committee, he would take occasion to introduce amendments to the objectionable portions, and he hoped the Government would not oppose the amendments.

MR. RYAN.

MR. BERTRAM said that, in introducing this Bill, the hon. the Minister of the Interior had discussed, at considerable length, the desirability of building railroads in a new country. He thought there could hardly be two opinions about the necessity of building these railways. The hon. gentleman had gone into some statistics in connection with roads built in the United States to show the necessity of this country aiding in building railways in our territory. He considered that the best policy which we could pursue would be to build a railway as fast as we possibly could from Duluth to Winnipeg, and then to assist in building as many as possible in that new country. It was not for the purpose of coinciding with the opinion of the hon. gentleman that he now rose, but to point out to the House what he considered was rather an element of danger in this Bill. It provided for the grant of lands of the Dominion to any railway company that might build a line in that territory. If they impartially considered the evidence which they now had respecting the public lands that had been granted in the United States to railroads built in that country, they must come to the conclusion that a great many abuses had arisen in this relation. The case of the Illinois Central Railway had been instanced by the hon. member for Marquette as one in which the policy of the United States, in building railways, had had a very beneficial effect indeed. If he remembered aright he thought that in 1872, during the election campaign of that year, this very case was mentioned by the hon. member for Kingston, who then made the statement that this railroad had received enough of the public lands of the United States to pay for the building of the road and that they had, at the same time, then within possession, as much land as would, if sold, build the line over again. It was against the possibility of a case of this kind happening in Canada that he thought it would be advisable, for them to retain control of these public lands. He believed, with the hon. the Minister of the Interior, that the public lands of the Dominion should be utilized in opening up our new territory; but, instead of granting these lands in fee simple to railway companies, the Government should retain control of the land and put a price upon it at which they should be sold to actual settlers. There was no doubt that, in the Western States, these grants of lands to railway companies had been the subject of great abuse; and that these companies, after a certain time, instead of aiding in developing the lands, had held them for a speculative purpose, and retained them in their possession; and that the settlers of the country in that territory had been obliged to pay an enormous price for them. He noticed in sub-sec. 2 of sec. 26 of the Bill, that the Government retained the power, if they considered it desirable, to keep these lands in their possession and give a money grant in their stead. In lieu of this provision being permissive, it, in his opinion, would be very desirable for the House to make it obligatory. Although the Government might set apart 10, 12 or 20 sections for the purpose—he did not care about the number—if the principle of which he spoke was kept in view, these sections should not be given to a railway company but should be controlled by the Government, an upset price put on them, and only sold to actual settlers. He desired, at this early stage of the Bill, to explain his views. This was the only point respecting which he disagreed with the provisions of the Bill, and he hoped that, before it passed through Committee, this matter would obtain the consideration of the Government.

MR. RYAN.

Mr. MITCHELL said he had listened with a great deal of attention to the remarks of the hon. the Minister of Interior in moving this Bill; to the hon. gentleman who more particularly represented the section of the country who would benefit by it; and to the hon. member for Peterboro' (Mr. Bertram), who was from the older settled portion of Ontario. He came from the section of the country that had helped to pay for the North-West Territories. The sum had been £300,000 stg, and they had also helped to pay for the opening up of, and the construction of, railways through it. He was amazed at the Government of the day submitting a measure of this kind for the consideration of this Parliament. When they remembered that there were, outside of the Province of Manitoba, nearly four millions of people, inhabitants of the Dominion, who had bought and paid for that country, who were to-day being taxed for the opening up of it and the building of a railway through it, and the making of communications professedly from one side of the country to the other, taxes which were paid and contributed by the older settled portions of the country, and when they looked at the nature of this Bill, and found that it practically took away the very lands which this Parliament and the preceding Parliament had held were pledged to build this Pacific Railroad, he was amazed at the boldness and recklessness of hon. gentlemen opposite, who here attempted an act of spoliation at the expense of the eastern portion of the Dominion, but for what purpose he would not just now say. This country was pledged to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. When it was proposed by the late Government, it was supposed that it would cost, according to the scheme submitted, 30 millions in cash, while they made reserves of land through that territory for settlement to the extent of 13,000 or 14,000 acres per mile, making in all about 60 millions of acres to be provided out of the fertile belt of the North-west Territories for the construction of this road. The late Government adopted that plan to utilise the resources of the country. They were willing to pay, as they did, £300,000 sterling for the purchase of this country in the first instance, and they were willing, in the eastern portion of the Dominion, to pay 30 millions of dollars, in all time to aid the construction of this road, and they were willing to look, as they had a right to look, and as their Government asked them to look, and as Parliament sanctioned this attitude—to the land of the country for the construction of the balance of the road. He would look to know what the policy of the Government to-day was with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway. He recollected well when the Government, of which he was a member, proposed to Parliament to adopt this scheme, the indications and statements thrown out from the Opposition, who forecast ruin to fall upon Canada in attempting such a monstrous outlay of public money to such an enormous extent on public undertakings in the way of railways. They predicted that ruin would come upon this country. The trade of the country would be destroyed, and the taxation on the people would be increased. Those gentlemen on the opposite benches of the House, who opposed this expenditure of $30,000,000, and the addition of 50,000,000 acres of land, and who were proposing to build that road, now, at a cost to the country of $200,000,000, were actually giving away the very lands, which were their security, under which that money could be paid. He did not know what the opinions of gentlemen from Ontario or Quebec might be, nor did he care. He had one thing to do and that was his duty. His duty in this case he conceived to be, to call the attention of Parliament to the proposed spoliation of western land. It would be unjust to the other Provinces to pass an Act like this, which would enable railway speculators and companies to absorb three-fourths of the whole western territory—that territory on which they hoped to construct the great Canadian Pacific Road. He yielded to no one in the desire to benefit the North-West, but he certainly could not approve of an

MR. MITCHELL.

Act such as that now before the House. He could not believe in a scheme which would enable speculators to absorb millions of acres of land, with which it was hoped the country might be recouped for the money it was now spending in opening up that great territory. They had a right to expect something better from the Government than that. If the Administration really desired to open up the country, by all means let them do so; but, why should they, by legislation of this kind, embarrass the resources of the country in a way which could never be retrieved. They were pledged to the construction of that Pacific road which, when the Opposition were in power, they set themselves against. Whenever they got control of the resources of the country, these gentlemen, who were so ready to condemn the enterprise, the genius, and intelligence of the men who preceded them, for seeking—as they declared—uselessly to expend money, now spoke with the other sides of their mouths, and tried to cripple the great resources of the North-West, which would have poured wealth into the coffers of Canada. Let him state the practical objections to the Bill. He believed that, under this Bill, any number of speculators might, by complying with certain requirements, construct from one to twenty railways, thus absorbing hundreds of thousands of acres of land. When the Grand Trunk Railway Company came, the other day, asking the privilege to connect with several other railways, and when the Canada Southern Railway came asking privileges,—what did his hon. friend from Chateauguay say? No man guarded the liberties, rights and privileges, more than he, where enormous powers were asked, and when these two railways came before the House, none were more careful of their privileges, or more zealous than his hon. friend. He (Mr. Mitchell) was very much pleased to see the great amount of caution the hon. member exhibited in endeavouring to prevent the railway companies getting the powers for general purposes which they sought. He recollected the words which the hon. gentleman made use of. He said: "Let us give them what is absolutely necessary for the purpose. Whenever they want anything further in the way of legislation, let them come and ask it, and if it is right, we will give it them." What was the policy of his hon. friend to-day? He was amazed to find that he was not the first man to take exception to the Bill. What should have been his line of policy as the controller, almost, of the Administration in matters of this kind? He should have said to them: "You are going to make thousands of miles of railway, under that Bill, if there is land enough; you are going to let the whole of that territory be absorbed by private speculators." As his hon. friend from Marquette had said, two lines of railway were certainly needed. Well, if application were made to that House for the necessary thousands of acres for the construction of these roads, he would be ready to give all possible aid; but a Bill like this, which gave power to private speculators to absorb the whole territory, was one of the most outrageous measures he had ever heard come before Parliament. He was astonished that the hon. Minister of the Interior should have dared to propound a scheme of this character, so extreme in its powers. A greater injustice to the other parts of the Dominion than the measure proposed, no man could conceive. He was not going to take up the time of the House very long in discussing this matter, but he wished to call the attention of hon. members representing the Eastern Provinces of Canada to the increased taxation which would be placed upon their districts by the proposed measure. While he approved of money being expended for the opening up and improvement of Manitoba, he was not prepared to give up that magnificent country to private individuals, for party purposes and for party plunder. He would tell hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House that, while he was prepared to entertain any fair and just claim which might be made, he would not submit to any such scheme of spoliation in the North-West as that which was intended. Throughout the whole Dominion, every scheme should be dealt with on its own merits, and, if it was found that the one or two railways referred to by the hon. member for Marquette were really required, he would be willing that the House should grant a charter for the undertakings, besides giving subsidies in money or land to secure them. He would ask hon. gentlemen opposite to consider the proposition he had just made, and then say whether they would take upon themselves the responsibility of this measure when they went back to their constituents next summer. The Minister of the Interior had said had hon. members on the Opposition side looked unfavourably upon any railway connection with the American Republic; but hon. gentlemen opposite had always been anxious, not only to have railway connections with the United States, but to maintain business, social and national relations with those on the other side of the line. His hon. friend had done the members of the Opposition an injustice when he made that statement. If the hon. gentleman would withdraw his Bill, and introduce a special measure giving powers to the two roads spoken of by the hon. member for Marquette, he would have his (Mr. Mitchell's) support. He would also agree to grant lands outside those lines, but he should certainly endeavour to record his vote against the Bill introduced by the Minister of the Interior. He (Mr. Mitchell) did not want to say one disrespectful word regarding the people of the North-West. He knew some of the difficulties and hardships they had endured in the settlement of that country; but they must not forget that only a few years had elapsed since they owned any part of that territory at all, having previously been under the administration of the Hudson Bay Company. They must not forget that the immense territory outside Manitoba was the heritage of the people of the Dominion of Canada at large. If, on the other hand, they looked upon it as the property of Manitoba alone, then do not let them ask Parliament to impose laws on the other Provinces in order that money might be squandered in the construction of the so-called North-West route; if they claimed the whole territory to make their railroads, let them raise the money themselves and make the necessary improvements and not ask the other portions of the Dominion, first to buy the country, then to spend millions in improvements, and then find their lands given away. He wished to call attention to one or two sections of this Bill, which seemed to him as rather of an extraordinary character. He would read the 26th Section of the Act for the information of the House:

“The Governor in Council may, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of any railway to be constructed under the provisions of this Act, reserve every alternate section of ungranted land by odd numbers, to the extent of ten sections per mile, five sections per mile on each side of the line of the railway, exclusive of the sections which, under the Dominion Lands Act, may have been reserved as school sections or may have been allotted to the Hudson’s Bay Company; and for any line or part of a line of railway west of the 102nd meridian of west longitude twelve sections per mile, and for any line of railway connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway and extending into the Peace River district, twenty sections per mile; and whenever twenty-five consecutive miles of any portion of any railway shall have been completed, equipped and in operation, the Governor in Council may convey to the company the land so reserved, or a part thereof, along the said railway so far as the same is completed, and for each consecutive ten miles of the remainder of the railway, the Governor in Council may, as the same may be completed, convey the lands so reserved along nine miles thereof to the company.”

Sub-section 2, said:

“Or, should the Governor in Council deem it expedient, instead of conveying lands to the company, the company may be paid the moneys received from the sales of lands on the line of, and within six miles of such railway, from time to time, until the company shall have received a sum not exceeding ten thousand dollars per mile, after which the company’s claims to any further aid from the sale of such lands shall cease; Provided always, that not more than ninety per cent. of the value of the actual work done shall be paid out of the proceeds of any land sales until the road is finished and equipped and in operation to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council; Provided also, that no agreement made by the Government with any company, or any Order in Council promising aid under this sub-section or the preceding sub-section, shall be valid or binding until it shall have lain before the House of Commons for one month without being disapproved, unless sooner approved by a resolution of the House.”

That really provided for the giving away of the very lands required for the construction of the Pacific road, and that not more than nine tenths—such was the enormous extent of the provision—should be paid out of the proceeds of land sales till the road was in operation. Now, what did that mean? It meant that those lands were considered of sufficient value to pay for the construction of these roads. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Ryan), speaking of the progress made by railroads in Illinois, said that the road was finished and paid for, while one-half of the lands were left to the credit of the road. Parliament ought, therefore, not to give away that valuable land in Manitoba in so reckless a manner.

MR. MITCHELL.

MR. RYAN: I may have stated what the hon. gentleman understood me to have stated, but I did not intend to say that. What I meant to convey was, that the Government, after giving one-half of the lands along the routes to the company constructing the line, will have the price for the other half so greatly enhanced that they will get much more for the one-half than they otherwise would for the whole.

MR. MITCHELL said he accepted the explanation. The position the hon. gentleman had taken up was that of the late Administration, when they advocated a policy for the obstruction of that railway. The late Government proposed that the whole responsibility of the country, in addition to the land granted, should amount to $30,000,000. The present gentlemen, on the other side, stated that the responsibility would be $200,000,000. They endeavoured to get a company to take it up, and if it had not been for the gentlemen on the other side, and some other influences that were at work, they would have got that company organized, and taken the land offered to them, and to-day the country would have had that railway, the territory would have prospered much more in settlement, and the country would be receiving a larger revenue. But, if this Bill came into operation, if the hon. gentleman was able to induce this House to pass it, and he (Mr. Mitchell) was afraid that he would, he had seen such a subservient following, all this would be changed. There was in that Bill the germs of the absorption of the whole North-West country, and they would not have a twentieth part left wherewith to build their Pacific railway. The result would be that the land having been absorbed, the railway would not be built. What would the Eastern Provinces say to such a measure? Would his hon. friends on the other side say they could justify such a course to their constituents; that their constituents would appreciate a measure like this, committing an act of spoliation over the entire country? Who had contributed to the purchase of that country; who had paid the Hudson Bay Company for it? The people. But they paid the money to have the country opened up and developed, and not to be given away in this wholesale manner. If the lands of the North-West were to be used in building railroads, and he approved of such a policy, then this section of Canada was entitled to a fair share thereof for their local railroads, such, for example, as the Miramichi Valley road. The people of old Canada bought the North-West and were taxed to pay to improve it, and they had a right to appropriate a share of the lands to promote the construction of roads in the East as well as in the West.

MR. CHARLTON said he considered this measure, notwithstanding the unmeasured denunciations it had received at the hands of the hon. member for Northumberland, was a statesmanlike measure and embodied a wise policy. It was essential to the development of the North-West that that country should be furnished with railways. The rivers flowing through that region all flowed to the northward, and thus this region had no natural highways to market as was furnished to the Western States by the Mississippi and the Great Lakes; and if railways were essential to the development of the Western States, they were ten-fold more essential to the development of the North-West. It was useless to think of opening up and settling this country without furnishing it with railway facilities. Now, it had been said that the American railways were subsidized to a greater extent than necessary; perhaps that had, in some instances been the case. Reference had been made to the Illinois Central Railway. At the time that road was projected, nearly the whole interior portion of the State was a wilderness; farmers living fifty miles from Chicago were in the habit of teaming wheat to the market often, when the roads were bad, at a cost of one-half the value of the wheat. The country had a few struggling settlements in the interior, but there was no extent of population. The country would never have been opened and settled as it has been, but for the construction of a system of railways of which the Central was the chief. That railway had populated the vast prairie region in the centre of the State, and had contributed in an important degree to make Illinois the third State in the American Union, with a population of over three millions. He recollected paying a visit to Iowa about twenty years ago. Then, it had but a few miles of railway, and but a sparse population, chiefly located along the line of the Mississippi; yet by means of a liberal railway policy, by subsidizing several lines crossing the State from east to west, it had suddenly risen into an important State, with a population of nearly, if not quite, 1,500,000. Some of the railways, had perhaps been subsidized more than was necessary, perhaps more land had been given than was advisable; but capitalists would not embark their money unless they had a prospect of a fair return, and it was folly to haggle with them about an unimportant difference when important interests were at stake. The United States Government held the alternate sections, which were reserved within the limits of railway land grants at double the price of lands outside the limits of railway grants, and more distant for railway communication. These lands were denominated double minimum lands and sold as readily at $2.50 per acre as other land did at $1.25; and the result of railway land grants, so far as land sales were concerned, was that Government had actually received as much for its lands as it would have been likely to have done if the whole area had been sold at the ordinary Government prices. Now, in the North-West, there were untold millions of acres of land. They were told by the hon. member for Northumberland that this was the heritage of Canada, that it had been bought by the people's money; but, in its present shape, of what value was this great wild, lone land to us? The question was how that land should be utilized, and for that purpose the Minister of the Interior had devised a Bill which, in its conception was admirable, and which, in his opinion, would, if carried out attain the object of populating this vast country. The Bill provided that these roads were to receive ten sections to the mile east of a certain point; twelve sections to the mile west of that point; and twenty sections to the mile in the Peace River region. The maximum rate but very slightly exceeded the minimum of the United States railway grants, and they must bear in mind that, if railways were essential to the opening up of Illinois, Iowa, and Wisconsin, they were far more essential to the opening up of the territory on the upper waters of the Saskatchewan or in the Peace River region; and Government could never properly utilize that country or get any adequate return for the money it had expended without adopting a policy of this kind. They had committed themselves to the building of a trunk line through that country; were they going to do that and make no provision for feeders to bring traffic to that line?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: We have a parallel line on each side of it.

MR. CHARLTON said this Bill proposed to open up railways in the North-West, and the Government cared not whether they ran east or west or north or south; they would run in any direction the wants of the country required. If it was necessary to construct lines through the Peace River valley, the Mackenzie valley, the valley of the Saskatchewan, or any other valley, these lines would be built there, if the aid offered by the Government proved a sufficient inducement to capitalists to embark in these various enterprises. They were told by the hon. member for Northumberland that this was an iniquitous Bill; that the Government were bartering away the heritage and rights of the people of this country. Why, under this Bill, the Government were providing for the growth of Canada as a nation; they were providing for peopling that vast region which now lay in a state of nature, and for developing its resources. They had already lost too much time in developing the resources of Canada. Under the administration of the hon. gentlemen opposite, this country had remained like a ship at anchor, without making progress. While the population of the United States had increased nearly twenty-five per cent. in the last decade, this country had increased only about twelve per cent. during the same period. The energies of this country were arrested until the hon. gentlemen went out of office, and it now devolved upon the present Government to people and develop the country with the utmost celerity. If they were to increase the prosperity of this Dominion, they must increase the number of its inhabitants. In the North-West, they had lands which would give sufficient sustenance for fifteen or twenty millions of people; let them get inhabitants for it as soon as possible. If they could pour 50,000 a year into it, those settlers would pay into the coffers of this country, in the shape of Customs duties, $250,000 per annum, and the Government would derive a far greater revenue this way than from the sale of these lands. The United States Government had never accounted their public domain a great source of wealth from proceeds of sales; they deemed it of more importance to get settlers on their lands than to gain a paltry sum for the sale of them. He held that the only policy to open up and develop these large tracts of country was a liberal railway policy; and that, while it was proper to exercise due caution, it would not be good policy to postpone the building of lines for the sake of saving a few hundred acres to the mile. They could not induce capitalists to embark in a speculation of that kind unless they offered liberal terms. He believed, with the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Bertram), that it might be well for the Government to retain in their hands the sale of these lands. This Bill gave the Government that power, and he thought it right that this matter should be left in their hands. There might be circumstances where it would be impossible to make an inflexible rule with regard to these sales, and, therefore, it would be better that the Government should have the discretion which the Bill gave. They were told these railway claims were going to absorb the whole of the North-West. Under no circumstances could they absorb more than half of it, even were parallel lines to run so close to each other that these grants joined, for, in that case, even the Government would still have each alternate section. Should the immense North-West become amply provided with local railways under the provisions of this Bill, so as to have abundant railway facilities for the country when it was all settled and opened up, even then the land grants, as provided by this Bill, would not absorb one-quarter of the territory, and they would leave the balance of that domain worth infinitely more than in its present position. Now, under present circumstances, it was questionable whether that portion of the Canada Pacific Railway, running from the Red River to Lake Superior, would have sufficient traffic to pay expenses.

MR. CHARLTON.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD:
Hear, hear.

MR. CHARLTON said the hon. gentleman cried "hear, hear," as if this was not his policy. He (Mr. Charlton) contended that, if they built that main line, to the construction of which the country was pledged by the right hon. gentleman, they must adopt a liberal policy for the purpose of developing the country; they must secure the construction of branch lines and feeders, and then they would have a sufficient amount of business brought to the main line to make it pay a dividend. If they were going to construct a main line from the Red River to Lake Superior, it was essential to provide it with business and traffic, which could only be done by the construction of lateral lines. He hoped hon. gentlemen would not look at this matter in any party light; he trusted they would not oppose the policy in order to gain a temporary advantage over the Government; but that they would view it from the broad standpoint of our national interest; that they would look, with statesmanlike forethought, to what were the real interests of Canada, and accord to this measure the generous support which it most certainly deserved.

MR. MASSON said he took it that the greatest penalty which could be inflicted upon an Opposition was to place them on the Treasury benches for a time. When the hon. member for Kingston (Sir John A. Macdonald) was in power, it was with the greatest difficulty that he passed his Pacific Railway Bill, owing to the obstacles placed in the way by hon. gentlemen opposite. The annexation of the North-West Territory, which had taken place, would have been entirely useless unless they had such a railway. He stated at the time that the annexation of the territory of the North-West was useless unless it were peopled, and the only way to people it was to build railways; and they must build railways in advance, for they could not expect the population to go in advance of the railways. These ideas were scorned and laughed at by the gentlemen opposite, but now they were in power, they were compelled to repudiate what they said then; they were obliged to follow the hon. the First Minister and vote as he commanded them. It was said that the lands of the North-West were not sufficient to build the Pacific Railway now that the country was threatened with railways all over that territory. He asked, how did the gentlemen opposite meet the measure proposed by the late Government, and whether they considered their present action consistent by the light of the course they then took? He asked hon. gentlemen if again they would obey the Prime Minister, and submit to the lash upon their shoulders, as they had so frequently done during the past four years? At the time the Pacific Railway Bill was introduced, hon. members said these lands were worthless, but now they were in power, they said they had enough land to pay 90 per cent. of the whole railroad. He submitted to them whether the grand policy of the hon. member for Kingston was not the proper policy. His policy was to build the Pacific Railway with the lands and a very small subsidy of money. That was a proper policy, a grand policy, a policy adapted to a country like ours. The Government were not prepared to build the road with money, but their extensive territory would enable them to build it with the unoccupied lands. That was not the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite. He remembered the hon. the Minister of Public Works saying that that policy was a bad one which gave away our lands that we should keep, and build the railway with money, giving the lands as free grants to settlers. What was this Government doing to-day? By the last section of this Bill they provided for the sale of those lands, in order to throw them into the hands of speculators. His hon. friend the right hon. member for Kingston, when in power, had a great difficulty. There was no money to build the road, but there was plenty of lands. He found a company ready to build it, on obtaining a grant of lands and an amount of money which the Government proposed to raise by the sale of its lands, at an upset price of $2.50 per acre. His hon. friend opposite rose against that policy, said it was a policy which would stop immigration, that no immigrant would pay that sum for the lands. Yet, to-day, this Government offered to do what his right hon. friend had then proposed to do, and which they had then so strongly opposed. The hon. the Minister of the Interior had stated that hon. members on this side of the House might have some objection to the law, that they might object to the railway connection with the United States. That was a strange accusation to be cast on the party led by his right hon. friend. The hon. gentleman should, himself, remember that the Pacific Railway Bill introduced by the right hon. member for Kingston, had in it a provision to build the Pembina Branch to connect with the United States, which the Government were building at the present moment. But what the Conservative party complained of was, the great subserviency displayed by the Government to American interests. They objected to the mongrel system of public works and water stretches, which would drive immigration and trade from our country to the United States, and it was not proper that the trade of this country should go by the United States. This was the only objection made to the ideas of the hon. gentleman. The hon. member for Marquette wished to have lands elsewhere distributed to the railway if none could be found on the route. He (Mr. Masson) was very much afraid of that policy. He remembered the time when the hon. gentleman had said there were not, in the North-West Territory, more than 50,000 to 60,000 acres fit to be given to the Railway Company. Was it not rather cruel on the part of the hon. member to advise the Government to take lands outside the roads they were to build, outside the land which, really, belonged to the Pacific Railway, in order to build those branch lines? The hon. member, thereby, placed the Government under the obligation to say they had been really mistaken. They had made too gloomy a picture of the country they had acquired, and were obliged, to-day, to abandon their previous policy. This country must have the Pacific Railway, and would have it, despite the ill-will of the hon. gentlemen opposite. It could only be had by building the railway with our lands, and in no other way. The Government would never be justified in taking any lands which were necessary to build the Pacific Railway, and to give them to another line of railway. The Bill gave too much power to the Government; it gave them the power to deal with all the lands in the North-West Territories as they chose, to give them to any company they pleased. Why not do as was ordinarily done—allow the incorporation of companies in that country, and let them come to Parliament to obtain grants of money, and not give them an indemnity before obtaining the consent of Parliament. He had no objection to the plan of the hon. member for Marquette. He thought the Government should enquire closely into that subject and see whether it would not be proper to subsidise a company to build a railway south of Lake Manitoba, and no hon. member on his side of the House would vote against giving a fair subsidy in money and land to such company, and thereby aid in the settlement of Manitoba. But there was a great distinction in allowing the Government to grant a subsidy to a line which had received the approval of Parliament, and the power of granting lands to any company they chose. But, it was possible, after all, that this land subsidy was only a pretence, that, on the whole, the Government would, eventually, be induced, under pressure—perhaps political pressure—to change the nature of the grant, and transform that land grant into a money grant, and, consequently, the roads advocated by some of their friends would really be built by money out of the Dominion. This would be the result of the whole policy. Not having enough money to build our own Pacific Railway, this House could not consent to the Government selling lands in order to build any railway which would delay the building of the Pacific road. The hon. member for North Norfolk seemed to forget the 18th clause which read :—

MR. MASSON.

“No company shall be incorporated under the provisions of this Act for the construction of any Railway having the same general direction as the Canada Pacific Railway or any branch thereof, at a nearer mean distance than forty miles.”

If the Government wished to make the House believe that they did not intend going on with the Pacific Railway, they could not have taken a better means of doing so than by inserting this clause. The idea of granting a company power to run a railroad parallel to our line for three or four hundred miles, within forty miles mean distance of it, was really preposterous. It appeared as if the Government wanted those companies to complete the Pacific Railway instead of building it themselves. There would be no use building the Pacific Railway if a company would be allowed to run their line forty miles distant from the line of the proposed Pacific Railway. The hon. member for Marquette thought the distance too large ; he (Mr. Masson) did not think it large enough. No line should be built at a distance from the Pacific Railway which would interfere with the traffic of that road. A distance of forty miles was only twenty miles on each side of the road, which was a great deal too near. He did not believe this Bill was a proper one. It gave too much power to the Government, and would stop the construction of the Pacific Railway. This Bill was the greatest condemnation which the hon. gentlemen could cast upon themselves; it proved that they had deceived the country when they had stated that the lands were not worth enough to build the railway.

Mr. SMITH (Selkirk) said he could not at all agree with the hon. member for Terrebonne. The hon. gentleman had spoken of the proposition of the right hon. member for Kingston as being one and the same with that of the hon. the Minister of the Interior. It was very true that the Pacific Railway Bill of the former Premier contemplated a land grant out of which the railway was to be built. But it must be remembered that the conditions were altogether different. That railway was to be extended from Ontario to British Columbia. It was to pass through what, certainly, was a wilderness, what was admitted on all hands to be a wilderness, and it was very certain that a grant on that portion of the territory north of Lake Superior would never be of any value to any company in the prosecution of the work, so far as getting money for the land was concerned. What was proposed by the hon. the Minister of the Interior? It was proposed to give a land grant for colonization roads which were to be built within that portion of the territory. There were, already, settlements in Manitoba extending up as far as Little Saskatchewan, or one hundred miles beyond. The subsidy proposed was land to the extent mentioned in the Bill, or money up to $10,000, which would be sufficient to meet some 80 per cent. or 90 per cent. of the cost of the railway. Certainly, if they were to build railways through this country, they could find lands of equal value to those within the fertile belt. So that the conditions were entirely different. With regard to the distance of forty miles, it must be between the branch of the Northern Pacific and that of any other railway passing in the same direction, and certainly the provision was a good one. At the same time, he would, certainly, not shut out the intervening country from the advantage of the railway. He thought the hon. the Minister of the Interior, in a telegram which he had sent to the people of Winnipeg, a short time ago, correcting a misapprehension on their part that they would be blocked out altogether from having a railway, mentioned that those who had received lands south of Lake Manitoba, would be required to pay, according to their lands, $2 or $2.50 per acre for land on the line of the railway. He thought the hon. the Minister of the Interior might go further than this, and, also, give a subsidy to any railway running in the central portion, where lands, in large quantities, could not be found on the line of the railway, by taking a certain quantity of land out of the other portions of the fertile belt. On the whole, he thought that, with some amendments to the Bill in Committee, it would enable railways to be built, passing through the best part of the country, and be a very great benefit to settlers. The hon. member for Terrebonne had said that forty miles would be too short a distance. There was a line running near the Red River and another line running from 30 to 50 miles distant from that road, and also along the Red River, and both of those lines, even at the present time, were paying very well, notwithstanding the fact that the country was not fully settled. He saw no reason why the same results should not be obtained in Manitoba and the North-West, where the conditions were equally favourable, and where the land was equally fertile with any in Minnesota or in any other part of the continent. With some trifling amendments, which might be made in Committee, the Bill might be rendered very beneficial to the people of the North-West, as well as to the Dominion at large.

MR. SMITH.

MR. POPE (Compton) said the Bill appeared to be one giving extraordinary powers. Any number of men complying with the provisions, and paying 10 per cent. to the Government, would have the right to build railways, if they were 40 miles distant from each other. He had been, hitherto, and was now, a strong advocate for building a railway through that country. It would tax the powers of the Dominion to their full extent to build the one railway provided for under the agreement entered into with British Columbia and Manitoba, and their first efforts must be given to carrying out those agreements. The construction of a Pacific Railway was part of the agreement of the Union of British Columbia with Canada, and the country was bound, before entering into any large engagement or making any other disposition of public lands in the North-West, to carry out that engagement. The power to build railways to any extent, provided they were 40 miles from each other, was one which should not be placed in the hands of any people without the consent of the Government being obtained to each scheme, and he did not observe that they retained any authority in the Bill. If parties deposited five or ten per cent. on the cost, nine-tenths of the money would come from the Dominion Government, either in cash or in bonds. It was improper that the Government should thus place at the disposal of any number of parties a large portion of the public domain, especially did he think so when he remembered that, as soon as the late Government proposed to appropriate a large quantity of public land for the purpose of building a railway through that country, hon. gentlemen opposite raised a howl through the Dominion, and, night after night, in the House, declared that they were about to prevent immigrants going in, and were placing the country in the hands of speculators. He could well understand that, if the Government were about to build the Pacific Railway—and he hoped they were, for its construction was in the interests of the country—that assistance should be given in the shape of public lands; but, he could not understand why, under the present Bill, Parliament should be deprived of the right of considering each charter, and deciding what subsidy should be granted to each road. It was impossible to understand why a different policy should be adopted for the North-West in that regard than that which had been found quite satisfactory in the old Provinces. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Smith) had said this was a different question from that of the Pacific Railway, for the latter road would pass through a country where the land was comparatively worthless. Undoubtedly that was true, to a certain extent, but the hon. member had forgotten that the land subsidy, under the old Act, could be given in sections where it was fertile.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said it would be impossible to find the necessary quantity of good land near the Pacific Railway.

MR. POPE (Compton) said he agreed it might be impossible to find it in close proximity to the railway; but it could be taken anywhere in the fertile belt and where the land was good, and the argument of the hon. gentleman, therefore, consequently, fell to the ground. The hon. member for Norfolk had said he could build a railway from Red River to Lake Superior, and would pay the cost in money. He (Mr. Pope) favoured the payment of the cost in money, if it were necessary, but that was no reason why they should throw away the public land instead of endeavouring to recoup themselves from its sale. That was the policy of the late Government, which declared to the House and the country that they were about to give $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land towards the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but reserved every alternate block, so that these lands, when sold, would recoup the Government for the money payment. Hon. gentlemen opposite, however, declared that the Government would never be able to sell the land, that settlers would be prevented from going into the country, that the public lands would be placed in the hands of speculators, that the railway would cost $200,000,000, and that $30,000,000 would only commence it. He was, however, anxious to see the North-West settled, and it was necessary that we should have an additional population to aid in sharing the public burdens, of which they had no reason to complain. The money had been expended in legitimate works, not in war; the country had received value for every dollar spent in public works and improvements and in the purchase of the North-West territory, and he was not afraid or ashamed of the debt of the Dominion. When the debt came to be paid, he hoped Canada would have a population of 50,000,000 instead of 4,000,000, and that the immigration would be such that the burdens, though heavy, would be diminished per capita. While it was important that the country should be settled, it was also necessary that railways should be constructed, for when it cost one-half the value of wheat to convey it to a market, the settlement of the country could not be expected to progress. Hence the whole power of the Government should be directed to the building of one line into the North-West country. It was idle to talk of sending settlers into that region unless facilities were provided for getting their produce to market. In the present position of settlement in the North-West, it was difficult for farmers to do well. He quite agreed with the opinion expressed that the North-West could not progress except railway communication was afforded. The American people did not commence by building railways in every direction, but ran a railway from the great centres of New England into the western country, and afterwards developed the territory by running other lines through it. Under the present Bill, it seemed as if we were beginning at the other end, and proposing to build several lines instead of pushing one line through the country. It might, however, subsequently appear that the hon. the Premier would submit a scheme by which he would push through a main line as rapidly as possible, and when he submitted a feasible scheme of that kind, and one within the resources of the country, he would be glad to give the hon. gentleman his assistance and vote.

MR. MACKENZIE: I am afraid the hon. gentleman will say, like a certain sour Scotchman, that he was open to conviction, but he would like to see the man who could convince him.

MR. POPE (Compton) said he was a little sceptical in regard to the hon. Minister proposing a very good scheme, but still he entertained some hope, for they were educating him to a proper sense of his duty.

MR. HUNTINGTON said he was glad hon. members opposite were willing to assume the role of educators, and there was no position in which they could so well follow the role they wished to play as educators of public opinion, as to remain on the Opposition benches. If they were, however, to be schoolmasters, they must be patient, and must not get excited, for the role required some degree of abstinence on the part of those playing it, in order to be fraught with good results. It was a very easy matter for hon. gentlemen opposite to criticize the Bill. They, like all great men of great intellect, great experience and great powers, were not tolerant towards those who, compared with themselves, were intellectual pigmies. It had been said that the Bill was undigested; but it was not every one who possessed the faculty of hon. gentlemen opposite for drawing Bills. It had been alleged that the Bills drawn by the Government were crude, and little thought had been bestowed upon them, and that it appeared to be necessary that some vigorous and powerful intellect should take hold of them; but let the patient educators continue patient, and, perhaps, the power of thought and expression might be developed on the Ministerial side of the House, and the advantages accruing from the life of the schoolmaster, which they were leading, would become more apparent in a little while. Speaking of the merits of the Bill now before the House, it appeared to him that the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) had made as good a speech in the interest of the measure of the Minister of the Interior as he need require. That hon. member at one time occupied a position in the country which had aided to educate his mind on the question of immigration and the development and expansion of the country which they all hoped was in store for it. The hon. gentleman had pictured the future of the North-West and its development, which could only result by people going into the country; but he recommended that they should not be thrown in too quickly, and that the energies of the Dominion should not be wasted in building side lines. So, because it had been suggested that the hon. the Minister of the Interior was becoming a little educated, he having come to have more faith, they were not willing to make converts. The schoolmasters should be satisfied, as they on the Ministerial benches were during twenty years, to see their principles grow, although administered by those in whom they had not confidence. It appeared that the people who should settle on one or the other side of the Pacific Railway were to have no such facilities until this road was constructed, and yet, because his hon. friend the Minister of the Interior showed a disposition, not only to afford facilities to those who were there, but also temptations for those who might be brought to come there, the hon. member for Compton said that his hon. friend (Mr. Mills) did not sincerely desire to push on the building of the Pacific Railway. Why did it follow that because one road was to be built, another must be discontinued? There could be nothing simpler than the provisions of this Bill. He was not going to say whether it was well or ill drawn. If it were ill drawn, the country would have the advantage of the experience of their schoolmasters, who would have the opportunity in Committee of licking it into shape and of invoking Lindley Murray if necessary, or the experience of hon. gentlemen opposite in building Pacific railways and developing North-West Territories, if they found this to be advantageous. What appeared to him to be the advantage which was calculated to give effect to the views of his hon. friend from Compton was this: that it afforded opportunity to men who were willing to invest their capital in the faith which made them

MR. POPE.

believe that the settlement of the country was to follow their endeavours to open up these lands, and it would tempt them to carry their views into effect and provide facilities for the accommodation of the population which they hoped to throw into the country. The only objection made to it by hon. gentlemen opposite was, that the resources of the Dominion would be wasted in attempting to develop this country, this beautiful country, which hon. gentlemen opposite told them they had shown the supporters of the Government years ago, was so full of promise, and so likely to add to the resources of the Dominion by its development. Hon. gentlemen opposite were also afraid that the Government would divert the resources of the country from the construction of the Pacific Railway, by developing this country. Why, he did not think that this sentiment should be pronounced by any member of the House, not even by the hon. member for Vancouver, who was generally so patriotically disposed in the direction of having the money of the country applied for that purpose. It did not follow that, because half a million, or a million, or five millions or more were spent on the one side in subduing the forest and bringing the land into cultivation and production, the country was weakened with regard to its powers of carrying out and accomplishing that other and that great undertaking. Let hon. gentlemen depend on the fact that there could be no better system, with regard to the North-West or any country, for the development of its resources and the education of the people up to the responsibilities of citizenship, whether it were in the enjoyment of a great product for their labour or in the exercise of their rights, than throwing upon them the responsibility of helping themselves. And what this Bill did, was to afford to those who went into the country, either with brawny arms or capital, an opportunity simply of trusting both in the investments they had made and in their appreciation of the results which were likely to flow from them; and, therefore, it threw upon this young community there—and the more it grew, the more powerful it would be—which they hoped to see growing rapidly, the responsibility of taking care of itself as it had opportunity of doing so.

MR. PLUMB said he had not had an opportunity that evening of hearing the reasons why a Bill of this kind had been introduced. It seemed to him that its title ought to be changed. It ought to be called a Bill to kill the Pacific Railway. If ever a measure had been brought forward which had upon its face, he would not say the intention, but certainly the object of killing that road and preventing it from being built, this Bill was it. In the first instance, it provided that any association of men might form companies to build railways in the Province of Manitoba and the North-West. They were required to subscribe $12,000 a mile, and pay ten per cent. of that subscription; they then were to have, as the road was constructed, 6,400 acres of land along its route, up to the 102nd meridian. Beyond that they were to have 12 sections a mile, which added 1,280 acres more; and beyond that, for any lines connected with the Pacific Railway, and extending to Peace River, they were to have 20 sections a mile; and also, after the first 25 miles of the road were built, the land to which they were entitled was to be conveyed to them; and for every ten miles beyond this, they they were to be entitled to have the land so reserved along nine miles thereof conveyed to them. The Government reserved the right and privilege to give a bonus of $10,000 a mile instead of the land; and roads running in the same general direction as the Pacific Railway were not to be built within 40 miles of that road. It was understood that the present direction of the Pacific Railway would pass to the north; and most of the settled land, at any rate, lay to the south of this route. This scheme seemed to him like one which would take away from the Government the best inducement that the Dominion had to hold out to contractors to build the main line. It was putting into the hands of those who were building railways under this scheme the best of the land. There was no doubt that the gentlemen who would undertake to build railways under this Bill, would see to it that they laid out their lines in the most fertile sections of the North-West. They would take the best lands which the Government could now hold out as inducements to contractors to build other sections of the Pacific Railway which had not these advantages. These lands were the capital for the building of this road. The Opposition had always insisted that the lands of the North-West were the means by which the great highway would be constructed. This seemed to be a Bill to provide for parting with this capital. He could look upon it in no other light; and he thought that, the more it was examined, the more would those who were really interested in it and who were paying attention to these matters, see that, whatever might have been the motive for bringing it in, certainly the result would be that the best lands would go to those railway schemes, if they were feasible at all. At any rate, the Bill intended that this should be done; and they would then be deprived of the means of building the Pacific Railway proper. The great inducement for the building of it through other parts of the country where the lands were less valuable, would be, of course, the land grants which would be given to the contractors. There would be great objection to giving out contracts for sections of the railway through the best lands without at the same time providing for the construction of the other parts, for they would be more difficult to build, and there would be less inducement to offer to contractors. The Government had already undertaken a very large and important portion of the line between Red River and Kaministiquia. Part of this line was unfinished. They had already undertaken to pay a very large sum of money for this line, and it seemed very hard, in view of this line being constructed, that a scheme should now be brought forward which—if it meant anything—would take away the business from this line; for it was not pretended, and it could not be pretended, that these lines would be feeders to the main line of the Pacific Railway. If they were to be built, as he supposed they would be, in the southern part of Manitoba, far below the Pacific Railway, they would form feeders to the American lines with which they would communicate, or with the branch line to Pembina. That was one difficulty, and it stared them in the face; it was a very great one, and it regarded the roads to be constructed which would take the produce of that country across the American frontier, and on which an enormous duty was levied. This duty would have to be paid. The settlers must ship their grain along the line of these roads, which must necessarily tend to the American frontier; and when it arrived there, whether willing or not, they would be obliged to pay the large impost which the American Customs levied on Canadian produce. He had no doubt that this objection did not occur to the hon. the Minister of the Interior when framing this Bill. The hon. gentleman on all occasions and under all circumstances insisted that the consumer paid the duty; and that, even under these obvious circumstances, sending produce across the American frontier, and the obvious condition of the farmer, who was endeavouring to find a market by crossing the line, the consumer paid the duty upon the grain. Of course, to carry out the hon. gentleman's argument—and it meant nothing unless it was carried out to its full extent—the farmer in Manitoba, lying alongside of the grainfields of Minnesota, sent his grain across the line, and the consumer absolutely paid 20c. per bushel for the sake of getting it there, when he could get wheat on his own side of the border for the same price without paying the 20c. duty. This was the argument which the hon. gentleman advanced respecting the tax on the farmer's produce; and, therefore, he had no doubt that, in framing this Bill, the hon. gentleman would not see the objection. They were told by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) that the American system of land grants for the building of railways had been generally adopted in the West. There could be no doubt about this, or the question that the population followed the construction of railroads in the Western States; but it was well known that nearly all the best lands of the West had been, by means of railway charters, absorbed and monopolized by rings of railway contractors and speculators. He believed that this Bill would establish the same condition of things in the North-West Territories and in Manitoba. He objected, upon principle, to the building of railways by contractors. He considered that roads placed in the hands of contractors to be built were imperfectly built. They were not well constructed and they were not such roads as we wanted in this country. He could also say that, by this scheme, in view of the present price of iron and labour, the bonus that would be paid by the Government would nearly build these roads, and give them, free of cost, to the contractors who were fortunate enough to go there to build them. The great objection to the whole project, as he viewed it, was, that it would indefinitely postpone the building of the great line of the Pacific Railway, and would, in so far as that was concerned, prevent us from carrying out the pledges which this country had made, and the engagements we were under for the construction of the line across the continent as rapidly as was consistent with a non-increase of the burdens of the people by taxation. The Bill would take away the very means and capital that ought to have been employed for that purpose. They had already seen that there was a half-hearted policy adopted respecting the construction of this railway. The hon. Minister who had brought in this Bill had declared that he was not in favour of pledging the country to that work. The hon. gentleman was made to say—and he presumed that this was authentic—that “he was opposed to the policy of constructing a continuous railway to the Pacific as wholly beyond the resources of the country.” And the hon. gentleman, by this Bill, took away from the country its main resource for the purpose of carrying out that policy. The Pacific Railway policy of the Government did not seem to have been a success. Every Session some new plan was offered, and some new scheme was devised for its construction, so far as the Government had ventured to go into the building of it at all. In the first instance they had the idea of using the magnificent water-stretches. We were to go to Lake Shebandowan, and from there to reach the line of the Dawson route, and then to go out to the North-West Angle, and from there to Red River. This scheme was abandoned, and the following year they heard that the road was to extend to the Lac des Mille Lacs and Port Savanne; but it was not intended, they were told by the Government, that the road was to terminate there for a number of years. A line was to be built from Red River this way, and to extend to Rat Portage, and it was to terminate there; and, in the meantime, they were informed that they would utilize the route from there by way of the lakes and rivers, and this at very little expense between those two points. But, singular as it might seem, the line did not stop at Port Savanne.

MR. MACKENZIE: Would it not be convenient to postpone this discussion until we come to that subject?

MR. PLUMB said he thought that this discussion was pertinent to this scheme. If it meant anything, it meant a change of the railway policy of the Government in respect to the North-West; that the lands which were to be appropriated to the building of the Pacific Railway were to be diverted from that purpose and put in the hands of railway speculators, who were to build colonization roads in Manitoba and the North-West; that the main line of the Pacific was to be indefinitely postponed; and that, instead of the Government leaving these lands for the benefit of settlers, it was intended to place them in the hands of railway contractors and builders; and the people who wanted to go to Manitoba and settle would have to treat with the men who owned the lands along the lines of railway. This was what the Bill meant, if it meant anything. The settlement of a country like Manitoba must follow the lines of railway, when the portion now settled was left behind. The very instant that railways were built, those who came to settle would seek these lines and settle near them; and the railway contractors who would own these lands would either get their own price out of the settlers, or the Government would pay the former a subsidy of $10,000 a mile, which, with 10 per cent. of the capital paid in would be almost sufficient, with the present price of iron and material, to build the roads, thus giving them to these companies for nothing. He could watch the eagerness and interest with which this legislation was looked upon by those who were ready to pounce upon these lands under these railway schemes; and no doubt there were people now waiting to see what success this Bill would meet, in order to lay out lines on the very best lands in Manitoba. He could understand too, how this would utterly destroy any hope they had of carrying the other line through the country and of securing, as was necessary to ensure the existence of the Dominion as a whole, the final completion of this great line between the Lakes and the Pacific Ocean, which would tax all the resources of our people, and which would require everything we had in the way of lands in order to facilitate its construction. He could see that this scheme was to delay the building of the main line and to prevent its being carried out; and he believed that the more this matter was discussed, the more clearly would this result be apparent to the members of the House. He had no doubt the Government had the power to pass the Bill; in fact, with the majority they had to back them, they could carry anything through the House. He thought it was the duty of every hon. gentleman who desired the success of the original Pacific Railway scheme to lift up his voice against this measure, which would murder and strangle it, if the House did not refuse to become a party thereto. The measure was one open to many objections, and, if passed, would have exactly the result predicted by hon. members of the Opposition.

MR. TROW said he had hitherto been under the impression that the Bill would commend itself to every member of the House. The hon. member for Northumberland had shown his total ignorance of the matter when he stated that the disposition of these lands to railway companies would absorb all the land in the North-West. If the hon. gentleman took a walk to the western block of the buildings, and looked at the great map there, he would find that there were over 180,000,000 acres of arable land in the North-West Territories. The railway companies would not absorb more than from 12,000,000 to 13,000,000 out of the 180,000,000 acres fit for cultivation. He knew of no country which required railway communication more than Manitoba and the North-West. Feeders were required in every direction to intersect the arable lands, which extended for thousands of miles, and the moment that companies undertook to construct railways, a tide of immigration would set in. Companies of that description had done more for the Western States of America than all the emigration agents the Government could have engaged. These railway companies had now thousands of agents in Europe, and it behoved the Government, if they wished to attract from Europe the surplus population going to Australia, to take advantage of the present opportunity. Now was the time to people those fertile prairies so easily cultivated. The State of Minnesota which, twenty years ago, contained only a handful of inhabitants, now possessed a population of at least two-thirds of a million. The lands in our North-West Territory, are more arable, and better adapted for farming purposes than Minnesota. That great country was not a mere strip of land, and feeders were required in every direction. He would have great pleasure in recording his vote for the Bill which was precisely what was needed. No company or corporation would undertake to build a railroad in a country unless they had some encouragement, and no better encouragement could be given than grants of land which would increase in value the moment the railway was in running order. Immigration would at once set in from the United States, because they had got to the limit of their arable land in the Eastern States, where, moreover, manufactures were depressed. With such encouragement held out by this Government, thousands, and tens of thousands, of people would flock to that grand territory from the United States.

MR. PLUMB.

MR. SCHULTZ said that nothing which fell from the hon. Minister in introducing this Bill could fail to be grateful to the ears of anyone from Manitoba. The hopeful prediction of an increase in our population from four millions to forty millions in the near future, and his general estimate of the country, was to be attributed to his visit to the country last summer. Seeing was believing; and there could be no doubt, from the utterances of the Minister on the present occasion, but that he had come back deeply impressed, not only with the resources of the country, but with the necessity of their immediate development. Seeing that this was the case, it was all the more to be regretted that he had not succeeded in imbuing his colleagues with the same hopeful estimate of the resources and future of the North-West. That they had not been so convinced was shown by the Estimates for the expenditure of this year. If his hon. friend the Minister of Finance had believed this, we would not have found the amount to be expended on immigration cut down so as to almost completely shut off the possibility of European immigration; and if the Premier had at all shared his conviction, we would have found some effort made to place under contract the 180 miles, or "missing link," between Lac des Mille Lacs and Rat Portage. Till some vigour was infused into the effort to connect Manitoba direct with Thunder Bay, the people of the North-West would be loath to believe that such a Bill as the present one was likely to be a panacea for all their grievances. It was quite true that the route through the United States might be made to relieve the present situation somewhat, but not if, as rumour had it, a lease of the Pembina Branch for a term of years was contemplated to parties connected with the notorious Kittson Red River line. To do this was simply to create a monopoly on land instead of the monopoly by water, which now existed, and to throttle the best interests of the Province. He feared, from the reported utterances of a Minister of the Crown in the other branch of the Legislature, that there was little hope of through connection by the main line of the Canada Pacific with Thunder Bay for five or six years to come, as he was reported to have said that it was the intention of the Government to give the building of the 180 miles to some company which would undertake it. What Manitoba and the North-West wanted first was an outlet, then new roads; and, if the Government would aid local roads to meet the requirements of the Province, and push the main line of the Canada Pacific eastward, people would be satisfied. The Bill introduced by the hon. Minister, he would, of course, support, that was, if the 28th clause was amended in the direction indicated by the hon. member for Marquette. Without that change, the Bill would be inoperative, as far as Manitoba's interests were concerned; and, he trusted, generally, that when the Premier brought down his Pacific Railway policy, it would be found that he had given up his reckless, useless expenditure on the Fort Frances Canal, and would devote that money and other funds that could be applied, to the completion of the through route from Manitoba to Lake Superior.

MR. ROSS (Middlesex) said he was surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite, who had so long claimed to be the party of union and progress, should now offer such opposition to the proposals of the Minister of the Interior. Those hon. gentlemen claimed in the House and elsewhere all the credit for bringing about the federation scheme. They said it was originated by their wisdom, by their statesmanship it was developed and matured until the various Provinces were united, as at present. Now, however, when a scheme was proposed for the colonization, the settlement and the development of one of the Provinces of this Dominion, they placed obstacles in the way, questioned the bona fides of the scheme, and, in various ways, attempted to throw discredit on the plans of hon. gentlemen on the Government side for the development of the material resources of the country. He was still more surprised to find his hon. friend from Niagara so exceedingly loud in his denunciation of the present scheme. That hon. gentleman came from a country whose common motto was, "no pent-up Utica contracts our bounds." One would have supposed that he would have inherited more or less of that spirit of enterprise which prevailed on the other side of the line. Here, however, when a scheme for the development of a large tract of country was under consideration, he did not, by any means, act up to such a motto, nor view the question from such a standpoint. To build that railway was a foregone conclusion; the faith of the Dominion was pledged to it. It was the will and wish of every hon. member in this House, that that road should be built, and, as quickly as the resources of the country would permit; and it was necessary that the lands through which it would pass should be as thickly populated as possible. Now, if there was one thing more than another calculated to give this population, it was a liberal system of railways. The hon. gentleman forgot that a number of railways would all contribute to the success of each other. For instance, in the Province of Ontario they had two large railways, the Grand Trunk and the Great Western. Had it contributed to their destruction to have railways throughout every part of the Province? Did the hon. gentleman not know that the greater the number of tributary lines and feeders a railway had, the greater would be the area drained for its traffic, and the greater the amount of business done. If they could drain the North-West by colonization railways, they would merely be constructing tributaries to the Pacific road, and helping the Dominion over any loss that might accrue from running that railway. His hon. friend forgot the vast area of the North-West. His knowledge of literary matters or the shortcomings of hon. members on the Government side was infinite, but his imagination was very limited and contracted when he came to consider the great area of the North-West. The territory of the Saskatchewan was three times as large as the Province of Ontario. Would the hon. gentleman say that two or three, or a dozen lines of railway through the Saskatchewan country would tend to the destruction of the Pacific Railway? But the hon. gentleman went further. He said that, after this development, the trade would go to the south and the Pacific Railway would not get that trade. He was at fault again, for the natural current of the trade was in almost a contrary direction. The shortest line towards the water was always taken, other things being equal. The line would be more than four hundred miles shorter than any line to the south; and this fact alone would secure for our Pacific Railway any trade that might be developed by any lines built in the North-West. It was also said that these railways which might be added were purely local railways, and a comparison was attempted to be drawn between these and the Pacific Railway. The two schemes were entirely different: the one was a local railway for the purpose of colonization, and the other was a national railway for national purposes. They were told that the line of policy now proposed in the resolution before the House was precisely the same as that adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite at the time the charter of the Pacific Railway was passed in the House, and that it was then opposed by the Liberal party. He did not quite understand the charge made by hon. gentlemen, but he did not suppose that it could be substantiated. If they investigated the subject carefully they would find whether this statement had any foundation in fact. He failed to find, by any amendment or resolution, any objection to the appropriation of land for the Pacific Railway in the objections raised and the amendments proposed by the Liberal party at that time. They were not opposed to the granting of the land, but to the mode in which it was to be granted, and also some other provisions of the Pacific Railway charter. The first resolution moved in amendment was by Mr. Mackenzie, and was in these words:

MR. ROSS

"That the route to be adopted for the Pacific Railway shall be subject to the approval of Parliament, so as not to leave at the discretion of the Governor in Council, the final determination of the location of a railway, towards the building of which it is proposed to give $30,000,000 of the public funds and 50,000,000 acres of the public lands."

There was no objection here to the appropriation of land, but there was an objection to the line being located by the Governor in Council. The next resolution in amendment was proposed by the hon. the present First Minister, and in this objection was taken to the scheme because the contracts for the construction of the road were to be approved by the Governor in Council and not submitted to Parliament. The next resolution, proposed by Mr. Young, was with regard to the disposition of the fifty million acres of land; and in this, objection was not taken to the appropriation, but to the mode of disposing of these lands. Later on, when the Bill was before the House, there were various objections taken. One was with regard to the eastern terminus, and another, moved by Mr. Mackenzie, seconded by Mr. Dorion, was referred to the alternate lands held by the Government, and the provision made for disposing of those lands. When the Pacific Railway Bill was before the House, it was held by the hon. gentleman now leading the House that it would be but fair that the unoccupied or alternate lands held by the Government should be disposed of as the Government chose, without reference to the company building the line. He (Mr. Ross) considered this in itself was a sufficient guarantee to the people of this country that these lands would be disposed of in such a way as would best secure the settlement of the country. He had shown that the policy of the hon. gentlemen on his side of the House, as regarded the appropriation of lands, was what it had always been. This was the Liberal policy, a policy which held that, whatever this country possessed, whether money or territory, should be made subservient, not to a company or to individuals, but to the great interests and wants of the country. His hon. friend the member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) seemed to think these western lands were the particular property of the Maritime Provinces. They were not, however, the property of any Province; they were the patrimony of the people of this Dominion, and it was the duty of Parliament to use these lands for whatever purpose would tend to the development of the country. If they referred to the policy of the United States, they would find that, since 1852, 186,000,000 acres of land had been given by the American Government for the construction of various railways, and the result of that was, perhaps, more largely than anything else, to develop and settle the United States. If they had stopped in 1820, and had not adopted this policy, instead of a population of 45,000,000 they would have had one under 30,000,000. Now, we had the same opportunity as the Americans had possessed, of disposing of our lands for the purpose of encouraging immigration, for the purpose of bringing to this country a consuming population that would add materially, not only to its resources, but contribute to its revenue and give that return to which we were entitled. His hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. Trow), who had explored a considerable part of this vast territory at his own expense, told them the population of that country was very sparse. But what would be the effect of the railways? What had been the effect of building railways in Ontario and the Western States? The green ridges of the Indiana line fetched $13.98; on the Burlington and Missouri, land sold for $11.70; on the Illinois Central, $11.40; the Chicago, Rock Island, and Pacific, $7.53. The prices in the Western States varied from $4.15 to $13.98, the average price being $7.04 on the whole extent of land held by railway companies and the Government. This large tract of territory in the North-West belonging to Canada, capable of sustaining twenty-eight millions of population, was lying waste; and hon. gentlemen opposite must know these lands would, for all time to come, be valueless and useless, except as preserves for the buffalo, unless dissected by railroads; and the Pacific Railway would be an intolerable burden to the country unless they threw in a population which would create a trade for the maintenance of that railway. He thought the Bill was one for which the Government deserved particular credit, and he trusted the opposition to it would be just as feeble and futile as that already presented by the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb).

MR. WALLACE said he remembered when the building of the Pacific Railway was characterized as the mad scheme of a mad Government, and when hon. gentlemen opposite contended that the resources of this country were inadequate to the building of such a great road. He was pleased to find that they had changed their opinion, and that they now considered the resources of the country, not only adequate for the building of the Pacific Railway, but amply sufficient for building hundreds or thousands of miles of railway besides. They then decried the resources of this country; but, now that they were in office, they looked upon everything with a different eye, and believed the country was able to accomplish any undertaking, no matter how grand. He was opposed to the principle of this Bill for two reasons. First, he did not believe that it was in the interest of this country that we should create railway monopolies. He believed that railways were the highways of commerce, and that they should be owned and run by the Government in the interests of commerce. He thought we already had, in this country, an example of the evil results of railway monopoly. The companies did not look to the interests of the country, but to their own interests; and he did not blame them. What did they find was the case with reference to the great undertaking, the Grand Trunk Railway? Although it might be of immeasurable value to this country, it really did comparatively little to promote our interests. Although the people of this country gave fifteen millions of dollars to assist in the construction of this great work, yet they found that road was carrying the produce of the American farmers to market cheaper than it carried the produce of Canada. They found that, although the Dominion had invested this large amount in the work, the company was acting more in the interest of the United States than of this country. And yet the Government was about to create more monopolies. He did not say that the Grand Trunk Railway had been an injury to this country; on the contrary, he held that it had tended greatly to the advancement of this country, and the money paid to assist it was well expended; but he held that it would be far better if this country had found the whole of the capital and controlled the whole line in the interests of commerce. He opposed the Bill also on this principle: that he believed it was not advisable, in the interests of the people of this country, to put under the control of any individual or corporation so much of the public lands as was contemplated by this resolution. He believed that if it would pay a corporation to build these railways, it would pay the Dominion of Canada. He might be told, as they were often told, that these companies were the best emigration agents; that they would promote the settlement of the country. He believed they would; it was to their interests to do so; but he believed they would only do it to a certain extent. There would come a time when they would hold their land to get good prices for it. The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) had stated that the railway companies in the Western States were obtaining, on an average, $6.50 per acre for land, thus showing that these companies were making tremendous profits out of the land given for the construction of those railways. He asked again, if it was profitable to the interests of individuals to build these roads and sell the land, why was it not in the interests of the people of this country that the Government should do that work. He held that the Government were neglectful of their duty, that they were recreant to the interests of the people of this country, in not building the railway and utilizing the lands for that purpose. There was not an hon. gentleman on this side of the House who would, for a moment, oppose the opening up and settlement of the great North-West. That was what they had always contended for. They had always thought it should remain the property of the Hudson Bay Company or any company rather than this country should undertake to own it, unless they were going to utilize it in the interests of the people. The Government should build the great through railway. What was the use of building feeders to a trunk line before the trunk line was built? Build the trunk line, and then build the feeders which would bring trade to the trunk. It was incredible the Government should say the Opposition were opposed to progress. Hon. gentlemen on this side of the House were pledged to build the road, and their scheme had been characterized by hon. gentlemen opposite as the mad scheme of a mad Government. The hon. member for North Norfolk had said that it was utterly beyond the resources of the country, that it would entail on the country such a load that it would be destruction to the interests of this country; yet, after the utterance of these sentiments, these gentlemen said they were bound to build this road, and were anxious to do so much more than hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. Were they honest and consistent in what they had done, compared with what they were now doing.

MR. ROSS.

Bill read the second time.

AUDITOR-GENERAL OF CANADA.

RESOLUTION.

House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the following resolution:

"That it is expedient to appoint an officer to be called the Auditor-General of Canada—salary not to exceed thirty-two hundred dollars per annum."

(In the Committee.)

Resolution ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolution reported.

DECKLOADS LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

[BILL No. 62.]

(Mr. Smith, Westmoreland.)

FIRST READING.

House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the following resolution:

"That it is expedient to provide, that so much of the Act of the Parliament of Canada, passed in the thirty-sixth year of Her Majesty's reign and intituled an Act respecting Deckloads as would make it unlawful for any master of a ship, at a certain season to carry live stock, on or above any part of the upper deck of such ship be repealed; and that the words 'any cargo of any description to any heighth exceeding three feet above deck,' in the second section in the said Act, shall not include or apply to live stock."

(In the Committee.)

MR. MITCHELL said he would call the attention of the Minister to the fact that a relaxation of the rules relating to live stock on deck might possibly threaten the safety of passengers. He would ask him whether he had seriously considered the effects this permission would have, and whether there had been any limitation of the quantity of cattle. The measure was an unwise one in the interests of the cattle and in the interests of the passengers. He had consulted one of the largest importers in the Dominion, and he expressed the opinion that vessels should not be allowed to carry cattle on deck. At all events, it was unwise to allow cattle to be carried on deck during an inclement season of the year; and moreover, on the score of humanity, the cattle should not be exposed to bad weather.

MR. SMITH (Westmoreland) said that, up to 1st October, cattle could now be carried the same as any other deck cargo, and the restriction only applied from that date to 16th March. He was satisfied, from information gathered, that the lives of passengers would not be placed in greater danger thereby. The structures on deck to hold the cattle would be of a permanent character. He had letters on the subject from the Harbour Master and other officers in Montreal, from whence steamers carried cattle. The Deckload Law passed in 1873 did not contemplate the building up of the cattle trade with England.

MR. MITCHELL: No such trade then existed.

MR. SMITH said that, while the Dominion Deckload Law was applicable to all descriptions of cargo, the English Act did not apply to cattle cargoes. In the United States there was no restriction whatever, and, as the Americans were shipping cattle, it was necessary that there should be no restriction which would hamper the action of the shippers of this country in competing with them.

Resolution ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolution reported, read the first and second times, and agreed to.

MR. SMITH (Westmoreland) introduced a Bill (No. 62) To amend the Law respecting Deck Loads.

Bill read the first time.

ONTARIO MARITIME COURT BILL.

[BILL No. 50.]

(Mr. Laflamme.)

THIRD READING.

House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

MR. MITCHELL said he objected to the character of the legislation proposed in the Bill, which would apply to vessels belonging to the Maritime Provinces that were in Ontario waters. The measure proposed to adopt certain regulations of the Court of Chancery, which were not generally known. Suppose he was asked, next summer, by one of his constituents who happened to have a ship on the Lakes, how such and such a condition of things would be affected by this legislation, he would be obliged to reply that he did not know. "Then you ought to know, for you passed the Act," would be the rejoinder. The Bill gave powers to this Court, based on those of the Court of Chancery of Ontario, and he did not know what these were. He had never seen the Ontario Statute to his knowledge.

MR. LAFLAMME said that this provision merely related to the execution of judgments. This Court was established with a limited jurisdiction, extending in no manner beyond the Province of Ontario. This provision simply gave to the judgments of the Court the same mode of execution as was attached to the judgments of the Ontario Court of Chancery. In that Court, this was exactly the same as in a Common Law Court, and, consequently, there was no room for any misinterpretation, and no need for embodying in this Act all the regulations which concerned the issue of the writ. According to the law affecting the Vice-Admiralty Courts in England, there was no process of execution. They could not obtain the satisfaction of the judgment, save by issuing an attachment against the person or vessel; and this Bill secured the ordinary remedies of a Court of Justice of Common Law, with regard to the process of execution alone. The execution was merely taken out in the ordinary way, and this was what the Bill intended to provide.

MR. SMITH.

MR. MITCHELL said that vessels from Quebec or the Lower Provinces entering Ontario waters were, while in them, subject to Ontario laws with regard to collisions, etc., and hence it was important for ship-owners in those Provinces to know what the laws of Ontario, in this respect, were. Nearly one-half of the whole carrying trade of the Lakes was done by Quebec vessel owners. This being the case, it would be much more convenient to have the powers given in these laws stated explicitly in them, as, otherwise, lawyers familiar with the Ontario Statutes, must be consulted to discover their tenor. If the powers were so stated, he could interpret these laws himself. Of course, as the hon. gentleman explained that this provision was simply introduced with regard to the execution of a writ, that removed considerable difficulty; but he could easily understand how, if they were giving extended powers to this Court, this would be a very objectionable form of legislation.

Bill ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

House adjourned at
Ten minutes after
Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, 29th March, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

RESOLUTION PROPOSED.

MR. MACKENZIE moved that Government business shall have precedence immediately after routine proceedings on Mondays for the remainder of the Session.

MR. MASSON said he was sure the First Minister would see that it was not proper to take this day away from them, in view of the fact that, if the Session lasted about four weeks more, the private members would have, in all, only about eight hours for private business—only about two hours each week. He appealed to the hon. gentleman to know whether, if he (Mr. Mackenzie) was in their place, he would not require the Government to give him Monday next. He felt certain that, if they were in the hon. gentleman's place, they would grant such a request immediately,

MR. MACKENZIE said, of course, he had but one object. The length of the Session was a matter of comparative indifference to the Government; but the discussion had been so varied and ample and upon so many topics, that almost the entire time for the past seven weeks had been so occupied, and it was in the interest of the members generally that they should have more time for the Government business, which must be done. There were no Private Bills before the House to take up any time whatever, there was actually no private business for consideration, except Notices of Motion, most of which, he thought, would require very little discussion. He would have no objection, as Monday was allowed for Notices of Motion, to grant the members Monday, and take Wednesday next in its stead.

MR. MASSON said the Government should, previous to taking Monday, take Saturday. There were very important notices of motion on the paper; a great many of the hon. gentlemen opposite had such notices down; and, if not for the Opposition, the Government should grant the request made, on behalf of its friends. If the Government business was not more advanced, this was not the fault of the Opposition. They had pretty thoroughly discussed the Government measures, it was true; but, the bringing down of Bills had nothing to do with the debates on them, and the hon. gentleman well knew that the Intoxicating Liquors Bill had not yet come before the House; and the Bill for the better auditing of Public Accounts had just been introduced. Consequently, the hon. gentleman would see that he would meet the wishes of the House if he would yield the point in question gracefully. He would, however, have no objection to the Government taking Monday week.

MR. LANGEVIN said he hoped that the hon. gentleman would accept the proposition of the hon. member for Terrebonne.

MR. MACKENZIE: I will make an arrangement to take Wednesday next week and the Mondays afterwards.

MR. LANGEVIN said that the result of this would be that Public Bills and Orders would not be reached.

MR. HOLTON said he would simply point out that they had reached a stage of the Session when debates on Notices of Motion were of little practical importance. The change proposed by the hon. the First Minister would leave the whole of the afternoon of Wednesday for Notices of Motion, and they could then go through the whole list which simply looked to the production of papers. At this stage of the Session, the House really should not desire lengthy discussions on motions for papers. There would be ample opportunity for legitimate discussion on the Estimates and the various measures before the House, but if they were to bring the business of the Session to a close within any reasonable time, it was quite obvious that the Government must have possession of days enough to advance the necessary business of the country and bring it to a conclusion. All the notices of any practical value to any one could be got through with on Wednesday afternoon, if the motion of his hon. friend were adopted.

Mr. MITCHELL said he had listened with some degree of surprise to the motion made by the hon. the First Minister, to take away a day from the people, because on this point he agreed with the hon. member for Terrebonne, and considered that the Opposition represented the people on this occasion.

Mr. HOLTON: I think that the majority are generally supposed to represent the people.

Mr. BOWELL: Not in Quebec.

Mr. MITCHELL said that the hon. the First Minister proposed to take from the people the right of free discussion. At present, they had only Monday and two hours on Wednesday for this purpose. The hon. gentleman said that, practically, there was no private business before the House, but the notices of motion numbered eighty; and did hon. gentlemen put them on the paper for nothing; for mere show?

An Hon. MEMBER: Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL: For mere electioneering clap-trap? This might be the case with hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. It would take six days to get through with these notices of motion; yet the hon. gentlemen sitting on the Government side of the House proposed to take away the only day when they could bring up matters of public complaint, either against the Government or Government officials, and seek to remedy injustice done or to redress grievances that existed, for which people could get no compensation or relief. He was surprised at the action of the hon. member for Chateauguay, who was supposed to be the father of the House, who was the right bower of the Government and the moral brake of the Administration, and who always came forward with rules and orders and regulations and precedents in order to suit the interests of the Government, whenever it suited their purpose to put him forward. The hon. gentleman now came forward and told the House that there was nothing of importance on the notice paper. What did he know about it? The hon. gentlemen who placed those motions on the notice paper in the interests of their constituents were the best judges of that. He (Mr. Mitchell) had a motion of very considerable importance there himself. It was unfair to attempt to stifle discussion on these matters. Did the Government wish to make this House a close Parliament, without a single opportunity being given to hon. gentlemen who desire to press the claims of their constituents?

Mr. HOLTON.

Mr. MACKENZIE: After hearing the eloquent speech of my hon. friend from Northumberland, and, considering that Monday next is the 1st of April, I think I will leave that day to the Opposition; in other words, the resolution will come into force on Monday, April 8th.

Mr. MASSON: If the hon. the First Minister does that, he will be interfering with his friends, to whom eleven of the eighteen motions on the paper belong.

Mr. HOLTON: It is not a question of friends.

Mr. TROW said it ill became the hon. member for Northumberland to make such an exhibition of public morality, because he (Mr. Trow) did not know any other gentleman who so frequently heaped on the Government a tirade of abuse. He said that members on the Government side had brought forward clap-trap motions. He (Mr. Trow) was astonished that the hon. gentleman, above all others, should say so, because he had been frequently heard to threaten the Government because they did not appear to have arranged satisfactorily with regard to some paltry matter, such as the payment for Molly Maguire's bull. In reference to matters of that description, he very often carried out his threat, and occupied hours in abusing the Ministry.

Mr. MITCHELL: I did not cast threats at the supporters of the Government, but as exception is taken to using the phrase, "cast iron majority," I will take it back. I am very sorry that I should have used an anparliamentary expression, and will apologize by saying they are the most pliable majority I ever knew.

MR. POPE (Compton) said the business of this Dominion could not be properly done in a short Session of three months. Already there were eighty notices of motion on the paper, many of which ought, properly, to be acted upon this Session; but that could not be done if the House adjourned in three or four weeks. The Session should not be limited to any particular number of weeks; what the people expected of them was, that they should transact their business, no matter whether they had to bear their own expenses. He felt that the business of the House had always been too much hurried, and thought some change should be introduced in that respect. On the paper there were eighteen Public Bills, some of them of considerable importance, which ought to be discussed for a whole day. Then there were seven or eight Private Bills of some importance, besides eighty notices of motion, and there were also returns upon which the House should take action, if time permitted.

MR. DAVIES said that members coming from a long distance felt it a great hardship to remain here too long. They could not go home every Saturday and transact their private business like the hon. members who come from the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario. Members from a distance would like to see business done on Saturdays, because the work of the Session would thus be expedited, but he presumed Ministers required that day to prepare measures intended to be brought before the House.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said it had become necessary, in consequence of the growing legislation of this country, to extend the limit of the Parliamentary Session. Two months was insufficient time properly to administer the affairs of the Dominion, and they must make up their minds hereafter—not, perhaps, during the present Session—that three months was the least Session which they ought properly to have. It was impossible to have the advantage of the opinion of the country at the present time upon any great measure. The Government brought some of their measures down early, others in the middle, and some at the end of the Session. The people of this country had not, therefore, the same advantages as the people of England, nor had they the same control over their representatives in the Legislature. One would suppose that the Parliament of Canada was framed simply for the purpose of carrying, by a majority, Government measures, and evading as much as possible any inconvenient discussions brought up by those who had not the confidence of the Ministry of the day. It had been truly said by some of the leading members of the English Parliament, including Mr. Bright, that the adoption of all legislation by Government, to the sacrifice of the duties of administration by Government, was a modern change, and a change for the worse. One of these English statesmen, in an able speech on that subject, stated that the business of the Government was administrative and not legislative, that they had to take up the great lines of public policy. Now, only a few great measures were brought in by the Government of England, and the remainder were left to be placed on the Statute-book by the exertion of particular members. Unless this practice was introduced into the Canadian Parliament we would not be administering our representative institutions for the benefit of the country to the same extent as in England. He did not refer particularly to the present Government, for the same remark applied to almost every Government—that of which he was a member, as well as that now in power. It was the interest of every Government to get through their work as conveniently as possible, and get the Estimates passed with as little opposition as possible. It was their interest also to evade any inconvenient questions from the Opposition, such as gentlemen on the other side, in times of old, were in the habit of asking the Government of the day who—of course, in a legitimate and parliamentary way—were anxious to prevent some of those from being discussed. That charge was always brought by the Opposition against the Administration of the day, whether Liberal or Conservative, and the very inconvenience which the Government experienced was proof that it was required. Every member of the House was supposed to have equal rights, be the constituency which he represented large or small. He was supposed to be a man of capacity, or he would not be a representative of the people, and he was supposed to have the interests of the country at heart. When, therefore, he put a motion on the paper, he did so in the exercise of his judgment, believing that what he did was in the interests of the country. And, when it was found that there were on the motion paper, notices of motion affecting a great variety of subjects connected with the Dominion, the leaders of the Government would have to be responsible to the people if they thwarted hon. gentlemen who were the people's representatives. It was not necessary to say: "The spring is coming on, and we want to go back to our business." Those gentlemen who said: "We come from a distance, and we want to get home," should have counted the cost before enlisting in the public service by becoming members of Parliament. Parliament was not made for them; they were made for Parliament, and they must sacrifice their own personal interests if needs be. No hon. gentleman on either side of the House had a right to say the notice paper did not contain anything of importance, and, therefore, cast it aside. The hon. members who put these notices on the paper, should be the judges, and should be afforded an opportunity for their motions being heard. There were eighty motions on the notice paper, and members representing the people said: "We want these things to be brought before Parliament and the people," but the Government said: "We will not bear them." That was smothering the voice of the people. Representative institutions in Canada ought to be just made to assimilate to those of England, so that the voice of the people might be listened to, and every opportunity should be given hon. members of bringing before the House what they desired in the way of legislation or information. All Governments were inclined to be against troublesome motions and questions, and he no doubt, if he sat on the other side of the House, would not speak so strongly as he did at this moment. Still, he was speaking the truth—he was speaking the Parliamentary truth, in the strongest way, and he said that the hon. First Minister had taken a day from the general work of the House, which he ought not to have done so early in the Session. The Government business was not very voluminous, or very heavy, and yet they had taken the whole Session, except one afternoon, Wednesday, to carry out their legislation, leaving the general business of the country unfinished, and without a chance of being finished. This was not right. With the growth of the Dominion and the increase of our population, and the increased number of questions coming before the House, they must make a sacrifice and come to Parliament for a larger portion of the year than they now did. In England, Parliament sat seven months of the year, and members did not get anything for it. They in this House had what he was bound to say was a handsome compensation for the amount of time given, and yet they grumbled at sitting too much. The Government had taken up too much of the time of this House, too many days.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

MR. MACKENZIE: But it is our own time.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said no one could check the course of discussion in Parliament. Ministers had tried that in days of old, but the Government of the day and hon. members must submit to the temper and the feeling of the House. What some hon. gentlemen might consider important, the Government of the day might consider inconvenient and factious; they must submit to that as a natural consequence of free institutions. Then again, the hon. Premier, with the laudable desire of getting through the business, worked the House very hard on Government days; they sat until three, four and even five o'clock, and yet on private members' days the House always adjourned at half-past ten or eleven, and if an Ash Wednesday or a Thanksgiving Day came round—he would say nothing about the gay assemblies in gilded saloons and other matters carrying people away from the sterner duties of Parliament—the hon. gentleman had been most considerate of the desire of the House, especially if these holidays did not happen on a Government day. When private members had Thursdays, he adjourned the House at half-past ten, but afterwards they sat until two o'clock. He thought the hon. gentleman was strong enough to carry the resolution, but he said again, that hon. members must be prepared to sacrifice themselves for their country a little more than they were doing.

Motion amended by adding the words "after Monday next" before "Government business," and agreed to on a division.

POST-OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT
BILL—[BILL No. 17.]

(Mr. Huntington.)

THIRD READING.

Amendments reported from Committee of the Whole, read the first and second times and agreed to.

MR. HUNTINGTON, in moving the third reading of the Bill, said he observed that, when the subject was under discussion yesterday, a suggestion was made to the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Currier) that he should leave his amendment until the third reading. He did not see the hon. gentleman in his place, but he had considered the amendment, and was unable to accept it. The hon. member proposed that drop-letters, which were now charged 1c. per letter of half an ounce weight, should only be charged that sum no matter what the weight. He (Mr. Huntington) considered that it would be very inconvenient, as the result would be to make common carriers of the Post-Office.

MR. PALMER said he would still ask that the clause be amended, if not to the extent asked for, to two ounces. He thought it would be a great benefit to fix two ounces as the weight for a cent stamp, as that weight would cover most letters, and obviate the necessity for weighing.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said he thought an objection of the hon. member for Ottawa was, that a partially stamped drop-letter should be sent to the dead-letter office.

MR. HUNTINGTON: The hon. gentleman is under a misapprehension. They are not sent to the dead-letter office, but a second charge is made on delivery.

MR. McDOUGALL (Renfrew) said he certainly understood the objection of the hon. member for Ottawa to be that, when drop-letters were not sufficiently stamped, they were not delivered.

MR. HUNTINGTON said the rate was 1c. per half ounce, and, by regulation, letters not sufficiently prepaid would be charged double the amount of the deficiency; and, if they were redirected, a rate of six cents was charged, including the one on the letter, according to another provision, as was stated by the hon. member for Cumberland last night.

MR. JONES (Leeds) said the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Tupper) had taken exception to this practice, and he (Mr. Jones) was also of opinion that it was wrong. He did not think that when a letter was simply forwarded to another place, five cents extra should be charged upon it.

MR. HUNTINGTON said it was the practice of all civilized countries.

MR. DEWDNEY said that, last summer, Admiral de Horsey gave a ball at Victoria, and the invitations were posted in Victoria. Some of these invitations were addressed to places outside the limits of the city, and, because they were insufficiently stamped, they were not delivered, but were sent to the dead-letter office at Ottawa, simply because the addresses were a few miles out of the limits.

MR. HUNTINGTON: That may be the case; many postmasters make mistakes.

MR. McCARTHY said that, although it was the law that these insufficiently paid letters were to be delivered and not sent to the dead-letter office, there was a regulation providing for the latter course. He thought that, now the Bill was under discussion, that regulation should be amended.

Bill read the third time and passed.

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION BILL.

[BILL No. 44.]

(Mr. Mills.)

SECOND READING.

Order for second reading read.

MR. MILLS said the principle of the Bill was well understood in this country, and it had been recognized in the law of property in many of the neighbouring States. He believed there were thirty-six cities in the neighbouring States where this principle was in existence. In his opinion there was nothing of more consequence to the population of a country than provisions for securing the transmission of family property, and this was the object for which the Bill was framed. It had been sometimes said, in opposition to the principle of homestead exemption, that it encouraged dishonesty, that persons improperly obtained credit in consequence, and that creditors were improperly kept out of their rights. Where the homestead exemption existed, people were aware of it, and no one would give credit to another with reference to the property thus exempted; and, in periods of depression, nothing tended to give greater security and to preserve a home amongst the less wealthy class of the population than this principle of exemption law. It had been said by a learned Judge, in one of the Western States, that there had, perhaps, been nothing, during the period of depression during the past four years in the United States, which had tended so much to preserve law and order in the various States as the principle of homestead exemption; for a large portion of the suffering population, instead of being tenants, were proprietors of the houses and lots which they occupied. It had also been observed that the losses sustained by creditors in those States where the principle of homestead exemption prevailed, were less than in those where there were no restrictions of this kind. He had no doubt whatever, that the extension of this principle to our North-West Territory, cherished as it was by the population of the adjoining community, important as it was considered by the emigrants to that country, would prove of great benefit to the people of this Dominion. The principle of homestead exemption was one which was thoroughly defensible and well understood. It proceeded upon the principle that the family, and not the individual, was the unit in society. It recognized the fact, although the law generally treated the head of the family as the absolute proprietor of the property which he controlled, that this property was also the product of the industry of his wife and children, that they had some interest in it, which the law ought to recognize and, in some measure, to protect. It recognized a principle which tended to promote industry because it gave security to the family. It impressed upon the mind of the family the strong conviction that, whatever might be the habits of the head of the family, whether he was disposed to be reckless or extravagant, or to improperly become surety for another, there was a certain portion of wealth which they possessed, the domicile which they inhabited, which was perfectly secured against risks and damages of this kind. Those who had given any attention to the existence of things in Prussia shortly after the war of 1804-5 knew quite well the actual condition of things which had then existed there; that almost all the small proprietors had been reduced to beggary, that their property had been largely encumbered in order to provide for the time being the necessary means of subsistence. The result was a general tendency, on the part of large proprietors, to buy these small estates. In fact, there was great danger that the large distribution of property which had been effected under the wise administration of Frederick the Great, would be completely overthrown by the distress which lasted after the invasion. Two distinguished Prussian statesmen, Staen and Schultz, who occupied prominent positions in public affairs, and who, by their wisdom and foresight, had largely contributed to retrieve the fortunes of that country, were divided upon this question. They were both disciples of Adam Smith, but, upon this question, they differed on the application of the principle. Schultz took the position that the State ought to be perfectly indifferent as to the hands into which property passed; and Staen took the opposite position, and, though there were other economical conditions which ought to be considered, yet he held that these were certain principles of social organism which the Government could not entirely overlook, and that it was of great importance to give something like fixity to the conditions of society, and to preserve, as then existed, if it could be done without serious interference with private rights, the distribution of property which then prevailed. These ideas were adopted, and the difficulties which existed immediately after the war, were tided over, and every one who had recently looked into the condition of things must be aware how largely the policy which had then been adopted, contributed to the prosperity which subsequently followed. It seemed to him that, in this matter, they were encouraging industry and recognizing domestic rights, and largely contributing to the fixity of our population. He had already said that the Prussian statesman, Staen, had recognized the importance of what he called social organism. It seemed to him that it was a matter of very great consequence that a certain amount of the property possessed by every family and individual should be, to some extent, protected against adverse fortune. In fact, he was inclined to think that if this principle were fully recognized throughout this Dominion, there would be less occasion to discuss the question of insolvency legislation. He had already said that no creditor would be wronged in any way. He would be notified by the law what he could take in execution and what he could not. It was of more consequence to the public well-being that it should not be in the power of any individual, for simple commercial considerations, to break up the social organism, to take a man and his family out of the possession of their property, to interfere with these domestic relations which had been formed in a particular locality where they resided and throw him and his wife and children upon the world again, in fact to break up their connection with the community to which they belonged. There was another important influence which had grown out of homestead legislation. It was the generous treatment which men in commercial adversities had received at the hands of the population at large. Where there was a ruthless law permitting the last dollar to be taken under an execution for debt incurred, or in consequence of security given by the individual out of property which was not merely the product of his own industry, and which belonged to him morally as well as legally, but which was also the product of the industry of his wife and family, a feeling of indifference to the welfare and well-being of others would be developed. He thought that almost in every community the man who was engaged in trade and commerce, overcame his adversities in a great measure if he had confidence in the future. The man who, when he failed, felt that he could not again retrieve his fortune, was very likely not to be of much service to himself or to the community at large. There was no way more certain to prevent a man failing in heart as well as in pocket than by preserving to him and his family a certain amount of property which could not be taken from him by his creditors. By the provisions of this Bill, everyone living in a town, or village, or city, would retain possession of his domicile, and every one living in a rural district would hold real property to the extent of eighty acres and to the value of four thousand dollars; if its value exceeded four thousand dollars, so much of it could be sold as might be disposed of to reduce the estate to that value. The Bill also provided, that upon the death of the husband, the wife shall have a life interest in the homestead. Upon the death of husband and wife, the children shall have the right to keep the homestead until they attained their majority, if any of them were under twenty-one years. It also provided that, in the case where the husband died intestate, the wife might choose between retaining her life interest in the homestead and the estate to which she would be entitled under the law of inheritance which prevailed in the territory, but she could not retain both. In case there was a will, she could choose between the property devised her and the estate to which she would be entitled by the operation of the law. These were the principal provisions of the Bill, and the necessary schedules were attached to give effect to these provisions.

MR. MCCARTHY.

Mr. PALMER said it appeared to him the hon. the Minister of the Interior had brought before this House a great number of Bills which were experimental. The present Bill was one of that character. Legislation which referred to the Territories ought to be of a very simple character; and with respect to civil rights, which this Bill was intended to regulate, Parliament should legislate as little as possible, leaving the people of that country, until they were in a position to become a Province of this Dominion, to settle their own policy with reference to civil rights, under such laws as they might enact. It was a violation of the spirit of that Act for this Parliament to undertake to deal with civil rights, at all, except where it was absolutely necessary. This Bill was, in his opinion, giving privileges to persons in that Territory which no person, in any part of Canada, had at present. $4,000 in any part of Canada was a very large sum of money to withdraw from the creditors of every person who lived in the country. That had never been attempted anywhere. Certainly, it was something very new to enable a man to go in debt to the amount of $4,000, and to put it absolutely beyond the control of the creditors whenever he chose. In fact, that law would cover seven-eighths of all the property of the inhabitants of that country, before it became a Province of the Dominion. A new country like Keewatin would be extremely prosperous, if, before it had sufficient inhabitants to become a Province of this Dominion, seven-eighths of its inhabitants were possessed of money value to the extent of four thousand dollars. In a new community, land was comparatively low in value. What would represent a small acreage in other parts of the country, would represent a large acreage there. He held that Parliament ought not to determine civil rights of the people of that country in that way. Surely Parliament had enough legislation to do, without these experimental measures. The other evening, they had the experiment of the hon. the Minister of the Interior taking away the whole of the land in the North-West. Now, they had another experiment. It might work very well; but what he claimed was that the people of that country should be left to determine their policy in this respect, when they were in a position to do so. A strong case might be made out for providing for the family, but he thought this did not apply to a new country to the same extent as it did to an old country. Persons who had strength and health, and hands to work, coming into a new country, were not in the same position as men in an old country, where it was impossible to get lands, and often to get employment. Some clauses of the Bill were perfectly impracticable, to say the very least. In section 5, it was provided:

MR. MILLS.

“If the wife has separated from her husband, and lives in adultery with another, then, upon the husband producing a certificate from the Court or Judge having jurisdiction in an action of crim. con. of the fact having been proven, the Registrar shall then cancel the wife's name from the register and from the certificate of title; and, after her name is so cancelled, she shall have no estate or interest in such homestead.”

This actually gave the power to take away from the wife the property, by a proceeding to which she was no party whatever. Surely his hon. friend did not intend that such legislation should be adopted. What would be the effect of it? A man quarrelled with his wife, brought an action of crim. con., perhaps, against his own confederate, got the register of his domain cancelled, and the poor wife was defrauded of her right. This would be the result of attempting to legislate upon civil rights of this important character. Before attempting such legislation, it was necessary to go into the minutæ of the matter, and carefully consider everything. It was impossible to pass a measure of this magnitude with the care absolutely necessary for the purpose of properly carrying it out. He would, therefore, ask his hon. friend to pause; for Parliament had quite enough to do without attempting to try these philosophical experiments in this new territory.

MR. SCHULTZ said he approved of the principles of the Bill, because he felt that, in the varying fortunes of a new country, its pioneers should have all the protection it was possible to legitimately give them. In most cases the immigrant had spent largely of his means in getting his family to his new home, and he had staked everything on this new venture; had, so to speak, "burned his ships." Under these circumstances, it was well that such protection as a homestead exemption law could give should be extended to his family and himself. It was somewhat singular, however, that we should be called upon to legislate about this matter here. It was strange that, seeing that the North-West possessed a Legislative Council, where, presumably, local wants and requirements were understood better than they could be possibly here, that this measure had not originated there. Since, however, it had originated here, he would support the Bill, but felt that the sixth section would need amending by reducing the $4,000 exemption which it proposed to make. To maintain that amount of exemption would be, he thought, to injure the object sought by the measure, and to offer a premium to dishonesty. If this clause was amended, he would support the Bill.

MR. DAVIES said he was afraid the operation of the Bill would be to prevent settlers obtaining that credit which they required in a new country. One of the strongest arguments against the proposal to bring farmers within the scope of the Bankrupt Act was that they required credit, and could not so readily get it if brought within the provisions of the Act. It was unfortunate that so much credit was required, but it was undoubtedly needed in all parts of the country. The operation of the Bill would have a bad effect in preventing settlers in new countries obtaining necessary credit.

MR. McDUGALL (Renfrew) said that, when the law was passed, it would be the duty of the party who gave credit to see that he was protected.

MR. MILLS said that hon. gentlemen would observe that if a settler obtained credit before he had registered his homestead, the registration did not protect him. It did not protect him against prior obligations, but only against those subsequently entered into. If the settler, with the consent of his wife, chose to mortgage the homestead in order to obtain credit, he would have power to do so. Experience was, in some respects, stronger than theory, and the experience of the people of the great majority of the States of the adjoining Republic was favourable to the principle of homestead legislation; indeed, it had, in a great measure, put an end to forced credits, and those who had property or goods to sell did not force them upon those who did not require to purchase them. People purchased only what they required, they were trusted in proportion to their honesty, and men who were very hard up were those who did not promptly fulfil the obligations into which they had entered, and had not endeavoured to do so. Immigrants attached great importance to that principle, and agents of the American or State Governments or of American railway companies endeavour to turn away emigrants from proceeding to Canada by pointing to the liberal homestead law of the United States, by which the property of a settler was protected against the sharp practice of those who sought to take advantage of his inexperience. By adopting the present Bill, the Dominion would be placed in as favourable a position as the United States in that particular, and be, thereby, in a better position than hitherto to compete successfully for immigrants. He differed from the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Schultz), that there was no reason why the Dominion Parliament should have legislated on the subject. The powers given to the Government of the North-West did not include that of dealing with real estate. As they were reserving the power to legislate upon the whole subject of real property, in consequence of Parliament having superior facilities through the library for ascertaining what was the actual condition of the law in other countries, it was considered desirable to establish a system of real property, and, afterwards, give the North-West Government power to amend or change it, as experience might suggest.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said he thought the object the Bill had in view, namely, the creation of some sort of homestead exemption in the North-West, was a very proper one, and one which had been beneficially carried out in the Western States, and afforded great inducements to immigrants to go into the country. He was surprised, however, to find at the end of the Bill, a clause setting forth that the Act could be amended or repealed by an Act, or Ordinance passed by any authority having power to make laws touching property and civil rights in the North-West. What was the use of Parliament legislating, if its Acts could be changed by the creatures of the Government,—by the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West and his Council, to whom the Bill gave that power, notwithstanding the arguments of the hon. the Minister of Interior, that the Council of the North-West had not been given the power to deal with real estate. That Council was given power to deal with property and civil rights. What did that mean, if it did not mean real property? The power given to Provincial Legislatures, under the British North America Act, to deal with real estates, was conferred in the same words; and, therefore, he failed to understand why the North-West Council would not have equal power to deal with real estate as that possessed by the Local Legislatures. He agreed with the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Palmer), that the subject would be more beneficially dealt with by the Council which had been given power to pass ordinances, and to which they reserved the right of amending or even repealing the Act. The Bill assumed to deal with homestead exemptions; but they were confined entirely to land, and no exemption was made of personal property. That was a material point to be considered, for what was the use of a settler having a homestead, if all his personal property could be sold by an execution? In all the old Provinces, and in Manitoba, a certain amount of personal property was exempted, and that was what would be first seized by harsh creditors. The value of land exempted, $4,000, was too high.

MR. MILLS.

MR. ROBINSON said he approved of the principle of the Bill, which might, with advantage, be extended to all the Provinces of the Dominion. The principle was not only in force in some of the Western States, but also in the older States of the American Union. The exemption to the extent of $4,000 on property was excessive, as he would endeavour to show to the House. The exemption, moreover, should be distributed over both real and personal property. The exemptions in the States of the Union were as follows: Maine, $500 real property; New Hampshire and Vermont, the same amount; Massachusetts, $800 real property; Rhode Island, $200, real property; Connecticut, personal property specified; New York, homestead exemption to amount of $1,000; New Jersey, $1,000; Pennsylvania, certain things defined, but neither personal property amounting to a certain sum, nor real property were exempted; Maryland, $100, personal property; North and South Carolina, the same; Georgia, $200, real property; Alabama, $400, real property; Florida, $300; Mississippi, $4,000, real property; Louisiana, $1,000, real property; Tennessee, certain things specified; Illinois, $1,000, real property; Indiana, $300, real property; Ohio, $500, real property; Missouri, $1,500, real property; Michigan, $1,500; Arkansas, certain things as defined; Texas, $2,000, real property; Iowa, $500, real property; Wisconsin, 40 acres and a house, without specifying any sum; California, $5,000, real property; Minnesota, $1,200, real property, and a homestead of 80 acres; Oregon, about the same; Kansas, $1,000, real property, not exceeding 160 acres; Nebraska, 160 acres; Washington Territory, $500, real property; Nevada, $500. He suggested that the provision in the ninth clause respecting registration of property for the children to remain in possession of the homestead in event of the death of both parents, should be modified. He thought that it was an excellent Bill; and he was backed up in his assertion by the experience of settlers in the Western States. He was very glad to see it introduced.

MR. IRVING said he would not waste words in speaking in detail of the principles of the Bill, which had been received in the House with such general favour. Rather than ask the hon. the Minister of the Interior not to go on with the Bill, he should encourage the hon. gentleman to proceed with it, and point out a more liberal principle which should be extended to it. With reference to the idea that $4,000 was too high a sum in value to save from exemption, he would say that no argument, to his mind, could be used in that direction regarding the Bill as at present framed, because this amount was either secured from the accretions of the settler or person who registered, which he had acquired in the country himself, or means which he had taken there, and which was unembarrassed capital, because the Bill proposed to make this homestead exemption sacred not as against previously incurred debts. If his reading of the clause was correct, he thought that the Bill failed in this particular, because it appeared to him that settlers going into that distant country should feel that they had shaken the mud off their shoes, and gone into it free from any harassing debts, to which they had been exposed in the older Provinces. Men often went from this country to the United States to avoid those debts. The whole course of the legislation in Ontario for the entire period concerning which he could remember, had been legislation in favour of the creditor as against the poor debtor; and there had been no idea which the minds of legislators had been able to formulate into an Act of Parliament, which had not been more acted upon, either by way of judgment summonses, by executions, by exemptions or garnishee processes which were intended, in every possible way, to help the creditor as against the poor debtor. With reference to the property that was exempted from seizure in Ontario, it was so little that it was of little consequence, whatever, except to the poorest labourer and the man who hardly earned enough in a week to support his family for that period. It was hardly any protection to a man, save to one of that class; and, with respect to a new country, he held that they should encourage these people to go there, without any anxiety, whatever; as to the debts—at all events, to a certain amount—which they had left behind them; because, otherwise, it would be putting a premium on exportation and to going to the United States as against going to our own country; because, otherwise, they could not get out of the debts from which they wished to free themselves. Concerning the argument with regard to the credit system, if this protection was given the settler, no man would give him credit unless he had some security or knew that he could get it, or he trusted such a man owing to his character. At the present time, in an old Province like Ontario, a man could get credit for a very small sum, and so, in the same way, the creditor in the North-West would be on his guard and would allow no debt to be incurred unless he had some kind of security, either in regard to a man's character or some pledge; and it was by no means desirable to encourage in that country the introduction of a promiscuous credit system. The marriage settlement system, which was very much in vogue in England and in Ontario, and probably in the other Provinces, was practically homestead exemption. The cases were very extraordinary, indeed, in which any marriage settlement should be interfered with. This was constantly observed. Nothing could be more important to them than to apply somewhat the same theory to those persons who chose to go into that country; and when they did so, and took their families with them, for the consideration of going out as pioneers into this wilderness, they should take care to make secure the refuge of these people and to make it a country in which, at all events, the bailiffs and sheriffs from the older Provinces should not be able to pursue them. With regard to the sum of $4,000, it might be fairly argued that, for a pre-existing debt, this might not be fair. That detail, in Committee, perhaps, might be well considered, but he should think it a very great improvement to the Bill if some consideration should be given to the idea that settlers going there should not be harassed with debts, under a certain amount, at all events; and further, if it was within their jurisdiction, as he believed was the case, they should also, up to a certain amount, protect personal property in addition to real property. If these improvements—if they were improvements—could be added, the Bill would have his hearty approval, and he was certain that in no part of Canada among the older Provinces of which he had any knowledge, would the Bill, in that event, be known or heard of, without the hon. mover receiving hearty credit for having introduced it.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said that, at the present time, there was a homestead law in Manitoba, by which the farm and effects, to a certain extent, of the settler, were protected. He thought it was only proper that this provision should be extended to the North-West Territories. Still, there ought to be a limit, which should be somewhat under the figure placed by the hon. the Minister of Interior in this Bill. The sum of $4,000 was quite too much; one-half of this sum would be sufficient for the farm or homestead, besides, perhaps, not more than $500 for personal effects. He should be very sorry, indeed, to see extended to the North-West Territories, or to any portion of the West, the proposition of the hon. member for Hamilton, to the effect that any settler going there should be exempted from paying any debts contracted in the other Provinces of the Dominion, or elsewhere. He thought that this would simply be a premium on dishonesty; and, they would then have the North-West filled up with the idle and the indolent, and the class which was so very fond of their neighbours. That there should be a Homestead Bill was very proper. He remembered that when the Homestead Bill of Manitoba was enacted, in 1871, it contained a clause which exempted every person within the Province from the payment of all debts, whatsoever, that had been contracted elsewhere, for seven years. This, of course, was equal to freeing such persons from their liabilities altogether. However, the people of Manitoba saw the great mistake that had been made, and, at the next Session of the Legislature, this provision was altered, so that, as the law now stood, the homestead was exempted, and their effects, to a certain extent. That this should be so, in the North-West, was very proper; but he trusted that the hon. the Minister of the Interior would see that he would meet the case fully and sufficiently by reducing the amount to something like $2,000, with a very moderate sum for personal property.

MR. IRVING.

MR. DESJARDINS said he believed that there was but one opinion in the House with regard to the fact that it was desirable to confer upon those who went to establish themselves in the North-West Territories sufficient protection to remain there, and to make it in such a manner that their settlement would not be troubled, from the moment they arrived, by suits that might be entered against them by their creditors in the older Provinces, and thus destroying every chance for them to create an establishment for their family. But he could not agree with his hon. friend the member for Hamilton (Mr. Irving) in the opinion that the man should have the right to leave the older Provinces, and, by establishing himself in the North-West, free himself from all his debts; such a provision would enable debtors to go there and set at defiance those who, before their departure, had become their creditors. He also believed that the exemption limit which was indicated in this Bill was too high; as would be seen if it was compared with the present condition of wealth in this country. To be worth $4,000 in the Province of Quebec, as well as in other old Provinces, was to have already attained to a position of competence, and if this was permitted to colonists who went to establish themselves in the North-West Territories, in the vicinity of railways, for instance, which were to be built, and in the villages which were to grow up there, would it not happen that many people, especially in such a condition of affairs as the present one, would be tempted to realize immediately on what they possessed, bid good-day to their creditors, and go up there where they would secure some magnificent properties, advantageously located, construct buildings to enable them to live there in comfort, and then taking advantage of clause 6th, which says "If any creditor, etc., is of opinion that the homestead is of greater value than $4,000, such owner, with the written consent of his wife, may agree upon a value with such creditor, and upon the portion of the homestead which shall represent the excess of such value over $4,000 and in case of such agreement such proportion only shall be sold in satisfaction as aforesaid;" add wealth to comfort by means of some supposed creditor with whom he could come to an understanding, make a valuation of the effects, as to what the property in question might be worth above $4,000, and secure a sort of mock sale or mortgage upon it by means of which he could prevent payments being made to the other creditors. So that this individual would always have the means, when his property was worth over $4,000, to have a considerable surplus, and thus place at defiance his other creditors, who could never touch him. He believed that this provision went beyond the limit of protection which such settlers had a right to expect from this Parliament. It seemed to him that, if they assured to the settler the extent of land which would be strictly necessary in order to enable him to live as in the Provinces, this would be amply sufficient. This was already done, to some extent, in the Province of Quebec; and the moment that they assured to the debtor the exemption from seizure of such effects as were strictly necessary for his house, and such tools and instruments of labour, as well as horses and cattle as were absolutely necessary to carry on the farm, it appeared to him that they had gone in this direction as far as settlers could reasonably expect. Otherwise a premium would be offered to the debtor to act dishonestly; and that was to say to the people: "We have spent millions to provide for you a new territory and railways, towns and villages and magnificent and fertile lands; but that is not all, realize all you can on your property to the detriment of your creditors; go up to this country where property can, by law, be exempted from seizure to the extent of $2,000, $3,000 or $4,000, and live there tranquilly and peacefully while even the creditors whom you leave behind you will be ruined by your flight; nevertheless, from the moment that you reach that country, you will be freed from all inconvenience in this respect; you will not be there even a dishonest debtor, the moment that you enter this territory and announce that you intend to become a settler in it." Unless they took this indirect means to completely destroy the credit system in the country, as proposed by his hon. friend (Mr. Wallace), this should not be done. He believed that this Bill went beyond the end which the hon. the Minister of the Interior proposed to attain by it; that was to say: the hon. gentleman only intended to afford the reasonable facilities and encouragement and protection which the settler could reasonably expect from the Government in order to encourage immigration into and the colonization of these territories. For his part, he believed that, before they adopted this Bill, it was certainly requisite to modify it in this relation, in order to protect creditors in the older Provinces and prevent encouragement being extended to dishonest debtors to free themselves from their liabilities, rather than honestly aid in the colonization of this portion of the Dominion.

MR. WALLACE said he was pleased to be able to congratulate the Government for having brought in this Bill. He heartily approved of its principle, but he could not agree with his hon. friend from Hamilton, who wanted to make it so universal that if a person stole money or goods from his creditors and went to the North-West, he should there be protected from prosecution. He did not think that this would be at all right; and he hoped that the Government would not accept the suggestion and amend the Bill in that way. Neither could he agree with his hon. friend from St. John, who said that it would be taking the rights away from creditors, because it did not do any such thing. It guarded creditors with respect to credit given before the registration of this property was made; and, therefore, it did not at all interfere with the rights of creditors. The latter were aware of this fact, and they need not afterwards trust them. Above all, he approved of the Bill because it was a step towards the abolition of credit. He believed that there was no greater curse in the world today than debt which was the result of credit; and, for this reason, he was pleased to be able to congratulate the Government on the introduction of this measure.

MR. BLANCHET said that he fully concurred with the views expressed by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins). The homestead laws were favourable to the settler, but the exemptions should not be beyond certain limits. In the Province of Quebec, a homestead law was passed some years ago. This law exempted from seizure certain articles, such, for instance, as tools, which were necessary to the labourer for his work, in order to gain his livelihood, and also certain articles of furniture, food and fuel, what was necessary to secure subsistence to his family during his sickness and inability to obtain employment. This law was found to be perfectly sufficient to protect the workingman and settler, and it also did not prevent him from being able sometimes to obtain the credit which the workingman required from the merchants. If the exemption provisions were too severe, as they were in the Bill introduced by the hon. the Minister of Interior, the settler could obtain no credit, and he would find himself, in a great number of cases, deprived of necessaries and the means of gaining his livelihood, and also of the means of improving his land and property. These provisions went to the extent of exempting from seizure landed property of the area of 80 acres, and also certain part of property held in towns; and the settler, under these circumstances, could not obtain the capital necessary to carry on his agricultural operations and improve his land if a part of his property and farm was exempt from seizure. No capitalist would advance the capital and means requisite to improve such property if a sufficient guarantee of repayment were wanting. He believed that, in principle, this law was no doubt good; but, in its details, it went too far and was too strict, and, consequently, he was of opinion that the hon. the Minister of the Interior would not thus attain the end he had in view. Hence, he hoped—while he supported the Bill with respect to its general principle—that the hon. gentleman would alter and improve this measure in order to render it more workable and practicable, and while it would guarantee to the merchant and capitalist the payment of the effects and money advanced, necessary to sustain the settler and enable him to improve his land and carry on his agricultural operations, it would, at the same time, be a sufficient protection for him.

MR. WALLACE.

MR. LANGEVIN said he knew it was very popular to admit the principle that, in new countries such as the North-West Territories, homestead exemption should be introduced for the benefit of the people, so that a settler's wife and children might have something to fall back upon when they got into difficulties. In the Province of Quebec, this matter had been under consideration for some years, and the conclusion which the Legislature came to was that they should exempt a certain number of articles, such as the instruments or tools with which a mechanic, a labourer, a surveyor or a professional man earned his living, also certain articles of furniture. But they had not gone so far as to exempt homesteads valued at $4,000 from seizure after registration of the title. He thought $4,000 was an excessive value to put upon homesteads in a new country, because such an exemption would not benefit a settler. It would certainly prevent him, as his hon. friend from South Norfolk had said, from obtaining credit. Settlers in a new territory like the North-West could not be expected to be very flush of money, and required to borrow in order to improve their land. Such a law might answer very well for a settled country, where people had means and were prosperous, but it would not answer for a new territory. When a person went to borrow money the lender, under usual circumstances, would say, "Well, this individual wishes to improve his condition. He has instruments to earn his living, but he wants a little money to build a house or improve his land; he is not a man that wants to run away." But if the money-lender knew that this man had taken care to put everything under registration, what would be the consequence? He would say, "I cannot lend you money." If a man found himself in difficulties, he would say to his wife, "I cannot get along, we must mortgage the land, otherwise we will not have the money to improve the property we possess." The result would be that the land would be mortgaged and perhaps sold afterwards, so that the law would be rendered inoperative. The land was sold by the Government, he believed, at a dollar an acre, and it would take a long time before a homestead increased in value to $4,000. It would be well to specify the value as well as the number of acres, because, while 160 acres of land at Winnipeg may be very valuable, 160 acres a hundred miles off may not be worth much. No doubt the hon. the Minister of the Interior had brought forward this Bill for the benefit of settlers in the North-West Provinces, but settlers would not be benefitted by such an Act. Besides, it defeated the very object it had in view, if it allows a man to mortgage his property.

Mr. McCARTHY said he had pleasure in adding his congratulations to those which had fallen from hon. gentlemen on the same side of the House in favour of the Minister of the Interior for introducing this measure, the principle of which he (Mr. McCarthy) most heartily approved. The discussion the Bill had undergone, and would undergo, would enable the hon. gentleman to improve it still further. At this stage, he (Mr. McCarthy) objected to one matter of detail. Why should the number of acres be limited to 80? The value of land in the North-West settlements at the present time would probably be about $1 per acre, and it would take a very long time before the value of a piece of land of 80 acres would reach $4,000. Such a small quantity of land was perfectly absurd, because it would not meet the requirements of an ordinary farmer. So far as his voice went he would like the law altered to that of Manitoba, so that each claim should consist of 160 acres. The law was intended as a protection to poor settlers, but a man worth $4,000, and free of all obligations, could hardly be considered as one who required such protection. That, he thought, was a matter which should be considered in Committee. There ought, he considered, to be some provision by which the owner of a piece of land might, with the consent of his wife and children, make application to have the exemption cancelled as far as his property was concerned, so that he might be able to make improvements, or make up for losses by fire or bad crops. He would add his voice to the opinion so universally expressed on that side of the House, that personal property should be secured.

MR. MILLS: That can be done by local legislation.

MR. McCARTHY: Then we can do nothing in reference to that. He would suggest that there should be some definition of the word "occupied," which occurred in the second clause of the Bill. There it was stated that the exemption was only to last so long as the owner of the land or his wife and children occupied it. If a person was absent from his property one, six or eight months, would he be considered as being in the occupation of the land or not? Clause 5, which referred to the disposal of property after the decease of the owner, would also require the attention of the Committee.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew) said the principal objection urged against this Bill, which seemed to commend itself to both sides of the House, was the amount fixed as the limit of exemption. It appeared to him the intention of the Minister of the Interior, in exempting portions of land in the rural districts, from seizure, was that some means of support should be guaranteed and secured for a settler, his wife and family. No doubt some improvement might be made in the Bill in this particular. Its principal object was to encourage immigration into these territories, but it seemed to him that serious exception might be taken to the 13th clause. In that clause it was provided that:

“This Act may be amended or repealed by any Act or Ordinance Law fully passed by any authority having power to make laws touching property and civil rights in the place where such amendment or appeal is intended to take effect.”

It seemed to him that the law, when passed, should be conclusive—that it should not be set aside by any other authority. He thought that when persons took land and registered it, they should be assured that no law would be passed which would take away their rights. That was his principal objection to the Bill; but he also objected to the 9th clause, which provided that minors shall be required to register their claims within six months after the death of their parents. In many cases it would be almost impossible to adhere to the general principle of the Bill, and he thought the clause should be amended. With those objections remedied, he thought the measure was one that might very fairly become law.

MR. PLUMB said it was certainly pleasing to hear such general assent given to the principles of the Bill. Nothing could be better adapted for the encouragement of settlers in a new country than some provision of this kind, for a man would then be assured that, notwithstanding what misfortune overtook him, he would still have something left wherewith to maintain his wife and family. There were, however, one or two matters which he thought should be considered in the course of the discussion on the Bill, and, as they would doubtless suggest themselves to other hon. gentlemen, he would not now refer to them at length. It occurred to him that some definite provision, independent of outside legislation, should be made for the protection of a certain amount of the settler's personal property. It would be right, for instance, not only to exempt a man's house, but also some furniture and farming implements. He did not think it would be desirable to encourage immigration in the way suggested by his friend the hon. member for Hamilton, usually so sound and Conservative in his views, because it would scarcely be right to make these new Territories, cities of refuge for people who wished to evade the payment of debts incurred elsewhere. It was almost a pity that property of this kind should not be absolutely exempt from change. There might be reasons why it should be possible for a husband, with the consent of his wife, to mortgage his property; but it was a dangerous power to put in his hands. Cases of necessity might arise where that would require to be done, but under the present condition of things, a woman was altogether under her husband's control. Possibly, when the rights of women were established, they might be able to stand up and be independent; in the meantime, a husband might virtually do what he pleased. It had been found in many cases where marriage settlements depended on the action of the wife, that, when the husband became involved, he got the trust into his own hands. He would, therefore, ask the Minister of the Interior—who seemed desirous to benefit the wives and families of settlers—to consider whether something could not be done to obviate this objection regarding mortgages. He thought also that the provision inserted in the 6th section, for the benefit of a settler's wife, to the effect that her authority should be given for the withdrawal of the proceeds of their farm from a Government Savings Bank, should be adopted for the benefit of minors also.

MR. McCARTHY.

Considerations were constantly cropping up in connection with the Bill in order to secure the proper carrying out of what was intended. Undoubtedly, it was very difficult to provide for a family of helpless children, but he hoped, whatever contingency might arise, the property of their parents might be protected for them. He trusted also, that the Bill, if passed, would not be permanent, and that no property, after being registered according to the conditions of the Act, could be interfered with for a good number of years at least. There had been no differences of opinion as to the principle of the Bill, which, indeed, had met with the unanimous approval of the House, and it seemed to him that it should not be affected to any appreciable extent by local legislation hereafter. He agreed with the Minister of the Interior in thinking that no Bill could be better adapted to encourage immigration to the North-West Territories than this one, and he thought the question as to its permanence deserved consideration. It ought, at least, to be enforced for 21 years, so that it would cover the period between infancy and that of majority and responsibility in the life of a person born there. No better security could be given to hard-working settlers in the North-West than the protection of their land, and he hoped that this Bill would have the effect of peopling that great district, the development of whose resources would add to the wealth and prosperity of Canada.

MR. MITCHELL said he merely wished to state that he entire endorsed the principle contained in the Bill.

Bill read the second time.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were read the third time and passed:

Bill (No. 31) To amend the Act incorporating the Sydenham Harbour Company.—(Mr. Gibbs.)

Bill (No. 49) To incorporate the Regular Baptist Foreign Missionary Society of Ontario and Quebec.—(Mr. Wood.)

SECOND READINGS.

The following Bill was read the second time:

Bill (No. 54) To incorporate the Fishwick Express and Merchants' Forwarding Company (Limited).

GEORGE F. JOHNSTON DIVORCE BILL.

[BILL No. 59.]

(Mr. Fraser.)

SECOND READING.

MR. FRASER moved the second reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to on the following division:

YEAS:

Messieurs

Archibald,	Macdougall (East
Bain,	Elgin),
Bertram,	McDougall (South Ren-
Blackburn,	frew),
Blain,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Bowell,	McKay (Colchester),
Bowman,	Mackenzie,
Brouse,	Macmillan,
Buell,	McCallum,
Burk,	McCarthy,
Burpee (Sunbury),	McCraney,
Carmichael,	Metcalfe,
Cartwright,	Mills,
Charlton,	Monteith,
Christie,	Norris,
Church,	Oliver,
Cockburn,	Orton,
Coffin,	Paterson,
Cook,	Pettes,
Davies,	Pickard,
DeCosmos,	Pope (Queen's, P.E.I.)
Dymond,	Robinson,
Farrow,	Rochester,
Ferris,	Ross (East Durham),
Fleming,	Ross (Prince Edward),
Flesher,	Rymal,
Fraser,	Scatcherd,
Galbraith,	Schultz,
Gibbs (Ontario North),	Scriver,
Goudge,	Shibley,
Greenway,	Sinclair,
Guthrie,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Hagar,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Hall,	Thompson (Haldi-
Horton,	mand),
Kirk,	Trow,
Kirkpatrick,	Wallace (Albert),
Landerkin,	White (East Hastings),
Little,	Wood,
Macdonald (Kingston),	Young.—78.
Macdonald (Centre	Toronto),

NAYS :

Messieurs

Barthe,	Gill,
Bécharde,	Holton,
Benoit,	Huntington,
Bernier,	Hurteau,
Blanchet,	Irving,
Bolduc,	Jetté,
Bourassa,	Lafamme,
Bourbeau,	Lajoie,
Brooks,	Langevin,
Brown,	Lanthier,
Bunster,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Caron,	McDonald (Cape
Casgrain,	Breton),
Cheval,	McIntyre,
Cimon,	McIsaac,
Costigan,	Malouin,
Coupal,	Masson,
Delorme,	Montplaisir,
Desjardins,	Mousseau,
De St. Georges,	Pinsonneault,
Devlin,	Robillard,
Domville,	Robitaille,
Dugas,	Short,
Fiset,	Stephenson,
Flynn,	Taschereau,
Forbes,	Wade.—51.

Bill read the second time.

HUGH HUNTER DIVORCE BILL.—

[Bill No. 58.]

(Mr. McCarthy.)

SECOND READING.

MR. McCARTHY moved the second reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to on the same division as on the last Bill.

Bill read the second time.

HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION BILL.

[Bill No. 44.]

(Mr. Mills.)

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

MR. LANGEVIN said he thought the first clause should be amended so as to read: "May register as a homestead an extent of such land not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres" instead of eighty acres, as it would be a great advantage to the owner in case he should need a large sum of money on mortgage to carry out improvements.

MR. MILLS said there was nothing in it to prevent a man holding 500 acres. The homestead law was not a limitation of property to be holden, but merely a limitation of the right of creditors to take this property for debt. The Bill provided that, if a man had eighty acres of land, he might register the whole as a homestead; if he had more than eighty acres, he indicated by description the eighty acres he wished to register as a homestead.

MR. FRASER.

MR. LANGEVIN said that, if the homestead was taken to be eighty acres only, the value should be reduced from $4,000 to $2,000. Several persons from that region had informed him that $1,000 would be quite sufficient. The hon. gentleman should allow a larger quantity of land to be registered as the homestead. By the Bill, as at present, if a man had a farm of over 160 acres, he would have to go to the expense of a survey for the purpose of dividing his homestead from it.

MR. MILLS said he did not think the hon. gentleman's suggestion would improve the Bill.

MR. BOWELL said he did not understand why the number of acres should be restricted. In a town or village a lot might be held worth the full value of $4,000. But a homestead of eighty acres might be worth only $200. While, therefore, the holder of a lot in a town or village might be enabled to avail himself of the Homestead Act to its full extent, $4,000, the farmer was restricted to his eighty acres, worth probably not over a couple of hundred dollars. The amount of $4,000 was altogether too high, unless it was intended to prevent the collection of debts of any kind. There was such an universal opinion in favour of the principle of the Bill it would be almost heterodox to express a contrary opinion; and, in any case, the principle had been affirmed. But he did not see why the amount of $4,000 should not extend to the farmer in a rural section, as well as to the proprietor in the town.

MR. MILLS: So it does.

MR. BOWELL said that, nevertheless, the farmer could only homestead eighty acres, which might not be worth over $200; if he acquired another eighty acres alongside the first lot, he could not homestead it. Yet the man who could afford to put a valuable dwelling and outhouses on the adjoining lot could avail himself to the full extent of the provisions of the Bill. If it required 500 acres to amount to the full value of $4,000, the man who owned that land should be allowed to homestead it.

MR. MILLS said there was no distinction made between the rural and urban population. A man might own a lot of very little value in a town or village. The principle was that he should have the lot upon which his house stood. There was a provision for the transfer of property by the registration of titles. The sale of property was made by the agreement of the party. The title was a certificate granted by the registrar. The homestead was registered by the endorsement upon the certificate in the possession of the proprietor, and the certificate retained in the office. That was the manner in which the registration took place. If a man had a certificate for half-a-dozen lots, merely because they did not exceed a certain maximum, it would be a highly improper proceeding to provide that he should register all these as a homestead. There was no doubt the value of real estate in the first instance would be very much below the maximum sum fixed in the Bill. If the Bill simply indicated the value of the property the time it was taken possession of, it would never secure the homestead. The very moment a proprietor undertook to improve his property, he would take it out of the provisions of the Bill. He could not retain it, because it could be sold as having a greater value than the homestead. What was desired to be fixed in the Bill as a maximum was what would be a fair average value of eighty acres or lots occupied by an agriculturist or by a person with a fair residence in a town or village. If the maximum value of the homestead were fixed very low, that low value would stand in the way of improvement. The owner might argue that if he made improvements, it would increase its value, and make it insecure, and, therefore, he would not make the improvements. This would not be a desirable result. One of the objects of a Homestead Law should be to induce every person to make his home as elegant and comfortable as possible. A very low valuation would tend to defeat that object.

MR. BOWELL said the Minister of the Interior had mistaken the question altogether. The point he desired explained was this: Why should there be any distinction between one homestead and another; why should a farmer, if he was to be entitled under the second section to hold property to the value of $4,000 as a homestead, be restricted to eighty acres of land. The words "eighty acres" should be struck out of the first clause, and substitute "not exceeding the value of—" whatever the maximum might be. The legislation seemed to him to be exclusively in favour of those who could afford to spend $4,000 in the construction of houses and personal property. He thought $4,000 was far too high, unless it was intended to lay down the principle of the abolition of the collection of debts altogether.

MR. BOWELL moved that $4,000 be struck out and $2,000 inserted.

MR. MILLS said he had no objection to that. He had already indicated to the House that he was prepared to substitute $2,000 for $4,000 in the Bill.

MR. POPE (Compton) said, before a man could get any credit, he would have to own property over and above this large sum. They were actually going to deprive a settler of any assistance until he got a sum above the amount put in the Bill. Probably not one-half the people of the country had homesteads of greater value than $1,000.

MR. MILLS said the principle to which the hon. member for North Hastings (Mr. Bowell) had taken exception, provided against the difficulty. In every case, $2,000 would cover the whole of the real estate. This Bill provided that, so long as the value did not come up to $2,000, that eighty acres should be the maximum average. 160 acres were given as a homestead, with permission to obtain 160 more at $1 per acre; but only 80 acres were allowed to be registered as the homestead, and exempted under the Bill. The balance could be seized for debt, so that the difficulty mentioned was met by this provision.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said this was legislating in favour of people living in cities against those in the country. Generally speaking, persons living in the country would have quarter sections of 160 acres, which would not be worth $4,000 or $2,000 for many years to come.

MR. MILLS: But in the villages the lands would.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said that, therefore, while a person in the country could only have half his property exempt from seizure, the person who lived in a village or town would have the whole of his property exempt to that amount. It would be much better to exempt the full 160 acres in the country, provided the value did not exceed $2,000. He took another exception to this second clause. Sub-section three of this clause appeared to him to give, virtually, to the wife the ownership of the property. This was contrary to all the legislation of other countries, and of these Provinces. The wife had her rights, she had her dower, but was not made equal owner with the husband. The privileges against these homesteads were, 1, debts due to the Crown for purchase money; 2, taxes due; 3, mortgage debts, but not unless the wife had joined in the mortgage. If she had not joined in the mortgage she would have her dower, but here the mortgage was null and void unless she had joined in it. It was, therefore, put in the power of the wife to refuse to allow the husband to exercise any ownership over his property; not only that, but supposing the wife had disentitled herself to the dower, no exception was made.

MR. PLUMB said he thought that if this property was at all permitted to be alienated by the head of the family, after being appropriated for the benefit of the wife and children, it struck at the essential essence of the Bill. The whole system which had reference to the mortgaging of this property, was a vicious one. If this was a mere voluntary provision, repealable at the will of the person who made it, it would be better not to have it at all, and not to make homestead exemptions. If this property could be alienated, what was the use of this exemption? It was intended to prevent suffering from misfortune and improvidence, and the squandering of the estate, and the children or wife from being subject to the weakness of the husband, at any time, and the evil effect of any bad bargains which the latter might make. It was a permanent settlement or nothing. He could understand how, under certain circumstances, it might be desirable to part with the occupancy of property which it would be desirable to rent; but, he could not understand why a proposition should be made to deprive the family of the advantage which the hon. the Minister of the Interior had taken so much pains and labour to guard in this Bill, which, as to its whole scope, was intended to protect the interest of the family. This provision struck at the root of the Bill. What was the use of homestead exemption, if the property could be so dealt with? If the hon. gentleman did not want to change this clause, let him do away with the Bill, and say no more about it.

MR. MILLS.

MR. BUNSTER said that, while this was a step in the right direction, he considered it did not go far enough. Instead of reducing the amount from $4,000 to $2,000, the value of the property exempted should be increased. This was the first time that he had been able to compliment the Government on having taken into consideration the poor men of the Dominion; but an injustice was done in not applying these provisions to British Columbia. In the United States, they had homesteads of 160 acres for each family, and also a chat-tel homestead, securing so much wheat and grain to the family, thus giving confidence to the farmer's partner, namely his wife, in ensuring for her a home that would be of considerable assistance to herself and children, even if her husband should die. In place of $4,000 in value, 160 acres of land should be exempted. This was done in the United States, where to-day there were plenty of good and happy homes which the Sheriff or anybody else could not take from these families. He hoped that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) would give the Bill a little further consideration, and make the amendment he suggested. British Columbia was unfortunately left out of the Bill.

MR. TROW: The hon. gentleman will remember that, in British Columbia, $2,500 in property, and $500 in chattels, are exempted.

MR. BUNSTER said that this was the local law; but why should not the Dominion law also apply to that Province, where they courted immigration. He was glad that they had a seventh member (Mr. Trow) for British Columbia. A sixth had, yesterday, been elected, and this gentleman would, he was satisfied, worthily represent the interests of the Province. If they only obtained reasonable justice, which their resources merited, his Province would, in time, have as many representatives as Ontario. If the Canadian Pacific Railway were built, and hon. gentlemen took a trip over to his Province, they would never come back again, owing to the beauty of their climate, though the Province was called an inhospitable country, and described as being a sea of mountains. This was the first time that a good Bill had been brought down by the Government, and still it was not made to apply to British Columbia.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said if he might venture on a suggestion in this matter, he was inclined to think that his hon. friend (Mr. Mills) would find the object he had in view better obtained by dropping the 3rd subsection altogether. Hon. gentlemen acquainted with the position in which new settlers found themselves, would, he thought, be disposed to agree with him that the power of allowing a man to mortgage his homestead would, to a very great extent, defeat the whole purpose of his hon. friend's Bill. It was, perhaps, not altogether unworthy of consideration, that, in a great number of cases, the wife's consent might be obtained through harsh treatment, if she happened to entertain a different opinion from her husband on the subject. On the whole, he was inclined to suggest that this particular clause should be omitted. If the family believed their interests could be better served by alienating the property, they appeared to have that power. He thought that this other provision was quite sufficient, and, far less likely to be exercised against the wife than would be the power to mortgage, which might expose the wife to undue pressure.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that, of course, the Opposition had no objection to the Finance Minister expressing a vote of want of confidence against the policy of the Minister of the Interior. It was none of their funeral.

MR. MILLS: You have had as many funerals.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said they were very glad to see the beginning of disintegration from within as well as that they were victorious from without. There was no doubt about that. There was a good deal in what the hon. the Finance Minister had said. It was doing away with the effect of the Bill in giving the husband power to mortgage the estate, and if he quarrelled with his wife, he could get rid of her and the property too. Lord Elgin had said, with respect to marriage settlements—that they were of no use, as wives were always either kissed out of them or kicked out of them. In some way or other, husbands got rid of the property if they wished to do so.

MR. MILLS said he had no objection to the clause mentioned being struck out. The only ground for inserting it was in case the husband and wife might wish to provide for one of the family and desired to pledge the homestead estate in order to raise the means.

MR. MASSON: It is very unfortunate that the hon. the Minister of Finance did not make use of that argument with regard to the provision of the Bill of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Dymond) allowing wives to be sworn in cases where their husbands were concerned.

MR. BOWELL: Schoolmasters abroad.

MR. FLESHER said that the clause seemed ambiguous. In the second clause, minor children were mentioned, and in this case the term appeared to refer merely to younger in contra-distinction to older children.

MR. POPE (Compton): The hon. gentleman will see that the provision he makes against a party being deprived of his credit, until he gets this large sum accumulated, is done away with.

MR. MILLS: Not at all.

MR. POPE: You cannot raise it on the property.

MR. POPE: Not upon the 80 acres, but on the remainder of the property.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Suppose he has only 80 acres?

MR. MILLS: Of course they do not raise it on that; and you have decided that it is not in his interest that he should have the power of doing so.

MR. PLUMB said he would like to know what was meant, by providing for homestead exemption in favour of unmarried men. He supposed that provision was only intended for married persons.

MR. MILLS: The hon. gentleman could not have read the first section.

MR. PLUMB said that this was an extraordinary provision. He had never heard of anything like it in his life. It might exist across the border, but if this was the case, he had never known of it. Such a provision did not exist in any other country, and it was not in conformity with any necessity or good morals.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

On the fourth clause,

MR. PALMER said that it directed that the homestead could not be sold unless the wife joined. This meant any homestead, surely. He wished to point out to the hon. Minister of Interior that, if the clause stood as it was, notwithstanding the fact that the wife could forfeit, under the 3rd and 5th section, the right of having this homestead registered in her name under the 3rd section, still, as long as the wife lived, no matter in what state, the husband could not alienate the property unless the wife gave her consent to it.

MR. MASSON.

MR. MILLS: There is an amendment on the margin.

MR. PALMER. I do not understand what is meant by the expression "by his wife, if living, jointly with him." That is certainly funny phraseology.

MR. KIRKPATRICK: It is funny all through.

MR. PLUMB asked the hon. Minister whether his suggestion as to the securing of personal property was not worth consideration? The point was one which affected the whole principle of the Bill. Either the provision of the Bill was absolute or it was not. If it was not, what was the good of placing such a measure on the Statute-book? If any provision was to be made at all, it should be permanent. Those poor people who would go to the North-West, believing that their property would be permanently secured to them, should not be deceived.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he did not see the necessity for saying that a married man could not alienate his homestead "except the transfer be executed by his wife, if living." If a man's wife was not living, of course she could not execute a transfer.

MR. MILLS: But the provision says: "Living jointly with him."

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said his hon. friend had adopted the suggestion that the spirit of the Act would be infringed if the husband were allowed to mortgage his property with the consent of his wife, as, in all probability, he would be able, by his influence over her, to mortgage it whenever he pleased, thus depriving her of the benefit which the Act was specially framed to confer upon her and her children. But, although it had been seen fit to alter this provision, the husband had the power left to sell the property and put the proceeds in his pocket, which was infinitely worse.

MR. MILLS said that, if a husband and wife wished, by selling their property to better their position, they could not be prevented, and, if such legislation was passed, more serious evils would arise than those which the Bill was intended to obviate. The object of the Homestead Bill was to compel the owner of a property to consult his wife, or the wife, if owner, her husband, in reference to its disposal, so that the property might not be mortgaged or pledged for debts or liabilities recklessly incurred, to the detriment of those dependent upon them. This object, he thought, was fully met by the Bill, without creating the more serious results which might arise from insisting that the owners of a property should not have a right to sell it.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he could not comprehend why a man should not be allowed to raise a small sum of money on his property for the purpose of making a few necessary improvements, and yet should have power of selling it altogether. If a property was mortgaged, a man's wife and family would have a claim on a part of it at least, but in the other case they would have no provision whatever.

MR. LAFLAMME said the intention of the Bill was not to deprive a man of his liberty to dispose of his property, but merely to protect him from creditors who might seize it.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD : Why deny him the right to mortgage ?

MR. LAFLAMME : That is to prevent the temptation to a creditor to coerce a debtor into giving him a mortgage.

MR. KIRKPATRICK : He may coerce him into selling.

MR. LAFLAMME : No ; that is a free act, but must be accompanied by the consent of a man's wife and family, who will be called upon to decide as to whether such a sale would be a wise disposition or not.

MR. MASSON : I believe a man will more easily run into debt when he is allowed to mortgage his property than when he is prevented from doing so, because he will always be expecting to pay off the encumbrance, thus becoming improvident, to the detriment, in the long run, of his family. If he is denied the privilege of mortgaging, it will make him more careful, because he will not run the risk of at once depriving his family of the only means they have of obtaining a subsistence.

MR. PALMER said nothing could be easier than for a man to cancel his registration, because, all he had to do was to cease to occupy, so that it was nonsense to pretend to protect his wife in this way. In the first section, it was provided that a man had no exemption right over a homestead, except when he himself occupied it, and the moment he ceased to do so, his creditor could take it for debt without the wife's consent.

MR. GUTHRIE said he considered the power of alienation entirely different from the power to mortgage. While it was true that a man, by mortgaging his property, might eventually deprive his wife and children of their rights, it was also true that, for the benefit of all, it might be desirable to sell or exchange it. If any attempt, such as that referred to by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Palmer), was made, it would be a clear fraud upon the Act, supposing it were possible ; but, while the property was in the occupation of a man's wife or family, such a disposition could not possibly take place.

MR. DESJARDINS said that he shared the views expressed by the hon. member for Terrebonne, which, if he was not mistaken, agreed with those of the hon. the Minister of Justice. It was important, since they desired to protect the settler in the possession of his property, and to protect him from the dangers of credit, to forbid him to mortgage his estate. They knew that the facilities given to an individual to go into debt were very frequently fatal to him, owing to the fact that he was thus drawn into enterprises foreign to the object which was proposed to be obtained by this Bill. In this regard, the right that was given to the settler to sell, under certain conditions, his property, was much less dangerous, because they should imagine that, in adopting this extremity, the settler would be induced to avoid it, because he would have acquired the conviction that this arrangement would not be advantageous to him; while the possibility of otherwise alienating his property would have the probable effect of diverting the present law from the end which it was proposed to attain.

MR. FLESHER said that, in the 4th clause, there was a provision made that the homestead should not be alienated by the husband's act, except the transfer be jointly executed by his wife, if living; or if the wife be dead, or there be a minor child or children of such owner, then, with the express approval in writing of a stipendiary magistrate. But on the death of the owner, if the widow survived, the property passed absolutely to her, and there was no restriction with regard to the minors.

MR. MILLS said the hon. gentleman would see that the fee simple was in the husband; while he was living, he had power to alienate the estate, with the consent of his wife, because she had a life interest in the property. It was not her property, but her husband's, and after his death it was the property of his heirs, subject to her life interest, and at her death subject to the interest of her children during their minority.

MR. PALMER said that, with regard to the fifth clause, it embodied a very objectionable qualification. It set forth that, after the decease of the owner, the property went to the widow, subject to certain exemptions, and then the proviso stated that, in case the wife was deserted by her husband, the husband should produce some sort of certificate to that effect. How he could do that after death, he (Mr. Palmer) was unable to see. Even if it could be done, it would be entirely objectionable, because it was a clear rule of law that a wife should not be bound by a suit to which she was not a party, and, in this case, the wife would be no party at all.

MR. MILLS said he would alter the clause by adding the words "for life," and making it read that after the death of the owner the homestead "shall go to his widow for life," because it was the homestead estate that was being disposed of, and not the absolute property.

MR. DESJARDINS.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said he thought it would be much better and safer in every respect, if the Bill provided for the appointment of a tutor to the estate.

MR. MILLS: That would embrace a great deal of property apart from this.

MR. FLESHER said he desired to call attention to a point that was absolutely fatal to the Bill. The next clause, clause six, provided that, in case a difference arose between the owner of the property and the creditor, and they could not agree, then the whole property should be sold. So that all a creditor had to do to set the Bill at defiance was to refuse to agree, and the Bill was rendered perfectly inoperative. He thought such cases ought to be referred to some judicial party.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said he thought that the proviso to the 5th clause should be amended with regard to the separation of a wife from her husband by the words "or separate from her husband without just cause." If she deserted him without just cause, and gave no aid in the maintenance of the home, she ought to lose her interest.

MR. DEVLIN: Who is to be the judge of that.

MR. KIRKPATRICK: The Judge. The fact must be proved, and a certificate given.

MR. GUTHRIE: No Judge would give such a certificate. The judgment is a record of the Court, and that could only be obtained from a sitting of the Court.

MR. MILLS said the 23rd line should be altered so as to read "upon producing the exemplification of the judgment."

MR. PLUMB said the 6th clause provided that the owner might agree with a creditor "with the written consent of his wife." If he had a wife, all right; but did the Government intend to take every owner for a married man?

MR. PLUMB said a clause should be inserted to provide that the money received from the sale of the homestead, $4,000, or whatever the amount reserved might be, should be deposited in such a way that it should have the same effect for their benefit as if the homestead had not been forfeited. This was a case in which protection was most necessary.

MR. MILLS said the $2,000 exempted by the Bill might be employed in purchasing land again, which, upon the necessary provisions being complied with, could be registered as a homestead. But if the parties could not agree, it was deposited in some Government savings bank.

MR. PLUMB said that did not provide any security at all. The money was merely deposited in the savings bank, pending the wife's consent. He wanted it to be secured to the family so that it could not be taken from them.

MR. DESJARDINS said he understood that, if the property was worth more than the amount exempted, a transfer could be made of a portion of it to any creditor on an agreement between the parties. How were the remaining creditors to be protected?

MR. LAFLAMME said this would be a fraudulent arrangement, which could be brought before a court of justice. The distribution of the surplus over the portion reserved from the proceeds of the sale did not come within the provisions of this Bill; that was regulated by the law of the land.

MR. FLESHER said a creditor had power to defeat the object of the Bill by forcing a sale, which he could accomplish by merely agreeing as to what should be exempt. The Court giving judgment should have power to interpose if the parties could not agree as to whether the homestead could be sold.

MR. LAFLAMME said the creditor could not proceed to sell or to make an agreement to sell without depositing

$2,000. This was a guarantee against any such intention or action as the hon. member alluded to.

MR. FLESHER: There will be some check, but not an absolute one.

MR. MILLS said a creditor could have no power to compel the sale of the homestead unless he had previously deposited the $2,000. If the homestead was not worth that, he could not force a sale. The object of the Bill was to sell, if there would be a surplus, if not, to keep the homestead. The question of personal property and civil rights, upon which this House could legislate if it chose, the Government preferred to transfer to the North-West Territories Council. They were acting upon the principle that real estate so converted might be treated as real estate still, although it was money. Under most of the American Homesteads Acts, there was provision that it should be re-invested in real estate within twelve months; a provision which would, perhaps, unnecessarily hamper the action of the parties.

MR. BOWELL said that in case a creditor compelled the sale of property and it realized over the amount exempted, the surplus went in part liquidation of the debt. The amount exempted, $2,000, went to the owner of the homestead. Did not that $2,000 then, become personal property, subject to seizure? It was only protected in case the wife refused to become a party to the transaction, in which case it was deposited in the bank, and subject to the protection given to the homestead itself. If the wife became a party to the sale, and the $2,000 were paid to the husband, it became personal property, liable to seizure, and the object of the Bill thus was defeated. The first clause ought also to provide that sufficient property, with the eighty acres, to enable the farmer to prosecute his work, should be exempted. If the property, when it became personal property, as it did when it became money, was subject to seizure, the personal property of the the farmer who held the eighty acres should be exempted.

MR. PLUMB said he would like to know if there was a provision made that the homestead should remain in the hands of the family until the minor child became of age. There was a certain fund which arose out of the sale. To whom did it belong?

MR. MILLS: It went to the proprietor, or his heirs if deceased, the same as any other property.

MR. LANGEVIN said he was not aware the hon. the Minister of the Interior had met the remark made by the hon. member for North Hastings, concerning the liability to seizure of the amount exempted in case of a sale in which the husband and wife agreed. Another observation he had to make was concerning one of the provisions in the 4th clause, which said: "To be drawn out only on the written order of such owner and his wife, or of the survivor of them." There was no provision made in case the owner and wife were dead. Further down in the 9th clause, it provided, in the case of the death of the husband and wife, how the homestead was to go to the children. But it did not provide for the disposition of the $2,000 deposited in the savings bank in case of the death of the husband and wife.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew) said he objected to the 9th clause, which required:

"In case the husband and wife both die, leaving a minor child or children, such minor child or children, in order to continue in possession of the homestead estate, shall, within six months after the death of the last deceased parent, file with the Registrar an affidavit, taken before some Justice of the Peace, setting forth the facts."

Supposing the children were of a very tender age, who was to make this affidavit for them? It was not provided that it should be made by any person; it appeared, from the reading of the clause, it should be made by the children. It seemed to him that, so long as the minor children remained in occupancy of the homestead, they should be permitted to enjoy the privileges of the Act until they came of age, without being compelled to register any certificate.

MR. MILLS said it was not the child who made the affidavit; the child filed it through its guardian. This estate in no way affected the fee simple.

MR. PLUMB.

The fee simple was still in the hands of some party or other. It was important that the period when that state of minority terminated should be known to the registrar, and be entered upon the register.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew) inquired whether the authorities of the North-West Territories would have power to make laws which would be retroactive?

MR. MILLS said the North-West Council had not yet been given authority to deal with real property; but if that power was conferred on them, they would, of course, legislate as they thought proper.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew) said that, if the power to deal with these lands belonged to Parliament, the House had the power to say that this Act should not be changed by the local authorities. If such a provision was included in the Act, and the 13th section was struck out altogether, the security given to the settlers going into that territory would be very much greater than if the Bill remained in its present shape. Persons could go there and register their homesteads under this Bill, and yet be deprived of the privileges which they had acquired under it. They might, in fact, be induced to go there under, as it were, fraudulent pretences, acquire homesteads and register them, and then be deprived of them.

MR. MILLS said that, whenever there were a thousand of these settlers, they could elect a representative to the North-West Council. They could legislate for themselves, and the House could not assume that, if this measure proved beneficial, they would abolish it. To do so would be simply undertaking to tie the hands of a body which, in time, must have the entire control of the territory.

MR. PLUMB said he supposed that the great object of the Bill was to make permanent provision as far as this could be done. If it was intended to allow this Act to be interfered with, why not strike out the section, and not invite these people to exercise this power. Parliament was legislating for the interests of the people, and it was as competent to take care of those interests at the outset as was the Council. If this provision was not altered, the measure would not be, in some respects, what it purported to be, but what he feared it would turn out to be. If it was not a permanent provision against accidents and misfortunes in favour of wives and children, there was no object at all in passing it. The measure was not intended for the solvent and prosperous, who would not require it, but for the unfortunate. This was one of the most objectionable sections in whole Bill; and he trusted that either now or in the future, not only this section would be struck out, but also a section would be inserted which would meet the necessities of the case much more fully.

MR. MACKENZIE said that it was a matter of perfect indifference whether the section was left in or not, because the power would remain exactly where it now was under the general law. They had no right to interfere with the self-governing powers of the people in these territories when the latter had a Legislature of their own. It would then be for them to decide whether this legislation was wise or unwise, and any attempt on the part of the House to set its wisdom above that of another Province, as it would be, would be a most extraordinary exercise of arbitrary power, an exercise of power which they had no right to assume, and which could only give rise to internal difficulties such as existed in the North-West Territories six or eight years ago. They should not assume that they were wiser than their neighbours in the matter. A Province would soon be formed there, and the people there would feel quite as competent to manage their own affairs as the people of other Provinces.

MR. PLUMB said that he conceded the proposition made by the First Minister. It was exactly what he had personally been saying; they should deal with this question in proper shape. He did not see why they should meddle with the matter at all if these territories would very soon be able to take care of themselves. There was no pressing haste and no population, save a few hundred people.

MR. MACKENZIE: 2,000.

MR. PLUMB said that 2,000 was not a very great number. Very few were likely to come under the necessities of this provision. They had been told that these were thrifty, careful and prosperous people. If they were competent to take care of and legislate for themselves, why should they not leave these people to take care of themselves, and avoid all this time and trouble being taken in this relation? If this legislation was to be ephemeral and to be repealed whenever these people choose, the House should not occupy itself with it; but if it was not to be repealed, let it be made permanent.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew): People who go into this territory and take up land under the provisions of this Act, ought certainly to be protected.

MR. MACKENZIE: They can protect themselves.

MR. WHITE: Yes; but the legislation with reference to their lands will be under a different authority.

MR. MACKENZIE: It will be under themselves.

MR. WHITE said they did not know that such authority would correctly represent the public opinion. It was a question whether hon. gentlemen opposite correctly represented public opinion, and this might be the case in the North-West Territories as well as in the Dominion of Canada.

MR. MACKENZIE: It is pretty safe if that is the case.

MR. BOWELL: That depends on who is Governor.

MR. WHITE said that a provision ought to be added by which those who took the benefit of this Act and registered homesteads, would not be deprived of them by the action of another body.

MR. MASSON said the words, "Act or ordinance" were used, proving clearly that the Government wish to hand over to the North-West Council the power that had been kept back last year, viz.: the power of dealing with property. The hon. gentleman said that this would be the case when representative institutions were there enjoyed, but the very use of the word "ordinance" proved that it was intended to hand over such power to the Council as it now existed, because a representative body framed Acts and the Council Ordinances.

MR. MACKENZIE: Then take out the word "ordinances."

MR. MASSON said that they did not want this to be done unless it could be done properly. Was it the intention of the Government to give to that body, irresponsible to the people, the right of legislating with regard to property? He maintained that this was the case, if he could judge in this respect from the word "ordinance." If so, why should they not at once give to the Council the right which had been retained in this relation.

MR. MILLS: I stated that when I introduced the Bill.

MR. MASSON said the Government was now reserving the right to empower the Council to repeal this law. Why not, then, throw upon them the responsibility of passing this very measure? He could understand this if they were dealing with such part of the public lands as would be distributed as homesteads; but this relates to the very part of the Bill which declared that the estate would be transmitted from one to another in a particular way. If the Council had not been so empowered, it was because the Government thought that the Council was not fit to do this; and, if so, why did the Government give the Council the right to repeal what the House was now doing? If the Council was not fit to pass the law, why should it be fit to repeal it?

MR. MILLS said, under the North-West Territories Act of 1870, the Council had elected members, who must far exceed in number the nominated members before they became a Legislature, with legislative functions and powers; and, until then, the laws which the Council passed were denominated Ordinances, so that the hon. the First Minister was quite correct in what he said. He did not think it desirable to give plenary powers to a nominated body; but, long before they would become a Legislature, under the provision of the North-West Territories Act, the Council would have representative members.

MR. MASSON.

MR. MASSON said very well. Did he understand the hon. gentleman to say that it was not the intention of the Government to give the Council the right to repeal this law until the Council had elected members? The point was a serious one.

MR. MACKENZIE: There is no intention to make a change at present, of course.

MR. MASSON: Is it right that the Council should repeal the measure before the people have some kind of representative institutions?

MR. MACKENZIE: They may have representative institutions at any time, as the hon. gentleman will notice by reading the North-West Territories Act, as soon as they have a certain population within a certain limit. There are now several districts which would probably be entitled to a member. Prince Albert has, probably, this right, and another district; but, there is no intention on the part of the Government to make a change until there is a reasonable number to constitute a constituent body.

MR. DESJARDINS said it would be wrong to deprive settlers of acquired rights.

MR. MILLS: The word "lawful" is used after the word "ordinance."

MR. LANGEVIN said that, either this clause should be struck out altogether, or it should be amended in such a way that the provisions of this Bill could be altered, or amended, or repealed only by a legislature elected by the people, and not by a body nominated by the Crown. This Parliament should retain the right to amend or repeal this Act until representative institutions were established in the North-West, when, of course, the Legislatures would have the same powers as those of Quebec and Ontario and the other Provinces.

MR. MACKENZIE: The hon. gentleman forgets that they have representative institutions now. It requires no legislation to give these institutions, for they absolutely have them now.

MR. LANGEVIN: Before they have sufficient population?

MR. MACKENZIE: We do not know how soon the population may be there. We cannot tell that.

MR. LANGEVIN: Why insert the word "ordinance"?

MR. MACKENZIE: Suppose that the entire number of Councillors allowed by the North-West Territories Act was now elected, it would still be an Ordinance under the terms of the Act. The word "ordinance" expresses all that the Territorial Legislature can do under the existing Territorial Act; and there is no intention to change it at present, and no intention to allow a handful of people to make ducks and drakes of property in the territory; but as soon as the population becomes somewhat larger in a particular part, no doubt new Provinces will be laid off. In the meantime, however, the acts of Government will be entrusted to this representative body with two or three nominated members that the Act gives us the power to appoint. Suppose that this clause were out altogether, as soon as the power would be given to them under the Act of 1875, then they could legislate upon this subject. The moment that you give them the power, which the Governor in Council may give, then they can legislate upon it precisely the same as with this clause, which simply declares that there is no intention to interfere with the rights of these people, whenever they have matters relating to real property or real estate under their charge, and deprive them of the right which they would have in any case under the general Act of legislation on these matters. So there is no possible harm in the clause remaining as it is.

MR. LANGEVIN said that if authority could be given by the Governor-General in Council to Local Councils to legislate on matters of this kind, this clause was not necessary. Why should people not have a permanent right over their property? As soon as a homestead was registered by a settler, his wife and children had an acquired right in it, and it was decidedly unfair that, after that right was conferred upon them, they should at any time be deprived of it.

MR. MACKENZIE said the people themselves, through their representatives, had a perfect right to alter the law as they chose. Parliament had no right to force a homestead law on any territory or Province. When, therefore, the North-West territory was constituted a Province, the people would have a right to decide whether they would continue the law now passed or not. It would be for them to say whether it was a beneficial law or not. Most of the members of the House seemed to believe the Bill was one which would be attended with beneficial results, and he concurred in that opinion. It did not matter a particle, so far as the Bill was concerned, whether the clause in question was left out or not.

MR. POPE (Compton) said it was desirable to omit the section, and thus not break faith with settlers.

MR. GUTHRIE said the section should be allowed to remain, because it let people know what they might expect—that the law was liable to be changed, whereas, if it was left out, they would be led to suppose that the present legislation could not be interfered with.

MR. DEVLIN said it would be useless to pass a law giving a homestead to those who might choose to avail themselves of the enactment, and then, in the course of a year or two, dispossess them of the rights they had acquired. He was of opinion that no future legislation could interfere with the rights acquired under this Act, and, if any Council, after the lapse of a few years, endeavoured to set it aside, it would be guilty of a downright fraud. He thought it was impossible for any Legislature which might hereafter be established to set aside the titles to these homesteads, which had been acquired under the authority of the highest Parliament in the Dominion of Canada. As suggested by the hon. the First Minister, however, this clause might be omitted altogether, because, by so doing, neither greater nor less power would be given to any Legislative Council which might, in time to come, be established. If persons who were opposed to settlement in the North-West—persons in the United States and elsewhere—observed the clause, and published it in the newspapers, an argument might be founded upon it which would materially interfere with immigration into these territories, and would defeat the very object which the Government and the House had in view.

MR. MILLS said he did not attach any importance to the clause, and had no objection to its being struck out.

Clause struck out.

Bill ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

House adjourned at
Ten minutes past
Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 1st April, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

MR. STEPHENSON said he wished to bring up a matter which he thought was a breach of privilege of the House. The matter affected himself personally, and he considered that it deserved some attention and some expression on the part of the House. It was contained in a letter written from Ottawa, dated House of Commons, 30th March, which appeared in the Hamilton Evening Times of Saturday last. The paragraph to which he referred read as follows:—

“The impression is gaining ground that the disgraceful Bunster-Cheval affair is chargeable to Sir John A. Macdonald and Mr. Stephenson, the Tory ‘Whip.’ It is stated that they egged Mr. Bunster on to sending his note to Mr. Cheval, and that Sir

MR. DEVLIN.

John was at the door of room 13 when the parties met. Not only that, but that he met a member for Toronto and told him there was going to be a fight. It is positively known that Sir John knew first of the affair, and was the first to carry the news into the Chamber. Mr. Bunster has a marked eye this morning, and hangs his head from shame. He was so ill last night after the excitement that two doctors were sent for to attend him. Everybody regrets the row, for which Mr. Cheval was not to blame. It is said that if Sir John A. Macdonald, Messrs. Caron, Stephenson and Macmillan would tell all they knew about the Bunster row, they could tell a pretty story. It is now said that after Mr. Cheval entered the room the door was locked, and that Sir John stood at it, hoping Mr. Bunster would thoroughly thrash Mr. Cheval. Mr. St. Jean, who saw him there, asked to be let in, and was told never to mind—it was all right. He, however, forced an entrance and separated the combatants.”

All he had to say was this: During the evening of Friday, after dinner, he had had no conversation with Mr. Bunster in any way or on any subject whatever. He knew nothing about the disturbance, and he was not present or near the door at the time it took place. It was not until some time after the disturbance had concluded that he knew of its occurrence. He had nothing more to say, except that he did think that certain parties engaged in newspaper correspondence from this House, and in this House, were apparently totally incapable of telling the truth. So far as he was concerned, however, of course, he was used to this sort of thing, having been for many years a newspaper man himself.

AN HON. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

MR. STEPHENSON said he recognized, coming from the Ministerial benches, the voice of the member for North York (Mr. Dymond). He thought that this hon. gentleman's experience tended, probably, in somewhat the same direction as his own, but, only so far as abuse was concerned, as possibly the hon. gentleman had rather indulged in it regarding others than received it himself. His (Mr. Stephenson's) experience, however, was in the opposite direction. In conclusion, it seemed to him that there were correspondents here who ought to have a little more regard not only for the amenities of society and common decency in connection with social and political life, than to absolutely coin stories of the kind he had already called attention to, and which had not a scintilla of truth in them. He merely made this statement in justice to himself and his constituents, because, he did not think it was right that such falsehoods should be sent forth continually and be coined from day to day, as they appeared to be coined.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he could only say this about the matter which his hon. friend had brought up: He was standing in the Chamber when the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) came in and said that Mr. Bunster and Mr. Cheval had gone to have a meeting in Committee Room No. 13, and he (Mr. Kirkpatrick) was afraid that there would be a collision: He merely said to Mr. Kirkpatrick, "Come round and let us go back;" and going out into the passage he met—and this was the only true statement in the whole paragraph—Mr. Macdonald, the member for Centre Toronto, and said to him, that there was going to be a fight in Committee Room No. 13. The hon. gentleman said:—"It is all nonsense, you are humbugging me," and walked away. He (Sir John A. Macdonald) went round and opened the door, and saw the two hon. gentlemen talking apparently quite pleasantly. He then turned away, and scarcely had he turned away before he heard the sound of blows. That was the whole story.

MR. MACKENZIE: Do I understand that the hon. member for Toronto did not go with the hon. gentleman to see the fight?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Yes; he came back as soon as he heard the blows, and he did so as soon as he could. He did not believe it at first, and he said: "I thought you were humbugging me, but I heard such a noise that I turned round immediately."

MR. MACDONALD (Centre Toronto) said he thought that the right hon. gentleman had forgotten to state that he said to him (Mr. Macdonald): "You are a man of peace; there is going to be a row; you come and try to prevent it." The hon. gentleman had certainly impressed him from his manner that, if there was to be a row at all, he (Sir John A. Macdonald) was extremely desirous to prevent any such result.

MR. BLAKE: You thought he was "humbugging?"

MR. MACDONALD said he had stated: "Surely there cannot be any such serious intention," but he then heard a tremendous row, and, as had been stated, he went there immediately afterwards.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the hon. gentleman followed. He thought that the proprietor of this newspaper should adopt the very proper course taken by the Globe, and dismiss the correspondent. It would tend to its respectability.

MR. BOWELL said he knew nothing about this transaction, but the same correspondent, a few days ago, had reported, and that statement had been copied in a local paper, that he had bullied—he believed that this was the expression used—the Clerk of the House into giving up to him some paper. All he had to say was that there was not a word of truth in the allegation. Any one who knew the Clerk of the House was aware that there was not a more courteous officer, he supposed, in the Dominion, or perhaps in the world; and he took this opportunity of saying publicly that he neither directly nor indirectly, had he ever used a discourteous word towards the Clerk, or ever sent him a discourteous message. This was as pure and complete a falsification as the most fertile brain could possibly conceive, in order to lie about members whom they did not like.

MR. WOOD said there was one thing which he must say to the credit of the correspondent in question. He believed that this gentleman was credibly informed as to every word that he had sent in this despatch. Whether it was judicious or not to send it, he was not to say; but he was quite satisfied that the correspondent had got his information from parties who knew what they were talking about, or at least who made him believe him so. He was quite satisfied that the correspondent of the Hamilton Times would not send a report contrary to fact that he knew to be so, any more than any gentleman in the House would do; and he was certain that if the correspondent had wronged any hon. member in any way, he would be the first man to make it right.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The difference is this: he makes the facts, and, therefore, it cannot be contrary to the facts he makes.

MR. WOOD said that the facts were there as stated, and they had not been controverted in the House. He thought that it was wrong to send these statements to the papers; the correspondent might have done it hastily, and perhaps if he had had a longer time to consider the matter he would not have put it as strong as had been the case. At the same time he did not think that he was any more to blame than some other correspondents, about whom nothing had been said in the House.

MR. MACDONNELL said he would not attempt to apologize for the correspondent of the Hamilton Times; but there were other correspondents to whom reference could be made, and particularly one from Nova Scotia, who had had the audacity, a few days ago, to attack an hon. member of the House in a most inexcusable and gross manner, for which it would be a mild proceeding to attach for libel if the attack were made on an ordinary citizen, and more so since it was directed against an hon. member of the House. An attack had been made on himself in this paper, the Morning Herald, of Halifax; and not only so, but his conduct and his proceedings in this House had been most grossly misrepresented, and in such a way as to justify the correspondent in being brought before the House and committed. The ridicule which had been thus perpetrated, regarding members of the House, was actionable or indictable for commitment with respect to a private individual or citizen. He did not intend to read these articles; but he might say, that they might not perhaps, have been correctly attributed to any person until their author, a few days ago, had published in the Ottawa Citizen the fact that he (Mr. Griffin) was the editor of the Morning Herald of Halifax. It was not worth while to give that individual the importance that would be attached to him were he to be brought before the House, but he (Mr. MacDonnell) thought the Speaker ought to exercise the powers invested in him, and exclude such offending correspondents from the galleries of the House. He cared not to what papers these correspondents were attached, for, in any case, the honour and dignity and decorum of the House should be preserved unsullied, and to do so was to perform an obligation and duty which they owed to the House and country, and to those who sent hon. members there to sit in the Chamber. The Speaker should so exclude all persons who had displayed the contumely towards hon. gentlemen that was exhibited by this correspondent from Halifax, who, a few Sessions ago, had attacked a most esteemed and honourable and a most worthy member of the House in a gross and wanton and libellous paragraph having respect to the hon. gentleman's infirmities. Only a few days ago, this correspondent had used the term "donkeys" with regard to hon. members; and this over his own signature.

MR. WOOD.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: It is a Parliamentary word.

MR. MACDONNELL said that hon. gentlemen might laugh, but he wished to tell hon. gentlemen that they were all equally vulnerable. He was quite willing to break a lance with this correspondent, but he did not desire to give to this individual from Halifax any undue importance. He would reiterate that it was due to the decorum and dignity of the House that the Speaker should exercise the power invested in him, and have excluded—and that permanently—from the galleries of the House correspondents who so disregarded the honour and dignity of the House.

MR. HADDOW said that, in looking over an article written by the individual alluded to by the hon. member from Inverness (Mr. MacDonnell), he had found his own character referred to as being dishonest. He had not felt inclined to take notice of the aspersion, as he had some idea of the character of the paper in question, owing to the fact that he knew a certain gentleman who had found it necessary, though in sympathy with the party represented by the Morning Herald, to exclude it from his family on account of the scurrilous language which it contained. As he was aware that this was the character of the paper, he had concluded that it was not worthy of his notice.

MR. MITCHELL said that he too had something to say in this connection. Some worthless fellow, representing the Globe newspaper, referred to him the other day in the correspondence in a disreputable manner. Of course, no member of the House would be guilty of such a thing, and he (Mr. Mitchell) treated the writer with the contempt he deserved, which, he thought, was the best way to answer such scurrilous remarks coming from any correspondent. He did not see why gentlemen who felt themselves aggrieved in this respect should take up the time of the House in discussing such scurrilous charges; they should be treated with the contempt they deserved.

Mr. PLUMB said he too had a grievance in this respect, but he did not think it worth while to criticise the remarks made regarding him, at any length, before the House. They reminded him, however, of a donkey story, regarding a nobleman high in rank, but not in intellect, who was recommended to the order of the Thistle. There was some demur to giving him that high distinction, and the Minister who was urged to confer the honour—Lord Derby, he believed—on being asked why he still refused, said that, if the Thistle was granted to the nobleman in question, he might eat it up. He thought this pertinent to the affair in question, and hon. gentlemen who did not wish to eat the Thistle had better let newspaper criticisms pass. He did not attach the slightest weight to the criticisms of the members of the gallery, and the only thing which caused him unpleasantness was to be praised by them.

INSOLVENT INSURANCE COMPANIES BILL.

(Mr. Blake)

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

MR. BLAKE introduced a Bill (No. 65) to make provision for the winding up of Insolvent Incorporated Fire and Marine Insurance Companies. He said a measure had been introduced for the purpose of winding up the Agricultural Insurance Company, and its provisions might have attracted the attention of the House. It appeared to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, to which the Bill was referred, that some of its provisions were open to very grave objection as applied to a private measure. As the House was aware, provision was made for the winding up of insolvent incorporated companies, but these provisions were expressly excluded from having any effect with reference to three classes of companies—banking, insurance and railway. Subsequently, it was found necessary to apply those provisions to insolvent incorporated banking companies, and an Act was passed last Session, he believed, applying them with the necessary qualifications, of course, to banks. It was now thought desirable to apply those provisions to incorporated American insurance companies as well. For his own part, he thought it might be an improvement to have a separate Bill, or make separate provision for the winding up of different insolvent insurance companies; but, as he knew, it would be hopeless to attempt to prosecute such a measure in the House. The modifications which he ventured to suggest were these: The House would at once realize that a very large proportion of the creditors of an insolvent insurance company were persons who had a claim for an unearned premium. Take the case of the insurance company now under discussion in the Committee room. He believed connected with it there was between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000 involved, representing, perhaps, as many thousand risks. The individual claims for premiums would not be much, but, in the aggregate, they amounted to a large sum. He proposed to make the person preferring such claims creditors for the proportion of unearned premium against the assets of a company, following out, in that particular, the provision made in the general law. He proposed that the first or post notice given to this vast mass of creditors should receive sufficient publicity by being inserted in the Gazette and a local newspaper. His other modification was, that it should be the duty of the assignee, after examining the records of the company and taking the evidence of its officers, to collocate to those persons as creditors on a dividend of loss, giving them at the same time the right, if they disputed the award, to make a claim, and giving to those whose claims would amount to $10 the power to collocate without going to an expense which would swallow up their claim altogether. Another modification he proposed was, that the assignee should be authorized, with the assent of the creditors (given at a meeting where the policy holders might vote if their claims were each under $100), to act on a resolution to be afterwards drawn by a Court or the Judge, making provision for the transfer of outstanding risks to any solvent insurance company reported by the Superintendent of Insurance as being in a satisfactory condition. The assets of the insolvent company would remain in the hands of the assignee as security for the performance of the obligations undertaken by the new company. This arrangement might be made in many cases, thereby involving a much less loss to the creditors of a company than by winding up the business. There should, he thought, be a short season during which risks might run off. He had shortly explained the general scope of the Bill, because he felt that at this stage of the Session, the measure could only be adopted by the unanimous consent of the House. It seemed to him that the only way to pass it would be by a suspension of the rules, and the second reading of the Bill, in order that it might be discussed in Committee of the Whole. He felt it his duty to make this suggestion to the House at the present moment, but it depended on how it was received whether he should move the second reading or the suspension of the rules.

MR. BLAKE.

MR. BLAIN said he desired to call the attention of the House to one or two points connected with the subject before the House. As the hon. member for South Bruce had explained, a question arose as to the Bill now before the Committee. He might say that he was on the sub-Committee, and that very considerable difficulty was experienced in dealing with the question. He might state also that that difficulty had not, in any wise, been removed. Objection had been taken by the hon. member for South Bruce, in the first instance, that this question ought not to be dealt with except as a branch of the general Insolvency Bill. That proposition would, he apprehended, affirm that the House ought not to resort to special legislation in any case, and the Bill before the Committee was ordered to stand over in order that the general Bill might be brought before the House and taken advantage of. He did not agree with the idea that it was the duty of the House to adopt a rule which would tie its hands in dealing with insolvent companies. It seemed to him that, in cases where interests so important were involved, they would be obliged to resort to special legislation. It could be very well seen that if the Bill now before the Committee was not adopted, no legislation could be got through the House this Session which would relieve the company referred to, the risks connected with which amounted, as had been stated, to between $30,000,000 and $40,000,000. His hon. friend from Hamilton said the risks had been reduced somewhat. Probably they might have been, but he (Mr. Blain) was merely going on the basis of the statement made by the hon. member for South Bruce. They were now asked to suspend the rules of the House in order to introduce this Bill, but he thought it might very fairly be considered whether it was not really the duty of the House to say whether they would deal with the case under the general terms of the British North America Act. It seemed to him that, in the event of a railway or any other great corporation getting into trouble, it was absolutely essential that they should resort to special legislation, and he would object, therefore, to hampering the hands of the House in dealing with insolvent companies. He thought a Bill should be made which would meet the particular case under the consideration of the Committee.

MR. PALMER said he entirely agreed with the remarks made by the hon. member for South Bruce, and when the Bill came before the House, he would be prepared to deal with it. He foresaw that considerable difficulty would arise in dealing specially with the private rights of corporations. As every member of the House was aware, the tendency of the Insolvent Bill was to destroy the rights of creditors, and he was, therefore, opposed to it. It was improper to call the measure proposed by the hon. member for South Bruce an Insolvent Act, because it was not intended to destroy a single right possessed by a creditor. It was to conserve the funds of insolvent corporations, and the hon. gentleman deserved credit for introducing such a measure. His (Mr. Palmer's) attention had been turned to this subject lately, and the House would doubtless bear with him when he said he was satisfied that general legislation was pernicious. He did not refer specially to the Bill introduced by the hon. member for West Northumberland, which was proposed, doubtless, with a good object; still he had several objections to it, because, instead of the creditors taking charge of an estate, it was left to the care of the debtor. That was an objection he could not get over, though he had a high opinion of the good intentions of the hon. gentleman. He saw no means of getting over the difficulties of the case except by some such legislation as that proposed by the hon. member for South Bruce.

MR. HOLTON said that as reference had been made to the position of the private Bill now before the Committee on Banking and Commerce, he might be permitted, in the interests of the House, to state the position in which it really stood. His hon. friend from West York had assumed that the fate of the Bill under his charge was dependent on the adoption of this measure. Such, however, was not the case. When the attention of the Committee was called to the inexpediency, perhaps the unconstitutionality of dealing with a private Bill on the insolvency of corporations, they thought it would be better to test the sense of the House in respect to a general law before deciding as to whether they should favour the private Bill or not. The private Bill, therefore, stood before the Committee for consideration. There was the strongest possible desire to give relief to those who applied for it, but they all felt that if that relief could be given under the shelter of a public law, in respect of which no question of constitutionality could possibly arise, it would be much better, and, therefore, the hon. member for South Bruce had brought this Bill before the House.

MR. DELORME said he thought there was no need for the rules to be suspended, as there would be plenty of time to discuss this matter. He knew of cases where not only the shareholders but the people insured had been defrauded, and he considered that this side of the question ought to be taken into consideration. It was known by all that the public at St. John suffered very largely from the great fire. Subsequent to that calamity, insurance agents were here, there and everywhere about the city, but the only good they did was to give employment to a few clerks. This was a case in which several members of this House were interested, and came as a severe example. He did not say for a moment that the directors were to blame; he believed the directors in this case, at least some of them, were honest men, and did what they believed to be their duty, but that they were misled by the managing director. The public ought not to suffer, however, simply because certain directors had been misled and because certain shareholders had taken up capital in a concern at one-quarter its value, only paying $25 for every $100 subscribed. He considered that, under the circumstances, those shareholders ought to pay the full amount subscribed, and when they found that the managing director had four hundred shares of the company, and that he had paid nothing at all on those shares, he believed this was the proper time to deal very severely with such companies. The insurance inspector ought to feel it his duty to see that those who were insured in these companies were secured, and, also, to see that the shareholders also were secured. There should be a report in such cases, showing if every shareholder had paid his share.

MR. ROCHESTER enquired whether this Bill would interfere with the general Insurance Act.

MR. HOLTON: No; it only provides machinery for the winding up of such companies.

MR. BLAKE said the Bill proposed that the same assignee should be appointed as under the present Act, to manage the general liquidation, but it provided, also, that he should distribute the deposits. It did not alter the rights of any persons having claims against the estate, but was intended as a more inexpensive mode of liquidation; the costs, at present, sometimes amounting to as much as the claims.

MR. ROCHESTER said he hoped the hon. gentleman would go a little further and place some remedy in the hands of the insurance agents against the large expenses incurred. They were aware that, as the law stood, a coroner must be appointed, and that coroner must summon a jury for every fire. If that could be changed in some way, so that the resident magistrate might take evidence on oath with reference to every fire that took place, it certainly would be the means of avoiding a great deal of expense. He had something to do with one insurance company, and he firmly believed one-half of the number of fires that had occurred during the past year had been wilfully caused by those interested.

MR. BLAKE: A great many more than one-third, I dare say.

MR. ROCHESTER said he thought resident magistrates ought to be empowered by law to make a preliminary examination in every case of fire, and this would be a great saving of expense and a great benefit to the country.

MR. DELORME.

MR. DESJARDINS said that, from what he understood of the Bill that the hon. member for South Bruce had brought forward, he thought it went very far towards meeting the objects of the promoters of the private Bill. These objects were not to deprive any of the creditors of a company of any right they might have against it, but to prevent needless expense in the winding up of a company. From the moment a company stopped business many of the creditors went to law in order to protect their claims, and so both the company and creditors were put to a large expense. They had no remedy for this, and, therefore, the company came to Parliament for relief. Subsequently, it was considered that the relief should come from a general law rather than from a private Bill, and he understood that the Committee were willing to give such a remedy as would meet the special requirements of the company. With these considerations before them, he hoped the House would permit the rule to be suspended in order that the Bill might be read a second time.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that, from what he could perceive of the principles of the Bill, he had no arguments to urge against the rule being suspended to meet the expediency of the case. If the motion was agreed to, when would the Committee be likely to meet upon it?

MR. HOLTON: The first meeting will be on Wednesday. In fact the private Bill to which reference has been made stands first on the orders of the Committee, and if this Bill could reach this Committee in time to be considered in connection with the private Bill, it would be a great convenience.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said it might form a precedent, but taking into consideration the fact that, if the rule was not suspended, the matter would be thrown over until next week, he would agree to the motion.

MR. POULIOT said that, in many points, the Bill was unsatisfactory, and ought to receive further consideration before it passed the second reading. He should oppose the suspension of the rule.

MR. BLANCHET said several members had spoken of this Bill from the shareholders' point of view. He spoke as a policyholder, and while he believed, as stated by the hon. member for Chateaugay, that this House was always ready to come to the relief of companies, he trusted that those who had this legislation in their hands—the hon. member for South Bruce and others—would see that all interests concerned were safely guarded.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he would suggest that, before the Bill came before the Committee, it should be printed and distributed among the members, and that those interested in the Bill might go before the Committee, either to forward or oppose any clause of it.

MR. HOLTON said he deemed it essential to have the Bill in the hands of every member, in a printed form, before the Committee sat.

Bill read the first time and second time.

BROCKVILLE & OTTAWA & CANADA
CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANIES BILL.

[BILL No. 9.]

(Mr. Galbraith).

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

MR. McDOUGALL (South Renfrew) moved an amendment to the 6th clause, that the words "five hundred" be erased and the words "seven hundred and fifty" be substituted. His object, he said, was to establish a limit to the amount of stock that might be issued in the amalgamated company. Certain municipalities, in the constituency which he represented, had stock in the Canada Central Railway, one of the two companies which were to be amalgamated under the Bill. It was proposed that the stock which they jointly held, $42,500, should be reduced to less than $17,000. He wished to impress upon the Committee that the proposed reduction was asked without any evidence whatever having been shown that such reduction should take place. The method of giving stock to the present stockholders in the two companies was, according to the Bill, so much per mile over both lines, namely: at the rate of $6,500 on each road. This assumed that the two roads were equally valuable. Before the Committee concluded they were equally valuable, they should certainly have some information on the subject. It was quite manifest that, in a consideration of this kind, two things, at least, should enter, viz.: the present earnings and future prospects, of each of these two roads, respectively, and the debts now existing upon each of them. Before that Railway Committee, he drew attention to the fact that the interests of the persons whom he represented in Parliament would be seriously affected by the proposed legislation. He had suggested to the legal gentleman who had been looking after the interests of these railway companies, in conjunction with the member for North Lanark (Mr. Galbraith), that some information should be given this House on this subject before asking for legislation to take away from these people what were their apparent rights. It was suggested that one of those companies, the Brockville & Ottawa Railway Company, had received legislation in the Ontario Parliament for the purpose of reducing the stock of the shareholders in it, and that, therefore, when this Brockville & Ottawa Company was to be amalgamated with the Canada Central Railway Company by this Bill, it was right that the Committee should consider the losses which the Brockville & Ottawa Company had previously suffered. He contended that they could not proceed on what had been done formerly with reference to these companies. They were obliged to consider the position of both companies at the present time. They should consider the assets of the two companies when they joined in this partnership—a partnership exactly similar to one entered into by two individuals. Another point which had been raised with reference to this matter was that municipalities, when they aided railways, received stock as part of the consideration, the principal consideration being supposed to be the benefit of the railway running through their part of the district. If the municipalities had a right to the stock, they had a right to all the advantages which flowed from it. If the Committee considered the fact that the Canada Central Railway Company, the road in which these individuals for whom he was now contending had an interest, was to form a link of the Pacific Railway, and thus be in a much better position than the Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company, which was liable to have a great portion of its traffic cut off by the Kingston railway, which would be built in a short time, they would see that the future prospects of the Canada Central Railway were much superior to those of the Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company. He believed Parliament should be very loath to allow legislation of this kind to receive its sanction without having some proof that the interests of the country were to be benefitted by it, and that interests would not be unduly sacrificed by such legislation. It was true that, when a representative of a particular portion of the country advocated the interests of a particular section or of the whole constituency which he represented, hon. members generally were apt to look with some degree of suspicion upon the statements he advanced. It was supposed to be very natural that a man should advocate the interests of his constituents, whether their claims were really just or not. On the other hand, if the people of a portion of South Renfrew had a just claim, no other hon. member had the same right to put it forward as the one who represented them. Any other hon. member would feel delicate about pushing forward a claim of a particular constituency, so long as its representative sat in the House. He had the right to expect from the representatives of the people in this House, that, unless the Canada Central Railway and Brockville and Ottawa Railway showed better reasons than they have produced for the proposed reduction in the stock of the municipalities to which he referred, they would not accede to their request for such reduction. The stock in both companies, except the amount held by the municipalities, was owned almost entirely by persons who were promoting this Bill. Any legislation reducing their stock would not affect the other individuals as it would affect the municipalities, because the former held the entire balance of stock in both companies. He proposed the amendment so as to leave the stock of the three municipalities in the position in which it was heretofore held in the Canada Central Railway books.

MR. McDUGALL.

MR. GALBRAITH said there were two questions asked by the hon. member for Renfrew which he could not answer. The first was as to the debts of the respective companies, and the second was as to the probable prosperity of the roads in the future. The people of Renfrew offered bonuses to the company if they would go on and extend the road, in return for which they received stock in the company. The road had been extended, and thus the principal thing for which the people of Renfrew contracted for had been obtained. With respect to the stock, the people of Renfrew held, out of 12,425 shares, 425 shares. The parties holding the balance, 12,000 shares, had agreed that this reduction should be made. The reduction upon the original stock of the Brockville and Ottawa Railway was 90 per cent., so that the stock originally held by that company represented now only 10 per cent. of what it originally was issued at. The reduction was to be equal over the whole stock. Should there at any time be a dividend, the reduction having been the same, and the amount to be divided being the same, the dividends would be the same. Under all the circumstances, the House would form its own judgment on the facts.

MR. McDUGALL (South Renfrew) said that when they gave their money, they obtained two things: the railway, and a certain amount of stock in it. The experience of most persons who had anything to do with railway companies was, that they did not obtain from those corporations more than they were entitled to, under their agreements. The municipalities having obtained stock, it should not be reduced unless sufficient reason were afforded; and it should be shown that on the amalgamation of the two companies—an amalgamation which he was bound to say was advisable in the public interest—the stock would not be reduced beyond what justice and fair play demanded. It would be of no consequence if the reduction was made in the same proportion. But he held that the property of the Canada Central was better than that of the Brockville & Ottawa Railway. While it might be difficult for him to show that such was the case, nevertheless, when the companies came before Parliament and asked for amalgamation and power to interfere with the rights of private individuals, who had an equal right with the companies to the protection of Parliament, they should show ample grounds for the reduction of the stock as proposed. No facts had been adduced, either before the Railway Committee or the House, to warrant the reduction, and the whole burden of proof, in that respect, rested on the company. Without such proof being submitted, the stock should be allowed to remain in its present position. He denied the accuracy of the contention that there was no point to be made from the fact that the rest of the stock in both companies was held by a private company. If the roads were able to pay interest on the bonds, and leave a surplus for working expenses, it would be of vast consequence, for the greater the reduction in the stock, the more profit would accrue to that private company.

Mr. LAFLAMME said the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. McDougall) had admitted that the amalgamation was made in the interests of both companies and that it had been a matter of consideration by the stockholders. The bondholders and stockholders of both companies had agreed upon the amalgamation, and, after valuing the assets of the companies, had arrived at what would hereafter be common property. The hon. member had forgotten that those statements were given by the companies. The bondholders who covered the entire value of the property and all the stockholders—except those holding stock to the value of $42,000 in one company, and whose claims were advocated by the hon. member for North Renfrew—had agreed upon that valuation, and that the amalgamation should be made upon that basis. Any surplus would be distributed pro rata to the respective shareholders, notwithstanding the nominal value of the stock.

Mr. McDOUGALL (Renfrew) said the hon. the Minister of Justice had forgotten that the information which was necessary to enable them to determine whether the proposed reduction should take place in the stock of private individuals had not been laid before the Railway Committee. Notwithstanding the remarks of the hon. Minister, he was not shaken in the position he had assumed.

Mr. HAGGART said that, when it was considered that nine-tenths of the stock of the Canada Central and Brockville and Ottawa roads was held by a single individual, it would be seen that it was a matter of comparative indifference to him what were the terms of amalgamation between the two companies. That might, however, be a matter of vital importance to parties who held a small amount of stock. The position taken by the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. McDougall) was a very proper one, in view of the fact that the Bill would authorize the company to make a new issue of bonds, which, in all probability, would be taken up by the same individual, and it gave, moreover, the power, which had not been obtained by any other company, of absolutely selling and disposing of the rights, title and franchise of portions of the road.

Amendment negatived.

On the 10th clause,

Mr. HAGGART moved an amendment to place the municipalities as stockholders in their original position. He said that, by an Act of the Ontario Legislature, the bonds were reduced to 25c. on the dollar, and as the stockholders, represented by the gentleman to whom reference had been made, agreed to the proposal, the remaining stockholders were obliged to submit, and the minority were thus legislated out of their rights. Under the Bill, bonds would be issued over them, and they asked to be reinstated in their original position.

MR. GALBRAITH said a loan was granted by the old Parliament of Canada to the counties of Lanark and Renfrew, the town of Brockville and the township of Elizabethtown, to enable them to assist a company in building a railway to reach from the St. Lawrence, at Brockville, to Pembroke, at Ottawa River. After some time the company which first undertook the contract for the road failed on account of one of the principal contractors being lost at the time the Arctic steamship was burnt. Considerable confusion arose as to how the road was to be proceeded with. It was understood other parties were applying for the debentures that had been granted to those municipalities; and the probability was that, unless those debentures were issued in a short time, they might be given to other places. The County Councils of Lanark and Renfrew, with the township of Elizabethtown, which was unwilling at that time to enter into the arrangement, and the Town Council of Brockville, which also was unwilling to enter into the arrangement, agreed that they would go on and build the road as far as their means, which comprised the debentures, could extend it, expecting that they would have sufficient to complete it to the Ottawa River. A large amount had been spent on it at the time, and it was supposed that they could complete it and put it in a position for traffic. They proceeded with the work and extended the road from Brockville as far as Almonte, when the means in the hands of the municipalities failed. So long as the parties in England, who advanced all the iron for the railway, received interest upon the bonds they had accepted in payment of the iron, they were satisfied that the road was in a good condition; but so soon as the debentures of the municipalities had been exhausted, the company was unable to pay the interest, and those parties thereupon sent an agent to Canada to ascertain the reasons why the interest was not paid. When he came here he found the company was in a hopeless insolvent position, and he refused to render any assistance until such time as it was agreed that the road should be handed over to the parties he represented.

MR. HAGGART.

The old company was unwilling to surrender the management of the road and kept control of it during several years, endeavouring every year to raise in England, upon such securities as they could offer, sufficient money to enable them to extend the line. Ultimately, finding they could not do that, they entered into an agreement with the agent of the parties in England. Immediately after the completion of that agreement, and also an agreement which the agent entered into with the municipalities respecting their lien upon the road, he advanced at once $300,000 in gold, which was expended on the road, and extended it from Almonte to Sand Point, placed a large amount of rolling stock on the line, and built a large machine shop and round house at Brockville. Since that time, those parties had kept control of the road, but they found that the amount of securities they held was something like $600,000, together with the amount of the indebtedness of the company, with the interest annually accruing, made it utterly hopeless to expect the company would ever be able to redeem itself. Those parties, therefore, came forward, and having obtained the assent of a large number of persons holding bonds and stock in Canada, applied to the Ontario Legislature, and obtained an Act reducing the entire amount of stock and bonds held. The bonds, up to a certain date, were to be reduced at the rate of 50 per cent., bonds received after that date, and all bonds held by parties in Canada, were reduced to 25 per cent., and all stock held by other parties reduced to 10 per cent., and the whole was converted into ordinary stock of the company, bearing no interest. That comprehensive scheme was entered into with the hope of placing the road in a proper position. It was now proposed that the two roads should be placed in such a position as would enable them at some time to redeem themselves from the burden of debt that rested upon them, and they came to Parliament to ask that a measure might be passed with that view, and this party, holding $500 worth of bonds, asked that the bonds of the company should be paid over to the parties holding the stock of the company. It was the intention that the new issue of bonds should be applied generally to two purposes: first to pay off the bonded debt of the company, and all the ordinary liens and debt of the company, and in the meantime that the balance should be appropriated towards the extension of the Canada Central Railway. If this resolution were to pass, and if these new bonds were to be paid over to the old bondholders in proportion to the amount of bonds which they held, it would swallow up the entire amount of the bonds left after paying the ordinary bonded debt of the two companies as it stood at present; consequently, he thought that the House would see that it would be utterly preposterous to adopt the amendment moved by his hon. friend.

Mr. LAFLAMME said that the hon. gentleman would find, on reconsidering his motion, that he wanted the House to destroy a solemn engagement entered into by parties under the sanction of the Local Government of Ontario, which would be contrary to all principles of law. They had no right to interfere with this legislation. It had been settled by competent authorities when this railway was under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Ontario Legislature, and to do so would be virtually to repeal these provincial enactments and revive claims which, by mutual consent, had been arranged and settled. He believed that the hon. gentleman would see that his motion could not be carried.

Mr. HAGGART said that here were bondholders who held but a very small portion of the stock of the company. As had been stated in the House, nine-tenths of the stock of both companies was held by one individual, who, by his mere voice, could issue bonds that might cut out entirely the other bonds of the company, his own and others. It was in this individual's interest that his own stock should be wiped out in both companies, if the entire control of the road was given him. Three-fourths of the stock had the right of legislation under this Bill, and those who held but a small portion of it had no voice at all in the matter. This person could do what he liked. What right had one person, who owned, perhaps, nine-tenths of the stock, to the prejudice of the holders of the remaining tenth, to sell bonds for the extension or building of the road from Pembroke upwards? He could issue bonds, purchase the road and build it, and, in fact, do anything he liked, without the consent of the holders of the remaining tenth. If it was provided that not only three-fourths of the stock, but a majority consisting of three-fourths of the stockholders of the company should take action, some protection would be given to those individuals who now had none whatever.

Amendment negatived.

On clause 13,

Mr. HAGGART said that it was an extraordinary one. It divided the road into two sections, eastern and western. The former was already built, from Ottawa to Pembroke, and the latter was unbuilt. This clause allowed the amalgamated company to enter into a contract for the further construction of the road; but they were to be in no way liable to the contractor or to any person who entered into the contract for the Western extension, further than related to the bonds issued for the Western extension. In explanation of this clause in Committee, the promoter of the Bill had stated that negotiations were in progress, whereby a contract was being given to an individual, with the consent of the Government, for the building of this portion of the road. He would ask the leader of the Government in what position the contract with this individual was?

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is in an unexecuted position.

Mr. HAGGART said it would be an extraordinary thing for an hon. gentleman and the leader of the Government to allow a company, which was about to enter into a contract with the Government for the extension of the road from Pembroke upwards, to be relieved from all liability with regard to the extension, as far as the portion already built was concerned. This clause relieved the company from all liability to the Government, and, in fact, allowed them to enter into a contract for the extension of the road on receipt of a certain bonus, without being at all responsible to the Government.

MR. LAFLAMME said that this clause was intended to protect the bondholders of the amalgamated company which would be authorized to construct the extension, provided that the party doing so would take for security that portion of the line. Consequently, this was in the interest of the stockholders, and it would be another matter for the Government to consider if the contract was to be at all made with the Government.

MR. HAGGART: I understood that the Act gave the Government power to enter into a contract with existing or contemplated railways.

MR. LAFLAMME: No extra power whatever is given. It leaves the two companies exactly as they were in that respect.

MR. HAGGART: Decidedly; but it allows the company to enter into a contract with the Government, while it will not be at all liable with respect to the portion of the road already built. The bondholders or owners of the road already built to Pembroke will be in no wise liable for the completion of the contract.

MR. LAFLAMME: It will be liable when the contract is completed. The moment that the contract is executed the amalgamated company will become responsible to the amount of $12,000 per mile on bonds to be issued.

MR. HAGGART said he then did not understand the clause. It stated that the amalgamated company might contract for the construction of the extension known as the Western section, or any part thereof, without being liable in respect to the Eastern section, until it should have accepted the extension from the contractor. The latter might never do that.

MR. LAFLAMME: Well, then, the extension will never be built.

MR. HAGGART said it might be built and the money advanced, to the amount of $12,000 per mile, by the Government.

MR. HAGGART.

MR. LAFLAMME: But it would not be advanced until the road is completed.

MR. HAGGART: The hon. gentleman says so; but has not money been advanced on that section of the road ready for the iron.

MR. LAFLAMME: That is another matter altogether.

MR. GALBRAITH moved that the 11th section be struck out.

MR. HAGGART said that, if this was done, the 13th section would also have to be omitted. Was he to understand that the only part of the Bill which made the eastern section of the road at all liable as to the extension of the road, was to be removed by this clause concerning the western series of the bonds and the balance of the proceeds of the eastern series? Was he to understand that the liability would relate solely to the western section?

MR. GALBRAITH said that, as he understood it, the eastern series of bonds would be issued, and the ordinary bonded debt of the company would be redeemed by this class of bonds. The western series of bonds would be issued for the extent of the road to be built; and the whole amount would be applied, he supposed, towards the construction of that road; and the balance of the eastern series of the bonds, after redeeming the present debt of the company, to which it was intended that the bonds should be applied, would also be applied to the extension of the road.

MR. HAGGART said there was no clause to cover this matter. They struck out the balance of the proceeds of the eastern series which was to be so applied; this was the only clause permitting the issue of any portion of the eastern series.

MR. LAFLAMME: That is stated in a previous clause. The western series alone shall be used, and only after the acceptance of the road and the payment of all existing liabilities on the eastern section, preferential and otherwise, shall these bonds be executed on the eastern series, and pay for the western extension.

Motion agreed to.

On the 13th clause,

MR. CURRIER said that one man or one private individual owned both roads, and permission was to be given by their legislation to contract for the extension of the road to—he did not know where. At all events, this legislation would authorize that extension of the road, and at the same time it protected the property of these individuals from being liable to the creditors of the company for the extension. It exempted the property held in these two roads from any liability on the part of this one man or this one private individual with regard to the extension of the road.

Clause agreed to.

MR. PALMER said the Bill had been altered in Committee, and on its third reading he would move its postponement for three months. If he understood it correctly, the Bill virtually allowed the company to build a railroad, reserving at the same time a portion of their property which should not be liable to seizure for their debt. He must protest against such legislation, and he could not understand how a Bill like that could have passed the Committee on Railways. He thought the hon. Minister should make some explanation in answer to the question put by the hon. member for Ottawa.

MR. LAFLAMME said the answer had already been given. It was in the interests of the Canada Southern Railway that such an extension as that sought should be granted. To effect this extension, Parliament was asked, on behalf of the shareholders of the two amalgamated companies, to sanction a provision that their liability should not be affected, the Canada Southern being liable to a certain extent for the construction of the western portion of the line. Certainly, there was nothing in that to cause alarm.

MR. PALMER said that did not explain away the fact that the eastern portion of the railway company's property was to be held free from liabilities which the company might have incurred.

MR. LAFLAMME: That is a matter for the contractor. If he is satisfied with less security, what have we to do with it?

MR. PALMER said the company might contract debts with a farmer and other parties, and when payment is wanted it is found that there are no funds out of which payment can be made. That was the objectionable part of the measure.

MR. LAFLAMME: If my hon. friend builds a house, he does not become liable to all the workmen who are employed by the contractor.

MR. PALMER said he did not propose that the company should be liable except for what they agreed to in the contract. What he contended was, that no part of their property should be exempt from liability in case the contractor might have a just claim against them.

MR. LAFLAMME: Then, will not the hon. gentleman allow the company to make a contract?

MR. PALMER: Not unless the company is liable to pay for breach of contract.

MR. LAFLAMME: The hon. gentleman has as much right to interfere between the company and their contractor, as he has between private individuals. It will be for the persons who enter into an arrangement with the railway company to say if they have a proper security for payment of the work done or not. We are not obliged to legislate for them, or say we will exact such and such securities.

MR. BIGGAR: We will say that the Canada Central Railway is represented by one man who is worth a million of dollars, part of which consists of railway property. He wants to extend his road a hundred miles further, and he comes to this House and asks our consent, and yet, asks that his property is to be exempt from the liabilities which he may incur. I do not see what justice there is in such a proposal.

MR. MACKENZIE said he had not had an opportunity of being present at the Railway Committee when this Bill was being discussed, but, having paid some little attention to the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John, and the member for Ottawa, he had come to the conclusion that it was a matter of indifference whether the clause was allowed to remain or not. The railway company would have a right to make what bargain they pleased with a contractor, and they might also exclude any portion of their property from being held as security for the performance of the contract. He believed they could do so whether the clause remained or not, and it was a matter of indifference, therefore, whether it should be adhered to.

MR. PALMER said that, though it might be perfectly true that a man could enter into a contract of this kind with his eyes open, no part of the company's property should be exempted from liability, unless for some very particular reason. If the clause was retained, the company, although they had a considerable portion of their property still in their possession, could refuse to pay a single dollar, on the ground that they had no funds.

MR. MACKENZIE said this referred to a specific contract already entered into, and it was merely provided that the company might, if they pleased, enter into an agreement with contractors by which a certain portion of their line might be exempted from being held as security.

MR. PALMER: You are wrong in that.

MR. MACKENZIE: That is how I read it, and reading it in that way makes me suggest that it is a matter of perfect indifference whether the section should be retained or not. The hon. gentleman said, a little time ago, that articles under this clause might be obtained from farmers and others along the line without payment being made. Now, there can be nothing of the kind, because the contractor will order everything himself. As the hon. gentleman is aware, few contractors are great simpletons, and they will be the best judges as to the security they want.

MR. PALMER said this was a vicious piece of legislation altogether.

MR. MACKENZIE said that at the most, the stipulation in question was mere surplusage. He quite understood the force of the hon. gentleman's argument, but the Bill could not be considered in the general sense of tending to evil.

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. LAFLAMME said the corporation stood in the position of an individual, and could make a contract under the ordinary conditions.

MR. GALBRAITH said the contractors might suffer in the interim; but there was only a contract in anticipation at present, and those parties who were likely to enter into a contract, would thoroughly understand the position in which this Bill placed them. The company would agree to pay them a certain amount in money and a certain amount in bonds of the company, per mile, for the construction of the road, and these contractors would understand that, besides the road they were making, they had no claim in any portion of the present constructed road until such time as their contract was completed, and the road was taken off their hands. The present contractors were not to be held in any way liable for the new portion of the road contracted for, and the company would have no liability on account of the new portion until it was finished and the contractors had been paid according to their original contract.

MR. PALMER said that the great difficulty was the length of time that might be taken in building a road. The Pacific road, for instance, might be in course of construction for twenty years. He did not see any object in this provision at all, because, as he had said before, if a man made a contract under that Bill, his agreement would be as chaff; the Company could do what it liked. They might enter into a contract for the building of the road, and although the work might go on to forty years, creditors would have no hold upon them, except as regarded the property that might be used in the construction of the road. Then the hon. gentleman said, with reference to corporations, that any corporation could come to this House and get power to do anything; but no corporation was allowed to start without having some capital, without having something over the contract.

MR. MACKENZIE: Any number.

MR. PALMER: Without anything at all?

MR. MACKENZIE: Yes, without a cent.

MR. PALMER: Then all I can say is that it is a most vicious state of legislation. If any company, whether for railway or other purposes, could work upon the credit of this country with any capital at all subscribed, I was, happily, ignorant of it. I hope the hon. gentleman will strike this out of his Bill. At present, the great evil of the country is that these corporations are incurring debts and liabilities, and yet their property is not liable.

MR. IRVING said he understood that under no circumstances would the company be responsible for the eastern section, and that the extension should not be made available by the builder or contractor of the western section until it had been accepted upon such terms as might be agreed upon between him and company. There was nothing involved in that. It was looked upon by the Committee as a safeguard to the public, that they might know the terms under which that section was being built; and surely there could be no objection to a provision that placed the company in a position to build the road, but shut out any person from any responsibility in respect to each contract, except the contractor himself, who would have his liability limited under the terms of his contract.

Bill ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

BEAUHARNOIS CANAL ENLARGEMENT.

QUESTION.

MR. ROBILLARD enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to cause the work connected with the repairing and enlargement of the Beauharnois Canal to be commenced next summer; and, if not, when such work will be begun?

MR. MACKENZIE: The Government do not propose to proceed with the St. Lawrence canals this year.

THE SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURT ACT.

QUESTION.

MR. MITCHELL, for Mr. McCARTHY, enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government, during the present Session, to introduce a Bill to amend "The Supreme and Exchequer Court Act," by requiring that there should be four Terms or Sittings instead of two in each year?

MR. LAFLAMME: It is the intention of the Government.

RECOGNITION OF NATURALIZED GERMAN AND OTHER CANADIAN SUBJECTS.

QUESTION.

MR. YOUNG enquired, Whether any further despatches have been received from the Imperial Government in reply to the Address to Her Majesty, unanimously passed by the House of Commons in the Session of 1875, praying that naturalized Germans and other Canadian subjects of the British Crown may be recognized and protected in all parts of the world?

MR. MACKENZIE: The only reply received to that address was the despatch from Lord Carnarvon, published in the Sessional Papers of 1876, in which his Lordship stated that it was not possible, at that time, to make arrangements with the view of carrying out the views adopted by the House of Commons in its resolution and address. But his Lordship proposed, after the work of the Session was over, to take the matter up with the view of finding some solution. That has never been done, to our knowledge; at least, no despatch has been received from the Imperial authorities since that date. It is probable the attention of the Imperial Government will be drawn to this subject again by the Administration here.

WINTER COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

QUESTION.

Mr. POPE (Queen's, P.E.I.) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to take any steps this season towards the construction of a railway from the Intercolonial Railway, near Aulac, to Cape Tormentine in New Brunswick, and from Cape Traverse to the main line of railroad in Prince Edward Island, for the purpose of placing the Island in continuous communication in winter with the Intercolonial Railway system of the mainland of the Dominion, as required by the terms under which the Province of Prince Edward Island consented to become a part of the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I must ask the hon. gentleman to expunge the latter paragraph: "As required by the terms under which the Province of Prince Edward Island consented to become a part of the Dominion of Canada." We can scarcely admit of an argument in a question. In reply, as a matter of course, after all that has been said and written about the success or non-success of establishing communication, the whole subject is under the consideration of the Government, with a view to the adoption of the best means possible, under the circumstances, of effecting that communication. I can hardly say more at present.

INTER-PROVINCIAL FERRY ON THE RESTIGOUCHE.

QUESTION.

Mr. HADDOW enquired, Whether a promise was at any time made by the Government to aid, by subsidy, the establishment of an Inter-Provincial Steam Ferry, between Campbellton and Cross Point, on the River Restigouche?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I cannot find that any promise of this kind has been made. I am not aware that it had been made by the late Administration. I am perfectly certain it was not made by the present one. There could be no object in making such promise, because all ferries of an inter-provincial character are regulated by public action. There may be special circumstances in this case, but I have not been able to find any communications between the Government and the local authorities, in the nature of a promise.

Mr. MACKENZIE.

WHARF AT ST. ANNE, CHICOUTIMI.

QUESTION.

Mr. CIMON enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to build a wharf at St. Anne, in the county of Chicoutimi?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am not able to answer that question at present. Some works have to be done in the neighbourhood, but what the precise nature of these works is, I cannot, at present, say.

EXPLORATION OF BIC AND PETIT MÉTIS HARBOURS.

QUESTION.

Mr. Fiset enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to complete the exploration of Bic Harbour, and also to cause an exploration to be made of Petit Métis Harbour?

Mr. MACKENZIE: The exploration of Bic Harbour was mostly concluded at a previous time. The western part has yet to be fully completed. It is our intention to complete that part this year, and also to make an examination of the Little Métis with a view to ascertain its capabilities to become a good harbour.

LONDON EMIGRATION AGENT.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

Mr. POPE moved for a detailed statement of the money paid out by the London Emigration Agent during the years 1876 and 1877, respectively, showing to whom paid, and for what service.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN AGENT AT TOBIQUE RESERVE.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved for copies of all correspondence between the Government and the Indians of Tobique

Reserve in New Brunswick, regarding the appointment of a resident Agent, and of all other correspondence bearing on that subject since 1873. He said that, about the year 1872, a change was made in the Province of New Brunswick by which, instead of local agents, the experiment was tried of appointing two general agents for New Brunswick, one of whom was appointed for the eastern, and the other for the western sections. Shortly afterwards, great dissatisfaction existed in his Province with regard to this change. He, in particular, called the attention of the Government to it, and succeeded in getting instructions sent to Mr. Spragg who was then, he believed, Superintendent of Indian Affairs, to appoint a local agent. He was satisfied that everything had been settled to the satisfaction of the parties interested, but on making further enquiries found, that Mr. Spraggs had, in the meantime, died, and matters remained in the same state. During that year, a change in the Government took place and Mr. Laird became Minister of the Interior, with, of course, control of the Indian affairs. He (Mr. Costigan) brought the matter under the notice of the Government by motion in the House. On that occasion, Mr. Laird stated he was not aware of the circumstances, but would enquire into them, and that, in all probability, he would visit the Province during the coming summer, and see that the grievances were redressed. The hon. gentleman did not come. At the next Session, he (Mr. Costigan) again brought the matter before the House. He pressed it again while the House was in Committee of Supply. The hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said the matter would then be taken up by the Government. The matter had remained in the same condition, year after year. What he complained of was that, by the present arrangements there were certain Indian funds accumulated by certain small, very small, revenues in the Province of New Brunswick. Nine-tenths of the money derived from the Indian reserves all over the Province of New Brunswick was derived from this Tobique Indian reserve. These Indians wanted a local agent; they petitioned for one five or six years ago, and had since renewed their petitions every year. They complained that the present agent lived at Fredericton, about one hundred miles from them, where he could not be consulted by them; that he drew, at the same time, some $400 out of their monies to pay his salary, and was entitled, besides, to travelling expenses, and that this was unfair to them as it absorbed a large amount of their very small revenue; while they could get a responsible man, one in whom they could have every confidence, living on the reserve himself, who would perform the whole service for about one hundred dollars per year. Besides this, the Government had deemed it wise to give permits to cut lumber upon this reserve. This permission was a wise one, because it was better this timber should be cut, as if not cut in this way and revenue derived from it, it would be destroyed by fires, the country being settled around this reservation. With regard to stump work, parties had got licenses to cut lumber on this reserve, on payment of $1 per thousand logs. The inconvenience of the agent living at Fredericton was plainly shown that when he came to collect stumpage, his travelling expenses amounted to ninety cents per thousand logs; in fact, doubling the stumpage. The whole complaint of the Indians was this: they believed the Government was their protector, that the Government had control of their property and were to give them an agent to look after them, whom they could consult. That agent lived a hundred miles away. The Indians said: give us an agent residing upon the Indian reserve, whom you could appoint for one hundred dollars per year, which would save $300 out of our fund, and give us an agent to whom we might apply in case of necessity. The Indians had a tract of land cleared on this reserve. The white settlers who were granted lands on this same reservation, and were included in the district or parish, passed certain regulations with regard to their lands, the result of which was that their cattle were allowed to run and destroy the crops of the Indian settlers. The result was, they had turned this cleared tract of the Indian into a common. He could see no objection to the Government appointing a resident agent at a salary of $100. The Indians had recommended an agent who, he was certain, would give every satisfaction. The Government had said last year they did not care to displace an officer. He did not desire that Mr. Fisher, who was the present Indian agent in that section of the Province, should be dismissed, but that he should continue to discharge his duty within reasonable distance of the reserve, so that he might not be in a position to eat up the small revenue of the Indians in travelling around the country, when a resident agent could be found who would have no travelling expenses to pay. The Indians had sent in petitions signed by all members of the tribe in the vicinity, asking that that small favour might be granted. His object in moving for the papers was to place the facts before the country and submit the case fairly before the Government, and ask them to give it their serious consideration with a view to satisfying the demands of those people.

Mr. MILLS: The subject has received consideration. I have looked into the application of the Indians and the representations made by the hon. gentleman, and as soon as the Session is over I have no doubt whatever I shall be able to deal with it in a manner satisfactory to the hon. member.

Motion, with leave of the House, withdrawn.

THE CASE OF SERGEANT HART.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved for copies of all correspondence between the Government and L. Hart, R.E., regarding his appointment as Drill Instructor under Lieutenant-Colonel Scoble, and his subsequent dismissal; also of all other correspondence relating thereto, and to the complaint of Sergeant Hart on account of loss sustained by said dismissal and otherwise. He said in submitting to the House his reasons for moving for the papers, he could not adopt a better course than to read extracts from papers which had been placed in his hands. The gentleman who complained of having sustained loss from being dismissed from office improperly made the following statement:—

Mr. COSTIGAN.

“I came to this country in May, 1875, having been discharged at Bermuda from the corps of Royal Engineers, after serving 21 years and 2 months, and failed to find employment till November of the same year, when I was informed at the Pension Office in Toronto that a certain Col. Scoble was about to raise a corps of engineers, and had been making enquiries for such a person as I, for the purpose of being instructor, etc., to the proposed new corps. I, therefore, went to see the Colonel, who then and there engaged me at a salary of $300 a year, and a house, rent free, with a promise to obtain me a civil situation as well, at two and a-half, or two dollars, at least, a day, in addition to my military appointment, and giving me to understand that he had the necessary authority, and would commence operations forthwith; but, this, I soon learned was not the case, and that he was only negotiating for authority at the time, instead of having it, as he gave me reason to believe he had. This was deception number one, to begin with, and three months elapsed before the necessary authority was eventually given to form the corps; and, in the meantime, I understood from him that I was to receive pay from the time of my engagement with him, as the delay was no fault of mine. The corps was not organized till the 15th January, 1876, and on the 19th, Col. Scoble requested me to write him a letter asking for the appointment of Instructor, in order that he might have something to show as a basis on which to ground an application he was about to make to the Government for $200 a year towards the payment of my salary of $300. This I readily agreed to do, never for a moment thinking that it would afterwards be construed to mean that I had not had the appointment previous to that date, but simply as a guarantee to the Government that Col. S. was acting in good faith, and that he really had engaged me as Instructor, and, moreover, though the original compact between us was only a verbal one, I never doubted that a person holding rank as a Colonel could be other than a gentleman. * * * So much did I depend on the Colonel's promises that I refused a situation, at $40 a month, as night watchman, and, of course, among other matters, had great cause to regret having done so. I wish it to be carefully noted that the fact of the Colonel applying to the Government for the $200 had nothing whatever to do with me, for, whether he succeeded in getting it or not, he would, according to our agreement, have to pay me, it being with him I made the contract. Eventually, the Colonel got me into the office he was in himself, at a salary of only $250 a year, instead of what he originally promised me, still leading me on to believe that it was only temporary; but, finding that the position was unsuitable in every way, and that, in vulgar parlance, he was only hoaxing me, I resigned—not from the corps, as he engaged me for three years, but from the civil appointment. After the lapse of fifteen months from the time of my engagement, things continued to be in a very unsatisfactory state, I only having received $180 out of $375, and this mostly from other officers of the corps, instead of from Col. S., as commanding officer.”

Mr. Hart made the following statement in regard to the manner in which he was dismissed:—

“When His Excellency the Governor-General visited Toronto in January, 1877, the engineer corps was detailed to furnish a guard of honour for the occasion, and an orderly for His Excellency, if one was required, and, as I was out of civil employment at the time, Col. S. asked me if I would be orderly—my position on the staff either as Sergeant-major or Instructor, exempting me from the performance of such duties—to which I replied that I would on his letting me know if I was wanted. I accordingly made arrangements for performing this duty, and, sooth to say, felt rather proud of the honour, though I had never been orderly in my life before, being mostly on the staff in the Imperial service; and, in order to be sure there would be no mistake, I remained in my quarters for two days, expecting the order to arrive every moment for me to go on duty, but when it did not come in that time, I concluded that I was not needed, and felt rather disappointed at such being the case. However, after the lapse of more than a week, I found out that my services had been required, and that, moreover, Col. S. had been duly notified of the fact, but had neglected to let me know, as per arrangement, and, in order to cover this dereliction of duty on his part, but more, perhaps, to find some excuse for getting rid of me, he placed me ‘in arrest,’ as he termed it, notwithstanding that he had no authority to do so, and, finally, he dismissed me from the corps for ‘disobedience of orders.’ On finding that matters were being conducted in my case in anything but a military fashion, I applied in the proper way to the proper authorities for redress, or at least an investigation, as I treated the arrest as though it had been a legal one, and failed to obtain it.

The complaint of Mr. Hart was that he was employed by Col. Scoble to perform certain services; that he did perform them; that he was competent to perform them; and, notwithstanding that fact, he was dismissed. Ample proof of his qualification was afforded by the following certificate, which he presented:—

“1st Newcastle-on-Tyne }
“Engineer Volunteers.”

“HEAD-QUARTERS, ELSWICK,
“5th February, 1865.

“I hereby bear testimony to the character and abilities of Sergt. L. Hart, R. E., Instructor to this corps under my command. Sergt. Hart has held this appointment for the last seven years, and I cannot speak too highly of his zeal, energy and tact. He possesses qualities eminently suited to the instruction and guidance of Volunteers. His abilities are good and practical, and he is esteemed and respected by the officers and members of this corps.

(Signed.) “PERCY WESTMACOTT.
“Comd. 1st N. E. Volunteers.”

That certificate would be all that was necessary to establish his character for efficiency in the position he held as Instructor in the Province of Ontario. Mr. Hart complained that he did not receive the pay to which he was entitled; that he was dismissed from the service in an improper manner; that he agreed with Col. Scoble to perform a certain duty in connection with His Excellency’s visit to Toronto at that time; that he was prepared to discharge that duty; that Col. Scoble acted as if he had refused to perform it, and made that the ground of his discharge. That statement might not be all true, but there must be some tribunal to which Mr. Hart could appeal and obtain justice. He had applied to the Deputy Adjutant-General; he had petitioned His Excellency, and now he appealed to Parliament. At all events, he hoped the hon. Minister of Militia would point out some course which might be taken to obtain redress in the present case. It would be a very unsatisfactory position if a militia officer could engage a drill instructor for one, two or three years, and afterwards refuse to pay him his full salary and no means of redress be open to the person so engaged.

MR. JONES (Halifax) said of course the papers would be brought down in due time. The hon. member had, however, hardly understood the regulations of the department under which the money was appropriated, and under which Sergeant Hart was presumed to have made an engagement with Col. Scoble. The hon. gentleman must bear in mind that the amount paid to commanding officers of corps was entirely at their own disposal, and that commanding officers who made engagements with suitable persons for the instruction of their corps paid them that sum according to the regulations; but they had, at the same time, the authority, if the persons engaged did not suit, and were not in their estimation fit for the duties they had undertaken to perform, or if they did not work with the commanding officer so as to conduce to that harmony in the corps which was necessary under the Militia Act, to dispense with the services of the instructor. That was the case in the particular instance to which the hon. member had referred, and he would, therefore, readily perceive that it would be impossible for the Government or the Militia Department in any way to take cognizance of the claim, which was one between the colonel of the regiment and Serjeant Hart. So long as the colonel furnished satisfactory proof that he had expended the money which the Government had entrusted to him for that purpose, he had discharged his duty as far as the Department was concerned. If a commanding officer made an arrangement with another party, which was afterwards cancelled on the ground that the duties were not discharged to the officer's satisfaction, that was a matter over which the Militia Department could have no control; and that was the case, he believed, in the present instance. Colonel Scoble only exercised the power given to him under the Militia Act when he dispensed with the services of Sergeant Hart.

MR. MASSON said the hon. Minister had laid down a very dangerous principle for the maintainance of the Militia force when he stated, that an arrangement might be made by a commanding officer and neither the Government nor Militia Department had anything to do with it. He submitted whether it was not the duty of the Government in such cases to take an interest in the matter, and do as was done in England: whenever an officer made an engagement he was obliged to carry it out as a matter of honour. If, after enquiry it appeared that Sergeant Hart had been led astray by the action of a colonel of a regiment, the Government had a right to interfere, indeed, it was their duty to do so, and see that the officer did justice to the instructor. If that were not done, the Militia force was placed at a great disadvantage. Another point was whether a colonel could dismiss a drill instructor without any enquiry being held. The Militia Department should adopt measures to ascertain whether the colonel had acted in a proper manner towards the instructor, and if not, the Ministers should exercise the influence of his office to obtain redress for the party injured, otherwise the whole system was worthless.

MR. JONES said he meant to say that the Government did not and could not hold themselves responsible for every engagement made by a commanding officer with a drill instructor. All they had to do was to see that the money voted was appropriated for the purpose mentioned. Of course, if any question arose in this relation, and complaint was made to the Department, it would be investigated and remedied; but, at the same time, the hon. gentleman would see the difficulty in which the Department would be placed if it was held responsible for every engagement made between the commanding officer and a person he might suppose to be a competent instructor and who turned out not to be so. As to the other point: as the hon. gentleman was aware, the position of non-commissioned officers in the corps was one relating to regimental discipline, with which the Department was not always called on to deal.

MR. MASSON: Was a court of enquiry appointed?

MR. JONES: I think there was.

MR. MASSON: Can the hon. gentleman tell us the result?

MR. JONES: I cannot.

MR. MASSON: Will the hon. gentleman be able soon to tell us what it was?

MR. JONES: Yes.

MR. MASSON: That will settle the whole matter. I am sure that what the court of enquiry may have done will be right.

MR. JONES.

MR. COSTIGAN said he regretted that the position was taken that the Department had no control over a commanding officer with regard to the dismissal of a drill instructor. This left no guarantee at all to gentlemen who might come to this country, or were in it, with reference to any engagement they might make with a commanding officer. The hon. Minister of Militia said that the Department was bound to see that the money voted for drill purposes was properly expended. One portion of this complaint certainly showed, if it was substantiated, that these moneys had not been properly expended. He mentioned that the moneys appropriated for that purpose had not gone to him; and even on this point, he (Mr. Costigan) thought that they were entitled to an enquiry, as he believed the hon. gentleman would himself admit. It was complained that moneys which ought to have been paid, had not been paid to him; they did not reach the parties for whom they were intended, and this person did not get the benefit of the grant made for the purposes of drill instruction. Col. Scoble had drawn moneys in this regard often. This gentleman was dismissed, though no successor was appointed to instruct the corps, which had remained without any instructor. This was a portion of the complaint.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC CULLER'S OFFICE.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. TASCHEREAU moved for copies of correspondence between the Government and John Giblin, of Quebec, in relation to the lease of the house now occupied as the Culler's Office at Quebec; also of all leases between the Government and the said John Giblin.

Motion agreed to.

NANAIMO AND NEW WESTMINSTER MAIL SERVICE.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. BUNSTER, for Mr. DEWDNEY, moved for copies of any correspondence or petitions with reference to the establishment of a mail service between Nanaimo and New Westminster. He said that this service was at present in a very bad condition. The Government knew that the cable had broken twice in each year. The present cable was laid from Nanaimo to the next point across the route, as being much shorter, and it had lasted a great deal longer; and this, thereby, gave to the town of Nanaimo—a town of 2,500 inhabitants—telegraphic communication which it did not now have, and from there down along to Victoria. They had communicated with the Government on several occasions about this matter, and they were in hopes that a sum would be placed in the Supplementary Estimates towards providing the telegraph communication, which was absolutely necessary. They would then be able to be in constant communication with Ottawa, whereas they had now been without telegraphic communication for over a month. He hoped that this matter would receive the serious consideration of the Government.

MR. HUNTINGTON: The application necessary for this service was made as far back, I think, as 1876, and the Government would have been, and would still be very glad to meet the views of those who prayed for this service, but the only embarrassment which has induced us to wait, before arriving at a conclusion, is because the Inspector reports that the cost of it would be $35 a trip, while the entire revenue would be only $35 a year.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL NAVY CADETS.

MOTION FOR ADDRESS.

MR. BUNSTER moved for a return showing: 1st. The number, if any, of cadets nominated annually to the Royal Navy, by the colonies of the Empire, and what proportion is nominated by the Dominion of Canada and the several Provinces thereof. 2nd. The names of such cadets as have been nominated to Her Majesty's Royal Navy by Canada since the 1st July, 1867, such return to exhibit the proportion coming from each of the several Provinces of the Dominion, and the total number to which Canada is entitled to nominate. He said he considered this an important matter. His attention had been drawn, before he came to Ottawa this Session, to the fact that each Province should be enabled to send a few of its young men to serve in the Royal Navy. A great many of H. M. ships visited Esquimalt; and application, in this regard, had been made, but unsuccessfully. Other young men who were more influential obtained the positions, and he thought that the attention of the Government should be directed to this question. He noticed that when even the Governor-General was appointed in this country, there were many young Canadians who could have well have filled the place if they only had had the same advantages that they would have if our young men had the opportunity of entering the navy.

MR. MACKENZIE: I am not aware whether any colony has a right to nominate cadets to the Royal Navy. The Dominion certainly is not entitled to make any such nomination, and no attempt has been made, that I am aware of, to make any such nominations. The motion may pass; and, if any information can be obtained respecting other colonies, it will, of course, be furnished. But I do not think that we have anything to do with that in Canada, and I know no reason why we should ask such a thing. We pay no money towards the maintenance of the Royal Navy; we do not contribute, in any way, to the expenses connected with it; and, therefore, there is no reason why we should claim a voice in filling offices in the Navy.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The fact, no doubt, is as my hon. friend states, but there are a certain number of cadetships given, I suppose, by the grace of Her Majesty's Government, to the trainingships, for the purpose of enabling young gentlemen who wish to enter as cadets on the training ships attached to Her Majesty's Navy, and, after being educated there—I dare say that the Britannica is still there—they pass the examination, and get their certificates. There was a certain number of cadetships granted to Canada.

MR. BUNSTER.

MR. MACKENZIE: I never heard of it; none have occurred in my time.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: That is very singular—really, in our time it was done; and the matter was under consideration annually. I think there were four. I suppose that His Excellency the Governor-General, with whom this rests, has the power of giving them to whom he likes; but the Governors-General had always been in the habit of speaking to me about them, and, I do not think that it has been discontinued.

MR. MACKENZIE: I may possibly be mistaken, but I think not; I think that I never heard of it.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS OF RIGHT.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

MR. TASCHEREAU moved for a return of all Petitions of Right transmitted to the Secretary of State since the passing of the "Petition of Right Act, 1876," showing the names of supplicants, the amount and nature of each claim, in what cases His Excellency's fiat that right be done to the parties was granted, and in what cases refused. He said that he would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to two points which had been the subject of discussion among the members of the legal profession. The first related to the granting of the fiat by His Excellency the Governor-General, regarding the question in what cases it should be granted, and, as a matter of course, in what refused; and, secondly, as to the petitions of right, based on claims against the late Province of Canada before Confederation. It was well known that, by section 111 of the British North America Act, Canada was made liable for the debts and liabilities of each Province existing at the time of Union. It had been the practice, he believed, of the Minister of Justice, heretofore, to refer petitions of right, founded on claims made against any Province existing before Confederation, to the Government of the Province concerned, and to suspend the granting of the fiat until the Local Government had given an answer. He believed that the pretension that the Local Government should be consulted before the granting of the fiat, was one that could not be maintained. The proper time for this was when the fiat had been granted. The Federal Government was then quite justified in applying to the Local Government for instructions to defend or admit the claim. It had been laid down, he thought, by the hon. member for South Bruce, while Minister of Justice in 1873, that an officer of the Crown could refuse a fiat when a petition of right was not plainly shown to be a just one. Such, also, was the rule in England, and he thought it should be adhered to by the present Minister of Justice. The Dominion Act did not confer a new right; it merely established a Court in Canada where suits brought by subjects against the Crown might be determined. In this respect the Dominion Act was the same in effect as the English law passed in 1865 or 1866. If he might be allowed to quote from Blackstone, he would take the following from volume 1 of his Commentaries, page 237 :

"Are then, it may be asked, the subjects of England totally destitute of remedy in case the Crown should invade their rights, either by private injuries, or public oppressions? To this we may answer that the law has provided a remedy in both cases. And, first, as to private injuries, if any person has, in point of property, a just demand upon the Crown, he must petition him in a Court of Chancery, where his Chancellor will administer right, as a matter of grace, though not upon compulsion."

Then Allen, in his work on the Royal Prerogative, at page 7, said :

"The King, it is true, can do no wrong, and is not amenable to any earthly tribunal; but, on the other hand, he can perform no one political act without an adviser, responsible for the same. He cannot be sued in a Court of Law; but, if any one has a demand against him in point of property, a petition or plea of right is due to the claimant, through which justice will be obtained with as much certainty and despatch as in actions between man and man."

Then, at page 94, the same authority said :

"The King of England cannot be sued in a Court of law; but, if any one has a demand upon him in point of property, the plaintiff has only to petition him for redress in the Courts of Chancery or Exchequer; and in having the Attorney-General's fiat, which ought to be given, of course, he will have justice administered to him with as much certainty and despatch as if he had brought an action against a subject. The plaintiff indeed will be told that he receives justice from the King as a matter of grace and not of compulsion, and he must pray for it and accept it on these terms. But while the favour he receives is one that cannot be withheld from him, it is to all essential purposes a right; and the mode of obtaining it can be considered as nothing more than an unmeaning compliment to the legal fiction it disregards and eludes. The rule that the King of England cannot be sued in a Court of law is founded on his sovereign and transcendent, that is, on his ideal attributes. No suit, say the lawyers, can be brought against him, because no Court can have jurisdiction over him. 'Who,' exclaims Finch, in a burst of loyalty, 'shall command the King?' If this reasoning be just, and it seems unanswerable—if it be the want of a coercive jurisdiction over the King that makes it impossible for any suit or action to be brought against him; it follows, that while he was liable to actions like a common person, there must have been some authority in the state, that possessed, or was supposed to possess, a legal control over his conduct. It cannot be supposed that, while the law permitted him to be sued, it held that judgment, if given against him, must remain without effect, unless it was his will and pleasure to submit to the decision of his judges. Accordingly, we find that, in early times, there was a vague notion, even among lawyers, of some legal and constitutional power in the state that had authority to command even the King. Something was still wanting in the theory of our constitution. To reconcile the absolute sovereignty of the ideal king with the limited authority of his representative in earth, it was necessary to exempt the real king from direct control, but to render it impossible for him to execute any of his royal functions without responsible Ministers and advisers. By this device the theory of our Government was made coherent and complete without danger to the public or injury to the subject. Before the reign of Edward I, the King of England might have sued as a common person. In the Year Books, of the time of Edward III, it is stated more than once by the Judges that in former times the King might be sued like one of the people, and that the practice of applying to him by petition was introduced by an ordinance of Edward I."

In Broom's Legal Maxims, page 58, he found the following :

"With respect to injuries to the right of property, these can scarcely be committed by the Crown, except through the medium of its agents, and by misinformation or inadvertency, and the law has furnished the subject with a decent and respectful mode of terminating the invasion of his rights, by informing the king of the true state of the matter in dispute, viz., by Petition of Right; a remedy which is open to the subject where his land, goods or money have found their way into the possession of the Crown, and the purpose of the petition is to obtain restitution or, if restitution cannot be given, compensation in money, where the claim arises out of a contract as for goods supplied to the Crown or to the Public Service. If, for instance, a legacy is claimed under the will of a deceased sovereign, it seems that the only course to be pursued by the claimant, for the recovery of such legacy, is by Petition of Right to the grace and favour of the reigning sovereign. 'Is there any reason,' said Lord Langdale, in a modern case, why a Petition of Right might not have been prevented? I am far from thinking that it is competent to the King, or rather to his responsible advisers, to refuse capriciously to put into a due course of investigation any proper question raised on a Petition of Right. The form of the application being, as it is said, to the grace and favour of the King, affords no foundation for any such suggestion."

But in a still more recent case the Eastern Archipelago Company v. The Queen, reported in volume 2. Ellis and Blackburn's reports of the Queen's Bench and Exchequer Courts, Chief Justice Jervis said :

"Indeed, in the somewhat analogous case of a Petition of Right, it has of late years been the practice at the Home Office, under great authority, to endorse 'let right be done' as a matter of course, without even referring the case to the Attorney-General."

Although the English, as well as our own Act had changed, the principle remained the same. He was informed that, since the passing of the last Act, many petitions which had been transmitted to the Secretary of State had been referred in conformity with the rules so well given by the hon. the member for South Bruce in 1876, and he hoped it would be seen, when the papers sought for came down, that the officers of the Crown had done wisely. With these remarks he would leave the motion in the hands of Mr. Speaker, contenting himself with drawing the attention of the Minister of Justice to the two points he had referred to.

Mr. LAFLAMME said that the rule followed by the Department of Justice was exactly the same as that followed in England. No

MR. TASCHEREAU.

Petition of Right well substantiated had ever been refused a fiat. It was only in such cases where there was no just claim that a fiat was refused, for this principle had been maintained that such a fiat could not be claimed as an absolute right, but lay within the discretion of the Crown on the merits of the case being investigated. It was only right that if a person had no just right to institute an action against the Crown, he should not be entitled to obtain a fiat. One class of cases had certainly given rise to some consideration on the part of the Government, he meant the claims which existed against the former Administration of Canada, and claims which would have reflected against the former Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. It was thought desirable by the Government not to grant a Petition of Right unless these cases were submitted to them.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the rule laid down by his hon. friend, the member for South Bruce, was a correct one—that no petition of right should be refused unless a legitimate claim against the Crown could not be shown. The hon. the Minister of Justice, however, said the practice of his department had been to grant a fiat in all cases where the statement of the petitioners was fully exposed and substantiated. He did not think the Government had anything to with the matter; it was entirely under the jurisdiction of the Crown, which would act on the report of the Attorney-General. It was not a matter of governmental policy, but a law of the Crown, and if it was shown by its legal adviser that the claim was a just one, it would be granted as a matter of course. No doubt a person in the colonies had a right to present a Petition of Right before the passing of these Acts, as explained by the hon. member for South Bruce. The only difficulty was the carrying of a petition through its stages. A late Governor-General of Canada, who had been Governor of another Colony—New South Wales—on one occasion told him (Sir John) that he had received a despatch from the Colonial Office in which it was stated that the English Government could not imagine a case where a fiat would be refused if anything like a proper claim was set forth in the petition.

MR. BLAKE said the principle he ventured to lay down during his tenure of office was the one found in the Bill. There were cases in which he was of opinion that a demurrer would be successful. Still he gave parties the opportunity of ascertaining whether that view was correct. In a reference to the particular class of cases to which attention had been drawn, no doubt they were in a different position. The argument taken was based upon the report of the Minister of Justice and an Order in Council was passed laying down the general course of action in reference to that class of cases. It would be remembered that by virtue of the Confederation Act, claimants of that class would have no direct claim against the Dominion, but for simplicity and convenience the liability against the Provinces was assumed by Canada, and Canada was to be recouped by the various Provinces; in a word, she was to be the medium for settling these claims, and she was not to be a loser, because she was not substantially interested. They had to deal with claims that had been at least ten years in abeyance, and others were presented to them of the most flimsy character; however, wherever they could make out that a debt was due, the Dominion assumed the responsibility of paying. The Dominion had no interest to protect; the revenues of Canada were not to suffer; she only assumed for convenience the responsibility to pay and then charged the claims discharged by her to the several Provinces. Where these claims were disputable they were referred to the Provinces out of which they arose, but before the passing of this Act they had no machinery for obtaining proper legal redress. These claimants, as claimants against the whole Province, had no means of suing in the Courts of law. It was true they ought to have had the petition right; they had not had it, however, because they had no machinery to make it available. It was right to call for such a machinery, and the need of it caused the Bill to pass. Practically these claimants had never before possessed the means of suing in the Courts provided for them. The Bill, too, acted as a reasonable check in reference to the old claims against the Provinces; some of these cases were twenty years old, and had the money to come out of the pockets of Canada he might have been disposed to advise a different course. But he thought the Provinces ought to be consulted, and he might add his own opinion that he thought they would be. However, the general course of action was not intended to be unchangeable, but that it should always be in the power of the Government to grant the fiat, and if he was not incorrectly informed, one case had occurred since he left office in which, notwithstanding the representations of the Provincial Government, a fiat had been granted.

MR. TASCHEREAU said he wished to be well understood in what he stated as to the second point. He had no objection to the Local Government being consulted in regard to the granting of the fiat, but he objected to the granting of the fiat being made dependent upon their consent.

Motion agreed to.

CASES IN EXCHEQUER COURT.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

MR. TASCHEREAU moved for return of all cases instituted in the Exchequer Court of Canada since its creation, shewing the names of parties, nature and amount of each claim, nature of proceeding (whether by Petition of Right or otherwise) and indicating separately the cases disposed of by the said Court, and those yet pending.

Motion agreed to.

CASES IN SUPREME COURT.

MOTION FOR RETURNS.

MR. TASCHEREAU moved for return of all appeals instituted before the Supreme Court of Canada since its creation, shewing the names of parties, the Court from whose judgment each appeal has been brought, and indicating the cases already disposed of by the said Supreme Court (whether by confirmation or reversal) and the cases yet pending.

Motion agreed to.

CASCUMPEC HARBOUR.

MOTION FOR ENGINEER'S REPORT.

MR. PERRY moved for copy of Survey and Report made by Henry F. Perley, Esquire, Engineer, in 1874, with the view of improving the navigation of Cascumpec Harbour, in Prince Edward Island, making it a better harbour of refuge. He desired to say that the harbour was the only one for many miles along the coast, and some years ago there was twenty-one feet of water on the upper bar; but the tide had worn a gap in the bar through which the sand had been washed, and the result was that the water was too low. In his recollection the water had been of sufficient depth to accommodate large ships, but it had diminished to eleven or twelve feet. There was also a lower stone bar or rock inside this bar, about half way between the mouth of the harbour and the wharf, and he found on close examination, and upon the information which he had collected, that there was sufficient room to shelter a number of large vessels between those two bars, if the water was of sufficient depth. His impression, and the impressions of others to whom he had spoken upon the subject was, that the opening of the gap before mentioned, and a second gap, was the reason why the sand had collected on the bar, and it appeared to him that if these gaps were closed that the harbour would in a short time have the same depth of water as the outer bar and as it had years ago. There were many large vessels belonging to Cascumpec, but they were not able to load in the harbour, but had to go outside and run the risk of loading on the shore, and two or three vessels had been lost in consequence. He understood the engineer had reported that these gaps should be closed and the rocks blown up as well. He believed the estimated cost was very large, but the largest amount was for blasting the rock, which he contended was not required at present. The closing of the two gaps would be a sufficient remedy. Since the survey of 1874-5 the people had been led to believe from year to year, from the explanations given by the Minister of Public Works, that the works would be executed, but he found that there was no sum in the Estimates which would warrant his believing that the Government intended to carry out the recommendation of the engineer. It certainly was a work very much required by the people of that locality. He hoped that if the Government could not carry out the whole of the engineer's recommendation that they would be prepared to close one of the gaps to the main harbour, which would not cost over $8,000 or $10,000. That being closed, they would see whether the water would keep on the upper bar, and then it would be an after consideration whether it would be well to shut the outer gap. He thought they should get a second report upon the subject, in order to ascertain if it was not feasible to postpone the blasting of the rock.

MR. TASCHEREAU.

MR. POPE (Queen's, P.E.I.) said he was very glad this subject had been brought forward, as it was a very important one to the people of that Province, and to the trade of the country. He thought the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Perry's) constituents, however, after the large promises that had been made to them, would expect a little more than the hon. gentleman had asked, for they had a right to expect that he would use his influence with the Minister of Public Works and obtain a vote for this harbour. Last year, they applied for similar works, and the answer was, that the intention of the Government was to first consider the more important harbour of Prince Edward Island, and, afterwards, to carry out similar works at this point. With the exception of Malpeque harbour, this of Cascumpec was the only one for miles along the coast.

MR. MACKENZIE: What about St. Peter's dock?

MR. POPE said that was no harbour at all; it was only fit for small steamers. No vessel of over fifty or sixty tons could enter. Cascumpec was the only harbour of any importance on the whole length of Prince Edward Island, and in former years there were seventeen feet of water on the outer bar, a depth quite sufficient, but there was a large bay inside, some six or eight miles across, into which, by the motion of the water, a large quantity of sand was washed. If there were three or four outlets made to this bay, the sand would be washed out, and they would get a good depth of water. At present, vessels drawing nine feet could scarcely get over it. He had a vessel, only drawing ten feet, which had to wait two high tides before she could get out. Years ago, vessels ran to that harbour for shelter, but now, the water was so shallow, that not above three or four vessels a year sheltered there. The whole of the trade of that district had been destroyed, ships had been lost there and all hands drowned, within the last few years, and something should certainly be done for this harbour. He thought that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Perry) had used the diligence he might have used, and brought his influence to bear on the Government, something might have been done. Nothing had been done to the Province since it joined the Dominion, except a very small work at Souris.

Mr. MACKENZIE said there was no objection to the adoption of the motion, but the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Pope) had not realized the difficulties the engineer had realized. He did not recollect the exact figures, but he believed the estimate for closing one gap was something like $10,000. This was a very serious expense to incur at the present time, although he quite admitted the necessity of the work in order to provide a refuge for shipping. At the same time, the difficulties were most formidable. There were all the materials for a good harbour, but, if the engineer was right in his estimate, this was a very serious undertaking; and with regard to those estimates, if the Engineer was under the mark, it was the first time. His estimates were generally tolerably correct, but the actual cost was always a little over, rather than under the amount required. The representations made by the members for Prince County, respecting the nature of the outer bar, and the nature of the sand stone comprising the inner bar, had led him to desire some experiments made to the effect of moving part of the outer bar if possible, and, at all events to ascertain with some exactitude the real character of the difficulties that had to be encountered. The difficulty he supposed, was principally the sand, which drifted into the bay, and, from the information of mariners, he learnt that dredging would be of little use. He was not aware if the hon. gentleman opposite had that opinion.

MR. POPE: I believe dredging would not be of the slightest use. In a storm the sand is a complete quicksand, and a bad storm will often change the channel entirely.

MR. MACKENZIE said this agreed with the opinions he had received. At all events, the Government were giving attention to the subject. They were only deterred for the present by the enormous expense, and hoped some less costly means would be found available.

Motion agreed to.

FENCES ON PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. PERRY moved for papers and correspondence between the Superintendent of Prince Edward Island Railroad and the Department of Public Works, shewing how many miles of wire fence have been taken down and replaced by post and batten fence, and the cost of the same. He said his attention was drawn to this matter by referring to the Public Accounts, in which he saw an item last year for building a fence on the P. E. Island Railroad, of some $40,000. He did not know how much it cost to rebuild the same last year. The Railway Act passed by the Island Government provided that the fence be built of posts and boards. The contracts was let to subcontractors to build the fence according to law. Shortly afterwards a wire fence was substituted for the board fence, which wire fence was built and proved worthless. The Government had since rebuilt the most of it, at a cost, he had no doubt, when papers were brought down, of $150,000 or $200,000. It appeared to him the Island was charged, in the expenses of the Prince Edward's Island Railroad, with the cost of building this fence, which, in his opinion, ought to have been taken from the ordinary expenses of working the road. It was simply owing to the mismanagement of the old Government in not getting this fence in accordance with the law, but merely by Order-in-Council. He did not know how the Dominion Government managed to take that fence from the contractors, because it was never built in accordance with the law. It was a gross fraud—not a fence at all. It had been condemned, with the exception of a few miles; he had a lot of letters in his desk, asking him to endeavour to induce the Government to have the remainder destroyed and replaced with a fence of posts and boards, to prevent the cattle from breaking through, as they did at present, and running the danger of being killed. He was anxious the inhabitants of the Island should know how much of their money had been squandered in allowing this wire fence to be built.

MR. POPE (Queen's, P. E. I.) said when the road had been contracted for, there was to have been a post and batten fence placed along the line. The engineer recommended to the Government the erection of a wire fence, for the reason that a board and batten fence would gather the snow, and the cost of shovelling would be very heavy, and a wire would, moreover, be the more durable of the two. The plan was shown to the Executive Council, and an Order-in-Council was passed. When the change of Government took place, nothing had been paid on account of the wire. When the wire arrived, everybody saw it was too small; however, the head of the new Executive Council took samples of it, had them tested, and reported the wire was strong enough for the purpose. The fence was built, and proved too weak, the cattle breaking through it everywhere. A great political cry was then raised, and a good deal of capital made out of this. He might say the hon. gentleman supported the Government and its action throughout. When this road came under the charge of the Dominion Government, it was his opinion that if they had obtained two additional wires equal to the top wire in that fence, for $10,000 at the outside, a good fence could have been made and kept in repair at a small expense; instead of which they neglected the fence, and the people along the road were continually annoyed by cattle coming into their fields and destroying large portions of their crops. At last it was undertaken to replace the wire fence, and, he might say, a worse board fence was never put up than the one substituted for this wire fence. It was badly built, the posts were small, and nearly all that was put up last year had been taken down again. When the winter came this fence was laid on the ground, and in the spring there was nothing to prevent cattle going over the line. Putting up this fence and taking it down had been, and would be, a very great expense to the Government. Cattle had been killed by the score, and there was no fence up, except for a half mile here and there through the woods, where jobs had been given to supporters of the Administration, and which proved only to be traps for cattle. He might say further that, at the western end, the principal fence had been rebuilt of wire, and it was the most substantial fence they had. Instead of putting new single posts they took old spruce sleepers, which they put down as posts for part of the distance, and that was now the best fence on the line. There were twenty or thirty miles of that road not enclosed by any kind of fence. It had been allowed to go down altogether. In the spring the whole of the fields were open from one end of the Island to the other. The management of that fence was on a par with the management of the whole railway system of the Island. The supporters of the Opposition could scarcely get fair treatment, no matter how much money they paid, while supporters of the Administration obtained positions on the road and every indulgence possible. The Press Association visited the Island last summer, and, as usual, the members were treated with all possible courtesy. He had a note from a representative of an Opposition paper, who had made application to the Superintendent for a pass along this road. The application ran:

MR. PERRY.

"DEAR SIR,—I have been informed that it is customary for the railway department to issue passes to editors and publishers of newspapers on all lines of railway. If so, I beg to make application for one for myself, as the visit of the Press Association will necessitate some railway travel."

To which he received the following answer :

"I beg to acknowledge receipt of yours of 24th. In reply, I beg to say it is not customary for the railway department to issue passes to editors on all lines of the railway. Passes are, however, sometimes given to friendly editors.

(Signed) W. McKECHNIE, Superintendent."

That was a sample of the way in which the business had been conducted on that road. With regard to this fence, he hoped that means might be taken to put up one along the line, so that twenty or thirty miles of the road would not be left without a fence, and scores of cattle killed in consequence. He was glad the hon. member had brought this subject up. Sixty-five thousand dollars had been charged in the Public Accounts last year on that work, and would, probably, be re-expended this year. If a board fence were wanted, one could be built for that amount the whole distance from Cascumpeque to Georgetown. This amount was charged to the 30th June last; no doubt, very nearly as much had been expended since on the thirty miles of fence constructed.

MR. SINCLAIR said he thought the hon. member for Queens must know perfectly well that the Administration had not approved of the new fence contract.

MR. POPE: I did not say that the Government approved of it, but I said they appointed a Committee themselves to test that wire, which reported to the Council that, in their opinion, it was sufficiently strong.

MR. SINCLAIR: The hon. member was in error again. The Government did not appoint a Committee for testing the wire fence. It was not the intention of the Government to pay the contractors in full for that fence. The contract was let during the time of the previous Administration. The Government could not, therefore, help themselves, because the contract had been let, and a good part of the work done when they came into power. The Government of the day stated distinctly they protested against that fence, and they were keeping back ten per cent monthly, and intended to make the contractors make the fence equal in strength to the fence originally contracted for, before they would pay them in full the amount of their contract for the work. The hon. gentleman charged the Administration of that day with being as guilty in the wire fence contract as the Administration of which he was a member. This was not the case. The whole of the wire fence contract was considered to be a gigantic swindle. Even the Engineer admitted that it was not on his recommendation that the wire fence was substituted. He was questioned by members of the Government if such a wire fence would not do. He replied it might do, and he was requested to report upon it to the Government. He did not want to give any particulars; but, if he chose to do so, he could clearly show why the change in the fence was made, and who received the contract and benefited by the job at the expense of the country. It was past and gone now, and it would not benefit the Local and Dominion Governments to revive it. This was the second time the hon. gentleman had alluded to free passes on the railroad. He had stated at a public meeting in Charlottetown that Dominion members had received them. He did not mention his (Mr. Sinclair's) name, but that of another hon. member for Prince county. He (Mr. Sinclair) never received a pass, but always paid his way, like every other passenger. But he was credibly informed that the hon. member who made the charges against others was the first man who had received a pass on that road. He could not believe that the Superintendent, Mr. McKechnie, was granting favours to political supporters of the Government. He believed that he was as strict with the supporters of the Government—and even some of them who were putting a great deal of traffic on the line—as he was with others. The Superintendent performed his duties in an impartial and obliging manner. He considered him a faithful officer, and he believed he was giving general satisfaction.

MR. POPE said the hon. gentleman had alluded to him as having been the first to receive a pass. He was the first who gave a large amount of work to the company, and was the one who had fought the line through. In the year, during which he had a pass, he had contributed some $6,000 or $7,000 towards the earnings of that road, and if he did get a pass, the railway did not lose anything. All the members of the Local Legislature received passes, while the members of the Dominion Parliament could not get any. All the members of the Local House and their families travelled with passes, while the members of the Dominion Parliament were not thus favoured.

MR. PERRY said the hon. member for Queen's had ingeniously endeavoured to place the odium on his shoulders, but he was not willing to bear it. The guilt of having passed the Order in Council should be shouldered by the hon. gentleman himself. The Order in Council was passed during the summer of 1871, when the hon. member for Queen's was Premier of the Local Government, and when the House met in February, 1872, the House was shortly afterwards dissolved. He had, under those circumstances, no opportunity to vote against the Government. Although he had supported the Dominion Government ever since he entered Parliament, he had never received any passes over the Government Railways.

MR. MACKENZIE said he was surprised to hear the rash statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for Queen's had said that every person that applied could get passes.

MR. POPE (Queen's): I did not say so.

MR. MACKENZIE: That all the members of the Local House had passes.

MR. POPE: All the members of the Local Government.

MR. SINCLAIR.

MR. MACKENZIE said the hon. member had not previously made that statement.

MR. POPE said he had intended to say that all the members of the Local Government had passes.

MR. MACKENZIE said the members of the Local Government had had passes since the railway had been opened.

MR. POPE: I beg your pardon.

MR. MACKENZIE said that such was the fact, but no other persons to his knowledge. Neither over that road nor the Intercolonial, had he ever directed a pass to be given to any one. That was the position of the matter as regarded passes, and the hon. member for Queen's had endeavoured to convey a gross exaggeration of the matter in the remarks he had made. He did not know from whom the hon. member had read the letter, but he would be glad to obtain a copy of it, and he would then ascertain if any friendly editor, as it said, ever obtained a pass. He (Mr. Mackenzie) was not aware of any being given. On behalf of the Government, he invited the Press of the country to make their annual excursion over the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways, last year. It was in the interests of the road that this should be done. He believed no body of men could do so much for the roads as editors and members of the Press, and, instead of feeling it as a favour to them, he felt it as a favour to the Government that they would go over the roads and make known what Canada could do on its own railways and what were the resources of those sections of the country. With those exceptions, and the members of the Local Government of Prince Edward Island, no person, to his knowledge, had received any pass, except immediately after the fire at St. John, when directions were given to allow people in search of work, and who could not find homes in St. John, to be transferred to various places in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, at the expense of the Government. With regard to the fencing, he might state that the wire fencing proved utterly useless, and it became a snare, because animals endeavoured to leap it and got caught in it. Its removal, therefore, became necessary, and tenders were asked for the erection of a new fence. The lowest prices were: common, 79c.; post and board, $1.25; and snake, $3.79 per rood. After comparing them with the prices paid in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, they considered it would be cheaper to purchase the material and build the fence themselves. The result was that 86½ double miles of post and board fence were erected at a cost of $48,184.14, or 86c. per rood, instead of $1.25; of snake fence 19¼ miles at an average cost of $3.06, instead of $3.79 per rood. He would feel much obliged to any hon. member who would afford him such information as would enable him to effect any reforms whatever in the running of the road. He could assure the House that he was only desirous of having the work most efficiently performed and to remove every abuse as far as it was possible to do so. He had no interest whatever in maintaining anything that was wrong, but whenever any abuse existed, or anything was done in a manner that could be improved, he would be glad that they should be pointed out. But the hon. member for Queen's had not stated fairly the matter in connection with the fencing, and he well knew that it was utterly impossible to construct all the fencing in one season; and the hon. member knew also, from the statement he (Mr. Mackenzie) made, that after obtaining tenders, the Government found that they could save some thousands of dollars by adopting another mode than that of accepting tenders for the whole work. That had been the net result of the operation, and the hon. member for Queen's could not have known the facts or examined the reports, or he would not have made the remarks he had offered on the subject.

Mr. POPE (Queens, P.E.I.) said that in twenty miles of the road only half a mile was fenced, and four years had elapsed.

Mr. TUPPER said that as the railway settlement ultimately made was based on Mr. Shanly's report, it should be laid before the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE said there was no possible objection to such being done; and he was under the impression that the report had been submitted. In regard to Mr. Shanly's visit to Prince Edward Island, the hon. member for Cumberland would remember that the Government first sent Mr. Swinyard to perfect arrangements for the opening of the Island Railway. That gentleman made an elaborate report on the condition of the road, and the Dominion Government proposed to effect a settlement with the Island Government on that report. The present Senator Haviland was the Provincial Secretary, and he complained that Mr. Swinyard's report was too severe, and that he had made his calculation upon a basis which was not absolutely correct. Mr. Swinyard was not accused of writing anything wrong, but Mr. Haviland stated that the Provincial Government had made changes in the original contract, and he took the ground, whether those changes were beneficial or otherwise, they were made by competent authority, and that all the Dominion Government had the right to claim, was the difference between the amount which would have been necessary to perfect the road, deducting whatever was saved by the changes made by order of the Provincial Government from the total sum as first assessed. The Dominion Government was not able to resist that argument, because, if the Local Government had the power to make changes, so as to have curves more frequent and sharper than originally contemplated, and steeper grades; if, in short, they allowed any changes to be made in the contract, those changes the Dominion Government was competent to recognize; and he arranged with Mr. Haviland that the Dominion Government would send some perfectly impartial, independent person, who would receive the statements, both of the Local Government and of the Engineers the Canadian Government had placed there. He (Mr. Mackenzie) selected Mr. Frank Shanly, with Mr. Haviland's consent, for that duty, partly because he was an authority on that kind of railway, because he had built considerable lengths of it himself, and partly because he had perfect confidence in that gentleman's personal integrity, as well as for professional ability. His instructions were not to report on the whole road so much as upon the features to which he (Mr. Mackenzie) had referred. Mr. Shanly had Mr. Swinyard's report before him; also, the engineers' reports and the allegations of the contractors and the Local Government, and he had to consider them and determine a sum that should be payable by the Local Government as against the sum which could be claimed under Mr. Swinyard's report. That was the character of Mr. Shanly's report. He did not remember minutely all the subjects dealt with in it, but, at all events, the matter was discussed in the House. If the report had not been brought down, there was not the slightest objection to its being submitted, because it was accepted as the basis of the settlement between the Island and Dominion Governments, as to the amount of the capital account which was to be charged against the Island.

MR. BOWELL said it was desirable that the country should know that Mr. McKechnie, the Superintendent of the Prince Edward Island railway, was using the position he occupied to favor a certain class of newspaper men in that Province. The letter written by that journalist, a copy of which had been read by the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I., showed, at least, that in the management of that railway the Superintendent had selected certain editors and proprietors of newspapers to whom he extended the favours of free passes over the road. It was very questionable, even though the principle of the Government might be that, to the victors belonged the spoils, whether Government property was to be used exactly for the benefit of those who were willing to praise the Government and to be civil and courteous, as Mr. McKechnie said, to the railway officials. That gentleman said in his letter "passes are sometimes given to friendly editors with the expectation that they will, in return, show ordinary courtesy to the officers of the railway," which simply meant that if an editor had ventured to criticise the action or management of Mr. Mc-

MR. MACKENZIE.

Kechnie the favour of a pass would not be extended to him. He (Mr. Bowell) was satisfied the country would not justify such conduct, and he was gratified to have heard the statement of the hon. the Premier that if the accusation contained in the letter, which had been read in the House and would become public, were correct, it was a serious charge against the management of the road. It had been the habit to grant passes to newspapermen over different railways, but he had yet to learn that, even in the case of private companies, they had been confined exclusively to those who were ready, at all times, to puff the management and state what they did not believe to be correct in connection both with the road and its management. That practice should certainly be terminated. It could scarcely be concluded that the Editor of the Summerside Progress should not have received that ordinary courtesy which was extended to the editors, proprietors and representatives of the newspapers of the Dominion at the time of the Press Excursion. Such action was carrying a feeling of spite too far. It was the duty of the hon. the First Minister to inquire into the charge, and see that the practice should not be perpetuated on the Island Railway, or on any other Government road.

MR. MACKENZIE said he had already informed the House that such had been done entirely without his knowledge, and quite contrary to his orders.

MR. BOWELL said he had not charged that it had been done with the knowledge or consent of the hon. the Premier; but, his attention having been called to it, he should terminate such practices.

MR. MACKENZIE: No doubt. I do not find in the journals for the past two years, Mr. Shanly's report, and I presume it has not been moved for. I will lay it on the table, of course, at once.

Motion agreed to.

ST. PASCAL MAIL.

MOTION FOR STATEMENT.

MR. ROY moved for a statement showing the amounts paid annually for carrying the mail between Kamouraska and the railway station at St. Pascal, since the express train on the Intercolonial Railway began to deliver the mail at that station; also the names of the persons to whom such amounts have been paid.

Motion agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF R. J. M. LECAINE.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. TUPPER moved for copies of all correspondence, reports or papers connected with the dismissal of R. J. M. Lecaine from the Mounted Police Force at the North-West. He said he did not propose to enter at any length into the nature of this case. He was instructed by Mr. Lecaine that he was appointed to the position of non-commissioned officer—he was not quite certain as to the position held—in the Mounted Police Force of the North-West, and was subsequently dismissed from the service. He was instructed by Mr. Lecaine to say that he requested a Court Martial or a Committee of Enquiry, but was refused any investigation into his case, although, as he stated, Colonel French, who was at the head of the force, said that it was an extremely arbitrary course which had been pursued, and one that would not have been pursued in Her Majesty's service. At all events, the papers were sent forward, and he (Mr. Lecaine) complained that he was unable to obtain an investigation or enquiry, as he supposed that, under these circumstances, he would have secured from the Minister here. In any case, he felt that he had been very much injured, under the circumstances, and unfairly treated; and he (Mr. Tupper) had been requested to make this motion in relation to Mr. Lecaine's removal from the service.

MR. MACKENZIE said he did not recollect at the moment any of the particulars respecting this case, which occurred, he believed, over three years ago,—in 1874 or 1875, and early in 1875, if at all in that year.

He was quite sure that the then Minister of Justice, Mr. Dorion, had not done any thing unjust towards this or any other person. As to the difficulty of obtaining a Court Martial, no such Court was held in that matter; action was taken on the report of superior officers and discipline was maintained in the ordinary way, as among the employes elsewhere. He had no doubt that when the papers came down they would show that Mr. Lecaine was treated with every possible consideration.

Motion agreed to.

SERVICES OF H. G. HILL.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. TUPPER moved for copies of all correspondence between H. G. Hill, architect, and the Government, or Department of Public Works, respecting services performed for the Government. He said that Mr. Hill, who was a gentleman of very high standing, and who held a very respectable position in the City, had in consequence of great reverses in business, become very much impoverished, and owing to loss of health, was in a position which certainly required that he should receive the most thorough justice at the hands of the Government. Mr. Hill complained, that having been appointed to the position of Architect under the late Government, his services were subsequently dispensed with under the present Government, and that he had never been able to obtain a satisfactory settlement. Some difficulty had occurred in consequence of the loss of some of his books and papers in their removal to another office, which might have interfered, perhaps, with his ability to furnish the information required, but he (Mr. Hill) claimed that, independent of the amount itself in controversy between the Government and himself, there was a very considerable claim for something like $2,000, in all, he (Mr. Tupper) thought for salary, which he would have been entitled to receive, at the rate of $100 a month, for the period up to the time when his services were dispensed with. Mr. Hill's position was, formerly, one of a very leading man indeed, and he was a man of very considerable talent and ability, but he had met with great reverses. He (Mr. Tupper) had, only yesterday, received a letter from one of this gentleman's friends in Halifax, saying that a friend of Mr. Hill had put himself in communication with the hon. the Minister of Militia, who had promised to give his personal attention to this matter. As he did not know that Mr. Hill's position would be benefitted by the bringing down of any correspondence, and as his only object was to endeavour to stimulate the Government, if possible, to give prompt and careful consideration to the case, and to do Mr. Hill the justice which he would be found, on such examination, to be entitled to, he would be very glad to drop the motion, if the Minister of Public Works would undertake to have his attention carefully turned to the subject, and as promptly as this could be done.

MR. MACKENZIE said he could assure the hon. gentleman that he had given his attention to this matter long ago. There were two or three mistakes in the hon. gentleman's statement—mistakes which, of course, were not those of the hon. gentleman. One related to the statement that Mr. Hill was a salaried officer. His deputy and the chief architect utterly denied this; and their denial was consistent with the general course of the Department.

MR. TUPPER said he did not want the hon. gentleman to understand him to say that Mr. Hill was a salaried officer, but that he computed his salary at the rate paid him, down to a certain date, by the Department; and he estimated it to average something like $100 a month. He did not undertake to say that Mr. Hill had a fixed salary.

MR. MACKENZIE said that the course which the Department had pursued, both under the late and present Government, was, that when they had to erect a building, a rough sketch was first made at Ottawa, and then sent to some local architect, with instructions to prepare finished plans. This architect received his commission upon the amount of the contract, and where expensive repairs had to be made, he received also a commission, in case of new buildings varying from  $2\frac{1}{2}$  to 4 per cent., and in case of ordinary repairs, costing perhaps \$2,000 or \$3,000, a somewhat large commission was given; this was generally left to the Chief Architect to determine, subject, of course, to the decision of the Minister of his Department. The Chief Architect of the Department had assured him that this course was pursued regularly with Mr. Hill, and that the only difficulty arose from the fact that Mr. Hill was claiming a fixed salary as well as the commission upon the work which he superintended. Mr. Hill had been dealt with exactly like the other gentlemen who had been so employed during the last  $2\frac{1}{2}$  years as architects—as Mr. Hilliard and as other architects had been employed. He (Mr. Mackenzie) had understood the last time that this matter was before him, which he thought was two months ago, that there might possibly be a balance due Mr. Hill on the Chief Architect's and his own mode of computation, and he had directed that whatever that balance was, it should be reached, in the first place, in the ordinary method by which local architects were dealt with in other places, and that no time should be lost in remitting the sum; but if there was any such balance at all, it was comparatively trifling and nothing at all approaching the sum mentioned by the hon. gentleman. However, he would give the hon. gentleman a memorandum to-morrow or the next day, and would show him exactly how the matter stood and how it was arranged.

MR. TUPPER said that if the hon. gentleman would spare enough time to run his eye over the correspondence between the Department and Mr. Hill, he would find reason probably to change his impression a good deal. He did not at all controvert the statement that the Chief Architect had formed his opinion from his mode of computation, but Mr. Hill himself claimed that he had a letter from the Department acknowledging the amount of $1,260 due him as salary; and he thought that if the hon. Premier would be good enough to run his eye over this correspondence, previous to a final settlement, it would lead to a satisfactory adjustment. At all events, with the assurance of the hon. gentleman that he would give, and was giving it his attention, he would beg leave to withdraw this motion.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. MACKENZIE: I shall be very happy to look over the papers, but I can only deal with Mr. Hill as with other architects in other places.

MR. TUPPER: Certainly; that is quite true.

Motion, with leave of the House, withdrawn.

PUGWASH BRANCH RAILWAY SCHEME.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

MR. TUPPER moved for copies of memorials asking aid for a Branch Railway from Pugwash to the Intercolonial Railway, with any correspondence on that subject. He said he desired to draw the attention of the Government to what he regarded as a very important question. The undertaking on the part of the Government to establish winter communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and to give the people of that Island, when they came into Confederation, connection with the railway system of the Dominion, was one which the Government had shown very great anxiety to carry out, in the very large outlay and expenditure made in connection with the Northern Light. He believed that a fatal mistake had been made in carrying out this policy, which the Government was bound to carry out, and which he was free to say he believed they had shown a most energetic desire to do. The mistake had been that of attempting to select the route for the Northern Light, instead of using her simply and purely for the purpose of discovery. He was led to believe, from the best information he could obtain, that if, instead of placing this costly vessel upon an impracticable and impossible route, which had proved to be a complete failure, and which, under the most favourable circumstances that we had had for many years, had been shown to be quite impracticable for the purpose of establishing anything like valuable steam communication between the mainland and Prince Edward Island, if the captain—and he did not say the captain now in charge was not skilful—and the most able and competent officers that they could get had been obtained,—the vessel had been used solely for the purpose of experiment and exploration, not to make communication week after week between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, but to be used solely for the purpose of discovering as to where could be found the most favourable point for communication, that which had proved to be impracticable up to the present moment would have been found capable of solution. He was instructed that between the harbour of Crapaud at Prince Edward Island, and Oak Island, at the mouth of Wallace Harbour, and the shore between that and the harbour of Pugwash, open water had been continually present, so that there would have been no difficulty whatever in keeping up fair and steady communication, by means of the Northern Light, between these points. The distance between Crapaud, Prince Edward Island and the harbour of Pugwash, on the mainland, was only twenty-five miles, and the distance between Charlottetown and Pugwash Harbour was only forty miles. Of course, the latter harbour was closed by ice during the winter, but, as he had said, Oak Island, at the mouth of Wallace Harbour, had been accessible, he believed, during the past two winters almost uninterruptedly from Prince Edward Island. The formation of the land on the Island and on the mainland was such that when the ice jammed up to a certain point it suddenly broke away, and clear water was found to exist there, and about there, almost during the entire period of winter. The harbour of Pugwash was known to be one of the finest on the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It was capacious, and it admitted vessels of any size drawing 21 feet of water when loaded; and for vessels of that size nothing could be better. The distance from the Intercolonial Railway to this harbour, which was within forty miles of Charlottetown, was, he believed, something like sixteen miles.

MR. MACKENZIE: From what point on the railway?

MR. TUPPER: Intersecting the railway at River Philip, or a little farther up, it will touch two or three points owing to the direction of the line in consequence of the necessity of avoiding an adjoining range of mountains, from there towards Halifax, without materially increasing the distance; and by a short branch of some sixteen miles of railway, they could connect this valuable harbour of Pugwash with, and afford the best line of communication with Prince Edward Island and the nearest point on the Intercolonial Railway, saving over the existing summer route something like four hours in going from Charlottetown to Halifax, which, of course, was a very great saving, taking the distance into consideration. It would effect a very large saving in going to St. John, N.B., over the existing line of communication and by tapping the Intercolonial it would establish a direct line of communication across from the harbour of Pugwash to the Basin of Minas. It would bring the valuable Spring Hill coalfield in communication with a port on the Gulf of St. Lawrence and increase the facilities for obtaining Nova Scotia coal by the St. Lawrence, because it would furnish it at a nearer point than that from which it could now be reached by the St. Lawrence. The question was one of importance, and he hoped the Government would make a thorough enquiry into the winter and summer navigation of the St. Lawrence at this point, for he believed the proposed branch would form one of the most important feeders of the Intercolonial Railway. He would not, at this advanced stage of the Session, take up the time of the House further, but would simply commend the matter to the consideration of the Government.

MR. MACKENZIE: As I stated at an earlier period of the evening in reply to the question put by one of the members for Queen's County, Prince Edward Island, the Government is prepared to consider the whole subject of the winter navigation of the River St. Lawrence. I think the statement made by the hon. gentleman as to the Northern Light being a fatal mistake is rather a strong one.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. TUPPER: I did not say it was a fatal mistake. I said putting the Northern Light on a fixed route instead of using it as a trial vessel was a fatal mistake.

MR. MACKENZIE said the object of the Government was to obtain the best possible vessel so that they might better accomplish the purpose. He was bound to say that the weight of opinion was decidedly in favour of crossing the Straits further west. He had paid some little attention to the Pugwash proposal, but he must say he did not by any means admire the name.

MR. TUPPER: It could be changed by Act of Parliament.

MR. MACKENZIE said the distance from the cape was 25 miles, and some people who pretended to know said it was more difficult to approach the shore at Pugwash than at the cape. On the other hand, residents in the neighbourhood of Pugwash assured him of the very opposite. He thought the Government would best serve the interests of the public by getting an impartial examination made of the coast in that particular place, with the view of ascertaining the best method of carrying the mails from the island to the mainland. They were not prepared to recommend any measure to Parliament at the present time, but they hoped to do so after an independent examination before next Session.

Motion agreed to.

REMOVAL OF INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY ASSISTANT-RAILWAY SUPERINTENDENT.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. TUPPER moved for copies of all correspondence, Orders in Council or Reports connected with the removal from office or resignation of George Taylor, from the office of Assistant Railway Superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway. He could not, he regretted to say, properly characterize the action of the Government in relation to Mr. Taylor in any other terms than to say it had been exceedingly cruel and unjust. Mr.

Taylor was a young Scotchman, who came, 20 years ago, at the time of the first organization of the Nova Scotia Railway, and was appointed to a comparatively humble position on the staff. Being a young man of great industry, fair education, and good business ability, he rose step by step, under several successive Governments, until he ultimately attained the position of Superintendent of the Nova Scotia Railway—the highest officer in connection with the management of that undertaking. In that capacity he gave entire satisfaction. When, however, the line between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia was completed, and it became necessary to amalgamate the two railway systems, the officer holding the same position in New Brunswick which Mr. Taylor held in Nova Scotia was, by right of seniority, appointed superintendent, an arrangement in which Mr. Taylor readily acquiesced, thus becoming assistant manager of the Intercolonial Railway. In that position he discharged his duty with great fidelity, but when a new Government came into office, and the staff was rearranged, Mr. Brydges abolished the office of assistant manager—although an officer still held practically the same position. Mr. Taylor, without any fault having been found with him, was called upon by Mr. Brydges to resign his office, which he did under protest. He was then offered his choice of two very inferior positions at a great reduction of salary. As, however, he had a family dependent upon him for their maintenance, even in a comparatively humble way, he had no alternative, and told Mr. Brydges that he had, with great reluctance, come to the conclusion that he would accept one of the offices which he was offered. He was then informed that that office had already been disposed of, and, of course, he had to leave the service. Down to the time of his removal he had paid a part of his salary into the Superannuation Fund, but now, in addition to being persistently refused any employment, he was denied any compensation under the Superannuation Act. It would be seen, therefore, that he had been treated with great injustice and cruelty; but he (Mr. Tupper) believed he had not obtained redress because he had not pressed his claim on the Minister of Public Works with the same zeal that others would have done under the same circumstances. He had deferred doing so from year to year because he had reason to believe, from his personal interviews with members of the Government, that, if he did not receive employment, he would obtain that consideration which, under the law, he was entitled to. He (Mr. Tupper) believed it would be found from the correspondence asked for, that he had assurances to this effect; and, if the hon. the First Minister reconsidered the case, he would doubtless come to the conclusion that common justice required that Mr. Taylor should, in some manner, be compensated.

MR. MACKENZIE said there was certainly no charge against Mr. Taylor for misconduct in his office, but, under the rearrangement of the staff which took place, he was selected, for purely business reasons, as one of those who was considered not necessary to retain in the higher positions. The hon. member for Cumberland was mistaken in thinking that Mr. Taylor had paid a considerable sum into the Superannuation Fund. He had only made payments for two years, and as, on leaving the service, he was paid either six or nine months' salary by way of a gratuity—he (Mr. Mackenzie) believed he was paid for nine months—he could not be considered as being at all ill-treated in that respect. He quite admitted that, as soon as some position became vacant which Mr. Taylor was capable of filling, he should get a preference, and he should be glad to take that into account.

Motion agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF TRAIN DESPATCHER AT TRURO.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE:

MR. TUPPER moved for all correspondence between the Government and T. M. Boggs, in relation to his dismissal from the office of train despatcher at Truro, on the Intercolonial Railway; together with all correspondence with the General Superintendent of the Government Railways; with any reports or minutes of investigation in relation to said dismissal of Mr. Boggs, and a statement of the number of persons now engaged in performing the duties imposed upon Mr. Boggs at the time of the accident which led to his dismissal. This, he said, was a claim by a very humble individual, which merited careful consideration, with the view of making him some compensation. He (Mr. Tupper) had taken pains to ascertain its accuracy, and he would briefly state the facts of the case. Mr. Boggs entered the service of the Nova Scotia Railway in September, 1869, and, after filling several responsible positions, was, in March, 1876, promoted to be train despatcher at Truro, which situation he continued to hold till 28th May, 1877, when he was suspended in consequence of an accident caused by mistaken orders given by him while he was unfitted to discharge his duties in consequence of over-work. After eight weeks' suspension he was dismissed, though, during eight years, he had given perfect satisfaction. For some weeks previous to the time the accident occurred, the train despatching staff at Truro was altogether insufficient, there being only two men to perform the work in consequence of the second official, Mr. McCallum, having taken ill on Thursday, 24th May. From that time till midnight on the 26th, Mr. Boggs was on duty, making 59 hours' work without rest. On Sunday night, the 27th, until 9.30, at which time the accident occurred, no other help had been supplied, and for the whole two days previous to the accident he had to perform the duties although frequently assured by the Divisional Superintendent that assistance would certainly be supplied shortly. On the day following the accident, however, three officers were appointed to discharge the duties which for fifty-nine hours of uninterrupted service, without rest, he had been compelled to attempt to perform. And, shortly afterwards, Mr. McCallum resumed duty, thus making four at least to do the work which Mr. Boggs had been compelled to do alone; and he believed that he was correct in stating that seventeen miles of road were transferred from the division worked through Truro to another division, and since then worked through Moncton. So that four persons were employed to do actually less work than Mr. Boggs. At the investigation into the cause of the accident, held in Truro on the 2nd June, Mr. Boggs stated that he had been overworked, but no attempts were taken to ascertain why help had not been supplied previous to the accident. He (Mr. Tupper) felt that he had no need to make any remarks to the House upon these facts, if they were facts literally and strictly correct, and they were not contradicted at the investigation. No member of this House or this Government would for a single moment say Mr. Boggs was responsible for the accident, which, fortunately, did not result in any loss of life. The accident occurred in consequence of a wrong order having been given, but this, he need not say, was the result of overwork. There was no question which deserved more particularly the attention of the Government or any parties connected with the working of a great railway than the question of overworked railway officials. The London Lancet, the highest authority, perhaps, in the world upon this point, in an article, brought out the important fact that, if railway companies overworked a railway officer, an officer from whom vigilance and close personal attention to the safety of life and property were needed, his brain was brought into that condition by being overworked, for any length of time, that he was very apt to give an erroneous order. A great case which came up in England, turned entirely on the responsibility of the railway company, in consequence of it being established that the officer through whose neglect of duty or inattention at the moment the accident occurred, had been previously overworked. Now, if it had been established that being previously overworked would account for moving a wrong lever, or giving a wrong signal, or failing to comprehend at midnight all the movements that had taken place on the railway, what should be said of a Government who discharged an officer for these acts, who had been on duty for fifty-nine hours without rest, and had performed duties which at this moment it took four officers to perform. He thought that, under the circumstances, the Government did not act with a spirit of justice when they visited upon an officer, who for eight years had shown by unremitting attention to his duty that he was a thoroughly painstaking officer, such a heavy penalty. He thought they did not act justly towards that officer when they deprived him of the means of earning his bread, after these facts had transpired at the investigation. His object in bringing this matter before the House was to draw the attention of Government strongly to the peculiar hardship of the case, with a view, he trusted, to the reconsideration of what he considered to be a very severe penalty.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. MACKENZIE said he regretted that he was unable to lay his hands on the papers; he presumed they were at the railway office. His recollection of the case, and he thought it was tolerably correct, was that the statement which the hon. gentleman gave as a statement of facts, was not received as a statement of facts by the Department; in other words, that statement was controverted, and it was shown, he thought, conclusively, that there was very gross negligence in the matter. There was nothing in the whole system so dangerous as one of these train despatchers neglecting his duty; for while the system, itself, was tolerable, if properly worked, it was a very dangerous one if great care was not bestowed upon its working. The position of a train despatcher was one of great importance; everything depended on the accurate transmission of orders, and it required most unremitting attention. In this case, there was gross negligence shown, which made it utterly impossible for the Government to continue this despatcher in his position. He would not speak, of course, with absolute positiveness of the facts, but he believed that when the papers came down, the hon. gentleman would find that the statement furnished to him was not so correct as he (Mr. Tupper) considered he was. There was no intention of doing an injustice to the man, the sole object of the Government being to secure safety to the travelling public.

MR. MCKAY (Colchester) said he could vouch for the fact that three men were appointed to do the same duty as was performed by Mr. Boggs alone. He had no doubt that a mistake had been made, but Mr. Boggs was one of the most industrious, hard-working, and attentive men they could possible employ, and he was always at his duty; and, although it might not be in the public interest to maintain him in the same position, which he (Mr. McKay) would admit was a most responsible position, he thought it was very unjust to dismiss the man from the service. He was a good officer, had been a station master for many years, and he thought the least the Government could do was to give him another position, as good as the one he had left, in some other capacity.

MR. PLUMB said it was well known that, in England, the question of the overworking of the pointsmen and men who were employed to give the railway signals at great stations had been thoroughly investigated. It had been found that overwork in that respect was not only apt to create confusion in the minds of such a person at the time, but there had been a permanent effect produced upon his mind; and the investigations to which the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Tupper) had referred, showed that there was no reason to believe he was responsible for the error made in the discharge of his duty, after the stress put upon him by overwork. If he was kept fifty-nine hours at work on a stretch, as was stated, and there was nothing brought forward to contradict it, it seemed cruel that he should be made responsible for an accident which, after all, did not result in loss of life and was not of a serious character. If it was proved that through overwork, he had committed an error, he might have been retained to do some other work. It became the duty of the Government to enquire seriously into every affair of this kind,—one which affected the management of the railways of the country and the different lines which the Government was likely to control, under the system they had adopted. It seemed to him a most extraordinary case of hardship had been made out. It was shown by the statement of the hon. member for Colchester, which was not controverted by the hon. the Premier, that three persons were now doing the work which this man had formerly done alone. This question had, he must say, been treated with levity, with great carelessness, when the papers connected with it were not forthcoming, although information had been asked months before. This delay on the part of the hon. Minister, whose duty it was to answer such questions, gave rise to attacks such as made to-night. It delayed the public business. The Opposition were not responsible, because these discussions would not arise if the fact could be stated authentically, so as to settle the allegations made by the person in whose behalf this enquiry was moved. It was evident, if Boggs' statements were correct, and they were corroborated by the hon. member for Colchester, that a grave responsibility rested upon those who had not relieved that man. He should not have been punished for an act for which he was not responsible; if the accident occurred through his having been overworked, he should have been retained and placed in another position. After all that had been said by the hon. member for Cumberland, corroborated, as it has been, by the hon. member for Colchester, he trusted the Government would pay serious attention to the management of the road in which such accidents were allowed to occur.

Motion agreed to.

CONVEYANCE OF H. M. MAILS IN CAPE BRETON.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

MR. McDONALD (Cape Breton) moved :

"That a message be sent to the hon. the Senate, requesting that hon. body to transmit, for the information of the House :—

"1st. Copies of all contracts entered into during the year 1875, for the conveyance of Her Majesty's Mails from Sydney to Cow Bay, Little and Big Glace Bays and Bridgeport, in the county of Cape Breton.

MR. PLUMB.

"2nd. Copies of notices for tenders, and the titles of newspapers wherein they were inserted: with all copies of other documents, correspondence, etc., in reference to such contracts; also copies of all other contracts entered into in the years 1874, 1875 and 1876 in the said county of Cape Breton, with vouchers of payments for said services and transmission of mails."

He said, when these papers came down, he would refer to them fully. He might say, however, that the two old contractors had been suddenly deprived of their contracts, which they had held for a number of years. One of them, who, to his own knowledge, had done the work to the satisfaction of everyone, had been dismissed, and had not even been allowed an opportunity to tender again for the new contract, the Government having entered into an arrangement privately with another party.

MR. HUNTINGTON said the Government had to deal with a contract where the contractor had $856 for the performance of a tri-weekly mail service. They made an arrangement to give a daily mail for $900, over the same service, thus paying only $44 more. The tri-weekly service at $856 had been turned into a daily service at $900.

MR. McDONALD said that statement might be correct, but he wished to have the papers brought before the House, as he might require to refer to this matter again. The contract was taken from one man, who had had it for fourteen years, and had been given to another privately and secretly, in violation of the law, and at a figure which enabled him to make considerable profit, as had been proved by the tenders since received by the Government. The contract had been awarded in violation of the law.

MR. HUNTINGTON: Not in violation of the law.

Motion agreed to.

QUARANTINE HOSPITAL AT SYDNEY, C.B.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. McDONALD (Cape Breton) moved for correspondence between the Dominion Government and the Imperial Government in reference to a site for building a quarantine hospital at Sydney, Cape Breton. He said that Sydney had become a very important shipping port, second only to Halifax. Vessels from different ports made Sydney a port of call. Vessels seeking freight in the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, the Bay of Fundy, as well as the Eastern States, frequented Sydney, and it was apparent of late years that disease had been brought into the city from these vessels. It was of the greatest necessity that a quarantine hospital should be built there, and he hoped the Government would seriously consider the matter.

Motion agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF SHIPPING OFFICER AT LITTLE GLACE BAY, C. B.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. McDONALD (Cape Breton) moved for correspondence relating to the dismissal of R. McNeil, Esq., shipping officer at Little Glace Bay, Cape Breton County.

MR. MAC KAY (Cape Breton) said he did not think the hon. gentleman had anything to complain of, inasmuch as, if he recollected aright, the shipping officer at Little Glace Bay left his office, and as it was not expected he intended to retain it, another was appointed in his place.

Motion agreed to.

REMOVAL OF POSTMASTER AT COW BAY, C. B.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. McDONALD (Cape Breton) moved for correspondence relating to the removal of the Postmaster at Cow Bay, Cape Breton, together with all correspondence between the Post-Office Department and all other parties touching the cause of his removal.

Motion agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF AGENT OF GOVERNMENT
SAVINGS BANK, GLACE BAY, C. B.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. McDONALD (Cape Breton) moved for all correspondence relating to the dismissal of the Agent of the Government Savings Bank at Glace Bay, Cape Breton.

Motion agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF THE POSTMASTER AT LITTLE GLACE BAY, C. B.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. McDONALD (C. B.) moved for all papers and correspondence relating to the dismissal of D. McDonald, Postmaster at Little Glace Bay, Cape Breton.

MR. HUNTINGTON said the Inspector had reported to the Department that this gentleman, who was, he believed, also connected with the Savings Bank, had absented himself, and was performing the duties of an accountant at Halifax. The Inspector had great deal of difficulty in finding him out, and he was not to be retained any longer.

MR. McDONALD (Cape Breton) said he wished to see the papers in order to ascertain whether what had been stated was correct, because, if it were, the Government should have dismissed the officer from another position which he held; but, instead of doing so, they left him there during two years. This man had had the misfortune to vote for him at the last election, after which he was dismissed from office. The Government allowed him to continue as Savings Bank agent for two years afterwards. It was known to the Government that he had been absent when they dismissed him from the office of postmaster, and they should have dismissed him, at the same time, from the office of agent of the Savings Bank. That was no reason for the course of the Government.

MR. HUNTINGTON: We thought it was a good reason.

Motion agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF JAMES CORBELL, POST-MASTER AT LORWAY MINES, C. B.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. McDONALD (Cape Breton) moved for all correspondence relating to the dismissal of James Corbell, postmaster at Lorway Mines, Cape Breton County.

MR. HUNTINGTON: Mr. Corbell resigned regularly on the 7th May, 1874. He was not dismissed.

Motion agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF J. CADIGAN.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. McDONALD (Cape Breton) moved for all correspondence touching the resignation of J. Cadigan, as Postmaster at Little Glace Bay, Cape Breton County.

MR. HUNTINGTON: The information I have is, that Cadigan resigned on the 19th July, 1875, because he was going into business and could not attend the office.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE AFFAIRS AT VICTORIA,
C.B.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. McDONALD (C.B.) moved for all correspondence between the Post-Office Department and all persons, touching the Postmaster and Post-Office affairs at Victoria Mines, Cape Breton County, for the past three years.

Motion agreed to.

LEASE OF OYSTER BEDS AND MUD FLATS IN COLCHESTER AND CUM-BERLAND.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. McKAY (Colchester) moved for copies of all correspondence, memorials, reports or papers, connected with a lease from the Government of Nova Scotia and from the Dominion Government to the Hon. Alex. McFarlane, of certain mud flats and oyster beds in the counties of Colchester and Cumberland, with copies of said leases; also, statement of the amount of rent received for said property by the Government. He said that a very large number of his constituents were interested in the matter referred to in this motion. This lease was given some ten years ago, and covered a very large bay, part of which was no benefit for the purposes of the lease. In this bay there were extensive mudflats or mussel mud bars, that were considered to be of immense wealth to farmers in that locality, and they had gone to a large expense in building scows and machines for dragging and carrying this rich deposit to their farms. The lease deprived them of this privilege. The portion required by the inhabitants was of no use to the holder of the lease. He (Mr. McKay) had used every means in his power to get the lease cancelled, and he was justified in asking for the cancellation for other reasons. The holder had not fulfilled the terms of the lease. He had never spent a dollar on it, and no person received any benefit from it. He believed he was right in saying that the Inspector of Fisheries in Nova Scotia had reported against the lease. On the coast of Prince Edward Island similar mud bars were used very extensively by the farmers of that Province, where the deposit was considered very valuable and where there were no restrictions whatever. He desired to impress on the Government the necessity of cancelling at least that portion of the lease which would benefit the inhabitants. He did not deny the right of the Government to lease oyster beds for the purpose of cultivating and propagating oysters, but in the present case the Government were doing the inhabitants of this locality a positive injury, and he hoped to hear that the lease was cancelled.

MR. HUNTINGTON.

SCHOOLS OF GUNNERY.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

MR. AYLMER moved for return of ranks and names of all officers who have attended and taken long or short course certificates at the "A" or "B" Battery Schools of Gunnery; the corps to which they belonged, with the dates of their appointments; their ranks and corps at present and the dates and reasons for their retirement.

Motion agreed to.

LOTS ON ASSINIBOINE RIVER.

MOTION FOR STATEMENT.

MR. RYAN moved for a statement showing the number of Lots south of the Assiniboine River, in the parish of Poplar Point, in the Province of Manitoba, for which Patents have been issued, for which applications for patents have been received, under the Manitoba Act or otherwise. He said he desired to call the attention of the hon. the Minister of the Interior to a matter covered by the motion. In the parish of Poplar Point, south of the Assiniboine River, there were a number of poor settlers who went in there shortly after the transfer of the country, and many of whom were half-breeds. By the provisions of the Order in Council, all those who were settled in the settlement belt before March, 1873, had the right to purchase the lands for $1 per acre. If those parties were mere speculators he would say those terms were exceedingly liberal, but they went across the river to settle before the Government regulations respecting the disposal of those lands were definitely settled. They were there with the expectation of being able to get a homestead entry for the land, as was done in other portions of the Province. It was afterwards determined by the Government that land in the settlement belt should not be open for homestead entry, and although many people had complied with the requirements of the Homestead Law, they were informed, when they applied for patents under the Homestead Act, that the Act did not extend to those lands and that they would have to pay $1 per acre for them. That price was a very moderate one, but the people were not speculators but active settlers, and as the country had derived considerable benefit from their settlement and improvement of the lands, he hoped the hon. the Minister of Interior would find it possible in the interests of the community to give them the lands under the Homestead Law.

Motion agreed to.

SURVEY OF BIC HARBOUR.

MOTION FOR REPORTS.

Mr. Fiset moved for copies of the Reports of the Engineers, Messrs. Kingsford and E. Michaud, on the survey of the Harbour of Bic.

Motion agreed to.

TELEGRAPH LINE BETWEEN MATANE AND FOX RIVER.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Fiset moved for copies of all correspondence between the Government and Sir Hugh Allan and the Montreal Telegraph Company, in relation to the construction of a Telegraph Line between Matane and Fox River.

Mr. MACKENZIE: There is very little correspondence, but what there is can be produced. The House will remember that a vote of $10,000 was taken last year in the Estimates, as a subsidy to induce the Montreal Telegraph Company to build a line between Matane and Fox River. There is a communication, however, now to Fox River, going by the New Brunswick side of the Gaspé peninsula and across the country. It was alleged that great advantage would result from having a telegraph line built along the coast, and the vote was taken to promote that enterprise, it being considered that, with local assistance and the Government grant, the company would be able to build the line. They have, however, absolutely declined to do it for that amount, but have decided to accept another proposal and to act upon it, if they receive it, that is a grant of $15,000 instead of $10,000. That proposition the Government have had under consideration with a view to secure the building of the telegraph line in the shipping interest wholly.

Motion agreed to.

PICTOU BRANCH RAILWAY.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. BOWELL, for Mr. POPE (Queen's, P.E.I.), moved for copies of all correspondence and documents received by the Government from all sources relative to handing the Pictou Branch Railway over to a private company.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Certain correspondence was brought down formerly. What is now before the Government cannot be brought down, because the road had not yet been transferred, and correspondence is proceeding at the present time. It would be inconvenient to submit any portion of an unclosed correspondence, and I must, therefore, ask that the motion be withdrawn. With respect to the transfer of the road, under the conditions of the Act passed last year, the hon. member will remember the Act provided that temporary transfer might be made as soon as the company building the road from New Glasgow eastward had expended not less than $400,000 on the line, and had given security to the satisfaction of the Government that it would be properly stocked and worked. The money has been expended and we have the certificate of the Nova Scotia Government to that effect; but the other conditions may not be complied with at an early date. In the meantime we are not satisfied at what date the road can be transferred, or whether we can have security, at an early day, to the satisfaction of the Government, as to the management of the line, and until such time as they have completed the whole—that condition being the paramount one which governs the transfer of the road—the transfer cannot be completed. I ask that the motion should not be proceeded with on that account; at all events, no information could be given other than what I have stated.

Motion, with leave of the House, withdrawn.

THE THOUSAND ISLANDS.

MOTION FOR STATEMENT OF SALES OR LEASES.

MR. JONES (South Leeds) moved for a statement of all sales or leases of the islands in the River St. Lawrence lying between Brockville and Kingston, known as "The Thousand Islands," during the years 1874-5, 1875-6 and 1876-7; showing what islands or parts of islands were sold or leased; names of said islands; quantity of land in each sold or leased; time for such leases or sales to run; the names of purchasers or lessees, with the amount to be paid en bloc, or per acre, for such purchases or leases. He said that many of the islands were of considerable area, containing from five to one thousand, or even two thousand acres, and had been converted into fine farms. Contiguous to those were very small islands containing from half an acre to three acres, and the persons occupying farms had endeavoured to make arrangements for their purchase from the Government. He made application in 1876, on behalf of his constituents for some of those small islands. He was told by the then Minister of the Interior (Mr. Laird) that the islands were not for sale or lease, and that the Government had not yet finally determined what they would do with them, but that probably the smaller islands would be sold under the hammer. In 1876 and 1877 some of the islands had been leased or sold, and he submitted the present motion in order to ascertain the probable disposition of the islands, which some of the farmers had used for pasturage for 80 years, and in order that the islands might not be sold over their heads without their knowledge. Opposite the town where he lived and within a short distance of his house, an island had been leased for 99 years; the lease had been granted to a respectable person and no great harm was done. Some of the islands, however, were now used for shebeens and more might be used for similar purposes. A complaint had been forwarded to him by a person who had made an application for a small island lying contiguous to his farm, that he had been brought before a Justice for having taken loose granite from an adjoining island to build a fence, and he had been fined $20. He would be glad to ascertain from the Government what disposition was proposed to be made of the Thousand Islands, which it was desirable should be maintained as a General Park for the Dominion.

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. MACKENZIE: The policy of the Government, in the first place, was to preserve the timber, without which the beauty of the islands was, in great measure, destroyed. Several years ago we found that people came there, carelessly cut down the timber, and carried it off for various purposes; and we employed an additional officer to guard the islands and prevent the wanton destruction which was destroying the actual beauty of the scenery. With regard to the final disposal of many of the islands, there is a difficulty; the desire of the Government was to retain all the small islands, at all events, and those which were comparatively worthless for agricultural purposes, in their natural state. On the other hand, it is to be remembered that the islands are now private property, that is, the property of the Indians; and we can hardly expect the Indians, who are the owners of the land, to give up the whole of these islands for national park purposes; and it has been somewhat difficult, on that account, to arrive at a definite conclusion as to what to do in the matter; but, in the meantime, no new leases have been issued, I think, for over two years.

MR. JONES: I beg your pardon.

MR. MACKENZIE: Does the hon. gentleman say that there were new leases?

MR. JONES: Yes.

MR. MACKENZIE: There were leases reissued, even within the last year, to people who held them formerly.

MR. JONES: But new leases were issued.

MR. MACKENZIE: I think that none were issued during last year. I am almost certain of that; but, in some cases, leases were given to parties. I think that some were given to leading members of the Civil Service here for the very purpose of protecting the islands, they undertaking to protect the property from wanton destruction. At all events, there is no intention to lease them or sell them, if means by which they can be preserved and kept in their natural state can be found, excepting those, of course, which are capable of cultivation and of having artificial beauty imparted to them by cultivation. The policy of dealing with the Indians is a matter not finally determined upon, and that interposes a difficulty, which, I am sure the hon. gentleman will appreciate in connection with the preservation of the park features of the islands.

Motion agreed to.

COLLINGWOOD HARBOUR.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD, for Mr. McCARTHY, moved for a copy of the Order or Orders in Council

"1. Relative to the agreement or terms upon which the grant was made and the money expended upon the new Breakwater and dredging at Collingwood Harbour in the Province of Ontario.

"2. The Order or Orders in Council directing the discontinuance of said works or either of them.

"3. The total amount expended on said work, distinguishing the sum paid for, or in connection with the Breakwater, from that (if any) expended on dredging.

"4. The amount or refund received from the town of Collingwood and the Northern Railway Company, respectively, and the amount (if any) now on hand, to the credit of the said town or the said railway company on account of such work or works.

"5. The petitions from the town of Collingwood or from the inhabitants thereof, or from others, praying for the completion of the said works, to the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, or the hon. the Minister of Public Works.

"6. All reports of the engineers of the Department of Public Works, as to the probable cost of the said works, the progress made thereon, the probable cost of completing the same, and especially the report or reports of the inspections made during the years 1874 and 1877.

"7. All correspondence between the authorities of the corporation of the said town and the Department of Public Works, relating to the alleged non-fulfilment of the agreement to do the dredging of the said harbour."

Motion agreed to.

RIDEAU HALL.

MOTION FOR STATEMENT.

MR. FARROW, for MR. MITCHELL, moved for a statement showing the total amount expended annually for the years 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, 1876 and 1877, for the following purposes, viz:—

"1. Additions to and repairs to Rideau Hall.

"2. Upon grounds, out-buildings and erections connected therewith.

"3. Upon water-works, gas and fuel.

"4. Furniture of all kinds.

"5. Travelling expenses of the Governor-General and suite.

"6. Amount of telegraph account.

"7. Also all and any other expenditures that may have been made from the Public Treasury for and in connection with Rideau Hall during said years."

MR. MACKENZIE: Of course the hon. gentleman and the House are entitled, if they choose, to order these expenditures. It will be observed that the statement commences with the year 1872, and comes down to the present time. The intention is quite manifest; and all I have to say is that the House formerly refused, at the request of the Government, to detail travelling expenses, and this motion is made in order to get at it in another shape. I can only give it in the shape in which the other statement was entered in the Public Accounts.

Motion agreed to.

SUPREME COURT BUSINESS.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

MR. FARROW, for MR. MITCHELL, moved for a return showing in detail all fees paid by the Department of Justice, or by any other Department, or in connection with the Intercolonial Railway, to counsel and attorneys in connection with any business before the Supreme Court since its formation, and the names of the counsel and attorneys, and the several suits in respect of which such fees were paid.

Motion agreed to.

House adjourned at Fifteen minutes after
Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 2nd April, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SECURING ATTENDANCE OF VOTERS AT THE POLLS BILL.

[BILL No. 66.]

(Mr. McDougall, South Renfrew.)

FIRST READING.

MR. McDOUGALL (South Renfrew) introduced a Bill (No. 66) To secure the attendance of voters at the elections of members of the Commons. He said his object was to ensure this result in lieu of causing candidates to put themselves in a false position through their agents, who brought persons to vote. It occurred to him there were other duties which electors had to attend to; and he thought that he had provided for them in this Bill. If these provisions were not sufficient, they could be amended in Committee. He admitted that there were other duties more important, perhaps, than voting, but, at the same time, it was important that the electors should attend the polls. He believed all would agree with him that if this desirable object could be attained without doing them any injury, it was well that this should be done.

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. LANGEVIN: Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain how he proposes to do this.

MR. McDOUGALL said he believed it was conceded both here and in England, that as to the explanation of a Bill on the first reading, what he had said was about as much as could be reasonably expected. The hon. gentleman, when the Bill was printed, would perhaps find any further explanation at the present time unnecessary.

MR. MASSON said he hoped that the hon. member for Chateauguay would not have two weights and measures, but tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) that he was making an ambitious attempt to thus impose his views on the House at this late period in the Session, when it was impossible to carry the Bill through. He remembered that the hon. gentleman had made such a statement to his hon. friend from Cardwell (Mr. McCarthy).

MR. HOLTON: This is a little Bill; the other was a big one.

MR. MITCHELL: The hon. gentleman never interferes against his own friends.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: My friend, who introduced the Bill, should carry out the usual practice adopted when a public Bill is introduced. The usual practice is to make a full explanation on the first reading. With private Bills, it is otherwise. If the hon. gentleman will not so inform us, we will have the Bill read.

MR. McDOUGALL said that, so far as he was concerned, he was willing to make the fullest explanation. His reason for not doing so at this particular moment was, because he heard hon. gentlemen expressing the opinion that to give a fuller explanation now would be merely to do what must be done under any circumstances at the second reading.

MR. LANGEVIN asked that the Bill be read.

THE ASSISTANT CLERK read the Bill.

Bill read the first time.

MR. SPEAKER: A very old practice has been revived in this instance, which has been regarded as entirely exploded—in demanding that the Bill be read. This was my impression at the time, but I did not like to say so, because I did not have my hand on the authorities. So late as 1868, a motion was made in the Imperial House of Commons that a Bill be read by the Clerk at the table, and Mr. Speaker explained that it was an exploded practice and not at all customary.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The Bill is always explained on the first reading.

MR. HOLTON: As a matter of practice, of course, this particular Bill has been disposed of, but I should like to know whether the right of a member to call for the production of a Bill in extenso has been exploded with the right to cause the reading of the Bill. The call for the reading of the Bill is usually made with the object of disclosing the fact that the Bill is introduced in blank. Can a Bill be introduced in blank?

MR. SPEAKER: No; it is contrary to the law of all Parliaments that a Bill be introduced in blank.

MR. MASSON: No Bill can be introduced in blank or in an imperfect shape; how then can it be known that a Bill is accepted in perfect shape?

MR. SPEAKER: It can be known by enquiry.

MR. LANGEVIN: There is no rule against reading the Bill.

MR. SPEAKER: There is no rule against it; but the practice has entirely disappeared. In 1868, in the Imperial Parliament, it was asked that a Bill be read, and Mr. Speaker said that it was an exploded practice. It was the old practice.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that, of course, a motion must be made for leave to introduce a Bill, and, therefore, the House must be informed whether it was such a Bill as it was willing to grant leave to introduce. The practice in England had always been to explain the Bill on the first reading and at such length that the practice of reading of the Bill itself had become obsolete because the members stated verbally its substance. Consequently, the practice of reading the Bill had fallen into desuetude, but if the other practice of not explaining Bills obtained at all, they must return to the old practice of having them read, so that the House might become informed sufficiently to say whether leave to introduce the Bill should be granted or not.

MR. SPEAKER: If any member chooses to object to a Bill, presuming that it is in blank, it is open to him to call on the Speaker and ascertain whether it is in blank or not; and that being ascertained, of course, if a Bill be in blank, it cannot be introduced in that shape. That is clearly against the rules. I may state that it was usual, on making the motion to introduce public Bills, to explain the object of the Bill and to give the reasons for its introduction; and unless the motion be opposed this is not the proper time for a lengthened debate on its merits. When an important measure is offered by a member, opportunity is then frequently taken to secure a full explanation of its character and objects; but where it is not one of an important character, debate should then be avoided, unless it is expected that the motion for leave to introduce be negatived and no further occasion arise for the discussion. Of course, it lies with the House to say whether it attaches any importance to a Bill or not.

MR. MITCHELL said he thought that this was a very important measure. No measure more important in its character had been introduced this Session. It was intended to compel every citizen to go to the polls, whether he desired or not, whether the voters liked the candidates or not, and whether they had any confidence in the candidates or not. It would also compel voters to go eight or nine miles to the polls to vote. It appeared to him that this was a very important measure; and that, at this late period of the Session, it required an explanation from the mover.

MR. MCDUGALL: I understand that the question is disposed of. I do not think that the hon. member has a right to discuss it now, nor would I have a right to do so.

MR. SPEAKER: Really, there is no question of any kind before the House. This matter is disposed of; but, as a practice of a very old character was introduced anew in the House, I thought it my duty to state to the House what the practice was. There is no question before the chair. I did not make any observation as to the importance of the measure.

MR. MITCHELL said he rose in self-justification. With regard to the proposition which the Speaker had propounded to the House with relation to what was the practice, he had risen to say that it was only with matters of importance, as was stated by May, that the House dealt in this connection. He had merely called attention to the fact that this was an important measure.

THE AUDITOR-GENERAL.

RESOLUTION CONCURRED IN.

Order for receiving Report of Committee of Whole on Resolution: That it is expedient to appoint an officer to be called the Auditor-General of Canada, salary not to exceed thirty-two hundred dollars per annum, read.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD asked the amount of salary of the present Auditor.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said the offices of Auditor and Deputy Minister of Finance were combined, the joint salary being $3,200. He did not think that any salary was attached to the Auditor-General's office. He was treated as the deputy-head, and originally put on the same footing as other deputy-heads. Subsequent to the passage of the Act of 1871, whereby the office of Deputy Inspector-General was abolished, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Auditor-General had been combined. The present Deputy Minister of Finance had, he believed, a further sum of $1,000 as Secretary to the Treasury.

MR. MITCHELL.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Then, in future, the Auditor will be a separate official from the Deputy Minister of Finance?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Yes. Then there is another Bill before the House which repeals the office of Receiver-General, and dissociates the offices of Minister of Justice and Attorney-General.

MR. MITCHELL: I do not understand whether my hon. friend intends to increase the charges by this Act, but I suppose he wants to legislate my old friend, the Receiver-General, out of office. Will the Bill involve an increased expenditure?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: It will not.

Resolution read the first and second times and agreed to.

RECEIVER-GENERAL AND ATTORNEY GENERAL BILL.—[BILL No. 51.]

(Mr. Laflamme.)

SECOND READING.

Order for second reading read.

MR. LAFLAMME said the Bill provided for the abolition of the Receiver-General's office as a separate department, and its annexation to the Department of Finance. It was really dependent on the Finance Department, and its being merged therein would be of great advantage to the public service. The nature of the duties devolving on that Department were defined by Statute, and this Bill merely indicated that the office would be transferred to the Department of Finance, the Deputy Minister of Finance being entrusted with the powers now possessed by the Receiver-General. The first two sections of the Bill referred to the Receiver-General's office, but in the third section it was provided that the office of the Minister of Justice shall be sub-divided into two distinct branches. This was found to be necessary in consequence of the increased amount of work which devolved upon the Department since 1869. The Department, moreover, had charge of the penitentiaries, the amount of business in connection with which was daily increasing and required proper attention. It would be obvious, no doubt, to every member of the House, that the ordinary legal business had also so increased that this alteration was necessary in order to secure its proper surveillance. To show this increase of business clearly, he would refer to a few statistics since Confederation. In 1869 the registered references were 1,693; in 1872 they were only 1,971, being an increase merely of 178; in 1873 the registered references amounted to 2,753; in 1874 to 3,403; in 1875 to 3,320; in 1876 to 4,344, and in 1877 it reached the amount of over 5,700. The correspondence in 1875 covered only 3,000 pages; in 1877, 9,000; while taking the last twelve months the volume contained 10,024 pages. It would, therefore, be obvious to every one that it was necessary to reorganize this Department. It might be objected to the proposition that in England the Minister of Justice and Attorney-General were represented by Attorney-General and Solicitor-General, but there would, under the new Bill, be this qualification: that the Attorney-General would have charge of all the Crown prosecutions formerly entrusted to the Minister of Justice, so that the duties of the two offices, when separated, would be clearly defined. There could be no confusion from the creation of this additional office as all the correspondence would be retained in Department of the Minister of Justice. In England, however, it had been the rule that the Attorney-General, as legal adviser of the Crown, should be outside the Ministry. In several of the British colonies the same rule had been followed, but in New Zealand the same system as that proposed in this Bill had been adopted. There was no other colony where this subdivision of the offices of Minister of Justice and Attorney-General existed, but in several colonies the offices of Attorney-General and Solicitor-General had been maintained as in England. The change proposed by this Bill was one merely in name, as far as the difference between the practice of the Dominion and that of England was concerned.

Mr. MITCHELL said he had grave objections to the passage of this Bill.

He would not enter into the various matters which the hon. gentleman had explained to the House, as to the necessities for the proposed change in the Department of Justice. He was not prepared to say whether that change was necessary or not, but he would say that there was too much legal influence in the House already. Members of the legal profession had too much Parliamentary influence in the country, and he objected to the Bill on the ground that it tended to take away from laymen positions to which they were entitled in the administration. When he looked round and saw the amount of influence possessed by the lawyers in this House, and the way legal gentlemen monopolized positions, and desired to extend that monopoly to every emolument and office in the country, he could not but consider this as another effort of the Government to swamp the independent laymen of the country and maintain and extend the monopoly of the lawyers. Why should this old officer, the Receiver-General, who was one of the best men in the House, though he did not say much, be legislated out of existence? He thought it was very bad taste on the part of the Minister of Justice to take such a course with respect to his colleague, and one that he should be ashamed of being placed on record. As to the abolition of the office itself, he (Mr. Mitchell) did not object to it, but he strongly objected to see the offices of the country monopolized by the legal sharks of this House.

Several Hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MITCHELL said it was well known that lawyers were always called land sharks; but, joking aside, he must say that he did not approve of this change. He did not see any necessity for another legal officer in the House. If they found the Minister of Justice overworked then there would be some reason for it. But the hon. gentleman had made no complaint of this kind, and they had had other Ministers of Justice, the present Chief Justice Dorion, and the present Judge Fournier, and the hon. gentleman's immediate predecessors. He had not heard from any of these a statement that they were overworked, and he, therefore, saw no reason why the Department should be divided and another Department created for some needy legal hanger-on of the Administration. That the office of Receiver-General might not be necessary, he quite admitted. He was not going to stand up for the maintenance of an office which public opinion seemed to consider unnecessary, and he admitted that the office of Receiver-General might very properly be merged in the Department of Finance; but why should the Government think it necessary to create another legal officer, unless it was simply to provide an office for some one of their legal followers. The Government, before they asked this House to approve of the Bill, must show that such additional legal assistance was necessary, that the Department of the Minister of Justice was over-worked. He (Mr. Mitchell) never found it so during the Administration of which he was a member for seven years, and he had heard no complaints from the gentlemen who had held that office at any time. About the only Minister of Justice who gave him satisfaction in that capacity was the Hon. Mr. Justice Fournier. He had occasion to apply to that gentleman once, and he had the case promptly dealt with; and he believed Mr. Fournier discharged the duties of the Department very well. What, then, were the facts that the Government had to show to this Parliament, and to the country, as the reasons for creating another Department? He did not know the hon. gentlemen whom the Government was desirous of bringing into office. Rumour said they desired to bring in the present Premier of Ontario as Attorney-General. He was not prepared to say whether that was so or not, but such was rumour. He was quite satisfied that such an officer was unnecessary; the present Minister of Justice, he was satisfied, was quite able to do the work. If that hon. gentleman would frankly state to the House that he was unable to do it, hon. members would have some grounds for considering it. He (Mr. Mitchell) was opposed to the creation of office for the purpose of strengthening the hands of any Ministry, and he did not see why the hon. member for Shelbourne (Mr. Coffin) should be made one of the political stools of this Administration. They took a more summary way with Mr. Ross, the late Minister of Militia. They said, "You must go; you must walk out;" but in the present instance, they said, "We will legislate you out of existence; we will bury you quietly." However, they had determined to abolish the office of Receiver-General, and, as he said before, it might be advisable; but he must enter his protest against attaching to the expenditure of this country $10,000 or $12,000 annually for an Attorney-General, when, for years, the Minister of Justice had been sufficient, and was sufficient at the present time. The business had been behind-hand sometimes, the business of all Departments might get behind from neglect; but if the hon. Minister chose to attend to his work he was quite able to perform the duties of that Department. There seemed to be a little incongruity in this Bill. There were two points which struck him as very peculiar. First, they had it provided in the 6th Section that the Deputy Minister of Justice might also be Deputy to the Attorney-General of Canada. Now, they had it on scriptural authority that a man could not serve two masters, and he believed that one officer could not serve as deputy to the Minister of Justice and to the gentleman coming in as Attorney-General at the same time. This was a new feature in the departmental life of Canada. They had had two deputies to one head before, but never two heads and only one deputy. This innovation seemed to be quite out of place and he did not think it was calculated to work well. Then, take sections 7 and 8; if any hon. gentleman would read them and inform him what they meant, he would be obliged, for he could not, for the life of him, understand what was meant by them. They were models of composition. The first read:

MR. MITCHELL.

"The second sub-section of section one of the Act passed in the thirty-first year of Her Majesty's reign (1868), chapter twenty-five and the sixth section of that Act, are hereby respectively amended by inserting after the words 'Minister of Justice' therein, the words 'Attorney-General,' and by striking out the words, 'Receiver-General' where they now occur therein, and inserting the words 'and Receiver-General' after the words "Minister of Finance."

That was a model of a section. He would now read section 8:—

"On and after a day to be fixed by proclamation under an Order of the Governor in Council, the second section of the Act passed in the thirty-sixth year of Her Majesty's reign (1873), chapter thirty-one, shall be amended by striking out the words 'and Attorney General' after the words 'Minister of Justice,' and by adding the words 'and Receiver General' after the words 'Minister of Finance,' and by striking out the words 'The Receiver General' and substituting in lieu thereof the words 'The Attorney General.'"

If any hon. gentleman would inform him what was their meaning he should be glad, for he had devoted some time to them without being able to understand them. He appealed to the House not to permit another law officer in the House, giving to the legal profession a power they ought not to have, and not to allow even a Liberal Government, an economical Government to create an unnecessary office which would cause an additional expenditure of $10,000 or 12,000 a year.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he was opposed the second reading of this Bill. He was opposed to it on principle, because he thought it was a move in the wrong direction. That portion having reference to the office of Attorney-General was certainly not required. As to the abolition of the office of Receiver-General, that, perhaps, was not objectionable. He was quite well aware that the duties of the Receiver-General under the present system were so intimately connected with the Department of Finance that it might well be done away with, supposing that there was a sufficient check on the Finance Department by an efficient system of auditing accounts by an independent officer. In respect to this, there was a little difficulty, arising from the fact that they had several Bills with reference to it, instead of one. They did not know what might be the case; one might pass and the other might not. But in the present case they had the two matters, the abolition of the Receiver-General and the appointment of Attorney-General, presented in one Bill, so that they might discuss the whole, one question very much depending upon the other. At the same time, he hoped that the abolition of the office of Receiver-General did not carry with it what the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) apprehended, namely: a provision to legislate out of office the hon. member for Shelbourne (Mr. Coffin).

MR. MITCHELL: That is what it does.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said if it did, it would show the Cabinet was not deserving of the high commendations for unity that had been passed upon it. He was the only one Minister who had never committed a blunder since he had been in office, by word or deed. Not one blunder had been attributed to him. Notwithstanding this, the Government were not satisfied; they thought him, to use a common expression, "too good to live." And so he was abolished; but perhaps there might be a future for him, and the salary might be absorbed in other ways. The hon. gentleman, as a member of that House, had the respect and esteem of all who knew him. But, with respect to the alteration in the Department of Justice, he (Sir John A. Macdonald) thought it was altogether in the wrong direction. He objected, on principle, to having two legal men at the head of two separate Departments, as they were, in a sense, both in the Cabinet. There would at once be a difference of opinion in the Cabinet. There ought to be one legal man as the counsel of the Crown, and only one, as in England. The reason why the Attorney-General in England was not in the Cabinet was because the Lord Chancellor was there. The latter was the keeper of the Queen's conscience; he dealt out advice on all legal matters; he was responsible to the Parliament, the Courts, the public, and the bar. There was a real, tangible responsibility by having one man, of the highest standing, who was responsible before the world. There might be a difference of opinion between the Minister of Justice and the Attorney-General, and he held that, for this reason, it was highly objectionable that there should be two legal men in the Cabinet. He did not say two lawyers, but two men having a right to speak authoritatively of law connected with the Crown; one should be out of the Cabinet, just the same as in England. The Attorney-General was a high officer, a highly-paid officer, a most important officer, a man who had charge of the administration of the legal affairs of the country, subject to the higher supervision of the Chancellor, but yet he was not in the Cabinet. And he ought not to be in the Cabinet, for fear of a division of responsibility, and a fear that the people would have no legal principle to govern the Government. True, Cabinets were said to be united; well, we knew they were. But look at the state of England now, of the Parliament, the people, and the Press. There was no legal constitutional collision so long as the Cabinet remained together, yet everybody knew there was a war party and a peace party in the Cabinet; Lord Carnarvon, Earl Derby, and formerly Earl Salisbury, representing the peace party; Gathorne Hardy, Lord Beaconsfield and the majority, belonging to the war party. We all knew that; we all knew how the Cabinet was formed; we knew their antecedents—what their previous opinions were; and we supposed, that unless they had undergone some miraculous conversion in being sworn into office, they must have the same opinions. It was highly objectionable, for the same reason as it was highly inexpedient that Courts of Appeals should decide in an uncertain sound, that there should be two leading members of the Cabinet having legal duties to perform, and obliged to be legal advisers, more or less, in their respective Departments. It must produce weakness, vacillation, and want of unity of action. He did not see there was any necessity in the increase of the work, for the creation of these additional offices. He would have said that the Government had a right to claim credit for retrenchment after doing away with the Receiver-General's Department, thinking and believing, and he agreed with them to a certain extent, it had become obsolete, and that there was no necessity for a separate Department, at all events, a separate head. That was altogether aside from the general question: The hon. member for Chateauguay, who knew so well the opinion which prevailed in England, was aware there ought to be in every Cabinet some offices without any particular departmental duties attached to them, so that those individuals might be used as handy men to take up any subject of particular interest at the time in connection with the administration of affairs. He did not think the Government could use that argument in defence of keeping up the Receiver-General's Department. He was not at all aware, although the Receiver-General had not many departmental duties to perform, that the Government had utilized his services in any other Department whatever, or on any other subject whatever. He thought the Government could fairly claim, and ought fairly to claim, some credit for the retrenchment of those offices. It was the abolishment of a useless department and a saving to the country. But with their usual should he call it ill luck, they had contrived, while they might have had the credit of making this saving, to spoil it all by dividing the administration of the Department of Justice and giving it to a legal man. As a legal man himself, he was rejoiced to see more avenues to professional advancement and honour than existed before. He thought that lawyers in this country or continent could not complain of not having a full share of political honour and position. But he did not believe the increase of business had been such as to warrant the proposed division. In fact, if, under this Act, the duties of Attorney-General and the duties of Minister of Justice were essentially the same, as was provided in the Act of 1868, which had been carried by the late Administration, the main portion of the increase of work must belong to the Attorney-General's office. There was very little left to do for the Minister of Justice if the Attorney-General had got to do all the work, and he would be obliged to do all the work provided by law. He would be merely a legal adviser, a chamber counsel; to assist in Council, with very little to do indeed. And yet, strange to say, it was provided that the Minister of Justice, even with the very little he had to do, except as a high legal functionary called upon to give advice to the Crown—the duties were very responsible and ought to require legal attainment, but were not of that continuous every-day work which required a separate Department—was not to do his work alone; the Attorney-General had to do his work. The Minister of Justice, assisted by the Attorney-General, would preside over the Department of Justice. The Minister of Justice, the Chancellor, the keeper of the Vice-Regal conscience in this country, was not even head of his own Department, but was to be assisted by the Attorney-General in the Department of Justice, where there was little practical work to do, while the Minister of Justice had nothing to do with the Attorney-General's Department. The hon. gentleman had said there was an enormous increase of business. The hon. gentleman did not look very much overworked; he did not seem to have suffered in his health. Any Minister of Justice applying himself solely and entirely to the work of his Department could fairly perform it; one man could do it with proper assistance. True, the hon. gentleman stated there had been a large increase of references. How did that occur? He (Sir John A. Macdonald) could easily understand it. It was simply the introduction of a circumlocution system. These matters, he believed, had all been brought to the Minister of Justice. There was a good deal of justification for that circumlocutory process from the fact that the Administration formed in 1873 were, most of them, inexperienced men in the practical working of the administration of affairs; therefore, they went, very properly on first taking office, with uncertain steps, feeling their way, not being willing to take certain responsibilities, which older and more experienced men would consider as routine. The older the present Government became, so long as it retained a reasonable portion of its older members, this necessity for reference would decrease. Take, for instance, the Minister of Customs. He was an able man, and being an old commercial man, was peculiarly well adapted to that office. But he did not know anything about the general administration of the Customs Act. Questions of law from every collector all over the Dominion came to him, and he was obliged to refer them to the Attorney-General, in order to get a report upon the law respecting them. It was a fact that there were so many Departments taken in charge by men who had no experience, that the references to the Attorney-General's office were increased. The Dominion had not grown so enormously since 1873 as to require an entire, a distinct, and a separate Department. Look back at the Department as he (Sir John A. Macdonald) had left it. If he had simply been Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, he would have had no difficulty in performing the work, and would have had plenty of time besides. He held that Department, and the still more troublesome one, as the hon. member from Lambton had no doubt experienced, of First Minister. He was bound to say the two, or rather the three, were too onerous for one individual. With competent men at the heads of the different Departments, the one holding the office of Minister of Justice, could perform, and would be able to perform, its duties for a long time to come. There was no necessity for an increase of salary. The hon. gentleman said the Department looked after the penitentiaries, which was an enormous affair. Why, looking after the penitentiaries had always existed. When he was Attorney-General of the old Province of Canada, they had not only to look after the penitentiaries in Ontario, but also after every county gaol in the Province of Ontario. That work had certainly not increased. Then, the hon. gentleman had been relieved from the charge of the Mounted Police, rather a troublesome affair, the moral management of which, not the supply and material, should always have remained there. There was no necessity for this Department; it was a causeless division of labour, an unfortunate division of labour. He thought it would work badly; it would be well that the present system should exist, but especially would it work badly, having two men sitting in the Cabinet. It had been argued by himself, as in former times by hon. gentlemen opposite, that it was not the business of the Opposition of the day to announce a policy. Well, he would tell the hon. gentlemen what his idea was of the proper mode to meet any increase in the work in that Department, and it could be done without an increase of a farthing's expense to the community. He believed that the Minister of Justice should remain still the Attorney-General. As Minister of Justice, he was the adviser of the Crown; as Attorney-General, he was adviser of the Departments of the Government. Those were so closely connected that they were in effect the same thing; there was such a thin line between them they might be considered as the same thing. In both cases they were advisers on legal questions affecting the public interests. The Minister of Justice should remain Attorney-General. There should be an officer to take charge of the general business, who could, if the Government liked, be called Solicitor-General; let him be a member of the Government if they liked. He supposed there were advantages, political advantages, which would override the other advantage of having a fixed Treasury Solicitor or permanent officer. There were political advantages which would, perhaps, incline the House to decide that it would be well that the Solicitor-General should be a political officer and go out with the Government of the day. He should have a subordinate salary of say $3,000. He should conduct all the exchequer business, either himself, here, at headquarters, or, if at a distance, by agents. The fees of litigation of the Crown should be funded, and out of that fund his salary should be paid. There should be agents in every Province, and each agent should pay a certain portion of the fees to his principal the Solicitor-General, and otherwise should be put into this fund. And that fund should be large enough to pay the salary of the Attorney-General and have a considerable amount over. Besides paying $3,000 to the Solicitor-General, he should get, out of this fund, for contentious business in which he went into Court and held a brief, a moderate fee, upon the same principle that a moderate fee was given to the Crown Counsel who go round on circuit and carry on the criminal prosecutions at the different county assizes, so that he might have a real interest in the business. Human nature was human nature. If he got a certain salary and no fee out of the business, and was opposed to counsel whose income depended upon his successful fighting against the Crown officer, the defence would be very apt to be infinitely more vigorous than the prosecution. He (Sir John A. Macdonald) would have a moderate salary, and would have the fees funded, out of which fund the Solicitor-General would be paid his salary and also a regulated fee, naturally more moderate than what would be given to counsel, because the Solicitor-General would receive a fee on every case in which he went into Court. This business, then, would be very well done, the Solicitor-General aiding the Attorney-General in the House and assisting him, not only in the general business of the House, the Government business in the House, but in defending that Department against the numerous attacks which would and ought to be made upon it, as occasion arose. This, in his opinion, would be a reform in the right direction, thus relieving the Minister of Justice, not of the responsibilities (he ought to be responsible for the duties of Minister of Justice and Attorney-General), but from the actual every-day work, the Solicitor's work, and not compel him to go into Court. The Solicitor-General would be a handy man, always ready to go into the business. That fee fund would be sufficient to cover all the expenses and leave a surplus besides. This was the plan he ventured to suggest to the hon. gentleman. He would only offer one remark more; he opposed, as strongly as he could, the idea of having two legal men dividing the responsibility, dividing the work in legal matters.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

MR. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman had taken one very remarkable point, and had spoken very strongly upon it; indeed, he had made it the chief point of his objection. It was this: that it was very objectionable that two officers, known as the law officers of the Crown, should be both members of the same Cabinet. The hon. member had had four members conducting the legal business of the Government in Old Canada, and he never objected to the plan then. Why had it suddenly dawned upon him that it was objectionable now? He also said that certain officers should be appointed in the Government who would be understood not to be confined to particular labour, in order that they might be of general assistance to the Government, such as the President of the Council, no doubt. A legal gentleman, possessed of the qualities requisite in the Attorney-General, would be infinitely more useful to the Government than any layman could possibly be occupying the other positions. The other charge he made, was that the duties of that office had not been increased to the extent represented by the Minister of Justice. The right hon. gentleman must be aware that the change in the laws, and many other incidents connected with recent legislation, had materially increased the duties. The hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. Blake) had, perhaps, a capacity for work more than any other member in the House, and yet his powers were taxed to the very utmost in order to keep up with the duties of his office. The right hon. member for Kingston had said that the hon. gentleman was relieved of the duties connected with the Mounted Police. That was, however, very little relief from the work in the same Department discharged by the right hon. gentleman.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he did not lay much stress on that.

MR. MACKENZIE said that being the case he would not say more about it, because the duties were only commencing when the right hon. member for Kingston left office. It had been the case that in all the great colonies in the Australasian system officers were appointed to discharge the duties of Attorney-General in connection with those of Minister of Justice. In New Zealand various statutes had been passed with respect to that particular position. In 1866, when an Attorney-General was appointed under a new system, he was appointed on good behaviour and was not made a political officer. In 1870 it was found necessary to appoint a Minister of Justice, and in that colony the two offices exist at the present time. In 1876 when it was found inconvenient to have an Attorney-General out of Parliament, an Act was passed which made it optional with the Administration of the day either to have the Attorney-General a non-political or political personage; and under the operation of that Act, in the same year, an Attorney-General was appointed as a responsible Minister, having a seat in Parliament, and had so continued to the present time. The same system prevailed in South Australia, where an Attorney-General and a Solicitor-General were in the House in 1855. In 1861, an Act was passed which made it imperative that the Solicitor-General should not sit in Parliament, but in 1866 the Government brought in a measure making it optional whether the Attorney-General should or should not have a seat. That Bill, however, was not passed, although there was a majority in the House for it, because the Constitution required that any change required an absolute majority of the whole of the members. A similar Bill was brought in by a different Administration in 1870, and carried by a majority, but lost in the same way. In South Victoria, from 1855 to 1859, there were nine Ministers to be appointed by the Governor-General, and of those there were to be an Attorney-General and a Solicitor-General, both having charge of the legal Department. In 1875, a Minister of Justice was appointed in that colony, but the Attorney-General was not a member of either House, although he was still holding a political position, and went out with the Government of the day, if the Government should resign or be defeated. In South Wales, the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General were members of the Government and of the House in 1855. An attempt was made in 1872 to make both offices non-political, but that failed. In 1873, a Minister of Justice was appointed, and the Attorney-General's office was made a political one, although he was not a member of the Cabinet. That question had, therefore, been discussed in the great Australian colonies very exhaustively, and it had, also, been discussed on various occasions in England. The ground was taken by some public men, both in Australia and England, that it was not desirable the Attorney-General should be a member of the Government as a responsible Minister, but that idea had evidently not prevailed in any of the colonies, although it had been tried occasionally, as he had shown, but had been ultimately abandoned, and those offices were now in precisely the same position as the offices would be in the present Administration if the Bill carried. As to there not being sufficient work for the two offices, he was quite satisfied that no person acquainted with the duties of the office, as they now required to be performed, could possibly come to that conclusion. It was all very well to deliver a somewhat strong speech against the Bill, but it was a different matter to give facts and statements upon which to base a sound argument against it. There could be no doubt in the mind of any one that the substitution of this office for that of Receiver-General was one that would greatly aid any Administration, in the discharge of its Parliamentary functions particularly. Every Administration must have felt the great want there was under our system of officers charged particularly with the preparation and carrying of Government Bills, particularly those of a legal character. In England that work was all done outside of the Cabinet, by experts employed for that specific purpose. Here, there was no doubt, a Law Clerk, whose special duty was, not to draft Bills for the Government, but to revise and compare Bills which were drafted, with existing Statutes, although sometimes, no doubt, assisting the Department of Justice. But there had been a sore want felt constantly of that legal assistance which was absolutely necessary when Ministers had to sit in Parliament, to attend Committees in the forenoons and attend to the other administrative functions devolving on them by reason of their office. That was an enormous labour, and he could conceive of nothing that would tend to afford relief more than the appointment of an Attorney-General, who would be charged with many of those duties which members of the Cabinet generally had now to perform. He was sure such an office would have been a great relief to the right hon. member for Kingston during the time he was Premier. It was of still greater importance, when a layman, like himself (Mr. Mackenzie) occupied that position, to have abundant assistance in the direction of legislative preparation, and the conducting of legal business through Parliament, for it was almost impossible as matters now stood, with the legislative functions to perform and the legislative duties to attend to, that any one man could devote that amount of care and attention absolutely necessary in order to carry successfully the measures of an Administration through Parliament, and at the same time perform all the other duties of the office.

MR. TUPPER said there was one reason why, he thought, the present Administration should feel inclined to obtain the assistance of more lawyers. The members of the legal profession had the advantage over laymen, that they were accustomed, and compelled from the very character of their profession, to be prepared to enter the Courts one day with a case, and make an able and eloquent argument in its favour, and on the following day to go into the same Courts with a case antagonistic to that they had so ably argued on the previous day, and make an equally strong case in its favour. If ever a Government stood in the position of requiring advocates who were able to maintain one case one day, and on the following day to show strong reasons for pursuing the very opposite line, it was the Administration which had submitted this Bill to Parliament. Take the very question under consideration. No one could forget that while hon. gentlemen opposite occupied seats on the Opposition side of the House for six years, the then Government were continually subjected to the charge of inflicting upon the country an altogether unnecessary amount of expenditure in connection with the number of the Ministers. Those hon. gentlemen affirmed that argument in the House, and reiterated, with equal vehemence on public platforms, the charge that the Government were wasting the public revenues of the country by furnishing salaries for an unnecessary number of Ministers. And they brought what appeared to be strong and cogent arguments in support of that view. They asked the people to look across the borders, where forty millions, instead of four, were ably governed by an administration of seven members instead of fourteen, and they naturally reasoned that if forty millions could be successfully governed by an administration of seven members, it was altogether unnecessary to have thirteen Ministers to govern four millions. The time at length came when the responsibility of governing the country was cast upon those hon. gentlemen. The plea put forward for their subsequent action was that, when they made those statements the Government had then only four millions to govern, and the country comprised only Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, but the Dominion had been extended by the addition of the North-West Territories, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, and the case was changed. But the case was not changed. Those hon. gentlemen knew right well that from the commencement of Confederation it was contemplated to bring all the British North American Provinces within the Dominion; and, therefore, that formed no justification for having adopted the change they did in relation to that question. Having defined a line of policy entirely opposed to that they had advocated when in Opposition, and having adopted a position on that subject utterly at variance with the principles they had formerly laid down, it was not surprising that hon. gentlemen opposite should require such a recast of the Cabinet as would give them more of that kind of talent specially adapted to meet the same case from different points of view, and one day reason in its favour, and the next day against, it with equal success. No doubt when those hon. gentlemen were in Opposition, they succeeded in convincing their friends and supporters not only that they were quite sincere, but that all the arguments they adduced were conclusive and unanswerable. There was no doubt those hon. gentlemen would be equally able today to justify to the judgment of their friends and supporters that an entire right-about face, a complete change of front, and thorough repudiation of the principles they held when in Opposition, was also sustained by unanswerable argument and commended itself to the intelligence of the country. But they would find a great many people who would not be so ready to change with the changing breeze, not so ready to adopt whatever principles might suit the Administration of the day to present for their consideration, utterly irrespective of the principles they had advocated, and succeeded in convincing their followers were correct the previous day. A feature of the Bill which would commend itself to every member of the House was the abolition of the office of Receiver-General. It was quite true there was very considerable advantage in having certain offices in an Administration that were not charged with a great amount of departmental duty, because it left the talents and abilities of such officers at the disposal of the Prime Minister on any great important measure with which they might be called to deal. But there was this fatal and insurmountable objection to offices in a Cabinet that did not necessarily involve great abilities in order to discharge the duties, that office was sought after by men who never should be Cabinet Ministers in Canada. The Cabinet of a country ought not to be larger than were the necessities of the country, and not larger than to include the smallest number of able men who were able to perform the duties. Therefore, it was mischievous in the highest degree to have any office in the Administration that did not require such ability as a Cabinet member of the Dominion of Canada should possess. The honour and character of the country was at stake in such matter, and the moment the Government had a Cabinet office recognized to be a sinecure, they were open to the pressure of friends for the appointment of certain individuals who never would have been pressed upon them, if the duties of the office necessarily involved such an amount of ability and talent as Ministers of this country should undoubtedly possess. He held it to be a wise and judicious procedure on the part of the Government to have abolished an office which had been regarded, and properly so, as, to a very large extent, a sinecure. But it would require a vast amount of reasoning, more than had yet been offered, to show that the substitution of the plan proposed by the Government was a wise one. He held it to be altogether at variance with the facts as they existed, with the history of the matter and past experience in regard to it. He could see no objection to the plan proposed by the right hon. member for Kingston, that a Solicitor-General should be substituted, he not being given a seat in the Cabinet, for his appointment would entail no increased cost to the country, because he would be charged with duties now performed by persons outside of the Government, and for which the public money was paid.

MR. MACKENZIE: What good would that do?

MR. TUPPER said it would do this good: it would give the Government the services of a legal officer who might not only be employed in the discharge of those special duties, but questions on which the Premier desired to obtain a legal opinion might be submitted to him. The appointment of such an officer would not increase the number of Cabinet members, and his legal talents would be available to the Government without incurring any increased cost to the country. As he had said, the objection to the Bill was that it involved an unnecessary increase in the number of Cabinet Ministers. He would not enter into the question connected with the attacks made on the late Government respecting the number of Ministers, but simply called attention to the fact that so soon as those hon. gentlemen were called upon to form an Administration, they increased the number of Ministers. He desired to know if the office of Receiver-General could be abolished; if not, why was it necessary to create another Minister, and that in the Department of Justice? Let him call the attention of the House to the position in which the question stood to-day. When the right hon. member for Kingston was Minister of Justice, he was found equal to the discharge of the duties. The fact was he had not only the duties of the office of Attorney-General, as they were now performed, but he had, in addition, the Mounted Police organization.

MR. MACKENZIE: No.

MR. TUPPER said that the hon. the First Minister said "no;" but he would tell the hon. gentlemen that through the incumbency of his right hon. friend, all the enormous work connected with the organization of the Force was performed.

MR. MACKENZIE: Hear, hear.

MR. TUPPER: Yes; and I know all about it.

MR. MACKENZIE: So do I.

MR. TUPPER said he knew that in this Department the enormous work connected with the organization of the Mounted Police Force was arranged, and when the hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, they found the whole matter cut and dried to their hand.

MR. MACKENZIE: No.

MR. TUPPER: That is a fact.

MR. MACKENZIE: No.

MR. TUPPER: They found a large force enlisted and despatched to the North-West, and the whole question, in all its bearings, dealt with by his right hon. friend, the late Minister of Justice and his Department, and that in a most vigorous and effective and thorough manner. This was the condition of affairs at the time; and it was only after his right hon. friend was relieved from the discharge of these duties that the Mounted Police Force and all the great and very large amount of work connected with the service—and these were never larger than when it was in its incipient state of organization—was transferred to the Department of the Secretary of State. So there was no excuse for this change. If the business had increased in other respects, so also had the Department been relieved by the transfer of this large branch of the work that had been connected with the office to another Department. But was it to be forgotten that his right hon. friend not only discharged the duties of Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, embracing, as they did, the whole management and control connected with not only the general organization of the Mounted Police Force, but all the ministerial part of the functions connected with this organization—but also, at that time, was the Prime Minister of the country. He had no hesitation in saying that the duties were very onerous; and he was astonished when he read the speech of the hon. member for South Bruce at Teeswater, in which the hon. gentleman went into a statement that, he thought, was scarcely worthy of the hon. gentleman's attention at such great length—in reference to the amount of telegraphing and contingent expenditure that had been connected with the office of the Minister of Justice, and drew a most unfair comparison between his own administration of the office and the administration of his right hon. friend. It was unworthy of the great talents and high position of the then Minister of Justice to descend, as he thought the hon. gentleman did, to the most unfair representation in reference to this matter. He had no hesitation in saying—and he spoke from a personal knowledge of public affairs for about twenty-four years, some considerable portion of which had been spent in a position to give him some knowledge of the duties and responsibilities and demands upon one's time and purse connected with the matters—that the hon. member for South Bruce not only ignored the fact that during the whole tenure of office by the right hon. gentleman until the last few months he was relieved from its duties, the right hon. gentleman received a salary of $5,000 instead of $7,000; and, if the hon. gentleman did not ignore the fact, it was altogether lost sight of in the comparison which he made respecting the duties discharged by a Prime Minister when he was Minister of Justice, which involved more expenditure for telegraphing, and in relation to the contingent expenditures of the office, than the contingencies and telegraphing connected with the office of Minister of Justice.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. BLAKE: Hear, hear.

MR. TUPPER said the hon. gentleman said "hear, hear," but he spoke advisedly when he said that while the Minister of Justice and the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Finance were open to be communicated with and bombarded with telegrams from all parts of the Dominion in regard to the limited duties that came under their administration, whoever was the First Minister in this country was open; and not only open, but constantly so, to be communicated with by telegram and in every other way by parties from one end of this wide Dominion to the other, not in connection with the duties of the office of Minister of Justice, but in connection with the general administration of affairs. A party might feel aggrieved with reference to communications with the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of the Interior or any other of the other twelve,—and what was his first act? He appealed at once to the First Minister and sent a lengthy telegram to state his case, enquire what was to be done under the circumstances, and to call upon him for interference; so the hon. member for South Bruce, he thought, had lost sight of the fact, which if he had given sufficient weight and consideration to it, would have prevented him, under the circumstances, from drawing an unfavourable contrast and dwelling on a matter, and with relation to circumstances, that, considering the great questions then occupying the public attention of this country, were thus rendered comparatively insignificant. He would say merely that every word which the hon. member for South Bruce uttered in his own vindication and in placing himself at an advantage in regard to this comparison with his right hon. friend, was a censure on the hon. gentleman's chief. If the hon. gentleman had taken up the Public Accounts and examined these very expenditures connected with the Department of Public Works, and the other Departments, he would have found that every word and all the credit which he had taken to himself, and unfairly taken to himself, with relation to this matter, formed a censure of the strongest character with regard to the enormous extravagance and the over-expenditures which, by that line of argument, the hon. gentleman established against the hon. the Prime Minister and every one of his colleagues. The speech which the hon. member for South Bruce had made a few days ago had thrown, to his mind, the only light that had yet been cast on this extraordinary proposition, for he maintained that it was an extraordinary proposition for a party and a Government which denounced the present number of Cabinet Ministers as being altogether unnecessary, and claimed that seven were enough, and that nine was the outside number. Under these circumstances it was an extraordinary proposition for these gentlemen to bring forward the division of the office connected with the Administration of Justice. After they had denuded it of a large portion of its duties, and after, he believed, it was not contemplated that this office should be held in connection with the onerous and responsible and important office of the First Minister of the country,—under these circumstances there was no ray of light thrown upon this question but the laboured speech made on a former occasion by the hon. member for South Bruce; and this was on the occasion when the hon. gentleman maintained the right of the Minister of Justice of this country to practice his profession in the Courts of law while holding that office. If it were held that the Minister of Justice—and the hon. gentleman seemed to think that the only means by which such an amount of legal ability, and ability of such a high character as this office required, could be obtained would be by avoiding dis-serving the gentleman who filled the office from his own private professional duties which he owed to himself, and his clients—could do this, if this was sound doctrine and held and accepted as such, and the Government concurred in this view, he could then understand that this was a preliminary to the relieving of the Minister of Justice from almost all his duties, while another and a highly paid officer was brought into the Government, involving an enormous additional expense to the country; thus relieving that high functionary from the duties of Minister of Justice and allowing him to go into the Courts and practice his own private business and profession. He might say at the outset, he was afraid that his right hon. friend would disagree with him on this point; but he held the opinion—and he would do a violation to his opinion on this point if he did not state it—that a greater impropriety could not be perpetrated in this country. The very foundation of the administration of law and of the maintenance of the rights of the Bar in this country was that every barrister went before the Courts standing upon an equal footing, as far as his abilities and the knowledge of his profession that he possessed, allowed. The very foundation of the administration of justice, as it touched the right of every suitor in this country, must rest on the principle that, standing in the presence of the Courts, every advocate stood in precisely the same position, and obtained the justice for his clients that every just and fair consideration for his clients, as far as his ability and position went, would entitle him to; and it would be a fatal mistake to take any course that, while it did not touch in the least degree the rights of clients, would create, and necessarily create, a feeling among the Bar that they did not stand on an equal footing in presence of the Judge,—a feeling on the part of clients and the great mass of the people compelled to go into the Courts that their position was not such as would entitle them to fair, open and impartial justice. The very fact, and they could never dissever this from the position of Minister of Justice, that he was clothed with almost supreme power in this country in reference to promotions to and on the Bench, that enormous patronage was thrown into the hands of an officer powerful as this Minister, created the feeling—however unwillingly it might be—that there would be an insensible operation in the mind of the Judge, whose own interests were in the scale as well as those of the clients, in favor of the Minister; and if this feeling could creep in among the high-minded members of the legal profession, and he believed that it would, what would they say as to the great mass of the uninformed people of the country, who were forced to go into the Courts, and very often in reference to their dearest rights? There would be a feeling of complete insecurity, and where the Judge decided in favour of the Minister of Justice or of the claim and plea and advocacy of the Minister of Justice, upon whom his own promotion depended, the party who was decided against would be convinced in many cases, that had that decision been rendered altogether regardless and apart from the position of the Minister of Justice, who was standing in the presence of the Judge, it would have been a different one. He (Mr. Tupper) spoke for himself alone in regard to this matter, and he held the strongest opinions in this respect. He, consequently, regretted very much that the hon. member for South Bruce, so high an authority—who had conformed his practice, he (Mr. Tupper) was bound to say, to the loudly-uttered public sentiment of the country, and felt it due to that public sentiment, which, no doubt, was the sound practice—say that the Minister of Justice should be open to pursue his private professional practice in the Courts; and, in fact, that it was necessary he should be allowed to do so, in order to obtain such an amount of ability and talent for that office as it was in the interest of the country to secure. He believed that it would be possible to do so; and that the high position this office conferred, and the great legal distinction and the great power that it gave, and the enormous patronage with which it invested the Minister, would be quite sufficient to induce gentlemen to accept the position, and the past had shown that the country could command, and had commanded, the very highest professional talent in this country for the office of Minister of Justice. He believed that they need have no fear as to the future in this respect, that the same thing would be found to be true, and that gentlemen, however high and however great their personal emoluments were to them, had their ambitions and desires for a wider field of usefulness, and scope of influence, who would be found ready to accept it. The greatness of the position itself warranted this belief, and it was an infinitely greater position when filled irrespective of devotion to one's private interests, than if these were constantly commingled. He considered that it would be a fatal mistake to permit the practice in question to obtain. Every person knew of, and the hon. the Minister of Justice had borne testimony to, the large amount of work that was in this Department; and if a Minister of Justice of the highest standing and the highest legal ability, and one of the first men in the profession, found that these duties were too onerous, what would be said, and how would he attempt to perform these duties at all, if he was in a position to be constantly urged, as he would be, and sought after, as would be the case in consequence of his great ability, to go into the country from one end of it to the other, in order to pursue his private professional business; having his mind not only so occupied, but, also, his time. He (Mr. Tupper) maintained that the country was entitled to obtain, in consideration of the position this Minister held, all his time. Private work would make a demand upon his intellectual power such as would render him utterly unequal to the discharge, in the way they ought to be discharged, of the great and important duties relating to the office of Minister of Justice. He did not intend to prolong this discussion. This was a question on which a layman ought almost apologize for offering an expression of opinion to the House; but he could not, as a member of the House, see a change made, which he regarded as one of the highest moment, and made, as he believed, in the wrong direction, and in a way that would be prejudicial to the public interests, involving, as it did, a very large and increased charge on the public revenue of the country, without uttering, as far as he was concerned, a strong expression of the opinions he entertained on the subject.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. BLAKE said he had not intended to take part in the debate, but, after the observations which had fallen from the hon. member for Cumberland, perhaps the House would permit him to say a very few words on the subject. The hon. member had, throughout the thread of his speech and at its close, argued as if the Bill which was now before them proposed a very large increase in the public burdens. He would not use the hard words which the hon. gentleman used with reference to the statements of his opponents, but he would appeal to Mr. Speaker and every hon. member whether this was a correct statement regarding this measure, which proposed to abolish one separate office and create another. It proposed no addition to the public expense, but rather a diminution of it, inasmuch as it proposed the appointment of a new Cabinet Minister, who should not have a separate Department, and who should not be at the head of a separate Department, but who should preside concurrently with an existing Cabinet Minister over an existing Department, and that, by an exercise of economy, which the hon. member for Northumberland thought unwise, and said was entirely unprecedented, he should be supplied with the same Deputy. The hon. gentleman said he had heard of one Minister having two Deputies, but the idea of two Ministers having one Deputy, was a thing which he objected to, and he (Mr. Blake) supposed on constitutional and economical grounds. It was not correct to allege that the measure now before them proposed an increase to the public burthens. On the contrary, as he had pointed out with reference to the political charge, it left things as they were. With reference to the staff of the two political officers dealt with, one by removal and the other by creation, in this Bill, it proposed an economy. A suggestion had been made that there was a great difficulty in there being two legal officers; that it would throw a doubt on the public mind as to whether there was division in the camp; and that the weight which was at present attached to the opinion of one law officer of the Crown, standing in the high position of Minister of Justice, would be diminished in consequence of a suspicion on the part of the public that this officer's opinion was dissented from by the other legal officers of the Government. It did seem to him that this was criticism run mad. It was ridiculous in the extreme to suggest that there should be less weight in a legal discussion announced by one or other of those high law officers of the Government, because there existed another high officer of the Government, who must be presumed to concur in that decision, and must be presumed to add and not diminish the weight due to it. But he might point out to the House that, although this had not yet been achieved in England, and although in England there was a different system at present of providing the legal assistance required by the Government, yet, for many years, it had been agitated by those who had the best means of learning, or rather comprehending the difficulties under which the present system placed the Government before the country and the Parliament, that there should be an office of Minister of Justice created there, notwithstanding the existence of the Lord Chancellor also, that there should be another office created, the high State office of Minister of Justice—who should be a political officer, a member of the Cabinet, and having a seat in the House of Commons.

MR. TUPPER.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Hear, hear.

MR. BLAKE said he regarded the proposed change as one of very great importance, not merely with reference to the discharge of the executive and administrative functions of the Government, which were but partially discharged, but chiefly with reference to the disposition of that not unimportant portion of the duty of the Government in connection with the initiation and control of a large portion of the legislation passed through Parliament. In a Parliament which sat as ours did for a short time, where the members lived at high pressure for two months, or a week or two longer, where they were called upon to refer, consider and correct the legislation of a large country such as this had been since its consolidation by the Union, a country with various laws, customs and modes of shipping—he referred particularly to the difference which existed between the law of Quebec and that of the other Provinces—it was of the highest consequence that the Government, that the Parliament, that the country should be provided with more than one high legal officer in order that those responsibilities connected with the framing of legislation, such as that to which he had adverted, ought to be efficiently discharged. It was surely impossible for any one man, no matter how great his ability, to accomplish, during a Session, the whole of the business assigned to him. No man who held a high political position, no matter how great his talent, could succeed in accomplishing all that business. This was shown very forcibly by the remarks made the other evening by the hon. member for Kingston, when he pointed out that the great increase of work which had taken place necessitated the prolongation of the Parliamentary Session. Perhaps he (Mr. Blake) might be permitted to observe that he was not, in making this quotation from the hon. gentleman's remarks, prompted by the same purpose which actuated the hon. member for Cumberland when he committed the irregularity of referring to some statements made by him (Mr. Blake) in the course of a former debate. The proposal of the Government was not to increase the public burthens; they wished to secure the proper supervision of the legislation of the country. Their policy was to abolish an office which was admittedly a sinecure, and sub-divide one which was acknowledged to be a very onerous one, the duties connected with which had certainly become too heavy. It was said this was a proposal to increase the number of lawyers in the Cabinet. Such was not the case. He quite agreed with what had been said as to the prominent position taken by members of the Bar in the Governments of all foreign countries. He believed it would be found that an undue proportion of lawyers held prominent places in the councils of their country, and it was the case even under the Administration of the right hon. member for Kingston, a majority of whose Cabinet consisted of legal men. He believed that, at one time, ten or eleven, out of thirteen, were either lawyers or notaries, and that the present Cabinet contained fewer lawyers than the Cabinet of the right hon. member for Kingston ordinarily contained. To say, therefore, that the existence of two legal offices in the Cabinet would give members of the profession an undue advantage over laymen, was preposterous. The hon. member for Cumberland had referred to a speech which he (Mr. Blake) had delivered out of Session, also to a few observations which he had made in reply to the hon. member for Frontenac. On the latter occasion, he (Mr. Blake) had thought it his duty to state his opinion as to the proper view to be taken of the subject which the hon. gentleman had brought before the House—a subject which was not then in controversy. The hon. gentleman said he had conformed his practice to what was the loudly expressed opinion of the country. The hon. gentleman, however, evidently confounded the articles of the Tory press, with the loudly expressed opinion of this country, and he (Mr. Blake) could assure him that he had no regard for them whatever. He explained the circumstances under which he had confined his attention exclusively to the duties of his office and the circumstances under which, for a short time, he did not so confine it. He would, however, repeat the explanation. For a short time after he accepted office he assisted in the winding up of some business in which he was connected, but finding very soon that the duties of his office demanded all his time and attention, and believing that his first consideration should be to discharge the functions which he had undertaken, he devoted himself exclusively to them. It was not by any means because the newspapers which the hon. gentleman controlled, and which, he believed, represented the public opinion of this country, that he changed his course, because he paid no more attention to them than he did to viva voce expressions of the same opinions as they promulgated. The hon. gentleman had taken up a line which he (Mr. Blake) failed to notice before. He regretted that the hon. gentleman should have so humble an opinion of the profession to which it was his (Mr. Blake's) pride and honor to belong, and the Bar at which it had been his pride and pleasure to practice. He supposed that members of the Bar in a free and enlightened country considered themselves as all being on an equal footing, whether they happened to be Minister of Justice or the humblest member of it. No one in this country, however high his position politically, had any rights before the Court except that the possession of a silk gown gave its owner the privilege to be first called. Beyond this, he had no greater rights than the man who was called to the Bar the day before. No matter whether a man wore a silk or a stuff gown, he must depend for his position on his success before the jurors and the community at large. It was, therefore, an unworthy insult to the Bar that any member of it could, for a moment, think so humbly of the profession to which he belonged. A man's arguments before the Bar received attention and had weight with the Judges in proportion to their merits; not for any other reason. He repeated, so far as he might be permitted to speak on behalf of the Bench, that they were not in any way influenced by the standing of the men who addressed them. Why, even in the Province of which the hon. gentleman was leader, there was an Attorney-General who used, he believed, to practice in that Province. And still the hon. gentleman said that such a state of things was perfectly appalling; that it was calculated to destroy all confidence in the administration of justice. It was quite possible that by alleging such a state of things existed, by alleging that the Bench was unduly and dishonourably swayed by the position of a counsel, public opinion might be influenced. When, therefore, such an opinion was expressed within these walls by a member of Parliament, he wished to raise his voice in contradiction of such an assertion. The hon. gentleman must place a very low estimate on the intelligence of the people of this country, on the dignity of the Bench and also of the Bar when he made an assertion of that kind—an assertion which implied that equal justice was not administered on all hands. The hon. gentleman differed from him also in thinking that this high patronage—as he called it—which the Minister of Justice held in his hands was an inducement to a wealthy man to accept the office. He (Mr. Blake) thought if there was one thing above another which would induce a man who felt properly on this subject to decline the office of Minister of Justice, it was just this question of patronage. He apprehended that instead of being a lure to a conscientious man it was really the greatest embarrassment and difficulty under which he laboured. The responsibility connected with the appointment of a Judge for twenty or thirty years, which might prove disastrous to a large section of the population among whom he lived, was one of the most serious character to a Minister of Justice. He quite admitted that the fame connected with some high political position might attract some men to such an office; but on the whole, with the qualifications which he stated in his former address on this subject and which he repeated, the first duty of every man, whether Minister of Justice or Minister of any other Department, was to discharge thoroughly and efficiently his sworn duties. He felt convinced that the public interests would be better served by the adoption of the view which he entertained, than that of the hon. member for Cumberland. An alternative was suggested by the hon. member for Kingston, who proposed the appointment of a Solicitor-General who should receive a salary of $3,000 a year. Besides the time which the Court business occupied, he was expected to act as a sort of handy man, in doing other work, for which he should receive a portion of the fees. He (Mr. Blake) could not understand what sort of man could be got to give up the practice which he had been accumulating all his life, for a portion of the fees which he was earning. He knew that the hon. member for Kingston was of a somewhat self-sacrificing disposition; he knew that he had had wide experience of human nature generally; but, if he had found many men ready to take a salary upon which a man could live for three months in this city, and give up his whole time to the work, he (Mr. Blake) would certainly be astonished. If a man of that description could be got, it would be found that he was not such an one as would strengthen the Government, but weaken them. He had already referred to the irregularity of which the hon. member for Cumberland had been guilty, in referring to a former debate. But he had also dragged in this discussion now, what might fairly have come up in the Estimates when the House was discussing the subject of salaries, contingencies and expenses. The hon. gentleman had also introduced the question of departmental expenditure without his (Mr. Blake's) wish, and referred to a speech which he addressed to his constituents. Hon. gentlemen opposite had, for a long time, been trumpeting forth the proposition that the expenses of all the Departments had been enormously increased by the present Government. They pointed particularly to the item of contingencies as one regarding which great extravagance had been shown. Now, it seemed to him that, when they were attacked in this way, they should have the right to reply. It seemed to him that those who assailed them hardly acted a fair part when they refused them the right to answer by a simple statement of fact. The hon. gentleman said the comparison made by him (Mr. Blake) was unfair, because he had not taken into account the fact that the expenditure during the year to which he referred did not embrace the expenditure of the First Minister. But, figures which he had submitted—and which could not be disputed—proved that the expense in the Department of the Minister of Justice more than counterbalanced the proportion of the expenses declared to be due to the office of First Minister. He proved that the work of that office had trebled, and the enormous reduction which had taken place in those contingencies certainly did not entitle hon. gentlemen opposite to complain of the extravagance of that Department, at any rate. The hon. gentleman said he (Mr. Blake) ignored the fact that the salary of the hon. member for Kingston had, until a recent period, been less than his. Now, he was neither discussing the salary of the hon. member for Kingston nor his own. He was merely comparing the rate charged in the month the hon. gentleman left office with the rate charged when he left office. That was the computation on which his conclusion was based. No doubt the salary of the hon. gentleman had, until some months before, been less; but that had nothing to do with the comparison of the expenditure as it stood at the date he left office. Of course, in making the comparison, he excluded that salary for another reason, namely, that the salary of the First Minister was eventually $1,000 per year more by virtue of the recent regulations than that of the Minister of Justice. The hon. gentleman said a vast amount of work had been done in connection with the organization of the Mounted Police before the Minister of Justice left office. The fact was, that the difficulties connected with the maintenance of that force in remote parts were very great. He hoped, however, that as settlement proceeded, that as they were able to get their supplies on the spot, as the system was evolved, they would not be so onerous; but he found them so while he was in office. It must be remembered that the organization had been but half a force, 150 men, and that they were organized under the right hon. gentleman's successor. Now, he did not wish to detain the House at any length, but he wished to say that one suggestion which the hon. gentleman had made, that this was an increase of the public burthens, was not borne out by facts. It seemed to him (Mr. Blake) to be a proposal for relieving the country of the charge of an officer who held a sinecure, and of lightening the burden of an officer who was overworked, and the better disposing of the thirteen officials which were assigned to the Government by hon. gentlemen opposite at a very early date. The hon. member for Northumberland said they ought to diminish the number of Ministers; but the right hon. member for Kingston (Sir John A. Macdonald) well knew the difficulty in reducing the number of members of the Cabinet was so great as to be almost insurmountable. What did they do when there were only four Provinces in the Union? The number which they had laid down as the ground-work for the formation of the Cabinet had left difficulties which were now almost insurmountable. The hon. gentleman (Sir John A. Macdonald) then laid down the principle of sectional representation. He alleged that there must be two members of the Cabinet from each Province, that one man from a Province would feel himself alone in the Cabinet; that he would want some one from his own Province to counsel with; that the smallest Province, therefore, should have two members in the Cabinet. He pointed out, further, that there being two for the least Province, there should for the large and important Province of Quebec, be double that number; and Ontario, being still larger, the least number she would be contented with would be five; and he thus summed up the number of thirteen as the minimum number of Cabinet Ministers for four Provinces, and that was the statement upon which he defended that organization. The hon. gentleman now said that the executive business of this Parliament had not increased. What was stated in the Speech from the Throne in the Session of 1873? What did the hon. gentleman then put into the mouth of His Excellency in the fall of that year? He alleged that the legislative and executive business of the Dominion had so increased that additional legislative and executive agencies were necessary. And the hon. gentleman to-day said that the business had not increased; and, in effect, that there was no necessity for more than twelve Ministers. He said, in 1873, there should be more than thirteen, how many more the House did not know, probably would never know now; but if his former principles were carried out, even with a modification, it could not be less than three more. If they talked of consistency, he would compare the statement of the hon. gentleman in 1873, with regard to this question, and his utterances now. There was more analogy in this than in comparing the views of the Reform party in 1867 with their views now, because circumstances had arisen which must necessarily have changed their views.

MR. BLAKE.

MR. BLAKE.

MR. PALMER said that perhaps he did not understand the exact position of these Ministerial changes. It might be that the business of the Cabinet had increased, as the hon. member for South Bruce had stated; but whether it was so or not, he thought it had very little to do with the question involved in the measure. As he understood it, our constitution was modelled on that of Great Britain, under the North America Act, the Minister of Justice being intended to represent the office of Attorney-General in England. If he understood his hon. friend aright, they now intended to place not only a number of Attorney-Generals in the Provinces, but also any number of persons representing the Crown, either in Parliament or out of Parliament, that the Government of the day might think it necessary to put in. He contended that principle was opposed to the British constitution. He did not understand the great objection made to the remarks of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Tupper) upon the point. That gentleman did not make any insinuation against the independence of the Bar; he did not insinuate that the Bar of this country were of different calibre or more liable to be influenced from doing their duty by having to appear against a Minister of the Crown than they were in England; but he thought it was unfortunate that this country had not followed the policy of England in this matter. If it, therefore, happened that a Judge of one of the highest Courts entered Parliament, he thought the people would have raised their voices against a member of the Government, being a Judge, before whom they had to come for justice.

MR. BLAKE: Are you referring to Mr. Morris or Mr. Archibald?

MR. PALMER said he was referring to a gentleman in his hon. friend's native Province, who was head of an Administration at the present day, and who was an active politician and partisan, and yet was an administrator of justice. He did not understand why his hon. friend referred to Mr. Archibald; he was never appointed to the Bench.

MR. BLAKE: He was appointed to the Nova Scotia Bench.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: He never sat.

MR. BLAKE: I did not say that; I said he was appointed.

MR. PALMER said what he did say was, that the people of this country would never consent to have a Judge a member of that House. As in England, when they ascended to the Bench, they should leave politics entirely behind them, and should keep themselves entirely apart from politics.

MR. MILLS: What about the Lord Chancellor?

MR. PALMER: Well, he holds the position for a certain time. He occupies the very position my hon. friend the Minister of Justice occupies; and therefore, he is placed in an entirely different position.

MR. BLAKE: He is a Judge, and one of the highest Judges, and appoints all the other Judges.

MR. PALMER said he did not think this country would approve of such an appointment being made. A Judge, as he said before, should be entirely apart from political influences. He understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake) to state that the gentleman who occupied the position of Minister of Justice and Attorney-General should not withdraw from the Bar. He was not going to differ with him, if he undertook that the office should be confined to one person; but they might put any number of persons in the Cabinet, all of whom would then be able to come forward in the Courts and practice at leisure.

MR. BLAKE. No, I did not say that was my opinion. I said that was the rule in England.

MR. PALMER said if he understood the hon. gentleman rightly he had been quoting facts to support his view that these gentlemen should go into Court and practice. It was perfectly true this was the rule in England with reference to the Attorney-General, but he was not in the Cabinet; but they were so particular, as his hon. friend had pointed out, that no person who went into the Cabinet was allowed to practice at the Bar at all. Why should it be otherwise? It might be said that there was a great necessity for keeping up the practice; if so, why should these Departmental offices be increased? If he understood it rightly, the Government of this country had proceeded in the principle of each one of the heads being responsible to Government for its own Department. Now, if this Act passed, they would have that plain rule entirely overcome. They would have repeated what has been seen over and over again this Session. When a Minister came down to justify an act, he simply said some one in the Department, some engineer, or some deputy-head recommended it, and, therefore, the Government did it. He held that that system was entirely vicious. He held that the fact of the engineer, or the deputy, or any one else, giving a report was no justification for the action of the Government. In another particular, too, this was the most extraordinary Bill that he had ever heard of. First, as to what was the duty of these officers. They had to have a separate head or an alternate head; one clause providing that the Minister of Justice should be the head, and another that the Government may assign to one or the other any part of the duties of the office. Under this clause, he thought it would be pretty hard, hereafter, to tell where the responsibility rested. Instead of having a single head and a single Department, with somebody responsible for it, the responsibility would be shifted from one Minister to another. This was the first time such a principle had been introduced, and he asked the House to pause before adopting it. He contended that this legislation would be wrong in undertaking to put a single Department of the Government under two heads; in other words, that this legislation would introduce a principle by which the Government of the country which had, hitherto, been carried on by virtue of the heads of Department—the different branches of the Government being carried on under the direction of the different Ministers who had a seat in the Legislature, either in this House or the Senate—would, in point of fact, instead of recognizing the principle of a head to each Department, allow two or more heads to each. He was entirely opposed to the admission of that principle, which, he affirmed, was a novelty in this country and in England. Once it was introduced, no one could tell the consequences. At present these Ministers were heads of the Departments, and were answerable to the House for their administration. But, at any moment, the Department might be put under a different head, or under several heads, and no one would be responsible. It would introduce confusion and serve no useful purpose, because each man must necessarily understand all the details of the particular subject under consideration at the time, and, consequently, having two heads would not make it less difficult than having one. This Bill, itself, proved it was not required. If it was once exactly defined what that Department was, and what there was to be done, there was nothing to hinder any amount of business being done by it. Surely an officer brought in peculiarly fitted for the work, not requiring to be elected or to have a seat in this House, but simply engaged to do the work of the Department, would be able to do a greater amount of work than any man who only came in there occasionally. If this Attorney-General was to go round the country and do the work which was now done by the Deputy Minister of Justice in the different parts of the Province, the result would be he would only be able to give a certain portion of his time to his work, and if he was paid the large sum of $7,000, the cost would be doubled. He was at a loss to know what benefit could arise. Surely the person could not be more competent. If the head of the Department was responsible, that was all that was required. It was very objectionable to introduce two or three heads of Department. If his hon. friend referred to the political course of the present Government when in Opposition, he would find one of their great arguments was the excessive number of Ministers. Yet, the system they were introducing would extend that to an indefinite extent. He feared that once the door was opened, and it was announced as a correct principle that the Ministry of the day could divide the office, and make any number of dependents on the Government, and use their influence in this House, the result of which would be that they might entirely destroy the liberties of the people by getting too much sway in this House. There was another feature in the Bill which had been pointed out by the hon. member for Cumberland. It did not contemplate, if he read the Bill aright, that, while there were to be two heads, there was to be more than one deputy. But the fact that one deputy was enough to do the work, proved that there was no necessity for an increase in the heads. Surely, if the deputy was the person who ought to do the executive, the actual work, it could not be expected the Minister could do more than direct the work to be done. It could not possibly require two to direct the work of one. He could not see the possibility of a man obeying two masters, directed the one day by one man and the next by another man. If the exigencies of the public service did not require it, or if these hon. gentlemen who made that very expensive head did not find it necessary to create immediately subordinates to do the work ordered by that head, it was positive proof there was no necessity for that head at all. It could not be necessary to create two heads to direct one man; one head ought to be able to direct as much as another man could do. He had no hesitation in saying that he was entirely in accordance with the principle enunciated by the hon. member for Cumberland. He believed that, neither in this country nor in England, ought a Minister of the Crown, a man who was actually in the Cabinet, to go into the Courts as the advocate of any person; that is, in the case of a private individual. It was stated that the Attorney-General in England did so, but he was not a Cabinet Minister; he had no power of patronage. He thought, notwithstanding what his hon. friend from South Bruce might say, that it was unseemly, in this country, that the gentleman who had the power of patronage, the prerogative of the Crown in his hands, by which he could confer a favour upon the Judge before whom he pleaded, and when it was his duty by every honourable means in his power to induce that Judge to give the case to his client, should have the power to plead in the Courts. It was unfair to the Judge to put him in such a position, more unfair to the client, and unfair to the public sentiment of the country to allow it to be said anywhere that a man possessing such power should go before a Court in order to plead, and who would be opposed by counsel who could not command the same influence. The administration of justice, under the British Constitution, had been granted, not only as to the actual results, but against the suspicion of wrong, and in no case had he found that a Cabinet Minister had gone into a British Court of Justice to plead a person's case. The hon. member for South Bruce said his opinion was he could properly do it. Perhaps he could. But he (Mr. Palmer) held that it ought to be a principle in the Government of this country to prevent such a thing being done. His hon. friend said the reason why he had quitted doing so was not on account of public opinion. He said the outcry made, by what he called the Tory Press, had no earthly influence on him. It might be so; it might be that the Tory Press, as he called it, did not really interpret the sentiment of this country; but it was passing strange, if that was so, that, although he was not influenced by it, his own opinion and actions should have gone with it. If it was not the Tory Press, or, rather, the public sentiment which it expressed at the time that influenced his hon. friend, it must have been his own sense of what was right. Whichever way he put it, the result was the same. The fact remained that he, himself, either voluntarily came to that view, or was obliged to adopt it, and the Press would care very little whether the result was brought about by its influence or not. He did not propose to discuss this matter further. He would not have troubled the House at this length, did he not see in the principle which underlined this Bill, one the most vicious to the administration of justice in this country, one fraught with more evil than any single measure introduced in this House since Confederation, one that could not be justified on any principle whatever. He presumed his hon. friend had brought it forward, honestly, to do the work of the country. All that he could say, was that a move was made in a wrong direction. The means pointed out by the right hon. member for Kingston, to have a Solicitor-General, he confessed, did not approve itself to his mind, because he did not see why the Attorney-General or the Minister of Justice should have any offices in this country except those in the Department at Ottawa. Whatever number of assistants might be required in this Department to do the work, should be procured. He believed, nay, he knew, that that would be done more cheaply by not asking a man to go before a constituency to obtain the position of Cabinet Minister, to take the responsibilities of an office which must necessarily take away the greater part of his time from this work required. Instead, they should simply employ a man who, from his education, and habits, and ability, was fitted for the work. The country would not begrudge the number of men the public service required. For these reasons he opposed this Bill. He was opposed to dividing the responsibility. He was opposed to allowing more than one head to each Department. If the Government could divide any Department of the public service, he thought the Department of the Minister of Public Works might be more readily divided than any other one. He could quite understand why the system of railways in this country might possibly become a Department itself. But a Minister of the Crown, a Cabinet Minister, going around practising in the Courts all over the Dominion as an ordinary lawyer, would degrade the office, and not serve the public service or be approved by the people.

MR. PALMER.

MR. MASSON said he did not intend to oppose this Bill on account of the number of Ministers retained in the Government. When he sat on the opposite side of the House, he did not disapprove his hon. friends when they had thirteen Ministers, and he did not feel himself justified in disapproving in his adversaries what he was not ready to disapprove in his friends. He remembered, at the time, that explanations had been given on the subject by the right hon. member for Kingston and by the late lamented Sir George E. Cartier, who explained that the number of Ministers would not have required to be so large if there had not been federal union as at present. If the Government had thought proper to dispense with the services of one of their Ministers, they, at least, would be abiding by the principles they had maintained in contradiction to those defended by Sir George E. Cartier. They, at that time, had said that thirteen Ministers were too many. He remembered they had gone over the whole world to show there were too many. They began with the United States, saying there they had only seven Ministers for forty millions, and that it was absurd for a small country like this to have thirteen. They travelled over to France, and pointed out that she had only nine Ministers to control the different interests of that great mother country of a part of our population. The hon. member for South Bruce, when defending the position of his friends, had tried to turn the table against the Opposition by saying that at the time the Liberals were complaining of the number of Ministers, there were only four Provinces in the Union, but that, since then, the North-West, Manitoba and British Columbia had been annexed. If his memory did not fail him, long after the annexation of the North-West, the establishment of Manitoba, and the annexation of British Columbia, the Liberal party went through the whole country, and on every hustings, and every stump, saying that even then the number of Ministers was more than would meet the requirements of this country. He appealed to his hon. friends from Lower Canada, on the other side of the House, whether that was not their idea; whether they did not fight the Ministry, saying thirteen were too many, not only in 1869, but even in 1872. He had the proof in his hands. He would not do as the hon. the Minister of Revenue had done to him. He would read from the programme of the Parti National, offered in 1873, after the annexation of the North-West, the establishment of Manitoba, and the annexation of British Columbia, the opinion of the party in Quebec on this very subject—the number of Ministers. The changes they were to make in the Dominion legislation were, they said: 1st, the election of Senators; 2nd, the reduction of the number of Ministers. Now, the hon. member for South Bruce could, at this day, say that the reason why the Liberal party could be allowed to change their opinion and go back on their protestations of the past, and say that thirteen Ministers were not too many, was that the Dominion had increased. He believed the main purpose of the Bill, and that to which he most objected, was to reduce the work of the Minister of Justice and enable him to practice in Courts of law. Hon. gentlemen might say what they chose, but it was too late to repudiate that intention, because hon. members had recently ringing in their ears the eloquent speech made, a few days ago, by the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. Blake) who distinctly stated that his hands were now free, and he could give advice to the Government, because anything done by him, at the present time, would not be considered as done from selfish motives, and that the Government should so arrange its affairs that the Minister of Justice should be allowed to practice in the Law Courts. He (Mr. Masson) was fully justified in saying that this Bill was distinctly introduced so as to reduce the work of the Minister of Justice and enable him thus to practice, as they would see very soon. He objected in principle to this mode of dealing. He most seriously and earnestly objected to the Minister of Justice practising in Law Courts, to his going through the country and pleading before Judges, who were dependent upon him for their promotion or for any advantages that might accrue to them; and he believed that the people would see with distrust such action allowed. It was well known that the confidence reposed in the Bench was unfortunately, and, perhaps undeservingly, being tremendously shaken in this country. He was sorry to make that statement, and, if it were not against the rules of the House, he would state one of the reasons. It was because Parliament had enacted—and he voted for the measure himself—to bring all election questions before the judicial tribunals. While he had supported and voted for that measure, nevertheless, he now saw with regret that, rightly or wrongly, the people were beginning to distrust our Courts of justice. He would go further and say there was a feeling in the country at the present time—he knew it existed and the opinion had been expressed to him—that it would be for the benefit of the Courts if we reverted to the old system of having elections tried by the High Court of Parliament. He might be wrong, and he had been one of the exponents of the views of hon. gentlemen opposite, in regard to the trial of election petitions by Judges, and he had voted against some of his friends on that question.

MR. HUNTINGTON said he was so involuntarily startled by the extraordinary utterance of the hon. member for Terrebonne that he cried, "Shame." He was still more distressed to find that the utterances of the hon. gentleman were echoed loudly by the leading members of the opposite side of the House; and he would say that if there was a country which had a Parliament that would recognize and approve the kind of assault the hon. member had made on the Courts, then the Courts could not have much to do with the corruption of that country because Parliament would be so far gone that very little could be hoped from its representative institutions. What had the hon. gentleman done? He had stated that the system of election trials was calculated to destroy the confidence of the people in the Courts. What had he done more? He had given instances of cases pending, in regard to which he stated—although he expressed some dissent, yet was he evidently in sympathy with the feeling—that the people were afraid justice would not be done. If the hon. member had found cases of a nature so glaring and abuses so great that it became necessary for him to pursue this extraordinary course of attacking the highest Court, there might have been some justification for him. But the hon. member was attacking a Court still in its infancy—a Court which was amenable to nothing but the suspicions of partizans like the hon. gentleman, and none but partizans would utter such sentiments as had been uttered by the hon. gentleman. If there was not a feeling of patriotism wide enough and broad enough to shield the Judges from the low suspicions which sometimes appertained to those scavengers who carried political feelings to an extreme—if there was not the sentiment which hitherto protected the Courts, that they must not be attacked and degraded—then the liberties of the people were about to be lost, and lost through the attacks of the hon. gentleman and those whom he represented by degrading the Parliament which ought to sustain them. The hon. gentleman had spoken of the confidence in the judiciary being weakened because of partizan decisions. He did not take cases of both political parties, but only that of the hon. Minister of Justice. There had been controverted election cases on both sides of the House, but the hon. member could only find an illustration in one affecting a political trial and an opponent.

MR. MASSON: Then I am right.

MR. HUNTINGTON: If the hon. gentleman is right, he blunders into the right. The hon. member spoke as a partizan, as a man who was willing to sacrifice the independence of the judiciary for a momentary triumph over a political opponent in the pending election, by creating the impression that cases were adjudicated in such a manner as to favour one political party or the other. Instead of being an advantage to him, in having taken that view, it ought to be a disgrace to him. He would have been glad to have understood that an hon. gentleman occupying the position of the right hon. member for Kingston, did not sympathize with those views, but it appeared that the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Masson) spoke for his party.

MR. MASSON: I spoke for myself.

MR. HUNTINGTON said the hon. gentleman had spoken under the cheers and encouragement of the right hon. member for Kingston, and those who sat near him, when he said that the judiciary of the country was being false to itself and was being degraded before the people.

MR. MASSON: I never said it.

MR. HUNTINGTON said he was glad that the hon. member did not make this statement, although he understood him to have spoken in that sense. He was glad it had all been taken back, and there had been wiped from the records of Parliament one of the most disgraceful attacks made upon the judiciary that had ever disgraced the country. The hon. member for Terrebonne had alluded to the old system of trying controverted elections where no wrong was done, where, at least, the wrong was a private and not a public wrong. Under the old system of Parliamentary Election Committees, controlled by a majority of either political party, no favour was extended to the man whose partizans did not number a majority of the Committee. The hon. member for Terrebonne had referred to that system as one which he regretted having abandoned, in consequence of the position that public opinion was assuming towards those Courts—to that system which was out of vogue, which left decisions in the hands of a partizan majority, and which had been declared in England, as well as in this country, entirely improper and unfair. He (Mr. Huntington) doubted if the people were so false to their traditions and to the spirit of the British Constitution as, on the mere suspicion that Judges had improperly decided cases, to desire to take the power into their own hands; but he admitted that if the hon. member for Terrebonne fairly represented the public feeling on that question, they might well return to the old system. He rose only to enter his humble protest against the declaration made by one of the members of the Opposition, that the Courts were making themselves political partizans.

MR. HUNTINGTON.

MR. MASSON: I did not say anything of the kind.

MR. HUNTINGTON: If the hon. gentleman did not say it he inferred it, and he is generally not afraid to say what he means.

MR. MASSON: I said it was unfortunate that the current of opinion in Canada at the present moment was taking away from the Courts that confidence which they should possess. I stated the fact as it exists, and I challenge any one to say it does not exist.

Several HON. MEMBERS: No.

MR. HUNTINGTON said that no such feeling existed. He had no doubt, however, that in some counties, where strong partizan feelings ran high, and where there were trials of controverted elections going on, there might be some illiterate men who would say that the Judges dealt unfairly; but to say that we were so far gone in this country as to entertain opinions calculated to impair the confidence of the people in the Bench, was a monstrosity, and the hon. member should feel ashamed to make it. He was glad to observe that the hon. gentleman, after all, was not willing to come to the conclusion to which his statements tended, and that he took the benefit of having stated that there was a feeling abroad.

MR. MASSON: I always said it.

MR. HUNTINGTON said the hon. gentleman stated that the feeling was strong, and that his own feeling was such that he (Mr. Masson) felt that he had done wrong in voting for the measure.

MR. MASSON: Yes.

MR. HUNTINGTON: And, therefore, the hon. gentleman endorsed that view. What the hon. gentleman had done was to make a deliberate attack on a Court, and the highest Court in this land, with regard to a special case now before it; an attack which, he believed, would do the hon. gentleman no good, and which, he would repeat, ought not to have been made, and ought not to have been cheered in this House.

MR. BABY said he was really astonished to hear the hon. member for Shefford speak in such a strain, and place in the mouth of the hon. member for Terrebonne words which that hon. gentleman had not uttered. This hon. gentleman had never said that he, in the least degree, thought there was something real in the rumour mentioned as correct. The hon. gentleman only said an impression existed in the public mind to the effect that our Courts of law were not the Courts before which election cases should be tried, and this was all. The hon. gentleman had only placed before the House the simple fact that such a current rumour existed, and at the same time added that, whether right or wrong, it did exist; but he never made the accusation which the hon. member for Shefford alleged. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Huntington) now appeared to be particular about the honour of the Bench; but he (Mr. Baby) remembered that, not many years ago, when the hon. gentleman sat on the Opposition side of the House, an onslaught was made on the whole judiciary of Lower Canada.

MR. MASSON: I had to defend it myself.

MR. HUNTINGTON: It has degenerated since then.

MR. BABY said he had then heard things said which, he regretted to say, were untrue; and, if ever he had regretted not having risen in his place and spoken, it was in connection with that particular occasion. What did the hon. gentleman then state? He said things which ought not to be uttered, and things which were shameful, to employ the expression of the hon. member, who, on that day, alleged that the Lower Canadian judiciary was corrupt and decayed, and a dishonour to the country and Province. Such was the onslaught then made by the hon. gentleman.

MR. HUNTINGTON: I know to what debate the hon. gentleman refers, and I do not think that the word “corruption” was used. No charge of corruption was made against the judiciary.

MR. BABY said that reference was at the time made to the different Judges on the Bench, though without naming them; and, for the most part, these Judges who were represented as being old, decayed and corrupt, were appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite, when on the Treasury benches in 1863. The hon. gentleman was perfectly satisfied that the Bench was not what it was then represented to be. It was really surprising that such zeal should now exist in the bosom of the hon. gentleman with regard to the defence of the judiciary. He was glad to see that the party had made a happy departure in this direction. As the hon. member for Terrebonne had stated, there did exist such a current. He really would not say whether it was right or wrong; he would only say that such a public sentiment existed, and, very frequently it was remarked that, if such a Judge sat, an election would be upset or upheld.

MR. MASSON: I have heard that from Liberals as well as from Conservatives.

MR. LAFLAMME said that he would not answer points that had already been answered by hon. gentlemen sitting on that side of the House. As far as the current of public opinion, of which the hon. member for Terrebonne had spoken, was concerned, he would say nothing save this: If the hon. gentleman would only look at the inception, origin and birth of it, he would find that it had been inspired by members of the Opposition—inspired and communicated to their organs, and that it was always easy to find such a current so established.

MR. MASSON: Then it exists?

MR. LAFLAMME said it existed amongst the hon. gentlemen opposite and their friends, who, by such a proceeding, could bring the Courts of justice in this country into disrepute.

MR. MASSON: Judge Wilson.

MR. LAFLAMME said that he would discard this question, for, as he was somewhat interested in it, he should probably have occasion, at a future time, to allude to it. He merely wished to answer the hon. member on one or two points which he had raised with respect to this Bill, as if it introduced some new principle. The hon. gentleman pretended that by it the Minister of Justice would have the liberty to practise in the Courts. Assuredly there was no provision in the Bill establishing such a principle. The hon. gentleman would recollect that it merely extended the provisions of a Bill which had been passed by his friend, creating the Department of Justice, and giving to it some additional aid and assistance. The hon. member for St. John pretended that they were giving two heads to one Department, forgetting entirely the fact that in England, and in all constitutional Governments, the Law Department of the Crown was superintended and administered by Attorneys and Solicitors General; and, certainly, there was no intention to take away from the Minister of Justice a legitimate portion of the work which devolved upon the Department. No such provision was made in the Bill. Aid was merely given to the Minister of Justice on account of the immense amount of work which had lately accrued, and which devolved upon the Department. The right hon. member for Kingston might speak of the time when he could administer with perfect ease this Department, but it had been proven that the work of the Department had since increased more than three-fold, it had increased four-fold, and, certainly, if the hon. gentleman was then competent to do one-fourth of the present amount of work, there was nothing unjust or irrational in demanding that, as the work had increased four-fold, some better system should be devised, in order to meet the exigencies of the situation. No one would pretend to say that the late Minister of Justice was not capable to fulfil the labour which had devolved upon the Department. The hon. gentleman admitted and declared that it was impossible for him or any man to perform the duties which were incumbent on this office. He (Mr. Laflamme) did not pretend, and he did not believe there was any man on the other side of the House who would pretend, to be able to discharge these duties better than the late Minister of Justice. He (Mr. Laflamme) was not so able, and he did not pretend that this was the case. He would declare that he could not or did not do the work as well as the hon. gentleman, or as much work as the hon. gentleman had performed. Whoever fulfilled these duties would find it to be impossible for any man to do justice to the Department without having some additional assistance. Hon. members could not forget that the responsibility for the entire legislation of the country fell upon this Department, as well as the administration and responsibility of the legal acts of every Department. The right hon. member for Kingston had alleged as an excuse, that the new Ministers were fresh and without experience, and that, consequently, more work fell on the Department of Justice than would otherwise have been the case. The hon. gentleman forgot that the deputy heads of the Departments, who were naturally their advising officers, had not been changed; and these were men accustomed to the work, and who, notwithstanding the experience of the former Ministers, were those who had advised them, and upon whom those Ministers had relied for the good administration of their Departments. Hence, the new Ministers had these same advantages; and it was not owing to the incoming of a new Administration that additional work had been thrown upon the Department of Justice. He was satisfied that, as far as the reason alleged by the right hon. member for Kingston—who admitted that it would be necessary to appoint a Solicitor-General—was concerned, it was without foundation. The hon. member for South Bruce had clearly shown what would be the advantage as regarded the responsibility for advice given to the Administration, if such an officer received the paltry remuneration of $3,000 a year. This officer would then be compelled to seek for emoluments outside of his office and to practise in the Courts. What advantage would thereby be gained? What additional assistance would be given with regard to the division of responsibility, or the value of the advice or information given to the Departments and the Administration with respect to its legislation? Surely none; and if in this country any necessity existed for the abolition of the office of Receiver-General, ten times the necessity existed as to obtaining an additional Minister in order to dispose of the work which fell upon the legal Department.

MR. LAFLAMME.

MR. BLANCHET: Why put him in the Cabinet?

MR. LAFLAMME: Because it was indispensable that this officer should be in the Cabinet, because of the amount of legislation which had to be examined, and of the degree of responsibility incurred in regard to advice given to the different Departments, and because of the variety of our laws, as the hon. member for South Bruce had established. There were laws in almost one-half of the Dominion which were not and could not be familiar to the members of the Bar of other Provinces. The responsibility of a Minister of Justice who had no experience save that derived from practice in the Courts of Ontario or any other Province, was too great; and such a Minister could not, with any satisfaction to himself, or in justice towards those who applied to him from the Province of Quebec, give a safe and sound opinion without relying upon the assistance of a clerk or some one in his office. This was utterly impossible; and when they considered the fact that they had two such different systems of law, with such immense duties and responsibilities attached, it was evident that, under such circumstances, particularly since the fact was disclosed that the increase of business went on in so great a progressive proportion, it was their duty to provide for the more efficient administration of this Department, and that this had become an absolute necessity. The hon. member for Terrebonne had alluded to the Parti National having declared that at that time thirteen Ministers were too many. He would not follow the hon. gentleman in this relation. He (Mr. Laflamme) was not a member of the Parti National at the time. This might have been their opinion at the time; but the question now before the House was not whether thirteen Ministers were too many or too few, but whether the Department of Justice required to be remodelled, and whether some more efficient assistance should not be devised, in order to satisfy the wants of the country and legislation. The hon. members for St. John and Kingston had referred to the fact that this Bill somewhat divided the responsibility and gave two heads to one Department, and only one deputy for the two heads of the Department. As far as the division of responsibility was concerned, the work was to be assigned, according to the provisions of the Bill, by an Order in Council, and hence there could be no possible interference or clashing whatever between the two heads of the Department. It was not the case with lawyers or with doctors. They generally agreed; and it was an immense advantage, as every member of the Bar knew, to have the assistance of counsel, and lawyers and their counsel generally came to an uniform decision after consultation. Such would be the result in this case, and it would be beneficial, because there was no member of the legal profession, as far as his experience went—and he was sure that in this he would be supported by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House—who was not prepared and willing to have the assistance of counsel, especially in regard to any matter of great importance; and this would be the object of this measure. Each Department could be well defined, and there was nothing that could give rise to any suspicion of antagonism or clashing between the two officers who would be called upon to administer this Department; and he was perfectly satisfied that the result of this measure would be most beneficial in connection with the administration of public affairs.

Bill read the second time.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

MR. MITCHELL said, before the clause was passed he wished to reiterate what he stated before. He looked upon this attempt of the Government to pass this clause as an anomalous one, because, while they admitted that there was already one Department too many in existence, they sought that another Department might be established. They certainly had not convinced him that it was necessary to have an additional branch in the Minister of Justice's Department. The principle of the Bill had, of course, been sustained by the House, but he objected to the first clause being adopted, because though he admitted that the office of Receiver-General might not be necessary, he did not see that an additional officer was required in the Department of Justice on account of increased business. Ten years ago when the affairs of this Dominion came under a new administration it might have been necessary to create new officers, but he saw no reason why the present Government, which was most economical, which saved money and conserved our institutions, should think it needful to ask the House to create a new office. Such a request was not in keeping with their professions when they came into this House. He thought there was too much patronage in the hands of legal gentlemen in the House; they assumed too much. The hon. member for South Bruce assumed a power and patronage in connection with the legislation of this country which was quite out of keeping with what was due to the people generally. In a matter of this kind, one of two things must be considered. In the first place, they had to consider whether it was necessary to abolish the office of Receiver-General. As he had said, he would not like his hon. friend from Shelbourne to be turned out of office, for he looked upon him as one of the most respectable members of the House, a gentleman who had always conducted the affairs of his Department in a most able and courteous manner. That hon. gentleman, it was true, was not bowled out of office as his late colleague the member for Victoria (Mr. Ross) had been; still, it was attempted to legislate him out of power, because the Government wanted to put somebody else in his place. They wished to make room for some legal gentleman to help them to carry on the business of the Administration. The hon. the First Minister said it was desirable that they should have some legal gentleman who should divide the duties of the Minister of Justice, but he (Mr. Mitchell) did not see that it was necessary. When his right hon. friend the member for Kingston performed the functions of First Minister—which he did for seven years—he did not think the duties of that office so great as to necessitate the appointment of an assistant. The hon. member for South Bruce did not think it necessary, when in office, to obtain the services of an assistant; he performed the duties of his office very well, until he got sick of them. The present Chief Justice of Quebec did not find it necessary to ask the House to give him an assistant to divide the labour of his Department. The present Judge Fournier did not think it necessary, while Minister of Justice, to make such a request. It was reserved for his hon. friend from Jacques Cartier to come down to the House on the eve of a dissolution, and ask Parliament to create a new office. And for what purpose? Because, forsooth, his labours as Minister of Justice were too great. His hon. friend, if he understood him correctly, had stated that, during the late Administration, there had been 1,600 references in the Department of Justice, while there were now more than 6,000. Now, what was the inference to be drawn from that? Only that the affairs of the country were not being properly conducted, because the work of that particular Department was allowed to accumulate. Instead of the references being attended to day by day they were allowed to stand over until there became a great fyle of communications to be answered. Yet these were the gentlemen who, seven years ago, when the Government of the day, now in Opposition, proposed that there should be thirteen Departments, said that seven were quite sufficient. While he did not object to the abolition of the office which it was proposed to dispense with, he could not see any reason why that should be done merely to create another. It seemed to him that the object of the Bill was to obtain for the Government assistance wherewith they might carry the next election. That was what the hon. gentleman, who proposed the measure, desired, and if he (Mr. Mitchell) had to stand alone in this matter, he would ask the House to divide and endeavour to prevent the people from being saddled with the expense which would be caused by the appointment of an Attorney-General. If this appointment was sanctioned, and the present Government, to the misfortune of the country, was returned, they would add a fourteenth office, then a fifteenth and so on. They claimed to be the economical party; he maintained that they were the extravagant party. They had developed more extravagance, more recklessness and more want of consideration for the interests of the people than any other Government he had ever known, and the sooner this country understood that fact the better. He would therefore ask the Committee to divide and refuse to pass the first section of the Bill. He would ask them whether it was necessary to have an additional member in the House. He said boldly that there were too many legal gentlemen in the Government of the country. What they wanted were business men, farmers, mechanics, merchants and those connected with the interests of navigation. The whole aim and object of lawyers was to legislate for the purpose of creating the means of bringing bills of costs on this country. Who brought in the Insolvent Law? The lawyers, with one or two others. He trusted, therefore, that this legal monopoly would be broken down, and that business men would be able to take a fair share in the work of the Administration.

MR. MITCHELL.

Mr. MASSON said he was taken to task a few minutes ago by the hon. the Postmaster General, who in a flurry of high-toned morality, found fault with a few remarks which he (Mr. Masson) had made as being disparaging to the House and himself. Throughout his career he had always endeavoured, as a public man, to discuss public matters in such a way as not to bring down upon himself a taunt such as that which he received that evening. If he had been guilty of any offence in making use of the observations which he submitted, he would ask how guilty was Mr. Dorion, now Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec, in his dealing with the Bar and Bench of Lower Canada? He would read the remarks made by that gentleman, and leave it to the House to judge whether he should have been entrusted with the highest judicial position in Canada or not. The extract which he proposed to read was contained in the Ottawa Times report for 1868.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I would be inclined to contest its accuracy.

Mr. MASSON: I heard it myself. It is as follows:—

“Hon. Mr. DORION said of the twenty-three Judges of the Provinces, six were totally unfit for office from age or infirmity, while one was grossly unfitted from his immoral conduct and a scandal to the bench, and others from their ignorance of law. The hon. Minister of Justice would, on enquiry, easily ascertain that of the twenty-three, thirteen were from one or other of these causes manifestly incompetent, and would have no difficulty in learning their names. He was of the opinion that the Bar of Lower Canada was not sufficient to supply the necessary number of first-rate men for the position, but thought that the best selections had been made. The position of Queen’s Counsel led naturally to the Bench, and one of these had entered the profession by fraud and false representation; another had been a low swindler and scoundrel and compelled, in consequence, to submit to voluntary expatriation. Others had never had any practice at all, and any of these they might see by-and-by sitting as Judge. The degradation of judicial administration in Quebec had reached an extent altogether unparalleled, but he hoped that the Minister of Justice would, for the honour of his own profession, take care that no future appointments were made except of gentlemen competent for the position.”

Mr. LAFLAMME: What is said as to the appointment of Queen’s Counsel is perfectly true.

Mr. MASSON: And the Judges?

Mr. LAFLAMME: I did not hear that part.

Mr. MASSON: Well, I hope, at all events, after what I have read, that you will reward me as Mr. Dorion was rewarded.

First and second clause agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL moved that clause 3 be struck out of the Bill. He said his reason for bringing the motion forward was that there were Departments enough in this country; the country was over-legislated; we were having too much legislation. The experience of this Session alone showed that no practical business could be brought before the country; the time had been taken up for six weeks. The philosophical ideas of the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Justice flooded the House with measures, and then the Opposition were charged with delaying the business of the country. The Opposition had endeavoured to resist, as was their duty, improper legislation and legislation that was not called for; and in this very case they were asked to assent to a measure that would create a new position and impose upon this country about $15,000 a year, or it might be nearer $25,000 before they had done with it. The hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. Blake), in one of his picnic speeches, drew comparisons between the expenditure of the late Government and the present one; these comparisons would be made in another shape at a very early date. The hon. member told this House, five years ago, that seven members of the Government were quite enough; but now, being in power, he thought differently. He (Mr. Mitchell) put it to the House whether they would submit to burdening the country with an annual charge of $15,000 or $20,000, for which no reason was shown.

THE CHAIRMAN (Mr. McDougall, East Elgin): The resolution simply asks to strike out this clause, which is not yet in the Bill, because the Bill is not passed. The question is whether the clause shall be adopted.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he thought there was no necessity for this motion; the clause could be negatived by direct vote, but he did not think there was any irregularity in moving it; he thought either would be regular, but that the direct vote would be the best. However, so far as this Committee was concerned, they had abolished the Receiver-General, and might say: "Off with his head; so much for Buckingham." The Treasury was, therefore, so much the richer, or would be the first quarter after this Bill became law; there was a retrenchment at last by the Government. When they came to the 3rd clause they found it was to create a new officer, and the Government found it necessary to say: "This is no increased expense, because we have abolished one office and got another in its stead." If that was the hon. gentleman's notion of expenditure, it was not his (Sir John A. Macdonald's). It was so much saved by the abolishment of a useless office, which the Government proposed to expend in creating a new office. To his view, there was not much retrenchment. They had to consider whether it was necessary to create a new office; if not, it was no more retrenchment than if the useless office of Receiver-General had never been abolished at all. Notwithstanding the strong opinions of the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. Blake) and the Minister of Justice, he believed there was no necessity for a division of the office of Minister of Justice, or for adding another large salary to the expenses of the country. He thought it was a great political mistake on the part of the Government to endeavour to create this new office, at a time when they were about going to the country, unless there was some imminent necessity for the new appointment. He did not believe there was any such necessity. He gave the reasons for this opinion some little time ago, and he could only reiterate them. He believed the Minister of Justice could perform both duties thoroughly and well, without any additional assistance or addition to the salary. He thought that if the heads of Departments paid more attention to their duties, there would not be such an enormous amount of references, which showed a want of confidence in the heads of Departments. The hon. gentleman said that, although political heads were inexperienced, the deputy-heads were not so; but no man, no permanent officer could supply the want of knowledge on the part of the political head; he alone was responsible to the country and to Parliament. He must be informed, and should study for himself the subjects that came within his departmental scope. It was false in theory and reprehensible in practice, that the political heads were to throw themselves on the deputy heads and make them the measure of their consciences, their judgment and their responsibility. It was quite evident from the immense number of references that additional burthens were being thrown upon the Department of Justice unnecessarily, but he had heard no complaint during the present or the last Session the work of the Minister of Justice had been in arrear. His hon. friend (Mr. Laflamme) was satisfied that he had done all the work of the Department, and out of eighty or ninety notices of motion in every Department with reference to some neglect or another, there was not one motion with respect to any delay or any injustice in the Minister of Justice's Department. He had been able to do all the work, and had gained credit for his infinite capacity, political and professional; and at the same time, while he had so satisfactorily discharged those duties, he had found time to carry out a political arrangement for his own Province of Lower Canada. And yet there he sat comfortably, exhibiting no symptoms of over-work, physically or mentally, at the end of the last Session of Parliament, and it might be—though he (Sir John A. Macdonald) hoped not, for the sake of the country—it might be the last Session that the hon. gentleman would sit as Minister of Justice, and yet he asked for another gentleman to be appointed in his Department. He was, perhaps, anxious that his successor, who might not be so capable as himself, should have some assistance. Perhaps his successor would be a Conservative, and then, of course, he would not be so capable. The hon. gentleman did not ask for this assistance last year, and his predecessor, the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. Blake), did not ask for it, but the coming man might not have such professional judgment as they had, and, therefore, he must have assistance. He had been asked if he did not know that there was a strong move in England to have a Minister of Justice. There had been a strong opinion expressed in that country in favour of having a Minister of Justice, especially appointed to perform the political duties of the office, to be also a Minister of the Cabinet. It had never come to any practical solution, never been adopted by the leaders of either party, Mr. Gladstone or Lord Beaconsfield, or by anybody likely to have practical influence on the future of England; but even those men who advocated the establishment of a Minister of Justice, did so because they felt there was an anomaly in the English system that ought to be done away with. This anomaly had grown up, like many anomalies in England, because of the usages of antiquity. The Lord Chancellor was not much of a Judge in days gone by, he had very limited authority; but by slow degrees this anomaly had arisen that the Chief Judge of England should be a political officer and preside in the House of Lords as a member of the Administration. The reason why it was argued and pressed upon public consideration that a Minister of Justice should be established was, that the Lord Chancellor should be relieved from his political duties as much as possible, and relegated to preside over the Courts of Chancery in the first place, and the House of Lords and the High Court of Appeal, and other high Courts that might be established. He did not mean that they would go so far as to say that the Lord Chancellor should be no longer a member of the Cabinet; they did things by slow degrees in England; but that he should be relegated to matters connected with the Courts, and that the Minister of Justice should take his place in all political matters. As regarded the Bishops in the House of Lords: although they had the same rights as other Peers, it was understood that they were not to exercise their power to vote for any criminal law or any political party question. That was so well understood that the Bishops did not do so, and in the same way the Lord Chancellor, after the appointment of Minister of Justice, would revert to being the Chief Judge in Equity. The present state of things was an anomaly, which was only held up by the sanctity of antiquity. When Lord Ellenborough was put in that position by the Whigs, he himself stated that it was an anomaly, that it was the greatest mistake of his life his acceptance of the position, and the Whigs admitted that it was a great mistake to put the Chief Judge of England into the Cabinet. So he (Sir John A. Macdonald) contended that there should be one legal head like the Chancellor of England. It was better that we in Canada had not such an anomaly as a Judge in the Cabinet. They had one Minister of the Cabinet responsible to the Crown, responsible to the people, and everybody knew whence that responsibility came; and it had this great advantage: that the Government of the day had to see that the Minister of Justice, who was solely responsible, should be a competent person. It had been said that in Lower Canada the legal institutions were different from the rest of the Dominion, and that there should be one man in the Cabinet who was thoroughly conversant with those laws. They had already a Deputy Minister of Justice, who, of course, understood fully questions coming from all the Provinces, except that of Quebec, and he (Sir John A. Macdonald) had no objection to the appointment of a Deputy Minister in that Department, specially charged with Lower Canada business. It had been said that it was an insult to the Bench to suppose they would be actuated by any feeling of self-interest in any case that came before them; but that it was doubtful whether the Bench would not suffer in the public confidence by being members of the Government. His hon. friend said so, and he had been told that he was insulting the Bench; that he was declaring a want of confidence in the Bench, and the finger of scorn was actually pointed against him by the hon. the Postmaster-General. Fancy the hon. the Postmaster-General holding up the finger of scorn against the hon. member for Terrebonne for having made that statement. Why, the hon. gentleman had heard what Mr. Dorion had said in this House, and what he (Sir John A. Macdonald) had replied to him in days of old. He got up in his place and made his charges against the Bench, and it was his duty to make those charges if he believed they were founded on fact. They would be wanting in their duty; they would not be freemen, if, through any imaginary respect to the Bench, they should pass over its delinquencies, its weaknesses, or its faults. He believed the Bench, in all the Provinces was, on the whole, a good one; but, if there was a fault in it, it should be pointed out. It was their bounden duty to speak, if, from a faulty system of appointment or selection, or any other fault whatever, men were retained on the Bench who were not so worthy or deserving of confidence as they ought to be. With reference to these very controverted elections, the language which had been used by the whole of the Common Law Bench, headed by Sir Alexander Cockburn, Chief Justice of England, was stronger than the language of his hon. friend. Did he not remember the remonstrance signed by the whole Common Law Bench of England against being made political Judges? They had warned the Government of the day, before the Act was passed, against the consequences of their being made to try political questions, on the ground that it might shake the confidence of the public in their judicial impartiality. Happily, it had not yet occurred in England, but they knew perfectly well it had occurred in Ireland, where two Irish Judges had been attacked by name, violently, vigorously and strongly, and had been charged with political partiality in the performance of their duties, and those were Judges Lawson and Keogh. They had both been attacked strongly and repeatedly in Parliament and in the country. And yet, it was not allowed to his hon. friend to make an allusion in a similar direction. Judges were but men. They were told that it was an insult to the Bench to suppose that, by any chance, their minds could be influenced. In the reign of George III., a Bill was passed by which Judges were made independent of the Crown. They all knew how liable the Judges had been to Crown influences in the day of Charles II. and James II., before they were made independent of the Crown. Read Macaulay, or any History of England, and they would find what the Judges of England were, until their independence was secured by the law which made them independent of the Crown and the people. Therefore, it was not an insult to our Judges to suppose that if there were any influences which could be brought to bear on them, they would not rise superior to humanity, and be unlike the Judges of England, or that they would be influenced by their own interests, perhaps unconsciously. The Government should not put them in that position. He had only pointed out his scheme as an alternative scheme, if there was going to be any alteration at all. He had first commenced by stating that he believed the Minister of Justice could perform those duties, if he worked hard enough, and had health enough to give it, during the requisite number of hours in the day, his undivided attention. If there was a necessity, he gave an alternative; that was to say, to have a member of the Government, but not in the Cabinet, who would carry on the executive business, and the active contentious work of all the Departments. He believed that would be a good scheme and an economical one, and the office would be well paid, better paid, perhaps, than the Ministers. The hon. member for South Bruce had asked: who in the world would take that office? The Attorney-General and Solicitor-General both had similar offices.

MR. MITCHELL.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

MR. BLAKE: Not for $2,000.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The Attorney-General and Solicitor-General in England, received considerable salaries, and also large fees from their contentious business. The hon. gentleman said, who would take a position of that kind? Was it because the holder would not be in the Cabinet? The Attorney-General and Solicitor-General of England were not in the Cabinet. In 1854, when the Sir Allan McNab Administration was formed, Henry Smith and Dunbar Ross, the two Solicitors-General, were never members of the Government and were never members of the Cabinet. Therefore, men could be got to fill the office, although they would not be members of the Cabinet. They would not be paid enough. He suggested $3,000, but it was only a simple suggestion. $3,000 and the charge of the whole Exchequer business, the conduct at Assizes of any contentious business, a reasonable fee being allowed, under the sanction of the Minister of Justice, it would be one of the most desirable offices that he knew of, for a legal man. He could go on circuits to carry on the Crown business, and, at the same time, take briefs in other cases. The whole salary would be sure and the assistance obtained. If the hon. gentleman did not like his plan, let them make a Treasury-Solicitor, like the Treasury-Solicitor in England, who was called a solicitor and was a counsel -- the Treasury-Solicitor with an ordinary solicitor under him, the solicitor's and counsel's business being separate there. The Treasury-Solicitor was always a counsel of high rank. Let the Government get another man to take up the Attorney-General's branch of it, and fund the fees, and they would find they would have a revenue instead of an increase of salary like that contemplated in this Bill. He did not know how they had drifted into this discussion on the number of Ministers in the Cabinet.

MR. BLAKE: It was the hon. member for Cumberland who introduced it.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said their policy ran in quite a different direction from this. They had never thought of dividing the Ministry with respect to this office. He believed that the policy which would have been submitted in 1873 by the old Government, would have been one which would have commended itself to this country as being a real practical reform. This had no merits whatever except that of dividing the responsibilities and increasing the expense. The hon. member for South Bruce had said that whatever his party had thought in 1867, things had changed now. Yes, they had changed; the hon. gentlemen had changed seats; that was the principle change he saw. The argument used in 1867 was this: here are forty millions of people in the United States who are governed by seven Ministers, and so soon as Canada gets forty millions, then will she require her present number, and not even then, because if we had forty millions, we would still, if we followed the example of the United States, have but seven Ministers. That was the argument used in 1867, and, as pointed out, in the elections of 1873, that was one of the planks of their platform all over the Dominion. All their talk was about having thirteen Ministers, the devil's dozen, leeches drawing salaries, when seven could do the work.

MR. DYMOND: Who was the devil?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I have not his acquaintance; perhaps the hon. gentleman has. I would not say he was a printer's devil.

MR. DYMOND: He does not belong to me, certainly.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that perhaps the hon. member belonged to him. He objected to any increase in the Cabinet, because it was large enough already for consultation, secrecy and promptness. As he had occasion to say before, it was well known that the leaders of both parties in England had declared that their Cabinet, consisting of sixteen members, was too large. Gladstone had said that thirteen ought to be the highest number, and Disraeli had declared that seven would be the perfection of a Cabinet. His hon. friend from South Bruce had said that it was the sectional system introduced by the Conservatives in 1867 which had forced the Government into their present position of having a large Cabinet. Why not have reduced the Cabinet, if they objected to it in 1873? When the party in Opposition came into power they should carry out the principles which they had advocated in Opposition. The present Premier had said, in one of his speeches, that any man who did not stand by the principles in the Government which he advocated in Opposition, was nothing but a demagogue. What he (Sir John A. Macdonald) had said was this, and he remembered it quite well, because, of course, he had weighed, as he ought to have done, when laying the foundations of this Dominion, everything he had said. He had pointed out, at that time, the necessity of giving the Government a sectional complexion; that Nova Scotia was to a great degree hostile to the new state of things, that

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

New Brunswick was indifferent, and that there was great danger of a feeling of indignation, and of being sacrificed to the larger Provinces, pervading the lower Provinces if they did not get larger representation. For that reason, he had said those Provinces should have two representatives each. Sir George Cartier, speaking on the same point on his own side of the question, that of having more than one French Canadian in the Cabinet, said he would feel friendless unless he had in it a companion of his own race and language. If the hon. gentleman would think it worth their while to look back to his utterances on that occasion, he would find that he (Sir John A. Macdonald) had repudiated the idea that that should be a permanent necessity. Eventually, when the Provinces had become more intimately united, the system would be that the only question would be to choose the best men to come into the Government. He had pointed out how those things were managed in England. There they took the best men, but it was well understood that England, Ireland and Scotland should have each a representative in the Government. Neither would stand being excluded altogether from a fair amount of representation in the Cabinet, but there was no arbitrary rule. He would again urge the propriety and expediency of not pressing this appointment now. Let the hon. gentleman abolish the Receiver-General's Department, which ought to be abolished, which must be abolished, because it was declared by the Government to be useless. If a young Parliament, fresh from their constituents, chose to renovate the Government by introducing this Bill, after they had gone before the country, if they felt authorized to do so, let them do it then but not now. It was inopportune. When the old Government was in power, they were attacked for their extravagance in mutilage and penknives and so on. Why give the Opposition of the day the opportunity of making this complaint of extravagance against the Government? Let the Bill stand over, and then, with a renovated Parliament, with new men, this legislation might, if considered necessary, be introduced.

MR. BLAKE said the right hon. gentleman had repeated the allegation that the increase in the number of references was due to the newness of the Ministers of those Departments. He wished to point out that the scale of increase disproved this assertion. The references in 1869 were 1693; in 1872, 1,971; in 1873, 2,753; in 1874-5, 3,400; in 1876, 4,344; and for the current year they ran, to date, up to nearly 6,000. The right hon. member had suggested that, as the members gained experience, the references would diminish. But, as he perceived, there was a persistent increase in the number. It was perfectly clear how a great many of the references came. Almost the whole of the land business in Manitoba and the North-West had been, practically, sent to the office since the period when the former Government was in power. An enormous number of references, and some of them of a most complicated character, had arisen with reference to the settlement of cases in Manitoba and in the North-West, which had no existence in the right hon. gentleman's time. Another branch which gave rise to increased business in this respect was the patents. Owing to the operation of the law which had been passed late in the right hon. gentleman's term, and to the increased activity of inventors, the references for patents had increased two or threefold. He had been told that the increase for the first few months of the current year was over 300, and that there was still an increased activity in that Department. He had never, upon any occasion, said a word as to how the business was managed in the right hon. gentleman's time, but he would observe that the number of references then was much less. To whatever cause it might be attributed, the number of references now was a great deal more. Under the late Administration there was an easy way of disposing of a considerable amount of business; and when the present Government took office they found many pigeon holes labelled "M. I." the meaning of which was probably "masterly inactivity."

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said, at all events, that activity was of more value than the little peddling work done by the present Government. When they came to examine the pigeon holes in the public offices, they would, no doubt, find many references still undisposed of which any sensible man could have dealt with in a few minutes.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said that, in view of the announcement contained in the Speech from the Throne, that one of the most important measures of the Session would have for its object the readjustment of the work in the public departments. A more extensive and complete scheme, and one more acceptable to the people, should have been submitted. It was conceded on all hands that the office of Receiver-General could very properly be abolished. That being granted, the question to be determined was which of the other Departments was most in need of assistance. If the opinion of the House and the country had been obtained, it would have been, not in favor of dividing the Department of Justice, but that of the Department of Public Works, where it was impossible that one Minister could supervise all the contracts for public works, and also the vast system of railways under the control of the Department. If that course had been adopted more satisfaction would have been given. What was required in the Department of Justice was not a second political head, but another working permanent head, a sort of Solicitor to the Treasury, who would be able to advise all the Departments, especially the Department of Public Works, in all contracts under its control, and also assist with cases coming before the Exchequer Court. When accounts were sent in for $2,000 due to one counsel, and $4,000 to another, it was evident that large sums were being expended in feeing lawyers and barristers to attend to those cases. Additional assistance was no doubt required in the Department of Justice in connection with land claims in the North-West, and preparing Parliamentary legislation; but the system proposed in the Bill would not give the country value for the additional expense incurred for salaries. If the additional political head were appointed, it would still be necessary to engage as much outside assistance from counsel as before. He was somewhat surprised at the remarks made by the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. Blake) as to the expense of the Department of Justice under the present and previous Administration. He was glad that the hon. gentleman had succeeded in reducing the expenditure of the Department, but he had omitted to inform the House that during the first year the present Government was in office the expenses of the Department exceeded by $9,000 or $10,000 those of any year under the late Government. The expenses of that Department were, for 1873-'74, $29,000; 1874-'75, between $38,000 and $39,000, and they were reduced by the hon. member for South Bruce from that sum to between $22,000 and $23,000. Since the hon. gentleman had retired, however, the expenses had again increased. It should also be remembered there was some excuse for additional expense being incurred under the regime of the right hon. member for Kingston, from the fact that he was Premier at the time he was at the head of that Department.

MR. PLUMB said it was admitted that the abolition of the office of Receiver-General was a step in the right direction. It was claimed that the work of the Department of Justice had so far increased that it became necessary that it should be divided, and the hon. member for South Bruce had defended that proposition. It would be remembered by those who paid any attention to public affairs, that during last Summer the hon. gentleman appeared before his constituents and made a statement in regard to the Department of Justice. He claimed there had been a large increase of business done at a reduced cost, that the work had been done more efficiently than at any previous time, that a large amount of arrears had been brought up. Indeed, the hon. gentleman made merry at the expense of the previous Administration, and actually condescended to make a small joke upon the subject. He did not then inform the public, through his constituents, that there was to be an increased expense in that Department by adding to it another head. All the credit which the hon. gentleman claimed at Teeswater for economy effected and increased work performed at a reduced cost, fell to the ground:

"I am confident that the work of the office has more than trebled since 1872; and this increase, I repeat, necessarily indicates a very large increase in the work of the other heavy offices. Now, Sir, I turn to the question of expense; and I ask you confidently whether, having regard to the result I have established, it would not be in the last degree unfair to complain of an increase in the expense of Administration? If there had been no needless expense in salaries and contingencies in managing the smaller volume of business done in 1872, is it not reasonable to conclude that the work could not be trebled without, to a considerable extent, increasing the cost? Could any of you, whether farmer or tradesman, treble your operations without, at the same time, increasing the charge for management of your farm or your trade? The answer is obvious."

* * * * *

"Now I will give you the result of that reorganization. The staff had been increased in 1873, and in November of that year, at the resignation of the late Government, the annual rate of charge for salaries, including bonuses and an officer charged on contingencies, was over $13,500. Several changes subsequently took place, and the rate of charge when I took office in May, 1875, was over $15,750. I was, as I have said, unable to make a reduction in salaries during the first year; but the reorganization which, with the assistance of my colleagues, I was enabled to effect was such, that in June last, when I left the office, the rate of charge for salaries was only $10,750—a reduction of over $5,000, or about one-third of the rate when I took office, and of $2,800, or about one-fifth of the rate when the late Government resigned. The great reduction in the annual charge upon you for salaries has been effected, you will bear in mind, notwithstanding the enormous increase in the work to which I have already called your attention."

It was much to be regretted that the successor of the hon. member for South Bruce, as Minister of Justice, had found himself unable to conduct the business of the Department without calling for an increased expenditure from the public chest for the creation of a new office. The argument of the right hon. member for Kingston, that the proposed measure could have well been deferred until after the ensuing elections, was a sound and proper one. There was no need for much of the legislation introduced this Session, in what the hon. member for Chateauguay described on a former occasion as a moribund Parliament. Such legislation as was not of pressing importance could properly have been left over until there had been an infusion of representatives fresh from the people, with their commissions emanating from the source of all Parliamentary power. The measure under discussion was, perhaps, the most objectionable of any which had been introduced, and one for which there was no pressing and immediate necessity. The statement made by the hon. member for South Bruce that he had accomplished the work of the office, notwithstanding the increased business, and had done that with a reduced expenditure during the last year in which he filled the position, was a sufficient reason for opposing the present measure. The Bill was double-headed, and it had two very distinct objects, both of which in their consequences were very objectionable. It could not have been contemplated when the hon. member was addressing his constituents at Teeswater in September last.

MR. KIRKPATRICK.

MR. BLAKE: Will the hon. gentleman permit me to read a sentence of the speech he is criticising as unfair?

MR. PLUMB: I am not doing so. The hon. gentleman is putting words in my mouth which I have not used.

MR. BLAKE: In the same speech in which the hon. gentleman says I made no allusion to the political headships of the Department, I used these words:

"I am, however, of the opinion that, without increasing the number of Ministers, a reorganization of some of the offices would be advantageous to the public service. The political work of the Department, which I have recently quitted, is acknowledged, on all hands, to be very onerous. During last Session, a leading member of the Opposition declared in his place that no one man could efficiently accomplish that work, and I think that the political management of the office should be divided—some of its business being assigned to one of the lighter offices."

MR. PLUMB said that he had read this speech before the hon. gentleman had called his attention to it, and within ten minutes, but it did not at all bear on what he was stating. The hon. gentleman there proposed to hand over some work to other offices, which might be very well. He had no doubt that, in many ways, the duties of the office could have been so distributed when an office of that kind became too onerous. The hon. gentleman should understand perfectly well, that what the hon. member for South Bruce stated, only strengthened his (Mr. Plumb's) case, adding force to the very argument which he had been using. The hon. gentleman stated that it would not be necessary to create a new office, to divide this office and make another responsible member of the Government, and place him in the Department of Justice; and this certainly was exactly the point which they were urging.

MR. BLAKE: I say expressly that I think the political management of the office should be divided. These are the very words I used

MR. PLUMB: The political management of the office? The hon. gentleman must see that a small quibble like this could not be impressed on the House with any sort of force, and it had nothing to do with the argument. The hon. gentleman, with his usual directness, frankness and clearness of statement, must understand that if he had meant a division of the office, he would undoubtedly have stated so; but perhaps, the hon. gentleman was not taken into the confidence of the Government, and perhaps this matter was not anticipated. This was an after thought. The question had come up and it had been found convenient to abolish the office of Receiver-General, and to prepare to make another office on the Treasury Benches which would be an important one; and no doubt it was found convenient in the last days of the last Session of the Parliament of 1874, and in its last hours—because this would be the case before this Bill could be passed—and as the closing act of a Reform and economical Administration, and an Administration of retrenchment and economy, to do what?

MR. DYMOND Hear, hear.

MR. PLUMB: The hon. gentleman said "hear, hear," but he knew perfectly well, and too well, that what he (Mr. Plumb) was saying was true. The hon. gentleman had too clear a head not to understand it, and he knew that he (Mr. Plumb) was right in saying that the last act of this Administration of economy, was to do what there was no necessity for doing, and to make a double-headed office of the Department of Justice, which his hon. friend from South Bruce had declared in the most solemn way before his constituents, that he was capable of managing and carrying on with reduced expenditure, as compared with the enormous expenditure which had prevailed under the late Government. He (Mr. Plumb) thought that there never had been a case when it more behoved every member of the House, who had regard for the public finances and the economies which they were so loudly promised, and which had been so little performed by the present Administration, to lift up his voice against the expenditure as flagrant as this; and he trusted that before this Bill was passed, an amendment would be proposed which would be accepted by those members of the House who were in favour of practising economy, instead of merely preaching it.

Clause agreed to.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that he wished to call the attention of his hon. friend to the 5th clause, which he thought really ought to be altered. It stated that: "The Minister of Justice shall, assisted by the Attorney-General, preside over the Department of Justice." It occurred to him that the words "assisted by the Attorney-General" should be struck out. The Attorney-General, by this clause, would be made independent in his own Department, while this would not be the case with the Minister of Justice, because the latter must always be accompanied by the Attorney-General. He would ask his hon. friend from South Bruce to look at it.

MR. BLAKE said that the hon. gentleman stated that the Attorney-General would be independent in his own Department, but the Attorney-General had no Department. The Department of Justice was given to two officers, as he understood it. He did not understand it to be proposed to make any Department independent of the Attorney-General; in fact a Law Department was created, and it was proposed that two officers should preside over it, each, of course, in his own appropriate sphere.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the hon. Minister of Justice, in speaking to the Bill, had stated that the original Bill establishing the Department of Justice, provided for a complete separation of the duties of the Attorney-General and Minister of Justice, whether held separately or jointly. The Attorney-General was now made a member of the Cabinet, and had to carry out, without reference to the Minister of Justice, the clause in the original Act, which referred to the duties of the Attorney-General; while the Minister of Justice, on the other hand, could not do anything without the assistance of the Attorney-General.

MR. BLAKE said that perhaps the word "assisted" might be an incorrect word; the clause should read, "together with," or something of that kind. He understood the proposal to be that there should be, as now, the Law Department, which should remain, as now, the Department of Justice. It was now presided over solely by the Minister of Justice. He thought that the words in the Act were "presided over" or something of that kind. He supposed that the sole purpose of this clause was to give the Attorney-General a status in that which was to be his Department, as well as the Department of the Minister of Justice; and, of course, each of these political heads, in his presidency, would preside with reference to his own business or himself. There was to be one Department with one set of officers and two Ministers. The legal business of the Government in either branch was to be done by one and the same Department; and they must give some standing in the Department to the Attorney-General, or else there would be no machinery by which to work the office.

MR. DYMOND.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD : Some body ought to preside over the Department. If the Minister of Justice is not assisted by the Attorney-General, according to this clause, he cannot preside over the Department.

MR. MITCHELL : Whose Bill is this? That of the hon. member for South Bruce or that of the Minister of Justice?

MR. BLAKE : The hon. member for Kingston appealed to me; and I gave my understanding of the Bill as an independent member of the House.

MR. MITCHELL said he wanted to know who was running the Ministerial business of the House—the Minister of Justice or the hon. member for South Bruce? He thought that the right hon. gentleman ought not to appeal to private members of the House to correct Government measures.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said they knew that these things found their own level. If he were going to discuss a matter relating to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, he would not ask the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but his hon. friend.

MR. MITCHELL : Quite right.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said if he was going to discuss a question connected with the Department of Justice he would be very apt to ask his hon. friend from South Bruce, rather than the present Minister of Justice.

MR. MITCHELL : I understand.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that the Minister of Justice should preside over the Department of Justice. Two men could not preside over it. There should certainly be a separate clause, instead of mentioning the specific duties which the Government proposed to give to the Attorney-General.

MR. LAFLAMME said that, if the right hon. gentleman would look at the Act, which he believed the right hon. gentleman himself drew, creating the Department of Justice, he would find that it defined that:

“1. There shall be a Department of the Civil Service of Canada, to be called ‘The Department of Justice,’ over which the Minister of Justice of Canada for the time being, appointed by the Governor, by Commission under the Great Seal and who shall, ex officio, be Her Majesty’s Attorney-General of Canada, shall preside; and the said Minister of Justice shall hold office during pleasure, and shall have the management and direction of the ‘Department of Justice.’

“2. The duties of the Minister of Justice shall be as follows; He shall be the official legal adviser of the Governor and the legal member of Her Majesty’s Privy Council for Canada; it shall also be his duty to see that the administration of public affairs is in accordance with law; he shall have the superintendence of all matters connected with the administration of justice in Canada, not within the jurisdiction of the Government of the Provinces composing the same; he shall advise upon the Legislative Acts and proceedings of each of the Legislatures of the Provinces of Canada, and generally advise the Crown upon all matters of law referred to him by the Crown; and he shall be charged generally with such others as may at any time be assigned by the Governor in Council to the Minister of Justice.”

In the 3rd section the Attorney-General was entrusted with the powers and charged with the duties of which the Minister of Justice had charge, and then followed a clause stating that the Governor shall assign to the Minister of Justice, either exclusively or concurrently with the Attorney-General, any of the powers and duties of the Attorney General; and may at any time assign to the Attorney-General, either exclusively or concurrently with the Minister of Justice, any of the duties and powers of the Minister of Justice; therefore it could properly be said that this Department should be presided over by the Minister of Justice assisted by the Attorney-General.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said his hon. friend should construe this clause as a lawyer would do. According to it, if the Minister of Justice was not assisted by the Attorney-General, he could not preside over the Department of Justice; this was quite clear.

MR. LAFLAMME: That is not the meaning intended.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: That is the language; and the Courts will so construe it. There ought to be no divided authority in the Department.

The Minister of Justice as the Attorney-General should be at the head, and I suppose that the Minister of Justice is intended to be the head. A section should be inserted between sections 5 and 6, stating what the specific duties of the Attorney-General are under the Minister of Justice.

MR. LAFLAMME: The Minister of Justice and the Attorney-General are to be on the same footing.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: You cannot have two chairmen. You cannot have a double-head. There is a three-headed cerberus; but there cannot be a double-headed Minister of Justice.

MR. LAFLAMME: You might just as well say that the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor-General should not preside over the Department of Justice.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I would like very much to have that point settled. Somebody must preside over the Department, but this clause provided that the Minister of Justice should preside if assisted by the Attorney-General.

MR. MACKENZIE: It does not say if assisted.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: That is the meaning of it.

MR. LAFLAMME said he had no objection to put the words "Minister of Justice and Attorney-General shall preside over the Department of Justice," if that would suit the views of hon. gentlemen opposite.

MR. BLAKE did not think it would be necessary to make any further alteration than the trifling one proposed by the Minister of Justice. Theoretically there might be a difficulty regarding two persons being at the head of a Department; but, practically, he did not see how the difficulty could be got over unless two separate Departments were maintained, which, of course would cause additional expense. There was no reason why the two gentlemen should not arrange the affairs of the Department amicably together; if not, there was a controlling power over all Ministers, and the matter could be settled in that way.

Bill ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

AUDITING PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.—[BILL
No. 53.]

(Mr. Cartwright.)

SECOND READING.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said the object of the Bill was one which the House would very easily understand. For some considerable time it had been apparent to the hon. gentleman that it would be desirable to have a perfect division, whereby the task of auditing the Public Accounts should be kept as much as possible quite distinct from any interference on the part of an officer charged with administrative duties of any kind whatever. If he understood correctly the design of the hon. gentleman who at that time conducted the affairs of this country, it was something similar to what he (Mr. Cartwright) proposed in his Bill. There was at that time a Deputy Inspector-General, who filled the office of Deputy Minister of Finance. In addition to that officer, an Auditor was created, and it was understood that that officer's duties would be mainly, if not altogether, confined to the task of auditing the Public Accounts. As time went on, however, this officer, partly from custom and latterly by formal Statute, embraced the whole duties of the Deputy Inspector-General, and was formally constituted Deputy Minister of Finance. To such an arrangement he conceived considerable objections. The Minister of Finance and his Deputy were necessarily more or less administrative officers, and, although the Department of Finance was in no respect a spending Department, being intended to act as a sort of check on the others, still the Minister of Finance for the time being must necessarily be in harmony with the other members of the Government. In the absence of the Minister of Finance, his deputy was often called upon to discharge many important duties, and it seemed to him in order to have a perfect audit of accounts there should be a complete division between the offices of Auditor and Deputy Minister of Finance. The main object of the Bill was to carry that out, and inspire the public with confidence in the Public Accounts. It was deemed expedient, therefore, to adopt the English practice, and to create an officer, who should hold his appointment during good behaviour, and be removable, as Judges are, on an Address by both Houses of Parliament. That was the fundamental principle of this Bill, and he thought that when fairly considered it would commend itself, not only to hon. members of that House, but also to the good sense of the people of the country. He had recast the original Act, but the beginning and end, he might say generally, were nearly transcripts of it.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: A reprint.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Yes; a complete reprint.

MR. MITCHELL: Do I understand my hon. friend to say that the Act originally introduced has been reprinted?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: No; it is a complete reprint of the original Act for the audit of Public Accounts passed in 1868, with a very considerable number of alterations rendered necessary by the object to which I have referred. I have also introduced a number of provisions from the English Act, together with some new provisions adapted to our special circumstances. Speaking generally, the first ten or eleven sections of the Bill are almost identical with our existing Act of 1867 or 1868. A great portion of the last part is identical, but in the middle portion; from Sections 11 to 45, or thereabouts, considerable alterations have been introduced. As a matter of course, there are a number of new sections defining the position of Auditor-General, besides the adaptations from the English Act to suit our present position. For convenience sake I may just say that from the 11th to the 25th section it is mostly either new or taken from the Imperial Act, or modifications of our present Act rendered necessary by the complete separation between the offices of Auditor-General and the Finance Department. From the 25th to the 29th sections alterations from the Imperial Act had been introduced. From the 29th to the 35th section he had introduced one or two alterations from the Imperial Act, and had re-enacted the provisions which are contained in the existing Act providing for the mode in which the Auditor-General was to deal with emergencies as they might arise. As far as his experience went, he thought that the provisions originally made were sufficient for the interest of the public service. The most important clause he had added was number 34, which was intended to apply more particularly to the case of extras arising in the execution of contracts and matters of that kind. The clauses from 35 to 46, or rather to 50, were, as the House would see, pretty largely taken from the Imperial Act, to which, as a matter of course, very free reference could be made in Committee. The remaining clauses were chiefly a re-arrangement of our old Act now standing on the Statute-book.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Up to 1859?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: No; up to clause 50, in which have been introduced a number of alterations taken from the Imperial Act. From the nature of the case, these matters can be more effectively discussed in Committee than at the second reading. What the House has got to consider, is a matter of extreme importance in the interests of the public. It is necessary that we should have a perfect audit of the Public Accounts, and that we should have our public documents as much as possible not only correct, but above suspicion. I need only say that we wish to provide as good a Bill as we possibly can for this purpose, and although it will easily be understood that suggestions made respecting a Bill of this kind would have to be very carefully considered before they could be adopted, I am not at all averse to hear any suggestions which hon. gentlemen opposite may make, and would be glad if they were likely to promote the purpose we have in view, to incorporate them in the Bill.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the Bill was a good one, and he was glad it had been introduced. It was to the credit of an old colleague of his that he first felt the necessity of having a check upon the different branches of the Administration, and that the Auditor should be an officer more or less independent. They had to commence by slow degrees, and at the time the scheme was first introduced they had to encounter some opposition. A great many hon. members at that time were wedded to the old system, and when the first germ or embryo of the new system was commenced by his respected friend, Mr. Taylor, it was opposed. He was glad, as he had already stated, that this Bill had been introduced, and he would suggest that, in order to save undue discussion as much as possible on the clauses, it should be reprinted with marginal notes, stating what was taken from the Imperial Act, and what from other sources. This would expedite the business of the House very much, by shortening the discussion. He quite concurred with the hon. gentleman that suggestions or amendments should not be put forward hastily in Committee; they should be elaborated and well considered. He concurred, also, in the opinion that we should have an auditor like Sir William Dunbar, who held that office under the English Act. He was appointed during good behaviour, and was perfectly independent of Mr. Gladstone, Lord Beaconsfield, or any Premier or Chancellor of the Exchequer, and would not pass any entry in the Public Accounts unless that entry was authorized by the law of the land. He would give his humble support to the hon. gentleman in carrying out this system of perfect auditing, and he would again suggest, in order that there might be as little obstruction as possible offered to the Bill, that it should be reprinted in the way he had indicated.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he would have the annotations printed in a single sheet, so that they might be in the hands of members as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to.

Bill read the second time.

MR. CARTWRIGHT.

SUPPLY.—THE TARIFF.

MR. CARTWRIGHT moved :

“That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair, for the House to go again into Committee of Supply.”

MR. BROWN said he had an amendment to offer to the House. He did not wish to open up a debate or to occupy much of the time of the House, as the matter was fully discussed on the amendment of the hon. member for Kingston (Sir John A. Macdonald). However, it was a matter of such importance that he considered it required a separate motion to deal with it. The amendment of the hon. member for Kingston related to the manufacturing, agricultural, lumbering and mining interests; but the amendment of which he (Mr. Brown) had given notice, was with reference to one industry only. He asked the House to decide upon it on its merits, divested of all other interests that might surround it. He voted for the right hon. gentleman's amendment, believing that it was calculated to bring about the sort of reciprocal trade with our American neighbours which we might expect from Protection. We were as well able to manufacture goods and cheap wares as they were, but our market was not large enough; we wanted that scope for selling our manufactures which their markets afforded. We had a barrier to the progression of our manufactures because of this, while the Americans could supply us with manufactured goods and get large prices for them. He did not believe that if the Americans were such energetic, shrewd people as they were represented to be, and as they undoubtedly were, if they did not believe Protection to be to their advantage, they would continue it. He did not believe they would continue a system so ruinous and so disastrous as Protection had been represented by some gentlemen to be, if it was such a ruinous system. English people would not bring their steel, and German manufacturers their laces and ribbons and manufacture them in America, thus competing with America on her own ground, if they did not believe the American system of Protection was beneficial. He had been urged by millers, largely engaged in the district, to take up this question. He had also received representations from Mr. Gordon, a miller from another section of the country, Messrs. Corly & Sons, who had lately opened a large branch of their business in the city of St. John, for the purpose of shipping flour down there, and others, and it was considered that the Maritime Provinces could be as cheaply supplied with flour from Ontario as they could from their American neighbours if this Protection was given. He therefore moved:—

“That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the chair, but that it be resolved, that whereas a large quantity of wheat and flour has been imported into Canada within the last few years, this House is of opinion that the interests of Canadian farmers would be promoted by the imposition of a duty on these articles.”

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I would like to ask the hon. the head of the Government whether he considers this vote a vote of want of confidence?

MR. ROSS (East Durham) said he seconded the amendment with pleasure, and he trusted the Government would see their way clear to accepting it, as it would strengthen their hands at the coming elections, and would, perhaps, bring the Americans to their senses. He voted against the amendment of the hon. member for Kingston, as, in his opinion, he thought it was only intended to catch votes.

MR. BOWELL said it was a pity that the hon. member who seconded that resolution did not inform the House how often he had given his vote on previous occasions to motions on the same subject. His speech was a somewhat singular production. He told the House that he hoped the Government would see its way clear to accept this extraordinary motion in order that it might strengthen the hands of the Government at the coming elections, and he wound up that little speech by stating that the amendment of the hon. member for Kingston was to catch votes. He (Mr. Bowell) supposed it was for the same purpose the hon. gentleman had seconded this motion, and which he so sincerely hoped the Government would accept in order to strengthen their hands.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: And to catch votes.

MR. BOWELL said to strengthen their hands was the term used. He (Mr. Bowell) was in favour of the motion; he was in favour of any motion in the direction of extending the principle of Protection to all our various industries; and when the mover of the resolution referred to the one prepared by the hon. member for Kingston as not embracing all interests, he must dissent from him. It embraced all the industries. To adopt this principle by piece-meal was not the object they should have in view. If they attempted to adopt a National Policy it must embrace every industry, whether of the farm, the manufactory, the mine, or the forest. If there were any means of obtaining better prices for our farm products, or of making any industry of the country more profitable, it was the bounden duty of this Legislature to include that industry in any scheme proposed. They urged the adoption of this policy from a national standpoint, believing it to be to the general advantage of this country; but it was well that the country should know that the motion, at least in the opinion of the member for East Durham (Mr. Ross) who seconded this motion, was not so much in the interests of the farmers as in the interest of the Government, believing that it was of superior importance to obtain more votes, or, as he put it, “to strengthen their hands at the coming election,” than to benefit the farmer. He (Mr. Bowell) ventured the conclusion that, if the hon. gentleman had not believed that it would strengthen the hands of the Government, he would not have seconded that motion. As to the question of principle involved in it, he was of opinion that it never entered his mind, knowing that the farming community in the neighbourhood he (Mr. Ross) represented were in favour of the imposition of duties on that which they produced. He voted for it, but he would be very cautious in recording a vote against the Government, and particularly in moving or seconding it in a manner that might be considered a vote of want of confidence. Although he (Mr. Bowell) intended to vote for the motion, he thought it was better if we were to have a policy, that it should be a reasonable and acceptable one. He was quite certain that to adopt the principle with reference only to one or two articles, as involved in this resolution, or attempt in any way to carry out the principle piece-meal, never would be accepted by the House or the country.

MR. ROSS said he did not second the motion as a want of confidence motion because he did not know any other party in the House that he could support if he withdrew his confidence from the Administration. The hon. member for North Hastings (Mr. Bowell) thought that because there was a certain party in his (Mr. Ross') district which believed in protective duties, he would have their support; but he would find out his mistake—they had little confidence in the member for North Hastings.

MR. FORBES said that, perhaps, there was no principle of more importance than this question of Protection. It came before the country in 1867, and was brought forward in all the elections. They were told then that they were not to buy in the cheapest market or sell in the dearest; they in the Maritime Provinces were to buy flour from the people of Ontario. But they in Nova Scotia had no reciprocal trade, and never would have; they could not exchange one commodity for another. They could easily furnish cereals, but wheat they could not supply in sufficient quantities for their own use. They were dependent on some other country for that necessary, and they were willing to receive it from Ontario if they could get it as cheap as from other places. They knew what a tax on flour meant; they had experienced it before Confederation when they had something like 25 cents duty on flour. It was very evident this tax did not go into the pockets of the farmers but into the pockets of the Ontario millers, and out of the pockets of the Nova Scotia fishermen. No Government which put such a tax upon flour need expect support from the Maritime Provinces. They were not situated so that they could have an interchange of trade with the people of Ontario, they had little to exchange with them. But their manufactories had been crushed out by the opposition they had met with from Ontario and Quebec, and the addition of another tax would place Nova Scotia in the position of a conquered Province. They wanted to see all these things blotted out; they did not want to see any arbitrary tax imposed to the detriment of any Province. If the people of Ontario were willing to put on a duty on coal of \$12 per ton, let it be put on; and then, he had no doubt, the people of Nova Scotia would say there was some fairness in it. Although, when it came to the question, he must say he was not in favour of a duty on coal. He believed it was merely another way to take from the people of the country so much money and put it in the pockets of rich corporations. He did not believe in the country being governed by these rich corporations or rings. He was opposed to these things as well as to a tax on the staff of life. The people of Nova Scotia had possessed so much freedom that they did not know what they enjoyed. They could put a newspaper in the post-office, and it could go anywhere free of postage. Their tariff was the lowest in the world, about 10 per cent., which was sufficient to cover the interest on all their debt; their revenue was large enough to make all the improvements necessary. They built up their railroads and paid the interest without any trouble. In 1862 came up the great question of retrenchment, at the time when the Hon. Joseph Howe found himself obliged to increase the tariff  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. They had been labouring under an enormous tariff of 10 per cent.; Howe put on  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. The hon. member for Cumberland denounced it as an enormous tax, and told the people that it was wholly unnecessary, that the whole work might be done by simply economizing, by cutting down the expenses of the country, and that he could point out where they could save to the country something like a hundred thousand dollars. \$100,000 here sounded very small, but in their revenue it was quite a large amount. He introduced a retrenchment scheme which was kept before the people until the next elections. The tax of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. was kept on one year; then it was repealed, and the country went back to 10 per cent. That additional  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. cost the Government their existence, they were swept out at the next elections. If a tax were put on flour, no Government, he did not care whether Conservative or Liberal, would stand. If hon. gentlemen on the opposite side came into power, he was perfectly sure they would hesitate before imposing that duty. No Government imposing that duty could command a majority of hon. members from the Lower Provinces; they would protest against being obliged to pay a tax for the benefit of Ontario. That Province would next want a duty on salt. Ontario had some salt mines; Goderich was supposed to be able to give salt enough to supply all the fishermen that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island might send out; although the whole supply would not suffice for a tithe of it. If a tax were put on salt, no fisherman could sell his fish at a price to cover the cost of salt. They got salt from England and Turks Island, at 7s. 6d. to 8s. per hogshead, containing about eight bushels. It was the thin end of oppression that the hon. members from Ontario were trying to insert against the people of the Lower Provinces in favour of Ontario. What was predicted in 1867 had come to pass, that all their manufactories would be stopped and their markets flooded by the people of Ontario, and the next step would be to put a tax on flour. It was complained that Canada had become a slaughter market for the United States; the Lower Provinces had become a slaughter market for Ontario. A merchant in straightened circumstances had goods which he could not sell. What did he do with it? He packed up his tweeds and everything else and down they went to the Lower Provinces. Every little village in the Lower Provinces had been flooded with ready-made clothes and other goods manufactured in Ontario, and their merchants had been ruined. Everything found its level. Water found its level. Evidently this sort of thing would cure itself. Depressions would occur, they must be expected to occur, but it was not necessary on that account that the people of Ontario should oppress those of the Lower Provinces. Was it just to one section of this Dominion to be trampled on by another section. This was nothing else but an arbitrary determination to ruin the people of the Lower Provinces, and to shut them out from the market they had enjoyed year after year, and to which they sent lumber, fish, pork and other goods, and got back their produce in return. They could not sell those goods to the other Province. Their vessels could not get to Ontario. He would say, with all deference to the people of Ontario, whose society he esteemed very much, who were a fine people, with nothing cruel or harsh in their natural disposition, that he wanted them to look at this question from a national point of view, and not endeavour to trample down the people of the Lower Provinces. The suffering in Nova Scotia was increasing. It was said that Halifax was becoming a village; its downward course had begun, all owing to Confederation. He asked hon. members not to carry this thing to extremes, and to oppose any sectional tax coming out of the pockets of one class of people to benefit another part of the people. He hoped the Government would see it was not just to endeavour to harass, to hamper, and to oppress the people of the Lower Provinces.

MR. BOWELL.

MR. WHITE (East Hastings) said he believed that, so far as the Ontario farmers were concerned, they were not so selfish as to look for a duty on wheat and flour alone, but would support a duty on coal also. They wanted to do justice to the people of Nova Scotia as well as to the people of Ontario; their desire was to have a National Policy in which all sections of the country would be protected. The hon. member who had moved this motion must certainly know that the farmers of this country would much rather see a duty imposed on corn, than on wheat or flour. He must know well there was more coarse grain to be sold in his section of the country, than flour or wheat. If the seconder of the motion (Mr. Ross) were sincere, he would have voted for the motion of the right hon. member for Kingston, that all sections of the country should be protected, that our manufacturers and farmers should be protected, and, that a duty should be placed on coal, which would give Nova Scotia a fair, just, and equitable protection, such as was wanted in Ontario. It had been said by the seconder of that motion that the Opposition only made their motions in order to gain office; that they were not sincere in their professions. If they were not sincere, if the leader of the Opposition was not sincere, he was sure there was no sincerity in either the mover or seconder of this motion. The seconder of the motion had said he hoped the Government would see their way clear to accept this motion, in order to strengthen themselves in the Province of Ontario during the coming election. Who ever heard of such an absurd and inconsistent proposition coming from an hon. member who had voted against every motion that came before this House, as that which he now said would, if carried, strengthen the First Minister and his Cabinet in the Ontario elections. It was impossible to expect a duty on flour and wheat, and other grains, unless a duty were imposed on the products of our mines, and upon all articles which could be manufactured in the Dominion, so as to protect all parties interested. A duty on one article would not be acceptable to parties in this country. Any half measure would be regretted, and the only measure likely to succeed would be a proposition to impose duties on corn, barley, oats, wheat, flour, coal, salt, and on manufactured articles. That was what they expected and looked for, and the policy which they were prepared to vote for. The hon. the First Minister had criticised the manner in which the Opposition had placed before the House that policy which they believed was most adapted to the country. It was, however, the duty of the Opposition to lay before Parliament the policy which they believed to be in the interests of the people, and on that issue they would go before the electors in the different constituencies. The hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Brown) would agree with him that the imposition of a duty on wheat and flour would not be satisfactory to the county from which he came. He trusted, therefore, the hon. the First Minister would accept that view, and impose duties on other articles in addition to those asked by the mover and seconder of the present motion. If the hon. the Premier adopted that course, he would receive the hearty support of hon. members on the Opposition side of the House; and, if re-elected, it would be his duty to support the hon. gentleman's Government, because the county which returned him (Mr. White) desired duties to be placed on the articles he had mentioned. No doubt the Government would not be able to accept the motion; he wished they could do so. He would vote for it as an instalment of a general protective policy. The agricultural, manufacturing and mineral productions must be protected. He trusted a good vote would be given in favour of the motion, which would show the Government unmistakably that, in their own camp, and among their own followers, many of their best supporters were dissatisfied, and, also, the constituencies they represented. If the present motion had been made from the Opposition side of the House, the hon. the First Minister would have laughed at it; but, when hon. members on the Ministerial side were thus prepared to vote want of confidence in the Government, the hon. gentleman did not state whether he accepted the motion as such or not. The present motion originated in the hon. the Premier's own camp, and it was to be hoped that the guns which had been fired would arouse the hon. gentleman to the necessities of the country, and compel him to adopt measures of relief.

MR. WHITE.

MR. BORDEN said he quite agreed with the remarks made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Forbes), that the proposal contained in the amendment, if carried out, would have a prejudicial effect on the Province of Nova Scotia, and, in fact, on all the Maritime Provinces. He did not quite agree, however, with that hon. member as to the manner in which it would operate, because, while it would have a very injurious influence on those Provinces, he did not think it would be particularly advantageous to the Province of Ontario. It was well known that the price of flour was governed by the Liverpool market, and, consequently, any tax imposed upon flour and wheat in this Dominion, of which we have a surplus, would not increase its price; but it would have a very unfavourable influence upon the trade of the Lower Provinces with the United States. It so happened that the United States afforded them a considerable market for their natural products, and they had also a very large carrying trade, indirectly, with that country, through the West Indies. They thus possessed the advantage of cheap return freights on flour, varying from 10c. to 25c. per barrel. While the imposition of a duty would interfere with this trade, and thereby increase the cost of flour to the people of the Lower Provinces, it would not have the effect of assisting the Ontario farmers in the slightest degree. He quite agreed with the hon. members who had stated that this proposition, to impose a duty on wheat and flour, could not be considered independently, but simply as part of the policy which had already been proposed by the right hon. member for Kingston, and supported by the Opposition. It was now well understood that there was a distinct issue before the people of this country, namely, that of Protection on the one hand, and a revenue tariff, such as the country now possessed, on the other hand. The former was the declared policy of the Opposition; the latter, that of the present Government, by which, the Finance Minister had informed the country, they would either stand or fall. There could be no doubt, therefore, that this motion could not be considered strictly by itself, but in connection with the general motion, of which it properly formed a part; that proposition being, to quote from the right hon. member for Kingston's resolution, "The adoption of a national policy, which, by a judicious readjustment of the tariff, would benefit and foster the agricultural, mining, manufacturing and other interests of the Dominion." That was to say, it was a policy to protect everybody. The difference between the two policies was, that the one claimed that all the industries of the country could be made prosperous by imposing taxation, while the other claimed that whatever taxation was taken out of the pockets of the people, except what was actually required for the purposes of Government, was prejudicial to their best interests. The right hon. leader of the Opposition had never condescended to lay before the House the modus operandi of his scheme. It was very easy to insert certain words in a resolution, but it was somewhat more difficult to explain to the House and the country how such particular industry was to be protected at one and the same time. They had had a very striking instance of the impossibility of carrying out such a scheme in the discussion of the lumber interest, which, it would be admitted, was one of the most important industries in the country, and one which, at the present time, was most depressed. They found that hon. members who spoke on behalf of that interest asked that the duty on pork, an article entering largely into the consumption of the lumberman, should be removed, while, on the other hand, the representatives of the farmers were equally anxious that the duty should be retained. Thus, it was evident, there was a direct conflict between the two industries, and that, in this particular instance, what would protect the lumber interest would not protect the farming interest. Such instances might be multiplied indefinitely. Another branch of the subject to which he would refer for a few minutes was that connected with the development of inter-provincial trade. The question of fostering inter-provincial trade had been a favourite hobby of the hon. member for Cumberland before Confederation and since. Not long ago, he (Mr. Borden) carefully examined the trade returns of Nova Scotia for 1866, and compared them with those of 1877; 1866 being the year preceding Confederation. He found that in 1866 the imports of Nova Scotia for home consumption amounted to over \$13,000,000; that in 1877, on this immensely reduced importation, Nova Scotia paid a tax into the revenue of \$75,000 in excess of that paid in 1866, to which he would allude further on. It thus appeared there had been a falling off in their import trade of over \$4,000,000, and, making allowances for the trade in 1866 with Canada, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, which was not now included in the trade returns, it would still remain over \$2,500,000. The people of Nova Scotia were thus, apparently, consuming less in 1877 than they did in 1866. Quite the opposite, however, in the natural course of things, must be the case. From the export returns he found that, during the same period, their export trade had increased by about \$1,500,000. Therefore, he thought it fair to infer that the general consumption of the people had increased largely, and that at least \$2,000,000 should be added to the difference, \$2,500,000, to make up the total difference between 1866 and 1877 to be accounted for. The only way in which they could account for it was that, instead of importing American and English goods, they were now purchasing those goods in Canada, and from the evidence given before the Committee on the coal question, last Session, it appeared, on the authority of a Halifax merchant, that the purchases made by Nova Scotia from Ontario and Quebec amounted to \$3,600,000; \$2,000,000 of which were manufactured goods and the remainder flour. The export trade from Nova Scotia to those Provinces, as against the large volume of imports, had not increased, and was less than \$500,000, of which coal and fish made up the principal part. An examination of the trade returns for the past eleven years would reveal the fact that the Upper Provinces were rapidly monopolizing the trade of Nova Scotia in manufactured goods; that the imports from Great Britain alone had fallen off about \$2,000,000, and that those from the United States had remained about stationary, except in the article of flour, which had fallen off. Nova Scotia's trade with Canada in flour now amounted to about \$1,500,000, and her purchases of Canadian manufactures reached at least \$2,000,000. Thus, the falling off in their imports was explained by the rapid increase in their purchases from the Upper Provinces, which, before Confederation, under a low tariff, but one operating against Canada equally with the rest of the world, did not reach one-twentieth of their present amount. One effect of this altered course of trade upon Nova Scotia was especially noteworthy, and that was, that while they were paying the tax of  $17\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.; over and above the cost of their \$2,000,000 worth of goods in England or the United States, it was not going into the revenue of the country, but into the pockets of the Canadian manufacturers; while, at the same time, owing to the increase of duties—the result of Confederation—they were actually paying more money into the treasury, although their imports were one-fourth less than in 1866. Had, therefore, their importations continued at their former rate, Nova Scotia would be paying at least \$500,000 more into the revenue, which was now going to swell the profits of the Upper Canadian manufacturers. It was thus evident that the adoption of the policy proposed by the Opposition, to foster and encourage the manufacturers by the imposition of a higher tariff, would operate directly against the interests of the Maritime Provinces, by compelling them to purchase still more largely from the Upper Provinces, and at higher prices. Another part of the proposition of the leader of the Opposition showed conclusively what kind of tariff they would propose to adopt, and that was the reference to a "reciprocity of tariffs with our neighbours", which meant, of course, the adoption of the tariff of the United States. He would like to call the attention of the farming population of the Lower Provinces to the effect of such a tariff upon their interests. All kinds of appliances used in farming operations would have a duty of from 35 to 50 per cent. imposed on them, instead of the present  $17\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. He had referred to the duty proposed on flour, which, by the adoption of the American tariff, would be 20 per cent., and which would also operate against the farmer of the Lower Provinces in the way already pointed out. Then, take the case of the mechanics, such as blacksmiths and carpenters. The duty on bar iron in the United States ranged from 35 to 65 per cent., while in this country it was only 5 per cent. Edge tools in the United States paid a duty of from 35 to 50 per cent., while the Canadian duty was  $17\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. Add to this an increase of from 20 to 30 per cent. to the  $17\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. duty on clothing, and boots and shoes, and some idea could be formed of the effect of a reciprocity of tariffs with the United States. From those facts, it appeared that anything like an attempt to force further an inter-provincial trade by a retaliatory policy against the United States, which was, after all, the real meaning of a "reciprocity of tariffs," would be exceedingly disastrous to all the Lower Provinces; and he could not allow the present opportunity to pass without expressing his strongest condemnation of any attempt being made to bring about in this country the state of things now existing in the United States. Such a policy was detrimental to the best interests of the whole Dominion and especially those of the Maritime Provinces. He did not think that members from those Provinces could be fairly charged with sectionalism in pressing their views, because they were sent to Parliament to represent the interests of their constituents, and, to a very large extent, whatever were their interests were those of the whole Dominion. It was impossible to injure a part without injuring the whole. He was satisfied Parliament, in its wisdom, would not enact any legislation that would oppress any particular Province.

MR. BORDEN.

Mr. McQUADE said he was glad to observe that hon. gentlemen opposite were, one by one, taking the right steps for the protection of the interests of farmers. He represented a farming constituency, and he wished it to be understood by the House that he was only sorry that the hon. gentleman had not gone a little further into the matter than merely to ask for protection on wheat and flour. These concerned only a very small part of the interests of the farmers which required protection. He had taken the trouble to look over some figures regarding the loss that our agriculturists sustained in this Dominion. He found that in 1877, on barley alone, which was one of the great products on which they made money in the West, they lost very heavily. The imports of American barley alone amounted to 368,426 bushels, which came in duty free, and which, if it was charged the same duty that the Americans charged us, 15c. per bushel, would furnish the amount of $55,263.90 to the country, which was now lost. These were facts which the House could not deny. He also found that we imported of American oats 1,697,706 bushels, free of duty, which, if charged 10c. per bushel, duty, as the Americans charged us, would give $169,770.60. We imported of peas and beans 8,042 bushels, which at 20c. ad valorem, would give $1,608.40; of rye 65,414 bushels, which at 15c. a bushel would give $9,812.10; of corn 8,260,039 bushels, which at 10c. per bushel, duty, would give $826,003.90; and of wheat 4,589,027 bushels, which at 20c. per bushel, the American duty on our grain, would give $917,805.40; the sum total of loss to our agriculturists on the grain imported into Canada, in 1877, was $1,980,264.30, and still, the hon. the First Minister stated that the farmers wanted no protection, and that they could take care of themselves. If the farmers never had any care taken of them until the hon. the First Minister undertook the duty, he thought that they would be hard up. The hon. gentleman said that the farmers were well off. This was the case; but he claimed that this was wholly due to the laborious industry of the agriculturists. They did not go into bankruptcy to become prosperous, but they became rich by hard work; and this Government was trying to grind them down and keep them under; but he hoped that the day was not far distant when there would be a change. He found that the exports of the grain from the Dominion to the United States were as follows: of barley, 6,243,033 bushels, on which, at 15c. per bushel—which every man in the House in his heart and conscience knew was the first thing taken out of the price of their grain—$936,554.65 were paid in duty; of beans, 118,281 bushels, on which, at 20 per cent., $23,584 were paid in duty, occasioning a loss to that amount to our agriculturists; of corn we did not export very much, but on this, a duty was charged by the Americans. We exported 405 bushels, and the loss was $40.50; of oats we exported 72,378 bushels, which, at 10 per cent., occasioned a loss of $7,237.80 in duty; of peas, 4,704,720 bushels, which, at 20 per cent. ad valorem, represented a loss of $75,968.20 in duty; of rye, 95,065 bushels, occasioning a loss in duty of $14,259.75; of wheat, 348,946 bushels, which, at 20c. a bushel, represented a loss of $69,789.20. He found the total amount we had lost in the export of grain during 1877 was $1,127,443. These were facts that could not be refuted. With the permission of the House he would give the return as to the live stock imported into and exported from this country. He found that the duty which the present Government charged the Americans was only half the amount which the latter charged Canadian exporters of live stock. He found that there had been imported from the United States 8,055 head of horned cattle of the value of $221,306, while the duty amounted to $22,130.90. He found also that the number of horses imported was 1,473 head, the value of which amounted to $76,700, and the duty to $7,670. The Minister of the Interior made great fun last summer in a speech which he delivered, as to the number of sheep imported into this country, and stated that only three sheep were imported into the Province of Ontario in 1876, which was true. But the hon. Minister should have told the crowd of innocent farmers whom he was addressing the whole truth. The fact was that the number of sheep imported into the Dominion in 1876 was over 11,000. This year 11,617 head of sheep, worth $21,817, were imported, the duty thereon being $2,181.70. The number of swine imported was 13,609, their value $181,097, and the duty paid for them amounted to $18,109.70. The total amount of duty charged on these imports then was $50,091.40, while by following the tactics of the

MR. McQUADE.

United States Government it might have reached $100,182.80. Still it was said the farmers did not want Protection. The ad valorem duty charged by the Americans upon live stock imported into that country was 20 per cent., whereas Canada only charged 10 per cent. During the year 1877, 7,496 horses, of the value of $668,467, were exported to the United States, and of that sum $133,693.40 was given up by the farmers of this country to pay the duty charged by the United States Government. Of horned cattle, 13,851 had been exported, their total value being $268,317, while the loss to the seller amounted to $53,663.40. He found that we exported 1,944 head of swine of the value of $11,376, the duty being $2,275.20. Of sheep, 198,829 were exported; the value of these amounted to $536,648, and the loss to the seller, in consequence of the duty charged, $107,329.60. About $296,961, or one-fifth of the total exports of live stock to Canada, therefore, was lost to the seller, and yet the First Minister of the Crown said the farmers could take care of themselves. The hon. the First Minister was very liberal in the way of distributing our steel rails. A plan was on foot for building a railroad in the county which he (Mr. McQuade) came from, and the seconder of the resolution was a director of that road. He hoped, therefore, that the First Minister would consent to give some rails for the purpose of pushing that road ahead. He said he understood the First Minister and some more of the faithful were coming to the county he represented with the intention of making a "big push," and, as the hon. the First Minister had been so liberal in giving and lending iron or steel rails to the hon. member for Queen's, N.B., (Mr. Ferris), he thought he might send some rails to finish the extension of the Midland Railway. This reminded him that no less a sum than $3,000 was said to have been paid for the storage of some rails intended for the railroads of British Columbia—for storage in the open air. That was economy with a vengeance. Another matter to which he would like to refer was the Emigration Department. One hon. gentleman said it was cruel to bring people into this country and leave them to the mercy of their neighbours. He (Mr. McQuade) thought it would be better for the Government to devote the money they had spent in this way to the transport of farmers' sons to Manitoba, where there was a great tract of land, and encourage them to settle there. It would be much wiser for the Government to give farmers' sons, or immigrants, a year's provisions and a cow, as had been done in the old times in the township in which he lived, and those men were now prosperous and good settlers. Many of those immigrants who had been brought out, and left without employment or means of living, had been a burden upon the neighbours where they were left; others, who had means, had either returned home or gone to the United States, and had given Canada a bad name. Even in this city of Ottawa, he could see hundreds of men struggling for employment, and unable to get it. Why, then, had the Government, in 1876, gone to the expense of bringing a great number of emigrants from France, and then was forced to send them home again at an expense of $5,000? Who paid those expenses? The farmers, as a rule, and the sooner a stop was put to this useless emigration the better. He hoped a hearty vote would be given for this resolution, and that other hon. gentlemen would bring forward something else of the same kind. With respect to the Goderich Harbour job, he was satisfied that $30,000 had been lost to the country through the bad management of the First Minister, who had refused to give the contract to the lowest tenderers, and the only excuse he could give for doing so was that he had offered to do the work too cheap, and that he was a farmer. Still, he had a letter from the hon. member for South Bruce, saying that Mr. Moore, who got the contract, was his friend. Where were the men who had taken office to govern and save the country? Year after year he was astonished to find they had left, and it appeared just as soon as they could get office they looked after themselves, and left the ship of State to sink or swim. The Hon. Mr. Simpson, when going around electioneering, had said that he did not buy voters with money, but had mesmerized them; and it appeared the right hon. member for Kingston was mesmerizing a good many of the Government supporters with his new policy, and he hoped they would soon all be mesmerized and the country with them.

MR. FISET said that the motion of the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Brown) would be so important in its results, if carried, for the Province of Quebec, and particularly for the county which he had the honour to represent, that he could not let it pass without making a few remarks. The hon. member had not spoken of the great inconvenience and harm which the imposition of the tax proposed would cause, save with respect to the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, but the hon. gentleman might also have mentioned in this connection the Province of Quebec. There were few counties in that Province which produced enough wheat for the needs of their inhabitants. He would select one as an exemplification of this fact,—the county of Rimouski. This county scarcely produced one-half of wheat which was necessary for the consumption of those who lived in it. He could also mention in this regard the counties of Bonaventure and Gaspé, and many others, where the results of the harvest did not afford enough for the support of their population; and if a tax was imposed on wheat and flour, this policy would immediately levy an impost on one of the first and most important articles of consumption. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Forbes) saw that not only the Province of Nova Scotia, but also the Province of Quebec was seriously interested in this matter. When the hon. member made this motion, several members of the Opposition, and, above all, members from the Province of Ontario, smiled and applauded. But, though this was the case, he believed that the members from the Province of Quebec who belonged to the Opposition side of the House, were far from smiling. These hon. gentlemen had voted for the motion of the hon. member for Kingston, and that evening they found themselves under obligation also to vote—if they wished to be consistent—for this motion. If these hon. gentlemen did so, they would be consistent, inasmuch as they had supported the motion of the hon. member for Kingston, for, after all, it was not necessary to dissimulate. The motion made this evening was found comprehended in the first motion made by the hon. member for Kingston. When the latter was made, it appeared like the Pandora's box, which, by its exterior beauties invited admiration, but he was certain that the hon. gentlemen from that the Province of Quebec, who belonged to that Province, would, in the end, perceive that, in common with Pandora's box, this motion enclosed more of evil than of good. If this tax was imposed, as the hon. member for Quebec said, whom would it profit? It would benefit the western portion of the Dominion—the Provinces of Ontario and Manitoba, and, perhaps, the Province of British Columbia; it would not at all benefit the eastern portion of the Dominion; but, on the contrary, it would prove to be the heaviest tax that could be levied upon that section of our population. He would feel it to be his duty to vote against this motion, in company with the hon. member for Queen's.

Mr. MILLS moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

House adjourned at
Twenty-five minutes past
Twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 3rd April, 1878.

PRAYERS.

PRIVATE BILLS.

RESOLUTION PROPOSED.

Mr. HOLTON moved that, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Banking and Commerce, the time for the reception of reports on Private Bills be extended for one week from the 4th inst.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Fiset.

Mr. HOLTON moved that the time for receiving Reports from Committees on Private Bills, be extended to Thursday, the 11th instant, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

GENERAL RAILWAYS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.—[BILL No. 67.]

FIRST READING.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex) introduced a Bill (No. 67) to amend the General Act respecting Railways. He said that in the amendment of the General Railway Act, chapter 24, Statutes of 1875, no provision was made whereby a railway company could build a sidings to a warehouse, elevator and wharf; and it was proposed to so amend this clause of the Act as to empower such companies to extend their sidings to a warehouse, elevator or wharf. Again, in chapter 24, no provision was made whereby a railway company could extend its sidings which were partially used by another railway company; and it was proposed to amend it so that it should be lawful for such a company to extend sidings whether used by the company solely or jointly with other companies. These were the only two amendments proposed.

Bill read the first time.

SUPREME COURT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.—[BILL No. 68.]

FIRST READING.

Mr. LAFLAMME introduced a Bill (No. 68) To amend the Act 38 Victoria, chapter 11, intituled "An Act to establish a Supreme Court and a Court of Exchequer for the Dominion of Canada." He said the Bill was introduced to increase the number of the terms of the Supreme Court from two to four; also to regulate the appeals from the Lower Provinces where there was no limitation with respect to appeals. An appeal could be brought from the Maritime Provinces for $5, and it was proposed to make the appealable sum $400 and upwards. The appealable amount for the Province of Quebec was maintained at $2,000, and in the Province of Ontario this was regulated by the laws of that Province. Appeals were also made to include all constitutional questions relating to the interpretation of Statutes; and provision was moreover made with respect to any case of disqualification of Judges sitting in this Court, in order to prevent unjust delay. For instance, he had been informed that two of the Judges from the Province of Quebec would be disqualified from sitting in two or three important cases owing to the fact that they had been consulted with respect to, or concerned in them, in the Court below.

MR. MACDONNELL said he would reserve his extended remarks on the Bill until the second reading. In the meantime, he wished to enter his protest against any limitation of the amount for which an appeal might be had with respect to the laws of the Province from which he had the honour to come. It was known that in that Province they had only two Courts of any consequence, the County Court and the Supreme Court, differing in this respect from the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, where they had Courts of Appeal and Review, and other Courts of which he knew nothing. It was not the pecuniary amount involved that should be made the criterion as to whether appeals should be allowed or not. A great principle of law might be involved, or a man's detention; and questions might be involved which would be excluded by this Bill—that represented interests much higher, and much greater, and much more sacred than mere money considerations; and, therefore, he took the earliest possible opportunity of expressing his regret that the hon. the Minister of Justice had introduced this Bill, and intended to vary the law from what it was at present. He reserved any lengthened observations on the subject for a future occasion.

Bill read the first time.

PENITENTIARIES ACT AMENDMENT
BILL.—[BILL No. 69.]

FIRST READING.

MR. LAFLAMME introduced a Bill (No. 69) To amend section 8 of the Penitentiaries Act of 1875. He said that the amendment proposed had respect to the St. John Penitentiary, from whence short-term prisoners were allowed to be removed, in accordance with a special provision of the Act, which referred only to this year; and it was intended to extend this provision for another year, in order to afford time for the completion of the penitentiary. It was thought, when the Bill was first introduced, that the penitentiary would, by this time, be completed; but it had not as yet been terminated, and it was found necessary to extend the provision in question for another year.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Has the hon. gentleman got the consent of the Governor-General to this Bill?

MR. MACKENZIE: How does the Bill require it?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I want to know.

MR. MACKENZIE: I do not think that this is required.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I do not think it either; but the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec thought that every Bill requires the Governor's consent.

MR. DEVLIN: That is far fetched.
Bill read the first time.

INSURANCE ACT OF 1877.

QUESTION.

MR. KILLAM enquired, Which Life Insurance Companies have given notice to the Minister of Finance of their intention to avail themselves of the proviso contained in sub-Section 2 of Section 7, of the Insurance Act of 1877; and also, what are the names of the Insurance Companies incorporated elsewhere than in Canada, which have not applied before the 31st March in this year, for a renewal of their licenses under the 3rd Section of the said Act.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: The companies which have given notice of their intention to avail themselves of proviso sub-Section 2 of Section 7, of the Act referred to, are: the London and Lancashire, the North British and Mercantile, the Reliance, the Royal, and the Standard—British Companies; the Ætna Life, the Equitable, the Travellers', and the Union Mutual,—American Companies. Sub-Section 2, I may remark, in passing, simply enables them to require that the policies issued previous to the 31st of March, 1878, are not to be affected by the Act. This is in no respect an interference with their future business. As to the second part of my hon. friend's question, I may say that, before passing the Act, the following companies had authority to transact new business in Canada:—The British Mutual, the Positive, the Scottish Provident, the Scottish Provincial, and the United States. Of those which have given notice under the 17th Section of the Act, to discontinue business, the names are as follows:—The Edinburgh Life, the Life Association of Scotland, and the Scottish Amicable. The Life Association, however, I ought, perhaps, to mention, although it has discontinued new business, has given notice under sub-Section 2 of Section 7, to which I have referred, so that it may avail itself of this proviso, if it chooses to resume business. The American companies which have given notice to discontinue, are the New York, the North - Western, Milwaukee, the Phoenix, and the Hartford. The Atlantic Mutual is in the hands of a receiver, and, of course, it has not received any renewal of its licenses.

MR. KILLAM: Are the licenses of the others renewed?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Well, the hon. gentleman does not enquire as to that point.

MR. KILLAM: Yes; I asked the names of the companies which have not applied before the 31st of March for renewal, and if they have not applied for renewal, they, of course, have discontinued business.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I speak from memory, but I think that these are the only ones that have not applied. I did not observe the exact form of the question. The Companies I have mentioned have given notice of intention to discontinue, and I think that, in all cases, they would give notice.

MR. CARTWRIGHT.

CHARGES AGAINST MARINE AND FISHERIES AGENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD, for MR. DEWDNEY, moved for all correspondence from whatever source which led to an investigation before Mr. Justice Gray, into accusations made against the agent of Marine and Fisheries in British Columbia; also for the report of Mr. Justice Gray, with the evidence taken at the enquiry.

MR. MACKENZIE said he was not certain at that moment that he was familiar with all the particulars connected with the case under investigation, nor was he certain whether some of the correspondence asked was not of a more or less confidential nature. It was sent to Mr. Justice Gray in the absence of any person whom he could fairly entrust with the exercise of the judicial functions necessary in such an investigation, and there might be some delicate matters connected with it which he would hardly care to make public till he had time to look over the papers. Perhaps, therefore, the hon. gentleman would let the matter drop at present, and he would have an opportunity of making his motion on another occasion.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said it occurred to him that when this matter was before the sub-Committee it was understood that, when a notice of motion was given and a motion afterwards made, if the Government asked it to stand over, it would not be dropped but keep its place till further enquiries were made into the subject.

MR. MACKENZIE: I have no objection to that. We will be able, before Wednesday next, to say whether we can give the correspondence or not.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

MOTION FOR AN ADDRESS TO THE QUEEN.

MR. BUNSTER moved that an humble address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen praying that, Majesty may be graciously pleased to re-appoint His Excellency the Earl of Dufferin as Governor-General of this Dominion for another term, at the expiration of his present term of office as Governor-General. He said he felt he was only expressing the enthusiastic and warm desire, not only of every member of the House, but also of the people at large, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. He knew and felt that this was a delicate matter, and, as a rule, the introduction of the Governor-General's name in that House was to be avoided. But there were exceptions to every rule, and he looked upon the case which he now brought before the House as one of an exceptional nature, and considered it most desirable that the proposal he made should be carried into effect. He felt it most desirable that the Governor-General of this Dominion should be a gentleman, who should possess a thorough knowledge of the vast interests committed to his charge, and who should take a warm interest in the advancement of the Dominion in every way. It was beyond doubt that Lord Dufferin had shown more interest in the prosperity of this country than any previous Governor-General had done, and had made the name of the Dominion of Canada known and honoured both at home and abroad. He (Mr. Bunster) could not but feel that, in losing Lord Dufferin, the Dominion was losing her best friend. Lord Dufferin had shown an unbounded generosity and hospitality, such as we had rarely experienced in this country, and he had made the people of this country feel that he had not come here to enrich himself at their expense. He believed it was the feeling of the people that the present Governor-General should remain in office for another term, and he felt satisfied that, in acceding to the motion he had the honour to move, the House would be supported by the entire country. He believed, also, that if the salary attached to the office was made $100,000, instead of what it now was, it would meet with the acceptance of the people, because the sum, large as it seemed, would be spent in the country, and the increase would, thus, not be missed. If a vote by ballot could be taken on this matter, he was convinced Lord Dufferin would be unanimously re-elected.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am sure we all appreciate the motives which induced the hon. member for Vancouver to move his present motion. But, while every one in the House, without exception, would be very glad to do or say anything which would give pleasure to His Excellency the Governor-General, this, at the same time, I may tell the hon. gentleman, is a mode of procedure entirely without precedent, and one which would be very inconvenient if proceeded with in the House. I propose, on Monday or Tuesday next, to submit to the House, for its consideration and adoption, an Address to His Excellency, on the occasion of his leaving the government of this Dominion, and the hon. gentleman and others will then have an opportunity of testifying all their warm appreciation of those qualities which have endeared him to the people of this country. In the meantime, I must ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw his motion, as one which it would not be desirable, under existing circumstances, to proceed with, and I am sure he will feel that the request I make is not an unreasonable one, and will concur in the view I have expressed.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I entirely concur in the proposition made by my hon. friend the First Minister. I am glad the leader of this House proposes to offer a just tribute to His Excellency the Governor-General on his approaching departure, which we all regret for our sakes, if not for his own. I think, with the hon. leader of the Government, that it would be wise if my hon. friend from Vancouver would, under these circumstances, withdraw the motion he has made. When the matter comes again, he will have a full opportunity of expressing his feelings of admiration, esteem and regard for the hon. gentleman at the head of the government of this country.

Mr. MITCHELL: I wish to make some observations on the matter. I entirely concur with the suggestions made by the leader of the Government and the hon. gentleman with whom I generally act in this House. I take the opportunity, in consequence of interpretations put on my remarks on a former occasion, to state that I entertain for the gentleman at the head of the Government of this country the very highest respect and esteem, and I think it is only paying to that gentleman a just tribute of respect. As a man of talent and ability, who has acted with judgment, discretion and great tact, he deserves such an expression of good wishes as the Government have intimated their intention of asking this House to concur in.

MR. BUNSTER: Before withdrawing my motion, I desire to make a few remarks. I concur in the opinion expressed, that we have no right to make a precedent of this kind, but I claim that, in every sense, we have a right to petition, and this is merely a petition to Her Majesty the Queen, in the ordinary sense, similar to that adopted by the old Parliament of Canada, for the release of Smith O'Brien, and other Irish patriots. However, seeing the leader of the Government and the leader of the Opposition are against me, also the leader of the Left Centre, I will withdraw the motion which I expected would have met with an unanimous vote of approval.

Motion, with leave of the House, withdrawn.

HARBOUR MASTER OF COLLINGWOOD.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD, for Mr. McCARTHY, moved for a copy of the Order in Council regulating and determining the rights, powers and duties imposed on the Harbour Master for the Port of Collingwood, and fixing his remuneration, and any other Order or Orders amending the same; and a statement showing the moneys received by the Harbour Master of the said Port for the year ending on the 31st day of December 'ast, and how much has been retained thereof, and how much has been paid over to the Receiver-General.

Motion agreed to.

SECTION 12 OF THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD, for Mr. MACDONNELL, moved for all papers and correspondence between the hon. the Minister of Public Works and Messrs. Sumner and Somers, Contractors for the construction of Section No. 12 of the Intercolonial Railroad; and also all reports and correspondence on the part of the Chief and Assistant Engineers in connection with the construction of said section, and the claims of said Messrs. Sumner and Somers therefor.

MR. MITCHELL.

Motion agreed to.

CATTLE KILLED ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. TUPPER moved for copies of all correspondence between the Government or any official of the Department of Public Works or of the Intercolonial Railway and Solomon Keiver, in reference to a claim for the value of an ox killed on the railway near Spring Hill Station; also, copies of all correspondence between the Public Works Department or any officer of the Intercolonial Railway and Robert Boomer, of Brookfield, in the county of Colchester, in reference to a claim for the value of an ox killed on the railway near Brookfield, in September, 1875; also, copies of all correspondence between the Public Works Department or any official of the Intercolonial Railway and H. A. Davison, of Black River, in reference to a claim for a horse killed on the railway in October last. He said he regretted that the hon. the First Minister was not in his seat at the present moment, because if he (Mr. Tupper) received some information which he sought, he would withdraw his motion. Perhaps, however, the Minister of Finance or one of his colleagues would be able to let him know what he desired. Since the motion was placed on the notice paper, a measure had been brought in by the First Minister for the purpose of dealing with matters of this kind, and if he (Mr. Tupper) could receive an assurance that the means provided under that Act would be used on an early day for the purpose of investigating those claims referred to in the motion, he would withdraw it.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said, on that understanding, he would call the attention of the hon. the First Minister to the matter, and he had no doubt he would agree to the suggestion.

Motion, with leave of the House, withdrawn.

REBATE OF DUTIES ON AMERICAN MERCHANDIZE.

MOTION FOR STATEMENT.

MR. JONES (South Leeds) moved for statement of all rebate of duties on merchandize of any kind imported from the United States into the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec for the fiscal years 1875 and 1876, and 1876 and 1877, up to the 1st January, 1878; the names of parties to whom and the cause for which such rebate or rebates were made.

MR. BURPEE (St. John) asked if the hon. gentleman referred to cases in which refunds were made.

MR. JONES said he meant all kinds of merchandize on which, for some reason, too high a duty had been paid at the port of shipment from the United States, and cases where the actual invoiced price of goods only should have been paid.

MR. BURPEE said the return would have to be obtained from the various ports where the refunds had been made, but the Department would do what they could to obtain the required information as soon as possible.

MR. TUPPER said there were several instances in which the manufacturers in Canada had complained of the Government admitting merchandize that came into competition with that of our own country, at a valuation altogether inadequate to what the merchandize could be produced for. He had been told that iron bridges had been erected in Canada within the last few years, and that manufactured bridge iron had been imported into the country at a rate of value altogether inadequate and far below what any person could purchase such material for either in Canada or the United States. It was not right to give parties outside of this country such opportunities for bringing their manufactured materials into the country, in competition with our own industries; at all events, we should have the advantage of the imposts which the law fixed upon such manufactures. Our manufacturers would not be protected even to the extent of our own tariff, unless the valuation was quite equal to the cost the articles were manufactured for in the country from which they came. If the resolution did not include an enquiry into this matter, he was very desirous that it should do so.

MR. JONES said he was very glad to accede to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tupper), for he was aware that a large quantity of goods were brought into this country at a valuation at which it was impossible the goods could have been made. He thought a more efficient system of appraising was needed, and that this country was robbed of hundreds and thousands of dollars every year through the present deficient system of appraising the imports. He would be glad to know if the Government were prepared to appoint as appraisers, men who understood every description of goods coming into the country. By adopting such a system, hundreds and thousands of dollars of the people's money would be saved.

MR. BERTRAM said he knew a case in which an iron bridge was imported into this country at a valuation much below its cost, but afterwards it was seized, and a considerable amount of duty demanded upon it over and above the valuation. He believed the attention of the Department had been called to the importance of this matter some time ago, and he only rose to press upon the Government that the full amount of duty should be exacted on all goods manufactured in other countries.

MR. PLUMB said he believed that the manufacturers of the United States were in the habit of duplicating invoices in order to pass their goods into this country at less than their value. He had often heard complaints of that kind, and he knew the abuse was very common. He thought there should be some special means taken to ascertain when there was any notorious or obvious instance of evading the law by that method. It was a great hardship to our manufacturers in Canada, not only to be subjected to the pressing competition of the manufacturers of the United States without protection, but that those manufacturers should be allowed to bring in their goods at even less than the tariff rate. It was notorious throughout the country that abuses of this kind were constantly taking place, and that the Government were deprived of even the small duties imposed by the revenue law. He would undertake to state that, instead of the  $17\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. which we ought to get on the  $17\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. list, we did not get in reality over 10 per cent., and he fancied that, in many cases, we did not get even that. He trusted that what had been said would draw the attention of the Minister of Customs to this flagrant violation of the law, and that he would cause some enquiry to be made into this abuse, which was yearly increasing, and which was doing the greatest harm to the best interests of the country.

MR. YOUNG said he had given some attention to the matter, and he believed it was quite correct, as stated by the hon. member for Peterboro' (Mr. Bertram), that action had been taken by the Department to prevent goods being brought into this country from the United States at lower prices than they could be bought in this country. He believed this course was still pursued, and so far from the statement of the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) being correct, that this evil was increasing, it was the very opposite. The attention of the Government having been directed to the matter, steps were taken for preventing persons from invoicing goods at a lower rate than they cost on the other side, and the evil was not growing in any way whatever; and so far from the amount of duty paid being only 10 per cent on the  $17\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. list in the Press, a charge was brought against the Government of having charged more than 20 per cent. on certain goods imported. So the complaints of the hon. gentleman had been met before they were made, and complete justice was being done in the matter.

MR. MITCHELL said he quite agreed with the hon. gentleman who had last spoken that the evil was not on the increase, but he had no hesitation in saying that there was an evil, and that it was localized. If they took the smaller ports, they would find cases such as those referred to by the hon. member for Niagara, where goods were undervalued, but in Montreal and the larger ports a strict scrutiny obtained. He knew one person who had some difficulty with his goods. It was an iron bridge, and the gentleman wrote to him asking him what was the law and what was his remedy. He stated that the gentlemen at that port were making him value his goods at more than he supplied them, and he knew for a fact that the gentleman had some difficulty in obtaining redress. He pointed out to the appraiser the incorrectness of the valuation, but the same difficulty arose there as in regard to the railway management, the officer of that Department, the Collector of Customs, being, by law, one of the appraisers, having the selection of other appraisers. They appraised the goods at more than they were worth, and although the gentleman produced affidavits as to their cost, he had to pay something like 50 per cent. additional duty. The evil in the port of Montreal was carried to the other extreme. He thought there should be some uniform system of valuing goods, that the value should be ascertained by some regular method, and now that the attention of the Minister of Customs had been called to it, he trusted something would be done.

MR. PLUMB.

MR. BURPEE said this subject had received great attention from the Government during the last two years, and they now imposed the duty on the value of the goods at the place they were purchased. To ascertain the value of goods in Canada they had inspectors—one especially, who managed this business entirely. He not only visited the general ports of Canada, but often visited the principal markets of the United States, to ascertain the value of the goods there, so that as far as possible he might keep himself posted as to the value of goods in the United States particularly. He had paid particular attention to it, and many seizures had been made of goods from the United States that were under-valued. The Department had received complaints from several manufacturers with respect to over-valuation; one they received from a manufacturer at Hamilton, and six months were spent in investigating it. The papers were afterwards sent to him, and he admitted that the valuation was correct. The Department had had two or three cases of that kind, where manufacturers had sustained the valuation of the inspector. They paid strict attention to the matter in the large ports of Montreal and Toronto, and in the smaller ports, as far as they were able, but, of course, they could not afford the same expense for all the smaller ports.

Mr. WHITE (East Hastings) said that an American manufacturer, having an order for an iron bridge in Canada, offered an Iron Bridge Company at Hamilton to run their shops and allow them to build the bridge, as by this means they would save the duties. He thought that, considering the quantity of coal and iron in this Dominion, it was the duty of the Government to try to protect our manufactures. Manufacturers said that they could manage on an import duty of  $17\frac{1}{2}$  per cent., but that if it was lower, they would not be able to compete.

Mr. MACDONALD (Toronto) said that, when the papers came down for which the hon. member for South Leeds had called, he would find that the revenue had not suffered to the extent which he had stated. In dry goods, which constituted the principle imports of the country, the instances of under-valuation, and in this, he thought, the hon. the Minister of Customs would bear him out, were very rare, if, indeed, there were any at all. In bonded goods, in which the Americans dealt very largely, if the rule proposed were adopted, that one buyer should pay duty upon the original cost, very great hardship might be done him. Styles changed and values changed, and goods held were often offered from 25 per cent. to 40 per cent. less than the English price, at which price they would be very dear to the buyer indeed. It would be a case of extreme hardship if he were told the duty must be paid on the original price in Great Britain, if at that price the goods could not be handled at all. Some of the hon. members claimed in the discussion, that the duty should be paid upon the value at the place of manufacture. It not unfrequently happened that the American merchant, having these goods and being unable to sell them, sent them back to Great Britain again. He had had frequent opportunities of knowing the care exercised in the Custom-houses, how, even, owing to the smallest variation in price, goods were sometimes arrested and detained until the exact value was ascertained, sometimes to the great annoyance and inconvenience of the parties themselves. He would be a very clever expert, indeed, who could have all the knowledge which it was claimed these officials ought to have. It appeared to him very absurd that American manufacturers should continue to send goods to this country so much below the cost of production. There was only one way in which he could understand this, that there must be collusion between the American manufacturers and the men to whom they shipped. If such were the case, the only cure was absolutely to seize and sell in every case, irrespective of the party to whom the goods were consigned, and to allow no influence, political or otherwise, to exonerate the guilty parties. If the goods were seriously undervalued in the invoice, through dishonest means, most assuredly they ought to be seized and sold.

Mr. CURRIER said, while he believed that goods ought to pay duty on their market value at the place where they were shipped, at the same time, he felt bound to say that many people were under a misapprehension about the valuation of those goods. He knew that, during the past summer, it was commonly reported that certain iron work, bridges, etc., were being imported into this country at an under-valuation. He had occasion, himself, to go to the Department in the interest of the parties who were importing these goods, and he thought the hon. the Minister of Customs was satisfied, as he, himself, certainly was satisfied, that the prices at which these goods had been entered, were, actually, the prices which the contractors had paid for the goods at the place where they were manufactured, Philadelphia. The price was very low, so much so that he did not think any manufacturer in this country would undertake the same kind of work. He was satisfied, from what had taken place on that occasion, that the invoices were correct, and that the actual prices paid were the prices upon which the Customs duties were charged.

MR. SCRIVER said he had listened with a good deal of surprise to the statements of the hon. member for Niagara. They were, surely, exaggerated, or else the state of things at the offices upon which he had directed his observations, certainly called for an examination and investigation. If it was a fact that, at Niagara, or any other frontier port, collectors allowed imported goods to be entered so that the duties on them only amounted to ten or even as low as five per cent., it certainly argued the existence of a state of things which called for strict investigation. Like the hon. gentleman, he, too, came from the frontier, and had occasion to know something of the course pursued at the various Custom-house offices on the frontier, and he was prepared, unhesitatingly, to say, with the hon. member for Waterloo, that the state of things in this regard had greatly improved, and that the instances in which entries of goods were made at less than their value were very much rarer than formerly. The means of information and the supervision employed with regard to this office were much better now than formerly. The hon. the Minister of Customs had already spoken of the system of inspection and comparison of invoices, which was a great improvement. The Collectors at the various frontier ports were furnished frequently with information from the head office, which enabled them to avoid errors to any great extent in this respect. So far as the frontier ports were concerned, the instances in which manufacturers were allowed to enter goods at much less than the real value were very rare indeed.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that a very large portion of the difficulty, particularly with respect to the instances alluded to by the hon. member for South Leeds, had arisen from the enormous shrinkage which had taken place in all articles in which iron entered. He had occasion to make enquiries into that matter very recently. He was astonished to find to what an extent that shrinkage had occurred. One of the largest firms reported that, on one class of articles, in four or five years, the shrinkage had gone from 53s. to 37s. stg. on certain classes of articles. This he gave as an illustration of the enormous shrinkage in iron. The other main articles, of which this firm was good enough to furnish him a list, had also shrunk in the same proportion. When the values of articles diminished in such an enormous proportion, appraisers, particularly in small ports, were often put to great difficulty to form a correct opinion of the articles imported. He was bound to say, however, that an immense number of complaints had been made with respect to over-valuation by officers of Customs, on articles imported from the United States. They had unmistakable evidence that, in some instances, there had been rather over-valuation than under-valuation, as, indeed, had been asserted by the hon. member for Cumberland. As to the point raised by the hon. member for Cumberland, the desirability of having an uniform system of appraisement, the Government were keenly alive to the importance of the subject, and, if the hon. gentleman had any suggestions to make, he had no doubt the hon. the Minister of Customs would be very glad to hear them. At the same time, the hon. member knew, that in a country with such an extensive frontier as ours, and in which there was such an immense number of ports of entry, all the vigilance that could be exercised would not prevent collectors and appraisers at those various ports valuing, in some instances, the same description of goods at different rates. The Minister of Customs had devoted an immense amount of his personal attention to guard against such errors, and had employed several additional Inspectors, men of high capacity, and great familiarity with this kind of business, whose special duty would be to introduce an uniform system of appraisalment. What he desired to call attention to, was the difficulty the Customs had to labour under in fixing values at such an immense number of ports of entry. The question of reducing these ports of entry had been discussed more than once, but a great aversion was felt by the people to having any of their facilities for business reduced. In England and other countries, the ports of entry were far more limited than in this country. The hon. member for South Leeds had, no doubt, some ground for his complaint, in some instances, in some of the smaller frontier towns, and if he would give the Minister information as to any errors of this kind having arisen, he was quite sure his hon. friend would take every possible precaution to have them rectified, and to cause an uniform appraisalment to be made.

MR. CURRIER.

Motion agreed to.

ALEXANDER FORBES' CLAIM FOR WORK ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. TUPPER moved for copies of all correspondence between the Government or Public Works Department or any official of the Intercolonial Railway and Alexander Forbes, in relation to his claim for compensation for work performed by him on the railway, and losses sustained in connection with the execution of such services. He said he wished to show the grounds on which this motion was based. Mr. Forbes claimed that he had made a verbal agreement with Mr. Carvell, the manager or superintendent of the railway in 1873, for the construction of a snow fence in the western, central and eastern divisions; that there was a plan and specification supplied by Mr. McNab, the Government engineer on the Intercolonial railway, and that the work was undertaken by him upon that plan and specification, and under that verbal contract; that, after he had engaged in the work, the construction of a snow fence apart from the ordinary fence, it was decided that it would be better the snow fence should become the ordinary fence, and directed him to remove the old fence and to replace it with a snow fence; that, under instructions from McNab, he changed the work and constructed this snow fence to the satisfaction of the departmental engineer, but that his claim for extra work involved in removing that fence, which was very considerable, was not allowed, although he was paid the contract for the work as originally made. He also claimed that he was directed to construct a snow fence at Onslow, and that after his material had been all brought to the ground, he was directed to remove and construct this fence at Lansarder, involving very considerable additional expense owing to the change. He also complained that he was instructed to move the snow fence at Port Lennox and to place it some sixteen feet further back, to widen the track; that he had not been paid for that removal, and that a large amount of material had been placed upon the ground by the orders of the Department; the work in the meantime was suspended at a considerable loss, for which he had claimed compensation, but did not obtain it. He also complained that he had sold to the Government a quantity of lumber for which he had not been paid; that when engaged with the construction of the work along various divisions, he had agreed with the Department that they should carry material at existing tariff rates; in the meantime a large advance was made upon those rates, and he was obliged to pay the increased prices, and he claimed to be refunded that amount by the Department. As Mr. Forbes paid in one year $1,000 for carriage of material, the difference in the rates would amount to a considerable sum. An appeal was made to Mr. Luttrell, but it was refused; owing to the fact of Mr. Carvell, with whom the agreement was originally made, being out of office, the officers probably did not consider themselves sufficiently acquainted with the case. Mr. Forbes also complained that he was employed to construct, in July, 1876, a large amount of fence on the Windsor Branch, had only paid him at the rate of 49c. per rood, and that they paid him according to the length of railway, along the side of which the fence ran, instead of the length of fencing, the quantity thus paid for being 241 roods less than that actually constructed, because the railway ran on the level, while the fencing crossed hills and valleys. He hoped the hon. the First Minister would verify those statements, in order that there might be a fair readjustment of the claim. He was not aware whether such a claim could be dealt with by the mode suggested by the hon. the Premier for dealing with other matters, but when one of the arbitrators was in the neighbourhood he could be instructed to receive such testimony as Mr. Forbes might be able to produce, as to the character of his claim, in order that justice might be done.

MR. MACKENZIE said that no doubt the railway officials believed they had treated Mr. Forbes justly. In regard to the term "existing rates," that would mean the rates prevailing at the time the work was carried out. He would examine the papers, which he had not yet seen, and if there was any ground for allowing an arbitration in the matter, it would be done on the usual terms.

MR. TUPPER said that, under those circumstances, he would withdraw the motion. The hon. the First Minister, on reconsideration, would, no doubt, see the great unfairness of the position which he had just taken in respect to rates. The Public Works Department made a contract with a party for the construction of a certain amount of fencing along a line of railway; at that time there was a certain rate established by the Government for the carriage of materials, and it was agreed that he should pay that rate. If the rate was doubled, the contractor might be almost ruined.

MR. GOUDGE said he desired to draw the attention of the Government to the fact that Mr. Forbes did not bear a very estimable character in the section of country in which he resided. He had been in the habit for some time past of contracting with the Government for building railway fences at lower prices than the work could be done by persons, who, perhaps, were in an equally good position to perform the work. The reason given—and the matter had been brought to his attention by very respectable men—was that Mr. Forbes went into districts, engaged in building railway fences, purchasing materials and supplies from local parties, and as soon as he had obtained payment for the contract he removed from the district, so that creditors could not reach him. These facts were brought to his (Mr. Goudge's) notice a few weeks before leaving home, and the request was made that the matter should be investigated. He had brought it to the notice of Mr. Brydges when in Ottawa. It was, therefore, desirable that the Government should examine the claim with much care and caution, for he seemed to make his profits either by obtaining compensation for extras, or by getting material and supplies from parties for which he never paid. It was desirable that the Government should be aware of the character of the man, as it was held in the county of Hants. He regretted to say Mr. Forbes had been a resident of Hants for some years, but he had recently removed, leaving his bills unpaid, and his creditors had found it impossible to reach him and procure payment for supplies they furnished him for the purpose of building the fences.

MR. MCKAY (Colchester) said he did not think the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Goudge) was justified in making such an attack. He (Mr. McKay) had known Mr. Forbes during twenty years, in fact they were boys together, and he had known him very intimately ever since in connection with building railway fences. He had never heard any complaint made against Mr. Forbes of the character referred to by the hon. member for Hants, and even if that gentleman was behind in the payment of some of his bills, that was no reflection on his character. He was informed that the Government owed Mr. Forbes $2,000, and that fact might partly be the reason why he had not been able to meet all his bills just when they became due. He was not aware that Mr. Forbes moved about from place to place for the purpose of evading payment of accounts due by him; on the contrary, he had had dealings with him and could always find him when he desired to do so. He was politically opposed to the hon. member for Hants and was rather too outspoken for his own benefit, and that might account for the attack which had been made upon him by that hon. member.

MR. TUPPER.

Motion, with leave of the House, withdrawn.

LAND CLAIM OF JOHN REID.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. RYAN moved for copies of all correspondence between the Dominion Government and the Hudson Bay Company relative to the claim of one John Reid, of the parish of High Bluff, in the Province of Manitoba, to the south-east quarter of section nineteen of township twelve of range five, west of the principal meridian in the said Province, by reason of his settlement thereon, under the homestead provisions of the Dominion Lands Acts; for which quarter-section a patent is alleged to have been granted to the Hudson Bay Company, after the said John Reid had been actually settled thereon. He said the case of Mr. Reid, referred to in the resolution, was one of peculiar hardship, and it was desirable that the attention of the Minister of the Interior, and the consideration of the House, should be directed to it. Mr. Reid left the Province of Ontario, and went to Manitoba with a large, industrious family in 1871. Before the survey of the township in which the land claimed by him was situate, he took up a quarter-section of land, under the circumstances stated in the affidavit made by him on his application for a patent, a copy of which he (Mr. Ryan) held in his hand, and would take the liberty of reading to the House:

County of West Marquette, to wit:

I, John Reid, of High Bluff, in the county of West Marquette, farmer, make oath and say:

1st. I took up the south-east quarter of section nineteen, of township twelve, of range five, west, as a homestead in the month of July, A. D. 1872 (seventy-two), before the completion of the survey of said township.

2nd. In July, 1872 (seventy-two), I put up a board shanty and began to reside upon and improve said homestead, breaking about three acres and digging a well during the summer of 1872.

3rd. During the winter of 1872-3 I got out logs for a house 18x22 feet, which I erected on said claim or quarter section in July, 1873.

4th. I have now under crop on said quarter section twenty-one acres, and about thirty are enclosed.

5th. I have resided upon and cultivated the said quarter section continuously since I took it up in July, 1872, excepting that during the winters of each year I have, with my family, moved into the woods for about three months, for the purpose of getting out fencing, building timber, etc., for said homestead.

6th. The said dwelling-house erected by me, as above stated, in July, 1873, is still on said homestead, and has attached to it a kitchen, 16x20 feet, erected in June, 1875.

7th. I have also on said quarter section two stables respectively, 20 feet square and 14x20 feet.

8th. The number of my wood lot held by me in connection with the said homestead is 3 (three), of township 11, range 5, west.

9th. I am a British subject by birth.

(Signed) <sup>his</sup> JOHN X REID.
mark.

Sworn before me at Portage La Prairie this 17th August, 1877.

(Signed) JOSEPH RYAN,
A Comm. in B.R., &c.

The affidavit was sworn to before him (Mr. Ryan), and he had a personal knowledge of the correctness of most of its contents. A couple of years ago Mr. Reid having ascertained that the Hudson Bay Co. were alleging a claim to the quarter section in question, wrote during the Session to him (Mr. Ryan), who at once went to the Department of the Interior and received the assurance from the Surveyor-General that there was no occasion for alarm; that the Government would protect Mr. Reid, also a Mr. Hall and others similarly situated; and that the Government were then in communication with the Hudson Bay Co. expressly to protect them. These assurances were at once communicated to Mr. Reid and Hall, and acting on the strength of them, Mr. Reid had gone on improving his homestead until he had now about fifteen hundred dollars, worth of improvements on it. Having performed the settlement duties required by the homestead clauses of the Dominion Lands Act, and having made the improvements described in his affidavit to the value stated, Mr. Reid, last August, applied for the patent for his homestead. In reply to his application, Mr. Reid, to his surprise and sorrow, was informed that, notwithstanding the assurances previously given him by the Department of the Interior, he was not to be protected in possession of his homestead, that it (although not originally a quarter-section belonged to the Co., under the provisions of the deed of surrender) had been patented to them in lieu of a quarter-section which they had lost, and that he would have to make such settlement as he could with the Co. He (Mr. Ryan) desired merely to state the naked facts of the case without comment, but he could not refrain from saying that it would inflict a heavy blow on the best interests of settlement in Manitoba and the North-West if the assurances of protection given Mr. Reid and others like him were not carried out. Without further remarks he would leave the matter with the House, and he hoped there would be such a full and strong expression of opinion from both sides as would convince the Government of the absolute necessity of protecting Mr. Reid in the possession of his homestead.

MR. MILLS said that the statement of the facts was, he believed, such as the hon. member for Marquette had represented. Some time shortly after the Hudson Bay Company came into possession of the lands in that particular district under the operation of the Dominion Lands Act, it was found that one of the quarter-sections allotted it was occupied by a settler. Under the provisions of the Act, they selected another quarter-section in lieu of the one so occupied, and this quarter-section was the one on which Mr. Reid resided, and on which, he believed, Mr. Reid was a resident at the time. This, however, was then unknown to the Government or the Department, and the patent was issued to the Hudson Bay Company for this particular quarter-section occupied by Mr. Reid, instead of the one that was allotted to it under the operation of the Act. This transaction took place in 1873, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in possession of the Government of the country. It was, no doubt, a mistake, but the House would readily understand that the legal title had passed entirely away from the control of the Government, and was now in possession of the Hudson Bay Company.

MR. RYAN.

MR. TUPPER: When was the legal title passed?

MR. MILLS: At the time the patent was made, in 1873. However, he might say that this and a number of other claims had been a matter of correspondence between the Department and the Hudson Bay Company. They were still open questions and undisposed of. There were certain differences which had arisen between the Government and the Hudson Bay Company with regard to the construction of certain points in the Dominion Lands Act; but, he had no doubt whatever, that when a settlement was reached, the company would make no objection to transferring this lot of Mr. Reid's and accepting some other lot of equal value in its place. He might state what the real point at issue between them was in this particular: It was provided in the Act that when certain lots which fell to the Hudson Bay Company were found to be settled upon, the company might accept other quarter-sections in lieu thereof. It was the contention of the Government that these other sections must be situated in the same township, while the company contended that they ought to be permitted, and that it was the intention of the company and of the Government of the day, that they should be permitted to select other lands in lieu of them wherever they found such lands unoccupied in the North-West Territories. This was the issue at present undisposed of, and, when they arrived at a conclusion, he had no doubt that this matter would be disposed of at the same time.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: That is a rather extravagant pretension.

MR. MILLS: I am afraid that the pretension has some grounds given to it by the correspondence of the hon. gentleman's friend.

MR. TUPPER said he hardly thought that the explanation given by the hon. the Minister of the Interior would be regarded as adequate to meet a case of such gravity as this. The object of the Government, and one of the prime objects, ought to be by every means in their power to facilitate the settlement of the North-West. Every measure that the Government could take to induce reliable settlers to go to that country was a measure properly taken in the interests of the whole Dominion. The very foundation of the settlement of the country rested on good faith being carried out between the Government and the individual settlers. The Hudson Bay Company was a very powerful corporation, having enormous rights in the North-West, and having the advantage of possessing an able representative on the floor of the House, who was known to have great influence with the Government of the day. He held that it was of the very greatest importance that the general public and the people invited to commit their future to that distant country, should have the strongest possible assurance from the Government that fair play and even-handed justice would be meted out to them, even though their personal interests came into collision with the interests of the great Hudson Bay Company. If this was not the case, the result would be most fatal to the interests of the country, because one of the greatest possible hindrances to the settlement of the country would thereby be created. Taking the statement as made by the hon. the Minister of the Interior, it amounted to this: that owing to a mistake on the part of the late Government a patent was made out conveying a quarter-section of land which, rightly, it was not in the power of the Government to convey to the Hudson Bay Company; that it was wrongly conveyed, and that it was at the time in the possession of this Mr. Reid, which possession erected a legal barrier against this patent being so given; and that the rights of this individual had not only been ignored, but that down to the present time from 1873 this individual, who was represented to have put about $1,500 worth of improvements upon this quarter-section, had been unable to get a legal title to it. Was this going to remain? Five years had already elapsed; and was this state of things going to remain for five or ten years longer until the Government could make some settlement with the Hudson Bay Company on a large number of controverted questions, now under discussion. He understood the hon. the Minister of the Interior to hold out no hope, in response to the application of the hon. member for Marquette, to this individual, who had at this moment his all probably in danger regarding this matter, that any speedy justice, whatever, would be given him; but the hon. gentleman appeared to rely upon the justice, or magnanimity, or generosity of the Hudson Bay Company at some future period, when they came to a settlement with the Government on other matters satisfactory to themselves, to kindly hand over and surrender the patent for this quarter-section, and take one instead of it somewhere else. He held that the Government was bound, if a mistake was made on the part of the Government, to redress it.

MR. MILLS: How?

MR. TUPPER: By giving compensation, adequate and abundant compensation, to the individual who had been induced to go into this distant country and settle there in the country's interest, as well as in his own, for the wrong done him by the mistake made when the quarter-section in his occupation was handed over to the Hudson Bay Company. He did not think there would be any difficulty in doing so. The statement of the hon. the Minister of the Interior, as he understood it, was that, owing to an error on the part of the late Government, they had given a patent to the Company for this quarter-section already in the possession of Mr. Reid, who, according to the hon. member for Marquette, and he believed Mr. Reid's affidavit, had made very large improvements, and probably invested everything he had in the world in improving this property. Under these circumstances, the Government was bound to give redress.

MR. MILLS: Redress? The man wants his land.

MR. TUPPER: Very well; but payment for the land would be equal to it; and if it was not in the power of the Government, owing to the patent having passed out of its hands, to restore the land, and if the Hudson Bay Company will not surrender this quarter-section of their enormous possessions, and would not at once accept a quarter-section somewhere else in that wide country instead of it, he held that the Government should not leave this man's claim in abeyance until the end of his natural life, and allow him to toil there without knowing whether he was working for the Hudson Bay Company or his own family, but was bound by every principle of justice under the circumstances to remedy the consequences of the mistake made, not by the individual, but by the Government, and grant the substantial redress which it was in their power to give, either by inducing the Hudson Bay Company to accept a quarter-section of land in some other locality, and thus leave this man in possession of his rights; or, if they could not accomplish this, to make compensation to this party by giving him a quarter-section in another place, and by compensating him for the improvements which he had made on this land, and which he (Mr. Reid) felt, under the existing circumstances, were completely in peril.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said that he had probably heard of this case, but he did not know the particulars regarding it. He, however, had no reason to doubt that they were as represented by the hon. member for Marquette. Under the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act, the Hudson Bay Company had the right to retain certain sections in every township, no matter by whom occupied in advance of the surveys,—that is sections 8 and three-quarters of section 26 in certain townships, and the whole of sections 8 and 26 in other townships. Up to this time the Company had not ejected any individual who had settled in advance of the surveys on any one of these sections to which the Company had an absolute right. It was true that it had not yet selected in lieu of them, as an arrangement with the Government in this relation was pending; but he might say that the hon. Minister for the Interior had taken a very great deal of interest in having this matter settled as speedily as possible. He hoped it would very soon be disposed of, and did not think Mr. Reid had any cause to be alarmed with regard to his quarter-section. He did not conceive that the Hudson Bay Company wished to dispossess him of the improvements which he had made, and, up to the present time, in their communications with the Government on these matters, they had never shown any disposition or expressed any wish to eject settlers from any section of land in respect of which they had that option. The hon. member for Cumberland had referred to him as being a representative of the Hudson Bay Company in that House. He begged to say in reply, that representing, as he did, the county of Selkirk on the floor of that House, he looked upon the Company merely as one of his constituents. He felt assured that the present Government, as well as that which preceded it, of which the right hon. member for Kingston was the head, would bear him out in stating that the Hudson Bay Company had never shown any grasping disposition, and had never desired anything more than they were in justice entitled to.

MR. TUPPER.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said there was no doubt that the hon. gentleman represented the county of Selkirk, and that the Hudson Bay Company was one of his constituents. He thought, however, the hon. gentleman stood exactly in the same position as the representative of Old Sarum before the Reform Bill, where the electors consisted of an old tree and the person returned was a portion of the bough. On behalf of the Hudson Bay Company, which meant the same thing as the county of Selkirk, he claimed the absolute right over the piece of land in question.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said he had not made such a statement. What he did say was that they claimed the absolute right of the sections 8 and 26. Mr. Reid's farm was not, as he understood, a portion of either of these sections, but had been patented to the company in lieu of some of the other lands found to be settled on—at least so he (Mr. Smith) understood the case.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that if the company had no absolute right to this particular piece of land, the matter stood thus: In consequence of the mistake made by the late Government, this land was given over to the Hudson Bay Company. Why then was not that mistake rectified? He did not know the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act, but he was familiar with the provisions of the Public Lands Act of the late Dominion of Canada, and one of those provisions was that the Commissioner of Crown Lands, if no reference was made to the Court, could at once rectify the error. He did not know whether there was such a clause in the Dominion Lands Act, but if not, there ought to be. For many years the course of procedure to which he referred had been in force. The present question was a very simple one. Had the Crown, at the time this land was granted to the Hudson Bay Company, the right to make that grant? If they then had, it was a question of compensation against an injury from the inadvertent exercise of that right; but if they had no right, then this man had acquired a possessing right over the property.

MR. MILLS: He was not on the books of the Department and could not, therefore, be considered a resident.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that was a very weak argument to put forward. If an emigrant settled on land with the desire of improving it, if he built a house for the occupation of himself and his family, he (Sir John A. Macdonald) did not think the mere fact of his having neglected to register his name should deprive him of the right of compensation. The statement made by the hon. member for Selkirk, that the Hudson Bay Company had not ejected settlers heretofore, was a very unsatisfactory answer to the question which had been raised. No doubt they would not like to take any decided step of that kind, because it would cause a furor in the country. To do so would tend to injure their own interests. For that reason alone they would, no doubt, be inclined to do justice and deal ever generously with settlers in their section. This Mr. Reid, however, had no assurance that his title to the property which he now occupied was secure, nor could his family look forward with certainty to inheriting it.

MR. BLAKE said it was clear this man's claim was only a moral one, but it was one which he had no doubt the Hudson Bay Company would be ready to recognize before that of any other landed proprietor. It was obviously their interest to make any reasonable arrangement they could. He did not see why this should not be dealt with as an isolated case, and dealt with at once. No doubt the Hudson Bay Company would be willing to exchange another piece of land for this. Mr. Reid did not want compensation, and he (Mr. Blake) could well understand that. Settlers who went into a new country and entered into the occupation of a piece of land, would, after they had spent their labour upon it, prefer that land to any monetary compensation which might be offered them. He thought the efforts of Parliament in the present case should be directed towards securing Mr. Reid his land; and seeing he had got into a difficulty, they must, in the interests of the country; make good his title, though it might be an imperfect one. No doubt this would be done. If he might be permitted to add one word, he would say that the observations of the hon. member for Selkirk were not necessary. Of course, it was not a very numerous constituency; it was not very much larger than the borough of Kingston, which his hon. friend on the other side of the House represented. There might, indeed, be a thousand or two thousand more souls in the county of Selkirk than in the borough of Kingston. He (Mr. Blake) felt certain, however, that the electors of Kingston would not think more of their representative for comparing them with the rotten borough of Old Sarum.

MR. SCHULTZ said that he desired to support the views of the hon. member for Marquette, in relation to the case of John Reid. It was clearly a matter of hardship that a person who had gone on land in compliance with the notice of the Land Office to those who settled in advance of the surveys, and who had complied with all the conditions since, should now be disturbed in his possession for the convenience of the Hudson Bay Company. It would appear that the quarter-section in question was not one of those granted to the Hudson Bay Company, but was given to the Company in lieu of a quarter-section to which they were entitled, and, now that the circumstances were known, the Hudson Bay Company should at once give up this settler's land, and receive some other land in lieu of it. In the county of Lisgar there were cases where parties had gone on Hudson Bay lands for various causes, and the Government had given them lands elsewhere; but, he was sorry to say that land in some cases had been given within the hay privilege belt—that the Government had no right to give, and the Hudson Bay Company should not, in honour, have received.

MR. MCKAY (Cape Breton) begged to move, in amendment to the motion of the hon. member for Marquette, "That this House do now adjourn." In making the motion he could not refrain from stating that it seemed to him the right hon. member for Kingston had been guilty of sharp practice, when he attempted to keep the hon. member for Hants from saying a few words of explanation in connection with a matter raised in the House by other hon. gentlemen.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I rise to a point of order; the hon. gentleman is alluding to a debate now closed.

MR. SPEAKER: I did not understand that the hon. gentleman alluded to a debate, but to a fact. The hon. member for Cumberland took certain means to prevent the hon. member for Hants from making a statement which he chose to make. I think, however, the hon. member for Cape Breton was wrong in saying that this was sharp practice.

MR. BLAKE.

MR. TUPPER: I am not aware that I took the slightest part in preventing the hon. member from speaking.

MR. GOUDGE: Referring to one Alexander Forbes as resident in the county of Hants, I desire to say that I know nothing of him politically, nor have I any personal knowledge of him. In fact, I did not know what his political leanings were till to-day.

MR. SPEAKER; The hon. gentleman is referring to a matter that is passed.

MR. GOUDGE said he would refer to a contract which Mr. Forbes had in Hants, and that it was not conducted by him as it ought to have been, and the parties from whom he purchased material had not been paid by him. He had thought it desirable, in the interests of the public, that this should be brought under the notice of the House. He did not bring it forward from any political feeling whatever.

MR. RYAN said he rose to a point of order: the hon. gentleman had alluded to a past debate. He also objected on the ground that the time for replying was after the hon. gentleman made the mis-statement, or when he had done speaking.

MR. SPEAKER said the latter was a different matter altogether, and the hon. gentleman could not be ruled out of order in that case.

MR. GOUDGE said he was not aware that Mr. Forbes was an elector in the county of Hants. He knew nothing of his politics, and was only influenced by a desire to promote the public interests. But probably the House, by this time, understand why the hon. members for Cumberland and Colchester are so earnest in promoting the claims of Mr. Forbes.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said that, knowing the hon. member for Lisgar was suffering from ill-health, and sympathizing with him on that account, he was determined that nothing personal should pass between them, or that there should be any repetition this Session of what had occurred on former occasions. He hoped that what he had said with regard to the particular section of land occupied by Mr. Reid would be satisfactory, especially to the hon. gentleman who was his advocate in the House. With regard to the other matter, that of the representation of the county of Selkirk, in future, he would have no hesitation in leaving it, and he did leave it with confidence, to the electors to decide the issue.

MR. TUPPER said he was very much at a loss to know why the hon. member for the county of Hants should have been at such great pains to deal with the circumstances and position of Mr. Alexander Forbes, who was said to have been unable to meet certain liabilities which he incurred in the county of Hants. It appeared that this man had claims against the Government which had not been met, and it was impossible for him to pay his creditors till that was done. He did not propose to defend the personal character of this claimant, because he knew nothing about him; but there were gentlemen in the House who, having known him for twenty years, spoke of him as an estimable character and a straightforward man, who was entitled to confidence. The hon. the First Minister himself said his claim was, at all events, entitled to fair and just consideration, and he (Mr. Tupper) did not think the hon. member for Hants had any grounds for taking up the cause of Mr. Forbes' creditors so zealously without giving any heed to the claims which he preferred against the Government.

Motion for adjournment of the House, withdrawn.

MR. RYAN said that, after the universal expression of opinion given by hon. members as to the necessity for protecting settlers in the Province from which he came, and after the assurances he had received from the Minister of the Interior and the hon. member for Selkirk, he did not think it necessary to add one word to his former remarks. It seemed to have been taken for granted that the claim made by Mr. Reid was one of equity' but he was of opinion that it was also well founded in law. There could be no doubt that Mr. Reid was settled on the land which he occupied before the survey was made, and he (Mr. Ryan) thought it would be found, when the correspondence was forthcoming, that he had taken steps to signify to the office at Winnipeg his desire to get it registered.

MR. MACKENZIE said the correspondence was not yet finished and was not in a condition to be brought before the House, and he would ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw his motion.

MR. RYAN said that, after the assurances which he had received from the leader of the Government, he would not press his motion.

Motion (Mr. Ryan) withdrawn.

BANK OF LIVERPOOL BILL.—[BILL No. 22.]

(Mr. Forbes.)

SENATE AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

Amendments made by Senate to said Bill, read the first and second times, and agreed to.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

BROCKVILLE & OTTAWA & CANADA CENTRAL RAILWAY AMALGAMATION BILL.—[BILL No. 9.]

(Mr. Galbraith)

THIRD READING.

MR. GALBRAITH moved:

"That the amendments made in Committee of the Whole to the Bill No. 9 to amend the Acts incorporating the Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company, and the Canada Central Railway Company, and to provide for the amalgamation of the said Companies, be now concurred in."

MR. McDOUGALL (South Renfrew) moved in amendment:

"That the said amendments be not now concurred in, but that the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to amend the same, by providing for the issue of stock in the amalgamated Companies to the Muniicipalities of Horton, Admaston, and the Village of Renfrew, in exchange for the Canada Central Railway stock, now held by them, at the fair value of the latter stock."

He said he had occasion to discuss at some length in Committee of the Whole an amendment similar to this, and, therefore, he would not detain the House with any lengthy explanation of it. It might be said, on first sight, that he was desirous of obtaining for the municipalities named an unfair preference, but when it was considered that almost the entire stock of the two companies, as they now existed, was held by the same individuals, there could be no injustice done by his motion. If there were different stockholders apart from these municipalities and the main stockholders who held a larger portion of the stock, then, on the face of it, it would be unfair that these municipalities should have what would appear to be an unjust preference. He might be referred to what occurred in the Railway Committee on this subject, and told that what had been carried there, after due deliberation, ought to be endorsed here; but for the purpose of assisting the promoter to bring the Bill before the House, he waived his objection before the Railway Committee, with the understanding, he might almost say, not of the promoter, but with the legal gentleman who took charge of the Bill, that they should fully discuss before the House the claims he set forth for these municipalities to have their stock issued under the amalgamated companies at its par value. Now, although it was agreed that railway companies had the right to come before the House for legislation, they must all admit that, if an error was made, the railway companies themselves were the least likely to suffer under such legislation. And, if a railway company, represented by a legal gentleman, neglected to put before this House information which would warrant them in taking what appeared on the surface to be the rights of these municipalities—rights which they properly possessed—if they failed to give the House that information, he thought they could not blame them for attempting to prevent the companies from getting such legislation as, under other circumstances, they might fairly be entitled to. He hoped the House, in voting upon this question, would not forget that nearly all the stock was held by the two companies, although, of course, there was a small proportion of stock held by others, as well as by those municipalities, and he saw no reason why they should be treated differently, because he thought it was very likely that some attempt might be made to interfere with the rights of those stockholders, just as much as the rights of the municipalities mentioned. But if they recollected that almost all the stock was held by those two companies, and it made no difference to them what became of their stock, as long as they reduced the rest of their stock, they must conclude it was just and proper in issuing amalgamated stock, that no reduction should be made. There should be no attempt made to prove that the municipalities holding stock in the Canada Central Railway had not the same rights as all other persons holding Canada Central Railway stock, no matter whether those municipalities made a good or a bad bargain at the time they made their purchase; they had the stock now, and were entitled to everything that would flow from it. He had full confidence in leaving this matter in the hands of the House, and expected from them a fair consideration of the merits of the case before them.

MR. McDUGALL.

MR. JONES (South Leeds) said he thought the motion that had been made was a very just one; but there were other parties in the same position as those municipalities, who had not been treated in a fair and just manner. He thought the legislation coming before the House this Session was most extraordinary legislation, and particularly this Bill, which he thought was most unjust to many stockholders and many original bondholders. This was, as far as he could make out, the object of the Bill, for it would take a Philadelphia lawyer to make it out. He did not think it should be placed before the House until it had been reprinted; he could not make head or tail of it. He would, therefore, content himself with stating the case with regard to these parties. The Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company were obliged, by an Act of the Ontario Legislature, passed in 1868, to take 25c. on the dollar for their original bonds. Now they come to the Dominion Parliament asking that the Brockville and Ottawa Railway should be amalgamated with the Canada Central Railway, with power to issue $6,500 per mile, and certain powers to mortgage under certain deeds, which would give them the power to write off in toto the original stock taken at 25c. on the dollar by the original bondholders. But what further did they ask? They had received about a million of dollars from these municipalities and from Brockville, and about 350,000 acres of public land, and now they asked to be amalgamated. He did not think such resolution was just on the part of this House. He would mention also that this Bill should not pass to its third reading until it had been reprinted. In its present state no one who did not belong to the legal profession could possibly understand it, and perhaps not one out of fifty belonging to the profession.

MR. LAFLAMME said the hon. member for Leeds was quite in error if he believed there was any alteration whatever made relative to the position of the bondholders or stockholders. The only feature to which the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. McDougall) objected was this: He claimed that the municipalities in which he was interested, and which held original stock to the amount of $48,000 in the Canada Central Railway, should be affected by no reduction of the original par value of the stock as made by this arrangement entered into by the two companies. This was the only objection the hon. gentleman offered to the arrangement, and he (Mr. Laflamme) could not see where the objection lay. As far as the remarks of the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Jones) went, he might say there was nothing in the arrangement that touched the position of the respective creditors of the company; nothing could be done that affected their rights. All the guarantees they possessed remained as they were, with the additional guarantees accruing from the transfer of the one company to the other. It certainly could not entail any loss whatever to them. With respect to the objection of his hon. friend from South Renfrew to the reduction of the stock, this was an arrangement made by the two companies; they had united their respective assets, and they declared that, after a reduction had been effected on the stock of the Brockville and Ottawa Railway, then the company was obliged to accept a proportionate reduction of the respective values of the two railways. The interest upon the amalgamation of the two companies would be paid to the stockholders according to this valuation of the stock; consequently, he could not see the objection, or the reason of the objection, of the hon. member for South Leeds. If the stock was worth anything, the interest or dividend would be paid proportionately. As far as interfering with any of the rights of any of the creditors was concerned, he could positively assure the hon. member for South Leeds that there was not a word in any of the provisions of this Bill which could in any way affect or concern them. On the contrary, it was stated that before the company entered into any new engagements, resulting from the authorization which they claimed under this Bill, before assuming any obligation whatever, no such obligation could affect any particle of the property of the railway before the actual creditors, bondholders, or others, were paid absolutely and completely. It would be only after the actual existing creditors were satisfied in full, that the amalgamated company would be entitled to grant or give bonds to affect the railway after amalgamation.

MR. HAGGART said there could be no possible objection to the Bill. It proposed simply the amalgamation of two roads into one concern for the purpose of managing it under a Board of Directors. But there was a good deal in the amendment moved by the hon. member for South Renfrew, when one came to consider the position of these two roads proposed to be amalgamated, the Canada Central and the Brockville and Ottawa Railway. Nineteen-twentieths of the stock and bonds of each of these roads were owned by one individual. The hon. the Minister of Justice, in making his statement, said that the assets of the two companies had been arranged between the two by a mutual agreement which came here to be ratified by Parliament, and that an equal adjustment had been found on which to base the proposed Act of Parliament. That was the very principle to which the hon. member for South Renfrew objected. The hon. member said he had no means of judging whether an equitable arrangement had been prepared between the two parties. No schedule or statement of arrangement had been shown before the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraphs, upon which that was founded. What the hon. member had said was, that this legislation proposed to lessen the position which the municipalities hitherto had held in this concern, on grounds which he had no means of finding were correct or not. He (Mr. Haggart) held that the principle urged by his hon. friend from South Renfrew was a correct one, that, when a public company came here for legislation of this kind, it should be prepared to show the schedule upon which such arrangement was made, and that schedule should be subject to the criticism of the stockholders. These gentlemen had not furnished a schedule, and there was no means of arriving at a conclusion as to whether the arrangement was correct or not. The argument used by the hon. the Minister of Justice was, that the Canada Central Railway Company and the Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company, would each take care of its interests. But when nineteen-twentieths of the stock in each company was owned by one individual, there could be no difficulty on the score of conflicting interests. The other objection taken by his hon. friend from South Leeds was, that the bondholders had not been properly looked after in this Bill. The original bondholders had been forced by an Act of the Ontario Legislature to accept just such legislation as was proposed here, supposed to have the consent of the bondholders or the parties interested, to reduce their bonds 25 per cent. What a farce it was to ask the consent of three-fourths of the stockholders. Here was a man who owned nineteen-twentieths of the stock, and all that was necessary was to obtain his consent and to wipe out the remaining stockholders altogether. It did not even require a majority of the stockholders interested. These parties who originally owned the mortgage bonds on this road were compelled by an Act of the Ontario Legislature to take stock in the road to the extent of 25c. on the dollar. Here, now, was a proposition by which $20,000 of bonds might be issued per mile and placed on the two roads, which might, at any time, exercise the powers given them under this Act, extraordinary powers, powers which were generally taken in a railway charter, and shut out these stockholders. The proposition of his hon. friend was that the people who really built this road were the municipalities through which it passed; they advanced $800,000 from the counties which he represented, and $300,000 from Brockville and Elizabethtown; while the parties who had advanced a lot of iron for the road and had received secured bonds in return, had, by continually working for legislation of this kind, eventually legislated the municipalities out of any interest in the road whatever. They made an arrangement by which the debt of the municipalities was assured by the company, which lost to the municipalities all their claim for surplus money of the Province which was to be divided among the different municipalities. It was right that this Legislature should see that the municipalities which originally built that road should be fully protected. The bondholders should not be placed in a position of being deprived altogether of their security, of which already 25c. in the dollar had been legislated away by the extraordinary powers conferred under this Act.

Mr. HAGGART.

Mr. GALBRAITH said, with respect to the position in which the companies had been in the past, and the one in which they wished to be placed now, he did not think anything would be gained by a long discussion. By the Act of the Ontario Legislature, passed in 1868, a large reduction was made in the securities on the Brockville & Ottawa Railway Company. Those parties who had been spoken of as holding a large portion of bonds and stock in the company, had advanced a great deal of iron, and taken bonds of the company as security. They found out, ultimately, when these bonds and the interest accruing on them made an indebtedness of some $600,000, that it would be impossible for the road to pay the interest on that indebtedness, or, at any time, relieve itself of any portion of the bonds. These parties came and asked that these bonds be largely reduced, and converted into ordinary stock of the company, bearing no interest, knowing there was no other way in which the road could be saved from insolvency. This Bill did not intend to interfere with the present proposition of the company in the least. The amendment which the hon. member for South Leeds intended to move, would give these bonds their original position as bonds of the company bearing interest, placing the company back in the insolvent position from which it was relieved in 1868. With respect to the charges made against these parties who held securities of the Company, the people of Canada ought, rather, to sympathise with them, and relieve to the utmost of their power those men who had suffered severe loss from advancing capital to build our railroads. Ultimately, taking advantage of the Act under which they had constructed that road, they were enabled by an action in the Court in Chancery to claim a certain amount of land for the building of the road. They made an arrangement with the company at that time, by which the indebtedness of the municipalities to the Ontario Government was cancelled, which debt would, undoubtedly, have had to be paid, the only question being whether it could have been paid or not. However, it was finally cancelled, and there was no reason now to find fault with the action. He (Mr. Galbraith) had a great deal of experience in the management of that institution for a number of years before it obtained that relief. Nothing could have happened more in the interests of the municipalities, than to be altogether relieved of their connection with the railway at that time. With respect to the motion now before the House, he thought it very unfair to ask that the issue of stock to parties holding 425 shares in the road should retain its par value, while other parties who had really advanced a good deal of capital by which the road had been built, had agreed to reduce their stock. These parties held some 12,000 shares, as against 425 shares. It would not injure the municipalities in the least when that reduction was made pro rata; should there, at any time, be a dividend, it would be simply on the reduced shares. One of the principal objections of the hon. member for Renfrew was that the municipalities were placed in an unfair position with respect to claims on these railways. The hon. member for North Leeds wanted the stock of the Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company to be made very much better than it now was, by converting it into ordinary bonds of the Company. Consequently, there existed a large issue between them. The House would, at once, see the justice and propriety of retaining the Bill as it now stood before the House, without allowing any of those amendments to take place.

Mr. WHITE (North Renfrew) said the objection of the hon. member for South Renfrew was, that certain municipalities in his county had aided in the construction of a portion of the Canada Central, and that their position should remain as it was at present. The hon. gentleman objected, and he (Mr. White) thought the objection a valid one, that the stock be reduced below its present value. He (Mr. White) thought that was fair and reasonable, and did not see why the promoter of the Bill should object to it. It might be quite true, as the hon. member for North Lanark had stated, that the municipalities of Lanark, Renfrew, and Brockville, and Elizabethtown, had been relieved of their indebtedness to the Ontario Government, in respect to the Municipal Loan Fund. But the hon. gentleman had forgotten that in the arrangement which was made for the wiping out of that Municipal Loan Fund indebtedness, a large sum of money had been distributed to those municipalities which had not become indebted to the Municipal Loan Fund. The amount which would have been paid to the municipalities of Lanark, Renfrew, Brockville and Elizabethtown, was forfeited on account of the aid they had rendered those railways. He did not propose to discuss this matter at great length. The mover of the amendment had, he thought, very fairly stated the position in which the municipalities would be placed by the Bill now proposed by the hon. member for North Lanark, and he thought there was no injustice whatever in asking that these municipalities retain their present position.

Amendment (Mr. McDougall, South Renfrew), negatived on the following division:—

YEAS:

Messieurs

Baby,	Lanthier,
Barthe,	McDonald (Cape Breton),
Benoit,	McDougall (Renfrew),
Blanchet,	McKay (Colchester),
Bolduc,	Macmillan,
Bourbeau,	McCallum,
Bowell,	McQuade,
Casey,	Malouin,
Cimou,	Masson,
Costigan,	Methot,
Desjardins,	Mitchell,
Dewdney,	Monteith,
Dugas,	Montplaisir,
Farrow,	Quimet,
Ferguson,	Palmer,
Flesher,	Pinsonneault,
Fraser,	Platt,
Gibbs (Ontario North),	Robinson,
Gibbs (Ontario South),	Rouleau,
Gill,	Ryan,
Haggart,	Schultz,
Harwood,	Wallace (S. Norfolk),
Hurteau,	White (Hastings),
Jones (Leeds),	White (Renfrew)—50.
Kirkpatrick,
Langevin,

NAYS:

Messieurs

Appleby,	Hall,
Archibald,	Higinbotham,
Bain,	Holton,
Béchar,	Horton,
Bernier,	Huntington,
Bertram,	Irving,
Biggar,	Jetté,
Blackburn,	Jones (Halifax),
Blain,	Killam,
Borden,	Kirk,

MR. WHITE.

Borron,	Laflamme,
Bourassa,	Lajoie,
Bowman,	Landerkin,
Boyer,	Langlois,
Brouse,	Laurier,
Brown,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Buell,	Macdonald (Centre Toronto),
Bunster,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Burk,	Mackenzie,
Burpee (St. John),	McCrane,
Burpee (Sunbury),	McGregor,
Carmichael,	McIntyre,
Cartwright,	McNab,
Casgrain,	Metcalfe,
Charlton,	Mills,
Cheval,	Norris,
Christie,	Oliver,
Church,	Paterson,
Cockburn,	Perry,
Coffin,	Pettes,
Cook,	Pickard,
Coupal,	Ray,
Davies,	Robillard,
Dawson,	Ross (East Durham),
Delorme,	Ross (Prince Edward),
De St. Georges,	Rymal,
Devlin,	Scatcherd,
Dymond,	Scriver,
Fiset,	Shibley,
Fleming,	Short,
Forbes,	Sinclair,
Fréchette,	Skinner,
Galbraith,	Smith (Peel),
Geoffrion,	Smith (Selkirk),
Gibson,	Snider,
Gillies,	Taschereau,
Gillmor,	Thompson (Haldimand),
Goudge,	Trow,
Greenway,	Wallace (Albert),
Guthrie,	Young—101.
Hagar,

MR. PALMER moved in amendment.

"That the report be not now received, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend the same by striking out clause 13 of the Bill."

He said that under that clause the amalgamated company could make contracts for the building of a considerable length of railway, and yet, under that section of the Bill, part of the company's property would not be answerable for the liability so created. Such legislation would be disastrous to the welfare of the country, and he protested against its adoption.

MR. LAFLAMME said the only principle that was involved in this section was, that the company might contract for the building of the extension of the western section, without the eastern section becoming liable for the debts thus incurred. The clause added nothing, and involved no new principle. There could be no reasonable objection raised to it, for there was no violation of any sound principle of legislation or of equity.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Amendments read the first and second times and agreed to.

MR. GALBRAITH moved :

‘ That the Bill be now read the third time.’

MR. JONES (South Leeds) moved in amendment :

‘ That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to add to clause 9, the following :—

‘ That the holders of stock in the Brockville & Ottawa Railway Company representing original ordinary bonds with the overdue coupons of said Railway Company, and converted by clause 3 of the Act chapter 44, 31st Victoria, of the Province of Ontario, entitled: ‘ An Act for the conversion of the ordinary bonds and old stock of the Brockville & Ottawa Railway Company into reduced new stock, and for other purposes,’ into the new paid-up stock in the capital of said Railway Company, at the rate of twenty-five cents on the dollar, shall be placed in the position of ordinary original bondholders by the transfer of bonds out of the twenty thousand dollars issued per mile now by this Act to be made, to the extent of the stock now held by them, and which was taken for original ordinary bonds at twenty-five cents on the dollar, under and by virtue of the before mentioned Act, 31st Victoria, chapter 44, of the Province of Ontario.’

He said the Bill would have the effect of creating a very great monopoly through this section of the country. This was not a large company spread over England or the whole of Canada and the United States, with stockholders at many points, but it consisted of a single firm in England which had supplied some iron for the road. There was no reservation in the Bill as to which should be charged for freight or passengers. The measure would be one which would do great injustice to the people of this section of country, and that would be found by experience.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Amendments read the first and second time and agreed to.

Bill read the third time and passed.

LA SOCIETE DE CONSTRUCTION DU COMTE D'HOCHELAGA BILL.

[BILL No. 48.]

(Mr. Jetté.)

THIRD READING.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

Bill ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

Bill read the third time and passed.

RELIEF OF HUGH HUNTER BILL.

[BILL No. 58.]

(Mr. McCarthy.)

THIRD READING.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

MR. MCCARTHY moved the third reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to on the following division:—

YEAS :

Messieurs

Archibald,	Little,
Bain,	Macdonald (Centre
Bertram,	Toronto),
Biggar,	Macdougall (East
Blain,	Elgin),
Borden,	McDougall (Renfrew
Borron,	MacKay (Cape Bre-
Bowell,	ton),
Bowman,	McKay (Colchester)
Brouse,	Maekenzie,
Buell,	Macmillan,
Burk,	McCallum,
Burpee (St. John),	McCraney,
Campbell,	McGregor,
Carmichael,	McNab,
Charlton,	Metcalfe,
Christie,	Mills,
Church,	Monteith,
Cockburn,	Norris.
Coffin,	Oliver,
Cook,	Palmer,
Davies,	Paterson,
Dawson,	Pettes,
DeCosmos,	Pickard,
Dymond,	Platt,
Farrow,	Plumb,
Ferris,	Ray,
Fleming,	Robinson,
Flesher,	Rochester,
Fraser,	Ross (East Durham),
Gibbs (Ontario North),	Ross (West Middlesex)
Gibbs (Ontario South),	Ross (Prince Edward)
Gillies,	Rymal,
Gillmor,	Scatcherd,
Goudge,	Schultz,

Greenway,
Guthrie,
Hagar,
Hall,
Higinbotham,
Horton,
Kirk,
Kirkpatrick,
Landerkin,
Shibley,
Sinclair,
Skinner,
Snider,
Thompson (Haldimand)
Wallace (Albert),
White (East Hastings).—84.

NAYS :

Messieurs

Baby,	Jones (Halifax),
Barthe,	Lafamme,
Béchar, d,	Lajoie,
Benoit,	Langevin,
Bernier,	Latglois,
Blanchet,	Lanther,
Bolduc,	Laurier,
Bourassa,	Macdonald (Cornwall)
Bourbeau,	McDonald (Cape
Boyer,	Breton),
Brown,	McDougall (Three
Casgrain,	Rivers),
Cheval,	McIntyre,
Cimon,	McIsaac,
Costigan,	Malouin,
Coupal,	Masson,
Delorme,	Méthot,
Desjardins,	Montplaisir,
De St. Georges,	Ouimet,
Devlin,	Perry,
Dugas,	Pinsonneault,
Fiset,	Pope (Compton),
Forbes,	Robillard,
Fréchette	Robitaille
Geoffrion,	Rouleau,
Gibson,	Roy,
Gill,	Short,
Harwood,	Smith (Peel)
Holton,	St. Jean
Hurteau,	Taschereau,
Irving,	Wade.—61.
Jetté,

Bill read the third time, and passed on the same division.

RELIEF OF GEORGE FROTHINGHAM
JOHNSTON BILL.—[Bill No. 59.]

(Mr. Fraser.)

THIRD READING.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

Bill ordered to be reported, with an amendment.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

Amendment read the first and second times and concurred in.

MR. FRASER moved the third reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to on a division.

MR. MCCARTHY.

PRIVATE BILLS.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bill was considered in Committee of the Whole, reported, read the third time and passed :

Bill (No. 19) Respecting the Port Whitby Harbour Company.—(Mr. Burk.)

MONTREAL AND CITY OF OTTAWA
JUNCTION RAILWAY BILL.

[BILL No. 57.]

(Mr. McNab.)

House resolved itself into Committee on the said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

MR. PLUMB said that the hon. member who had charge of the Bill (Mr. McNab) had not produced a list of the shareholders of the company, which had been requested in Committee. He thought that the request was reasonable.

MR. LANGEVIN said he had wished to have this brought before the Committee, but he had ascertained that the Bill had been carefully considered by the other House, and that a large majority of the Committee there was satisfied with the Bill as it stood. Under the circumstances, therefore, he would not press the matter, but would leave to the majority the responsibility of passing this measure.

MR. PLUMB said that, if there were sound and sufficient reasons why this list should not be produced, of course he was unable to press the point. He merely wanted to call the attention of the House to the fact. There must be some strong reason for keeping the names of the shareholders back. Those who objected to this reasonable request would, of course, be prepared to assume the responsibility, and no further opposition to the Bill would be offered by him. He presumed that the Government was fully aware of all the circumstances, and that it assumed all the consequent responsibility.

MR. OLIVER said the promoter of the Bill was only asked for the stock list the previous day before the Committee, and it was impossible for him to get it ready in so short a time. He might state, also, that it was not usual, so far as he knew, to ask for a stock list when the charter was merely extended and amended.

MR. PLUMB said that, on a previous occasion when a Bill of this kind was before the House, the charter was produced and scrutinized by the members of the Committee. If the hon. member for Glengarry would assure them that the share list was so extensive that the names could not be copied in three days, the explanation made by the hon. member for North Oxford would be accepted. Until such an answer was given, he (Mr. Plumb) must say the omission was a very grave one, and formed a precedent which he thought his friends on the opposite side would be the first to violate when another Bill of a similar character was brought before the House. He could not understand why, when legislation of this sort was asked for, the House should not be put in possession of all the facts connected with the organization of a road such as this.

MR. WHITE (East Hastings) said when the Bill was before the Committee there was an understanding that the stockholders' names should be submitted. He had no objection to the time for the completion of the road being extended to six years longer, but he was of opinion that eight years was long enough to build eighty-four miles of road. Those persons who, according to agreement had paid bonuses towards its completion, had not yet got anything in return; but, as the promoters of the Bill said they really required six years longer in which to accomplish the work: he would not oppose their wishes, but would withdraw any objection he might have made.

MR. COOK said the hon. member for East Hastings had alleged that, so long as the present Government remained in power, there would be a depression. He thought the hon. gentleman had better withdraw his objection. The Government would have another five years' tenure of office, and, according to the hon. gentleman, nothing would be done towards the completion of the road during that period. The hon. gentleman seemed to be the champion of those municipalities which had already paid their money, but he (Mr. Cook) would ask him if he thought the construction of the road would be advanced without such legislation as this.

MR. WHITE said he had withdrawn his objection. He had not, during the present Session, either in Parliament or out of it, said anything about the Government being the cause of the depression which existed. One thing he was certain of, and that was: that the hon. gentleman would not get back again by spending $28,000 as he had done before. The less, therefore, the hon. gentleman said about the matter, the better. Any gentleman who had to buy his way into Parliament should not be the first to get up in this way; it ill became him to say one word about the matter. He (Mr. White) said not one word which might lead any one to call him the champion of those municipalities, but he did think when parties paid money as a free gift towards the construction of the road, and still continued to pay taxes, as well as the interest, on the money already given, they should get the road as soon as possible. They did not expect any stock, nor did they seek their money back; all they wanted was the use of the road. Fourteen years was, certainly, a long time to construct 84 miles of road, and, if the present Government could not push things on quicker than that, it would be a long time before the Canadian Pacific Railway was built. He would just say, in conclusion, that he thought the hon. member for North Simcoe would have to do all he possible could before he was through with his little game.

MR. COOK said the hon. member for North Simcoe had played that game three times, and did not receive any of the Canadian Pacific Railway money towards his expenditure. He would like to ask the hon. member for Hastings how much of that Canadian Pacific Railway fund he had had to secure his election. He thought it ill became an hon. gentleman to mention anything about the expenditure of money in this way, after the legislation made in the House on former occasions, especially when he pointed out that the expenditure of the member for North Simcoe was not that candidate's own money, but came from Sir Hugh Allan's fund.

MR. BLANCHET: I would like to know what relation the question of the Simcoe election has to the matter before the House?

MR. BOWELL said he was not present at the Committee meeting, neither did he know what reasons were given why the list of stockholders, which was promised had not been laid before the House. If that promise was made, the hon. member for Glengarry should certainly have vouchsafed some explanation as to why he had not kept that promise.

MR. HOLTON said the hon. member for Charlevoix asked the hon. member for Glengarry, in Committee, to bring down the share list, but no understanding to that effect was arrived at. The Committee did not think it necessary to enjoin this, nor had he (Mr. Holton) in the course of his experience, extending over a considerable number of years, known such a demand to be made in the case of small roads. In the case of large roads, the Canada Southern for instance, information of that kind was given to the House, but there were no special reasons for that course to be followed in the present case.

MR. BOWELL said this was one of that peculiar class of roads, which, so far as the stockholders were concerned, was more nominal than real. It was a scheme probably for the purpose of securing a road with Municipal and Governmental aid and there could not be a list of shareholders of that bona fide character which, generally speaking, should exist in such undertakings. He did not ask that the time should be reduced, if the promoters of the Bill desired it to be extended, for the completion of the road, nor did he advocate the production of the share list. He wished merely to say in defence of his hon. friend from East Hastings that the hon. member for North Simcoe was evidently not acquainted with the facts connected with that gentleman's election, or he would not have placed himself in the position he had. It might, perhaps, be information for him to know that his (Mr. Bowell's) hon. friend was opposed very strenuously by the Government of the day. He could not, therefore, have used public money improperly, because the Government were not at all likely to supply him with funds either from Sir Hugh Allan or any one else to assist him in his election; in fact, they did what they could to keep him out of the House. He made this explanation with the view of showing to a millionaire, who could squander $20,000 or $30,000 to gain a seat, that he could not attack another hon. gentleman for a supposed expenditure of money received from a supposed source—a source which comprised his most bitter and vindictive enemies on the occasion of his election.

MR. COOK.

MR. PLUMB said he did not agree with the hon. member for Chateauguay, that this Bill was of so simple a character as he would lead the House to suppose. He believed it would introduce a radical change, for it permitted a certain company to issue bonds and preferential stock. It seemed to him very strange that his hon. friend who knew how much depended upon legislation of this kind, should say that the Bill was of a simple character. He could not understand why the list of shareholders should not be insisted upon; there must be some weighty reason for withholding it. At this late period of the Session he had every desire to accelerate the business of the House and he did not take the objection to the Bill expressed by his hon. friend from East Hastings, because he was not acquainted with the position of the municipalities in reference thereto. In constructing a road of this sort, he thought it desirable that the promoters should have the extension they sought for. Their request was a very natural one, but he could not see why the hon. member for Glengarry should preserve such a mysterious silence. There was no reason why a list of the shareholders should not be submitted. If there were no shareholders, it would be easy for the hon. gentleman to say so; and, if on the other hand, the names were so numerous as to require a considerable time to allow of their being copied, that would readily be granted.

MR. ROCHESTER did not think it would make any material difference whether the list was submitted or not. The object of the Bill was simply to place the company in a position to complete the road, and in that way the municipalities referred to would be benefitted. There had been for a number of years a depression which was experienced, not only by individuals, but by municipalities. The Bill then would have the effect of enabling them to complete this road as soon as possible.

MR. PLUMB said the House merely wanted to know who composed the company. They were not told by the promoter of the Bill, and so were legislating entirely in the dark. The only thing they knew was that there was a charter on the books, and that a certain amount of work had been done. Why, then, did not the hon. member for Glengarry, instead of preserving this sphinx-like and mysterious silence, rise and give the House the information desired. The request was a very reasonable one, and to refuse it was to treat the House with want of respect.

MR. ROCHESTER said that, when a Bill of this description had passed through the Railway Committee and the Senate as well, he did not think there need be so much cavilling about it.

Bill ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

Bill read the third time and passed.

BETTER TRANSLATION OF THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT.

(Mr. Fréchet.)

COMMITTEE APPOINTED.

Order for resuming adjourned debate on Mr. Fréchet's motion, that a Special Committee be appointed to consider the question of a better translation in French of "The British North America Act, 1867;" said Committee to be composed of Messrs. Fréchet, Béchar, Jetté, Taschereau, Baby, Mousseau and Casey, read.

MR. MITCHELL asked for explanations with respect to the motion.

MR. FRÉCHETTE said the matter was discussed at some length the other day, and he then gave his reasons in support of the motion.

MR. LANGEVIN said he was absent when the motion was discussed, and if no reasons were now given for the motion he must vote against it.

MR. FRÉCHETTE said that, if he was not mistaken, the whole of his remarks had been reported in the Hansard.

MR. BLANCHET said he thought the discussion had closed the other day, when the hon. member for South Bruce (Mr. Blake) stated that very likely in a short time a Commission would be appointed by the Government for the codification of our laws, and then it would be competent for the Government to appoint some gentlemen to see that the translation of the laws was properly made.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said he had the pleasure of hearing the speech of the mover of the resolution, and, therefore, he was not in the same position as several other hon. members. But he must say that he did not hear the hon. member for Lévis give any satisfactory reasons why they should appoint a Select Committee to revise the translation of the British North America Act. They knew that the appointment of a Select Committee involved more or less of expense. They had had several Select Committees appointed during this Parliament, and, according to the return brought down the other day, these Committees had cost the country a good round sum of money. Perhaps this would not cost so much, but, nevertheless, it would cost something; and the question was, would the result of this Committee justify any expense being incurred? Would the result of getting this Act translated by political partisans—because it would be nothing more nor less,—justify any expense at all? We had French translators, and if they could not adequately perform their duties, it was the duty of the Government to dismiss them and get others; it should not be left to some political partizan of the House to air their knowledge of that beautiful language, and to translate this important Act of Parliament. But it must be remembered that this was only to please the fancy of hon. gentlemen opposite, because, as was said the other night by the hon. member for South Bruce, if the translation of this Act of Parliament altered the word Dominion to Puissance, or the old French word Dominion was retained, it would have no effect upon the Act, because it was an English Act of Parliament, and an English Statute. And, therefore, whatever translation hon. gentlemen opposite or their Committee determined upon, would have no effect upon the Act, and every hon. gentleman on that Committee would have the opportunity of translating the Act as it pleased him.

MR. MACKENZIE: Hear, hear.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said the hon. gentleman was, he knew, competent to do a great many things; but he (Mr. Kirkpatrick) doubted his ability to perform that work. He certainly must dissent from the motion, as he failed to see how any practical good could flow from it. He thought that a proper translation could be made when the laws of the Dominion were consolidated and codified.

MR. MITCHELL asked if the Government supported this motion; and, if so, why they did not take it in hand themselves, instead of shirking their responsibility by referring it to a Committee?

Question proposed and motion agreed to on the following division:

YEAS:

Messieurs

Archibald,	Jones (Halifax),
Béchar, d,	Killam,
Benoit,	Kirk,
Bernier,	Laflamme,
Borden,	Lajoie,
Borron,	Landerkin,
Bourassa,	Laurier,
Brown,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Buell,	Macdonald (Centre
Burpee (St John),	Toronto),
Carmichael,	Macdougall (East
Cartwright,	Elgin),
Casgrain,	McDougall (South Ren-
Charlton,	frew),
Cheval,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Christie,	Mackenzie,
Church,	McCraney,
Cockburn,	McGregor,

MR. KIRKPATRICK.

Cook,	McNab,
Davies,	Metcalfe,
Delorme,	Méhot,
De. St. Georges,	Mills,
Devlin,	Montplaisir,
Dymond,	Norris,
Fiset,	Oliver,
Fleming,	Ouimet,
Forbes,	Paterson,
Fréchette,	Picard,
Galbraith,	Pouliot,
Geoffrion,	Richard,
Gibson,	Ross (Durham),
Gillies,	Ross (Middlesex),
Gillmor,	Ross (Prince Edward),
Goudge,	Rouleau,
Guthrie,	Rymal,
Hall,	Scatcherd,
Higinbotham,	Skinner,
Holton,	Smith (Peel),
Horton,	Snider,
Huntington,	Taschereau,
Irving,	Trow.—80.
Jetté,

NAYS:

Messieurs

Appleby,	Lanthier,
Bertram,	Little,
Biggar,	Macdonald (Kingston),
Bianchet,	McDonald (Cape
Bolduc,	Breton),
Bourbeau,	McKay (Colchester),
Bowell,	Macmillan,
Brooks,	McCallum,
Burk,	McQuade,
Burpee (Sunbury),	Malouin,
Caron,	Masson,
Cimon,	Mitchell,
Costigan,	Monteith,
Coupal,	Orton,
Currier,	Pettes,
Cuthbert,	Pinsonneault,
Daoust,	Platt,
Desjardins,	Plumb,
Dugas,	Pope (Compton),
Farrow,	Robillard,
Ferguson,	Robitaille,
Ferris,	Rochester,
Gibbs (Ontario North),	Roy,
Gibbs (Ontario South),	Ryan,
Gill,	Schultz,
Haddow,	Scriven,
Hagar,	Sinclair,
Harwood,	Wade,
Hurteau,	Wallace (Albert),
Jones (Leeds),	Wallace (Norfolk),
Kirkpatrick,	White (East Hastings),
Langevin,	White (Renfrew).—81.

WINTER NAVIGATION OF THE ST. LAWRENCE.

ADJOURNED DEBATE.

Order for the consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Fréchette—

“That in the opinion of this House it is desirable that the Government should take steps to test the possibility of navigating the St. Lawrence from Quebec to the ocean during the winter season.”

read.

MR. MACKENZIE said he admitted the very great importance of the subject of winter navigation and the desirability of ascertaining whether it was practicable, but he did not consider it would add to the importance of the subject or the means to secure its being carried out, to pass the present motion; and he would, therefore, request the hon. member, who had secured what he desired, a full discussion on the subject, to withdraw his motion.

MR. PERRY said the motion was one entitled to consideration. He thought the success of the Northern Light, in navigating the Straits of Northumberland during the winter season, had demonstrated the practicability of winter navigation of the St. Lawrence, which could be done with much greater facility than the navigation of the Straits, inasmuch as in the Straits the ice jammed between the Island and the mainland, owing to the passage being so narrow, while in the Gulf the ice kept drifting about. The principal trouble would be that a steamer fitted to navigate in the ice would not be suitable to cross the Atlantic. He was surprised the other evening to hear hon. members, especially the hon. member for Northumberland, pronouncing winter navigation a delusion and a snare, and condemning the Northern Light as a failure. It was a well-known fact that that steamer had proved of great benefit to the people of the Island. Up to 1867, they had no communication with the mainland for five or six months in the year. Since this steamer had been in operation, merchants had imported goods, during these months, from Halifax, St. John, Montreal, and elsewhere; the boat crossing three times a week, with the exception of a few days in February and March. The consequence was, merchants could import their goods when they pleased, and not have them lying on their shelves six months, losing interest, and be obliged to charge extra, on that account, in retailing them. In order to prove his statements, he had obtained from the Department of Marine and Fisheries a statement showing the number of trips which the steamer had made since 19th December last, up to 7th March, which he would read. During that time, she had made twenty-five round trips between Georgetown and Pictou, and had carried 1,325 packages of freight, 349 passengers, and 361 mail bags. The steamer had exceeded his most sanguine expectations and had done what he did not expect any steamer could do, and the Government deserved praise, instead of blame, for its action, and for the money which they had well expended on this steamer. He hoped the Government would avail themselves of the experience of the Northern Light, and establish winter navigation of the St. Lawrence down, perhaps, as far as Newfoundland.

MR. FRÉCHETTE said he wished to answer some of the arguments used by those hon. members who had thought proper to oppose his motion. The hon. member for Northumberland had been kind enough to say the other day that he (Mr. Fréchette) had been talking of something he knew nothing about. The only reply he could make was, that he did not claim any personal experience or knowledge of most of the facts to which he had referred. He had based all his arguments on undeniable authorities, that was, on the testimony of men of undoubted competency. The hon. member could not have read the evidence adduced before the Committee; if he had, he would not have repeated here, at great loss of time, all the old arguments which have been so victoriously refuted by that evidence. Had the hon gentleman listened to his (Mr. Fréchette's) remarks the other day, he would not have been so severe, and have ridiculed the idea of shipping lumber, during the winter, from Quebec to England, an idea to which he (Mr. Fréchette) had not given utterance. He had talked about sawn timber, which was a quite different thing; if sawn timber or lumber could be shipped at any season of the year from Quebec to England, pine timber would be exported, sawn to dimensions, thus giving double employment to the saw mills. The hon. gentleman said,

What about the buoys? The buoys were not a very important matter during winter. He would refer the hon. gentleman to the evidence given on that subject by the witnesses to whom he had alluded. The buoys were not necessary during the winter, inasmuch as the shores, rocks and shoals were covered with border ice; and besides, there was always a band of floating ice on one side of the river, that was under lee of the passing vessel, which protected her from the danger of running ashore. The hon. gentleman had tried to be very offensive towards Mr. Sewell in characterizing him as a visionary. Mr. Sewell would not go so far as to compare the hon. member for Northumberland to a great conqueror. At the same time, he (Mr. Sewell) remembered well that Napoleon, although he did not represent Northumberland, called once the man who invented steamboats visionary. He would, at the same time, say, in reference to the remarks made by the hon. member for Terrebonne, with regard to the peculiar construction of steamboats proposed to be built, that the witnesses did not say that these steamboats ought to be constructed after a peculiar model, and that they could not be navigated elsewhere than in the River St. Lawrence. These steamboats ought to have a stronger stern, that was all. Moreover, he would refer the hon. gentleman to the evidence given by the most experienced, perhaps, of all the witnesses examined, who said that the Allan steamers, as now constructed, could run very easily during the winter months from Quebec to the Gulf and back. He based his opinion upon this fact: that these steamers, in the spring, encountered the heavy floating ice which ran down the St. Lawrence at that season, while, during the winter months, they would not be exposed to this, for they would encounter only the winter ice which formed every day. In answer to the remarks of the hon. member for Queen's County, which were very severe and unjust against the Northern Light, he would quote resolutions passed in the county meeting at Georgetown, which gave the best answer possible to the hon. member's charges. The resolutions were as follows:

MR. FRÉCHETTE.

"Pursuant to notice, a public county meeting was held in the Court House, Georgetown, on Tuesday afternoon, the 12th inst., M. McCormack, Esq., High Sheriff, presided, and R. Munro acting as Secretary.

"The Sheriff read the speeches of Messrs. McIntyre and Pope, made at Ottawa, respecting the Northern Light.

"Hon. Archibald J. Macdonald read and moved the following resolution:—

"Whereas, It appears by the published debates and proceedings in the Senate and House of Commons that efforts are being made to decry the performance of the steamboat Northern Light as a winter boat for the Gulf service, and that some of our representatives have spoken in terms condemnatory of the route now traversed by the said steamer between Pictou, in Nova Scotia, and Georgetown, Prince Edward Island, basing their opposition to the said line of communication on the occurrence of an accident, or error of judgment, which led to the detention of the boat for a short period of time in the Gulf—an error which, under due regulations, and profiting by experience, may never occur again."

"Resolved: That it is the opinion of this meeting that if an additional boat of the same power and capacity of the Northern Light were placed on the route between Pictou and Georgetown, the service as now performed proves conclusively that daily communication can be maintained between the mainland and the Province during the entire winter session."

He believed this result was a sufficient answer to the extraordinary speech of the hon. member for Queen's County, P.E.I., delivered the other day on this subject. The same hon. member had thought proper to characterize his remarks as a "heap of nonsense." And when called to order, the hon. gentleman said if he could not say it here, he would say it elsewhere. The opinions of the hon. gentleman were perfectly indifferent to him (Mr. Fréchette), and he would not pay the slightest attention to his attacks, whether made inside or outside of Parliament. As he believed, under present circumstances, his motion would not be carried, he begged leave to withdraw it.

Motion, with leave of the House, withdrawn.

MONTREAL CITY AND DISTRICT SAVINGS BANK.

ADJOURNED DEBATE.

Order for the further consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Taschereau, for an Address praying His Excellency the Governor-General, to apply the 9th sub-section of section 6, chap. 7, 34 Victoria, in order to obtain from the City and District Savings Bank of Montreal, and cause to be laid before this House, certain statements as to the affairs of the said Bank, read.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said there seemed to be good reason why information should be furnished as to advances made by the bank on American, which were, of course, foreign securities. It was proper that Parliament should know whether such an institution had dabbled in foreign securities, and, if so, in what securities, as a savings bank had no right to do a speculative business. It was evident the hon. the Finance Minister was prepared to furnish only such information as could be obtained without applying to him, and refuse all other.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT moved in amendment:

"That the said motion be amended by striking out all the words after '1871,' in the first paragraph of the said motion; and also by striking out paragraphs 2, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13, of the said motion."

Mr. TASCHEREAU said he could not object to the amendment, as his object in submitting the motion to the House had been secured. Nevertheless, he held that all the information asked for was required in the public interest, and should be known to the House. However, since the motion had been made, all the facts had been brought out and published in a leading paper in Montreal.

Mr. MITCHELL: In what paper?

Mr. TASCHEREAU: In the Montreal Gazette.

Amendment agreed to.

The motion, as amended, agreed to, and the said Address voted, and is as follows:

"Resolved, That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying him to apply the 9th sub-section of Section 6, Chapter 7, 37 Victoria, in order to obtain from the City and District Savings Bank of Montreal, and cause to be laid before this House when so obtained.

1st. A statement showing the position at the period of its re-organization in 1871.

2nd. A statement showing how the Directors fixed at $180,000 the surplus or poor Fund, and by what process they arrived at that figure, and if the said surplus was limited to that amount.

3rd. A statement showing how the capital stock was taken up, the names of shareholders, and if said stock was subscribed before or after the day and hour when the books should have been opened according to Law.

4th. The sums paid by the shareholders upon their subscription of stock since 1871, and date of re-organization.

5th. A statement showing which of the shareholders paid in cash; those that did not; and how they did pay; if by promissory notes, and if so, when discounted and whether retired at maturity.

6th. A statement of the dividends paid in each year since 1871, date of re-organization.

7th. A list of the present Directors and what amount of stock they respectively hold in the Bank.

8th. A list of the present shareholders, and what amount of stock they respectively hold in the Bank.

INSOLVENT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

[BILL No. 24.]

(Mr. Bourassa.)

SECOND READING NEGATIVED.

Mr BOURASSA moved:—

"That the (Bill No. 24) To amend the Insolvent Act of 1875, and the several Acts in amendment thereof, be now read a second time."

He said he deemed it his duty to offer a few words of explanation as to the non-traders enumerated in the first section of the Bill, which was as follows:—

"In this Act the expression 'non-trader' means any farmer, grazier, common labourer, workman for hire, or other person who cannot be declared an Insolvent under the Act hereinafter cited."

The second section marked out and defined the distinction between traders and non-traders. And any person who was a non-trader, and who duly notified the assignee to that effect, was not bound to accept a composition. By the third section, the rights of non-traders were protected, and they were permitted to receive any dividends declared by the assignee, without being bound to sign the discharge of the insolvent. Subsequently, therefore, they might sue for and recover from the insolvent, if he at any time were able to pay the balance remaining unpaid to any such non-trader. His intention in moving the second reading of this Bill was, to secure farmers, workingmen, and other non-traders, against the frauds which were so often committed, and which would continue to be committed so long as the Insolvent Law remained, as it now was, on our Statute-book. Many members of this House had manifested, on various occasions, their anxiety to afford just and sufficient protection to the agricultural and working classes, and they would, he felt convinced, afford him their unhesitating support on all occasions, and give him a large majority in the vote on the second reading of the Bill, and thus enable him to place it on our Statute books and make it the law of the land.

Question proposed and motion negatived on the following division:—

YEAS :

Messieurs

Baby,	Macdonald (Cornwall),
Barthe,	Macdonald (Kingston),
Béchar, d,	McDonald (Cape
Benoit,	Breton),
Bernier,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Blanchet,	Macmillan,
Bolduc,	McCallum,
Bourassa,	Malouin,
Bourbeau,	Masson,
Bowell,	Méthot,
Bunster,	Mitchell,
Campbell,	Monteith,
Cheval,	Montplaisir,
Christie,	Orton,
Cimon,	Quimet,
Costigan,	Pinsonneault,
Coupal,	Platt,
Currier,	Plumb,
Cuthbert,	Pope (Compton),
Daoust,	Pouliot,
Desjardins,	Robitaille,
Dugas,	Rochester,
Farrow,	Rouleau,
Ferguson,	Roy,
Fiset,	Rymal,
Gibson,	Scatcherd,
Gill,	Short,
Greenway,	Stephenson,
Harwood,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Hurteau,	Wade,
Jones (South Leeds),	Wallace (S. Norfolk),
Kirkpatrick,	White (East Hastings),
Landerkin,	White (N. Renfrew),
Langevin,	Wright (Pontiac),—68.
Lanthier,

NAYS :

Messieurs

Appleby,	Irving,
Archibald,	Jetté,
Bain,	Jones (Halifax),
Bertram,	Killam,
Bordon,	Kirk,
Borron,	Lafamme,

MR. BOURASSA.

Bowman,	Lajoie,
Boyer,	Laurier,
Brooks,	Macdonald (Centre
Brouse,	Toronto),
Buell,	Macdougall (East
Burpee (St. John)	Elgin),
Burpee (Sunbury),	McKay (Colchester),
Carmichael,	Mackenzie,
Cartwright,	McGregor,
Casgrain,	McIntyre,
Church,	Mclsaac,
Davies,	Metcalfe,
DeCosmos,	Mills,
Delorme,	Norris,
De St. Georges,	Paterson,
Devlin,	Perry,
Dymond,	Pettes,
Ferris,	Pickard,
Fleming,	Ray,
Forbes,	Richard,
Fraser,	Robillard,
Frechette,	Ross (East Durham),
Galbraith,	Ross (West Middlesex),
Geoffrion,	Scrivner,
Gibbs (North Ontario),	Skinner,
Gibbs (South Ontario),	Smith (Selkirk),
Gillmor,	Snider,
Guthrie,	Taschereau,
Haddow,	Thompson, (Haldi-
Higinbotham,	mand),
Holton,	Trow—72.
Huntington.

DRINKS BOTTLES BILL.—[Bill No. 25]

(Mr. Macdonald, Centre Toronto.)

SECOND READING PROPOSED.

MR. MACDONALD (Centre Toronto), in moving the second reading of the Bill, said that it was simply intended to secure, by certain trade marks, the property owned by certain parties as was set forth in the Bill. It was of a very simple character.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Are not these trade-marks secured by the laws as they now stand. I think that they can now be registered.

MR. MITCHELL said he thought they had a right to an explanation of the Bill. If laws already existed in this regard, they should not repeat unnecessary legislation.

MR. OLIVER said he thought that the promoter of the Bill should give the information asked for. He would feel compelled to oppose it, because it prevented individuals who had purchased an article from selling it again. If he, or anyone, went into a drug or any other store, and bought a couple of dozen bottles of any description whatever, though they were stamped, these bottles became the property of the purchaser, when paid for, and surely the latter ought to be allowed to sell the bottles for which they had paid. The only object of the Bill, he thought, was to extinguish the small concerns which conducted manufactures in this relation throughout the length and breadth of the country, and to concentrate the whole trade in large commercial centres among large firms; and for the reason that property, when paid for, belonged to the purchaser, he opposed the Bill.

MR. BOWELL said he thought that the Bill went further. It provided for a penalty in case a bottle was given away. If a person bought a bottle of soda water which had the maker's mark on it, and lent or gave it to any one, he would become subject to a penalty ranging from 50 cents to $5. It seemed to be a strange principle to adopt, to say that a man should not dispose or give away his own property. He could understand the necessity of protecting a manufacturer in his business, and preventing the use of bottles with such manufacturer's trade-mark in the carrying on of the same business by another person, in order to prevent the imposition on the public of an article which was not manufactured by the person whose trade-mark was thus used, and he thought the law as it stood provided for a penalty in case this was done. But it seemed extraordinary to ask the House to affirm that if a person had a bottle worth 2½ cents, and lent it to a neighbour to put medicine in—of course he was now drawing an extreme case—and it had the trade-mark of a druggist on it, he should be subject to a penalty varying from 50 cents to $5.

MR. OLIVER said he rose to a point of order. He thought that this Bill related to trade, and he believed it ought to be introduced by resolution instead of by Bill. The hon. gentleman, he thought, would have to commence de novo, and give notice of such resolution.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he thought that this point was well taken. The second clause of the Bill, which provided that if any man gave away a soda water bottle, he was liable to a penalty, was the most absurd provision in the world.

MR. PLUMB: I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should have introduced this Bill.

MR. MACDONALD: The hon. gentleman may be surprised as much as he pleases. I am merely promoting the Bill for political friends of the hon. gentleman.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: For political purposes, doubtless.

MR. MACDONALD said he did not intend to withdraw the Bill. The House might object to it if it pleased. He thought that the Bill might be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, which might approve of it, if the Committee thought proper to do so.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The Banking and Commerce Committee will settle the proposed question.

MR. MACDONALD said that the object of the Bill was clearly set forth in the second clause, which was as follows:

“It shall be unlawful for any person hereafter, without the written permission of the owner of the name or mark so filed, to fill with mineral water or any other beverage, any such bottles so marked or stamped; or when empty, to sell, dispose of, buy, give away or traffic in any such bottles so marked or stamped, with the names or mark so registered, or to give any such bottles away when empty—so as to wrong the rightful owner of the name or mark so registered. Any person so offending shall be liable to a penalty of fifty cents for each and every bottle so filled, bought, sold, given away, used or trafficked in, for the first offence, and a fine of five dollars for each and every bottle so filled, bought, sold, given away, used or trafficked in, for every subsequent offence, upon conviction on summary proceedings before any Justice of the Peace under the Acts respecting the duties of Justices of the Peace, out of sessions, in relation to summary convictions and orders.”

MR. SPEAKER said the objection was well taken, for it was laid down in Rule 41 of the House that:

“No Bill relating to Trade, or the alteration of the laws concerning Trade, is to be brought into this House, until the proposition shall have been first considered in a Committee of the Whole House, and agreed unto by the House.”

He must, therefore, rule the hon. gentleman out of order, and the Bill could not be proceeded with.

Order discharged.

LIFE ASSURANCE POLICIES NON-FORFEITABLE BILL.—[BILL No. 33.]

(Mr. Trow.)

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Order for second reading read.

Mr. TROW said he moved the second reading of the Bill for the purpose of arriving at a proper understanding as between Insurance Companies and policy-holders, so that no technicality might deprive policy-holders, their heirs or assigns, from receiving the amount represented in policies. A considerable portion of the business of the insurance companies was carried on through agents in all parts of the country. These agents, of course, tried to secure as many premiums as possible, and their practice, generally, was to submit printed forms containing certain questions to be answered. In very many cases it would be found that the applicant did not thoroughly understand these questions, partly because it was the interest of the agents to place these in a colourable light, and the answers, consequently, were frequently defective, from a technical point of view. In many cases, indeed, verbal statements were made to an agent, and he filled up the paper, the result being that the applicant did not know what he had signed. Policies were, in this way, rendered null and void, and the holders of them were the sufferers. It was necessary that this state of things should be remedied. Many persons were, in the absence of family and other records, ignorant of their precise age, and, in consequence of the strict adherence to their rule in this particular, insurance companies were sometimes put to considerable expense in the way of litigation or the policy-holders suffered loss. How was an applicant to know exactly what his friends died of, what their ages were, and so on? Yet, if he made any error in his answers to such questions, his policy was liable to forfeiture. A misstatement of any kind, though it might have been made very innocently, frequently rendered a policy void. It was the duty of every man to lay past as much per week or month as he could afford, in order to make some provision for his family after death, and it was very hard that, after investing his savings in this way, they should run the risk of being forfeited through no misstatement designedly made by him. He (Mr. Trow) found that a very extensive business was done in this country, not only by Canadian, but also by American and British companies. He had some statistics which would show the enormous amount of business that was done. He found that from 1869 to 1876, the American companies had received in premiums the enormous amount of $9,585,938, of which they paid to policy-owners only $735,182, leaving in hands of the companies the sum of $7,850,751. During the same period, Canadian companies had received $3,704,245, while they had paid $688,203, leaving $3,016,042 unexpended. British offices represented in Canada had received $4,658,789, the sum expended was $1,790,541, so that $2,868,248 remained unexpended. The total amount, therefore, unexpended by Canadian, American and British companies was $13,735,041. The number of companies licensed was 37, there being 7 Canadian, 17 British, and 13 American. The amount of business done by the companies of these respective countries in 1876 was as follows: Canadian companies had done business to the extent of $768,543 in premiums; British companies, premiums representing $597,155; American companies, $1,437,612. The total amount of premiums, therefore, in 1876, was 2,803,310, and the amount paid $378,498. In 1875, there were 2,882,387 premiums, and the amount paid was $718,438, leaving a balance unexpended of $2,163,949, while the balance in 1876 amounted to $1,923,847. The figures he had quoted referred only to companies which had received licenses from the Dominion; many others had been licensed by the Governments of the various Provinces. When, therefore, it was seen that a large sum of money was going into the hands of American companies, it behoved Parliament to see that our people were protected. A few days ago he received a letter from the widow of a late member of Parliament, and who was now resident in the city of Toronto, stating that her husband had pail over $1,800 into an American company and that she was anxious to obtain a compromise, having been offered only $545. The first clause referred merely to age; and here he would remark that if a mistake in this particular was not discovered till seven years' premiums had been paid, it should not occasion loss to the holder of a policy or his heirs. In some English companies five years was fixed as the period during which a policy erroneously filled up could be forfeited or endangered. The second section was in reference to the payment of money into Court, which he thought was a plan that would commend itself to the House, as it would benefit the widows and families of policy-holders while it would do no harm to the companies. The next clause referred to cases where a person insured committed suicide. It was generally the case that, when a man took away his life, he was not sane, and it was not right that his unfortunate family, who were not blameable, should be the sufferers. They ought, he considered, to receive some compensation. He saw no reason why the third party, the innocent purchaser, should be kept out of his just rights, or why the family of the man who had committed this rash act, should be deprived in consequence of his act. The fourth clause provided some proper understanding as to the amount policy-holders should receive after payment of certain sums, upon the proper calculation of an actuary on the tables of mortality. At the present, if the claim was $2,000, the companies would offer $400 or $500, and in many instances poor people were not in a position to go to law with companies and had to accept a paltry sum when they were entitled to the full amount. The Bill was very plain and explicit, and his only desire was that policy-holders should be protected.

MR. SPEAKER.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT said that nobody could dispute the excellent motives of his hon. friend, but he doubted whether the hon. gentleman had sufficiently considered the effect of his proposition. It proposed to alter every contract of life insurance entered into in the Dominion, involving a sum of $80,000,000, and distributed over a considerable number of persons.

Mr. TROW: It will only affect policies issued after July next.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: "Every policy of insurance issued or to be issued," are the words at the commencement of the Bill.

Mr. MILLS. And the 7th clause says the Act shall apply to "all policies now in force."

Mr. CARTWRIGHT said he did not think it was possible for them to entertain a proposition of this kind. It must be recollected that a great proportion of the persons who were insured were not persons of the poorer class, as the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Trow) presumed, but of the upper or middle class of life. It was unfortunately the case that, as the matter stood, an extremely small number of workmen availed themselves of the provisions of life assurance, and, no doubt, it might be a matter of serious consideration whether, under these circumstances, it might not be well for the Government to offer to these classes, in some other way, the benefits of life assurance. He thought this would meet the object of his hon. friend much better than the measure now proposed; which, besides violently altering all these life assurance contracts, would also alter the basis of computation on which these companies were doing business, and, therefore, seriously impair the character of the security they offered to holders.

Mr. TROW: That was not my intention.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT said it might not be the intention, but it was so, especially by the 7th section of the Act. Although it might be true that several companies doing business here inserted in their policies a great number of provisions which might be avoided, still he did not think any of the great companies were in the habit of taking advantage of these, unless there was ground for suspicion of fraud. As for the proposition that every company should be obliged to pay a certain cash surrender value, when any person chose to withdraw his policy, he thought, was an interference with existing contracts, such as it had not been the policy of Canada to assent to in any case. He hoped the hon. gentleman would allow his measure to stand over, and he was strongly of opinion that the object the hon. gentleman desired to attain would be best attained by the suggestion he (Mr. Cartwright) had made.

MR. TROW said he had no desire to press the matter on the House, if it was objectionable. His intentions were sincere, and he had received a number of letters in support of the principle of the Bill; some, even, from insurance agents, and quite a bundle of letters from those afflicted by the clause which this Bill was intended to relieve. He anticipated that several gentlemen would take the matter into consideration and discuss it more thoroughly.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said that if the hon. gentleman did not accept the advice which had been tendered to him by the Finance Minister, he should like to say something upon the Bill. He thought it would be better for the hon. gentleman to use a little discretion, and save the House the infliction, at this late hour, of a speech upon the subject.

MR. MACKENZIE: Which would be just as bad as the Bill.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said it would be impossible to have the Bill passed this Session, there were so many details to arrange; and, no doubt, the hon. member would be here next Session, when most of the Opposition were away, and could then exercise his influence with the new Administration.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: This is a Bill that thoroughly commends itself to the feeling of the House, and the faint-hearted opposition which had been offered by the hon. the Minister of Finance shows that he is afraid to meet it.

MR. GIBBS (South Ontario) said he hoped the hon. gentleman would withdraw his Bill. The House would readily understand why the hon. gentleman had received so many letters approving of the Bill. Many persons, no doubt, would be glad to alter the terms of their contract, to their own advantage, and, no doubt, parties insured would be glad to discontinue paying premiums. If the Government did not take this matter in their own hands, the hon. gentleman could introduce it next year.

MR. CARTWRIGHT.

MR. POPE (Compton) said he could not understand the argument of the hon. member for South Ontario, who should know that if any old gentlemen and ladies who had insured their lives, had made a mistake in not giving their exact age, or who had omitted to pay up the day due, or any other error of this kind, would obtain relief by the Bill. The Bill might be changed somewhat in Committee, but it seemed to him to be a necessary one, one which would protect those people who, through inadvertence, had not given the exact day they were born, or had made some other mistake of this kind, from being deprived of their insurance, after they had paid up for many years in good faith.

MR. OUIMET said if that Bill were of any value, it would be owing to the retroactive clause which it contained. If that clause were taken away, it would not be of any use for several years. If there was any reason to enact such a law, it was because of the hard times which had overtaken a great many who now thought their lives were not worth what they had to pay every year for them. As long as the crisis continued, which the Government were sure would not last long, and he hope they were right, the people of this country, in his humble opinion, would not insure their lives. If the retroactive clause were taken out, the hon. member, who had introduced it, would lose all his sympathy, because he (Mr. Ouimet) felt inclined, himself, to draw back the amount of his insurance policy, considering now his life was not worth what he was paying for it.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said that, notwithstanding the very hard times, a very great number of people did insure their lives at present.

MR. OUMET: I suppose it is because they expect to starve.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said a portion of the Bill recommended itself to this House. In the first clause it would be very proper that insurance policies should be non-forfeitable after several years. But he thought such a Bill ought rather to be postponed until a further period.

MR. BROUSE said, having been closely connected with insurance companies as a medical director, he believed no insurance company could carry on business if a Bill of this kind were passed. It would be well that life insurance should be more immediately under the control of the Government. Yet, they had to look at the companies themselves as well as the individuals who were insured in them. No doubt, in many instances, parties insured had falsified their statements, making the companies liable when they should not have been liable under the circumstances. It was the same as with fire insurance. There was always a tendency to compel the company to pay if there was any reasonable excuse. He hoped his hon. friend would withdraw the Bill.

MR. TROW said he must throw the responsibility of its withdrawal on the Government. He had expected better treatment for the measure. He could not find in the Bill any cause for the remarks of the hon. the Finance Minister. There was no intention that the Bill should be retroactive. It was framed for the protection of the labourer and mechanic, and if hon. gentlemen disputed his word, he could show them a number of letters proving cases of extreme hardship. If the Government desired to shirk a measure of such importance, he could only move that the order be discharged.

MR. PLUMB said the Bill merited to be calmly considered by the House. The question of non-forfeiture of policies was one which interested everyone who had examined carefully the principles of life insurance. The great hardship which arose out of forfeiture of policies might, in some measure, be guarded against by this Bill, with some amendments introduced. He did not think all the statements of the hon. gentleman, with regard to the enormous profit of life insurance companies, were based on sound information or knowledge of the principles upon which life insurance was based. No doubt constant difficulties arose from incorrect statements of those who effected insurance, but a distinction should be made between criminal misstatements and accidental ones. He did not think the position taken by the hon. the Finance Minister was at all fair to the hon. member for South Perth, and his Bill should have been allowed a fair discussion.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

House adjourned at Fifteen minutes to
One o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 4th April, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CIVIL SERVICE BILL.

FIRST READING.

MR. CASEY introduced a Bill (No. 70) To ensure the better qualification of public servants, and the greater efficiency and economy of the public service. He said it was intended, in the first place, to constitute a board outside of the existing Civil Service, to control almost all the business of the Service, subject, of course, to the approval of His Excellency the Governor in Council. This Board was to carry out a change in the mode of selecting public servants, by substituting a triple selection instead of patronage. This triple selection would consist in a qualifying examination, intended to show the fitness of individuals for the Service, which was to be followed by a competitive examination, and the required number was to be selected from those who were found to be so fit. The process would conclude with a year's trial, until the completion of which, the person nominated would have no claim to a permanent appointment in the Service. The Bill also provided for uniform promotion throughout the Service, both inside and outside, and that the higher positions, with certain exceptions noted, should only be filled by promotion from the ranks below; and this should be the course followed in the outside service, as well as in the Departments. Certain officers in each Department would constitute a staff entirely at the disposal of the responsible Minister of the Department, who, of course, would require to have in positions nearest him people in whom he had full confidence. There were also certain provisions as to discipline and a few other minor details. Full details were given as to the mode of conducting the examinations and other particulars regarding the process of selection to which he had referred.

Bill read the first time.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY ACT
AMENDMENT BILL.—[BILL No. 52.]

(Mr. Mackenzie.)

SECOND READING.

Order for second reading read.

MR. MACKENZIE, in moving the second reading of the Bill, said that hon. gentlemen would observe that the Bill was intended to confer the same powers regarding the leasing and working of the Pembina Branch of Railway as were taken in the 15th section of the Railway Act of 1874, with regard to the Georgian Bay Branch Railway. In this section, power was given to the Government to lease to some company or companies the Georgian Bay Branch Railway, on such terms as might be agreed upon, such lease not to exceed the term of ten years; provided, that no such contract for the lease of such railway, and no such agreement for working the said railway in connection with any other railway should be binding until it had been laid before the House of Commons for one month without being disapproved of, unless sooner approved of by resolution of the House. In this case, it was also provided that no such traffic or running arrangements should be binding beyond the end of the next Session of Parliament, unless approved thereat. The Government might find it convenient, if the railway in the United States was completed late in the season, to make temporary running arrangements until Parliament met in the spring; and no lease would be effected until it had been approved by Parliament. This was the sole provision of the Bill, and one that was rendered absolutely necessary by the position in which they found themselves of connecting with some road on the boundary. When he introduced the Bill, the hon. member for Cumberland, he believed, made some enquiry as to the views of the Government in relation to rates; and he then stated that whatever lease was made, care must be taken to have the rates governed by the lease, both as respects the part of the line in our own territory and any line with which it might connect, and these rates should be regulated by way of Duluth, no matter upon what road the traffic might be driven by force of circumstances. The Government had no lease prepared, although they had been in communication with the St. Paul and Northern Pacific Railway Company; and they had been considering the terms of the lease, or the terms of running arrangement; both were distinct matters and distinct modes of working the road. If they made a mere arrangement for the interchange of traffic, they would have to stock their own road. There were serious objections to this, as they hoped that the entire system of railways in the North-West would be worked by a company. It was not the intention of the Government at present to contemplate the possibility of the Government itself working these railways. It would be, therefore, more desirable to effect some arrangements by the lease of our own line to a company which had stock, than to have to stock their own road, and be compelled to build workshops and maintain a staff of workmen for the purpose. Something was to be said for both modes, but whatever mode was adopted, he hoped that before Parliament rose the Government would be able to present such a scheme to the House as would meet with its approval. He had, however, no objection to alter the Bill so as to provide that no such contract would be binding until it had the approval of Parliament. This, probably had to be acted upon this Session, and so it would have to be done in that way at any rate.

MR. CASEY.

Bill read the second time.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD asked whether negotiations had not taken place and were not now in progress with the company, which the hon. gentleman had mentioned.

MR. MACKENZIE: I stated two weeks ago in the House that we were in communication with Mr. Stephens, of Montreal, as the representative of the St. Paul and Northern Pacific Railway Company.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Will the lease contain any clause in case of other American railways connecting with our railway, and running up to the frontier.

MR. MACKENZIE: It will contain simply a provision that there must be accommodation for the exchange of traffic, and trains loaded at Winnipeg or Selkirk with goods will have to go solely by the line with which traffic arrangements are made.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he hoped that precautions would be taken. The hon. gentleman must be aware, from the Press, that a good deal of uneasiness was felt on this subject in the North-West, lest the company alluded to, in which Mr. Stephens and other gentlemen had an interest, would have a monopoly of our road.

MR. MACKENZIE: No doubt.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: For ten years; and lest, if any other line should lead up from the United States to the frontier, it would be prevented from going to Winnipeg over this line, by this lease, thus granting a monopoly to one line. He did not know much about the subject, but he knew that this feeling, and a sensitiveness regarding this subject, existed—lest a monopoly, controlling the whole of the traffic between the United States and Winnipeg, should be created. Ten years was rather a long term. In a young country, it equalled 25 years in an older country. He thought that the hon. gentleman ought not, without very grave reasons, lock up the line from Winnipeg to Duluth, for ten long years.

MR. MACKENZIE said that, of course, he quite agreed with the hon. gentleman that a shorter term would be better, but it was simply a choice of evils. The hon. gentleman was aware that the principal part, and in fact nearly the whole of our own road had been graded for three and a-half years, and they had been waiting in vain for any connection. He did not, at this moment, know of any other company that proposed to extend a line to that point and it was a question whether they would make a lease for ten years, or have no railway. He wished to be perfectly frank with the House in the matter. This company declined to proceed with the building of the road for any less term; and it did demand a term of 21 years, which the Government at once declined. The term of ten years was the least, he believed, which would induce any connection to be made with the Government line. He had no doubt whatever it would be better for the interests of that country that they should effect a lease for that period than not have the road. The term of ten years was proposed in the lease.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said he would not say that this was not a good plan, but he hoped the Government and the Minister of Public Works would take special care to guard the interests of the people in that Province. It was well known that this company, which would receive the lease, was virtually the same company that owned the Kittson line of boats. The proprietors, he believed, were the same, and this line of steamboats had ground down the people of Manitoba. Their charges during the last two or three years had been most exorbitant, and they stated openly they knew that their life was a short one; and therefore, that they had to make their profits in a hurry; and now they were going to have the control of our railway. If the Government, in making the terms of the lease, could make some terms by which the rates for trade and passengers would be kept down to a reasonable sum between Winnipeg and Duluth, if between no other places, this would be a great boon to the people of that country. He did not know whether the hon. gentleman was aware that the charge for freight on 100lb. of goods from Montreal to Winnipeg was $2.50 of which 50c. were charged for passage from Montreal to Duluth, the remaining $2 being charged for transport between Duluth and Winnipeg. This was altogether out of proportion. If the same rates were maintained, it would be a mere monopoly. If these roads were to be maintained, the people of that Province would be taxed to an enormous extent. They had already paid nearly $1,000,000, and the hon. the Minister of the Interior, while in that district, had heard complaints made with regard thereto. These people were anxiously looking forward to the opening of this line in order that there might be competition with the river vessels, but if it passed into the hands of this company, there would be no competition whatever, and no reduction of freight.

MR. MACKENZIE said it was exceedingly inconvenient to discuss the terms of a lease not yet prepared. No lease, the hon. gentleman might rest assured, would be prepared that did not provide for the Government controlling the rates, and that these rates should be the same to Duluth from this Company's road at Clinton, where it crossed the North Pacific as the North Pacific Railway rates. It would be provided that they did not exceed the average rate of freights in the State of Minnesota. There would be no difficulty in controlling the rates in this way; but the hon. gentleman would have an opportunity before the House rose of discussing the terms of any arrangement which the Government might propose.

MR. WOOD said, if this Bill passed, it would have the effect of diverting the trade from Duluth to St. Paul, whereas, if the line was more directly under their control, otherwise than by lease, the trade might be brought into Ontario and Quebec.

MR. MACKENZIE said they must either leave it or make a running arrangement, so as to have a through route at rates not exceeding those charged in Minnesota.

MR. WOOD: Would it not be better to have running powers than to enter into a lease with a foreign company?

MR. MACKENZIE: That is a question to be considered.

MR. McCALLUM said it appeared to him that, if this line was leased to a company for ten years, it would be the means of taking the trade of the North-West into the United States. He thought the Pacific Railway should be pushed on as fast as possible, so that the trade of the country might go by that route.

MR. MACKENZIE said it would take some years to complete that road, and, in the meantime, the proposed scheme would afford a cheap and rapid means of intercourse into our territories for the conveyance of emigrants and others who wished to settle there; also a cheap means of transporting the grain of the country—a trade which was expected to be more important next winter. In fact, no other arrangement than that contemplated could possibly meet the exigency which had arisen.

MR. POPE (Compton) said it appeared to him the difficulty which the Government laboured under was this: that they could not very well get a company on the other side to build part of this road.

MR. GIBBS (North Ontario) said there seemed to be a good deal of anxiety manifested in the country generally with reference to this proposed lease, but he thought the assurance given by the hon. the Minister of Public Works would go far to relieve the public mind on that particular point. The statement which the hon. Minister had made, and which was concurred in by the right hon. member for Kingston, was eminently satisfactory. The fear entertained throughout the country was, that the trade of Manitoba might be directed to St. Paul, and that if it once turned in that direction it would be exceedingly difficult to bring it down to Duluth again, and through the Province of Ontario. The statement made by the hon. the Minister of Public Works on that point was, however, also assuring. He did not intend to find fault with the duration of the lease being fixed at ten years, but thought it would be in the interest of the public to reduce that period if at all possible. He hoped it would be seen, from the remarks made by hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, and the assurance of hon. gentlemen on the other, that the interests of the people of Manitoba would be jealously guarded.

MR. KIRKPATRICK.

MR. LANGEVIN said he agreed with the views of the hon. member for Compton regarding the difficulty which the Government had to encounter in this proposed lease. He thought the Bill would be improved by altering the duration of the lease from ten years to five, terminable at the option of the Government on giving six months' notice. That, he thought, would be a very safe stipulation in case the railway from Red River to Lake Superior was opened before that time. He would like to hear from the hon. the Minister of Public Works how long it would be till the railroad from Rat Portage to Lake Superior was opened.

MR. MACKENZIE said he could hardly state that, because it depended on measures yet to be taken by the Government, on the discussion of which he would hardly like to venture at the present moment. As, however, that was connected with the policy of the Act of 1874, he might briefly say that, under the circumstances, it would not be less than four years. Circumstances might arise which would render it inexpedient to open it even then; it was a matter of public policy, to be discussed in another direction. In the meantime, the country between Rat Portage and Winnipeg would be served and find an outlet through the proposed Minnesota line.

MR. LANGEVIN said he quite understood how difficult it was to discuss a matter of this kind when negotiations were pending, and probably it would be inconvenient to do so. He thought there should be a stipulation in the lease to the effect that branches of other railways might reach our frontier. Measures of this description were very apt to be laid on the table, and set aside till the time for disapproval was past; and he thought a formal motion should be made by the hon. Minister, so that the House might have an opportunity of giving an affirmative answer or refusing to sanction the lease.

MR. PLUMB said the exigencies of the case might justify some such arrangement as that proposed in the Bill. If carried out, however, it would virtually amount to an abandonment, for the present, at least, of the scheme for building a railroad from Fort William to Red River; because it was quite certain that both lines could not be supported by Government. It might be desirable, in the interests of the North-West and in the general interests of this country, that the proposal now made should be carried out; he did not intend to question that or to discuss it now, because he did not know what the terms of the contract were to be. As stated by the hon. the First Minister, it would be several years before the intermediate link, which was now being constructed, would be finished, and if this scheme was now adopted, there would be no immediate pressure on the Government to spend money upon that intermediate link. During the last three or four years it had been urged, with great pertinacity, that what were called the water-stretches between Lac des Mille Lacs and Lake Rat Portage ought to be utilized for the purposes of traffic.

MR. MACKENZIE said he was sure the hon. member for Niagara (Mr. Plumb) would see how exceedingly inconvenient it was to enter into a discussion on the whole subject of the Bill, and it had better be postponed at present. It had been suggested that the proposed connection should be made, and this Bill was merely to enable them to make the necessary arrangements if approved of.

MR. PLUMB said the scheme of 1873 was part of the general scheme, and this the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie) and his friends had entirely departed from, and the late Government were not in any way responsible for the changes which had been made in that scheme. He did not wish to go back to original principles in discussing this Bill, but simply wished to call the attention of the House to the fact that the building of this link and the making of this contract would retard, for many years, the completion of the intervening length between Rat Portage and English River. He thought he was right in saying that it became a great necessity to give an outlet to the traffic which existed. Without attempting to argue the point, he would say that the proposed scheme would, in his opinion, retard the great scheme of the Canada Pacific Railway.

MR. MASSON said the declaration which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie) had made with reference to the connection between the two branches from Fort Garry to Fort William was a very disappointing one, and would be a very disappointing one to the country. The hon. the Premier was understood, four years ago, to say that the construction of the line would be an affair of four or five years; five years had now passed, and here was the Prime Minister telling them that it was hardly possible that the line could be built for the next four years, and seeming to think that it would take some six or seven years to complete it. Last year the hon. gentleman said that his intention was not to place any of the line under contract, because, in a year, they might get contractors to take the line.

MR. MACKENZIE: No; I said a great deal more than that.

MR. MASSON: I do not wish to distort the expression, and I will read it.

MR. MACKENZIE said he thought it would be better to postpone the reading. When speaking last year, he said repeatedly that, in any discussion upon the subject, or with reference to the survey connected with the railway system, the Government always spoke on what information they had at the moment. At the time he made the speech to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Masson) referred, they had some expectation that they might be able, during last winter and spring, to be in a position to advertise for tenders, and submit them to the House this Session. It turned out that the survey had taken the whole year, and at this moment the whole information was not yet laid before the Government by the engineer, and so they were not able to take the steps which they thought of doing last summer.

MR. MASSON said the hon. gentleman did not understand him. He was not speaking of the advertisements for the whole line of railway, he was speaking only of the line from Fort William to Fort Garry. The hon. the Premier said that: "It will be all rail when it is built, but it will pass by the lake in the meantime; but will not go one inch off the main line. We do not propose to place any under contract but those two ends, in the meantime, because we hope to have an arrangement made a year hence that we can get contractors to take the line."

MR. MACKENZIE: I meant the whole line.

MR. TROW said it was well known that it would take three or four years at least to complete that portion of the road, but the inhabitants of Manitoba required immediate railway communication, and it was evident that those railway managers who were prepared to construct that connecting link from Fisher's Landing, would not be prepared to enter upon the work unless they received some substantial encouragement from the Government. He thought that, instead of retarding the construction of the Pacific railway, it would have an entirely different effect.

MR. ORTON said, if he understood the matter, there were two railways converging at Pembina. If the line from St. Paul's to Pembina was extended to the Canada Pacific Railway, it must divert, to a large extent, the trade and commerce from Ontario, because the Americans would have greater facilities for carrying the traffic over their line. On the other hand, if he was correctly informed, the longest route was that of this proposed line from St. Paul to Duluth, and, therefore, no running arrangements being made, the people of Manitoba would be obliged, for two years, to carry their produce by the longest route. It appeared to him that the fact that Manitoba was so rapidly settling up should induce the Government to retain the road under their own control, so that they could give to these roads, or any of them, the same running powers, so that the people of Manitoba and the North-West would have the benefit of a healthy competition for their traffic.

MR. MACKENZIE.

MR. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman was certainly right, but the Government had been waiting for two years, and had been unable to induce anybody to make the communication.

MR. ORTON said he thought the very rapid settlement was a sufficient guarantee that some of these roads would shortly find it to their advantage to make the connection.

MR. MITCHELL said that he entirely approved of the measure, and for this reason, that it seemed to him to open up the only outlet by which the people of the North-West could get their produce to market. If they could get their own line constructed in three or four years even, he would consent to wait; but he did not see any chance of this, and, therefore, to give to the people of the North-West immediate aid and relief, he would heartily support the measure of the Government for making that lease. He must say, however, that extreme caution must be used with respect to the terms of the lease. There was no doubt that the Minister of Public Works had given great attention to the matter, and he was a man thoroughly well qualified to judge what was to the interest of the country, but there was nothing that people would feel more jealous about than the creating of a monopoly which we might hereafter redress, but might not be able to control. He trusted the Government would not lose sight of this point in determining the terms of the lease. If they could possibly introduce a condition that these railways would have running powers over the American line, it would be extremely desirable, but we were in their hands; all we could do was to make the best arrangement possible under these circumstances. It was important that the Government should not create a monopoly, but, at the same time, should give to the people of this territory the railway facilities they had a right to expect.

MR. SCHULTZ said he regretted that he had not been present during the opening of the debate, but the Bill commended itself to him, inasmuch as such an amendment to the General Railway Act was necessary to enable American lines to connect with the Pembina Branch. The only subject of anxiety with him was the terms of the lease, the preparation for which this Bill avowedly was. This matter was a most important one, in view of the statement made by a Minister of the Crown in another branch of the Legislature, to the effect that we might not expect communication by the main line with Lake Superior in less than six years, and he trusted that the Government would not be misled by misrepresentations, which he felt almost sure were being made to them by parties interested in obtaining the lease in question. It must be remembered that to deliberately give the control of our road to any one line would be to create the chance of continuing the monopoly which now existed in the carriage of freight to Manitoba, and the consequent damage to the best interests of the country. With our Pembina Branch, three railway connections were possible and probable—that of the St. Paul & Pacific, the Northern Pacific, and the Wisconsin Central. It was with the first of these lines that Messrs. Stephens, Smith, Kittson & Hill proposed to make their connection with the Pembina Branch, and it would be found worth a few moments' consideration to examine into these gentlemen's connection with this line, and their reasons for desiring an exclusive lease of the Pembina Branch for a long term of years. It was known that, in consequence of difficulties between Amsterdam bondholders and the American management of the road, all work had ceased on the branch known as the St. Vincent Extension, leaving about fifty-five miles of uncompleted road. To cut this knot, it was necessary to purchase these Amsterdam bonds; and the Kittson Red River steamboat line, feeling their occupation going, joined with George Stephens and Donald A. Smith in the purchase of these bonds; and a probably correct version of these negotiations was to be found in the following paragraph from the St. Paul Pioneer Press:—

“Negotiations which have been long privately pending are now substantially concluded at Amsterdam and London, whereby a majority of each of the five classes of the mortgage bonds covering the main and branch lines of the St. Paul and Pacific Company have been purchased by a new organization of Canadian and Minnesota capitalists, thus transferring to them the controlling interest in the bonds of the St. Paul and Pacific Company, including the first division, which has been heretofore held at Amsterdam. The scheme which has been thus successfully worked out was initiated by Mr. Jas. J. Hill and Mr. Norman Kittson, of St. Paul, who finally succeeded last May in enlisting the co-operation of some of the heaviest capitalists in Canada. We are not now at liberty to mention the names of these gentlemen, but we may remark that they were abundantly able to furnish the $520,000 in gold or, thereabouts, which was necessary to complete the purchase of sixty to eighty per cent. of each of the five classes of St. Paul and Pacific bonds, and there can be no impropriety in our stating that Mr. Stephens, the President of the Bank of Montreal, went himself to Amsterdam for the purpose of affecting the purchase upon terms previously agreed upon.”

This purchase brought with it, as a matter of course, the right to the large land grant of the road if the line should be completed before the fall of 1878, and it seemed strange that, with these advantages, they should have sought for the exclusive control of the inlet and egress from the North-West. The purchase was, however, no sooner made than it was announced at St. Paul, several months ago, that they had already obtained a lease of the Pembina Branch. This had the effect of choking off the Northern Pacific which was very anxious to make a connection, and which, by running a branch line north-westward from their branch line, could have given to it a far straighter and shorter line than was now proposed. Early in this Session, however, a question was asked of the Premier whether such lease had been given, and his answer in the negative seemed to have again raised the hopes of the railroad which wished to connect with the Pembina Branch as well as the St. Paul and Pacific, and again, it appeared the parties interested were trying to strangle opposition by the publication in the St. Paul papers of articles of which the following is the telegraphic summary, as given in the Toronto Globe of the 8th March:—

“ [By Telegraph from our own Correspondent.]

“WINNIPEG, Man., March 7.—The St. Paul Pioneer Press states editorially that the purchasers of the bonds of the St. Paul and Pacific Railway are Messrs. Hill and Kittson, associated with Mr. Stephens of the Bank of Montreal, and Mr. Donald A. Smith. It asserts that, through the influence of the latter, the support and co-operation of the Dominion Government have been obtained in the adjustment of their connections with the railway system of Manitoba.

“It affirms also that they have, in fact, effected a lease on favourable terms of the Pembina Branch, and that this intimate alliance furnishes an ample guarantee that it will be forever free of the competition of the Chicago lines.”

The article concludes:—“It is deemed proper to make public these facts to disabuse antagonistic parties of misapprehensions which may lead to a useless waste of valuable time.”

A few days later, a question as to the truthfulness of the whole or any part of this report, was asked of the Premier in the House, and his reply that some correspondence had taken place between Mr. Stephens and the Government was the ground of making the present motion. It was quite evident that, if the statement of the Premier was true, that no lease had been effected to these parties, that they must be using the grossest falsehoods for the purpose of preventing the Northern Pacific and other railroads from asking that connection with our line which they were seeking themselves. It is quite apparent as well that, if they succeed in their object, Manitoba may expect no mercy in the way of reduced freight; and they can, and probably will, in the interest of their eastern railway connections, compel all freight to take the all-rail route, and cut off the lake trade completely. It would be a different matter if these parties only sought a running-right over our road and if they agreed on our line and their own to carry freight at a reasonable rate; but it will be found that they will seek to shackle themselves with no such conditions, and instead of accepting on the Government road the Government price on the Intercolonial which was, he believed, 47½c. per ton per hundred miles, and on the Chicago and North Western 77½c. per ton per hundred miles, as the price on their own line, their rates would be found to more nearly assimilate to those of the notorious Kittson Red River line, with whom they are in league, or rather, form part and parcel. He thought it an act of madness to lease the Pembina Branch at all. Why not run it, and allow any railroad which chose to make a connection and run its cars over it at a certain fixed rate? A protection of this sort was due to the Province of Manitoba, and while it might be and probably had been, urged by the parties named, that they would not go on with the completion of the St. Vincent Branch without the Government gave them the terms which they were assumed already to have got, it must be remembered that, having bought the lands, they had no choice except to continue the work or forfeit the land grant which made those western roads so valuable.

MR. BOWELL said the Government, though they asked this power, should consider well before entering into any arrangement with the St. Paul and Northern Pacific Company or its branch, by which a monopoly would be created for ten years to come, for all the traffic from the North-West. If he understood this scheme, speculators had purchased these St. Paul Northern Pacific bonds, which belonged to some people in Germany, to the amount of some fifteen or twenty million dollars, for a mere trifle, comparatively. Having invested their money in these bonds, they now desired to continue the line, and to make such arrangements with the Canadian Government as would make that property valuable. The hon. the First Minister had told the House that, unless the Government was put in a position to lease them the upper portion of the line, or to enter into certain arrangements with them, that this company would not continue their road westward. The Government should be very cautious about placing this power in the hands of a number of gentlemen who had invested money in the purchase of these bonds for the purpose of acquiring the property, and for the extension of the line in order to secure the means of traffic which must necessarily flow eastwards from the North-West, the present trade as well as the enormous traffic which would have to come eastward in a very short time, particularly when they understood that it would be owned by those parties who had exacted enormous freight rates from the people of the North-West,—rates so enormous that they almost doubled the cost of the goods taken into that country. If the statement made by the hon. member for Lisgar was true, and he had no doubt it was, the gentlemen connected with the Northern Pacific Railway were prepared to construct a line, if they could make certain arrangements from Detroit station, on the Northern Pacific, to Pembina, which made the route from fifty to sixty miles shorter. The Government should have the power to give that line the same advantage which they gave to the Northern Pacific Railway if, by so doing, they would shorten the distance from Pembina to Duluth, by that route, some fifty or sixty miles. It seemed like taking power to perpetuate, or at least to place, for ten years, in the hands of those who had become wealthy out of the Kittson line of steamers, the control of the traffic from the North-West. He did not pretend to say that the Government should not have the power to make any arrangements to facilitate the bringing of traffic from and to the North-West, but he did say that Parliament should be very cautious how they entered into an arrangement which would affect other competing lines, and tend to continue the enormous rates paid for traffic to and from that territory. He believed it would be much better to take the view of the hon. member for Marquette, and allow the present state of affairs to remain a year or two longer, than to rush into this scheme and enter into a bargain which might materially affect the prosperity of the North-West in the future. And, he believed, it would be better that an all-rail route through our country should be pushed forward with much more energy than it had been in the past, and that we should not be dependent, either directly or indirectly, upon any American line. If there was disposition shown to accomplish this desirable object, it would be more satisfactory to the people of the North-West, and of the Dominion generally, than any piecemeal scheme, either by water-stretches or by effecting leases with lines which ran from American territory. There was this danger: that, once a line had been established, and the carrying of freight began over that line, and it was carried into the United States, those connected with this St. Paul Pacific Company would endeavour, by every possible means, to keep that traffic which they had secured, and thereby injure the carrying trade which would otherwise come through this country. The Government should be very cautious, and exercise this power judiciously and in the interests of the Dominion. There might be connected with it—and this very proposition seemed to warrant the supposition—persons who were deeply interested in this Kittson line, and who had political influence which they used to their own advantage and to the detriment of this country.

Mr. CURRIER said he could understand the position the Government were placed in, in negotiating with these different railway interests, for the purpose of carrying out this scheme of giving railway communication to the North-West. Any railway company which would undertake to extend their line to Pembina, would deserve, and he could not blame them for it, to have the sole business of that line, and, therefore, it was scarcely possible that the Government could keep themselves open to make arrangements with more than one line of railway to extend their lines to Pembina. No railway, he fancied, would wish to make an arrangement unless they got a monopoly of the whole trade. If the Government took this stand: that they would not arrange with this Company except that they should be open to arrange with any other one upon the same terms, then no company would undertake to extend the line. Therefore, they could see what position the Government was placed in. No doubt, the trade of the North-West was going to be diverted back to the States, and, for his part, he had only to say that he held the Government responsible for not having already a road completed between Thunder Bay and the North-West. If the Government had directed their attention in that direction, the road would have been built before to-day between Thunder Bay and Pembina. The country would hold the Government responsible for their failure in doing this. As regarded the term for which they would make the arrangement, he did not see it made any difference, whether five, ten or twenty years, because it must continue until the line would be built in our own country.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. SMITH (Selkirk) said that, being intimately acquainted with the North-West, and being a representative of that part of the country, he had necessarily taken very great interest in endeavouring to obtain railway communication with Manitoba as soon as possible. As far back as two years, or even more than two years, he understood it might be possible to make some arrangement which would get rid of the great hindrance in the way of opening up communication with the American lines at Glyndon. However, after many endeavours—he spoke of endeavours on his own part—it was not until quite recently anyone had been found who would take that same interest in it he had felt himself. Fortunately for the Dominion, and certainly most fortunately for the North-West, some gentlemen of enterprise and of means were at length induced to look into the matter, and he believed they had been able to make arrangements by which they would be prepared to open up communication with the North-West—that was, with Pembina. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Schultz), as he understood from what had been stated by the hon. member for North Hastings (Mr. Bowell), for he did not personally hear the remarks of that hon. member, appeared to have stated that the Northern Pacific Railway Company was prepared to build a line to Manitoba. He (Mr. Smith) believed—and he had the best reasons for believing—that the company had not any such intention. During the past four or five years it had been found that it was utterly useless to build on the Canadian side, as no one would take up the question of building a railway on this side of the line, and the difficulties appeared to be insuperable. Many efforts were made, but at length the difficulty was partially surmounted, and gentlemen in this country took upon themselves very heavy responsibility indeed. They seemed a very large amount of bonds, but not for the trifling sum of which the hon. member for North Hastings had spoken—and he (Mr. Smith) spoke with knowledge in regard to the matter. He could not state the exact amount, nor was it necessary that it should be given, but it was a good many millions of dollars, which, though he did not know how it might be with the hon. member for North Hastings, was generally considered, and especially in the present time of depression, a very considerable sum. Those gentlemen went to the Government and asked them, that, in consideration of extending the line upwards of seventy miles through a district which, at the present time, was without settlement, and from which there could not be any local traffic whatever, they should obtain running powers on certain conditions on the Pembina Branch; but, at the same time, he was fully convinced that those gentlemen did not desire, or would not require from the Government, even if the Government were prepared to give it to them—which he was assured they would not—anything but what could be fully justified to every hon. member who would take a reasonable view of it. He believed those gentlemen would be quite prepared, with respect to rates, to say that they would not desire to charge more when there was no competition than on that portion of their line on which they came into competition with other railroads, thus showing that they were prepared to act in the most fair manner to the people of the North-West. He had obtained particulars in regard to the rates charged at the present time by different companies in the North-West, but he had not the details at hand, as he did not expect the subject to come up to-day. Nevertheless, he might mention one or two matters which would show the House that the heavy rates and great extortion spoken of did not rest with the Red River Transportation Company. The first class passage was, last year, and had been for two or three years, $20. Of that amount, the Northern Pacific would not accept anything less than $10 for carrying passengers 244 miles to Glyndon, which was made within twelve hours. From that point to Fisher's Landing, or rather Crookston, the other portion of the line belonging to the Red River Transportation Company, a distance of 70 miles, $2.50 was charged. There remained the transit by the Red River Transportation Company for a distance of 380 miles, occupying two or three days on the river, for which $7.50 was charged. The House would thus see that for transportation over 244 miles the Northern Pacific obtained $10, that for 70 miles $2.50 was exacted, and that for 380 miles, extending over two or three days, only $7.50 was paid. For second class passage, $12 was paid for the whole distance, of which $6 was taken by the Northern Pacific for 244 miles, while the Red River Transportation Company obtained an amount in the same proportion as he had mentioned for the first class passengers. For Government emigrants, $10 was paid from Duluth to Winnipeg, of which sum one-half went to the Northern Pacific and the balance to the railway from Glyndon, northward, and the Transportation Company. With respect to freights, their experience had been precisely similar.

MR. PLUMB enquired how much the freight was from Montreal to Winnipeg.

Mr. SMITH (Selkirk) said he could not state the sum, but he would endeavour to indicate what were the charges for transporting wheat out of the country, which was an important question to the farmers of the North-West. Last year, after a good deal of difficulty with the Northern Pacific Company, it was arranged that wheat should be carried at 40c. per 100lb., making 24c. per bushel, from Winnipeg to Duluth. Of that sum, the Northern Pacific received 17½c. for carrying it 244 miles; the railway from Glynndon to Crookston, 5c., and the Red River Transportation, for carrying it 380 miles, 17½c., the same sum as the Northern Pacific Railway. But there was a great difference between the services of the two companies, as every hon. member would perceive. The Transportation Company took the wheat on board their steamers at Winnipeg in bags. They engaged, in return for the 17½c., to land it, at their own expense, at Fisher's Landing, and also to place it on board the cars in bulk, bringing back the bags free of charge to Winnipeg. The railway company, on the other hand, had no expense whatever, except the hauling of it to Duluth, and they had no delivery to make. It was there handed over to the Elevating Company, and the charge for handling fell upon the wheat. It would be seen, therefore, that, in every case, the Northern Pacific Company obtained the lion's share of the freight charge, and it was rather hard that efforts should be made to run to the ground the Red River Transportation Company, as had been done. He was free to admit that, probably, the latter company had done very well and was making very fair profits, which was what other persons, under similiar circumstances, would be inclined to do, for even the hon. member for North Hastings would hardly refuse eight or or nine per cent. interest, and state that five was sufficient.

Mr. BOWELL: That would depend, in a great measure, whether I had a monopoly of the market.

Mr. SMITH said that, of course, the hon. member might not have exhibited as much moderation as the Red River Transportation Company. That was very probable since the hon. gentleman had stated it would depend altogether on having a monopoly or not.

Mr. BOWELL asked whether it was true that the company divided 80 per cent. profit on last year's transactions.

Mr. SMITH said, not having been in any way personally interested in that company, even to the extent of a sixpence, he had no right to have any knowledge of its internal affairs. He desired, however, to point out that the responsibility for the heavy rates, which he admitted were heavy, did not lie at the door of the Red River Transportation Company alone, which obtained only a small share of those rates, the greater portion being taken by the Northern Pacific—that road which the hon. member for Lisgar would desire to see preferred to the St. Paul and Pacific. He (Mr. Smith) had the best ground for knowing that the Northern Pacific Company had no intention whatever of building any road to Winnipeg; and he believed further that, if the Government were not to avail themselves of any fair and reasonable proposition which might now be made of getting communication there, the people of the North-West might remain five years more, as they had already remained many years, without railway communication—that was to say, until the line was completed through from Thunder Bay. He would like to have such a proposition submitted to the people of the North-West and see how they would view it. He would ask the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Ryan) how such a proposition would be received in Manitoba. He would refer that hon. gentleman to a statement in the Winnipeg Free Press, of the 26th ult., which said that the people of the North-West were most anxious to have the road, and trusted the Government would make arrangements to have the railway carried there as rapidly as it could be done. They said the opposition to the proposal was attributable to motives to which he did not care to refer. He desired to reiterate the statement that he had learned from those who were interested in the completion of the road, that they had no desire to obtain from the Government anything but what could be justified in reason to both sides of the House.

Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. SCHULTZ said that, from remarks which had fallen from some of the speakers, it was evident that some hon. gentlemen took the view that the persons now applying for the lease of the Pembina Branch had made great sacrifices in securing the bonds of the St. Paul and Pacific Railway, and consequently merited liberal arrangements being made with them for the Pembina Branch and that, if not given a lease on the terms they asked, they might not build the fifty-five miles of uncompleted road to St. Vincent at all, and thus put off indefinitely railroad communication with the Province. Now, he would endeavour to show the utter fallacy of these pretences. He could not say exactly the price paid by these parties for the bonds, but it was understood to be as low as ten cents on the dollar for some classes of them, and it must be remembered that these bonds carried with them a very large and very valuable land grant, and if the Pembina Branch were never completed, the transaction, in view of the large price likely to be obtained for these lands, would be a profitable one. In reference to the threat, if any such were made, not to go on with the uncompleted portion of the St. Paul and Pacific St. Vincent Branch without they had the lease of the Pembina Branch for a number of years, such a threat was the sheerest nonsense, because the land grant was a conditional one, and the parties who bought the lands must complete the road at once, or forfeit the land grant in question. It has been assumed, too, that this purchase alone could have cut the knot which occasioned the deadlock between the Amsterdam holders of the bonds and the American management of the road, but that was equally a fallacy; for, while it was true that the swindled bondholders had resolved not to complete the road while they were at the mercy of the American management, yet the Legislature of the State of Minnesota had intended, at their Session this winter, to have solved the problem by declaring a forfeiture of the land grant of the uncompleted portions of the road, and given it to any new company which would have completed it. From these facts, it would be seen that the parties now seeking this lease had no right to ask any special advantage, especially when to give them that advantage would preclude the possibility of competition over the American lines, and probably shut off the advantage of lake transportation from Duluth completely, with its consequent injury to the shipping interests of the Dominion. In reference to the defence of the Kittson Red River Line by the hon. member for Selkirk, he (Mr. Schultz) was amazed to find that anyone who had been over that line should attempt to defend this most iniquitous monopoly. Had his hon. friend never seen our Ontario emigrants, who took the cheapest class of passage to save their little store of money to aid them in their efforts to make homes in the North-West, huddled like sheep and treated like hogs on the lower decks of those very steamers? Did he ever know anything but the grossest imposition on freight in passage and on extra baggage; and, while he asserted, in answer to the member for North Hastings, that he did not know what were the dividends of this monopoly last year, could he tell the House what share they got of the $125,000 which was down in the Public Accounts as being paid to N. W. Kittson, of St. Paul, for the transportation of steel rails? Again, the hon. gentleman endeavoured to show the leniency of the line in charging only 17½c. per 100 pounds on grain transported to Fisher's Landing, forgetting to state that this was in boats which would have returned empty but for this freight. Why, did the hon. gentleman not know that this price for 300 miles of slack-water navigation was double the cost of transporting wheat across the Atlantic? Did he not know that wheat might be sent the whole length of the Mississippi for half this cost, and could be transported even from Chicago to New York for less? Enough was known about this notorious monopoly to cause the Government to pause before they granted to its owners that which they might make the means of creating a Kittson line monopoly on land.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said that the hon. member for Lisgar was not one bit surprised or amazed at hearing him speak as he had done, though the hon. gentleman professed to be so surprised. He (Mr. Smith) had never spoken of or said anything with regard to the moderation of the charges in the North-West. He wished simply to compare the rates, and show what proportion was received by the Transportation Company. It was all very well for the hon. gentleman to speak of the curses of emigrants, and of what was said by people who really did not understand the position; and he might go further—which he hardly cared to do—and say that the hon. gentleman was, perhaps, very greatly instrumental himself in giving this false idea as to what had been done and received by the Transportation Company in the North-West. The hon. gentleman said that he (Mr. Smith) could point out how much of the money paid by this Government to the Transportation Company was obtained by the Hudson Bay Company. He could do more, if he cared to do it; he could show that of the sum of $32,000 received by the hon. gentleman, said to be for loss sustained by the seizure, at Winnipeg, in the winter of 1869 and 1870, of certain goods, a portion of this amount was paid for goods which were still remaining at Georgetown in Minnesota, and which were removed thence two or three years after the payments were made. He would have no difficulty in showing and proving that such was the case.

MR. SCHULTZ: I rise to a question of order. I ask whether this is pertinent to the discussion before the Committee? I have, however, no objection to the hon. gentleman continuing on this subject if I am allowed the privilege of reply?

THE CHAIRMAN: This is not very pertinent to the discussion, I must say.

MR. SMITH said he had no desire to say anything more with regard to this long-past matter, but the hon. member for Lisgar had spoken of matters of which he evidently knew nothing, and made assertions in the House which he (Mr. Smith) must certainly say he would be amazed to hear if they came from any hon. member who understood the position, which he certainly must believe the hon. gentleman did not. The hon. gentleman stated that the Legislature of Minnesota had taken such action as made it imperative on some company to build this line immediately, and that this company d.d not do so, then the lands in question would fall into the hands of any other company that would build the line immediately. The hon. gentleman must know that the time up to which it was imperative on any company to do so, extended over some years yet to elapse; and he also knew he (Mr. Smith) should suppose that it would be no difficult matter for these companies to secure an extension of that power, if absolutely necessary. He really did not care to go into the different matters of which the hon. gentleman had spoken, because there was no substance in the whole of them. It was simple assertion on the hon. gentleman's part, and assertion with regard to matters of which the hon. gentleman really knew nothing. He could only repeat that the difficulty in getting control of these lines, was such as certainly would have made a very great many people hesitate before they would have had anything to do with it.

MR. SCHULTZ.

MR. SCHULTZ said that he was aware that this subject was wide of the debate before the Committee, and that he must not be unparliamentary in the denial that he must give to the hon. member for Selkirk, and he would content himself simply with commending to that hon. gentlemen the story of a gentleman in New York who, not wishing to state directly his opinion of the veracity of a person he believed to be a consummate liar, said of him: "That all he could say, was, that if he should meet him going down Broadway with Ananias and Sapphira he should take all three to belong to the same family."

MR. RYAN said that the hon. member for Selkirk had stated that the Northern Pacific Railroad had no in-elination to complete that portion of their line from Detroit to Pembina, which would be necessary to make a competing line. It was quite evident that the hon. gentleman was not in the House when a telegram was read by the hon. member for Lisgar on this subject.

MR. SMITH: I was not.

MR. RYAN said that, for the hon. gentleman's information, he would read this telegram, which was as follows:

"By Telegraph from our own Correspondent.

WINNIPEG, MAN., March 7th.

"The St. Paul Pioneer Press states editorially that the purchasers of the bonds of the St. Paul and Pacific Railway are Messrs. Hill & Kittson, associated with Mr. Stephens, of the Bank of Montreal, and Mr. Donald A. Smith. It asserts that, through the influence of the latter, the support and co-operation of the Dominion Government have been obtained in the adjustment of their connections with the railway system of Manitoba."

It affirmed also:

"That they have, in fact, effected a lease, on favourable terms, of the Pembina Branch, and that this intimate alliance furnishes an ample guarantee that it will be forever free of the competition of the Chicago lines."

He desired to call the attention of the hon. member for Selkirk particularly to the following paragraph. The article concluded:

"It is deemed proper to make public these facts to disabuse antagonist parties of misapprehensions, which may lead to a useless waste of valuable time."

What was the meaning of the last paragraph? If it meant anything, it meant that there were other competing lines and other railroads which were anxious and willing to form a connection with the Pembina Branch; and when they took into consideration the circumstances which accompanied the writing of this paragraph, and reflected on the fact that it was not written in Winnipeg or Ottawa, where there might very properly be supposed to be an imperfect knowledge of all the circumstances of the case, but in St. Paul where were the parties who had the best means of knowing exactly what they were writing about, he thought the House would agree with him that there was not only reason to suppose, but that the parties in whose interest this article was written, had had very great fears that a competing line would be built from Detroit, or some other point, to connect with the Pembina Branch.

MR. SMITH: I would give the hon. gentleman the assurance that the parties he speaks of in connection with this paragraph had nothing to do whatever with what is made to appear there. I have this on their own authority, because I brought that particular matter to their knowledge. They did not inspire it in any way.

MR. GIBBS (South Ontario): The hon. member for Lisgar asks the hon. member for Selkirk, who could not have heard the question, to what parties does he now refer?

MR. SMITH: I referred to the persons who have taken an interest in this matter in connection with the St. Paul and Pacific Road.

MR. SCHULTZ: Who are they?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The hon. gentleman says he has the authority of certain persons for making a statement, and, when asked, he will not say who they are.

MR. SMITH: I do not think it is necessary to do so.

MR. RYAN said that since the hon. member for Selkirk was in such a very gracious and explanatory mood, perhaps, he would explain the correspondence which had taken place between the hon. member for Lisgar and the authorities of the Northern Pacific Railroad, in which the former had stated that the latter had expressed themselves as not only ready but even anxious to construct a line from Detroit to Pembina. What would the effect be if the Government chose, under the provisions of this Bill, to give a lease for ten years of the Pembina Branch to the St. Paul and Pacific Railway? This would be simply to hand over the commerce of the whole North-West to, and to bind hand and foot, beyond the possibility of redemption by any effort on the part of the people of Manitoba, to the St. Paul and Pacific Railway. What did it matter to the manufacturers of Canada, who were desirous of getting their goods into that country, or to the people of Manitoba, who were desirous of getting their grain out of it, whether there was a railroad communicating with it or not, if the rates under the railroad tariff were not materially less than those which at present existed? And of this they could have no guarantee. The hon. member for Selkirk on this occasion, and on several other occasions, seemed to have taken a particular anxiety, to have entertained very grave doubts as to the correctness of his (Mr. Ryan) representing the sentiments of his constituents. The hon. gentleman had done him the honor to state that the Manitoba Free Press, which he (Mr. Smith) assumed to be a more authentic organ for the expression of the sentiments of his constituents than he (Mr. Ryan) himself was, did not hold opinions in unison with his on this subject. For the benefit of the hon. member for Selkirk and of the House, he would state exactly what his sentiments on this question were. He believed that the Government of Canada, which handed over the traffic of the North-West by making a lease for any number of years to the St. Paul and Pacific Railroad Company, without inserting some provision in the lease which would make a maximum freight rate from Winnipeg to Glynndon, would do a very serious injustice to the country; and he was prepared, as a Manitoba representative, to state that the Government would then do something which they ought not to do in the interest of Manitoba. The Government ought merely to give a running right. If they presumed to give more than a running right, and leased the road, without strictly regulating the rate for freight between Winnipeg and Glynndon, from which point they could have competition between the Northern Pacific and the St. Paul and Pacific.

MR. MACKENZIE: I think that this hon. gentleman and his colleague also, have discussed a great deal about matters which I fully explained, I believe, when they were not in the House. I might tell them that no lease, as a matter of course, will be made that does not entirely control the rates from Duluth.

MR. RYAN.

MR. RYAN said that all he had to say was, that he was extremely thankful to the hon. member for Selkirk for the extreme anxiety which he had manifested with regard to his (Mr. Ryan's) constituents. He had to tell the hon. gentleman that he was quite prepared.

THE CHAIRMAN: That is foreign to the subject.

MR. RYAN: It is foreign to the subject, but I am only replying to what the hon. member for Selkirk did not state, but insinuated that I misrepresented the sentiments of my constituents.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk): I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I did not say anything particularly about his constituents; I spoke of the people of Manitoba generally. I feel, nay, I am convinced, that if the people of Manitoba are deprived of railway communication, as soon as it is practicable to get it—and I understand the hon. gentleman wishes to deprive them of it—either by way of Thunder Bay or some other route, they would not be slow in expressing their opinion, and saying they insist on having a railway to Winnipeg as soon as possible.

MR. RYAN said he did not make use of the expression attributed to him by the hon. member for Selkirk. What he did say was, that he thought it was impossible for the Government to get a connection with the Pembina branch, and handing over the whole traffic of that part of the country for the next ten years without creating an unjust monopoly. He said that in such a case it would be better to pause even for a year or two before causing such injustice. He might remark also, that with respect to this or other public questions affecting the Province from which he came, as a representative and otherwise, he would be prepared to discuss them with the hon. member for Selkirk before either of their constituents.

MR. TROW said, as a rule, it was found that members from distant Provinces worked in harmony, more particularly with regard to subjects which tended to the development of the resources of their Province. Unfortunately, the members from Manitoba were the reverse. They were more like Kilkenny cats than anything else, and were continually quarrelling in regard to matters connected with their Province. Twelve months ago he was in harmony with the member for Marquette and the member for Lisgar, in reference to the propriety of urging upon the Government the necessity for increased communication by rail to their particular Province. These hon. gentlemen pressed this matter very strenuously upon the notice of the Government, and now that the Government were taking steps to do what they were wanting twelve months ago, they tried to place stumbling blocks in the way. The people wished immediate railway communication in order that they might obtain an outlet for the resources of that great country, and it was a matter of indifference to them what particular line was given them. The terms of the proposed lease were not stated, but every confidence might be placed in the Government who promised that when the conditions were proposed they would be rigidly enforced. No particular line was stated in the Bill, and it was intended that all lines should connect with the Pembina branch.

Mr. BOWELL said there was one point in connection with this matter which he wished the House to understand. The hon. member for Selkirk, when speaking a few moments ago, referred to some remarks which he (Mr. Bowell) had made. The hon. gentleman said he had spoken contemptuously about a few million dollars. He had no recollection of using the words "a few millions" or speaking contemptuously of any amount of money. What he did say was, that those Dutch bondholders held bonds upon this road to the amount of some $15,000,000 or $20,000,000, and that some parties (he mentioned no names) had purchased those bonds for what was practically a small amount. He cast no ridicule on those gentlemen, nor did he find fault with the speculation into which they had entered. But, if they did invest a few millions, then his argument was still stronger than if it were a contemptible sum, because, the more they invested, the greater would be their anxiety to secure a lease of this road, so that the freights on the traffic for the next ten years might go into their pockets. Reference was made to the transaction in a paragraph which had already been quoted. That paragraph said: "The purchasers of the bonds of the St. Paul and Pacific Railway are Messrs. Hill & Kittson, associated with Mr. Stephens, of the Montreal Bank, and Mr. Donald A. Smith." The House, he believed, understood that to mean Mr. Donald A. Smith, member for Selkirk. This paragraph had already been read twice, and the hon. gentleman had not yet denied its accuracy. The House must, therefore, infer that the statement was correct. It mattered not to the House how much these gentlemen had paid, but, if what was stated in the paragraph was matter of fact, then they had the extraordinary spectacle in in that House of the champion of this proposed lease using his power and influence as a very humble and obedient supporter of the Government to secure to himself and his partners in this transaction the advantage of a lease. Either this was true, or it was not. He was inclined to infer its truth from the fact that the hon. gentleman had not denied a charge of this kind made twice in the House. If it were not true, one would have supposed that he would at once have disavowed any connection with this road, and shown that he was disinterested in seeking this lease. It would have been with a much better grace if the hon. gentleman had not attempted upon this occasion to raise an unseemly debate upon questions which were fully discussed, as would be found from the Hansard, a few years ago but confined himself exclusively to the effect which the granting of this lease would have on the trade and commerce of the country. He believed every member of the House, whether on the Ministerial side or in Opposition, had but one object in view with regard to this matter; at least he ought to have.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Except the hon. member for Selkirk.

MR. BOWELL: Except, as suggested in the paragraph which I have read, the hon. member for Selkirk, who has another object, and that is: to secure the lease which the Government ask power to grant to this company, thereby benefitting himself individually. He (Mr. Bowell) thought that equal running rights should be given to other companies over every line which Government could control, in order that they might do that which he was sure the Minister of Public Works wished to do, that was: to prevent a monopoly in the carrying trade of the North-West for ten years, or until they could build their own railroad. In the Province from which he came, and which the hon. the Premier knew well, the legislation in matters of this kind provided that equal running rights and powers be given over all roads in which Government funds were invested, or to which they lent any aid either by subsidy or otherwise. He thought the same principle should be adopted here. He did not object to a running right being given to this particular line, but he objected to such rights being confined to any one particular line, or to those gentlemen who had purchased bonds for from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 for a small sum. More particularly should they guard against this when they were told in public journals, and not denied by the gentleman implicated, that a member of the House was interested in securing for himself and his partners that which outsiders only were allowed. The hon. gentleman had not denied the charge which had been made against him, and he (Mr. Bowell) thought he was perfectly justified in making the observations which he had used.

MR. SMITH (Selkirk) said he felt humble, so very humble, under the correction of the hon. member for North Hastings, but was consoled at finding that the hon. gentleman accounted him among millionaires. He (Mr. Smith) should, no doubt, be proud to think that he was so considered. He really did not know, however, why he had been attacked as he had been. The Bill now under consideration was merely to empower the Government to make some arrangements for the completion of the American line to Pembina, and if the agreement which must be brought before Parliament was such as the House could not approve, objection could then be taken to it; but he could not, in the present stage of the question, see the necessity for much that had been said about it. The hon. member for North Hastings and other hon. member had not yet before them sufficient information to enable them to form a correct judgment on the subject. He (Mr. Smith) had no desire to use any influence one way or the other, and did not think that anything should be done which was not perfectly just and in the interest of the country.

MR. BOWELL.

MR. RYAN said the Minister of Public Works was kind enough to inform him that no law would be passed without making provision as to the rate of freight between Winnipeg and Duluth. As a representative from the Province of Manitoba, he heard that declaration with a great deal of satisfaction, and although some might prefer that nothing more than a running right should be given, still, if the Government deemed it necessary to give something more than a running right, and, on the other hand, secure a favourable rate of freight between Winnipeg and Duluth, any slight demur which might have existed with regard to this point, would be in a great measure removed.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he assumed the hon. member for Selkirk had an interest in this railway—that, indeed, was admitted—and there was seen the indecent spectacle of an hon. gentleman coming to the House as an advocate and pressing this lease in his own interest. When the hon. member for Lisgar rose, in the interests of the people of Manitoba, to make a statement, the hon. member for Selkirk tried to throw a doubt across the floor of the House as to the veracity of the hon. gentleman. He, as an interested party, impugned the accuracy of a disinterested party; he advocated more warmly and strongly this Bill, which was in his own interest, and which would put money in his own pocket, than the Minister who introduced it. The hon. gentleman admitted he was a partner in this concern, and the House should know something about it.

MR. SMITH: I beg the right hon. gentleman's pardon. I have admitted no such thing; the hon. gentleman, I hope, is not my father confessor?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The hon. gentleman has not denied it, and there is no doubt that, if he could have done so, he would. A little while ago he denied positively that he had any interest in the Kittson line, because he could say so, but he does not deny that he has an interest in the St. Paul line.

MR. SMITH: Because it is not necessary.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The hon. gentleman has no right to interrupt me. He says it is not necessary to explain; I say it is. He knows that no man who has an interest in a measure has a right to advocate it. Perhaps, by-and-bye, his right to vote will be challenged on that ground.

MR. MACKENZIE: On this Bill? Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that anyone is precluded from voting on this Bill?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said the hon. the Premier had agreed to provide in this Bill that the contract must be approved by Parliament, and the hon. gentleman would then be in a position—if he was here—to say whether he had an interest in this line or not, and, if he had an interest, he could not vote upon it. But the paragraph went on to say:

"It affirms, also, that they have, in fact, effected a lease on favourable terms, of the Pembina Branch, and that the intimate alliance furnishes an ample guarantee that it will be forever free of the competition of the Chicago line."

The article concludes:

"It is deemed proper to make public these facts to disabuse antagonist parties of misapprehensions which may lead to a waste of valuable time."

They were informed by the Premier that negotiations had been going on, but he did not tell the House how far. If the terms had been substantially arranged, if there was an understanding of any kind arrived at, it was the duty of the hon. the Premier to have informed the House of the facts before asking them to vote. It was neither right nor just that the hon. member for Selkirk should be allowed to advocate this lease. The hon. member for Selkirk stated that the hon. member for Lisgar was mistaken when he said the directors of the Northern Pacific road were ready to go into this matter. The hon. member for Lisgar said he had a statement in writing to the effect that the directors of the Northern Pacific road were ready to offer for the contract, if permitted. The hon. gentleman had also quoted a statement to the effect that the Wisconsin Railway Company also was prepared to go into the matter. The arguments used by his hon. friend from Lisgar and Marquette were unanswerable when they said it was unadvisable that one line should have a monopoly of the traffic for ten years. He considered that to give such a monopoly was not only an injustice, but a fraudulent measure. The article which had been so often quoted was printed because it was deemed proper to disabuse antagonistic parties of misapprehension, and thus save valuable time. The hon. gentleman said it was not necessary for him to reply to the question which had been put to him. He (Sir John A. Macdonald) thought it was desirable to do so, because this article seemed to say, in behalf of the bondholders of the St. Paul line: "We have made a bargain; we have got ahead of you; do not throw away valuable time; we have a monopoly for ten years." He did not believe that the Committee or Parliament or the country would sustain such conduct.

MR. SMITH said he considered it very unseemly and very improper of the right hon. gentleman to speak of any member in that House as he had done of him. The right hon. gentleman had no right to call upon him in that way; he had no right to charge him with being unable to deny what had been said regarding his supposed connection with the St. Paul Railway. He believed his word was as good, and would be as readily accepted as that of the right hon. gentleman, though he did hold a very high position.

MR. KIRKPATRICK: You have not given it.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I have not impugned the hon. gentleman's word; my complaint is that he will not give it.

MR. SMITH said it was neither necessary nor desirable to satisfy the right hon. gentleman's curiosity. Just one word as to what had been said about the Northern Pacific Railway Company. He did not, in making his previous remarks, speak lightly. He had it on the written authority of the President of that road that the directors had no intention of continuing their road to Pembina or St. Vincent. With regard to voting, he trusted he knew his duty, and could maintain his honour just as well as the right hon. gentleman. It would be quite time enough for him to presume to speak as he had done, when he found that he (Mr. Smith) was guilty of anything of which he ought to be ashamed.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: It is quite as indecent for the hon. gentleman to advocate a scheme in which he is interested, as it would be for him to vote.

MR. SMITH: I advocate no scheme, but support a Bill which makes no reference to any individual or any particular company. I have merely spoken on the necessity for establishing railway communication with Manitoba as soon as possible, and in doing so, I am confident that I but express the views of my constituents and the people of that Province generally.

MR. WHITE (East Hastings) said this was a serious matter for the House to take into consideration. In the first place, an hon. member was accused of being interested in the proposed lease, and on being asked by the hon. member for Kingston to deny that statement, he said: "The people of this country will judge of my word, and accept it as readily as they would that of the hon. member for Kingston." There seemed to be a party in the House—a very prominent party—who cared more for the Hudson Bay Company, the Montreal Bank, and private matters, than for the interests of the people of Manitoba; and yet one of these gentleman replied to a charge made against him by standing up and saying: "My word will be taken before your word." No one would believe that the hon. member for Selkirk cared as much for the interests of the country generally as he did for his own pocket. Perhaps that was not exactly a Parliamentary expression.

MR. SMITH.

THE CHAIRMAN: It is certainly not pertinent to the subject.

MR. YOUNG: I rise to a question of order. I would like to know what is the question before the Chair. I think the hon. gentleman has not been speaking to the question at all, and I desire your ruling on the point.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I rise to speak on the question of order. The hon. member for Waterloo rises to a question of order, and, at the same time, asks what is before the Chair. That seems to me to be nothing but an unparliamentary interruption.

MR. YOUNG said the hon. gentleman was quite out of order in the remarks he had made. He thought he had sufficiently indicated that what the hon. gentleman was saying had no connection with the subject under discussion, and, therefore, was out of order. He wished the ruling of the Chairman on that point.

MR. WHITE said the hon. member for Waterloo ought to be Speaker of the House. He (Mr. White) ought not, perhaps, to have made use of the expression "pocket," in the sense he did; he meant that the hon. member for Selkirk was an interested party.

MR. YOUNG: I rise again to ask if the hon. gentleman is in order in not speaking to the Bill?

MR. WHITE: What right have you to ask?

MR. YOUNG: I should like to hear your opinion, Mr. Chairman.

THE CHAIRMAN (Mr. Devlin): It is extremely difficult to say he is not in order, because he refers to the subject matter of the Bill, though he may perhaps introduce some matter rather outside of it.

MR. WHITE: Thank you; I am proud there is a fellow-countryman of mine in the Chair, to do justice.

MR. YOUNG: Perhaps that accounts for the decision.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

MR. WHITE said this Bill was a very short one and a very important one. It was one in which the people of this country, and especially the people of Manitoba, would certainly take a great deal of interest. We were encouraging people from England, Ireland, Scotland and other countries to go to Manitoba; we told these people that it was a fine country, and that they could certainly raise a great deal of grain to sell. But the great trouble was how they could get the produce out of the country to market. We told them that we were building a line from Winnipeg to the frontier; and now the House was asked to pass a Bill to lease that road for ten years to a company, which was going to build a piece of railway to connect with this road. It was said in the Bill that the Government was to place the contract or agreement upon the table of Parliament, and if no objection was taken to it for a specified length of time, it would become law. If it was true that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Smith), who held a very prominent position in the House, who was a director of the Bank of Montreal, and he (Mr. White) believed a prominent officer of the Hudson Bay Company, was interested in this matter, with his influence, with the influence of the Bank of Montreal, the influence of the Government; and, perhaps, also, of some of the members of the Opposition, what would be the use of any members of this House attempting to prevent that contract becoming law? The hon. the First Minister had promised that the contract would be guarded in such a way that parties living in Manitoba would have a fair rate fixed for freight brought over that road. Why, he would ask, when we got that road ready for use at the expense of the country, did we not hold it in our own hands, and let all parties compete over it so as to make cheap freights? He thought the First Minister should bear in mind that he held a very peculiar position in this country. He knew what the farmers wanted, and what the mechanics wanted, because he (Mr. Mackenzie) was a mechanic himself, and he knew what the business men of this country required; but this Bill was not in the interests of the country. When they went to the country soon, surely after carrying the last election as they did by the aid of the Ontario Bank, the Government did not want the powerful influence of the Bank of Montreal to assist them. It seemed that the Bank of Montreal was to furnish the funds and get the lease, and have the control of this matter; and that bank was a powerful influence in this country. He hoped the Bill would not pass without amendments being made which would render it acceptable to the people of this country. In conclusion, he would ask the First Minister, though, perhaps he might not answer, if there was not an understanding now with certain parties, including the Bank of Montreal, that they were to obtain the lease of this road?

MR. MACKENZIE said that he had already stated, on two or three occasions, that the Government had been negotiating with this company in reference to the terms of the lease, but they had not agreed to any terms as yet; and if an agreement was come to, it would be brought before the House for approval.

MR. JONES (South Leeds) contended that running powers should be given to other companies over the Pembina Branch Railway.

MR. NORRIS said he thought it was generally admitted by both parties that railway communication with Manitoba should be brought about at the earliest possible moment. So far as they had any knowledge, there was only one way to obtain that communication immediately, and that was to get this American company, if they were to be so called, to make a connection with our own road at Pembina. That was the only means by which the people of Manitoba could have access to the markets of the world at the present time; and it was better to give privileges to a company to build a road 60 or 70 miles long, than it was to leave that great country without communication for some time to come. He thought the explanations of the hon. the Premier in relation to the arrangements to be made to prevent discriminating tariffs on the railway, were perfectly satisfactory. He was glad to learn from the Premier that the construction of this road would not retard the construction of the main line from Lake Superior to Winnipeg, but that it would be pushed to completion as rapidly as possible.

MR. TUPPER said he deemed it unfortunate that the hon. the First Minister had thought it necessary to proceed with this Bill before his general statement in regard to the Pacific Railway was before the House. It was very difficult to proceed with this matter until the House had the opportunity of hearing the Premier's statement in relation to the Pacific Railway. It appeared, however, that the present moment was the best for dealing with the question outside of its immediate relation to the lease which the Government might propose to give to any parties with whom they might now be negotiating. The difficulty which he had in connection with the matter was the unfortunate position in which the Government would find itself placed in two important particulars. In the first place, what he (Mr. Tupper) had anticipated from the commencement, was likely to occur in the construction of the Pembina Branch of the Pacific Railway, and that was, that in a country where the difficulty was at present to find a profitable traffic for one line, the Government were going to have two competing lines. That was the first and great difficulty that appeared at the outset. The Government had undertaken the construction of a direct line of railway from the shores of Lake Superior to the Red River. It was a very great and serious undertaking, involving the expenditure, even in the most economical manner in which it could be made, of a large amount of public money—an undertaking so serious that, after having put 228 miles of this railway under construction, the Government was obliged to pause here, leaving to the somewhat remote future, the construction of the 120 miles, the intermediate link, which was necessary to make the other part, which was already far advanced in construction, of any value whatever. Now, if it were true, as stated by a member of the Government in the other branch of Parliament, that they could not hope to construct that intervening link for five or six years; if that were the policy of the Government, if they had arrived at the conclusion that the present condition of things rendered that necessary, it seemed to be essential in the meantime to get some means, such as this, by which more rapid and more easy communication could be obtained with the North-West. He was concerned to learn the character of this measure, because it was not only a question of competing lines, but, as it appeared to him, of competition between Canadian and American interests. The line to Duluth would be a competing line, and he confessed that he had been in hope that the intention of the Government was to connect with the Northern Pacific Railway line to Duluth; because, although that would be as closely a competing line as that at present contemplated, it would be a line which would give Canadians an opportunity to compete with the traffic of the North-West, a line calculated to bring the traffic of that country through our own country, and to create and promote and foster an inter-provincial trade between the old Provinces of Canada and the North-West, which could not be over-rated. He regretted that he had not an opportunity of hearing the explanation of the hon. the First Minister in submitting this measure; he understood, however, that the intention was not to connect with the Northern Pacific Railway at Duluth, but to make a connection with St. Paul by another and a different line, the effect of which would be that the traffic of this great country would be carried over American lines. That, he thought, formed a very serious objection to this measure. In the meantime, if the Government were not prepared to push through our own line from the shores of Lake Superior rapidly, so as to give communication in that way at a very early day, he feared they must all concur, however great might be the difficulties felt in sustaining the Government policy, to give to the people of the North-West direct and rapid communication by rail. The question had been raised that facilities should be given to other railway companies for running over the road. He saw very great difficulty in accomplishing that. He could imagine that the Government would be glad to do that if it did not frustrate the scheme altogether. But the difficulty had been to get a scheme at all. The attempt to get a road by way of Pembina failed, and unless some strong inducements and advantages were given to the company to make the connection, the probability was that the people of the North-West would be left without that communication. The question, no doubt, was surrounded by many difficulties; but the discussion would come better before the House when the lease was brought down. He was sorry to hear it was necessary to extend the lease for 10 years, because it would be virtually a monopoly. It would not be an uncontrolled monopoly, because the Government would have the power to establish the rates and make other provisions in the lease. But it would be a monopoly, and he thought it was very unfortunate if it were necessary that, with the work so far advanced from the shores of Lake Superior to the Red River, it should be found requisite to grant a 10 years' lease to a line which would be a very formidable competitor of our own line of railway, the difficulty of working which was sufficiently great without any competition.

MR. NORRIS.

MR. MACKENZIE said the hon. gentleman would remember that the project of building the Pembina Branch was that of his own Government, which provided that it should be built first of all. The present Government had agreed with their predecessors as to the necessity of having that built. Accordingly, during the year

1874-5, contracts were given out, and the greater portion of the road was graded at that time. It was a matter of indifference to him, and to the Government, what company that should be. It was only when Mr. Stephens came to him as representing the reorganized St. Paul and Pacific Railway Company, that he obtained any proposal whatever. He could not hesitate, and he did not hesitate, to enter into negotiations with Mr. Stephens. These negotiations had not committed either party, at this moment, to any distinct scheme, except this condition: that the term should not, in any case, exceed ten years. Various memoranda had been drawn up by himself, containing proposals which would, in his opinion, be an absolute necessity in any lease or any running arrangement or bargain which might be made, but none of those proposals had been submitted to the other party up to the present. He proposed to do the best he could in the interests of his country, if the best could be done with this company. His impression was that there could be no difficulty in making such arrangements as would be fair. Those arrangements must of necessity control the traffic of the road to the nearest lake port, Duluth, upon such terms as would secure to Canadian traffic the best terms obtainable at present from roads in that part of the country. Whatever proposals might be made, they must, as a matter of necessity, be submitted to and approved by Parliament before they could go into operation. With regard to another remark of the hon. gentleman, he would say a few words. The hon. gentleman had deplored the intelligence that it was likely to be five or more years before the main line could be built. He was sure the hon. gentleman knew that the pamphlet which had been distributed by thousands by the Conservative party had denounced the Government in the most unmeasured terms for spending money at all upon the railway from Lake Superior to Red River.

MR. MITCHELL: Whose pamphlet?

MR. MACKENZIE: Senator Macpherson's. They had been denounced in that pamphlet for spending any money upon the road; they had been denounced in the House to-day, because they had not spent enough on it. In one quarter they were blamed for going too fast; in another, because they went too slow. He had pointed out long ago that, in undertaking these initial operations, they were merely undertaking such contracts as would enable them to proceed in the quarter where it was most likely a railroad speedily built would be required, while the surveys were being prosecuted in the other and more difficult portions of the country. He had stated long ago in this House, in discussing the matter, that it was the intention of the Government, as soon as the surveys were completed, and the line located, to invite tenders, under the terms of the Act of 1874; and, under the terms of that Act, the money expended upon 228 miles now under contract, and, to a great extent, finished, would be deducted from the contractors as part of the $10,000 per mile which the Act provided to be paid as a cash subsidy. They were unwilling to proceed with the 185 miles required to connect the two lines under contract, hoping to embrace them under one general contract, which they hoped to be able to lay before Parliament next Session. It was for this they had not asked to place those 185 miles under contract; they hoped to be able to build, to a great extent, with the lands to be given under the terms of the General Railway Act. It was their policy, and he had yet to learn that it was not a wise policy, to build those initial portions, while necessarily waiting for the completion of the surveys over the entire line. These were now completed, and it would be competent for the Government very soon to invite tenders to be submitted to Parliament for sanction at the next Session. It was exceedingly inconvenient, to some extent, to be obliged to thus speak as to the general policy of the Government in connection with the building of the entire line. He only did so to the extent necessary to explain the present position. This was their position, and they could not possibly effect a junction with the Minnesota lines unless they had power to make an arrangement with these lines. If Parliament thought it wise to reject all proposals of this kind, to make no arrangement with any road, nor to take any of the steps necessary to obtain access to that country, or to find egress for its productions—let that course be followed. But the Government believed it was absolutely essential this should be done. The sooner a very large population was thrown into the North-West, the sooner were they likely to have the main line completed from end to end. As soon as they afforded opportunities to settlers to go in, and for their products to go out, even through a foreign country, the sooner would they be in a position to have their own line completed and in operation. The property was their own; no arrangement with the companies could possibly affect their right to the absolute control of their own property. If arrangements should be made for ten years, it would be possible to terminate that arrangement at any time it suited the Government to do so. Of course, if damage was thereby done to the parties with whom the agreement was made, they would be compelled, to that extent, to reimburse those parties. It had always been his firm conviction that, instead of this policy of delaying the construction of the line from Selkirk eastwards, it would greatly facilitate it. They would have access to the country during the summer months much earlier than if they endeavoured to seal up the country and afford no facilities for its people to go in or the products to get out. The road from Minnesota could never compete with their own when built, which would be superior to any road in Minnesota at the present time. It would pass through an apparently poor country, but one which afforded reasonable facilities for good grades and for carrying products very cheaply over it. The road would be far superior in that respect even to the New York Central, and many others which had an enormous traffic. He would be recreant to his duty as a Minister of Public Works, and as a member of the Government, if he failed to recognize the position, and to take the authority from Parliament which he now sought, to make such arrangements as might be necessary for the improvement of that country by railroad facilities.

MR. MACKENZIE.

Mr. TUPPER said he had been four years endeavouring to make the hon. the First Minister comprehend one of the simplest, plainest, and most obvious propositions that it was possible to put before an intelligent mind, and he found, after his four years' labour, that he had totally failed in making the hon. gentleman comprehend the proposition. What was the proposition? The hon. gentleman had said that, in the course he was pursuing, he simply adopted the policy of his predecessors. He (Mr. Tupper) contended they never had such a policy. The late Government had never assumed the construction of the Pembina Branch at all. What was the condition of things then? It was as different from the condition of things under the regime of the hon. the Premier as it was possible for any person to conceive. At the time that the late Government entered into a contract and made an arrangement with a private company for the construction of the railway to Pembina, what were the facts? At that time, a powerful company, apparently with abundant means, was pushing rapidly a line of railway to the borders of Manitoba, at Pembina. That was the position. The then Government proposed to make an arrangement with the company to build a line of railway nearly three thousand miles long from Nipissing to the shores of the Pacific, to Vancouver Island. That was the proposition. That was the contract they were making which these parties, for certain aid to be obtained from the Government in lands and money, were bound to carry out. He would ask whether, in connection with that gigantic work, giving to that company the right to construct this branch as a part of their work, instead of having it constructed by parties who were not connected with themselves, was a policy like the one proposed by the hon. the Minister of Public Works? The objection to his policy was that he, representing the Government of Canada, was constructing two competing lines of railway. The proposal of the late Government was to protect the great country, which was bound to construct three thousand miles of railway, from having this a competing line to themselves. That was the proposal; just as different a proposal as it was possible to conceive. They felt that, at the time, when there was a road being constructed rapidly, to run to within seventy miles of the town of Winnipeg, to the borders of the Province, it would be a great injustice to the parties who were to build the road from Nipissing to the shores of the Pacific, to allow a competing company to run between the border and the town of Winnipeg; consequently, they were entitled, under the Act, to claim that connection as their own. In constructing, as they were bound to construct, in a very short period of time, the through line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it would be a great advantage to them to put in operation, as rapidly as possible, this connecting branch from Pembina to Winnipeg. He was not discriminating or questioning the right of hon. gentlemen, under the circumstances, to take this action. But, he said the circumstances were almost diametrically opposite. He must answer the hon. gentleman's attack upon the policy propounded by Senator Macpherson. He (Mr. Tupper) maintained that policy was a sound one; that there was no inconsistency whatever in his saying to the Government, that they had committed themselves to an enormous expenditure of public money in putting under contract, and nearly completing 208 miles between the shores of Lake Superior and Red River; and having done that, the true policy would have been, not only to push it rapidly forward, but to have the intervening link constructed. The building of the 228 miles would be utterly useless, without the construction of the 180 miles; not only useless, but, according to Senator Macpherson, before the intervening road would be built, before a ton of freight or a hundred passengers would use the 228 miles already built, the portions they were building would have rotted away. They were building a wooden road; on the trestles they were using an enormous quantity of perishable material.

MR. MACKENZIE : Very little.

MR. TUPPER : Let the hon. gentleman look at the specification in which he would find in 35 miles half a million dollars expended for wood; bridges over ravines, 300 feet wide and 40 feet deep, built on trestles. Every person who knew anything of the construction of a railway, and especially with materials of such as this trestle work was being constructed, knew that by the time this lease was completed, they would have to rebuild this trestle work. It would be rotted; no locomotive could pass over it. The Northern Pacific Railway had their road to Red River and a branch to 55 miles of the border. It would have been better to build that fifty-five miles upon the territory with Canadian money, and make that connection, so that by the existing road from Duluth, immediate travel and traffic would have been created from and to the North-West, and not construct a road in the wild, impassable and unfertile country between the shores of Lake Superior and the Red River, on the line in which they were now carrying the railway. That policy would have been sound. But it was altogether a different one from building 228 miles, and then leaving an intervening portion, which prevented them from using a single mile of the road they had constructed. The policy which Senator Macpherson had propounded, was one which would commend itself to a great many of the people of this country: that, in the position in which the Government found themselves, the difficulty of obtaining money, it would have been wise to husband their resources, and having built the road from Duluth to Pembina, then to push the road across the prairie, where every mile constructed would be opening the country, and doing that which must be done as the very basis of the Canadian Pacific Railway, namely, filling up the country with settlers and emigrants. He hoped this last effort of his would convince the hon. Minister of Public Works that there was no inconsistency in the policy then proposed and the one they were now urging, and in which, he maintained, that the Government, having built 228 miles, ought to build the intervening 180 miles. There was no inconsistency in that policy, and in holding, at the same time, that it would have been sound policy not to have touched a mile of that road.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. SCHULTZ asked whether the Premier, in his explanation that the shipping interest would be protected by a tariff of freight being fixed in the lease, meant this to apply only to the Pembina Branch?

MR. MACKENZIE said that it was intended to make the tariff extend to Lake Superior.

MR. SCHULTZ said that this measure of securities was impossible, in view of the fact that the Saint Paul and Pacific Railroad, in whose interest the lease was sought, did not run within 180 miles of Lake Superior, and that the only road which did run there was the Northern Pacific, an antagonistic and rival line, and over whose charges the Saint Paul and Pacific might fairly be presumed to have no control. If the telegram which he had read to the House, when first speaking on this matter, meant anything at all, it meant that this lease arrangement would put the Saint Paul and Pacific Railroad in a position to send all the freight of the North-West by the all-rail route, and cut off completely the chances of lake carriage; and he repeated again that the only way in which the interests of the North-West could be served in this matter, was to have insured the Pembina Branch and then left it free for a connection with any and every railroad which chose to connect and compete for the traffic of the great North-West. In reference to the discussion as to the late Government being anxious to complete early this Pembina Branch, he must say that much might have been done by the present Government had they completed it before. For nearly two years the grading had been completed upon it, and for over a year the rails lay rusting on the banks; and when a deputation, consisting of nearly all of the members of the Commons and Senate from the Province of Manitoba, waited on the Premier, a year ago, to urge the completion of the Branch, and showed him that, this done, the Manitoba importers and shippers could transport in waggons over the 55 miles miles of break at a less cost than by the Kittson line. Yet this request was refused, and the next that was heard was that the extension of the Pembina Branch in Selkirk was decided upon, and that portion of the line completed, which could benefit no one but the contractor of Section 15. In reference to the break of 180 miles in the main line to Lake Superior, if the Pembina Branch was now to be leased to a monopoly, it would have been better to have spent the money which had been, and was now being spent on the 90 miles of the Pembina Branch, on the break in the main line, when, the distance being only twice as great, presumably twice the expenditure of money would have completed the break in the main line of the Canada Pacific to Thunder Bay, and solved the problem of the cheap transportation to the seaboard of the products of the North-West.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said it appeared from the statement of the hon. the First Minister that the terms of the lease had not yet been settled. It was well known that Parliament would be prorogued within three or four weeks. There was no necessity for the Bill just now. The arrangement had not yet been determined, and could not be before the House rose. It was, moreover, impossible that the Premier, in view of his other duties, could satisfactorily settle the terms of the lease during the remainder of the Session. The whole matter should be allowed to lay over for another Session. He hoped the lease would be brought down, so that hon. members might understand its terms, and an Act could subsequently be passed confirming it.

Mr. BOWELL said that, with regard to any arrangement for through freights from Winnipeg to Duluth and St. Paul, it was not possible to make it, because the railroads were rivals from the junction at Glyndon, the one road running to Duluth and the other to St. Paul. If the Government would take the precaution to fix a maximum rate of freight from Winnipeg to Pembina, and from Pembina to Glyndon, he could then understand how an advantage would be offered to parties having freight to transport, because, having arrived at that point, the freight could be sent either by the Northern Pacific to Duluth and by water eastward, or by the St. Paul and Pacific road to St. Paul. If that point were provided for in the lease, it would be a protection to those having freight to send eastward; but, if it were not, then monopoly would be given to the parties who had purchased the St. Paul and Pacific road, with whom it was proposed the Canadian Government should enter into a lease, after the company had built what was termed the missing link. He presumed that was what the Government intended to do. The lease should be submitted to the House as soon as possible, in order that hon. members might fully understand the terms upon which the Government intended to enter into a lease with that company.

MR. MCCALLUM said there was much force in the remarks of the right hon. member for Kingston on that important question, for the proposal of the Government, if adopted, might lay an embargo on the trade of the North-West for ten years. He desired to ask the hon. the Premier when he intended to submit the lease to the House, because hon. members should be allowed time to consider it and see what were its terms. The lease should not grant a monopoly of the road for a larger period than would be occupied in completing the Pacific Railway from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg, because, if they gave the company a lease for ten years, they would have control of the road from Pembina to Winnipeg, and, therefore, it would be taking away travel from our own Pacific Railway. He looked with suspicion on the proposal. He observed the hon. member for Selkirk took great interest in the matter, and had made an explanation which was not very creditable to him. He had also heard the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Ferris), on a former occasion, telling the hon. the Premier, with the pistol at his head, like Crockett's coon, "If you don't come down, I'll shoot. Give us old rails enough to build the New Brunswick Central Railway, or off goes your political head." Such proceedings were not desirable in the interests of the country.

Bill ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

AUDITING OF THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS
BILL.—[BILL No. 53.]

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill No. 53. For the better auditing of the Public Accounts.

(In the Committee.)

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I may generally state that the first ten sections are transcripts from the old Act, with the exception of the alterations which I pointed out in the first place.

On the 4th clause,

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said it was a matter of doubt whether they had power to pass this clause, which provided that:

"No officer or person regularly employed in the collection or management of the Revenue, or in accounting for the same shall, while he remains such officer or so employed, be compelled to serve in any public office or in any municipal or local office, or on any jury or inquest, or in the militia."

This, he thought, would interfere with the powers of the Local Legislatures.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: This is a transcript from the Act of December, 1867. If the hon. gentleman will state his grounds, I will call the attention of the hon. the Minister of Justice and other legal authorities to it.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I take it that this clause was copied from the previous Act, and, perhaps, the Imperial Act; but the hon. gentleman will see that this will interfere with the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures, which may pass an Act to compel these officers to serve with respect to local offices.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: That, of course, raises the question of conflicting jurisdiction. I have taken a note of it, and I will call the attention of the Minister of Justice to it.

MR. MCCALLUM.

On the 11th clause,

MR. CARTWRIGHT said it was completely new. He proposed to insert in it the resolution fixing the salary at $3,200.

MR. MITCHELL: Is there any nigger in the fence in this Bill that we do not see? I have heard it said there is, but, of course, I do not believe it.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: There is none, whatever.

MR. MITCHELL: There is something under this Bill that no fellow can understand.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: We hope to make it clear as we proceed. I propose to change the phraseology, and to make the salary one of $3,200, in lieu of "not to exceed $3,200."

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Quite right. He is a judicial officer, and should be independent of the Government.

On the 12th Section,

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that here he had adopted the English form.

MR. MITCHELL: This Bill gives us another Governor.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: It gives the Minister of Finance and not the House a Governor; I am inclined to think; he will be an officer, and especially the servant of the House.

MR. TUPPER: What are the powers and responsibilities of this officer?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: His duties are particularly defined in clauses 29 and 35 inclusive, and also in clauses 35 and 42 or 43 inclusive. Generally, I may say that his special function will be to examine the accounts and vouchers, and in case there are any deficiencies in the appropriation accounts of any sums which he thinks are not properly vouched for, or any expenditures which are not authorized in his opinion, he must report to Parliament, independent of the Finance Minister of the day, in case cause is shown.

MR. TUPPER: Then, if an account is transmitted to the auditor for payment, in the first place his imprimatur is necessary to the payment of any public money.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Except in special cases hereinafter provided for. In certain cases he may be overridden by the Minister of Finance, but in all these cases it is the duty of the auditor to call the special attention of Parliament to it by a special report, for which provision is made, enabling him to make it independent of the Government.

MR. TUPPER: The difficulty that appears to present itself to my mind is this: you are professing to give the public the security of an independent Parliamentary officer. But who is to see before the payment of public money to the auditing of the account, and to ascertain that under the law it is entitled to be paid, and that the vouchers are correct. If you leave the Government power to override his decision and pay the money, what then is gained by this Bill?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: This is allowed only in certain cases which must be specially reported to Parliament.

On section 15,

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that it was in part copied from the Imperial Act, section 9, with the difference that two lines had been omitted. These were in the Imperial Act after the words "the Auditor-General shall have full power to make, from time to time, orders and rules for the conduct of the internal business of his office"—"and promote or suspend or remove any of the officers, clerks or others employed there." These latter words had been omitted, though it might be a fair matter for discussion whether the Imperial Act should not, in this respect, be followed.

MR. BLAKE said he was strongly of opinion that this provision ought to be inserted. What they wanted was a perfectly independent Auditor, and to be so he should have this power, else they would cripple his efficiency. The Government had the power of appointment of the officers given by a prior clause, which he did not propose to disturb, but it did seem to him that the power of promoting or of recommending promotion, of course according to the rules of the Civil Service, or of suspending, ought to rest with this new Parliamentary officer, in order to enable him to be efficient. The reasons given for this variation in the case of the English Auditor, also applied to the case of this officer.

MR. TUPPER: The Governor in Council is given the power to appoint the officers.

MR. BLAKE: I am speaking of clause 15, which should give the power to promote, suspend or remove. I think that my hon. friend has not improved the clause by omitting these words.

MR. MITCHELL said he did not agree with the hon. member for South Bruce. He thought that they were giving this officer enough, and enormous power, for he would stand next to the Governor of the country in regard to the powers he would possess under this Bill. He would not allow these officers to be removed by the Auditor, on whom there might be a check in his own office. The Parliament was a check on the Government of the day, and there was no reason why Parliament should not have a check on this officer, by making officers appointed by the Government part of his staff. They might, however, give the Auditor power to make representations to the Government for the removal of officers, for reasons satisfactory to the Governor in Council.

MR. BLAKE said he did not propose to give the Auditor power of appointment, which was conferred, by the 13th clause, on the Governor in Council. This did not exist, so far as he could remember, in any Act—but the power of promoting or suspending or removing; and if he removed officers, the Governor in Council would appoint the successors. Of course the Auditor, no more than the Governor in Council, would remove except for cause. The present clause gave Parliament no additional control over the Auditor. He wished to secure a parliamentary officer, who should have hands with which to do his work, free, to some extent, from the control of the Government of the day.

MR. MITCHELL said he again differed with his hon. friend. He held that, under this clause, Parliament did get additional power. The Government of the day was responsible to Parliament, and reliable to removal, by a vote of the House, at any moment; by this Bill, they could not remove the Auditor without cause, and, therefore, this officer should not have the power of removing or promoting these officers. The Auditor, on the one hand, should be independent; but, on the other hand, the Government should have the power to control the Auditor through Parliament.

MR. TUPPER said that they ought not to lose sight of the fact that they were dealing with a somewhat new question. They were appointing a Parliamentary officer in contradistinction to an executive officer. The whole scope of this legislation was to give Parliament control in contradistinction to the Government. He agreed with the hon. member for South Bruce that the principle of the English Act should be adopted, as far as possible, so that the officer appointed as auditor might be independent of the Government of the day, so that he might act without being controlled, as he would be, if the Government of the day had the power to remove or suspend him.

MR. MITCHELL differed from his hon. friend the member for Cumberland, for while he desired the Auditor to be perfectly independent of the Government, and that he should be removable only by Address from both Houses of Parliament, he could not agree to the appointment of any official over whom no control could be exercised.

MR. PLUMB said that, in order to discharge his functions properly, the Auditor should be perfectly independent of Parliament. Under the Imperial Act, an auditor had control over his own subordinates, and he (Mr. Plumb) agreed with the proposal of the hon. member for South Bruce.

MR. MITCHELL said he did not contend that the Auditor should not have control over his own offices; what he did contend was that he should not have greater powers than other officers of the same standing. When, therefore, an official in the Auditor's Department misconducted himself, he should be removable only by the Government of the day, to whom the facts of the case would be reported. Some hon. gentlemen were continually stating that the English Act said this or that; but, for his part, he would not follow the principle of English legislation unless it was applicable to the people of this country.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that after the suggestions which had been made, he proposed, in the meantime, to add to the 15th Section, "and to promote, suspend or remove any officers, clerks and others employed therein."

MR. MITCHELL: These are the words I object to.

Section agreed to.

On section 29,

MR. LANGEVIN said this clause, the 29th, gave to the officer power to draw the money from the bank and use it for his own purpose, for speculation or otherwise. There should be no temptation of this kind thrown in the way of any officer.

MR. BLAKE said the duties of the Auditor-General were two-fold. First, he kept a check on the money going out of the Treasury to the officers distributing the public moneys. He had nothing to do with the manner in which these officers dealt with the funds handed to them; after the funds were expended, they brought forward their vouchers, and he dealt with the sufficiency of those vouchers.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said this was introducing a new practice, assimilating it to the English one. In his time, when a large appropriation was voted, the Minister, in whose Department the expenditure would be made, did not draw the money, but obtained an Order in Council for these purposes. In this clause, on the signature of anyone in the Treasury Board, the whole amount could be appropriated.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: That was only done on the sign manual of the Governor-General.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: It does not provide under whose authority the sign manual is obtained.

MR. MITCHELL.

MR. BLAKE said the 29th section simply provided it should be lawful for the Governor-General to authorize the Minister of Finance to make the issue out of public money. The 30th section then came into operation, providing that the Auditor-General should, from time to time, make application to the Finance Minister for money to be issued to the distributing officers.

MR. TUPPER said the 29th section authorized the Minister of Finance to issue out of the moneys appropriated to defray expenses of public services such sums as might be required, from time to time, to defray such expenses. Why take out the money before the service was done? The money should be paid only as the work was done on producing vouchers to the Auditor-General.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said the system of granting credits had always existed; whether legally or illegally, he was not prepared to say. This had reference to particular circumstances. For instance, in negotiating an Indian treaty, it was necessary to place a considerable sum in the hands of the agents. Also, in the Post-Office Department and one or two other branches, it was necessary to place considerable sums at their disposal; vouchers, in every instance, being rigorously exacted to show that the expenditure had been correct. It was better to give this power to the Government to exercise at their discretion, than to oblige them, in certain cases of necessity, to grant the credits, whether legally or not.

MR. LANGEVIN said he was afraid the clause would establish a general system of credits. He knew elsewhere of a case where an officer had drawn a credit of $5,000, deposited it in a bank to his private account and speculated with it, hoping, at the end of three months, to make the account right. Great risk was incurred by such a system that the officer might not ultimately be able to repay the amount, and it was a defective system that allowed public moneys to be used in that manner.

MR. BLAKE said there was considerable force in the remarks of the hon. member for Charlevoix. A general system of credits should not be established, because for a large portion of the expenditure, such was unnecessary. Credits should be given only in special cases.

MR. PLUMB said that only when the necessities of the case required it, should public money be placed in the hands of officials for distribution, as was provided by the Bill.

MR. MITCHELL said he could not understand why such credits should be required by the Postmaster-General, but the need in case of Indian agents and Pacific Railway survey officials was manifest.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said the hon. the Postmaster-General had an immense number of small payments to make throughout the Dominion. In those cases, the Auditor-General and Minister of Finance were bound to see that the Parliamentary grants were not overdrawn. He had no intention of making the credit system the rule instead of the exception.

On the 34th clause,

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that it was a new clause, which was intended, as far as possible, to meet the case of extras. It certainly required to be carefully considered, and it was suggested as being as good a check as they were likely to devise. The clause was as follows:—

“No payment shall be authorized by the Auditor-General in respect of work performed, or materials supplied by any person in connexion with any part of the Public Service of Canada, unless in addition to any other voucher or certificate which may be required in that behalf, the officer, under whose special charge such part of the Public Service is, certifies that such work has been performed, or such materials supplied, as the case may be, and that the price charged is fair and just.”

MR. TUPPER said that the great difficulty was this: a contract might be given to the lowest tenderer, but for a certain class of material the charge might, in the estimate of the officer in question, be twice as much as was fair. Nevertheless, he was obliged to vouch that the price was fair and just, when, in his opinion, it was most exorbitant.

Mr. LANGEVIN said that perhaps the hon. the Minister of Public Works would explain how this clause would act.

Mr. MACKENZIE said that there had been two or three examples: For instance, a dispute had arisen as to particular work done on the Ottawa River, when the claims of the contractors for a dam was considered a kind of work which one of the engineers maintained was provided for in the specifications, came up. The contractors held that this was not the case. The estimate, however, was sent in by the local engineer, covering the work done, and finally it was determined, after reference to other engineers, including the Chief Engineer, that it really had not been provided for in the specifications. In this case, suppose the engineer of the locality had returned this claim as an extra, the Auditor-General would have prevented the issue of the certificate, unless the officer in whose Department this particular work was included, certified that it really was work of the kind described by the local officer. In another class of work, masonry on one of the canals was classed as simple masonry, at so much a yard—it might be $8 or $9; and, as a rule, a very large proportion, and sometimes the whole of the block stone used was delivered upon the works long before any part of it was built. The contractors had to get estimates upon it, and it would be very easy for the local engineer, if he was either ignorant or ill-disposed, to give a certificate in excess of the real value of the block stone laid down.

Mr. TUPPER: The wording would be improved if the words: "and that the price charged is in conformity, or that it is fair and just."

Mr. MACKENZIE: I have an invincible repugnance to using the word "extras." I have no objection, therefore, to insert: "and that the price charged is according to contract, and, if not covered by contract, is fair and just."

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 38,

Mr. TUPPER.

Mr. LANGEVIN suggested that accounts of the appropriation of the of the several supply grants should be passed within fifteen days after the 1st of July.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: Make it thirty days.

Mr. LANGEVIN: I have no objection, but why do you use the term "appropriations."

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: As the hon. gentleman knows, there is nothing in the English House of Commons precisely similar to our public accounts. Our system is, I think, much better; they do not take up their public accounts, en gros, as we do, but investigate the Auditor-General's abstracts.

Mr. LANGEVIN: Then this will not keep the details from being laid before us?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: Certainly not.

Section agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL asked if this Bill would legislate Mr. Langton out of existence.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: As Auditor, certainly. It divides the offices of Deputy Minister of Finance and Auditor.

Mr. MITCHELL: Then he remains in office?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: As Deputy Minister of Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL: Then are we creating an additional office?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: You substitute one for the other.

Mr. MITCHELL: Mr. Langton is to be continued in office as Deputy Minister of Finance?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: Yes. Now there are the Deputy Minister of Finance and Auditor-General, and the Receiver-General. When this Bill passes there will be only two offices—the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Auditor-General.

MR. MITCHELL: Then I understand Mr. Harrington is to be legislated out of existence?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: That is more like it.

Bill ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

STAMPS ON BILLS AND NOTES BILL.

[BILL No. 43.]

(Mr. Laurier.)

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

Order for House to go into Committee on the said Bill, read.

MR. JONES (South Leeds) said his constituents had communicated with him in reference to this Bill. They had become accustomed to the working of the present Act, and saw no reason why there should now be a change. He (Mr. Jones) saw no reason for adopting a double system. He had been opposed ab initio to the passage of the present law, and he thought, if the Government would withdraw it, it would be to their advantage, especially in the rural districts. If their object was to make more revenue, they should have changed the whole system, and adopted stamped paper altogether; but the double system would be more expensive than the old one, and the Government would not make any more revenue from it. It would be very difficult in rural constituencies to adopt the system of stamped paper, as a great deal of it would be destroyed and could not be made good.

MR. WOOD said the permissive clause having been introduced, there could be no objection to the Bill. The use of stamped paper would be a great convenience to bankers, merchants and others doing a large business.

MR. OLIVER said it was the opinion of merchants in his section that the plan to be adopted would be a good one. He would recommend that there should be stamped paper also for sums less than three cents as well as over. This tax fell heavily on the mercantile community, and was, in that sense, a benefit to the people of the rural districts, who, if it were abolished, would have to pay a large proportion of the revenue derived from it, $209,000. He hoped the Government would see its way clear to consolidate this Act and pass it through the House.

MR. THOMSON said if the Government made it permissive to use stamped paper, he saw no objection to the Bill, though he saw no necessity for it. His own opinion was they should abolish the Stamp Act altogether.

MR. LANGEVIN: Does the hon. gentleman intend to consolidate these Acts this Session?

MR. LAURIER: Not this Session.

MR. LANGEVIN said the Bill would clash with former Acts and create confusion.

MR. LAURIER said it was too late in the Session to consolidate all the Acts upon this matter. The Bill, with the amendment introduced making it optional to use stamped paper, would not conflict with any previous Act.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew) said the objection of the hon. member for Charlevoix was well taken, that this Bill would tend to create confusion. If the only object was to introduce stamped paper, he thought it should be held over till next Session.

MR. MITCHELL said the Stamp Act should be abolished altogether. It was a vexatious one, which led to a great deal of confusion and litigation, which the present Bill only tended to increase. The people generally were in favour of repealing the Stamp Act. If such a measure were required for revenue purposes, the various Acts which had been passed dealing with the subject should be consolidated.

Motion agreed to.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

MR. BERTRAM said it would be very desirable to have the amendments printed, so that hon. members might understand them. In his opinion, it was desirable to throw out the Bill altogether. He knew of nothing in the Bill, except the permission to use stamped paper instead of adhesive stamps, that was not embodied in the Act of 1877. Indeed, the Minister now seemed to possess the power to arrange for the use of stamped paper. It was unnecessary for the House to be engaged in tinkering with an Act; at any rate, the amendments proposed should be printed, so that they might know their character.

MR. CAMERON said that, although he had followed all the explanations offered by the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue, he failed to understand from them what the Bill really was, and he could not profess to give an intelligent judgment on the Bill as it was proposed to be passed. Either the amendments should be printed, or the Bill should be entirely withdrawn.

MR. LAURIER said the Bill, as it was originally framed, contemplated the compulsory use of stamped paper; but, as now amended, the use of stamped paper was made optional. He proposed to repeal several sections in section 1, and leave the law as it was. Certain penalties now existed under the law with regard to the issue of promissory notes and bills of exchange, if they were not stamped, and certain effects followed the omission to stamp. If a note was not properly stamped, it could only be made valid by recourse to the Courts, and by paying double duty. It was proposed to leave this law as it was at present; and, in order to do so, he proposed to strike out from the first section all the words from line 10th to line 18th.

MR. CAMERON said he quite understood what it was proposed to attain by this alteration; but it was impossible for them, where so many verbal alterations were made as was proposed, whole clauses being either struck out or changed, to understand, on hearing them hurriedly read, the effect of these various alterations. There had been no single piece of legislation more vexatious than the Stamp Laws. The cases that had arisen in consequence of it were, at any rate in Ontario, almost innumerable; and it had not only led to litigation, but also, in many cases, it had done very gross wrong, in which dishonest debtors had escaped from liabilities amounting to thousands and tens of thousands of dollars, all of which arose, if he might use the expression without disrespect to Parliament, from bouncing legislation. One clause appeared inconsistent with another; and, also, all these various defects that crept into a Bill when it was hurriedly passed through Committee, and vital alterations were made, as were proposed on the present occasion. For these reasons he felt it to be his duty to protest against any other alteration being passed through in Committee until the Bill was reprinted and they had an opportunity of judging of the proposed amendments. He felt quite unable to do so at present; and, as a member of the House, he could not take the responsibility of saying whether the intention which the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue had in altering this Bill, and making it compulsory instead of permissive, would be properly attained in the way proposed.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I would suggest that the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue be allowed to carry the Bill through as it is, but not ask for concurrence of the report, and to have the Bill printed in the meantime.

MR. LAURIER: That is what I was going to suggest.

MR. PATERSON said he thought that the Bill should be so amended as to make it the duty of the holder instead of the maker of the note to affix the stamps. No great loss to the revenue would arise from this change, and no loss would be suffered by the individual who held the note. It should also be made illegal for anyone to pay a note unless it was stamped. This would secure the revenue, and do away with all chances of fraudulent debtors being able to defraud their creditors.

MR. LAURIER said that, as the law stood, any party had the power to stamp the note. The only penalty for neglecting to stamp in the first instance, was the payment of a double duty.

MR. BERTRAM.

MR. PALMER said that to make it valid, under these circumstances, such note must be stamped the moment that the fact came to the party's knowledge, and, therefore, this could not always be done. When the Bill was introduced, he thought that the whole Stamp Law should be consolidated and made plain. Nothing had created so much litigation in his Province as this Stamp Act. It was also extremely doubtful whether it was forgery under the law to simulate a note which was unstamped, as the Act declared distinctly that any note or instrument purporting to be a note, which was not stamped, was utterly null and void. This point was taken with great force. He had always considered this a most vexatious tax and wrong in principle, although the right hon. member for Kingston thought otherwise. The sooner they got rid of it the better Revenue should be raised in anyway but this. There were three or four of these Acts on the Statute-book, and if this very small one, or rather what was left of it, were passed, it would make confusion simply worse confounded if the idea of his hon. friend from Victoria was carried out. As long as the Stamp Act remained on the Statute-book, it would be felt to be a source of great annoyance, and he knew perfectly well that among commercial men, a very strong opinion—and he thought with good reason—existed against it.

MR. COOK: Can the maker or holder of the note go into Court and have an unstamped note stamped?

MR. LAURIER: Anybody can do so.

MR. GIBBS (South Ontario) said he thought that the Stamp Act should be consolidated. He did not know that the revenue could at present bear the abolition of the law. He considered that the way in which the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue was treating the Bill, was not calculated to give greater confidence in the legislation that was going to take place in this relation, than in that which had taken place in the past. This law affected, at some time or other, almost every person in trade; and very few persons had the Statutes at hand in order to see what the law was. The hon. Minister of Inland Revenue had not only, that evening, very nearly strangled the Bill, but also he was afraid that, before he was done with it, he would stamp it out altogether; and, if such were done, it would meet the views of the majority of the House.

MR. MITCHELL said that he entirely disapproved of the suggestion made by the right hon. member for Kingston. After the expressions of opinion delivered from both sides of the House, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) did not withdraw the Bill altogether, he should, at least, report progress with the view of recasting it in accordance with the views so expressed, and which the hon. gentleman seemed to assent to. They would then be able to deal with it, but at present they were unable to form any idea as to the legislation proposed. If the course he proposed were adopted, it would be far more agreeable to the Committee and the country at large.

MR. KILLAM said the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue would meet the views of the House better if he would allow this Bill to pass through Committee with the amendments suggested, and let it be reprinted before the third reading. By referring it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, the views of the mercantile section of the community could better be submitted and considered.

MR. MITCHELL said as the hon. gentleman seemed determined to accept no suggestions from that side of the House or, at all events, from him, he would wash his hands of all responsibility connected with this legislation, which was the most desecrutable he had ever seen.

MR. KIRKPATRICK suggested that the word "order" should be struck out of the second section.

MR. LAURIER: I have no objection.

MR. PLUMB said it was very extraordinary that the time of the House should be taken up with the discussion of a Bill which had not been thoroughly digested, and on which alterations were constantly being made. He must protest against this slipshod legislation. The Bill was entirely unworthy of the Government.

MR. PALMER said he noticed that letters of credit were brought under the scope of this Bill, though they were not mentioned in the Stamp Act.

MR. LAURIER: Yes, they are.

MR. PALMER: Will you refer me to it?

MR. LAURIER: I see no difference between a letter of credit, a bill of exchange or a promissory note.

MR. PALMER said there was no great difference, and although the banks might have stamped letters of credit, there was no necessity for doing so under the former law.

MR. PLUMB said the Minister of Inland Revenue seemed entirely to misapprehend the meaning of a letter of credit. A letter of credit had nothing to do with a bill of exchange and was generally payable in another country. The whole revenue on these letters of credit would not amount to more than $1,000 a year.

MR. LAURIER said a letter of credit and a bill of exchange were always treated in the same manner; they only differed in details.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said they might have some characteristics in common, but they were not identical.

MR. MACKENZIE: The Act says as follows:—"Every bill, draft or other instrument for the payment of any sum of money by bill or promissory note, or other document usually found in a letter of credit," and so on.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Then the hon. gentleman had better leave the section as it is.

MR. LAURIER said he proposed to withdraw the 2nd sub-section and substitute the following:—

"The person affixing such adhesive stamp shall at the time of affixing the same write thereon in the blank space printed for that purpose his initials and the date on which it was affixed."

MR. PLUMB.

It was, he said, intended to issue a new kind of stamps, because the present stamps, owing to the chemical preparation with which they were now coloured, could be used over again.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew) wished to know if the hon. gentleman proposed to call in and collect all the existing stamps.

MR. LAURIER: No; because there is a provision in the Act that it shall not come immediately into force.

MR. WHITE said it seemed to him that this Bill should be withdrawn altogether in the meantime, and that the laws respecting Stamps Acts should be consolidated, so that if necessary, some amended provisions might be introduced.

MR. PALMER said, according to section five, a note might be rendered invalid by a mistake in cancelling the stamp. It required the signature of the maker to the cancellation. Why should not the signature of the holder be legal as well?

MR. WHITE said he thought the date ought to suffice.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said the clause used the words, "essential part of the instrument." This would lead to litigation, to decide what was an essential part of the instrument.

MR. LAURIER said this was removed by the amendment providing only the date and initials to the stamp.

MR. CAMERON said this clause did not provide for any mistakes, but make the note absolutely null and void. This was a return to penal legislation. Under the existing law, the proper stamps would be affixed and mistakes corrected.

MR. LAURIER said it did not alter the existing law in that respect.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said this clause stated the provisions of the existing law held good "in so far as they are not repealed by or inconsistent with this Act." The Bill had better be referred to the Judges of the Supreme Court.

MR. LAURIER said it was provided that it should be part of the first Act, 31 Vic., which created the law.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said there were so many changes, he would suggest that the Bill be reprinted; the preamble should not be adopted, so as to allow these clauses to be again discussed in Committee.

Progress ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Progress reported.

House adjourned at
Two o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Friday, 5th April, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS.

ADJOURNED DEBATE.

Order for resuming debate on Mr. Cartwright's proposed motion: "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply," and the motion of Mr. Brown in amendment thereto, [page 1627], read.

MR. ORTON said it had been his intention to move a motion more comprehensive than the one before the House, with reference to our agricultural interests; but he gladly welcomed the motion of the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Brown) as a step in the right direction. This motion was particularly gratifying to him, coming, as it did, from an hon. gentleman opposite, and being seconded by another hon. gentleman who so continuously supported the Government. This was to him evidence that the determined policy of the Government to refuse any meed of justice to our agricultural interests did not receive the sanction of many hon. gentlemen who had usually supported the present Administration. When he had the honour of asking for a Committee to investigate the agricultural interests of this country, he confessed he did expect that at least the great majority of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, recognizing the importance of agriculture to our prosperity, would gladly lend their aid and assistance in gaining all the information possible on this very important subject, and in arriving at a just and wise conclusion. Indeed, he did not expect that it would have been made a party issue, and he well remembered his disappointment when it became so painfully certain, before any information had been gathered or an investigation made, that the fiat had gone forth, and that the hon. the Premier had given it to be, so distinctly understood that the redress sought for was opposed to the policy of the Government. It had been said that the reason for this course was a fear of losing the support of the hon. gentlemen from the Lower Provinces who held pronounced Free-trade doctrines, that the hon. the Premier had a perfect reliance upon his too confiding followers from Ontario, but that he apprehended that if he opposed the views of his Lower Province supporters, his Government might be weakened. Be that as it may, the fact remained that, from that time, four years ago, up to the present, the Government had, upon every occasion, given to every effort to obtain this meed of justice to our agricultural interests, their most bitter and determined opposition. His own humble experience and his imperfect endeavours in this regard had been made the butt of attack on many occasions, apparently in order to direct the public attention from the vital importance of this question to his personality. His motives had been impugned. He had been maligned from one end of the Province to the other during picnic campaigns of the Government and its supporters. Causeless ridicule had been heaped upon him unduly, because in the discharge of his duty towards the important and fine agricultural constituency which he had the honour to represent, he had dared to ask that justice be done to our farmers. The hon. the Premier had characterized the redress he sought as a nostrum.

MR. MACKENZIE: Hear, hear.

MR. ORTON said that the hon. gentleman's followers had followed very aptly in the hon. gentleman's lead, and on every possible occasion they had attempted to cast ridicule and contempt on this question. Even his own position, as a professional man, had been attacked, and it was said — “What right had a Doctor to take charge of the agricultural interests of the country? Are there not farmers in the House and gentlemen who had been brought up as farmers, who were perfectly capable of undertaking the defence of their interests?” It was true that there were farmers in the House. They had there the hon. member for South Wentworth who, he believed, had occupied a position in the legislatures of this country for nearly quarter of a century; but with what benefit to the agricultural interests of the country, he left the farmers to judge. There were also other farmers members of the House, but because they might be too much blinded by party prejudices to carefully consider these interests, this was no reason why he, who was selected by one of the most intelligent agricultural constituencies in Ontario to represent their interests, should not endeavour to do what, in his humble way, he could to advance their interests. If he was wrong, the Government and its supporters must also condemn the Government of Ontario, which had presumed to legislate in the interests of the farmers. If doctors had no right to use their efforts in the interest of the agricultural community, what right had a Government of lawyers to give the franchise to farmers’ sons? But if any vindication were required of his course, he had it to day in the motion of the hon. member for West Hastings, and also in the notice of motion given in this relation by the hon. member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard), and seconded by another hon. gentleman both of whom were as consistent and continuous supporters of the Government as any men in the House. They now found that it was utterly impossible to preserve that solidarity of the Government support in opposition to this patriotic policy of doing justice to our agricultural interests, and, therefore, he felt peculiarly gratified at the motion before the House. Neither the party whip nor any other effort on the part of the Government to ridicule, even when invoked by the melodious strains of the jews’-harp, or the fantastic Indian war-dances of an agile member, would to-day avail to bind together the supporters of the Government in pursuance of the latter’s unpatriotic policy. It could not, at this hour, be said that the farmers of this country did not desire and require protection against the unfair competition of American farm produce which came into our markets. They had on record the evidence taken by the Agricultural Committee, overwhelmingly showing that our farmers earnestly desired that their interests should be protected against this unfair competition. They also saw resolutions passed by large gatherings of the farmers throughout the country, by County Councils, by Grange societies, all asking for the same policy. The farmers were now thoroughly aroused to the importance of this question, and were determined that their interests, which had been so long neglected, should be attended to.

MR. ORTON.

MR. RYMAL: Is that so?

MR. ORTON: Was it not a fact that every class in our community had had legislation in their interests. Had not the traders and bankers, money lenders, lawyers, and even doctors had laws passed in their interests, and often regardless of their effect upon our agricultural population. He need only instance the bankrupt law, which he thought even his hon. friend from South Wentworth would agree with him, was not in the interest of the farmers, but in the interests of the traders, and directly opposed to the interests of farmers and non-traders. It had destroyed the honour, to a large extent, of a great portion of our commercial classes, and had been the means of creating among many of them the ambition to defraud their honest neighbours rather than to earn an honest living. Had not advantages been given by legislation to loan and banking societies, by which they were enabled to overreach the farmer, and, in many instances to ruin him? Had not our tariff been arranged without any regard, but diametrically opposed to the best interests of the agricultural community? Were not privileges given to railway corporations which were not advantageous to the farming interest? Indeed, the interests of the farmers of the Western States were considered before the interests of our own farmers; but who paid the piper? Had the farmers of the United States contributed towards the large sums which were being spent annually, and which had for such a length of time been expended in enlarging our canals and building up the fine canal system of our country? Had they contributed to the creation of our great railway system? No; but, nevertheless, they found that the produce of the farmers of the Western States, and of the United States generally, was carried over our railways at a cheaper rate than the produce of our own country, and brought into our own markets over these railways, and into direct competition with the produce of the farmers of this country. He proposed now to show the loss which this one-sided tariff policy, with regard to farm products, caused, not only the agricultural population, but the whole people of this country. On looking at the Trade and Navigation Returns, the first startling fact which he found was this, that last year our total imports from the United States amounted to no less than $51,000,000, while our exports to that country only reached $25,000,000 leaving at least $25,500,000 balance of trade against this country. Now, we naturally asked ourselves how we have made up this difference. Have we paid this balance by our agricultural and other products? No, but have been obliged to pay it in gold to the serious injury of our commerce, by depleting our banks and creating scarcity of money in the country and thus conducing to the general depression in trade? The next fact we observed was this: that our total imports of agricultural products from the United States amounted to the enormous sum of $19,396,725, while we only exported to that country $12,676,172 worth, leaving a deficit of nearly $7,000,000 against Canada in our interchange of agricultural products alone with the United States. It might be said that a large portion of the products imported from the United States was re-exported to Europe, and that the actual injury to the farmers of this country was not great. He found, however, that only $4,927,658 worth of agricultural products was re-exported, leaving $14,469,067 worth to be consumed in Canada and to be brought into direct competition with the products of this country, displacing a similar amount of Canadian farm products from our own market. The injustice of the present tariff system would be seen when it was considered that, in order to get $12,000,000 worth of these products into the United States markets, the Canadian exporters had had to pay nearly $4,000,000 into the treasury of that country, while the exporters of the United States sent products to the value of nearly twice the amount into Canada, and only contributed $263,935 to the treasury of this country. Had the Americans paid the same rate for the privilege of obtaining a market in Canada as they charged to Canadian exporters, they would have contributed something like $6,000,000 to the treasury of this country, in place of only $263,935. As things at present stood, the Canadians were paying twelve times as much into the treasury of the United States as the exporters of that country paid into our treasury to obtain a market for only two-thirds as much as they, the Americans, sent of farm products into our markets. It would, he thought, require something more than the philosophy of the hon. the Minister of the Interior or the hon. member for North Norfolk (whom he saw smiling benignly) to convince the farmers of this country that the immense amount of agricultural products brought into this country, and which replaced our own product, was a benefit to the people or to the farmers of our country. The next fact he observed was this: that from year to year the amount of meat stuffs and the number of animals imported into this country from the United States was rapidly increasing, while that sent from Canada into the States was rapidly decreasing. The amount of animals and meat stuffs sent from the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec in 1864 to the United States was no less than $4,151,243 worth, while last year the amount exported from the whole Dominion to the United States was only $2,853,647 worth—just half as much as was sent from the two Provinces in 1863. He thought this was a very important point. Another matter in connection with this had been brought very prominently before the Committee of Emigration and Colonization this Session, namely, that the farmers of the United States were able to produce a better class of cattle at a much cheaper rate than the farmers of Canada. It was of very great importance that we should preserve to the farmers of this country our markets for meat stuffs and live stock, so as to encourage the raising of cattle, especially when we considered that the raising of animals on a farm added much to the returns which might be expected from agricultural labour, for it was well known that where a large number of animals were reared they returned to the soil what the cereals took from it, thereby largely increasing the profits of farming. But, if we allowed the present policy to be pursued, we would find our market for meat stuffs controlled by the Americans. Mr. McShane, a large dealer in animals, in Montreal, stated to him that he could, by telegraph to Chicago, any day, obtain a car-load of western cattle which would be of better quality, and arrive sooner, than if he had sent to Ontario. They found also that those who exported cattle to the British market brought them from the United States instead of getting them in their own country. Although, therefore, we might hope to have a market for our cattle in Britain, it would, to a large extent, be absorbed by the American exporters. He could not help feeling that our market for meat stuffs in Britain would be of much shorter duration than was anticipated. The Duke of Richmond's Bill was evidently put forward in the interests of the farmers of England, and was intended to place impediments in the way of American cattle competing with those raised by the British farmer. Meat stuffs were the main source from which, under the Free-trade policy of England, farmers of Britain

Mr. ORTON.

derived their profits. When the corn laws were introduced there was a famine in the country, the people were very much impoverished; by their introduction a stimulus was given to manufactures, and an increased demand for meat stuffs took place. This demand for meat stuffs, indeed, compensated the British farmer, to a certain extent, for the injury which he suffered by the admission of foreign bread stuffs, as he not only got a better price for his cattle, but could raise more grain per acre. The next point he would refer to was this: that last year we imported no less than $7,791,096 worth of flour and wheat, of which we re-exported only $1,399,619 worth, leaving a balance of $6,391,475 worth of American wheat and flour to be consumed in this country, to the great injury of the wheat growers and millers of Canada. It might be said that a large portion of the wheat imported from the States to Canada was manufactured into flour by Canadian millers and exported in that form. He found, however, that the total quantity of flour exported from the Dominion of Canada last year amounted only to $1,167,780 worth; so that, assuming the whole of the flour exported from this country was manufactured from American wheat, it would still leave over $5,000,000 worth of American flour and wheat to be consumed in Canada. It was not difficult to understand that this must be highly injurious to our agricultural interests. Why should not the benefit of this market for flour and wheat be given to the Canadian farmers and millers, instead of to those of another country? The next fact which he found in the Trade and Navigation Returns was, that last year we imported 8,260,039 bushels of Indian corn, of which we re-exported 4,018,612, leaving 4,241,427 of Indian corn to be brought into competition with the Indian corn and coarse grains of this country. The greater part of this Indian corn was brought in for the manufacture of whiskey, and we found the gross injustice of the barley malt grown in our own country entering along with the Indian corn of the United States into the same mash tub for the manufacture of whiskey. The barley malt of our own country was taxed 72c. a bushel, while Indian corn went into the manufacture of whiskey without one cent being paid on it. If his hon. friend from West Middlesex desired to advance the cause of temperance in this country he should object seriously to this facility for the manufacture of whiskey from untaxed corn, thus decreasing the evil effects of whiskey drinking. Last year we imported 1,697,706 bushels of oats, which were brought into direct competition with the oats grown by our own farmers. And well he knew the effect of American oats coming into this country, in relation to the price of oats in Canada. Last Fall, when oats were worth from 45 to 50c. a bushel in the part of the country where he resided, American oats commenced to be brought in in large quantities; in the course of a few days they were reduced to 28c. or 30c. a bushel and the price has never raised during the whole winter. It was said that the British market ruled the price of oats, but such was not the case. He had taken the trouble to enquire what the price of oatmeal was in Glasgow, and found that oatmeal was being manufactured by Canadian millers for exportation at the same price, when oats were 45c. a bushel as when they were worth only from 28c. to 30c. This showed distinctly that the price of oatmeal in Europe did not always rule the price of oats in this country. He wished to make a short calculation which would partially show the immense loss which this country incurred through the existing policy; he thought it could be computed at an enormous amount. He had just stated that Indian corn and oats brought into this country reduced the price of oats and corn at least ten cents a bushel. Now, he thought he might safely say that every farmer with 100 acres of land had 200 bushels to sell and lost, in consequence, $20 on his oats. When, also, we saw the enormous quantity of flour and wheat brought from the United States, we might safely say that the loss per bushel on wheat was five cents per bushel. This, he thought, was a moderate calculation, and, as each farmer in this country would have on an average 300 bushels of wheat, his loss thereon would amount to $15 a year. He thought two head of fat cattle was a very small average to give of the number raised by each farmer in the country, with an average weight of 1,000 lbs. In consequence of the unfair competition of American cattle, swine and pork — which also entered into competition with beef — he calculated that the loss per lb. which the farmers would have to sustain on their fat cattle was one cent. This, on two head of cattle of the weight he had mentioned would amount to $20. An enormous number of live hogs was brought into this country at a duty of 10 per cent., which would reduce the price of pork by a cent per lb., meaning a loss to the farmer of $8 per year. Without taking into consideration the effect which the present tariff system had on the price of mutton, horses, Indian corn, rye, and a vast number of other agricultural products. He found that the actual loss to the farmers of Canada on the articles he had enumerated was, at the lowest possible calculation, $63 a year. He thought no hon. gentleman in the House would question his calculation, or think for a moment it was an exaggerated one. He found, by the statement of the hon. the Finance Minister in his speech at Fergus, that there were some 500,000 farmers in this country. If each farmer lost $63 a year by this ruinous policy, it amounted to over $30,000,000 a year lost to this country. From their uneasiness it was very apparent that the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House were extremely alarmed by the exhibition he had given of the enormous loss incurred. It was stated that over-importation was the cause of the serious depression which existed to-day. The hon. member for Centre Toronto had said that $200,000,000 of a balance trade existed against Canada during the last ten years, and which they were unable to pay for, and that this was the cause of our trouble. Had our farmers received a just reward for their labour, had the Government placed them in a position to reap a just profit for their labour and investments of capital, the country would have been enabled to have overpaid these $200,000,000 during the last ten years, as the loss to our farmers alone was over $200,000,000 during that period. He thought it was safe to say that industries of every description would have been vastly benefitted, and general prosperity, instead of general ruin, would have prevailed. A loss of $50 to $60 per year to the farmer was a very serious matter; just the difference of his being able to pay his store bill, his blacksmith's bill and other accounts, or not. The effect was most ruinous to the industries of our country. While referring to the importance of preserving a Canadian market for wheat, he wished to draw the attention of this House to the fact that new competitors from other countries were beginning to supply very large quantities to Great Britain. For instance, the amount of wheat imported into Great Britain from British India had increased very largely from 1875. In 1875 it was 1,334,943 cwt.; in 1877, 6,104,940 cwt., or about five times as much. This would show the importance of preserving a market in Canada, and thus increase the demand for the wheat and flour grown by our own farmers, especially in view of the fact that we had a rapidly increasing quantity of wheat grown in the North-West Territories, which would soon compete with that grown in other Provinces. It had been attempted, during campaign speeches of hon. members of the Government, to frighten the farmers of Ontario, by telling them that a protective policy was only sought with the object of giving a larger Protection to manufactured goods and of increasing the cost enormously to the agriculturists. It could be shown, in the first place, very clearly, that a protective policy, instead of increasing the prices of manufactured goods, decreased those prices. He had, on a former occasion, shown that the prices of cottons and calicoes, in the United States, had been reduced, under a high protective tariff, compared with what they had been under a low tariff. He had taken the trouble to ascertain the prices of other common articles used by farmers in the United States, and had found that almost all classes of manufactured goods could be bought as cheap, and in many instances cheaper, there than in Canada, notwithstanding their high protective tariff. Even when there was a high protective tariff in Great Britain, articles were produced there cheaper than in any other country in the world. Take iron for example: when there was a duty of not less than £6 stg. per ton upon iron, it was produced in Great Britain cheaper than elsewhere. And such was now the case in the United States, under one of the highest protective tariffs in the world. But the question could be looked at from other points of view. It was not proposed by anyone to have an extreme protective policy. He thought that no more than from 20 per cent. to 26 per cent. tariff on manufactured goods would be asked by any manufacturer in Canada. There were very few farmers in the country who used a hundred dollars' worth of manufactured goods in his family per year. The great majority did not require nearly that amount, so that, supposing the increased duty would increase the price, it would not amount to over $7 per year. What was that compared to $63 per year which the enhanced prices of their products, under a protective policy, would give to the farmers, and which was now lost to them? What were the compensating advantages of a protective tariff? Under it, the manufactures of this country would rapidly increase and there would be a much larger market for all farm products, especially for perishable articles; also for a greater variety of products which would be raised and obtain ready sale, and the benefit to the farmer would, on the whole, be enormous. He wished to draw attention to the high prices paid for farm products in the United States under a high tariff as compared with those under a low tariff. The average prices in the New York market during the seventeen years before 1860, of a low protective tariff, and the seventeen years after 1860, of a high protective tariff, were as follows:

	Before 1860. Low Tariff.	After 1860. High Tariff.
Beef.....	$9 20 per bbl.	$19 30 per bbl.
Butter.....	0 17½ per lb.	0 27½ per lb.
Cheese.....	0 8½ "	0 15 "
Hams.....	0 8½ "	0 11½ "
Pork, mess 14	08 per bbl.	22 2½ per bbl.

MR. ORTON.

Oats .....	0 47½ per bush.	0 69½ per bush.
Corn.....	0 72½ “	0 88½ “
Wheat....	1 54 “	1 68 “
Wool .....	0 31½ per lb.	0 53½ per lb.

Total average increase of these staple farm products under high protective tariff as compared with low protective tariff, over 25 per cent. While referring to the importance of their giving a stimulus to their manufacturing industries, in an agricultural point of view, he desired to read some extracts from McQueen's Table of the Wealth of England, in proof of his statements: From that work it appeared in 1840

1st. That the value of soil devoted to agriculture forms 26-43rd of the total wealth of England, and is nearly 12 times greater than that of the whole capital invested in manufactures and commerce

2nd. That the sum employed in agriculture comprehends more than three-fourths of the capital of England.

3rd. That the whole value of fixed property in England is, viz:—

Land.....	£2,604,000,000
Towns, Buildings and Manu- factories.....	605,000,000
Canals and Railroads,.....	118,000,000

Total..... £3,327,000,000

or farm land is more than three-fourths of whole.

4th. That manufacturing and commercial capital, including ships, does not exceed £241,500,000, and constitutes, therefore, about one-eighteenth of the national wealth.

5th. That the agricultural capital of England which is 3,311 millions, produces a gross income of 539 millions, that is about thirteen per cent., whilst the manufacturing and trade yields a yearly gross product of 259,000,000, or one hundred and twenty per cent.

It must not be overlooked here, above all, that 218 millions of manufacturing and trading capital, yielding a yearly product of 259,500,000, is the main cause which swells the agricultural capital to the enormous sum of 3,311 millions, with its yearly product of 539 millions. By far the greatest portion of agricultural capital consists in value of land and cattle. By doubling and tripling the population of the country, by sustaining an immense external commerce, by furnishing vast quantity of shipping, by acquiring and employing a multitude of colonies, manufactures have increased in the same proportion as the demand for food and raw material; they have raised the exchangeable value of agricultural products, and thus determined a proportional increase in quantity and exchangeable value of the cost of land and of the value of the soil.

Destroy that manufacturing and commercial capital of 218,000,000, and not only the income of 259,500,000 would disappear but also greater part of 3,311,000,000 of agricultural capital and consequently of the income of 539,000,000 derived from that capital. The income of England will be diminished not merely 259,500,000, the value of the manufacturing production, but the exchangeable value of the soil will fall to the tenth or twentieth of its present value. Hence it follows that the capital usefully employed in manufactures by an agricultural nation increases in time the value of the soil tenfold.

The tenfold increase in the capital of the agriculturist is sure when a country has large manufactures as compared with those who have few, and the former realizes this without any sacrifice or risk of loss, while in new manufactures of every kind the investor risks the loss of the whole of his capital invested.

It had been said that if the policy advocated by the Opposition were pursued, it would create discord among the Provinces, and weaken the ties which bound them together in this Confederation. He considered the effect would be quite the reverse. It was just as much in the interests of the Lower Provinces that there should be inaugurated a wise national policy as it was to any other part of the Dominion. He had proved by the result in Britain already how vastly the shipping interests of the country increased where manufactures and agriculture prospered. It must also be remembered that in the Lower Provinces, at least in Nova Scotia, they had two of the greatest sources of wealth, coal and iron, which had been the main sources of the enormous wealth of Great Britain. Under a proper policy, stimulus would be given to the production of the coal and iron of Nova Scotia, and large industries would arise in that Province, especially in the manufacture of ironware, thereby increasing its population and its wealth. To-day the masses of the people of the Lower Provinces were not as wealthy as in other Provinces of our Dominion. There was a sort of monopoly in that Province, the sources of wealth being under the control of a few. Under a proper policy, there would be a stimulus to industries which would cause the prosperity to be more evenly distributed. Where coal was produced, cheap steam would be obtained, and with cheap steam power there must be a cheap mode of manufacturing. Therefore, there was every reason to believe that, under a wise policy, the people of that section would be as largely benefitted as the people of other Provinces, if not more so. It would also stimulate interprovincial trade, and bind more strongly the ties which now united us in this Confederation. It had been said that because Free-trade had benefitted Great Britain, it would benefit this country; but they all knew that the circumstances under which Great Britain inaugurated a Free-trade policy were entirely different from those which existed in this country. She had, under her long course of Protection, built up her manufactures to such a position that she could defy the world. She had only a limited amount of acreage of land on which to produce wheat and could not supply her own people with food, and there was famine in the land, amongst the working class, in consequence of her inability to produce bread stuffs sufficient for her own people. Free-trade was then a wise policy to pursue in the interests of the mass of the people of that country, but it must be remembered that the British manufacturing industries had arrived at their prosperous position under a Protection policy; they had accumulated both skill and capital and had no competitors in their own markets. It must also be borne in mind that in a country like this, with a sparse population and small capital and little comparative manufacturing skill, it was impossible to compete with older countries which possessed an accumulated capital, and also accumulated skill in manufactures. In no country had manufactures sprung into existence, to a large extent, under a Free-trade policy. Could anything be more striking than the prosperity of France under a protective policy compared with other countries during the last few years? Perhaps that was the only country where the depression, which had visited every other land, had not been felt. Did they find that Great Britain was prospering to-day under Free-trade? No; quite the reverse. He had a paper which had been written by Lord Bateman, entitled, "A plea for Protection," in which he stated that:

MR. ORTON.

"We cannot shut our eyes to the universal collapse of trade and its accompanying distress, be it the mineral, the shipping, the carrying the AGRICULTURAL, and the general manufacturing trade. Throughout the country the cry of depression and distress and ruin is the same. We have to compete on unequal terms with other foreign countries, who are robbing us of our profits, paying nothing to our exchequer, and underselling us at the same time. When the capitalist finds that his trade is leaving him, and that his profits are reduced to a minimum, it follows that the workmen depending upon him must suffer in like proportion, and as a consequence, the rate of wages must come down or employment must cease—strikes, lock-outs, and painful and undeserved distress are the inevitable results. Granted that the theory of Free-trade and unrestricted commerce with all quarters of the universe is as bold as it is magnificent; granted that the idea, by whomsoever originated (and advocated by no one more consistently than by our good and wise Prince Consort), is both grand and glorious in its conception; granted, that to give effect to it has been the aim, as it has been the long accepted policy of successive Governments, it cannot be denied that the sting of 'want of reciprocity' has, from the first, checkmated our philanthropic efforts, and obliged us to confess, after thirty years of trial, that in practice our Free-trade is at best but one-sided; and that while we are opening our ports to the commerce and manufactures of the world, free and unrestricted, other countries, without conferring upon us any reciprocal benefit, are taking advantage, without scruple, of our magnanimous, but disastrous (because one-sided) liberality. It is of no use to blink the question. Facts will speak for themselves. In defiance of all arguments and all persuasions, not to say entreaty, on the subject, these awkward facts remain. Our overtures to other countries are disregarded; our commercial treaties are not renewed; our own trade is in a sinking and unprofitable condition; our exports show a lamentable, alarming and increasing deficit; our Exchequer is affected; and, worse than all, not a single country in Europe, to say nothing of the United States, can be cajoled by the most specious temptation into following our example of free importation."

He (Mr. Orton) thought nothing could more eloquently describe our own condition in this country. Lord Bateman went on to state:

"We have tried Free-trade and it has been found wanting. We have done our best to impress others countries with the reasonableness of our policy, and in return they scoff at our blindness, and turn a deaf ear to our remonstrances. In the meantime partial ruin and wholesale depression and distress are staring us in the face, our local burdens are increasing, our exports are diminishing. Why should we persist in such an Utopian crusade?"

These are the eloquent words of one of Free-trade England's most enlightened statesman, with regard to the disastrous results which even Great Britain, with all her peculiar advantages and accumulated skill and wealth, finds to-day as the fruits of pursuance of the fallacy of a Free-trade policy without reciprocity. But this was not the opinion of one only of England's statesmen, but was endorsed by the member for Birkenhead, Mr. David McIver, who recently wrote to the Times as follows:—

"As I have the honour to represent this great seaport constituency in Parliament and have the satisfaction of knowing (in this part of the country at least) my views are largely shared in by business men, even among those opposed to me in politics, it may not be out of place that I should say a few words on the subject of Free-trade. I think we are greatly indebted to Lord Bateman for his letter, and I also desire to express my most hearty concurrence with your correspondent, "A Merchant"; but your correspondent "Other Side" proves nothing by his figures, except the truth of the old adage that 'Figures can be made to prove anything except facts.' This increase of British coasting tonnage to which he alludes is due not to Free-trade, but to steam navigation. Cheap labour, cheap coal, and cheap iron, have helped us hitherto; but they have ceased to help us now. In this part of the country we nearly all want real Free-trade, but how are we to get it? Not, I think, by continuing to push Free-trade theories as if they were a panacea for all ills. Other nations know better than this, and the world, outside of Great Britain, does not believe that wisdom will die with our present race of Free-trade enthusiasts. Reciprocity is what is essential to commercial prosperity, and we are not likely to get it so long as in the innocence of our hearts we continue to be universal and unconditional Free-traders."

He thought that was very apropos to our position. It was impossible for 4,000,000 in this country to compete with 40,000,000 in the neighbouring country, under such disadvantageous circumstances which now existed, barricaded as we were from all entrance to the United States, while we admitted almost free all their products. It had been repeatedly stated that

Great Britain ruled the price of farm products in this country. While he was bound to acknowledge that, in wheat and flour, Great Britain did rule the price in certain seasons, he denied that she ruled the price of breadstuffs in this country all the year round. The statement which he had read as to the price of farm products in New York, proved that Great Britain did not rule the price there, but that the price was ruled by the demand created by the large population concentrated in that great city. In this country it was the same. At many times of the year the great bulk of our surplus grain had been already exported to Great Britain, and the local demand became larger than the remaining supply, and prices would go up were not the American farmers allowed to come in and compete for the supply of this local demand with our own agriculturists. He considered that this showed clearly that Great Britain did not rule the market at all seasons of the year even in relation to wheat and flour, although it might do so for a certain portion of the year and to a certain extent. In other farm products it had little or no effect. He thought they must all acknowledge that the Chicago market ruled the price of all coarse grains in this country, and not the demand in Great Britain, but if we had a proper protection against the farm products of the United States, we would have a larger price for those articles in Canada. It had also been said that our carrying trade would be destroyed and that we would lose a great deal of the benefit of the money that we now had invested in our canals and our railway systems. He could not see the force of this argument. If it was profitable to the people of the United States to send their products through Canada to Europe, they would send them just as well under a protective policy as they did under the present system, because they could send them through in bond. He could not see that it would have the slightest effect on our carrying trade, but under a wise national policy the various industries of the country would be so stimulated that they must come to the conclusion that the traffic on these highways would be vastly increased by the wants and requirements of our own people under the prosperity created by a wise national policy. He desired now to refer to some of the arguments used by the hon. the Minister of the Interior at Fergus. They had before heard the disingenuous character of his arguments exposed; how by comparing the exports and imports into the Province of Ontario, by showing that there was not a large number of animals brought into Ontario, he had tried to palm that off as a reason why there should be no protection against animals coming in from the United States, while he utterly ignored the fact that a large number of animals were brought into the other Provinces, and competed with those raised by the farmers of Ontario and the rest of the Dominion. He (Mr. Orton) thought such an argument was unworthy the position which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mills) occupied, because it was disingenuous and gave only half the truth, instead of the whole truth. In reference to wool, the hon. gentleman said :

"I shall show you, by the returns, that the taxation imposed by Congress has in no way affected the prices, but that the Canadian farmer receives as large a price now as when wool was admitted free into the American market."

He would show what the price of wool in the United States was last summer, and whether the Canadian farmer received as large a price as prevailed in the United States. A friend, Mr. Morgan, living on the Detroit River, wrote him (Mr. Orton) on that subject as follows :

"On the 29th June last I took my wool to Windsor, and got the highest market price, 26c. I had 32 fleeces. After disposing of wool, I crossed the river to Detroit, where a friend of mine, whose arm is in sight of mine, but in Michigan. He had just sold his wool, he got 42c, which, at the then rate of exchange would be 41c. gold. He got 13c per lb. more than I did; my wool was better than his; I know his sheep. He was protected by 11c. specific and 10 per cent. ad valorem. He made $1.12 more per fluce than I did, which, in 32 fleeces would be $36 in his favour."

That gentleman also enclosed the following quotations :

MR. ORTON.

"ANN ARBOR, June 28th, 1878.

"Large receipts of wool to-day, price 33 to 40c.

"BILDING, MICHIGAN, June 26th, 1877.

"J. B. Nutch acting for the order of Grangers shipped a large quantity to Boston and got for his patrons about 5c. above the market price here. His action put the market up to 41c.

"MARSHALL, 26th June, 1878.

"J. N. Dickev has taken in 125,000lb. of wool for which he paid 40c.

"ST. CLAIR, June 26th, 1878.

"Wool still coming in, prices run from 35 to 43c."

He thought this showed clearly how much more farmers of the United States received for their wool, under a protective policy, and that if we had reciprocity we would share in this increased price of wool. Another argument had been used in this House and in the country, and especially by the hon. the Minister of Interior at Fergus, in order to terrify the farmers of Ontario in relation to Protection, though how it was arrived at, he failed to conceive or imagine. It had been said that the United States had paid in ten years $60,000,000 in order to maintain a protective policy. He would like the hon. member who had made that statement to explain how that calculation was arrived at. It must be shown that the American people had paid that much more for their goods than the price at which they could have been purchased under another policy, and it was impossible to prove that such was the case. It must further be shown that the incidental advantages given to the people of that country had been nothing, in consequence of the burthens created by a protective policy; whereas, it would be found that the benefits were enormous. But he had figures that would prove that the prosperity of the country had greatly increased under a protective policy. In 1860, the real and personal property of the United States was $16,000,000,000, while in 1870, ten years afterwards, it had risen to the enormous sum of $30,068,000,000. It thus appeared that the real and personal property had nearly doubled in ten years, and that at a time when the country was involved in a civil war, which destroyed wealth instead of increasing it. Even if the American people did pay an increased price for goods, the money was not paid to a foreign country, but to their own people, and by the new industries and sources of wealth created they increased enormously the total wealth of the country. That fact of itself was sufficient to prove the utter absurdity of the statement of the hon. member. It had been contended by the hon. the Minister of the Interior that the prices obtained for the farm products of Canada in the United States, under reciprocity, was lower than it had been since, and a long string of figures was given to the people at Fergus to show that fact. If the argument amounted to anything it was that reciprocity was an injury, instead of a benefit, to the Dominion, and yet the present Government had sent Mr. George Brown to Washington, at very considerable expense, to negotiate a treaty. Why should the country be called upon to pay the expense if it were better to be without reciprocity. If, under the high protective policy inaugurated in the United States since the Reciprocity Treaty, products of every description had realized high prices, that was one of the strongest reasons that could be given that Canada should adopt the same course in order to enrich her farmers and bring prosperity to her people. It had frequently been stated that the country should not impose any duties on American produce, lest the Americans might entirely shut out Canadian farm products from their market, by placing increased duties on these products. Some people appeared to imagine that Canada could not exist without the United States, that our very breath was obtained from them, and that we could not live except by their good will and toleration. He held that the people of this country could live without the United States. We had a vast territory, an energetic people, and the world with which to trade. Our proper course ought to be to endeavour to encourage and increase trade with other countries which did not compete with us in producing the same articles we grew and manufactured. We should strive to extend our trade with those countries which produced what the Dominion did not produce, so as to afford increased markets for our products, and not forever toady to the United States. We should strike out and adopt a wise national policy in the interests of our people. We should do as the United States did: not consider other countries, but the interests of our own people in the Dominion, and, by that means, would vastly benefit our people, and make Canada what we all desired to see her: a great and a prosperous nation. He would not detain the House further, but would support the motion of the hon. member for West Hastings.

Mr. SMITH (Peel) said he desired to offer a few remarks in reply to the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton). That hon. gentleman had commenced his speech by complaining that some hon. members sneered at his views, because he, a professional man, had taken up a question that belonged to the agriculturists. He had no idea of throwing contempt on the hon. member, and he had no right to do so. The hon. member for Centre Wellington represented an intelligent agricultural constituency, and it was his duty to endeavour to aid his constituents, as he no doubt thought he was doing by pursuing his present course. Nevertheless, it was somewhat strange that, while there were thirty members in the House who followed agriculture as a pursuit, not one of them had taken up the question. They found, moreover, in other places, professional men taking up the subject of Protection for farmers. The hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Brown) who had moved the motion under discussion was a manufacturer, and he (Mr. Smith) did not remember a single instance during the present Parliament in which a farmer had endeavoured to impress on the House and the country that Protection to agriculture was really necessary. He found also that in another place gentlemen not following the agricultural business took the farmers under their wings. The first resolution proposed by the Dominion Board of Trade last year was in favour of agricultural Protection. He did not know why that body specially wished to take the farming community under its wings. In November, last year, a large and respectable meeting of manufacturers from different parts of Canada was held for the purpose of considering interests more immediately belonging to them. The first resolution passed by that meeting, at which no agriculturists was present, was in favour of protection to agriculturists. It was a mystery to him how Americans could come here and buy our wheat, pay the enormous duties about which so much was said, pay commissions and freight, and bring it back to this country and undersell Canadian millers. The hon. member for Centre Wellington had taken up the different cereals, crops and products of the farm. He would confine his remarks, so far as statistics were concerned, more immediately to Ontario, which would probably be satisfactory to the hon. gentleman and himself, for they both hailed from that Province. During the past year, the Province of Ontario had imported 179 horses, and exported 3,598, which was equal to twenty to one. He could not understand how it could be shown that by levying a heavy duty on those 179 horses that Province could be benefited and the American market opened up for a freer trade. Of horned cattle, there were imported 447, and exported upwards of 10,000—in other words, we sent the Americans twenty-six animals to one received from them. He was equally at a loss to understand how, by levying heavier duties on those animals, it would open up the American market for our horned cattle. Among the most important animals on the farm was sheep, of which Ontario imported 7 and exported 159,573. Reference had been made to the grain which was imported. A large quantity of wheat was brought into this country. At the present time the price was about $1 per bushel, while ten months ago it touched as high as $2 in the Canadian market. How did that rise of price occur in Ontario. Was it because of the short crop on the other side that the Americans had thrown their wheat on that market, or was it that the Americans flooded the market with wheat? The introduction of American wheat neither caused the remarkable rise, nor the reduction from $2 to $1 per bushel. The cause existed across the water in Europe. England ruled our markets for grain and flour, and when hon. gentlemen opposite came to discuss those questions with the farmers, they would find that they quite understood the motives which had induced the recent action of the Opposition. Of the Ontario barley crop a small portion was sent to England, but the great bulk, for a number of years past, had gone to the United States; and, notwithstanding the American duty of 15c. per bushel, while American barley was admitted here free, Canadian barley had averaged, for the last 10 years, 20 per cent. more than when there was no duty. He could not understand if such was the case—and they knew it was so—how the American duty had much effect on our markets; and he was satisfied the Americans paid the duty on that grain. It had also been urged by hon. gentlemen opposite that the sale of Canadian oats was injured by the introduction of American corn. He remembered two years ago meeting with a lawyer in this city, who complained bitterly of the policy of the Government in allowing corn to be brought in duty free to compete with oats grown in this country. He asked that gentleman how he, being a professional man, was particularly interested in the manner; to which he replied that he was also a large farmer, and had had a large quantity of oats stored for two years, and the action of the Government allowed American corn to come in here, which was bought up by the lumberman instead of the home-grown grain. This gentleman complained because the lumberman, who, perhaps, suffered as much as any other class in the depression, and who yet did not wish protection on lumber, was permitted to purchase American oats and corn if he could obtain them at cheaper rates. Reference had been made to the large quantity of corn brought into this country, and to the manner in which it competed with our coarse grains. During the past year, upwards of

MR. SMITH.

6,750,000 bushels of corn were imported into Ontario. It was said that the vast proportion was brought in for distilling purposes; but, he found on examining the statistics, that less than 1,000,000 bushels, or perhaps one-seventh, was thus used. The balance had, therefore, been used by our farmers. He admitted that the quantity was very large, and that it could scarcely all have been thus used, but there could be no question that a very large portion had been used by our farmers. At the present time, 100lb. of corn could be purchased at Toronto for about 38c.; 100lb. of oats for $1.05; 100lb. of peas, $1.12; and 100lb. of barley, $1.15. If, therefore, Ontario farmers had been using that large quantity of corn, they would have exchanged their coarse grains, worth more than $1 per 100lb., and purchased corn at the rate of 83c. If this Government were to levy a duty on corn, how would it benefit the farming class, which hon. gentlemen opposite were so desirous to protect? The next thing that the hon. gentleman had found fault with, was with regard to our dairy produce. The hon. gentleman made quotations to show that large quantities of butter and cheese were exchanged between these two countries. He (Mr. Smith) did not know the ground for complaint with reference to those important articles. The duty on butter was the same in both countries. The American duty was four cents a pound, and the Canadian duty the same. He would like to know what hon. gentlemen opposite desired, and whether they wished to increase the duty above the American figures or not? The duty on cheese was almost identically the same, though a little higher on the American side; but he did not know, for his part, what we would gain by raising the duty on this important article. Another article was often looked upon as of very small importance, but which, nevertheless, figured pretty largely in our returns. He referred to eggs. We sent to the United States, during the past year, something over 3,000,000 dozen, worth one-third of a million of dollars. Eggs were free both ways, and he was at a loss to understand how we would be benefitted by levying a heavy duty on them. The hon. gentleman had dwelt for some considerable time on other articles on which the duty was almost precisely the same—a cent a pound duty was levied on pork, beef and mutton, but there was a slight difference in the duty on dried meat. He was at a loss to understand how we would be benefitted by levying heavier duties on these important articles. He was told by lumbermen that the importation of American pork was most important to them; and if the farmers in Canada could not produce pork with a protection of one cent a pound, and freight, they ought to quit raising it. As a person following this pursuit, he believed so too. He might just say that he was convinced that the farming population of Ontario were not asking for Protection. They did not want it; and he did not see why hon. gentlemen should force on this class that for which they did not ask. Nay, more; had there been a solitary petition ever presented to this House during this Parliament, and the last five years, from the farmers of any portion of Ontario, requesting Protection for themselves? If such a thing had taken place, he was not aware of it. Then, upon what basis or grounds did these hon. gentlemen base their arguments to the effect that the farmers of Ontario were seeking Protection? He, for his part, did not know. Moreover, at the different meetings held, and at the picnics to which the hon. member had referred, that took place last year, he thought that the leading gentlemen who attended them, would fail to remember a single instance when Protection was demanded by farmers. In his own county, during last summer, he had held six or eight meetings, at which farmers were generally present, and, in only one solitary instance, had he met a single farmer who desired their produce to be protected. The farmers asked for nothing of the kind, nor did they want it. The very moment that this question was brought before them, the answer almost invariably was, that they quite understood that the very moment their produce was protected, the object would be to levy heavier Customs duties on other articles, which, instead of benefitting them, would take money out of their pockets. There was another side to this question. They must remember that almost every constituency, and even the constituency which the hon. gentleman represented, as well as the one he (Mr. Smith) represented, contained, besides a large number of farmers who were producers, a very large number of people who were consumers. They had towns and villages scattered over the country; and in all of them there was more or less manufacturing going on, and a greater or less number of poor people. In all these places the consumers numbered, probably, as many as the farmers themselves; and certainly, if by levying these duties the prices of farm produce would be raised; of course it would have the effect of increasing the prices of breadstuffs and the necessaries of life to the consumer. He could say that, not only the farmers of Ontario, as far as he understood, but also the farmers of his own county, did not want Protection. He knew that the farmers were prosperous, and that, probably, few people in Ontario lived more comfortably than the farmers of Ontario. It had been asserted in the House that many of our farmers had their farms mortgaged; but those with whom this was the case, and who had their farms encumbered in any way, were, as a rule, the most thrifty they had in Ontario. Comparatively few had their farms mortgaged, except for the purpose of purchasing other real property, so that, in this matter, the farmers of Ontario asked for no Protection whatever; and it was just as well that they should be understood on this point, and, perhaps, the farmers in the House should express their views upon this question. It was strange that no farmer in the House had ever advocated, touched upon, brought up or advocated this Protection. Reference was made to the bringing of cattle through Canada from Chicago to England. This was the case; but these cattle, in all probability, would come through at any rate. He did not know what would be the affect if they could be brought through in bond, as the hon. gentleman said, could be done. But what would be gained by it? They were now, in a sense, brought through in bond. Ten per cent. duty was levied on cattle coming into Canada, but he was at a loss to understand how that would be gained if this duty was increased to 20 or 25 per cent. on cattle which were brought from the far West, over our great highways, whether by water or by rail, or what would be put in the farmers' pockets if this policy was carried out. There was an argument that had been used a good deal, not, perhaps, in the House, but in other places, in respect to our agricultural implements. It was stated that the agricultural implement makers complained that there was a very heavy duty on their implements if sent to the other side—40 or 50 per cent., while the duty on such implements coming in here was only 17½ per cent. He thought that if they looked into this matter a little, as far as Ontario was concerned, they would find that, during the past year, there had been brought into this Province something like 29 mowing and reaping machines, valued at $3,195; this was a mere fraction of the number made in this country, a mere nothing, and it could not affect the interests of the large number of agricultural implement makers in Ontario. This number would scarcely give one quarter of a machine for each county in the Province. On the machines a duty of $549 had been paid; and, supposing they had been kept out of the country, he would have been at a loss to understand how this fact would have benefited even the manufacturers of these implements. He was very sure, however, that if they had been kept out, this fact would not in any degree whatever have affected the interests of the farming community.

MR. DAVIES said that about three-fourths of the population of the small Province of Prince Edward Island were engaged in agricultural pursuits; and, therefore, if Protection was a good thing for the farmers of Ontario, he thought that it would also be a good thing for the farmers of Prince Edward Island; but the farmers down there were quite as well aware that Protection would be of no benefit to them as the farmers of Ontario, as the preceding speaker (Mr. Smith) had represented. They had no Protection at all in Prince Edward Island. Isolated as they were, they could not have any large manufactures, and so they confined themselves pretty much to raising agricultural produce and rough manufactures. He found, by looking over the statistics of 1876, that they exported that year 1,720,000 bushels of oats, besides supplying the neighbouring Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia with what they required, which was a very considerable quantity, as these Provinces did not grow enough for their own consumption. Their farmers knew perfectly well that the price in Europe governed the price of their oats, and the half-million bushels which they sent to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia had no appreciable effect on the market. The price rose and fell with the quotations in England and France, where they exported the largest quantity; and the demand in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland had hardly any effect on the price. Sometimes, towards the close of the season, when the crop was exhausted, and a sudden demand arose for small quantities, they might have some little effect on it; but it had no effect at all on the main export. They raised a very large quantity of potatoes. Their soil was particularly adapted for this purpose; and, if they had the market, they could almost supply the Dominion with this article, but they were shut out from the United States market, in ordinary seasons, by a protective duty, and hence their farmers had only produced to a limited extent this root. He saw by the returns for 1876, that they exported 1,300,000 bushels of potatoes to the United States, where the crop that year happened to be very poor; and the consumers in the United States had to pay the duty levied, 15c. a bushel in gold, besides giving them a very good price beside. But, in ordinary years, this duty acted as a prohibitory duty, and they could not send potatoes to the United States. They had quite a large export of eggs to the United States, and they had no Protection on this article. They could send their dried fish to that country and this gave them a choice of the market, but a very large proportion of their fish went to the West Indies, and England; last year they exported 10,000 quintals. Their farmers had a slight Protection on pork, of which they raised a large quantity. Before the recent regulations were adopted, the fishermen of Nova Scotia, who used a great deal of pork, were allowed to take it in bond to the fisheries; and he could not see why this should not be done. It was rather hard to compel the fishermen, who had no Protection, to pay a duty of $2 a barrel on pork in order to protect the farmers. They were ship-builders and fishermen, besides being farmers; and they only manufactured small manufactures to supply those other businesses. In 1876, they sold 36 ships, valued at $327,000. Their shipwrights and ship-builders had no Protection at all. As far as they were concerned, Free-trade, pure and simple, would be the best thing for them; as for the idea of their farmers, by having a duty on oats or any of these things, shipping them up here, was out of the question. The distance entirely prohibited it. Besides, the farmers of this part of Canada produced the same articles. They could grow very good wheat but it was not a safe crop; and therefore, their farmers principally confined themselves to other crops which were certain; and they would consider it a great hardship if they were not allowed to purchase the flour they required freely. It was quite true that a very large proportion of it came from Ontario, for the people preferred it to American flour, considering it better and superior, and not so much mixed. There were other things which they were obliged to get in the United States, on which they had no Protection. Before they came into Confederation, they obtained the largest part of their manufactured goods from England, but now that market was supplanted in this relation by the Dominion, whence they obtained coarse tweeds, wooden ware, and boots and shoes. On English goods a duty of 17½ or 20 per cent. was levied; and in the natural course of trade, these articles now came from Dominion manufacturers, for which their farmers were taxed. They did not complain of a moderate incidental Protection. They knew very well that it was desirable, although they themselves could not, from their insular position, manufacture largely, that manufactures should be built up in this Dominion; and hence they did not object to a moderate incidental Protection. He almost thought that this Protection was already too great, and that Canadian manufacturers should be content with the Protection which they now enjoyed. He saw that his hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Pope) had changed his opinion since last year on this subject, but, perhaps, the policy of the Opposition did not mean much. He thought that the readjustment of the tariff, if the Opposition acceded to power, would be so small as not to amount to anything, though perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite might not lose any votes by this policy and catch a few. He was, however, quite certain that the people of the Maritime Provinces were Free-traders. It was their interest to be so, and they would find extreme Protection a hardship in view of their position by the sea, and the fact that almost all their trade flowed into other countries. They could not have a large inter-provincial trade, and they would not wish to be taxed to a greater extent than was now the case. The present taxation was just as much as the people could bear. They were already taxed to support the Federal Government besides having local taxation. They knew how bad times had been, and he thought that to add to the burden of taxation would be more than the people, at the present time, could endure. This was one reason why, although they would like to see the Canadian Pacific Railway completed, they feared that this would be more than the circumstances of a new country would permit. He was afraid that his hon. friend from Queen's would find it a hard matter to persuade his constituents, unless he clearly defined what this readjustment of the tariff meant, that his vote was right and proper. If such readjustment meant a large increase of the Customs duties, and increased prices for their consumers, he feared that the latter would not relish this sort of thing.

MR. SMITH.

MR. DAVIES.

MR. POPE: I would suggest to the hon. member that he had better speak for himself.

MR. DAVIES said he presumed that he could criticise, to some extent, the position which his hon. friend had taken, more especially as the hon. gentleman had, last year, voted in the opposite direction. This year, the hon. gentleman had changed his views. Of course he had reason to find fault with the hon. gentleman, who would have to explain this change to his constituents; but he was afraid that the hon. gentleman could hardly do this satisfactorily, unless he could convince them that this readjustment of the tariff meant nothing. He had watched pretty closely the proceedings of this Government; and he thought that their policy was a wise one. They had lost no time in completing the survey of the Pacific Railway; and they were now able to judge this question a little. The Island railway was put up very hurriedly—in a few weeks, indeed—without proper plans or surveys; the result was that it was the laughingstock of the Provinces. The railway was a very inferior one, but they paid very dearly for it. It was stated the other day by another hon. member that it was desirable this survey should be extended to Peace River. He thought so too, but he hoped the Government would not lease that line until they had completed the survey. The policy of the Government had been to push on that work as far as their finances would admit, but as, during the last few years, there had been a great depression of trade, perhaps they had expended more money in this way than their circumstances warranted. The Province from which he came was adverse to any increase of taxation, being of opinion that they had quite enough to pay. The manufacturers had quite as much Protection as they desired, and some of them would be glad to have a few per cent. less.

MR. BURPEE (Sunbury) said this resolution before the House was one professedly in the interest of the farmers; it referred entirely to the duty on wheat and flour. The fact was that the wheat-growing portion of the Dominion was the smaller portion, and what might be for the interests of that particular district might not be for the benefit of other parts. He thought that the question should be treated from a Dominion standpoint, and that no sectional policy should be pursued by the Government or by the House. After the speech by the hon. member for Peel, in answer to the remarks made by the hon. member for Wellington, he need scarcely say anything on the subject from the standpoint of Ontario, which was the principal wheat-growing portion of the Dominion. The arguments adduced by the hon. gentleman were unanswerable. He had shown that what was asked would not be in the interests of that portion of the Dominion for which it was particularly demanded. The question had taken a wide range. Hon. members had dealt not only with the question properly before the House, but with the whole question of Free-trade and Protection. The agricultural interest was one of great importance in Canada; it was of the first importance. It was computed that the value of farms and farm property in the Dominion approaches $1,000,000,000, while the annual products approximated to something over $200,000,000. The whole stock or capital employed in manufactures was stated by the last census as something under $80,000,000, which showed the great preponderance of the agricultural over the manufacturing interests. As one who had some knowledge of farming, and as representing an agricultural constituency, his impression was that this proposal was not in the interests of the farmers of the Dominion, and would be received with no satisfaction, but with great disfavour by the Province from which he (Mr. Burpee) came. About 30,723 bushels of corn were imported into New Brunswick, 83,434 barrels of meal, and 61,216 of wheat flour, the aggregate value of which amounted to $659,427, according to the Trade Returns for 1876-7. In Nova Scotia they imported 105,976 bushels of corn, 136,294 barrels of corn meal, and 121,039 barrels of wheat flour, of an aggregate value of $1,202,046. In Prince Edward Island they imported 9,663 barrels of corn meal, 16,225 of wheat flour, and 463 bushels of corn, the aggregate value being $101,619; making altogether an aggregate of these articles to the value of $1,963,000 imported by the three Maritime Provinces from the United States. They might be asked why they did not import their flour from Canada? The fact was they did import the largest proportion of wheat flour they used from there, but the nature of the trade carried on between those Provinces and the United States, where flour formed a return cargo for vessels carrying our products to their markets was such as to make it convenient and profitable. Besides, the geographical position of the country was such, and the expense of transportation between the Maritime Provinces and the West so great, as to seriously interfere with the importation of flour in Ontario. On entering the Union, the people of New Brunswick were led to believe that intercolonial trade would be facilitated by the construction of the Bay Verte Canal and the Intercolonial Railway, by a commercial route. He hoped he would not be called to order if he said something about railways in this discussion, as the member for King's, P. E. I., had been. Our Intercolonial Railway had been located rather from a military than a commercial point of view, which increased the distance and enhanced the transportation to New Brunswick. As yet, water communication between the Bay of Fundy and the West involved the necessity of the long and dangerous journey around Nova Scotia. They had expected to have the canal across the isthmus, and that an intercolonial trade would spring up between the Bay of Fundy and the Upper Provinces through that means. This had not been carried out. And in view of these difficulties of transportation it would be very unfair for Ontario to impose a duty on flour. The old National Policy inaugurated or, at least, promoted by the hon. member for Cumberland had the merit, or pretended merit, of tending to encourage intercolonial trade. He proposed to tax flour, meal and coal. The resolution before the House had not that merit; it was certainly a very narrow and very objectionable one. If we protect one industry, we must, in all fairness, protect the whole round of industries. To protect all would increase the cost of living to all parties, and, in effect, amount to no protection at all. In New Brunswick, the farmers depended very much on the lumbering interest. When the lumbering interest flourished, better prices were obtained by farmers than when the case was otherwise. If, therefore, the interests of the farmers were protected, the interests of the lumbermen must be protected as well, and that was a problem which hon. gentlemen opposite had failed to solve. There were also other interests similarly situated, and which could not be protected, such as fishing, ship building, etc. To enhance the price of bread stuffs to those employed in those industries, would only be to add to burdens which were already too great.

MR. POPE (Queen's, P.E.I.): This motion comes from the other side of the House.

MR. BURPEE said he should have been very much surprised if it had come from the hon. gentleman who had made the interruption. He was not surprised that the hon. gentleman should be a little uneasy about the motion. He (Mr. Burpee) would feel more at ease in voting against the motion than the hon. gentleman would in voting for it, in view of the approaching elections. The cry of Protection had not come from the farmers, as had been well stated by the hon. member from Peel. It was a notable fact that the cry for Protection had come from the manufacturers; and, speaking on behalf of the farmers of the Maritime Provinces, he might say that they did not want Protection. In order to strengthen this cry for Protection made by manufacturers, the interests of the farmer were dragged in. They attempted to induce farmers to believe that if the price of all articles were enhanced their interests would be benefitted. He had too high an opinion of the intelligence of the farmers to think them gullible enough to be deceived by such sophistries. Another class which seemed very anxious to look after the interests of farmers was the politicians who, in this House, chiefly belonged to other professions. The manufactures of this country were not in a languishing state; as compared with other countries they were in a very satisfactory condition. The manufacturers of Canada were better in circumstances than those of the United States, and he did not think there was any necessity, on their behalf, to put a further duty on flour or to increase the tariff, which was already  $17\frac{1}{2}$  per cent., and with an additional  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent., as the cost of importation would, amount to 20 per cent. in all, which he considered quite enough Protection. Before the Union the tariff of New Brunswick was  $12\frac{1}{2}$  per cent., while that of Nova Scotia was only 10 per cent. Prince Edward Island had also a low tariff, while Canada had a tariff of  $17\frac{1}{2}$  to 20 per cent. Immediately before the Union, the tariff of New Brunswick was raised to 15 per cent., and that of Canada was lowered to the same rate; since then the tariff had been increased to its present rate. He hoped that when trade had resumed its normal condition, the revenue would be such as would justify the administration in reducing rather than increasing the tariff, and in that way lessen the burthens of the people. An hon. member from the other side of the House, the member for Centre Wellington, stated that the manufacturers would be satisfied with a tariff of from 20 to 25 per cent. As one of the representatives from the Lower Provinces, he (Mr. Burpee) believed such a policy would be viewed with alarm as most detrimental to their interests, and against which, as well as the duty on flour, he would enter his most emphatic protest.

MR. BURPEE.

MR. McCALLUM said he thought, from the arguments of some hon. gentlemen on the opposite side, that they came to the House not to represent their constituents but to represent themselves. He thought his hon. friend from Centre Wellington deserved the thanks of the agriculturists of the Dominion for looking after their interests in the House. It was all very well if Free-trade could be got. It was the duty of the House, however, to legislate not for the interests of the fishermen of Prince Edward Island, or the lumbermen of New Brunswick exclusively, but for the interests of the whole Dominion. The lumber trade was not so important a branch of industry as agriculture, because lumberers merely brought down the crops which had been growing for hundreds of years. He thought, indeed, we should husband our resources in that respect, and in years to come the lumber of this country would bring money. He would like to see a re-arrangement of the tariff, not to collect more money from the people, but to place a duty on articles which came into competition with our home industries. He was desirous that the farmer of the Province of Ontario should send the products of his farm to Nova Scotia, and that the coal of Nova Scotia should come into Ontario, as that would be a means of encouraging provincial trade. But some members of the House had said, "If you do that, you will be robbing Peter to pay Paul, and robbing Paul to pay Peter." If they did that, however, nobody would be robbed in the end; those hon. gentlemen never forgot besides that "Sam" stood outside and was robbing Peter and Paul to the extent of 20c. on the dollar. He contended that it was prejudicial to the interests of the Dominion of Canada. The more they conserved their own trade and kept money in the country, the greater encouragement would they give to the agricultural and manufacturing interests of the country. It was not by sending their wheat or their flour 3,000 miles away, at a loss of 50c. to 60c., that we would be so much benefitted, but by preserving our home markets. By keeping our own markets open, employment would become more plentiful and population would increase. In the United States, they had adopted the wise policy of protecting their manufacturing industries, and by reducing the price of articles, causing increased competition, so that the manufacturers of that country could, after paying 17½ per cent. duty, slaughter some of their products in our markets and destroy our industries.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

PRIVATE BILL.

THIRD READING.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 30) To grant certain powers to the Agricultural Mutual Assurance Association of Canada, and to change its name as amended by Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.—(Mr. Macmillan.)

Bill ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.—[BILL No. 6.]

(Mr. Thomson, Welland.)

SENATE AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

MR. HOLTON moved the second reading of the amendments made by the Senate to the Bill (No. 6) To authorize and confirm the scheme of arrangement of the Canada Southern Railway Company.

MR. McDOUGALL (East Elgin) moved the following amendment:

"That said amendments be not now read a second time and concurred in, but that the second amendment be amended by inserting after the word 'in' immediately before the word 'Canada' in the 5th section, the following words: the town of St. Thomas, in the County of Elgin, Province of Ontario."

MR. HOLTON said the amendment was out of order.

MR. SPEAKER: When a Bill comes down from the Senate, those amendments can either be concurred in or rejected altogether, or what are called consequent amendments may be made to them; that is, an amendment to the amendment.

MR. LANGEVIN said the amendment made by the Senate provided that these workshops, etc., be located in the Dominion of Canada. The hon. member for Elgin moved that they be located at a certain place in the Dominion of Canada. That motion was a consequent amendment; an amendment to the amendment made by the Senate.

MR. HOLTON said they could not propose, even as a consequent amendment to the amendment of the Senate, the reversal of the decision of this House. The motion which the hon. member for Elgin now proposed had been made in this House, when in Committee on the Bill, and had been rejected, and, consequently, could not now come up again as an amendment to the amendment of the Senate.

MR. LANGEVIN said the hon. member for Elgin had made his motion in amendment on the third reading of of the Bill, and it had been rejected. The Bill then passed the House and went to the Senate. In the Senate, suppose the hon. member for Elgin had obtained the insertion of his amendment in the Bill, the Bill would have come down with this amendment, and the House would be again in a position to vote upon it.

MR. HOLTON: When the Bill came back we would have had an opportunity of receding or insisting upon our present vote. Instead of doing that, the Senate has made an amendment not at all touching that action.

MR. SPEAKER: I recollect distinctly that the hon. member raised the question that the workshops and offices should be at the town of St. Thomas. The House passed upon that and negatived the proposal positively.

Amendment read the first and second times and agreed to.

SUPPLY.—THE TARIFF.

Order for resuming adjourned debate on Mr. Cartwright's motion for the House to go again into Committee of Supply, and of Mr. Brown's motion in amendment thereto, read.

MR. McCALLUM said hon. members might state that Protection had been injurious to the United States, but he thought otherwise. He should be glad to see the day when this country would be in such a prosperous condition as the United States was to-day. He should be glad to see the day when this country would produce, both in manufactured articles and in agricultural products, enough to support our own people and have a large balance to sell to the world, so that we might have the balance of trade in our favour. Hon. gentlemen had said a great deal about the depression in the United States; but what was the fact? That country, this last year, after having produced sufficient for its own people, had sold to other countries a balance of $166,000,000 worth beyond what they bought from other countries. We in Canada, on the other hand, had not produced sufficient to support ourselves, and it was the old story, which was to be found in "David Copperfield," that, as long as we expended more than we produced, we must go to ruin; that, with an income of one pound and an expenditure of 19s. 9d., the result was perfect happiness; but the expenditure of 3d. over the income resulted in perfect misery. Hon. members said that over-production was worse than over-importation. He differed from them, because, if they produced more than they consumed, they had the people employed in producing it; but if they imported more than was necessary for consumption, more than they had the money to pay for, they ran the country into debt,—that was if they ever intended to pay it. But hon. gentlemen said they never intended to pay it. Of course, it would be said that if they put a duty on flour they would raise the price of bread stuffs, and consequently the price of bread to the poor man. He was not so sure of that, but admitting it for the sake of argument, if they did that, would they not give him employment? Was it not better that a man should pay $10 a barrel for flour if he got $2 a day for work than that he should pay a lower price if he only received 50c. a day? The United States, from 1860 to 1870, had increased their population some 20 per cent. or 25 per cent. while in this country, notwithstanding all the money spent on immigration, our population during that time only increased about 18 per cent. If they left out the immigration, they would find that our increase in that time was less than 12½ per cent. or 1¼ per cent. a year. That was not the natural increase of the population of this country. But we were a feeder to the United States, because we could not give employment to our own people; and they, therefore, sought it in the United States, and there manufactured and produced those very articles which we ought to produce in this country. He would have much preferred that the hon. gentleman who had introduced this motion should have included in it all the other articles which needed Protection. Why was this motion made? Were these gentlemen going back on the Government that they had been supporting for four years? They now told the Government, "We have no confidence in you; we wish to put our house in order; an election is coming on, and the farmers of Ontario know that the Government is not doing what is right." That was the effect of this motion. These gentlemen wished, by this one vote, to make their peace with the people of this country, and to have all the sins which they had committed during the last five years condoned. If the resolution did not mean that, it meant nothing; but he would tell the hon. gentleman that death-bed repentance was not the best kind of repentance, and that, as far as he had read, there was only one instance on record where any man had obtained forgiveness at the eleventh hour. He would have liked to see coarse grains included in this motion. He was a farmer, although he also carried on other business, and he could speak feelingly. It had been said that they ought to protect the lumbermen. He had been a lumberman as well as a farmer, and he knew that corn coming into this country came in contact with the coarse grains of the farmer. When these coarse grains rose above a certain price, corn came in and knocked down that price. What encouragement was there to-day to till the soil? The Finance Minister said that his only hope was the settlement of the wild lands and the natural increase of the country, but if he allowed the Americans to come in here with their products free of duty, what encouragement was there to settlement? If a farmer had a small crop, he wanted a good price for it; but he could not get it, because produce came in from the United States and knocked down the price. He (Mr. McCallum) would vote for this motion, though it did not contain all that he wanted. The member who had seconded it had voted against the same thing before. Although this was not all that was wanted, it was a part of it. These gentlemen knew their motion could not carry, because the people of the Maritime Provinces must vote against it, as it gave them no equivalent. They desired to raise the cry that, if the tariff were enforced, more money would be taken out of the people. But they did not want more money than could be legitimately expended. The re-arrangement of the tariff did not imply that more money would be taken from the people than was now taken; but, if they included the agricultural, the manufacturing, and the mining interests, they would offer encouragement to the people of the Lower Provinces, as well as to those of Ontario and Quebec. He would vote for the motion, although he was satisfied it would not carry. If it did carry, perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite would cross to the Opposition side of the House; and then the present Opposition could re-arrange the tariff—as he expected to see them do shortly—so as to do justice and give fair play to every industry in the country.

MR. LANGEVIN.

Mr. GREENWAY said that, coming from an agricultural constituency, he might naturally be supposed to have an interest in agriculturists. The House had before it for once a motion by which it was proposed to benefit one particular interest. If there was anything in Protection, he thought this was the true way to get at the matter; but he could not understand how the farmers were to be benefitted by Protection. The first clamour for Protection had come from the manufacturers. They were now told that Protection did not mean an increase in the price of the articles protected, and the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) had told them that it would not increase the price of manufactured goods, but it would increase the price of agricultural productions. He (Mr. Greenway) could not understand that argument. The hon. gentleman had gone on to show by some figures that the high protective tariff of the United States had had the effect of increasing the price of agricultural products there, while previously he had stated that Protection to manufacturers did not increase the price. If it were true that Protection in the United States had increased the price of agricultural products 25 per cent., what had the Canadian farmers to fear from the importation of those products. He did not think the trade question, as viewed by hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side, would bear a thorough scrutiny. If their proposals meant anything, they meant Protection to the manufacturers and a higher price for the goods they manufactured. He did not understand the argument that Protection would not increase the price of goods. But, he could easily understand how the farming community, the consumers of this country, could be deprived of going into the cheapest market to buy certain kinds of goods which they now went there to buy if the policy of the Opposition were to be carried out. He could mention several kinds of goods to which this remark would apply. For example, we went to the American market to buy cut nails, an article which entered into everyday consumption. They obtained a good article, which had driven the manufactures of Pillow, Hersey & Co., of Montreal, out of the market, for a number of years, though such was not the case at present, because the American article was of much better quality. If it was desirous to protect that interest, the people would be compelled to use an inferior article, and to pay the price which Canadian manufacturers thought proper to charge, and be deprived of going to the United States for such articles. Other goods might be cited, such as axes, cutlery, etc., but it was not necessary to enumerate them. The people in the western portion of the country had had an example of what high protective duties would do for them. He referred to coal oil. A high protective duty was placed on that article, which resulted in "rings" being formed; and when the price of oil in Cleveland ranged from 10c to 17c. per gallon, we were paying, on account of that high protective tariff, from 40c. to 45c. Last Session, the Government reduced that duty. It was stated, however, that under the existing law, "rings" could be formed equally as dangerous as those which previously existed. That was not the case. The reduction of the duty had been advantageous, and the price of coal oil had been reduced to 20c. and 25c. per gallon. Suppose the argument was correct, that it was possible, by imposing high protective duties, to increase the price of agricultural products, the necessities of life would be increased in price, according to the calculation of the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) to the poor people, who formed the majority of population, because this was a new country, and not much wealth was distributed through it. The adoption of such a policy would, moreover, introduce a wrong principle, that of making this a dear country to live in instead of a cheap one. What Protection did hon. gentlemen opposite offer to the poor labouring man? These was a class of the people who, although the Opposition, in all their resolutions, had endeavoured to embrace every class, had been omitted. He thought the reasoning of the hon. member for Centre Wellington with regard to the losses sustained by the farmers of this country, was very remarkable. He supposed that the farmers lost 5c. per bushel on his wheat on account of the competition of the American articles, which came in duty free. He next took cattle, and estimated that each farmer sold two annually and lost $10 per head, on account of the duties. According to that reasoning, the farmer lost more on the cattle than on the wheat, which was not affected. According to that argument, $63 was lost to each farmer's family. If the poor man was called upon to pay 25 per cent. more for the necessities of life, $100 might be added to the cost of the support of each family. After the hon. member for Centre Wellington had laboured to show the necessity to us of the markets of the United States, he wound up his remarks by declaring that we could live without the American people. He agreed with the hon. gentleman, and thought the sooner we began to understand this matter thoroughly, the better it would be for ourselves. He did not view the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty as an un-mixed evil, because the people of Canada had been led to look to other markets, and they were finding other markets for their products. It was not, therefore, necessary that we should look to the United States, or that we should regulate our tariff by the tariff of that country. It behoved us to look to our own interests. If the resolution before the House meant anything, it meant to make the poor man in the outlying districts of the Dominion to pay more for the necessaries of life, without giving to the farmer of Ontario any advantage. He could understand an hon. member offering a resolution in favour of imposing a duty on Indian corn. Such a proposal might, at first sight, seem plausible; but the hon. member, unfortunately for himself, had referred to a gentleman who was engaged in exporting cattle to the Old Country, who had declared that if the Canadians, if expected to compete successfully with the western agriculturists of the United States in raising cattle for the English market, they must use Indian corn; and if that were true—and he had heard the same statement from other quarters—they must obtain the corn for feeding stock as cheaply as possible. It was an undeniable fact that in many localities in the Dominion, wheat had been grown to such an extent that farmers would have to look to stock-raising for their profits. They were told that the exportation of live stock to Great Britain was a very remunerative business, and Canadian farmers would no doubt engage in it to a large extent. In many districts they would be compelled to turn their attention to that branch of farming, and they would require Indian corn for their stock. It was palpable that the people in certain localities required Indian corn, for this was not a corn-growing country; and as they wished to obtain it as cheaply as possible, they did not desire a duty to be placed upon it. It was a mistake to suppose that the farmers were clamouring for Protection; they neither desired it nor asked it, and he believed it was the greatest mistake which the Opposition party could commit, to raise the cry of protecting the industries of this country. It was amusing to notice the different policies advocated by those hon. gentlemen from the same standpoint, some advocating a retaliatory policy, others urging a reciprocal tariff. The absurdity of talking about retaliation at once appeared when they considered the trifling amount of Indian corn imported into Canada as compared with the whole export from the United States. What effect could the imposition of a duty of 20c. per bushel on the 5,000,000 bushels imported into the Dominion have on the legislation of the United States, when the total export was 200,000,000 bushels? It could have no influence whatever. He believed the policy which the Government had pursued was the true one in the interests of Canada. He believed that endeavouring to make this a cheap country to live in, and trying to give the poor people the necessities of life as cheaply as possible, was the true principle on which to act; and the Government deserved the thanks of the people, that they had been enabled to withstand the pressure brought to bear in order to induce them to protect certain manufacturing industries. The adoption of a protective policy was the greatest mistake, from a national stand point, that could possibly be made. It was well known that the tendency of young people was to get away from work, and the cry about Protection, and making people rich by Act of Parliament, increased that tendency. He repeated that the Protection cry was the greatest mistake that could be perpetrated by any party, and he believed that when the question was submitted to the farmers, as, no doubt, it would be at an early day, it would be found that the Government would be sustained by a sweeping majority.

MR. OLIVER said his only excuse for offering a few remarks on that important subject was that he represented an agricultural constituency. The hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton), in the course of his remarks, had stated that English industries had been protected until they were able to compete with the whole world, and then Free-trade was adopted by that country. He had obtained a statement respecting the duties that were imposed upon importations of certain manufactured articles into Great Britain in 1843, and he would read the schedule for the purpose of comparing the duties there referred to with those existing in Canada at the present time. In 1843 the duty on manufactured articles of all kinds was 15 per cent.; leather, 15 per cent.; cotton manufactures, 10 per cent.; linen, 15 per cent.; earthenware, 10 per cent. Those were the protective duties in force in England in 1843, and under those duties it was alleged that English manufactures flourished to such an extent they were able to compete with the whole world. The present Canadian duties on the same articles were  $17\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. He submitted that if English manufacturing establishment flourished under a duty ranging from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent. to such an extent that they were enabled to compete with the whole world, the fact that the Canadian duties were, at present, higher than they were in England at the time referred to (1843), established the proposition that Canadian manufacturing industries should be able to flourish and compete with the world now.

MR. COLBY : That was a year after the duties were reduced.

MR. OLIVER : 1843 was considered one of the protective periods; and it was not until 1853 that the Free-trade policy was inaugurated.

MR. COLBY : The low duties commenced in 1874.

MR. OLIVER said the following statistics would show what English manufacturers had accomplished since that period. The exports of cotton manufactures in 1843 amounted to £14,000,000 sterling; and in 1875, under a period of Free-trade, to £58,500,000. The exports of leather were £400,000 in 1843; and £3,018,000, in 1875; lineu manufactures exported in 1843 were £2,351,000, and in 1875, amounted to £7,272,000; woollen manufactures exported in 1843 £5,185,000, and in 1875 21,659,000.

MR. OLIVER.

Earthenware at that time. 1843, £555,000, and in 1875 £1,858,000; metals of all kinds exported in 1843, were valued at £4,410,000, and in 1875 £39,270,000. He thought that these comparisons proved two things: (1) that if the British manufacturing establishments flourished under the Protection they were afforded at the time to such an extent as was stated, then there was no difficulty whatever in the Canadian manufacturers arriving at the same position; (2) that the manufactures of these goods had increased enormously since the era of Free-trade commenced, and that the exportation of these manufactures had increased beyond the most sanguine expectations of anyone who lived at that time. He was very glad indeed that they had before the House one amendment which they could fully comprehend. This was a motion which would be understood by the people of this country, and when the vote was being taken he apprehended that at all events a few of the gentlemen who had asked for Protection to all the manufacturing and agricultural interests of the country would be found voting against this motion. On the whole, it was probably well for the House and country that they had before them a resolution which they could fully understand. He would vote against this motion for one or two reasons. In the first place, even if he were in favour of protecting the agricultural products of this country, this was not the proper time to propose a measure of this kind. Hon. gentlemen knew that the United States Congress was now engaged in revising the tariff; and it would not be advisable to change our tariff until we saw what alterations the Americans proposed making in theirs. If there should be a disposition on the part of our neighbours across the line to lower the tariff on natural products of this country going in there, it would be an unwise policy to alter the regulations on that matter in force in this country—at least until the result of the present deliberations of the United States Congress was made known. They knew that the attempt was made very recently to guard against smuggling, and that a duty was put upon malt coming.

in here from the United States, in this relation, during the past year; but the effect of this, in the United States, was, that an attempt was there made before a Committee of Congress to double the duty on malt going into that country. It was one of the greatest fallacies that any man could imagine to suppose that we could force the people of the United States to give us reciprocity by placing higher duties on those classes of their products which were imported into Canada; and to imagine that a country with only four millions of people could compel the United States, a vast country with, at least, 40 odd millions, to give reciprocity by a measure of this kind, was, he thought, the greatest folly that could be entertained or spoken of by any one. This was one of the reasons, though not by any means the only one, why he would vote against this motion. He was entirely opposed to any measure of that character. There was a time in the history of this country when, perhaps, such a policy as was now proposed, might have done some good. He saw the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Bowell) smiling across the floor of the House, and he knew very well why.

MR. MITCHELL: The cap fits.

MR. OLIVER said there was a time when a measure of this kind—when we had full control of the navigation of the St. Lawrence, and of our fisheries and everything that related to the Canadian people—would, perhaps, have done some good. In fact they were positively sure of this, because when we had reciprocity with the United States, we knew that it was in consequence of our fisheries; and if we now had full control of them, and of the navigation of our waters, there might be some sense in a movement of this sort; but we had now nothing in Canada that the people of the United States cared very much about. Of course, they wanted to sell us as many goods as possible, and to buy every article which we had they required; and it was desirable that this should continue. His next reason for opposing this measure was, because it would injure the millers in Canada. He could prove this statement. He saw his hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Jones) smiling at this; but the hon. gentleman knew that the purchase of Canadian wheat for export was an advantage to the millers in Canada, and that there was an arrangement between the millers of this country and the owners of steamships that conveyed the grain across the Atlantic, that the latter should carry the raw material to England at a less rate than the manufactured material. Read the discussions which took place before the Millers' Association some two years ago, and hon. gentlemen would find it stated by the millers that the merchants who bought the raw material in Canada could carry it to England at a less rate per 100lb. than if it was manufactured, so that those who bought wheat in this country for exportation could pay a trifling shade more for it than if they were going to manufacture it, and, as a consequence, our millers had to supplement the amount of wheat they bought here with Western wheat. If they stopped the importation of the latter, and if our millers were compelled to depend entirely on the purchase of wheat in Canada, they would cripple the milling industry in this country, and the millers would not be able to keep their establishments running through the whole year. As a consequence, he maintained that if they crippled our milling industry, they destroyed the Canadian market and took the millers' agents out of the market. He, who only sent the raw material to England, purchased the wheat of the Canadian people, so that if they put an import duty on wheat, they would injure our millers, and, as a consequence, the Canadian market and the Canadian farmer too. But, was it a fact that an import duty, if put upon wheat, would increase its price? His hon. friend the member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) had made a great many assertions during the course of his speech; but, he would submit it to hon. members whether one single assertion had been substantiated by anything like proof. He had not heard a single proof adduced by the hon. gentleman sufficient to justify the statements he had made. Was it a fact that even if they placed a duty of 25c. a bushel on American wheat imported into Canada, that such an act would increase the price of Canadian wheat? He held that it could not do so. This was a principle laid down, which could not be moved; and it mattered not, so far as the Canadian farmer was concerned, whether the twenty-five millions of bushels of wheat that went from the United States to England passed through the United States or Canada. The British people required about one hundred million of bushels of wheat every year more than they raised themselves; and this wheat came from every part of the world where a supply of wheat was raised, and it was paid for and consumed in England. Our small quantity, about four millions of bushels, usually went over to England, but it made a very small part of the one hundred million bushels required there. If all this grain were to flow through Canada, it would not change the price of Canadian wheat one cent. Our wheat, the American wheat and the Russian wheat was sent to England; thus the wheat from these three countries was put into competition in the English market, and, according to the price paid there for that wheat, which was carried from all parts of the world, so was the price paid in the country whence it was imported.

MR. BOWELL: What has that to do with it?

MR. OLIVER said that it had a very great deal to do with it. There was proof positive that an import duty would not increase the price of Canadian wheat, while it would destroy our carrying trade and render our public works less productive than they were at the present time. What was the use of enlarging the Welland Canal, of deepening and improving the navigation of the St. Lawrence canals, and of improving the navigation of the St. Lawrence itself, if we were going to put a stop to the importation of American wheat? Did they ever see a man building a magnificent establishment for the sale of goods, and when he had completed it place a toll-gate at the door to keep people from entering? Why, it would be just as wise as to build the Welland Canal and then to levy prohibitive tolls on everything that we expected to pass through it and the other canals too. Another reason why he opposed this motion was, because it was taken as a first instalment of a general protective measure. It was entering the thin edge of the wedge, and this would not satisfy the gentleman who advocated Protection. They must have protection on coarse grains, and manufactured goods coming into Canada; this was a step in that direction, and, because of this fact, hon. gentlemen in the House would vote for it. It was also true, as had been well said by hon. gentlemen that evening, that this was an attempt to delude the farmers of this country. It was a deliberate attempt to do so. The farmers had not asked for this measure. He requested the hon. member for South Wellington to point out any body of farmers that had done so, and to show him any organization of farmers that had demanded it. They had heard, a year ago, that 100,000 Grangers were to petition the House for this measure; but, when it was discussed on the floor of the House, and the Grangers knew its object, those that had signed the petition had their names removed from it. He repeated, without hesitation, that this was a deliberate attempt to delude our farmers. The origin of this movement lay with the manufacturers, who well knew that if they could induce the farmers to assist them in securing Protection, they would get it; until the farmers were able to do so, they would get no Protection. What they were attempting to do, was to try and make the farmers believe that Protection would benefit them, and that the manufacturers would not raise the price of their goods if Protection was accorded, thereby stating what they knew to be utterly fallacious. In the first place, it was a fallacy to say that Protection would benefit the farmer; and to pretend that they would not raise the price of their goods with Protection, was something more than a fallacy. The manufacturers in this country were not fools, and if they had the opportunity, they would raise the price of their manufactures. They would indeed be foolish if they did not do so; and the only object they could have in asking for Protection, was to effect this. The consequence of Protection would be that the farmers would not get one cent more for their products, while they would have a great deal more to pay for the articles they purchased. He opposed this measure again because, if it was brought about, it would be breaking faith with the people of the Maritime Provinces, who, when they came into the Union were promised that the tariff would be reduced. Consequently, the tariff in 1866 was lowered from 20 to 15 per cent., while these people raised portions of their tariff to 15 per cent. It so remained until the necessities of the country demanded an increase to 17½ per cent.; and if protection was granted on manufactured goods and breadstuffs in excess of what the country demanded, in order to carry on its affairs, this would be breaking faith with the Lower Provinces. He believed, also, that it would tend in a very great degree, to weaken the Union between us and those Provinces at the present time. He was not only amazed to find hon. gentlemen from those Provinces, who had to take their wheat and flour elsewhere, advocating a measure of this kind, but he was amazed to see one hon. gentleman go farther, and vote for this policy the other day. A year ago this hon. gentleman voted on the other side of the question, but this year he had voted for Protection on wheat and flour and other articles. This policy would be injurious to our Union. If we brought about bad feeling between the Maritime Provinces and the stronger Provinces in the West, it would be very unfortunate. So far as he was concerned, and he believed he understood the sentiments from his section of the country, they were not disposed to do this. His hon. friend from Monck (Mr. McCallum) spoke a great deal about the balance of trade. They would imagine by this that every country that purchased more than it sold, was bankrupt. He would just ask the hon. gentleman to look at the balance of trade against England for the last number of years, and yet England was the richest country in the world. She was the centre of all the commercial transactions of the world. She was the centre of all the banking and monetary institutions of the world; and the balance of trade had been against that country to the extent of over £100,000,000 stg. during the last number of years.

MR. OLIVER.

MR. JONES (South Leeds): Does that include bullion?

MR. OLIVER: That is the balance of trade.

MR. BOWELL: Answer the question. Does that include bullion?

MR. OLIVER said that this fact was laid down in the English books. If it was a fact, then, that every country which bought more than it exported was a bankrupt country, then England had been bankrupt for many years. He had always been led to believe that England was the wealthiest, most prosperous and most civilized country on the face of the earth. The Australian Provinces were, perhaps, in proportion to their population, the most wealthy of all the colonies belonging to Great Britain, and yet they had a balance of trade against them. Did any hon. gentleman mean to tell him that although there had been a balance of trade against this country for twenty years, that it was poorer now than twenty years ago. A person who could see or read anything must come to the conclusion that this country had added to its wealth enormously every year. Yet, according to the logic of hon. gentlemen opposite, our country had been retrograding every year since there was a balance of trade against us. There were one or two other matters to which he would refer. A great deal of stress had been laid upon the larger importations of wheat and coarse grains into this country. Now, as an illustration of the views which he held on this subject, he would submit the following. A certain miller, who carried on business in the town where he resided, and handled for manufacturing purposes 1,000 bushels of oats every twenty-four hours, was forced to supplement largely the oats he could purchase in the local markets by others from the Western States of America. Now, if that miller was prevented from going to the Western States for his oats by the imposition of a duty on that imported grain, the price of oats in his own town would be reduced. To prove this statement he need only state that, two years ago, the same person's mill was burned down, and, in consequence, it was unnecessary for him to enter the market as a purchaser, the price of oats fell 5c. per bushel. If, therefore, his establishment were shut up altogether, or if he removed to another place where the raw material could be had in unlimited quantities, the price of oats would be reduced. He would like to refer to the discussion which had taken place with regard to stock. It had been stated by hon. gentlemen opposite that the duty on stock imported into this country ought to be increased from 10 to 20 per cent. Now, he would like to quote a few figures with the view of elucidating whether that should be done or not. The total number of horses imported into the Dominion during the year 1876-7 was 1,465, of which 1,029 went to Manitoba and British Columbia, and the remainder, 420, to the other Provinces; the total number exported was 8,341. The number of horned cattle imported into Manitoba and British Columbia for the same period, was 5,998, while 2,058 went to the other Provinces, making a total of 8,055; the number exported was 24,127. Of sheep, 11,500 were imported into British Columbia and Manitoba; to the other Provinces 117, making a total of 11,617; and the total number exported was 209,899. It would be seen from these figures that the amount of stock coming into the old Provinces was very small indeed, and that the great bulk went to Manitoba and British Columbia. These were the very Provinces we wanted to populate, and, with that object in view, we were building a railroad and opening up communication with other parts of the country. Thousands of immigrants were pouring in there from across the Atlantic, from the United States, and also from other parts of Canada. Why, then, should we seek to make these people pay more than 10 per cent. on the stock they took into that country? It was curious logic to talk of encouraging immigration, and at the same time advocate a policy that would retard settlement. He could understand why the present duty of 10 per cent. should be abolished, but he could not comprehend why anyone should seek to increase it. Why were Canadians, Americans and the people of the British Isles going to these new Provinces? In order that they might find a home there for themselves. Was it, then, in the interest of these people to place an import duty on what they required most. If all the stock imported into British Columbia and Manitoba was sent from Ontario and Quebec, the duty of 10 per cent. might be more excusable, because some part of the Dominion might be benefited. But that stock had to be brought from the United States, and to adopt the policy which was proposed, would retard the settlement of these two Provinces. It was a principle laid down by everyone who understood anything about trade, about the export and import of cereals, that, when a country which raised less than was necessary for its own wants increased the duty on imported corn, the price of home-grown corn was largely increased. He held, therefore, that if the duty on imported barley was reduced, the price of American barley coming into this country would be lowered, while that of the Canadian article would not be increased. That, he thought, was a correct principle. To prove the opposite, an illustration was given by a certain hon. gentleman. "Here," said they, "is a farmer who has a farm on this side and another on the American side of the line; he loses 15c. per bushel on the barley raised in Canada." He held that to be incorrect; because, if the duty was taken off, the price of barley on the Canadian side would remain the same, while that raised on the American side would be reduced by 15c. per bushel. If the principle held good in the case of the importation of corn, it held good also in this instance. Though a duty of 50c. a bushel was put on corn coming into this country, yet it would not, in the slightest degree, affect the Chicago market, or the price of the 200,000,000 bushels exported from New York, a large proportion of which found its way into the markets of Great Britain. He would ask any reasonable man, who knew anything of the subject, if 100,000,000 bushels more wheat was required to feed the people of England than could be raised there, whether in the event of the tariff being increased, the farmers of England would not get a better price for their products than they received now. If, therefore, the duty was taken off Canadian barley, it would not alter the case in the slightest. He was rather amused by the remarks of his hon. friend from South Victoria, who made an elaborate calculation with the view of showing that by not imposing a certain amount on articles coming into this country we lost so much, and that we also lost the duty imposed by the Americans on Canadian produce going into that country. Now, it was perfectly plain that if we paid the duty on articles imported into this country from the United States, the consumer there also paid the duty, charged by this Government, on articles imported into that country from Canada. Who paid the duty on barley, from the time it was put into the soil, till it was converted into ale or beer? Surely it was the consumer. The same rule held good with regard to every other article of trade. The person who wore goods of English manufacture had to pay the duty thereon, and the duty on sugar was paid by him who used it. If hon. gentlemen opposite imagined they could delude the farmers of this country they were very much mistaken. He could name, in his own county, a dozen moderate Conservatives, who, although in the habit of voting for the Conservative candidate, had declared to him that in consequence of the policy adopted by the right hon. member for Kingston and his followers, they would not support that party at the next election. In fact, he had not met a single Reformer, and certainly very few Conservatives, in the section of the country where he lived, who would vote for a protective tariff as proposed by the motion on which the House divided a few days ago. No policy which could be adopted would prove more ruinous to the people of this country than that advocated by hon. gentlemen opposite. He would vote against the motion if it was enlarged and against every proposition which had for its object the protection of any manufacturing establishment in this country, for he considered that they had sufficient protection at the present time. Take $1,000 worth of goods manufactured in this country and $1,000 worth manufactured in the United States, and what advantage had the Canadian manufacturer over the American? The American had to lay down his goods in Canada at a price of $1,175, thus giving to the Canadian manufacturer a direct bonus of $175 on every $1,000 worth he manufactured. If that was not enough for the manufacturers of Canada, then he would say the sooner they were weeded out the better. Such Protection was quite enough for any business conducted on true commercial principles, by persons possessed of a reasonable amount of capital. In illustration of this, he, at the last election, instanced the case of a flourishing establishment, in his own county—an instance which was laughed at by hon. gentlemen opposite. That establishment, however, was conducted on true commercial principles, and the result was that a dividend of twenty-eight per cent. had been declared. If every manufacturing establishment was conducted in the same way, there would be no necessity for additional Protection—a Protection which would amount to taking money out of the farmers' pockets. Instead of that money going into the hands of the Receiver-General, it would go into the pockets of the manufacturers—a policy which would be ruinous to the best interests of the country, and which he would certainly vote against.

MR. OLIVER.

MR. LITTLE said he was not in any way surprised at the motion introduced by the hon. the members for West Hastings and Durham. It was the first fruit of an endeavour springing from his side of the House to protect in some measure the interests of half a million of our people; it was the first instalment of tribute paid in this House to the eloquence and ability of their right hon. leader the member for Kingston (Sir John A. Macdonald) in his advocacy of a revision of the tariff, a revision in which every interest in the Dominion should be cared for and protected. When he (Mr. Little, saw two such very pronounced supporters of the Government driven by the force of public opinion to say at last, that the Ministry were acting unjustly in disregarding the wishes of the people, as was implied in the introduction of this motion, he felt there was strong assurance that many who had hitherto supported the Government would do so no longer. These two hon. gentlemen had been thick and thin supporters of the Government for many a long year, and no matter how extravagant the views of the Government were, they supported them. It had been said some time ago by the hon. the Premier that the farmers required no protection, that they were well able to take care of themselves, but these gentlemen thought differently. They said quite the reverse; they said the Government should alter its views and adopt those enunciated by the hon. members of the Opposition, so that in point of fact, if they were sincere in what they said, they should request the Government to give way and allow those who advocated this policy to take their place. Those hon. gentlemen had taken a step in the right direction, and he hoped they would go still further, and not only advocate the agricultural interest, but the interest of all other branches of industry which would tend to make our country prosperous, and no doubt their example would be followed by other hon. members; and a broad, liberal feeling with respect to other interests would prevail. There were the coal interests, the fishing interests, and the manufacturing interests to be promoted, as well as the agricultural interests. He fully supported the policy of the right hon. member for Kingston, that each and every Canadian industry should be cared for, but, on the adage that a half a loaf was better than no bread, he should vote for the motion now before the House. Who knew but that next Government day, the hon. gentlemen opposite would go farther, and move a resolution favourably affecting other industries, and take a broader and more general view affecting all other interests. There was no knowing how high they might soar; they might soar as high as the present Finance Minister did in 1873; and how he had been rewarded, had been clearly seen. The Ministry should take a lesson from the rebuke now given by these old-tried supporters, "Coming events cast their shadows before."

When the West Hastings horse, and
The East Durham colt,
Break away from the reins and
Think proper to bolt.

There would be more leaving the Government ranks shortly, and no wonder, when the Premier asserted that the farmers needed no protection; that they were able to protect themselves, and when the Finance Minister said a few nights ago, that no Government by legislation, could bring back prosperous times, and that nothing could be done to alleviate the distress so prevalent in the land, it made people enquire what then was the use of having a Government such as this. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Greenway) had said that the poor would suffer if the farmers sold their produce high. Now, that hon. gentleman knew very little about the agricultural interest. It was a well-known fact that the better the prices the farmers obtained for their produce, the more wealthy the country became. More money was circulated; farmers could give their labourers higher wages, and storekeepers and other classes would get the benefit of the extra money thrown into circulation. The hon. gentleman had talked of the high prices of necessaries of life, but he forgot to mention that this Government had increased the duties upon the necessaries of life by levying the tax upon tea and coffee. He did not see how the necessaries of life would be increased by properly protecting the farmers' interests. This Government should show the same regard towards the agricultural community as the United States Government did. He would have been much better pleased had this motion embraced other interests. He thought that was rather a narrow motion which only included one class to be protected. Our manufacturers should also be protected as much as possible. He found that the total imports amounted last fiscal year to $99,427,962, of which at least $40,000,000 could have been produced by our own people instead of all this money being paid outside of Canada. But when he came to consider the immense quantity of woollen goods imported into Canada last year, $9,183,000, it made him blush for shame to think that the Government did not protect the Canadian manufacturer. Why did they not, themselves, make these woollen goods? Because the duty was so trifling on American products that our people could not compete with them, and, therefore, the money of this country went elsewhere; whereas by manufacturing these goods the money would have been kept at home, and be serviceable in helping to build up this Dominion. Iron goods were imported to the extent of $1,403,000, the greater portion of which goods could have been manufactured here. Why should they import so many spades, shovels, axes, and various other sorts of iron instruments? Because this branch of industry was not protected. It was surprising the Government should pretend to have the welfare of this country at heart, and yet do nothing towards fostering its industries; on the contrary, they had only succeeded in plunging the country into an immense debt. The hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Oliver) was a great Free-trader, in his own estimation, and considered that fact was everything; but he (Mr. Little) would ask what built up England? It was Protection; and Great Britain did not give it up until she was strong, and mistress of the world. Had we attained that position yet? Why, Canada was yet in her infancy, as regarded her manufactures. What was the use of those raw products in the soil, on the soil, and under the soil, unless they could be utilized, and our people could not do so because they were not encouraged; but, on the contrary, the Government favoured the outsider, the American, instead of our own Canadian people. Hon. members began to find out that the wishes of the people should be regarded. No reliance could be placed on the words of the hon. the Finance Minister in this connection, because they well remembered what he had said in England, where he exhibited the silver side of the shield, and in this country, where he exhibited the brazen side, and, for aught he knew, the hon. Finance Minister might vote for this motion.

MR. LITTLE.

Mr. GIBBS (North Ontario) said he would make a few remarks in explanation of his reasons for supporting this motion. Although it did not meet the wants of the general trade of this country, still it was a step in the right direction. The diverse interests of the Dominion required that they should give and take, and while putting a duty, in the interests of the agricultural community, on American wheat and flour, they should be prepared to put a duty on American mines and manufactures, in the interest of the mercantile community. The policy of the Government should be so modelled as to conduce, not to the interest of one Province alone, but to the interests of all the Provinces. It had often been said by different members of this House, from the Premier downward, that the farmers of this country did not desire Protection, that they did not thank those who argued for Protection against the unfair system of trade, under existing conditions, with the United States. Nevertheless, others thought differently, and these hon. gentleman, the promoters of this motion, wished to avail themselves of this last opportunity, before going to meet their constituents, of showing that they favoured a duty on American wheat and flour. They must be aware that this motion could not be carried by itself; it must be embraced with other motions to protect the other industries of the country. No motion could be carried which did not offer a quid pro quo. The hon. member for North Oxford had argued that a duty on wheat and flour would raise the price of the poor man's bread. A family of five souls, according to statistics, consumed twenty bushels of wheat per year, the duty on which, at ten cents per bushel, would be $2. What would that be compared to the indirect benefit obtained from the stimulus given to trade? As regarded the tariff, it was of very slight importance whether a duty of 10c., or 20c., or 50c. per bushel were put on wheat. Ten cents per bushel would give all the Protection required, because it would keep out of the country American wheat and flour, and 50c. duty per bushel could not do more. The hon. member for North Oxford had given as one reason for opposing this Bill, that they ought to weigh the probable action of the United States; and yet they were told that a country with 4,000,000 inhabitants could not hope to have any influence with the United States with its 40,000,000 inhabitants. Nevertheless, in regard to the duty on malt, when a proposition was made, the Government were like the 'coon: "Don't shoot and I'll come down"—"Don't increase the duty on malt, because we will come down." Directly Congress proposed to increase that duty, our Government announced that they would reduce the duty on malt. The hon. gentleman opposite had taken the ground that, if we allowed American wheat to come into this country and be ground, in bond, it would injure the miller. That was not a fact. While we had a duty on wheat the millers on the Welland and Lachine Canals, and elsewhere, ground with as much facility as they did now. If a duty on wheat would not increase the price, it could not injure the milling interest or the carrying trade. At present our barley was carried in bond. He held that in view of the vast expenditures we were making in the enlargement of our canals, unless we had a duty on American wheat and flour, we were doing a great deal of injury to the farming interest by admitting Western wheat free, and allowing it to be consumed in this country. The hon. gentleman was mistaken in stating that the freight on wheat was less than the freight on flour; the reverse was the fact. Generally, rolling freight was given the preference over bulk freight. The hon. gentleman had said that the adoption of this resolution would amount to a breach of faith with the members of the Maritime Provinces. He appeared to be ignorant of the fact that when they joined the Confederation, there was a duty on flour. He believed he was correct in saying, as far as Nova Scotia was concerned, that there was at one time a duty of one dollar a barrel on flour.

MR. GIBBS.

MR. GOUDGE: No; twenty-five cents.

MR. KIRK: That was only one year before Confederation.

MR. GIBBS said one year or twenty made no difference. Under the Washington Treaty the fisheries were given to the United States, and Ontario had then to make a concession, but that Province voted in favour of carrying out of the Treaty.

MR. BORDEN: To what Provinces did the fisheries belong?

MR. GIBBS said they belonged to the Dominion of Canada. Anyone engaged in manufacturing flour and handling produce must know that the home market was far superior to the foreign market. The Trade and Navigation Returns showed that there had been entered for consumption in the Dominion of Canada 4,589,051 bushels of wheat and 549,063 barrels of flour. He also desired to see the national policy carried out, because he believed the interests of this country required reciprocity—free intercourse in the buying and selling of cereals. That was what he understood by Free-trade, and he believed that it was impossible to express the hope that the Americans would concede to us the enactment of reciprocity upon any fair principles, so long as they had our markets without our having anything in return. He believed that there was no one in this House or in this country who did not believe that reciprocity was the best thing for Canada and the United States.

MR. MILLS: Hear, hear.

MR. GIBBS said he believed it would be best for both countries to have a free exchange of the products of the soil. It was said that if we initiated special legislation against the United States, they would retaliate. But were not their duties on wheat and barley levelled against Canada? Were we to take the position of serfs, and to say that we dare not take the stand which we considered we ought in the interests of the country, because, forsooth, the United States might do anything they chase against Canada and Canada must sit still. He was thankful to know that the time had come when they were going to the country to ask the people to pronounce on something more than mere Shibboleths. He did not hesitate to say that, if he were a farmer in Ontario, no matter whether a Reformer, Conservative, Tory or Grit, he would support the man who was in favour of putting a duty on wheat and flour.

MR. PALMER said that, as representing a constituency which consumed more flour and wheat than any other in the Dominion, perhaps, it would not be proper for him to give his vote without explaining why he thought the interests of his constituents required him to oppose the proposition of these hon. gentlemen. The hon. member for North Oxford had made a declaration which he (Mr. Palmer), sitting on the Opposition side of the House, and not knowing the hon. gentleman that proposed the resolution, would not have dared to make. He (Mr. Oliver) had said that this was a deliberate attempt to delude the farmers. It was surely very well known to hon. members that the legislation proposed would be purely sectional; and, as the hon. member for Sunbury had correctly said, if the principle involved was correct, it was a bad way of carrying it out. It was simply saying to the small Provinces that the people of Ontario had charge of this country; that they thought Protection was good, but that it must be Protection for themselves alone; that they were the giants that would rule; and that the 16 members from New Brunswick, and the 21 from Nova Scotia, were nowhere as against the 88 from Ontario. If the proposition were made in earnest, it meant that. The hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Oliver) had declared that this was a deliberate attempt to delude the farmer; and, if that were so, it was a more unworthy motive. It was impossible that any hon. member representing a constituency such as he represented to support a resolution which would have the effect of taking a large amount of money out of the pockets of the Maritime Provinces. He was surprised when he heard the statement that the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Gibbs) made, that Ontario wanted compensation for the Treaty of Washington; that, in reality, Ontario had given up the fisheries; and, therefore, the Maritime Provinces should give some return in lieu thereof. He had thought, in his simplicity, that the people of the Maritime Provinces had surrendered their valuable rights and fisheries in order to carry out a national policy. He had believed it was to benefit the whole Dominion that those Provinces had been called upon to relinquish their great interest, one which he held was secured to them by Confederation. And he was prepared to argue the question on the principles of constitutional law. The award of the Fishery Commission had showed the value of the fisheries. Were not the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces, with Quebec, entitled to the $5,500,000 awarded for the fishing privileges which had been accorded the United States for twelve years? Of course, he was prepared to admit that Newfoundland was entitled to a share of the amount. He appealed to any hon. member who was acquainted with constitutional law as to whether the inshore fishery was not part of the territorial rights of each Province. The people of Ontario would bristle up if it were contended that the inshore rights of Lake Ontario, or any other lake in the Province, were to be surrendered, and the money obtained from them handed over to the Maritime Provinces. By the Treaty of Washington, the Maritime Provinces gave up certain territorial rights, New Brunswick also gave up certain export duties, but the late Government took the right course in compensating that Province therefor. The hon. member for North Ontario must understand that the view that Ontario had surrendered something by the Treaty of Washington was not that held by the people of the Maritime Provinces.

MR. GIBBS said he was misunderstood.

MR. PALMER said, as a Maritime Province man, he was somewhat sensitive on the point, and he was glad to have an opportunity of stating, clearly in Parliament, the views of his constituents on the subject. He would not enter into the general question of Free-trade and Protection. The hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Greenway) had asked how the poor labouring man was to be protected. But, if all the farmers were to become prosperous, it would not be easy to find a poor labouring man. That hon. member's whole argument had been based on the supposition that the various products would be increased in value, and that, consequently, the cost of living would be enhanced. It was somewhat remarkable, however, that the hon. gentleman did not think of that point when he voted to place a duty on tea. The hon. member for North Oxford had laid down, as a proposition, that the imposition of a duty on wheat would not increase the price. He would allow the hon. member for North Huron, the hon. member for North Oxford and himself, who were all going to vote against the motion, to endeavour to reconcile their different opinions. Their position reminded him of a story of an Irishman, who was carrying a couple of game cocks in a bag, and, on finding that they had torn each other to pieces said he believed they would fight, but thought they would fight on the same side. He was, in the present instance, on the same side with those hon. gentlemen, and yet they did not appear to be more happy than the cocks. The motion had the extraordinary effect of arraying persons holding diametrically opposite views, in positions hostile to it. He was quite prepared to admit that the hon. member for West Hastings was consistent in his views, but the hon. member for East Durham could not surely imagine that the farmers were so foolish as to be deluded by the motion. He (Mr. Palmer) desired to distinctly tell those hon. members and the farmers of Ontario that the people of the Maritime Provinces would never consent to sectional legislation or taxation, which would interfere with the free exercise of their right to purchase in the cheapest market, unless they obtained some corresponding benefit. The principal industry in his constituency was, that of shipbuilding, in which a great number of artizans were employed. Today they felt it a hardship that any of the articles entering into the construction of those ships should be taxed. While they did not object to tonnage dues, they held that they should be at liberty to build vessels, and have the duties refunded when they were sold abroad; and the adoption of such a policy would materially increase the business of shipbuilding in the Provinces. There was no reason why duties should be levied on the yellow metal for ship bottoms, which was brought from England, and fixed to vessels which might be immediately sold abroad. He had been taunted with being in favour of a readjustment of the tariff. He was willing that additional duties should be placed upon some articles, but only on such as could be properly manufactured in this country without materially increasing the price, or increasing it at all. His view was that Parliament, in its legislation, should go as far as possible in the direction of protecting our industries without increasing the cost, or to a very trifling extent, of articles to the people of Canada. An hon. member, who he supposed was a farmer, had stated that Protection began with the manufacturers, and they wanted to use the farmers after the manner of "walk into my parlour, said the spider to the fly." Some hon. members might, in that manner, induce the farmers to have antagonistic feelings towards the manufacturers, but he desired to take a broad statesman-like view of the question. It was absurd to say that the manufacturers were to be scoffed and laughed at, because they originated any policy. While he entertained every respect for the farmers, yet the class that was the most intelligent and to which the country owed most, was the mechanics. In point of intelligence and patriotism they, as a class, were equal to any men. He fully admitted that the agricultural was the paramount interest, and was willing to adopt any measures to benefit it, as was any man who had the interests of Canada at heart. The prosperity of the farmers depended on those vigorous mechanics, who were willing to devote their skill, labour and capital to developing the resources of the country, and in building up a home market for the produce of the soil. It had been argued that the market across the ocean was that to which our farmers must look. But it must be remembered that, if they could sell direct to the consumers and get rid of middle-men, farmers would save two or three cents on their profits. If they could obtain the same prices at St. John, Halifax, or Toronto, as at Liverpool, and conserve to Canadian farmers the Canadian market, an immense benefit would be conferred on the agricultural class. But this was a matter which should be very carefully done. It would be very unfair to compel the fishermen and shipbuilders of the Maritime Provinces to pay higher prices for their goods without affording them any corresponding advantage. If such corresponding benefit could not be conferred, he did not suppose that the farmers of Ontario or any other class was to be benefitted at the expense of another class. He had felt it to be due to himself and his constituents that he should state to the House, that he and his constituents were willing to enter with them fully and freely into the questions of Canadian interests, Canadian Protection, Canadian trade, and Canadian nationality, and to discuss them on fair, patriotic and liberal grounds; to give and take, and see how they could benefit each other. And if they fancied that, by bringing forward an isolated sectional interest, they could catch the vote of the Maritime Provinces, they were entirely mistaken. If this was their object—and the object was so indicated by the hon. member for North York—to delude the farmers of this country, he thought they would also be mistaken.

Mr. FLEMING said that if anything could show more conclusively than another the inconsistency of a system of Protection, it was just such speeches as had been heard that evening. The hon. member for St. John, being interested in ship-building, wanted iron for that purpose to be free of duty.

Mr. PALMER: You misrepresent me. I never asked that iron should come in free of duty.

Mr. SINCLAIR: You do; for raw material for ships.

Mr. PALMER: No. What I asked was when they were exported; that was all.

Mr. FLEMING said that the hon. gentleman wished this because he was personally interested in ships. Other hon. members, feeling an interest in some other calling, wanted it protected; it was impossible to get a system of Protection that would suit the purposes of all. The hon. member for Centre Wellington, who introduced the discussion this afternoon, spoke of the ridicule and contempt which had been thrown upon him by some members of the Government and its supporters, because he advocated Protection to agriculture. He spoke as if this ridicule and contempt was thrown upon the farmer. He (Mr. Fleming) did not think that any member of the House uttered a single word of that kind with relation to the farmer or his calling. He could not help thinking, however, with a great many others, that when a physician tried to convince a man, in perfect health, that he was sick, in order that he might prescribe for him a certain panacea which would cure all his ills, the physician merits something like ridicule. It had been said that the interests of the farmer had long been neglected, but this discovery had only recently been made. It was well known that the leader of the Opposition, who controlled the affairs of the country for many years, had the opportunity to look after the interest of the farmer, if his Government was so inclined. For a short time a duty on flour was imposed, but it was withdrawn, and the right hon. gentleman then stated that the "flour tax was repealed as a step in the right direction;" but the hon. member for Centre Wellington spoke as if a tax upon that article now would be a step in the right direction. He had stated that every farmer had lost, on an average, $63 a year for want of Protection; that there were 500,000 farmers in the Dominion, which would make a loss of $31,500,000 a year. If this was correct, then the right hon. member for Kingston had a great deal to account for. During five of the years which had elapsed since Confederation, when the affairs of the country were under his management, there was no duty on grain. The bill against him by the farmers of Canada would, therefore, amount to the sum of $157,500,000. Suppose the hon. member for Centre Wellington was able to convince the farmer that he was sick and required medicine, the farmer might very naturally enquire what was it going to cost. If Protection was going to raise the price of what he had to sell, he might reasonably expect that it would raise the price of what he had to buy, for the advocates of Protection to the farmer also advocated Protection to the manufacturer. He was told, however, that Protection reduced the price of manufactured goods. How this should be, was to him not very clear, for if Protection raised the price of what he produced, certainly it would have the same effect upon what was produced by others. There were a great many articles which a farmer required to purchase: clothing, implements, etc. If extra duties were imposed on these articles, they would certainly cost more; his profits would thereby be reduced, and in the end the farmer would be no better off than before. Hon. members spoke of the home market as if its wants were supplied before any grain was sent abroad, and as if a higher price was obtained for what was used for home consumption. This was not the case. The buyer for shipping purposes, appeared in the market at the same time as the local flour dealer, and the price given was exactly the same. The farmer, when selling his wheat, did not ask: "Are you buying for a home or a foreign market?" but, "what price do you pay?" And the price he received from either of the parties was regulated by the price of flour abroad. Great Britain was the market of the world for bread-stuffs. She offered the highest average price during the year. The nearer we could get, so to speak, to England, and the less the cost of sending it there, the higher the price we would receive for our produce. The average cost of sending flour from Canada to that market was, he believed, less in the whole, than the average cost of sending it from the United States. With regard to the milling interest, to which the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Gibbs) had alluded, he (Mr. Fleming) did not believe that duties on wheat and flour would be of advantage, but, rather, the reverse. As an illustration of success in that business, without any protection, he alluded to an acquaintance of his own, who, by manufacturing a superior brand of flour for the Glasgow market, had established a large and profitable trade, and was now, in connection with a firm in that city, erecting on the Great Western Railway a mill which, when completed, would be one of the best in the Dominion. This trade could not have been kept up, if, in 1876, when the wheat crop in Ontario was of an inferior quality, any obstacle was thrown in the way of procuring a supply from the United States. Although a duty was put upon Canadian wheat going into the United States, the American farmer did not derive any benefit from it. In order to show that this was the case, he would read from a speech of the Hon. Mr. Allison, of Iowa, in the House of Representatives, March 20th, 1870:

MR. FLEMING.

"It will be seen it (agriculture) is much the largest interest in its aggregate product, as well as the number of persons employed. I believe that no one will claim that this large interest is directly protected. It is true that, under the existing law, there is a small duty upon wheat, barley and oats, and other agricultural products, but this does not afford any protection to the wheat and grain grown in the country."

The Hon. Mr. Wilkinson said on the same subject:

"It is said that the farmer gets better prices for what he sells, because of the prosperous condition of the manufacturer; but I think it will be found, on examination, that we, of the west, are obliged to sell our wheat according to New York prices, and that the prices of the article in New York are regulated by the prices of wheat in England. This is our understanding of it, and I think that the understanding is correct."

The American farmers have been obliged to pay an enormous sum for the luxury of a home market, and yet, this home market did not consume their surplus wheat and corn; they have to send it to a foreign market, in the same way as we have to do ourselves. It might be asked, Why do the American farmers submit to this? The reason was very plain. Manufacturers plotted together and by means of the lobby—an institution he was happy to say did not exist here—succeeded in carrying their measures, irrespective of the wishes or demands of the farmers. We have been told that we ought to take a patriotic view of this question, and try to encourage inter-provincial trade; but, if there was anything which would be likely to destroy the harmony and good feeling which exists between the Provinces, it would be forcing, upon different sections, measures inimical to their interests. In the United States, in former years, before the slave question had agitated the public mind, the subject of Protection had, in 1828, almost driven South Carolina out of the Union. The hon. member for Centre Wellington, as an argument for Protection, had pointed to the great progress made by the United States; but, if we have not made so rapid progress, we have not been standing still. If he would look for a moment at the progress made since the expiration of the Reciprocity Treaty, he would see that it was very marked indeed. In order to show what advance had been made, he (Mr. Fleming) would read some statistics in this relation; he would compare the year 1867-8 with the year 1876-7—the later year one of the most unfavourable, for a comparison, that could be taken—the failure of the crop, added to the general depression, making matters worse than they have been since Confederation. In order to make the comparison fair, he would exclude the Provinces of Manitoba, British Columbia, and Prince Edward Island. Taking the four Provinces which formed the Dominion at the time of the Union, we find that the produce of the forest which we exported in 1867-8, amounted to $18,262,000, while in 1876-7 the amount was $23,308,000, an increase of 27 per cent. The produce of the fisheries sold in 1867-8 was $3,357,000, while in 1876-7 it was $5,575,000, an increase of 66 per cent.; of animals and other products we exported in 1867-8 $6,993,000; in 1876-7 we more than doubled that amount by exporting to the value of $14,386,000, an increase of 108 per cent. In agricultural produce we sold in 1867-8 $12,871,000 worth, while in 1876-7, a year of scarcity, we sold to the amount of $18,056,000, an increase of 40 per cent. In manufactured goods we exported in 1867-8 to the value of $1,572,000, while in 1876-7 we increased the amount to $4,284,000, an advance of 172 per cent, showing that our manufacturers had been competing successfully with those of other countries. The total exports for 1867-8 were $57,567,000, for 1876-7 $70,907,000, an increase of 24 per cent. The imports were $73,459,000 in 1867-8; in 1876-7 they were $94,508,000, an increase of 28 per cent. If increased correspondence and enlarged circulation of newspapers were any indication of progress, the Post-Office returns give very striking results. In 1867-8 the number of letters sent was 18,100,000; in 1876-7 they were 40,500,000, an increase of 120 per cent. The registered letters in 1867-8 amounted to 704,500; in 1876-7 they were 1,842,000, an increase of 256 per cent. There were 18,860,000 newspapers sent in 1867-8, and 38,000,000 in 1876-7, an increase of 101 per cent. These figures show the progress the country has made since the reciprocity treaty was repealed. If we were to compare the first year of Confederation with the years 1872-3 or 1873-4, the difference would be very much greater. Much as reciprocity may have been desired, it was evident we had made progress without it. Our true policy was to try and compete successfully with the Americans in the markets of Europe. We were doing so, to a great extent, in cattle, and for this purpose it was an advantage that corn should be obtained for feeding purposes at as cheap a rate as possible. In cheese, a large and profitable business was being done. In the article of butter, the Americans have got the start of us; they manage to get their production into the market at an earlier period of the year and in a better condition than we have hitherto done. In order to compete with them successfully, greater attention to quality and forwarding will be necessary. In the article of barley, Great Britain consumes annually a very large amount. In the year ending 1st September, 1877, 50,000,000 bushels were imported into that country. In the months of November and December last, 680,000 bushels were shipped at New York for England. Canada ought to be able to do a portion of this trade. Before closing, he would allude to a speech of the right hon. member for Kingston, delivered at Stanstead, which had been quoted by the hon. the Minister of Finance in his address on the Budget. The right hon. gentleman said:

“You know that Canada, from east to west, lies within the same degree of latitude, and does not possess a great variety of crops. From the Atlantic to the Pacific, the country is subject to the same climatic influences; but the United States, extending from the lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, possesses a great variety of climates.”

He must say that these were rather singular propositions on which to frame a protective policy for Canada. Were he to put them in the form of a syllogism, it would be something like this: A country with a great variety of climates is favourable for Protection. The United States is a country with a great variety of climates; therefore, the United States is a country favourable for Protection. If that reasoning was applied to Canada, which was not possessed of a great variety of climates, the inference would be that it was not favourable for Protection. Indeed, the very appearance of our country on the map makes it apparent that a protective policy might be justifiable in time of war, but would not be beneficial in time of peace. The right hon. member for Kingston did not, indeed, in the speech alluded to, profess that Protection would be any great benefit to the farmer in a time of plenty, but only in a time of scarcity, when crops were light, and the necessaries of life high in price. He (Mr. Fleming) was astonished to hear such sentiments uttered at this period of the nineteenth century. When the Corn Laws were in existence, the duty fell as the price rose; when wheat was 50s. a quarter the duty was 20s., when it rose to 72s. the duty fell to 1s. But supposing the farmer should derive benefit from a system of Protection, which would give him higher prices in an unfavourable season, would he be any gainer thereby if, in all the intervening years, he had to pay higher prices for everything that he used? Besides, if a period of real scarcity should ever arise, this Protection would not stand the test of practice. In England, in 1845, when the crops failed and a blight came upon the potato crop when starvation stared the people in the face, Sir Robert Peel, who came into power upon the cry of Protection to national agriculture, passed the Bill for the total abolition of the Corn Laws. In conclusion, he would say that he did not believe farmers wanted Protection in the sense in which some hon. members thought they did. They only wanted to be let alone and not taxed for the benefit of others. They asked no special privileges; they only asked that other industries might not interfere with their industries.

MR. BLAIN said he would not have offered any remarks to the House had this amendment not proposed to deal with the agricultural interests of the country, and particularly with the manufacture of flour. As these interests were very important to the constituency which he represented, he thought it his duty to state why, on this occasion, he intended to vote against the amendment. In the first place, he considered it a piece of pure sectional legislation, and he regretted very much that any member from the Province of Ontario should have proposed such a restriction to the House. He had no hesitation in saying that he conceived it to be the duty of every man from the Lower Provinces to vote in the interest of his constituents, to vote against the proposition. He had no hesitation in saying further that those members from the Province of Ontario who desired to deal with the interests of the whole Dominion, instead of any particular section, should vote against the proposition. It was the duty of members of Parliament to promote the interests of the country, but we were not, at the present time, in a position to deal with the question at issue. The time would not be ripe to deal with the whole question of intercolonial trade, which was really the question involved—and we could not deal with that till we were able to freight vessels of 1,500 tons in the upper lakes, and send them down to the maritime ports. In the meantime, it would not be judicious to deal with the duties on flour, coal and other articles.

MR. FLEMING.

Mr. WALLACE said he had always been given to understand that half a loaf was better than no bread, but the hon. member for West York would have them to stand idle till they were able to accomplish something wonderful. It had been stated that the leader of the Opposition and his followers had only lately become anxious to look after the interests of the farmer, and that while in power they did nothing to promote their interests. But the altered circumstances of the country from what they were in 1851, must be taken into consideration. During the time that the hon. leader of the Opposition and his followers occupied the Treasury benches, there was a Reciprocity Treaty with the United States, and the Canadian farmer had the benefit of the American markets for his produce. During the period they were in power, from 1861 to 1873, an extraordinary state of things existed in the United States. Labour was so high that American manufacturers and farmers could not afford to send goods into this country at a profit, so that it was not necessary to protect the Canadian farmer, mechanic or manufacturer. Since 1874, however, wages had fallen on the other side, in all branches of trade, and Americans were better able to compete with us, being able to produce articles of trade at a less rate than formerly, and, as the Government has done nothing to protect Canadian interests, it was now time to take some steps in that direction. The hon. member for North Oxford said that the balance of trade was always against England, and that England was rich and prosperous. But he forgot to say that England was the money lender and the creditor of the other nations of the world, and that a large portion of the importations into England were to pay the indebtedness of the other nations to England. Again, he said that Canada had been importing more than she had exported for a number of years, and yet she was prosperous. Was the piling up of great indebtedness an evidence of prosperity? The Dominion to-day owed a public debt of about $180,000,000. Municipalities, merchants, bankers, railways, etc., throughout the country were all indebted to English capitalists. Was not this apparent prosperity an evidence of degradation? It showed they were deeply in debt, and if they were called upon to-day to pay their indebtedness, they would not be able to do so. They had lots of property to pay their indebtedness, but no money, and, if called upon to pay, would be forced into insolvency, on account of not being able to realize their assets. In his Budget speech, the hon. the Finance Minister had said that, if he had waited until this year to go into the English market to raise money, it was possible he might not have been able to succeed in effecting a loan. Had the latter been the case, Canada would, perhaps, to-day have been insolvent. The hon. member for Oxford had said that history consisted of periods of greater and of lesser prosperity, and that, under Free-trade, the commerce of England had immensely increased over what it had been under a high tariff. But the hon. member did not say there were other factors in promoting that prosperity greater than any system of trade. There were factors that contributed far more to the prosperity of England, and not alone of England, but of the rest of the world, than any system of trade. He would ask if the spinning jenny had not been invented, would the cotton trade have attained such dimensions; if steam had not been discovered, would it have been possible for the commerce of the world to have grown to the extent which it had attained? Inventions had contributed far more towards extending the commerce of the world, than any system of trade, whether Free-trade or Protection. If the locomotive had not been invented, would it have been possible to settle the far West of this continent as it was now settled? It would not have been possible; the manufactures of the East could not have been exported to the far West, and the products of the far West could not have been brought into the East. One locomotive would do the work of at least twelve hundred horses. It was facilities of that stamp which had created and given an impetus to trade all over the world, and not any system of trade. Again, they spoke as if hon. gentlemen on this side of the House advocated ruinous rings and monopolies. This was not the case. They advocated only one monopoly, and that was to make of this great Dominion one of the most prosperous countries of the world; to make the Canadian manufacturer, farmer, mechanic, and the Canadian labouring man, more prosperous than the same classes in any other portion of the world; in fact, to keep Canada for the Canadian people. Not to create rings or monopolies, by giving exclusive privileges to any section or class of people, but to make, as it were, a monopoly of this Dominion against all other places in the world. But it had been said they wanted to protect all and to protect none. Yes; they wanted to protect all against outsiders and none against their own people; to give the Canadian people a protective law against all outsiders, whoever they might be. That was the way in which they wanted to protect all. As to the question of abstract Free-trade or Protection, that should be put out of the question altogether, because there was no such thing as Free-trade per se, or Protection per se, advocated on either side of the House. What they wanted was a system of fair trade, which would do justice to the Canadian people, and not allow them to be placed at a disadvantage in their commercial relations with the people of any other country. No man on this side of the House advocated such a system of Protection that would encourage the manufacture of any article which could not be grown or produced profitably in this country. Now, take for example tea, on which it would be absurd to impose a tax in order to encourage its growth in this country. He did not believe it was advantageous to induce the manufacture of any article, the raw material of which they could not themselves produce. It would neither promote the health nor the welfare of the people to have them shut up in factories; but in a great country employment must be found for all classes, and, by developing the natural resources of the country,

MR. WALLACE.

diversities of employment are obtained, and the people kept within the country. Cotton could not be grown here, and, therefore, it would not be desirable to put on a heavy tax to induce its manufacture. Undertaking to cultivate the manufacture of articles which could not be produced, resulted only in a profit to the manufacturer; but by encouraging the manufacture of articles, the raw material of which was grown in this country, two profits were obtained: the profit to the manufacturer and the profit to the producer. If a Free-trade policy were carried out to its fullest extent, in what position would the Canadian farmer be if obliged to send his produce to English or American markets to find sale for them? He would obtain the same prices which ruled in those markets, and have to pay besides the transport of his produce, and, in this respect, be at a disadvantage compared with the English or American farmer. If they had to import all their manufactured goods from England, they would again be placed at a disadvantage in this respect in having to pay the additional cost of transportation from England to Canada. So that under the system of trade advocated by those gentlemen, the farmer would be placed under double disadvantage, the disadvantage of having to send his produce into the English market to be sold at the same rate as that of the English farmer, and to have to import his goods thence at an additional cost for transportation. In what position would he stand with the American farmer if he had to depend entirely on the American market? On every bushel of wheat sent to the United States, he would have to pay 20c., and on every bushel of barley, 15c.; thus, farming, under these circumstances, would not be as profitable as in the United States. Were it not that land is so cheap in this country it would be impossible for the Canadian farmer to compete in any market. He could not compete with the American farmer, over-weighted as he was, if the American market were the only market he had. Was that the position the Canadian farmer ought to be placed in, as against the English or American farmer? It ought to be rather our duty to try and put him in a position independent of these markets, which could only be done by creating a home market for his productions. If manufacturers were encouraged in this country, there was no reason why the Canadian market should not be as good as the English or American market. This was the policy which hon. gentlemen on this side of the House supported as against the unsound policy of those who desired to put the Canadian farmer in a position of inferiority to the farmers of the other countries to which he had referred. The hon. member for South Huron said if bread were taxed, it would increase the cost of living to the poor man. But the poor man was better able to buy bread at a higher price, when well paid for his labour, than at a low price when he got no work. Ask the artisans in Montreal and Toronto to-day if they would not give double the price for bread if they could obtain work. Cheap bread might mean scanty clothing to the farmer, and cheap clothing might mean hunger to the man who produced the clothing. Could hon. gentlemen say that Protection was of no use, unless it increased the price of the articles produced? This might not be the case. Protection might give a market and create a demand for the articles manufactured and give employment to the artisans, although it did not increase the price. If the Canadian manufacturers could have double the market they have now, at no greater profit than they have now, they would do very well. There was another feature to be considered; the American had his market for nine-tenths of what he produced by prohibiting the goods of other countries from coming into competition with his own. Therefore, by selling nine-tenths of his production at a fair profit, he was able to sacrifice the other one-tenth in this country and destroy our manufactures. He contended that, if we imported an article which the Canadian people largely produced, unless the amount imported was largely in excess of the amount produced, it would have very little effect upon the market of the country. It did not, therefore, always follow that a duty, of necessity, raised the price to the consumer. He admitted that, if the article was not produced in the country, the cost would be increased by the amount of the duty. He wished the hon. gentlemen had seen fit to include more articles in this resolution than the two named, because he did not believe that any two articles, the produce of the farm, could be selected which would be so little affected by a duty as these two articles, being to a large extent for transportation to a foreign market, their prices was to some degree regulated by that foreign market, but the prices of oats and potatoes and other articles, were not so much fixed by the foreign market. As, however, he believed in a principle, not of Protection per se, but in a principle of justice, he was prepared to vote for this resolution of the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Brown). He was not an advocate of Protection. He was a Free-trader, if they could get Free Trade, but he feared that was a Utopian idea. It was impossible to give Free-trade to other nations when they did not give it to us. We should not throw open our markets to the Americans to the damage of our own people.

MR. BAIN said that, as the resolution before the House confined itself to the imposition of a duty on wheat and flour, which it declared to be in the interest of the farmers, the debate might had been expected to be more limited than it had been to-night. But he had noticed that the gentlemen on the Opposition side of the House had widened out the question to that degree that it was not only a discussion as to whether it was desirable for the agricultural population of the country to impose a duty on wheat and flour alone imported into Canada, but also on all other agricultural products, and the policy of the Government respecting the excise duty on malt had also been brought under unfavourable criticism. In dealing with this question at this advanced period of the evening and of the debate, there was not much opportunity to say anything fresh on it. Last Session this question seemed the great sheet anchor of the Conservative party, and this Session the House was being treated to a rehash of the same argument in the endeavour to convince the farmers that the party on the Opposition seat were their friends, so that at the approaching elections they might obtain the vote and support of the agricultural class. He did not propose to follow the particular line of argument which had been pursued by the member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton), who had opened the debate this afternoon, as to how much we might have received had we followed a different line policy. As to the \$4,000,000 which he had stated that we had contributed to the American revenue in the shape of duties, they had collected from our products, or the \$30,000,000, which he said we might have had in our pockets if we had been able to compel the Americans to give it to us through duties we might have collected off them. It reminded him (Mr. Bain) of the man he once heard of who was about to shuffle off this mortal coil, and who willed a grant of territory to one friend, bank stocks to another and money to others. When his solicitor reminded him that his bequests were out of all proportion to his means, he replied: "Yes; I know that very well, but I want to show my good will to these parties." Into this Utopia he did not propose to enter, as the House had to deal with facts as they are, and not as they might have been, and these amazing losses, said to have been sustained by the country, occurred under a policy initiated by the right hon. gentleman who now leads the Opposition, and whom the hon. member has held up as a paragon of political administrative capacity, and who, when he directed the affairs of the country, did not consider it in the interests of the country to deal with it as his admirers now thought he should. He did not think the line of argument which was pursued by the hon. member (Mr. Orton), and by the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Gibbs), was quite fair, when they quoted the fiscal year's returns, closing 30th June, 1877, as a fair basis upon which to discuss the question of imports and exports of agricultural products. In so far as the Province of Ontario and the Northern States of the adjoining Union were concerned, the wheat crop of 1876 had been a serious failure, and was far below the average yield of ordinary years. It seemed, therefore, unfair for these gentlemen to confine their figures to that particular, and, as he had shown, exceptional year; and he thought it was only fair and reasonable, in taking a comparative view of our grain trade, to ascertain the value to the farmer of import duties on wheat and flour and other agricultural products, to take the average, say of five years, as the basis upon which to found any fair estimate. He found that, during the last five years, ending June 30th, 1877—and he desired to say at the outset that, unless where otherwise stated, the fiscal year was understood to be referred to—that we had imported into the Dominion from the United States a gross total, in round numbers, of 38,521,000 bushels of wheat, or an average of 7,704,000 per annum. This included both wheat and flour, taking an average of  $4\frac{1}{2}$  bushels of wheat to a barrel of flour. During the same period our gross exports of wheat and flour, combined in the same way, amounted to 47,430,000 bushels, or an average of 9,486,000 bushels per annum, or an average annual excess of exports over imports of 1,782,000 bushels; or taking out the exceptional crop of 1876, which appeared in the Trade and Navigation Returns of 1877, and taking the other four years, the excess of exports was 2,791,000 bushels per annum. It seemed, therefore, absurd that, notwithstanding our large imports of American wheat, our exports of surplus still exceeded them by even the smallest of these quantities, to talk of benefiting the farmer by imposing a duty on American wheat; and the period with which he was dealing was, by no means, one of high average yields of wheat in Ontario, but rather the reverse, as the abundant crop in 1877 did not come into the account. If we were situated as the English farmers, with only a limited area capable of producing wheat, and with a manufacturing and consuming population out of all proportion greater than the farm produce of the soil could, by any means, supply, then undoubtedly the farmer would gain by the imposition of a duty on wheat and flour; or, if the short wheat crop of 1876 represented our average annual production, when we imported of wheat and flour from the United States 7,059,000 bushels, and exported only 4,803,000 bushels in wheat and flour, then Protection would have been a benefit to the farmer. But it would have been directly at an increased cost to the consumer, and we had to recollect that the agricultural interest was not the only one, and that the period of depression through which we were passing had been more severely felt by the commercial and manufacturing classes than by the farmers; and if the Government had imposed a duty on wheat and flour, which the Opposition affect to believe should be done in the interests of the farmers, could anyone doubt what the result would have been? And these same gentlemen would have made the country resound with the cry, "That the bread of the working man was being taxed," and we all knew that of late the gentlemen opposite had displayed a wonderful amount of interest in the working-man, which had been developed to an alarming extent since they ceased to hold the reins of office, and had no chance to prove by practice the truth of their assertions. And the effect of the duty, under such circumstances, would have been to enhance to the labouring man the price of the flour he consumed, not only on the 2,250,000 bushels imported from the United States, but on every bushel in addition to that consumed. Though he (Mr. Bain) represented an agricultural constituency, yet he was not yet prepared to support that sort of thing. Another matter that figured largely in the speech of the member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton), who had constituted himself medical adviser for the farmers, was the consumption of barley. That hon. gentleman had told them that the increase of the duty on malt last Session had been a direct tax on the farmer, and had been taken out of his pocket by reducing the value of barley. He (Mr. Bain) proposed to show that such a statement was not sustained by the facts, and could not be substantiated, and that not only had the consumption of malt not been reduced, but that it had actually increased. From the Inland Revenue Returns, he found that in 1876, 777,229 bushels of malt were taken for the manufacture of beer, and 66,837 bushels for malt liquors, making a total of 844,066 bushels; for the year ending June 30th, 1877, the amount taken for beer was 763,105 bushels, and for malt liquors 83,720 bushels, being an increase on the previous year's consumption of 2,759 bushels. But it had been argued indirectly that the effect of the increased duty on malt had been to induce the consumption of strong liquors, such as whiskey, as a substitute for beer. He did not propose to discuss the temperance question to-night, but would simply point out that the consumption of strong liquors in 1877, as compared with 1876, had decreased by nearly 500,000 gallons, and had fallen below the average of the four previous years by no less than 817,980 gallons, which sufficiently disproved the assertion made as to the increase in the consumption of whiskey to the exclusion of beer. In 1876 there was a refund from the duty collected on malt of \$5,383, which represented the consumption of glucose syrup, sugar, and similar substitutes for malt, used in making beer, while their use had entirely ceased in 1877, and nothing was refunded. But it might be pleaded that the consumption of malt had decreased in the latter part of 1877, as the Inland Revenue returns were made up to the 30th of June as published, and the barley crop of 1877 was handled subsequent to that. But he held in his hand a comparative statement for that period, certified to by the officers of the Inland Revenue Department as correct, which read as follows:

	Bushels.
Malt upon which duty was paid for six months from July 1st to Dec. 31st, 1877.....	328,208
Corresponding 6 months of 1876..	270,417
Being an actual increase of.....	57,791

In the face of those figures, from the official returns, he submitted it would be in order for gentlemen opposite to rise and explain, as there was convincing evidence that their statements were guiltless of proof, and whoever paid the increased duty on malt it was not the farmer, except when indulging in a drink of beer, and that the consumption of barley was not in the least diminished by the increased duty. Let him for a moment, in passing, refer to the export trade in malt, which, as it paid no duty whatever, being exported in bond, did not come within this argument, yet was a respectable branch of the export trade of Canada, and had grown largely of late years. He again quoted from the Inland Revenue returns. In 1876 we exported 281,205 bushels, and in 1877, 321,606 bushels, being an increase of 40,401 bushels, and exceeds the average of the previous four years exports by no less than 104,742 bushels. When the hon. member for Kingston visited his (Mr. Bain's) county during the picnic campaigns last summer, when a vigorous and successful effort was made by his political friends to secure a great demonstration, and a large number gathered, including many Reformers, who went out of curiosity to see the "show," an elaborate address, replete with fulsome praise, was presented to the great Leader of the Conservative cause, which he acknowledged in a neat speech of just two hours and seventeen seconds, rather to the mortification of those interested. Among the mottoes displayed on the occasion was one setting forth the injustice to the farmers of this malt duty, which was also dwelt on by the right hon. gentleman in his subsequent address at Hamilton. If facts were in order on such occasions, it would appear as if they were against the ground so confidently taken then and since by the Conservative party and their leader. While the home consumption of barley for malt was of importance to the farmers of Canada, the price obtained for the surplus exported was of much more importance. As the average consumption of barley per annum was less than 900,000 bushels of malt to supply the Dominion, the gross exports of barley for the five years ending June 30th, 1877, were returned as 30,279,000 bushels in round numbers, and valued at $24,547,000 at the various ports of shipment. This gave an annual average of export of 6,053,900 bushels, at an average price of 81c. per bushel. The gross imports of barley for the same period were only 403,900 bushels, confined to the years 1876 and 1877, and of that 241,843 bushels was re-exported and was probably of inferior quality it was what entered at only 52c. per bushel. It had been offered as an explanation that some cute Western American had shipped a cargo of this inferior article to this country where it came duty free, and after mixing it with a better sample of Canadian had re-shipped it to some foreign port. The quantity of barley exported as compared with that taken for home consumption in malt, and exclusive of malt exported, was in the proportion of nearly 7 bushels to 1, and the export price obtained for the surplus fixed the price of the article consumed at home as well. We have heard this Session and otherwise a great deal from the gentlemen opposite and their friends about "Reciprocity of Trade or Reciprocity of Tariffs with the Americans," and the idea was held out that by imposing increased duties on American products coming into Canada that Reciprocity would be secured, and we were told that until this tariff was imposed we have nothing to offer them in return for Reciprocity. Now, that came with a bad grace from any supporter of the hon. member for Kingston in this House. If we have nothing to offer the Americans, whose fault is it? Who gave up the navigation of the St. Lawrence in lieu of which we were supposed to get the navigation of two rivers away in Alaska, over which we already enjoyed better privileges under a former treaty with Russia? Who gave up the use of our canals in perpetuity to the Americans for a limited privilege on Lake Michigan, which expires in a few years, and on a promise not for the absolute use of adjoining American canals on the same terms as ours, the privilege of using our canals was surrendered, but only a promise from the authorities at Washington that they would use their influence with the States owning these canals. The privileges accorded had been neutralised by unjust restrictions which we are powerless to remedy and have to submit to? Who abandoned our Fenian Raid claims without any compensation from the Americans for so doing, and coolly turn round as the followers of the right hon. member for Kingston now do, and tell us we have nothing to offer the Americans in return for Reciprocity, when the man they delight to honour and call their leader, surrendered all these rights under the Washington Treaty while sent there to take care of Canadian interests? And now, forsooth, we were told we have nothing to offer, and we were asked to place that hon. gentleman again in power, that he may have another opportunity of showing "how not to do it." When hon. members opposite asked that a retaliatory policy or a "Reciprocity of Tariffs" or a "Chinese Wall," or by whatever name they chose to call it, be adopted towards the Americans, they talked to the farmers as if their object was thereby to secure to them the benefits of a renewal of the reciprocal trade between the two countries. Before closing, he proposed to review the value that trade would be to the farmers, and to show that it would be at best but a matter of partial benefit, compared with our former reciprocal relations. But what would be the position of our native industries if that result was brought about? Gentlemen opposite have loudly called for Protection to them against unfair American competition, and we had heard a great deal about the blessings of a Protective tariff as a necessity to build up our manufactures; while now if this retaliatory tariff against the United States is adopted, they said it was with a view to secure reciprocity. Now, the only American agricultural product we consume to any extent is corn. All we take of that would never be missed from their enormous exports; so that selling them grain in our market is no object, and the free access to our market for their manufactures would be the only thing worth offering. But what, then, becomes of Protection to our manufacturers in the face of their protests for more protection? The two propositions must be mutually destructive to each other. But to return to the production of barley, in which Ontario had a special interest, because, in 1876, the gross exports of the Dominion were 10,168,176 bushels, of which 9,920,818 bushels went from Ontario; in 1877, the gross exports were 6,577,180 bushels, of which 6,083,154 bushels came from the Province of Ontario, as against 248,357 bushels and 504,026 bushels in each respective year from all the remainder of the Dominion. In the Internal Commerce returns of the United States for 1877, he found a detailed statement of the imports and exports of Montreal, and the exports to the United States of all the leading ports. The United States Consul at Hamilton reported the export of barley to American ports from Hamilton alone, for the season ending September 30th, 1876, as of the value of nearly $1,000,000, showing that they were thoroughly alive to all their trade connections. Another question of prime importance to the farmer was, who paid the duty of 15c. per bushel imposed by the American Government on Canadian barley exported into the United States. The right hon. member for Kingston had illustrated this question by referring to the case of the farmer on the boundary line between Canada and the United States, where there was only an imaginary line of division, and no natural obstruction, and who produces 2,000 bushels of barley, 1,000 bushels on the American side of his farm, for which he obtained $1 per bushel, and 1,000 bushels on the Canadian side, for which he can only obtain 85c. per bushel, and he had therefore to pay the United States Government 15c. per bushel for the privilege of selling his barley in their market. Now, if that statement were true, and the Canadian producer paid 15c. per bushel to the United States Government on the barley he sells in their markets, how would that operate were we to adopt the policy advocated by hon. gentlemen opposite, "a reciprocity of tariffs" against the United States by imposing a duty of 10c. per bushel on corn? Would the American producer pay that duty? If he did, what advantage would it be to the Canadian farmer, who had been led to believe he would obtain an advanced price for his grain, if there was a duty on American corn, and that was what the Conservatives told him. If the American corn grower did not pay this 10c. per bushel on their corn coming into Canada, so that our farmers obtain that much more than they do in our markets, then the Canadian consumer must pay the Canadian farmer a premium of 10c. per bushel over the American producer, or the duty was of no value to our farmers. In opposition to this statement, he maintained that so long as the American farmers failed to produce all the barley they required to supply their home consumption, and had to import Canadian barley for that purpose, just so long the effect of the duty was that the American consumer had to pay that duty of 15c. per bushel on our barley, and he also pays a bonus to the American farmer of 15c. on every bushel he consumes, under these circumstances. Let him recur to the illustration used by the right hon. member for Kingston, of the farmer with his American and Canadian barley. A consumer comes to him on the American side, and says: "I want to buy 1,000 bushels of barley for malting, or feeding," as the case may be. The farmer replies: "I have 1,000 bushels in my barn here, I can sell you at $1.00 per bushel; or I have 1,000 bushels in my barn, over on the Canada side, I can let you have at 85c. per bushel." He says: "Well, I will take the 1,000 bushels on the Canada side, it looks just as good barley, and is 15c. per bushel cheaper." The bargain is made and he starts to bring home his barley; but on entering the United States he is met by the Customs-officer of that country, who says: "You must pay me 15c. per bushel on this barley before you bring it in here, or I will confiscate it." Now, who paid the duty? Not the Canadian farmer, who got what his barley was worth in the market, but the American consumer, who paid this premium on every bushel of barley he bought from the American farmer, or protection on grain; and, as a consequence, reciprocity of tariffs, do not produce the effects claimed for them by the Opposition, for if they benefit the farmer they must do it by increasing the price to the consumer, and if they increase the price to the consumer, the Canadian farmer would not pay the American duty on the barley exported to the United States. The loss to the Canadian farmer, the member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton), figures as out of the pockets of our farmers, had not been made. The many calculations we have all seen, of a similar kind, in the newspapers of the day by Tory aspirants, are alike unsound and without foundation, and have only one object—to mislead the farmers to believe the Opposition are their friends. This had been the position of the American consumer heretofore; but we are, evidently, entering on a new order of things, and if our production of barley does not diminish materially, both Canadian and American barley will be regulated in price by the world's markets in England, just as American wheat and corn is at present. The United States barley crop in 1850, according to the official census returns, amounted to 5,167,000 bushels. In 1860 it had increased to 15,825,000 bushels; in 1870 it was 29,761,000 bushels, and in 1875, 32,552,500 bushels. Their exports of barley, until recently, were only nominal. In 1871 they exported 364,840 bushels; and, again, in 1875, 91,118 bushels. Of the crop of 1877, which is at present being handled, the combined Canadian-American exports to England have reached no less than 4,000,000 bushels, showing conclusively that the United States have reached a point where they are no longer able to consume their own production and that of Canada, as they have hitherto done. He thought that, before long, the price of both Canadian and American barley would be regulated by the value of their surplus on the English market, where the importations of barley had, during the last three years, varied from 23,000,000 to 34,000,000 bushels per annum; and he had no fear, if our farmers turned their attention to it, that they would be able to compete successfully on that market. But they would need to turn a deaf ear to the prescriptions of doctrinaires on the Opposition Benches, and attend to the details of their business. It had been urged in the House by gentlemen opposite that the imports of American corn, free of duty, operated injuriously to the interests of our farmers, by competing unfairly with what they call our coarse grains, such as barley, oats and pease, and replacing their consumption. Let us take a comparative view of our exports and imports of these grains for the past five years as being a fair average upon which to base an estimate. Our aggregate export of oats from the Dominion for that period amount to 11,257,000 bushels, at an aggregate value of $4,916,000, being an annual average export of 2,251,000 bushels, at a value at the ports where exported of 43c. per bushel. We imported none till 1876, when 628,000 bushels were brought in, and in 1877, 1,697,000 bushels, making a gross quantity of 2,325,000 bushels; but of these we re-exported 1,025,000 bushels, leaving 1,300,000 bushels to be consumed here. We also exported oatmeal during the last two years to the value of $442,000, so that our import of oats was fairly balanced by these two items. Of pease our gross exports for five years was 9,864,000 bushels, realizing for them $8,487,000, an average export per year of 1,972,000 bushels, at an average price of 86c. per bushel. Our imports for the five years only amounted to 8,669 bushels in 1877, all of which were re-exported except 1,117 bushels, evidently some fancy grade for seed, as they were valued at $1,370, whatever the trade may be in the future. So far these two articles have not been imported in sufficient quantities to affect our markets. Of Indian corn, our gross imports for the five years amounts to 29,737,000 bushels, at an aggregate value of $16,381,000, being a yearly average of 5,947,000 bushels, and costing at the port where shipped an average of 55c. per bushel. Our exports for the same period, of American and domestic corn, were 17,840,000 bushels, of an aggregate value of $11,386,000, being a yearly average of 3,568,000 bushels, at an average price of 63c. per bushel, in so far as the difference between the import and export price of 55c. and 63c. respectively. If we secured the carrying of this corn over our canals or railways, it would thus furnish employment to our population, and, he presumed, they realized fairly paying rates for its conveyance. There was, also, meal of other kinds than flour of wheat and rye imported during these five years, to the value of $3,578,000, or a yearly value of $715,000, and exported $1,112,000, or a yearly export of $222,000 in value, which, we may assume, was chiefly corn meal. The united average of our exports of oats, pease and barley for the five years amounts to 10,278,000 bushels per year, while our imports of these grains for the same period was nominal. During the same period of five years our imports of corn was in excess of our exports, and it, therefore, was consumed at home, amounted to 2,379,000 bushels of an average in each year, and of meal to the value of $493,000 per annum. Allowing, say 900,000 bushels of corn, to be represented by the imports of meal consumed, we would still have an excess of oats, pease and barley, called coarse grains, over our united imports of corn and meal taken for consumption in the Dominion, of an average of 7,000,000 bushels a year for the last five years. The American duty on corn is 10c. per bushel. Now, he would ask any reasonable man, what effect a retaliatory tariff to that extent on 3,000,000 bushels of American corn consumed in this country annually, would have in increasing the price of the 7,000,000 bushels of surplus coarse grains we have annually exported? But there is another feature worthy of notice here, and that is: that our export of barley for the five years averaged 81c. per bushel; oats, 43c., and pease, 86c. per bushel, while we imported corn during the same period at an average price of 55c. per bushel, which showed most conclusively that no reasonable duty on American corn would raise it in ordinary seasons to the value of our coarse grains, and the duty would, therefore, only burden the consumer to that extent, and be no gain to the farmer. And when the hon. members for Centre Wellington and North Ontario declaim so loudly for a duty on American corn, they were hardly doing a thing that would entitle them to the thanks of their constituents, as they do not produce corn for sale, and only purchase it when low priced for feeding purposes. If the policy those gentlemen advocate were adopted, it would only compel their constituents to pay an increased price, equal to the duty, to protect the corn grown in three or four counties on the shores of Lake Erie, that being the only portion of Canada where corn is grown to any appreciable extent as a staple crop for sale, while the value of the coarse grains of their farmers would not be increased. Before leaving this point, would the right hon. member for Kingston explain on the principle he has been promulgating with respect to the Canadian producer paying the American duty on our barley exported there, the following circumstance respecting our exports of pease and beans for the past year? From the official returns, he found in 1877 we exported to the United States 470,472 bushels of pease, for which we received $379,841, or 80c. per bushel; in the same period we exported to Great Britain 1,262,566 bushels, and received for them $1,100,104, or 80c. per bushel. The same season we exported to the United States 118,281 bushels of beans, for which we received $117,920, or $1 per bushel, while the same year we exported to Great Britain 1,578 bushels of beans, at $1,370, or 87c. per bushel. The query was, did the Canadian farmer pay the duty on the pease going into the United States, or did the American consumer? One thing was evident, the price was the same going to a country that imposed a duty, and going to England, where there was no duty. He now proposed to review the position taken by the party now in opposition on Protection to the farmers when the Government was administered by the right hon. member for Kingston, and they had an opportunity of carrying into effect the policy they consider so important now. But, before doing so, he would briefly refer to what he considered our present position, and, in that respect, he thought the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Wallace) had correctly expressed it, when he said it was not one of absolute Protection nor yet of Free-trade. We have incurred heavy liabilities with a view to developing the resources of this country, and he would not stop to enquire what party was responsible for our debt. It was sufficient for his present argument that it exists, and if we intend to preserve our credit untarnished, it must be fairly met, and that was the duty of any Government in power. It must be evident that the requirements of revenue to meet current expenditure must necessitate a tariff for many years to come, with a view to producing that income, and while doing so, must give incidental Protection to our industries. Now, if we raise that duty to such an extent as to reduce our imports, we must sacrifice the necessary income, and, in turn, must impose fresh taxes in another direction; and he thought the policy of the Government was a wise one, to maintain a revenue tariff, and, at the same time, so arrange it as to give our manufacturers the best facilities under it, and he had no sympathy with the ground most unfairly taken by their opponents when they charge the Government with a desire to introduce an absolute Free-trade policy, which cry they only raised to cover their own shortcomings in the matter of this Protection they are now, while in the cold shades of Opposition, so anxious to lead the community to believe is essential to their prosperity, but which, he was afraid, was due to the absence of those gentlemen from the Treasury Benches. The position which hon. gentlemen opposite had assumed on this question seemed a very singular one, when their own past record was examined. One would suppose, to hear them, that the Americans had imposed duty on Canadian products to punish Canada for dispossessing them from office, and that the thing was of recent origin; while, in fact, the Americans imposed these duties on the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty in 1866, and they have continued the same since. The tariff in past years, which he would shortly review, would show how anxious these gentlemen were then to protect the farmers. On the 26th of June, 1866, during the first Session of Parliament after reciprocity, the Hon. Mr. Galt, Finance Minister in the Government of the right hon. member for Kingston, in his Budget Speech, proposed a duty of 10c. per bushel on Indian corn and all other grains, except wheat, and, in reply to a question from Mr. Rymal, he stated that he did not intend to propose any duty on wheat, because it was an article that entered largely into the exports of the country, and to have put a duty on it would only needlessly raise the price of bread, and would not benefit the farmers to any extent, because the price in foreign markets regulated the price in Canada. The tariff adopted in 1866 was as follows: Flour of wheat and rye, 50c. per bushel; flour and meal of all other kinds, except wheat, 10c. per bushel, and wheat was duty free, because Mr. Galt said it would only enhance the price of bread to the consumer without benefitting the farmer. Power was also taken under the Act to repeal the duty by proclamation of the Governor if the United States should in the meantime repeal theirs. In 1868, as the United States had not seen fit to repeal their duty on grain coming from Canada, and the hon. Minister from Kingston still administered Canadian affairs, the tariff was again readjusted, and flour of wheat and rye meal and grain of all kinds, including Indian corn, was placed on the free list, and the debate on the occasion in the House reads as follows: "Sir John Macdonald said that the flour tax had been imposed as an assertion of the independence of the country against American exclusive legislation. It had been maintained with that view until it had been found to work oppressively on certain sections of the community, and was now repealed as a step in the right direction." Now, the other way was called by the same gentleman, by the same term, "a step in the right direction." Turning to another report of this speech in the journals of the day he said further. "He had adopted one uniform policy for administering the affairs of the Dominion." He did not propose to impose a tariff for one section which would bear unfairly on another, and this relaxation was for the purpose of taking a burden off the consuming population of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, who were unfairly pressed by this duty imposed. Mr. Jones, of North Grenville then rode the agricultural hobby, and for years after, till the member for Centre Wellington took it in charge, and thus kept the interest of the farmers before the Government of the member for Kingston continuously till 1873, and he, at this time, opposed his leader because he said it was unfair to sacrifice the interests of 2,500,000 for the benefit of only 250,000 people, while the member for South Ontario (T. N. Gibbs) was then, as now, a consistent advocate of a duty being placed on American flour. Mr. Gibbs said "that he regretted the change in the tariff by remitting the duty on breadstuffs; urging we should still try and counteract the effect of American legislation, which imposed a duty of 20c. per bushel on our wheat, while on flour it was equivalent to a tax of 35c. per bushel on wheat. The kind of Protection the hon. member was advocating on this occasion, for the farmer, was worthy of notice, as it was the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite when in power, and when it suited their purpose they repealed it. A duty of 50c. per barrel was imposed on American flour, while it admitted American wheat free of duty, and that was his idea of protection to the farmer, being, in fact, a premium of 50c. on every barrel of flour made from American wheat over Canadian. Thus the tariff of the hon. member for Kingston placed both grain of all kinds and flour upon the free list, and they continued it thus in spite of the protest of the members for South Ontario and Grenville till 1870, when another change was considered necessary, and this time it was announced by the ambitious title of a National Policy, whatever that meant. The tariff was then amended as follows: duty on wheat 4c. per bushel; on all other kinds of grain, including Indian corn, 3c. per bushel; flour of wheat and rye, 25c. per barrel; Indian meal, oatmeal, and all other kinds, 15c. per barrel. This was the measure of protection the right hon. member for Kingston and his followers then thought sufficient for the farmer, and it was their estimate then of reciprocity of tariffs against the Americans, whose example they were now so anxious to emulate, for the same object of obtaining reciprocity seems to have been kept steadily in view, and the Act again had a proviso for the abolition of these duties by proclamation, if the Americans withdrew theirs and entered into reciprocity with us. Respecting the American duty on Canadian grain, he would quote their tariff as imposed on the abrogation by them of the Reciprocity Treaty, in April, 1866, and which remain the same to-day, through all the noise about reciprocity of tariff, or no tariff, made by designing politicians seeking office in this Dominion. The American tariff on grain is as follows:—

MR. BAIN.

MR. BAIN.

MR. BAIN.

Wheat, per bushel .....	20 cents.
Barley, do .....	15 "
Indian Corn do .....	10 "
Oats do .....	10 "
Pease, for seed .....	20 per ct.
do for use .....	10 "
Flour .....	20 "
Oatmeal .....	10 "
Corn meal .....	10 "
Animals .....	20 "

These were the American duties in 1866, and are the same under the tariff of 1877. Again he would draw the attention of the House to the kind and amount of Protection accorded to the farmer under this national policy tariff. He remembered, when at this time he was quietly pursuing his avocation as a farmer, following the plough and drawing his own grain to market, and before he had assumed any of the duties of political life, conversing with one of the leading millers who spoke in loud terms of praise of this National Policy as one of protection to the farmer. But a little examination would show it was framed in the interests of some other parties rather than the farmer. The member for North Ontario (Mr. W. H. Gibbs) had told the House that four bushels, 20 lb., of wheat, made a barrel of flour, say 4½ bushels on which 4c. per bushel of duty was levied, making 18c., while the duty on a bushel of American flour was 25c., a bonus of 7c. on every barrel of flour made from American over Canadian wheat, and the fact was a familiar one, that on the grain market, at that time, as it is to-day, the prices paid to the farmer rise and fall, as a rule, in accordance with the changes in the Liverpool markets, where both Canadian and American surplus grain finds a market on equal terms. In 1871, the National Policy did not sit comfortably on the people, and the peculiar manipulations it received at the hands of gentlemen opposite, who were then still in charge of the affairs of the Dominion, were fresh in the recollection of many present, when, after a great deal of manœuvring Ministers themselves aided in voting down this National Policy in the House where they had a working majority of, at least, 40; and again grain of all kinds and flour was admitted free of duty into Canada, and had remained since in that condition, although there was no change of Government till the end of 1873. There was another feature which he thought was entitled to be considered in this question, in so far as this Protection was applied both to the United States and Canada. And the United States were to-day a proof that the protective policy of that country, in which it had full play, had not been in the interest of the farmer. In this connection, he found that if they looked at the relative position of these two countries, it would be plain to every one that circumstances were as he had stated. Both the United States and the Dominion had held out their immense and unoccupied territory as an inducement to the over-crowded population of other countries to settle on those cheap lands and become producers, and had drawn a large immigration in consequence. The United States farmer was placed at this disadvantage: that the great increase of farm products from so much new country being improved, kept the production far above the home consumption, and while paying high prices for all goods he bought, he was obliged to take the prices which his wheat, corn and other products would fetch in the English market, after deducting the cost of freight in transporting his products to that market, because the United States have all through this period been large exporters of wheat and corn, the two great staples of American farm product. In 1876, they exported 87,000,000 bushels of wheat, and 50,000,000 bushels of corn, a fair portion of the transport of which, by judicious management, we should be able to secure for carriage over our canals and railways to the seaboard. A few nights ago the Chairman of the Immigration Committee stated that Manitoba contained 9,000,000 acres of land, and that there was enough of fertile land in the North-West to make twenty Provinces, exclusive of grazing lands. Few realized how much good grain-producing prairie we possess in that region, and with the large immigration already gone there and rapidly increasing, we may reasonably assume that instead of excluding United States corn from competing with our farmers, our exports of all kinds of grain will be largely increased by the surplus of our own territory; and it would be wisdom in our farmers and legislators, instead of embarrassing our trade with the Western States by foolish restrictions, to remember the probabilities of our own increased production and prepare accordingly, as through the immense reduction in freights from the West, thereby practically bringing them nearer the great consuming markets of the East, reciprocity was yearly becoming of less value to the farmers of Ontario. In 1876, wheat was carried to New York from Buffalo by railway for 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ c. per bushel, less than the tolls levied on it over the Erie Canal in 1870, and the freight paid in addition; while corn cost from Chicago to New York for freight in 1872, 26c. per bushel and the regular rate in 1876 was only 8c. per bushel. Last season, wheat was carried from Winnipeg, in Manitoba, to Duluth, for 24c. per bushel, and from Duluth to Montreal for 10c. per bushel, making 34c. per bushel to the seaboard from Winnipeg, which rate would be materially reduced as the communications by railway into that Province, now in progress, were completed. He had faith in the future of his country, notwithstanding that hon. gentlemen on the Opposition benches seemed expressly anxious to hold on to this depression, which was now clogging our business and depressing our industries. But they were only suffering in a secondary degree compared with the United States. This depression extended to all countries of the world which had commercial relations with each other. He could not help thinking that that depression was to-day the chief stock-in-trade of the Opposition in dealing with the issues before the House and the country. While there was a great deal said about developing the trade of Montreal by securing two or three cargoes of tea per year from foreign ports for the purpose of building up a tea trade, they should not forget the enormous trade, which, by judicious management, they could build up with that vast producing country the North-West, both American and Canadian, and no city can long enjoy a prosperous foreign commerce that has not facilities for internal commerce and transportation, and the grain trade offers a large business for the employment of vessels to transport it. In connection with that matter, he found that last year Montreal received American grain to the amount of 19,000,000 bushels, while in 1863 it was only a little over 6,000,000 bushels, and, compared with New York, showed a very remarkable increase in that period. The amount of employment given by this trade to our lake craft, our sailors, and our canals and railways, was a feature that should not be forgotten; and, while he would also like to see an import tea trade done direct by Montreal, if thereby the price was not raised to the consumer, which gentlemen opposite professed to be now so anxious to secure, he thought their action was against the commerce of Montreal, by checking the trade with the West by proposing retaliatory legislation. It was a wise policy of this Government to decline to check that trade in any way whatever. As far as hon. gentlemen opposite were concerned, their interest in the agricultural population had been developed so late in the day, that it must suggest itself to the mind of every intelligent man whether this movement was in the interest of the agriculturist or of the struggling politician. From the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty in 1866 down to 1873, those gentlemen had power, but their policy at that time was entirely contrary to that which they now advocated. If they had then believed in the principles they now professed, would they not have made some steps in that direction when they held the reins of power. He was not there to impute motives to anyone, but no other legitimate conclusion could be drawn from their conduct on this occasion than that this movement was not so much in the interest of the farmer as in the interest of the party in opposition, who were only anxious for its aid to climb back into office. In the summer, when the leaders of the Opposition talked so eloquently about the interest of the workingman in this country, when workingmen's demonstrations were inaugurated, it struck him (Mr. Bain) that it was not so much the workingmen they desired to benefit as that class of working politicians who desired to work themselves back to place and power, and to get the votes of these people to enable them to do it. Up to the moment when these gentlemen were driven from office—no, he would not say driven, for they waited not for the formal verdict of the people's representatives, but fled from office precipitately in 1873, when the Pacific scandal came to the surface—up to this period, and as long as they had power to carry out their views, they displayed no anxiety for the agricultural class; but now they were anxious to cultivate the farmer, and he thought the conclusion to be drawn was that it was because of the near approach of the general elections, and because these people had votes.

MR. BAIN.

MR. RYMAL moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

House adjourned at
One o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 8th April, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE QUEBEC CRISIS.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

MR. MACKENZIE delivered a message from His Excellency the Governor-General.

MR. SPEAKER read the message, and it is as follows:—

"DUFFERIN.

"The Governor-General transmits to the House of Commons a letter from the Hon. C. B. DeBoucherville, having reference to the recent Ministerial changes in the Province of Quebec.

"GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
"OTTAWA, 8th of April, 1878."

MR. BAIN.

SUPPLY.—THE TARIFF.

Order to resume the adjourned debate on Mr. Cartwright's proposed motion: "That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair, for the House to go again into Committee of Supply," and of Mr. Brown's motion in amendment thereto:—

"That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be Resolved, That whereas a large quantity of wheat and flour has been imported into Canada within the last few years, this House is of opinion that the interests of Canadian farmers would be promoted by the imposition of a duty on these articles."

—read.

MR. RYMAL said he presumed he almost owed an apology to the House for having protracted the discussion on this important question; but he felt, as a representative of an agricultural constituency, that he could scarcely allow it to pass without saying a few words upon it and its effects on the people he represented. The question before the House involved the principles of Free-trade and Protection, so-called—terms which, he ventured to assert, did not properly apply to the condition of things in this country. There was no one, so far as he knew, in the House who asserted that absolute Free-trade would be at all applicable to our present position. It would be well, perhaps, to learn how these terms came into general use. At the time when the starving millions of Britain were asking Parliament to relieve them from the duties on corn, they petitioned Parliament largely, praying for the free admission of corn into their country, and these were known as Free-trade petitions. The landed aristocracy and the farmers, who thought that their interests were imperilled if Free-trade was granted, petitioned Parliament to be protected in the rights they had so long enjoyed, and these were called Protectionist petitions; and it appeared that ever since, in all countries wherever the subject of tariff relations was brought into consideration, that the terms, "Free-trader" and "Protectionist," "Free-trade" and "Protection," had been used. But, as he had said, we held that absolute Free-trade in this country was impossible. No one desired it. No one advocated it. No one expected it to prevail here; but what they had to consider was, in what way they might best raise the money necessary to carry on the government of the country, and best secure the interests of the people while laying these burdens upon them. He held that we must have a revenue tariff, and that this was the acknowledged system in vogue throughout the civilized world, wherever Governments abstracted from the people the means necessary to carry on public affairs. He believed that it would be better if direct taxation were resorted to, but that it would raise a rebellion in one-half of the civilized countries in the world if the people were made aware of the immense amount of taxation to which they were subject. Governments being wise in their day and generation had consequently resolved to keep from the general public, or the taxpayers, the full knowledge of the great amount of taxation to which they were indirectly subject. He believed that a revenue tariff was the best means by which they could collect the revenue required for the Government of the country; that this tariff should be so arranged as to bear as equally upon all classes as possible; that no class should be specially favoured in levying these duties. That when we had secured sufficient money to meet the demand of the Government, taxation should cease, and that after the money thus secured was equivalent to what we wanted, we should not be foolish enough to commence to tax the people for one another's benefit, which was known as Protection. We had for some years past frequently had this question up before the House for discussion. The cry of Protection was first raised in behalf of the manufactures of Canada, and it became strong at a time when the hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and were reducing the taxation of the country. He could well remember when enormous deputations of manufacturers used to be around the corridors of this Chamber, importuning members and beseeching the Government in order to increase the taxation with a view, he believed, to their especial benefit. The Government of the day wisely resisted these importunities. It was one of the wise things for which he gave them credit; but an evil day for these hon. gentlemen came round—a change of circumstances took place. The offices which they had so long filled, they were obliged to vacate, and then a change in their views took place. The manufacturers, principally their political friends, were unable to sustain these hon. gentlemen in office; and they began to look around to find out if it would be possible for them ever to regain the positions they had lost. Then it was that for the first time Protection to farmers became the rallying cry. The manufacturers and the Tory politicians combined, then devised the plan by which they hoped to “rope” the farmers into their ring and victimize them for the benefit of the manufacturers, to wheedle them into the belief that Parliament was going to do something for them and by that means to get them to sustain Tory candidates at the elections and bring about the restoration to power of the men who had disgraced their positions. They had had a trial of this thing. In 1866, the then Conservative Government imposed a tax on wheat and flour—

AN HON. MEMBER: No.

MR. RYMAL said that in 1868 this duty was repealed. If it was proper to impose it in 1866, then it was improper to repeal it, in 1868. The circumstances had not changed materially. Was there an change at all?

MR. GIBBS (South Ontario): No duty was imposed on wheat in 1866.

MR. RYMAL said very well. Then it was levied on flour and breadstuffs. The advocates of this repeal comprised a certain number of the hon. gentlemen opposite who were now anxious for the re-imposition of this duty. He expected his hon. friend from South Ontario from any change in his opinion. Like a good soldier, the hon. gentleman had stood to his guns. He believed that the hon. gentleman could take credit to himself for having been wrong in the first place and for having been wrong ever since. His right hon. friend from Kingston was not in his place; he (Mr. Rymal) wished he were, for he desired to make a few propositions to the hon. gentleman, and to know whether he assented to them or not; but the hon. gentleman's lieutenants were there, and he supposed they had command of the forces. He (Mr. Rymal) recollected that the hon. member from Kingston, on the 30th April, 1868, made a statement on the floor of the House, which he (Mr. Rymal) now asked permission to quote, as follows:

"Sir John A. Macdonald said that the flour tax had been imposed as an assertion of the independence of the country against American exclusive legislation. It had been maintained with that view until it had been found to work oppressively on certain sections of the community, and it was now repealed as a step in the right direction."

This was the statement of a statesman clothed with responsibility at the time, but to-day this hon. gentleman, divested of all responsibility, wandered to and fro, like some evil spirit, up and down the country, and ignored this declaration which he then made, and endeavoured to delude the people into the belief that the re-imposition of duties of this kind would now be a step in the right direction. On that occasion the hon. member for South Ontario protested strongly against the remission of these taxes; and his hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Pope) took the Nova Scotia view of the question (though no Nova Scotian) and maintained the inadvisability of attempting to subserve the particular and local interests of protective principles prejudicial to the general welfare. These were the doctrines which he (Mr. Rymal) then believed in, though they were set forth by his political opponents, and he still believed in them. Let them, if they could, for a moment decide upon the operation and results of a tax on grain coming into this country. It was said by some that the party growing the grain—we were importing from the United States—paid the duty. He (Mr. Rymal) never heard anyone who possessed credit for having common sense utter such a thing in seriousness. He fancied that no man gifted with a fair share of penetration and honest enough to express his sentiments, was foolish enough to suppose that the American people would for our especial benefit pay money into our treasury and let us have their grain at the price the law of supply and demand warranted. Let them suppose a case, because things sometimes become plainer when illustrated. He lived near Hamilton where there was a considerable grain market, and where a good deal of American corn was bought and sold. They would suppose, as was the case at present, when there was no taxation upon this article that he could have corn laid down in Hamilton for fifty cents a bushel. He held that it would be impossible for him to secure it at that price if five cents per bushel were levied upon it. The cost would then be fifty-five cents a bushel. Did this proposition accord with the common sense of his hon. friends opposite? He would like to have their assent to or dissent from some of these propositions, and while the hon. gentlemen remained quiet, as he trusted they would, he should take it for granted that the propositions he submitted were acceptable to them. They then took it for granted that the imposition of duties on American corn coming into Canada increased the price of this article to the consumer in Canada. Let them see what else it did. It also increased the price to the Canadian grower of corn to the same extent, because if it cost him fifty-five cents a bushel to lay it down in Hamilton, he (Mr. Rymal) could not buy it from the Canadian farmer for less, supposing the latter corn to be of equal quality, so that the price was regulated by the admission of American corn into this country, or the price it would bring in any other market, duties and cost of transportation added. The result of this was to the Canadian farmer, a bonus granted by the Government of five cents per bushel in order to induce him to grow corn until the corn-growing capacity of this country was fairly exhausted, or sufficient to meet the entire demand. This proposition, he presumed, would meet with the approval of his hon. friends opposite. He defied them, if it came to that, to gainsay it, or show that it was wrong. They would now take up wheat and see what was the result of bringing it in free of duty. They had always supposed, outrightly supposed, that Canada as far as breadstuffs were concerned, was not an importing but an exporting country. We had always had more than our people required for consumption and had always exported this article. The United States lying along side of us, with whom we had such large transactions and which was our competitor on the European continent in the matter of grain, had also always had an export of breadstuffs. He held that this could not interfere with the price of wheat in Canada, we having a surplus for export, if the entire trade of the Western States came down over our water ways and railways, and that to exclude it by placing any barriers in the way of trade, even if it were in the form of bonding, would have a tendency to drive a good portion of this traffic into other channels, to the detriment of our shippers, sailors, merchants, and forwarders. In 1875 we imported 5,105,158 bushels of wheat and exported 7,053,544 bushels. Thus, every bushel that we brought into the country we sent out again, besides, 1,948,386 bushels that we raised ourselves. Would any one be bold enough to say that when we had 1,948,000 bushels of our home-grown wheat for sale it made any difference to us how many thousands or millions of bushels were carried over the railways and canals of Canada? We would not buy their wheat, unless as a speculation. We did not require it; our supply was more than equal to the demand. Let him suppose the tumbler which he held in his hand represented our supply, and a smaller tumbler to represent our demand. If he filled the smaller tumbler to overflowing, where would the surplus go to? Or in other words: where would our surplus wheat go to? It must find an outlet through a natural channel to the markets of the world. And if the wheat from the Western States was poured into the already filled cup, it would only add to the surplus which had to be disposed of outside. During the years 1871 to 1877, inclusive, we raised and exported 5,000,000 bushels, in round numbers, more than we required for our own use, and he maintained that under these circumstances the imposition of a duty on wheat would neither do good nor harm; it would injure the Canadian shipper, railroad people and others engaged in the carrying trade. Coming next to oats, he found on the notice paper a motion that it would be advisable to place an import duty on oats. Well, if we did not grow as many oats as we required and wanted to increase the price, that would be a step in the right direction. But, the fact was that we produced more oats than we consumed. During the five years which he had referred to, we imported 2,326,173 bushels of oats and exported 12,286,156, showing that we exported 10,000,000 of our home-grown oats to foreign markets. What possible influence could the impost of a duty on oats have on the price of those grown in Canada, when six bushels were exported for every one imported from the United States. Besides the 2,000,000 bushels which we imported we exported 10,000,000 bushels of home-grown oats. Barley and rye stood in the same category. In round numbers, we imported 403,000 bushels during the last six years, and imported 40,000,000. Did his hon. friends opposite, then, believe that the imposition of a duty on American barley would have any influence upon the price of our barley? He knew they did not. They were not so greatly mistaken as that. The imports and exports of flour or wheat during the last five years were very much alike, there being only 2,000 barrels difference. Any flour, he presumed, which was exported was from the wheat growing regions of Ontario, and the imports we made went principally into the Maritime Provinces. To impose a duty on flour, therefore, would be to do that which was decidedly unfair, because we would be putting a duty on our brethren of the Maritime Provinces which we did not share, the benefits would accrue to us while the burden would be laid upon them. Let not those who advocated Confederation and who were continually boasting of the manner in which they had carried out that grand scheme, array one Province against another, and mar that perfect unity which they secured a few years ago. He said a few moments ago that the attempt on the part of the manufacturers to delude farmers into the belief that to put a duty on American grains would be a benefit to the farmers, was a well laid plan to deceive the unwary. That plan, however, was adopted now, and advocated by his hon. friend from Kingston, who at one time denounced it when clothed with responsibility. Now that he had become divested of responsibility, the hon. gentleman played the mountebank from one part of the country to another, and ignoring his professions of a few short years ago, joined with the manufacturers in endeavouring to delude the farmers of Canada into the belief that agricultural protection would be greatly for their benefit. He (Mr. Rymal) admitted that among his friends in Wentworth there were a few farmers who favoured Protection, but some of his opponents, liberal and intelligent men—did not believe it would be for the benefit of the farmer. He had had a long talk with one of them a week before he left to attend to his duties this Session, and speaking of Protection, this farmer said: "Rymal, that cry for Protection is all bosh; I am fully convinced of that, but, nevertheless, I am going to vote the Tory ticket straight." It was because these men were going to vote for the Tory ticket that the right hon. member for Kingston was so anxious to propagate these sentiments and promulgate these ideas, because he might thereby be able to distract and divide the Reformers of Ontario by sowing dissension among them; by advocating a scheme which he once very justly denounced. In fact he (Mr. Rymal) thought the hon. gentleman would turn himself inside out in order to accomplish his designs. It was said by some that farmers were anxiously desiring that something should be done in the way of Protection. Few of the most intelligent, however, would be found who considered that they would be benefitted by anything done in this direction. The great mass of the farmers of Ontario—he spoke more particularly of them because of them he was most qualified to speak—did not believe in this thing at all. The farmers had never asked for themselves this kind of legislation. Among the hundreds and thousands of farmers in Ontario, none had ever sent a petition there praying for the imposition of a duty on wheat, flour, rye or Indian corn. And when the great assemblage of representatives of the farming community met in Toronto some two or three months ago—he meant the Grand Division of Grangers—did they take any action in reference to this matter? No, a few of them desired to do so, but after sounding the opinions of that representative body of farmers, and finding that it would not do, they abandoned the idea. He thought he had shown pretty conclusively that the importation of American grains—with the exception of corn—into Canada had not a tendency to increase the prices to the Canadian farmer. By placing an impost of five cents per bushel on American corn imported into this country, the farmer's prices would be increased by the amount levied on the American production. That was a proposition which met with the assent of the hon. member for Kingston, that the price of a farmer's produce was increased to the same extent as the tax levied on the Americans. The hon. gentleman was not bold enough to contradict that proposition, and he (Mr. Rymal) took it for granted that he assented thereto. This spasmodic zeal for the interest of the farmer, he held, was brought about by the political necessities of hon. gentlemen opposite. He did not blame them for being anxious to return to the loaves and fishes, because they began to look as if they were hungered. His sympathies were sometimes moved when he saw their unutterable cravings for the flesh-pots of Egypt. But let them attain to that position by fair and honourable means; let them not attempt to delude a confiding public into the belief that their nostrums, which they attempted to administer, would cure or alleviate any malady under which they laboured. The promises held out to the farming community of blessings yet to come rested on the condition that they would fall down and worship the right hon. gentleman and reinstate him as leader in Parliament and Government; if you did not, dire reverses and dire calamities are your fate; but bring him in and prosperity is yours—your coffers shall overflow with coin and your barns and granaries shall be bursting with plenty. "I will," he says, "give you good prices for all that you can raise, and I have so arranged with Providence that you shall raise big crops." Now, we read of one who went to and fro upon the earth many years ago and tempted the people by false promises. He tempted our Saviour by taking him up into a high mountain, showing Him the kingdoms of the earth, and promising Him all these if He would fall down and worship him. His (Mr. Rymal's) hon. friend opposite appealed to the people of Canada, who, he assumed, would receive many blessings if they would fall down and worship him, but not otherwise. He was like the doctor who, happening to go along the street accidentally, was asked to enter a house for the purpose of prescribing for a patient who was very ill, but, feeling that he had not received a regular call, he refused to give his advice or prescription. So it was with the hon. gentleman—

MR. RYMAL.

MR. MASSON: That is the Premier's doctrine.

MR. RYMAL: I should like to know what sort of prescription my hon. friend would give the country if regularly called in. Would it be a protective, or readjusted, or retaliatory, or scientific tariff, of which we have heard so much from hon. gentlemen opposite?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: You did not finish the story about the man who went up into the high mountain.

MR. RYMAL: That was not a man, that was the devil; the other tempter did not go up to the top of the mountain; he went round the country holding picnics and tempting the people. It was said that the importation of American corn into this country was detrimental to our farmers, as it would lower the price of their coarse grains. Now, what did the importation of grain into this country last year do for the revenue of the country? We brought in and retained for distillation about 1,000,000 bushels of corn free of duty. And what did it produce? Those who were conversant with the distillation of spirits told him that every bushel of Indian corn produced three and a half gallons of spirits, and there was an excise duty of 75c. on every gallon so produced, so that from 50c. worth of corn imported into this country free of duty, $2.62½ went directly into the Treasury of the Dominion of Canada, being a duty of 52½ per cent., and yet he was told that the importation of corn was detrimental to the best interests of our country! Why, if we could import 10,000,000 bushels and put them through a process of distillation, we would derive a revenue of upwards of $26,000,000—sufficient to pay the entire expenses of the Government of Canada. But some one said if "they must have whiskey let us make it from our potatoes, our barley, or our rye." Well, how would the distiller fare under that operation? His hon. friend the member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton), a night or two ago, when speaking about barley, malt and corn told them that 24 pounds of corn contained the same amount of essence, or extract of spirit suitable for the production of beer or spirits as 36 pounds of malt and 36 pounds of malt represents a bushel of barley, so that one bushel of corn was equal to two of barley for the production of spirits or malt liquors, and was equal to one and one half bushel of rye for the same purpose. If, therefore, a bushel of corn worth 70c. including a duty of 20 c. could produce the same amount of spirits or beer as two bushels of barley, it would actually be worth $1.40, and 1½ bushels of rye would be worth $1.05, so that it was impossible—unless the importation of corn was prohibited—to expect the coarse grains raised by the Canadian farmer could ever enter into successful competition with corn in the production of spirits. His hon. friend from Kingston had frequently, in his campaign speeches, referred to the fact alluded to by him to-night that the Canadian produce paid the duty on the barley sent into the United States. A more illogical proposition, it appeared to him (Mr. Rymal) never emanated from a man occupying for so long a time such a position, and it was evidently opposed to many previous statements of his to which he (Mr. Rymal) would refer. Why, if we imported cottons and consumed them, we paid the duty; if we imported grain or Indian corn from the United States for consumption, we paid the duty. The same might be said with reference to the barley from eastern townships, to which the hon. gentleman had referred. If the American people imported that barley for consumption, they paid the duty. The duty was paid in every case by the consumer. There was no doubt about that. No one but a madman would attempt to argue to the contrary, and no one but a fool would believe it. The hon. gentleman has said, "What was sass for the goose was sass for the gander," and endeavoured to fatten his geese with such flapdoodle as that, but their constitution on his (Mr. Rymal's) side of the House was too high for such stuff. It reminded him of the Scotch parson who had a servant of the opinion that he could preach as well as his master, and he told his master so. "Well," said the parson in reply "do you think you could draw an inference, John, if I were to give you the text?" "Faith, I think I could," said Jehn. "Well, I will give you this text and we shall see:

"And the wild ass's colt snuffeth up the wind."

Now, John, just draw your inference from that." "I would infer from that," John replied, "that it would sniff a lang time before it would be unco' fat." And so he (Mr. Rymal) thought with regard to the Tory followers; they had been flapdoodled to any extent. It was sometimes amusing--dropping this corn question, because he believed it had been thoroughly disposed of, and that from the able manner in which it had been dealt with the farmers must now thoroughly understand it—he had often been amused at the boasting which hon. gentlemen opposite indulged in as to the result of the next appeal to the people. He was not vain enough to suppose that his own party would come out of the battle without some of their number being slain, but the hon. gentlemen opposite had better be careful that they were not drawn into an ambush, and before they knew what they were about, be unborsed. He had no doubt that when they assembled after the next election many well-known faces would be missing; there would be many who might be numbered, for the time being, among the political dead. His right hon. friend from Kingston (Sir John A. Macdonald) had indulged in a great deal of boasting. He had predicted on almost every platform on which he appeared, that the time had come, that the handwriting was on the wall, and that all they wanted was an appeal to the people to be triumphantly returned, and to become leaders of this House and directors of the affairs of this country. He (Mr. Rymal) would rather boast when laying aside his armour than when putting it on; and he would advise gentlemen opposite to look well before they leapt, and to watch their opponents pretty closely. He presumed the friends of the Government meant to win the battle if possible; at least, speaking for himself, he expected a pretty hard contest. He would promise his opponent, whoever he might be, if his life was spared and his health held out, that the constituency would be contested inch by inch, and if his friends who had scored victories continuously for forty years again stood by him, as in days gone by, he could defy opposition. His hon. friends opposite were inclined to boast about the successful demonstration they had in Hamilton last summer, and he was bound to say that if mere numbers created a success they had reason to feel proud; but the fact was that one-half of the people who attended that demonstration were attracted by the same curiosity as they were two years before, when Barnum came along with his menagerie. One of the right hon. gentleman's supporters remarked to another man: "This is the grandest day, the biggest day that Hamilton has ever seen." His listener replied, "Well, I don't know, I can't say that; but it is the biggest day Hamilton has ever seen except the time when Barnum came here with his show." Certainly it was a large demonstration, but he (Mr.

Rymal) did not believe more than one-half of those present were political adherents of the member for Kingston. If they had not a crowd it was not their fault. Hon. gentlemen would be aware that the showman's business was to have a gorgeous band chariot when they entered a city, and stirring sounds of music and a grand procession, in order to announce to the people that the show was about to open. It was the same when his hon. friend from Kingston was about to exhibit in Hamilton. They ran out the gilded chariot, they had a band and they had a procession. They not only paraded the city but five miles outside, and when at Dundas the hon. member was put through his paces and made a speech, so he (Mr. Rymal) was told, in the same time as the celebrated fast trotter made her mile, viz.: two minutes and seventeen seconds. "By my soul," said a witty Irish listener, "but he made a nate little spache." He was delighted to hear that they had paraded for four or five miles along the border of his (Mr. Rymal's) county; he did not believe it would hurt him if the hon. gentleman paid another visit up there, for dissatisfaction rather than satisfaction prevailed after he had left. He did not meet the expectations of the manufacturers at all. He was not positive enough. He told them, "You must make out your case, and when you have made out your case, why, of course, we will consider it." This was like his National Policy, and, knowing him as some of them did, they said, "Well, now, it is just a matter of question whether we are to believe the old fox or not." Then the hon. gentleman went down to the Eastern Townships, and there he became wonderfully enthusiastic. Richard was himself again; he rode the high horse; he discovered that the country was rising; that the handwriting was on the wall; that the tocsin had sounded; that the heather was on fire and running from hill to hill; that the people were crying to him from rock to rock, across the lakes: "Come to our rescue, Johnny, or we are lost!" Medical testimony proved that such hallucinations of the mind were brought about by disorders of the liver and an over-stimulated state of the stomach, which, if not attended to ended in a settled conviction not only that these fancies were real, but also that there were bees in his bonnet, or snakes in his boots. He (Mr. Rymal) was glad to accept the situation in which his own party was placed. He ventured to assert that the Government of his friends would be sustained by the people. Before he concluded, he would draw attention to the condition the country might have been in if the hon. member for Kingston and his followers had been allowed to retain office and control the destinies of Canada. In 1868 their estimated expenditure was $13,486,000; in 1869, $14,038,000 in round numbers; in 1870, $14,345,000. The car had not begun to go very fast yet; the propelling power of steam, as it were, had not got up, but they were beginning to move, and in 1871 the expenditure had amounted up to $15,623,000. Then the car had begun to move with considerable speed. In 1872, it was $19,589,000. The steam must have been up to a considerable extent then—20lb. to the inch, or thereabouts. In 1873, the expenditure was $19,174,000, and in 1874, $23,316,000. The car of Stato was running down to ruin pretty fast then; day by day, with accelerated speed, it was rushing forward to the gulf which would have destroyed the prospects of this Dominion had not the present Government been permitted to take charge of the car. The expenditure of the present Government was: In 1874, $23,713,000; 1875, $24,438,000—a slight increase over the previous year—and in 1876, $24,488,000. He could understand how the increase occurred. This car had been going down the road to ruin at such an accelerated rate of speed that it was almost impossible to stop it all at once; it would, perhaps, have been ruin to the car to have done so, and before they could overcome its momentum it had reached the high figure of $24,488,000; but they threw obstacles in the way and reduced the rate of speed as well as they were able, and in the following year the amount of expenditure was $23,378,000, being a reduction between the first and third years of their administration of $335,000. He thought it was reasonable to ask where they would have been if the car of State had been allowed to run on to ruin at the same rate as it was during the administration of gentlemen opposite. After a careful calculation he found that their annual average of increase of expenditure was $1,638,370; and if that had continued up to the present time, the Estimates required for the present year would have been $29,860,000. He thought he had a right to make another calculation in this matter without being unjust to hon. gentlemen opposite. This passage down this road to ruin became swifter and swifter year after year. He had a right to ask where they would have been had this thing continued at the same rate of progress which they were making during the last two years of their incumbency in office? He found that in that case the expenditure would have been for the present year $34,770,000. He would go further. He thought they had a right to estimate their increase at the same rate which the last year gave over the previous year of their tenure in office, and he found this would give the sum of $40,000,000, which would have been required to meet the reckless waste and expenditure they would have incurred. When facts like these were laid before the electors of this country, one and all of them, no matter what their avocations might be, they would hesitate a long while before committing the business of our country into the hands of these hon. gentlemen who had driven the car down the road to ruin at such an accumulative pace.

MR. GIBBS (South Ontario) said that, as hon. gentlemen opposite had been good enough specially to refer to remarks which he had made in years gone by, when this subject was brought before the notice of Parliament, he desired to make a few observations in reply. The hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Rymal) had stated that he (Mr. Gibbs) had commenced wrongly in years gone by, and had also given him the credit of having continued in the same course down to the present day. Despite the arguments which had been adduced by hon.

gentlemen, who had spoken long and eloquently on this subject from a different point of view, he remained still of the same opinion. The impressions which he had gathered from the course which the American Government had pursued after the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty, in 1866, had led him to the conclusion then that the only course to be pursued by the Government of Canada, if they wished to obtain a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty, was to pursue one similar to that adopted by the United States. During the period from 1866 down to the present time, the American Government had shown no indication or intention to alter its commercial policy or their tariff in any way, at any rate, so far as it would lead in the direction of Free-trade or free intercourse in those products which had, previous to reciprocity, been exchanged between the two countries. He had had the honour, upon the floor of the old Parliament of Canada, to advocate the same principles which had been advocated during the present Session by the right hon. member for Kingston in his resolution introduced the other day, and by hon. gentlemen who had spoken in favour of that resolution. He had also advocated the policy which had been introduced by the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Brown), seconded by the hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Ross); and he still believed, as in 1866, that this country could not expect a change of policy on the part of the American people until this Government had something to offer in exchange for what they desired. They had sent an emissary, a Minister plenipotentiary, from Canada to confer with the Government of the United States, with a view to obtain reciprocal trade relations. He had no doubt that that hon. gentleman had been met at the very outset by the question: "What have you to offer us in return for the boon you ask at our hands?" The people of Canada were not willing to impose duties upon certain American products, or increase the duties now placed upon American manufactures, and, therefore, they had nothing to offer in exchange. Now, gentlemen opposite were perfectly satisfied that this state of things should continue, and that its continuation was in the interests of the trade of this country. He believed the only true policy which this Government ought to pursue was: having failed in one respect, they should try another. His (Mr. Gibbs) arguments had failed in the past, and a different policy to the one he had advocated had been pursued—a policy which had proved itself inimical to the best interests of Canada, and, therefore, he saw no reason to authorize his abandoning the views he then enunciated. He must protest against the statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite, that it was the intention of the Opposition to impose any larger amount of taxes than what was now raised. What they desired was a readjustment of the tariff, not to raise any larger amount of taxation than was required for the purpose of the Government. The policy of England was considered a Free-trade one, and yet, they had been obliged to impose taxes to raise the revenue. The United States was considered a protective country, and it raised revenue in the way it considered best adapted to the interests of its own people. On this side of the House they desired there should be a readjustment of the taxes, that they should press more heavily on one interest and less on another than at present, but that in the aggregate they should not exceed the amount required for the purpose of revenue. It was a fact that the Congress of the United States was, at this moment, considering the propriety of readjusting the American tariff, and yet, after having had an experience for the last 12 years of the effect of the duties imposed upon Canadian products, they had not the slightest intention, at present, of reducing those duties one iota. They had entertained the proposition of lessening the duty on lumber, but had not yet come to any conclusion in that respect. He desired to speak of the duties levied upon the one article, the principal production of the Province of Ontario—the article of barley—of which a great deal had been said by hon. members on the other side of the House, particularly by the hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Rymal), who had stated that no person would believe that the Canadian producer paid the duty on that produce, but that it was the American consumer, and that any person who believed anything else was nothing but a fool. He was prepared to join issue with the hon. gentleman on that point. He spoke not only his own sentiments and views, but the views of those who were directly interested in this traffic, who did business with the United States in the articles of barley and malt, when he said that, if the duty upon Canadian barley were removed, the price would not fall one cent on the New York Produce Exchange. He had discussed that question with some gentlemen there, and had asked their opinions with reference to the repeal of the duty on barley, and they had stated that it would not reduce the value of this product one single iota. The reason given was this: At present the price of barley in New York was upon a different basis from what it had been for several years; it was now upon an export basis. He regretted this, because the export was one which would produce a very small return to the producer of that article in the Province of Ontario. Unfortunately, that was the position of the trade to-day. Canadian barley was considered by the maltsters of the United States to be worth from 15c. to 20c. per bushel more than their own production, and yet it was a fact that American barley to-day brought just as much for export as Canadian barley, which was superior in quality, and worth from 15c. to 20c. per bushel more than the American barley. Further than that, inferior as was the United States barley to Canadian, yet it was a fact that it was taken as an article of export to the United Kingdom in preference to the Canadian. The former was what was called two-rowed barley, while that grown in Ontario was six-rowed. The former weighed more than the latter, and though it was inferior in colour, yet it was taken in preference to the latter. The result of taking the duty off Canadian barley would be that it would bring in the United States market, for malting, 15c. to 20c. over American barley, exactly the amount of duty imposed. He did not mean to assert that this had always been the case, but, at the present moment, the fact was incontrovertible. He would illustrate his argument still further. He would take the article of lumber as an illustration. Why were those engaged in that trade on both sides of the House rejoiced at the fact that Congress was about to reduce the duty on lumber? Was it because, on the duty of \$2 per million feet being abrogated, the price of lumber in the American market would fall to a corresponding extent? Were the duty removed to-day, the price would remain the same, the reason being, simply, that Canadian lumber was not so important a factor in the United States market as to affect the prices now ruling there. The proportion which Canada sent to the United States was so small, in comparison with the entire manufacture and consumption of that country, that it had no appreciable effect on the prices of lumber in the American market. It was for this reason that gentlemen engaged in the lumber business had been rejoiced to hear of the probable action of the United States Congress on this subject. He was now speaking from a practical point of view on a business with which he was practically acquainted, and respecting the correctness of which hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House could testify. It was not sought to affix duties on these products of the United States, merely for the purposes of revenue, but as a means to an end. They could never affect the policy of the people on the other side of the line until they adopted a course of this kind. He might state, for the consideration of hon. gentlemen opposite who spoke so glibly on this subject, that it was a matter of surprise to the people of the United States that the people of Canada should pursue their present course on this important question. He had, upon former occasions, explained the policy of the United States with reference to the introduction of raw material into their territory, as compared with the course of hon. gentlemen opposite in reference to the same subject. He had stated, as the hon. member for North Wentworth had said the other evening, when he read an extract from one of his speeches, that while the duty on wheat was 20c. per bushel, the duty on the manufactured article of flour was 20 per cent. ad valorem, or tantamount to a duty of 35c. per bushel. The policy of the United States Government was entirely opposed to that of the Canadian Government, and the people of the United States prospered under it. Had the people of Canada prospered under the policy pursued by the Government for the past few years was known as the "fly on the wheel policy?" The supporters of the Government met the Opposition at once by asking them why they did not, when in power, impose those duties? As the hon. member for Stanstead had clearly shown, an entirely different state of things then existed. The circumstances of the case would show that very little was imported into Canada from the United States during the war and for many years afterwards. He did not desire to go into a long discussion to-night on this question, which had been very fairly argued. The motion under consideration might be taken as a motion of want of confidence in the Government, brought forward by two of its supporters, and he hoped it would meet from hon. gentlemen opposite the same measure of support which it would receive at the hands of hon. members on this side of the House. The interest sought to be fostered in this resolution, the milling, was one of the largest in the Dominion. In it there was as much capital invested, and as much skill and intelligence required, as in any other branch of manufacture, if it could be called a branch of manufacture. It was placed in peculiar circumstances by the action of the United States, on the one hand, and by their own inaction on the other; and it was desired to remedy that state of things to some extent. There had been remarks dropped, amounting almost to inuendoes, that he was not altogether as disinterested in his advocacy of this resolution as he would, under other circumstances, have been. When the motion had been made in 1866, to impose a duty on flour, he thought it was only right that there should be one placed on wheat also. As a private member of Parliament, it was out of his power, or that of any private member, to move an amendment in that direction. In 1870, when Sir Francis Hincks brought down his policy, he desired to have a duty put on wheat in the same ratio as flour,  $4\frac{1}{2}$  bushels to a barrel of flour. It had been said by the hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Rymal) that no benefit would inure to Ontario, while the burthen would be laid on the Maritime Provinces, if the resolution proposed was carried out. There were two or three ways of viewing that proposition. He believed if a duty were imposed on wheat and flour it would enable our railways to carry all that was required for the consumption of Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, without increasing the price of those articles. Some hon. gentlemen opposite did not pretend to say that the imposition of the proposed duties would be of the slightest benefit to them. On the other hand, he maintained that our own people should have the preference in the Canadian market, which at the present time was not a very remunerative one, instead of giving the preference to foreigners, who, by the policy they pursued in imposing duties which were prohibitory, prevented our people entering their markets. For that reason, he believed, it would be in the interests of this country to impose the proposed duties on wheat and flour, without imposing burthens on the people of the Lower Provinces. In former years, when there was a differential duty, as against the people of the United States, the people sent large quantities of flour to Boston and New York, in bond, for transmission to the Lower Provinces. That was being done, to a certain extent, at the present time, and would, no doubt, be continued if the duties proposed in the motion were imposed. It had been said that the adoption of such a policy would reduce the traffic on our railways and canals; but that he denied. The people of the United States were as astute and as well able to consider the several bearings of this question on their trade, as we Canadians, and yet, there was no disposition on their part—and no evidence whatever in the proceedings at Washington—to repeal, or even reduce the duties. If it did interfere with their trade, they would be the first to pay attention to it. Our wheat and flour, to a large extent, was shipped in bond from American ports to England, and that system would continue if the proposed duties were levied. By the adoption of the arrangements suggested in the motion, instead of our becoming exporters, we would become consumers of our own products, and, instead of the people of the United States sending their wheat and flour into this country, they would be compelled to take the worst part of the trade (the export), we keeping the best for ourselves. He believed the time had arrived when we should legislate in such a direction as the interests of our people required, regardless of its effect on the United States or any other country. He believed that the time had come when the people of Canada, at the next general elections, would discuss this important question fairly and fully. The argument presented by hon. gentlemen opposite was, that the proposal contained in the motion, if carried into effect, would not benefit the country, while the Opposition maintained that no injury could be done, but beneficial results would follow the adoption of the policy which they had submitted to the House and advocated in the country. Some hon. members appeared to believe that the coarse grains of the Dominion interfered with the farmers. If they believed that, and we produced more of those than Canada required, and the surplus was exported, the arrangement would also hold good with regard to wheat. In view of the facts which he had stated, believing that the policy of the United States in the future would be what it had been in the past, and would not be changed, and believing that their policy had been injurious to the people of this country, he would support with much pleasure the resolution introduced by the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Brown), though it was only part of a policy which he believed would be adopted by the people of the Dominion whenever an opportunity was afforded them of placing gentlemen in power who would carry out their views in that regard.

MR. RYMAL.

MR. CASGRAIN said that this proposition would impose a direct tax on the grain and flour brought into this country; and, as the population residing in the greater part of Lower Canada obtained the flour which it consumed from other countries, this, as he had heard the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Rymal) state, would really be imposing a tax upon the Province of Quebec purely for the benefit of this part of the Dominion; that was to say that the Province of Ontario would obtain the advantage that would result from this policy with regard to the consumption of flour. On the part of the electoral district which he represented, he formally opposed this motion; and would be glad to see hon. gentlemen who sat near him support him by expressing the same opinion.

MR. MASSON said he was really surprised to hear the hon. gentleman find fault with the representatives of the Province of Quebec on the ground that these hon. gentlemen had not spoken one word on this subject. If the hon. gentleman had followed the debate in the slightest degree, or been present last year, he must have known what were the feelings of the Conservative party on the great question of the tariff. Last Session, he addressed the House for an hour and a-half on the tariff question, and distinctly stated that he believed the sentiment of the Conservatives of the Province of Quebec was, as he had always been, against the imposition of duties on flour. He had always expressed that opinion, and had done so last year. He had distinctly stated at that time that the tariff question must be considered as a whole, and not from a sectional point of view. He stated last year, at length, that the people of the Province of Quebec would never consent to the imposition of duties on flour, corn, and coal, unless Quebec received, by the legislation of the country, a fair and just compensation for the imposition of that duty. He was not surprised at the position taken by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain). He remembered the stand taken in the county of Drummond and Arthabaska when the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue was contesting that constituency. That hon. gentleman had there stated—and he should have known better—that he (Mr. Masson) had been in favour of imposing a tax on flour without telling the people of that county the restriction he placed upon the expression of his opinion, namely, that the tariff question must be considered as a whole, and not deal with the imposition of a tax on flour as a distinct motion. The hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue must feel rather discouraged at the expression of opinion he had heard in the House. He must have found there were in the House more Conservatives than he had supposed; that Conservatives had cropped up on all sides, on the Government as well as the Opposition side of the House; but those gentlemen, either from party spirit and other causes in their devotion to Protectionist ideas, were endeavouring to force them in a sectional spirit, and not deal with the question as a whole. They proposed and offered protection to certain industries while they left the others out in the cold. The Conservative party did not act in that manner. They had resolved upon having a Protection policy, and they had always said so. The hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Rymal) had taunted the right hon. member for Kingston for having been, in 1868, adverse to Protection. The hon. gentleman had omitted to state that in 1872, just a year before the late Government left, the right hon. member for Kingston had made a speech in which he declared that the policy of the Conservatives was to so readjust the tariff as to give to our national industries that protection which had created the industries of England and the United States. This clearly indicated that the policy of the Conservative party in 1872, at all events, was that of Protection. He would tell his hon. friends from Quebec and the other Provinces, there was only one way to obtain Protection. He would tell the hon. member for Iberville, who had given notice of a motion for Protection to certain agricultural products, and members of the National party who were in favour of Protection, that the only way to obtain it was to go in for a complete scheme; otherwise the policy advocated would never triumph, either in Parliament or in the country. If the people of Hamilton would have exactly the protection they required, and nothing else; if the people of Ontario and the representatives of the wheat-growing counties would only have a protection on wheat and agricultural products, and the representatives of Nova Scotia only accept a duty on coal, they might rest assured that a protection policy would never be adopted in this country—that broad policy, which he thought would be for the benefit of Canada, and for which he had fought sincerely, though humbly. No one could fairly accuse him of not having expressed his sentiments on that question. When he entered political life, he advocated Protection. If Her Majesty's loyal Opposition should be called upon to take charge of public affairs, and were not found ready—as they were now ready—to advocate and put into execution a protective policy, they would be unworthy of the name of the loyal Opposition, and unworthy of the confidence of the Crown and country. He said this freely, frankly and boldly, and he knew he spoke the sentiments of every Conservative in the Province of Quebec, at least. He supposed the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) knew now his views on that question. He was sorry he had been compelled to repeat them. Last Session he gave utterance to them, and they were not controverted by any of his friends; indeed, he knew they were the opinions of hon. members on the Opposition side of the House. He admired hon. members who, during the debate, had brought out new considerations and fresh points, but as he (Mr. Masson) could only reiterate what he had already said, viz: that the Province of Quebec would never accept a policy imposing duties on wheat and flour, unless it was part of a grand scheme by which the Province would receive that compensation to which she was entitled, he had not thought it worth while inflicting a second speech on the House.

MR. CASGRAIN:

MR. LAURIER said the interpellation of the hon. member for L'Islet

(Mr. Casgrain) had produced a good result, in that the House had, at last, obtained a statement of what was the true policy of the Conservative party of Quebec on that question. The hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Masson) had mentioned that he had made that statement last year. It was not within his knowledge that the hon. gentleman had ever frankly said he was in favour of a duty on wheat and flour. What he had stated was, that he was prepared to consider the possibility and advisability of placing a duty on wheat and flour, if the country went in for a grand scheme of Protection; but it was not within his knowledge that the language of the hon. member was as frank and candid as it should have been on this question. He had always guarded it and put it under restriction. The hon. gentleman had never stated, either on the floor of Parliament, or on the hustings, or at Larignien in Drummond and Arthabaska, at which the hon. member and himself were present, that he (Mr. Masson) was in favour of a duty on wheat and flour, because he knew very well that such a duty would not only be exceedingly unpopular in Quebec, but very injurious to the best interests of the Province. The hon. gentleman knew that Quebec was not a wheat-growing country. If he was not aware of that fact he should have stated boldly that he was in favour of a duty on wheat and flour, but he well knew that the Province would resist such a duty, and in order to give the policy a colour and make it acceptable to the people, he had always stated that, when the people had obtained protection to their manufactures, he would be prepared to consider the advisability of placing a duty on wheat and flour.

MR. MASSON: I say so now.

MR. LAURIER said he thought the hon. gentleman said more than that, namely, that he was prepared to go for a duty on wheat and flour—not if a duty on wheat was considered alone, but if it was considered along with other cereals.

MR. MASSON: I did not say that, I said with the general policy of Protection.

MR. LAURIER said he had mistaken the statement. He had thought that the hon. member for Terrebonne was more explicit than formerly, but he found that such was not the case. The statement was as vague as before, and Conservative gentlemen would go on the hustings and say, "When a duty on wheat and flour was proposed, we voted against it; but remember we are not in favour of opposing it, and if it should be presented as part of a general scheme of Protection, we would consider whether that duty should be a part of that system or not." He asked the House now to mark the language. The hon. gentleman would not state frankly and candidly that if such a duty was proposed as part of the whole system of Protection, he would vote for it, but merely said that if a duty on wheat and flour was presented, together with a general scheme of Protection, then he would simply consider it. That was language which had always been used by the Conservative party of the Province of Quebec, from whom they could never obtain a frank declaration as to whether they were for or against a duty on wheat or flour.

MR. MASSON: We are against it.

MR. LAURIER said that statement showed the position. He had stated last year, and repeated it now,—for it was evident to every hon. member of the House,—that if the Opposition party were to cross the floor and occupy the Treasury benches, they never would agreed on a tariff policy. There was a section of the Conservatives of Quebec, which, when called on to say whether they were in favour of a duty on wheat and flour or not, were only able to say they would consider the question. He wished to know from the hon. member for Terrebonne whether, if a whole scheme of Protection was submitted to the House, one plank of which scheme was a duty on wheat and flour, he would vote for the imposition of the duty. That was a question to which he desired a plain answer,—not such a vague one as he had just given, that he would consider the advisability of imposing such a duty. He was prepared to say that if hon. gentlemen opposite acceded to power, and were ever to desire a tariff which included the imposition of a duty on wheat and flour, they would not dare to put it on the Statute-book, because they knew that it would not be tolerated by the Province of Quebec, which was obliged to import nine-tenths of the wheat which was consumed by its people. He at first thought the hon. member for Terrebonne had stated frankly what his policy would be, but he was mistaken, for his statement this year was not more advanced than last year, and they did not yet know whether hon. gentlemen opposite were prepared to impose a duty on wheat and flour or not; but the people of the Province of Quebec would appreciate the motives of hon. gentlemen opposite, and it would be apparent to every elector that the so-called policy of Protection was simply a snare prepared to catch votes at the elections.

MR. MASSON.

MR. MASSON said that at a meeting in Drummond and Arthabaska, the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue had read from the French version of the Hansard, although he (Mr. Masson) had asked that his remarks be read from the English version, they having been delivered in that language. He did not care whether this policy would benefit Ontario or not. All he desired was to benefit all the Provinces of the Dominion. He did not wish, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) stated in his county, faire les yeux doux—to make sheep's eyes, to the people of Ontario. He had never said this at all.

MR. LANGEVIN said that the hon. member for L'Islet had, in great haste, asked the hon. members from the Province of Quebec, sitting on the Opposition side of the House, to make their views on this matter known to the House. If the hon. gentleman had followed the debates that took place on this question last year, he would have become acquainted with their policy on this subject. The hon. gentleman was ill last year, and this might be his excuse for not being able to account for what took place then in this relation; but this year the hon. gentleman must have known what passed when the right hon. member for Kingston, on the 12th of March, ult., moved his amendment to the motion that the Speaker do leave the Chair and the House go into Supply. The hon. gentleman should recollect that long debates ensued, and that some, at all events, of the hon. gentlemen, members of the Opposition from the Province of Quebec, had then expressed their views on this subject, and he should know what these views were. But the hon. gentleman now desired to make a little speech on this subject, in order to show that he was looking after the interests of the Province of Quebec, and that the Conservatives from this Province had forgotten these interests. Of course, they left it to the electors of the Province to decide this question at a future date; but, at all events, the hon. gentleman, before this discussion was concluded, would have more than one opportunity of hearing what were the views of the Conservative members from the Province of Quebec. When the amendment of the 12th of March was moved, the question was placed before the House. This motion was as follows:—

“That all the words after the word ‘that’ be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—‘it be Resolved, That this House is of opinion that the welfare of Canada requires the adoption of a National Policy, which by a judicious readjustment of the tariff will benefit and foster the agricultural, the mining, the manufacturing and other interests of the Dominion; that such a policy will retain in Canada thousands of our fellow countrymen, now obliged to expatriate themselves in search of the employment denied them at home, will restore prosperity to our struggling industries, now so sadly depressed, will prevent Canada from being made a sacrifice market, will encourage and develop an active interprovincial trade, and moving (as it ought to do) in the direction of a reciprocity of tariffs with our neighbours, so far as the varied interests of Canada may demand, will greatly tend to procure for this country eventually a reciprocity of trade.’”

The hon. gentleman should have known that this was their policy, which they had sustained with their votes. The hon. gentleman's name was found amongst those of the opponents of this motion. The hon. gentleman did not wish this policy to be carried out, or that the great industries and the great interests of the Dominion and his own

Province should be protected. No; but on that question the hon. gentleman was silent—dumb; his voice was never heard upon it; he did not then utter a word; but, when this proposition respecting wheat and flour came up, with great energy the hon. gentleman exclaimed, “I will vote against it.” In order that the interests of the Province of Quebec should be protected, the vote of the hon. gentleman was not required. The hon. gentleman would see, when the vote was taken, how the Conservatives would vote on this motion. The hon. gentleman should have waited a little longer, until the vote was taken, to see whether the Conservative members from the Province of Quebec would enunciate their views on this matter, and whether they were afraid to state how they would vote upon it. He did not want to use an unparliamentary word, but he could not characterize this motion as other than a selfish motion. When the issue was placed on a broad basis, comprehending the protection of all industries and interests of the Dominion, they found a large number of the hon. gentlemen opposite voting against it, though he must say, in justice to the hon. mover (Mr. Brown) of this motion, that this hon. gentleman supported, by his vote, the motion of the right hon. member for Kingston, but the hon. seconder (Mr. Ross) had voted against it, and against the protection of all the industries and great interests of the Dominion. The hon. gentleman did not desire to see such a policy carried out, and cared very little whether the Province of Quebec was ruined, as well as the Provinces of British Columbia and Manitoba; the hon. gentleman looked only to Ontario, and demanded a tax on wheat and flour, while the interests of the Provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island were as nothing in the scale. Let them go down; let the depression destroy them all, well and good, but let Ontario prosper. This was the apparent desire of the hon. gentleman who clamoured for a duty on wheat and flour. This was a selfish motion. He (Mr. Langevin) did not suppose that the majority of the House would support such a selfish policy. At all events, he, for one, as he had said before, and as he now openly declared before the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue, too, opposed this tax on wheat and flour, because it would be most selfish and unjust. It was not a tax that would benefit the whole Dominion. Let wheat, flour, coal, coarse grains and many other articles, be included in a general policy, and let a readjustment of the tariff take place; they would then be in a position to vote for a measure which would protect all the interests of the Dominion. But when the protection of a particular interest, only because this would favour one particular section of the Dominion, was demanded, they must reply in the negative. He could not vote for such a proposition, and he hoped that the majority of the House would not support it; but, when the protection of the whole of the interests of the Dominion was in question, he had no doubt that, though they did not find a majority to support this policy in this House, yet they would, in the next Parliament, find a majority which would vote for the protection of those interests. He would adopt the same position as he did with regard to the motion, if a proposition were made to protect the coal interest alone. He maintained that this would be unfair. Let all these articles be included in a general tariff; let the tariff be readjusted; and let them see that all the different interests of the Dominion were taken into consideration. Let them look to the interests not only of British Columbia, or Prince Edward Island, or Quebec, or New Brunswick, or Nova Scotia, or Manitoba, or Ontario, but to the broad interests of the whole Dominion. They should not be selfish, but, as statesmen, vote for the general interests of the country. They should forget that they belonged to any particular Province, and merely regard the broad interests of the whole country, and what was for the general good. They should not labour in the interests of any particular Province. He would not defend his hon. friend from Terrebonne (Mr. Masson) from the aspersions and the remarks made by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, because the hon. gentleman had defended himself, and shown by the speech which he (Mr. Masson) delivered last year in English, that he had then expressed his views, in which he (Mr. Langevin) concurred. For his part, when this speech was made, he had not risen to speak on the subject, because he would merely have repeated the same sentiments—that was to say, that they could not advocate the levying of a tax on two or three articles, unless this tax was included in a general measure of Protection with other articles, and the readjustment of the tariff. They did not know what would be done. It would be for the Government, which brought down a measure of the kind, to say whether flour, or wheat, or coal, or any other article should be taxed, and to what extent, and what guarantees and compensation should, on the other hand, be required. But they were now asked to vote for a duty on wheat and flour, without reference to the general tariff question, solely because they might benefit a certain number of people in Ontario. He did not vote for this motion, and he hoped that a majority would oppose it. The hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue and other hon. members on the Ministerial side sought, because they were on the eve of a general election, to impress the people of the Province of Quebec with the idea that the Conservatives desired to tax wheat and flour, while he (Mr. Laurier) said he did not favour such a measure. The Conservatives from this Province, however, no more desired a special tax on wheat and flour than did the hon. gentleman; and they were not so selfish as to desire the imposition of a tax that would not as well serve the interests of the other Provinces. They said: "Let us have a general measure, and not a partial measure of this kind." If the hon. gentleman were to consult one of the Liberal leaders in the Province of Quebec, the leader of the hon. gentleman's party in that Province, and the present First Minister of Quebec (Mr. Joly), he would find that this gentleman did not support the present views of this hon. gentleman. Mr. Joly, in answer to the questions put to him before the Agricultural Committee, in 1876, in respect to wheat and flour, made this comparison: "Do you not think that the farmer would prefer to pay $2 more for a barrel of flour, and have work and his occupation protected, than to see flour sold for $2 or $3 less, and have no money to pay for it?" He also asked whether the mechanic would not prefer to pay $6 a barrel for flour, and have work and money, to seeing flour offered him at $4 a barrel and have no money to pay for it? This was the position taken by Mr. Joly; and these hon. gentlemen, the Liberal members from the Province of Quebec, had tried on every hustings and at every church door in the Province, to get around this statement, and show that Mr. Joly meant something else; but they could not destroy that gentleman's words, which were before them. Mr. Joly meant exactly what he said, and this proved that he (Mr. Joly) was not opposed to a duty even on flour, provided that protection was given to the great industries of the Province of Quebec, thus giving work to the poor and to the mechanics, and, by this means, enabling them to live and support themselves. He repeated that, so far as they were concerned in the Province of Quebec, and so far as he was acquainted with the sentiments of the Province, they were in favour of a readjustment of the tariff, and of such protection to their industries and manufactures and agricultural interests—and, in one word, the great interests, not only of their Province, but also of the whole Dominion—as would cause to return the day of prosperity which the country enjoyed five or six or eight years ago, when they had a protection, which they did not now enjoy. If circumstances had changed, we must change with those circumstances. Our tariff was not like the laws of the Medes and Persians; we might change it any day for the protection of the people. The tariffs were not made for the purpose of favouring either a Protective or a Free-trade policy; it was not a question of theory, but one of practice, to see whether those tariffs would benefit the people or not. If this tariff did not benefit the people, and it ought to be changed, it was better that members should not adhere to their previous professions than that people should suffer starvation.

Mr. FARROW said he wished to say a word on this subject, representing as he did one of the richest agricultural districts in Canada. He would not have spoken, had not his hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. Greenway) made statements calculated to mislead the House. Although he (Mr. Farrow) came from the North Riding of Huron, and his hon. friend from the South, with only the Centre Riding between them, there seemed to be a great difference between the farmers, since they both advocated opposite principles on behalf of those whom they represented. He was quite willing to take the responsibility of voting for this motion, and he supposed his hon. friend would have to take the responsibility of voting the other way. He thought his hon. friend would be called to account for the way he had voted. All he (Mr. Farrow) knew about the county was this: that last year a very important body of agriculturists—the South Riding Agricultural Society (whose members he considered, were not all Tories)—came to a certain conclusion about this matter. And what was this conclusion? They unanimously passed a resolution that they wanted Protection. If hon. gentlemen doubted his statement, they would find the resolution in the Exeter Times. He was glad this motion had come from the other side of the House. It was a humiliation to those hon. members, and an answer to their oft-repeated assertion that Protection was not necessary. Its necessity was admitted by the hon. member for Oxford, the hon. member for Wentworth, and other members who had spoken. What did the hon. seconder of the motion say? He told the Government directly to their faces that, if they consented to this proposition, it would be well for them at the next elections. That seemed to imply something like a threat, and amounted to saying: "Gentlemen, if you go in the face of this motion, it will go ill with you." Notwithstanding all the braggadocia which had been indulged in by the other side as to the result in the coming struggle, it would require something more to keep up their courage. His hon. friend from South Huron made the assertion that, to protect a certain manufacture, was to increase the price. He thought his friend had got beyond the A B C of the question, but it appeared he was still in ignorance. He (Mr. Farrow) thought the conclusion come to by everyone was, that by protecting an industry, the price was not necessarily increased. In order to make this perfectly plain and clear to the House, he would read a few statistics. All were agreed that the United States was a protected country—probably the most protected country which could be pointed to. What did his hon. friend from South Huron say to that? Did that support the argument that Protection increased the price on articles? He wished to draw attention specially to one point. At the Centennial Exhibition, as all were aware, all countries were represented; and what did the English papers say about the exhibits there? That what they were told daily about the price of articles being raised by Protection was simply claptrap; it was mere buncombe and was only calculated to deceive the simple. But he could tell hon. gentlemen opposite that farmers had their eyes open to this question. This was one of the reasons why his hon. friend the member for Kingston drew such large audiences, last year, throughout the country. Hon. gentlemen might sneer at these gatherings of from 12,000 to 13,000, but he liked to see these large political assemblages. He was not going to speak of the next election. This he would say, however, that he did not fear it, and if the hon. the Premier was not afraid, let him bring on the elections as soon as he could. If the hon. gentleman was not afraid, why did he not, like English statesmen under the same circumstances, urge on the election? He was not, however, made of such stuff. If he had not been cowardly, he would have done so long ago. His friend from South Huron thought he had got hold of something that would damage the Conservatives not a little, but he (Mr. Farrow) thought when it was read throughout the country, it would rather damage himself and his party. He thought he had got hold of something when he spoke of the Protection in regard to coal oil. If there was any credit due for reducing the duty on coal oil, it could not be claimed by hon. gentlemen opposite, because it was not till the Finance Minister was forced to confess that his policy, in this respect, was a bungling one, that the duty was reduced. They had actually to beg of the Government to do away with the duty; so hon. gentlemen opposite could not take credit to themselves for having done anything in this respect. The duty on coal oil, worth 10c. a gallon, was 6c. If farmers and manufacturers got such protection, they would be satisfied. What was required at the present time was a readjustment of the tariff. He would ask, could hon. gentlemen consistently call themselves Free-traders when they imposed a duty of 60 per cent? Why not make a protective duty for salt? The hon. the Premier almost gave a promise that he would, this Session, look after that interest, but he had failed to make good his promise. His hon. friend from South Huron had said that if Protection meant anything, it meant to make a poor man pay more for his bread. Now, if that was the intention of the motion, he (Mr. Farrow) would vote against it. In certain works in Ottawa he found that men could be got to work for 60c. a day, in consequence of employment being scarce, but at the establishment in question they were paid a trifle more. The present Government were against the poor men of this country; from the Premier down to the humblest member, they were thoroughly against the poor man. A few days ago a deputation waited upon the Premier, and representing to him that a large number of working people were unable to obtain employment, begged him, for the sake of their wives and children, that he would send them to Manitoba. Did the hon. gentleman stir a finger to help them in their trouble? No; and yet, look at the thousands and thousands that were brought over from England, and Ireland, and Scotland, by means of the Government emigration agents. He was sorry hon. gentlemen opposite laughed at the calamities that had fallen on hard working men. It was a most important subject; but let the country view the levity with which hon. gentlemen treated it, and they would laugh on the other side of the House very shortly. There was another point to which he would allude, in reply to a statement that had been made by the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Greenway), if he would not be out of order in referring to a matter that had transpired at a meeting of the Immigration Committee.

MR. FARROW.

Several HON. MEMBERS: Order.

MR. SPEAKER said he listened very carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for South Huron, but he did not observe that he made any allusion to the Committee referred to. He spoke of an hon. gentleman having made certain statements, and the hon. member would be in order in replying.

MR. FARROW said the hon. member for South Huron had referred to a statement made by Mr. McShane, of Montreal, a large cattle dealer, to the effect that we could not obtain fat cattle in this country without American corn. What Mr. McShane did say was, that we could not raise cattle in this country equal to the cattle raised in the South-Western States, where they were raised on those rich grazing lands. He said that the cattle fed upon this rich grass, were the best meat he could get to send to England; he did not refer to American corn. Now, a great deal had been said about who paid the duty. He had always been of opinion that we had to pay the duties on those articles we did not raise ourselves. He had a communication from an intelligent farmer at Lambton, which showed that when the farmer in Canada sold his corn or his cattle to the United States, he had to pay the duty. True, it was a remarkably good thing for the States. These thousands of dollars paid as duty on our articles, and which went chinking into their pockets, meant so much less taxes for them to pay, and so much out of the pockets of the people of this country. Of course, the United States would be satisfied with this state of things, but they on that side of the House were not satisfied; they were determined to wage war against this policy, and he believed that the whole agriculturists of the country would support them. Supposing a duty was placed upon the eggs sent from this country to the States; instead of 10c. a dozen, the farmer would only get nine or probably eight cents, and the same with other articles. Everything was purchased subject to a calculation of the duties. Now, what was the composition of this House? How many lawyers had we now here? We had 55 lawyers, 56 merchants, so many lumbermen, so many engineers, and so many gentlemen. There were only 15 farmers. The lawyers were far too strong in the House. As a proof of this, he would refer to the discussion of the Stamp Bill, a very small measure; but they had the Minister of Inland Revenue arguing that the Bill meant one thing, and an hon. gentleman, who was the best lawyer in Toronto, arguing that it meant another, and so it had been issued in such a crude state.

MR. DYMOND: Question.

MR. FARROW said the hon. member for North York was very sensitive, but he (Mr. Farrow) wished to say that they had two legal gentlemen arguing one against the another upon the meaning of the Bill.

MR. DYMOND said he rose to a point of order. The question before the House was in respect to a duty upon wheat.

MR. SPEAKER: As long as the hon. gentleman was speaking with reference to the general question of Protection, he was in order; but he was entirely wrong when he began to discuss the merits of the Stamp Act Amendment Bill.

MR. FARROW said, that being the case, he would make no further remarks upon that point. What he wished to draw attention to was, that every class was adequately represented in this House with the exception of the poor farmer, and every other class had Protection extended to its industry. No class had so much toil or so much needed Protection for its industries, and he should be glad to support any measure for providing it with the Protection it so well deserved.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

MR. GOUDGE said the motion introduced by the hon. member for West Hastings had demonstrated how difficult of application was this question of Protection versus Free-trade, when brought down to details. This question had been raised in the interests of farmers, but he was prepared to prove it was not in the interests of all the farmers, or, even a majority of them; and any measure calculated to benefit the farmers of the Dominion should embrace the entire number. He was happy to find, during the course of this discussion, that those who, it might be thought, would have been most benefitted by the duty proposed, had shown to the House very conclusively that they did not anticipate any benefit from it; on the contrary, they saw that it would be detrimental to their interests. The farmers of Ontario, he was happy to say, did not look at this question from a sectional point of view. They understood that it was a cry raised by interested parties for the purpose of deluding and misleading them into a belief that they would be benefitted by protective duty on their products, while the ultimate object aimed at was an increased tariff on the wares which these parties had to sell. He was naturally inclined to look at this question from a Lower Province standpoint, and how it would affect the people generally. Whether he considered the interests of their farmers, their fishermen, their shipping, their lumbermen, their miners, or their labourers, or the interests of any class in the Lower Provinces, he did not see any benefit to be derived by them from this motion. According to the census of 1871, the number of farmers in this Dominion was, at that time, 475,212. Of this number, Ontario contributed 228,708; Quebec, 160,641; New Brunswick, 40,349; Nova Scotia, 49,766; or, in the aggregate, 250,759 contributed by the Provinces outside of Ontario. Leaving aside the other classes of the community, he thought he would be able to prove that the farmers of these latter Provinces would not benefit by this tax on flour, according to the products which they raised. On referring to the Trade and Navigation

MR. FARROW.

Returns, he found that oats and potatoes were the two principal articles, in fact almost the only articles, exported by the farmers of the Provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. During the last year, Nova Scotia exported to the United States, 740,406 bushels of potatoes; Prince Edward Island, 1,155,191 bushels; New Brunswick, 201,268 bushels; Quebec, 654,575, and Ontario 138,456 bushels—amounting in the aggregate to 2,890,596 bushels, value, $1,297,567. The United States was the only market available for this product, and exporters, were, therefore, obliged to use this market, although suffering under the disadvantage of having to meet a duty of 15c. per bushel. It followed thence, necessarily, that their exporters should be allowed to purchase in that market what flour and wheat they required in exchange for their produce at as low a rate as possible, and not be subject to a duty upon return. As regarded oats, Prince Edward Island exported 1,718,707 bushels, value, $760,465; Quebec, 1,205,298 bushels, value $465,616. The total value of potatoes and oats exported from Quebec to the Lower Province amounted to the considerable sum of two and a half million dollars; the principal part of which went to the United States. When it was remembered that these were the principal items of export of these Provinces, and that the United States was the chief market to which they were exported, this House and the country would admit that the objection of these Provinces to a duty being put on flour, thereby increasing its price, was entitled to some consideration. Nova Scotia imported from the United States about 120,000 barrels of flour, which averaged one-fourth of the entire quantity consumed in that Province. In view of this fact, he thought the House would hesitate before passing the measure proposed by the hon. member for West Hastings. The Province of New Brunswick, which was in more immediate proximity to the United States than Nova Scotia, purchased from the Americans only about 60,000 barrels of flour; they had greater facilities for getting their flour from Canada, and did less trade with the United States than the people of Nova Scotia. In the county of Hants, which he had the honour to represent, they shipped large quantities of plaster to the American market, and their vessels, returning, for cargo brought flour as the market required. It was the principal return freight, they carried it at a very low rate; and, if a duty were placed on this article, their vessels would, in almost every case, have to return in ballast. Among the exports of Nova Scotia were also some 22,000 cords of wood, which were freighted in a class of vessels solely engaged in this trade. To compel these vessels to return home empty, and to compel the people to purchase their flour in Halifax at a higher price than they could bring it home in their own vessels from the States, would be very detrimental to their interests. When they entered Confederation, one of the arguments used by those opposed to it was that the duties would be very largely increased, and the Lower Provinces had been brought into Confederation very much against their will. When the matter was brought before the people at the polls, there was but one member returned from Nova Scotia who advocated it, and though they had remained in Confederation, it was very much against their wishes. They saw no benefit to be derived, commercially, from the connection, and though, nevertheless, they had loyally assisted in bearing their share of the burthens of this Dominion, they certainly objected to the duties being increased, and, particularly, when they were to benefit only a section. The duties at the period when Confederation was formed, were ten per cent.; afterwards these duties were increased to fifteen per cent. At the inception of Confederation, they had been assured the duties would not be increased; yet, a decade had hardly passed, ere they saw efforts made, he regretted to say, supported by those who were the leading spirits in framing Confederation, and who had pledged their faith that the taxes would not be increased, to increase the burthens which the people of the Lower Provinces had been called upon to bear. To show that the Lower Provinces bore their share of taxation, and more particularly the Province of Nova Scotia, he would state that their imports, when they entered Confederation, were upwards of $11,000,000. To-day, according to the trade and navigation returns, they were under $9,000,000. Was it in the nature of things that they consumed less goods than in 1867? He was glad to know the contrary. In the matter of shipping, their business had increased; the exact figures he was unable, at that moment, to give, but he knew that since 1867 it had increased by rapid strides, and to-day they owned a fleet of ships from that Province which had very much increased in tonnage and value. He was aware, also, that in other respects, in the matter of fisheries and general business, the Province of Nova Scotia had not fallen behind—and if any progress had been made by this Dominion, it had, as a whole, also been shared in by that Province which he had the honour to represent. If, to-day, they had been outside this Confederacy, their imports, instead of being nine millions, would have amounted to thirteen or fifteen millions. The goods which represented the difference in value, must have been bought by their people from the Upper Provinces. Those goods, he believed, were bought in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and the people of the Maritime Provinces had, therefore, become customers to the Upper Provinces to that extent, and would have to bear the burthen of the increase of taxation from 10 to 17½ per cent., which would be a very material contribution to the revenue of the Dominion, and also to the markets of the people of the Upper Provinces. In whatever aspect the question was viewed, the people of the Lower Provinces, and certainly those of Nova Scotia, had contributed their quota to the public revenue for defraying expenses of Government and for carrying forward the public works. If the fishermen and other classes should be called upon to pay a duty on flour, they would be twice contributing. The products the people of the Lower Provinces had to send to the United States were those upon which they had to pay duty; on oats, 10 per cent.; on potatoes, 15 per cent.; and if they were obliged to bring home their vessels empty, and purchase their flour from the Upper Provinces, and pay 50c. per barrel on it, it would very materially injure their people without being a benefit to Ontario. The hon. member for North Ontario had stated that it was immaterial whether the duty was 10c. or 50c. per barrel; that the difference between the price of flour of the United States and Canada was such that a duty of 10c. per barrel would prevent American flour coming into this country; and it was immaterial what duty was levied, because the consumer would not have to pay the difference. That was an argument he (Mr. Goudge) could not understand. He observed from the Trade Returns of 1876-7, that there was a difference of 276,000 barrels between the imports and exports of flour; the imports being 549,065, and the exports 276,439 barrels, showing there was a lack to that extent of flour to supply the wants of their people. If a duty of 10 per cent. had been placed upon flour coming from the United States, he failed to see their people would not have to pay it. It certainly would be added to the price of the article to the extent of the duty paid. If the supply of the Dominion was short, they must obtain a supply from the United States, and, if a duty were imposed, the cost of the article would be increased and the people would pay it. If, on the contrary, they had a surplus of flour and were sending it to Great Britain, which was the standard market of values, and regulated the price of flour on this continent, and 50c. per barrel duty was imposed on American flour, while it might not make any difference to the people of Ontario, it would materially affect the people of the Lower Provinces, who were often obliged, from their trade relations, to get to the United States to purchase flour. It was really more to the interests of some of our people to pay 50c. per bushel additional for flour at United States ports, and to bring it home in their vessels than to go to Halifax and elsewhere to purchase Canadian flour. The hon. member for North Ontario had always maintained it was desirable that Canada should be a market for Canadian flour, and that people should be compelled to use only that article. On examining the Trade and Navigation Returns, and referring to the wheat imported from the United States and to that exported by Canada to the United Kingdom, he found that the wheat imported was valued at $1.05½ per bushel, while that exported was placed at $1.15½, showing that our wheat was more valuable and commanded higher prices in the English market; and if our people were desirous of using American flour, and content to purchase American wheat, which could be obtained at lower prices, he could not understand why any duty should be imposed upon it, and why our people should be prohibited from conducting a profitable trade, to say nothing of the employment afforded to shipping and labour. The average value of flour exported from Canada was placed at $5.50 per barrel, while that imported from the United States was worth only $5.38, showing a difference of 12c. per barrel, and to that extent we were benefitted. The object, no doubt, of the proposal to tax flour, and of the efforts which had been put forth to lead the farmers to believe that an impost on American wheat and flour would be a benefit to them, was to enable those parties who were interested in manufactures to increase the prices to a corresponding extent. It had been shown conclusively that the farmers would not, to any degree, be benefitted by the adoption of the imposition of a duty on flour, as was proposed by the motion before the House. It would be used as an argument by those who were asking increased Protection for their wares, and, no doubt, would have the effect of very largely increasing their prices and profits. The question of manufactures in this country was a very important one, and was viewed in different lights; some advocating a policy of Protection and others a policy in a different direction. His own view was, that our manufactures could only be successful in proportion as the goods were cheaply made. If we expected to be successful in manufacturing, we must look outside the Dominion for a market; and if we entered the markets of the world and competed with the manufacturers of Great Britain and the United States, we could only hope to be successful by making our goods at low prices. At present he believed our manufactures were overdone, that the depression under which we were still suffering was the result of over-production, and that our manufactories were to-day more than sufficient to furnish goods to supply our own market. It was apparent that our manufacturers could only be successful by producing goods at a cheap rate, and they should only do that by enabling operatives and others to live cheaply, and admitting raw material at a nominal rate of duty. He, therefore, opposed the motion, first, because it was sectional, because, even in the interests of the class which it was supposed to benefit, it would only reach a portion of them, not even one-half; and, second, because it would not assist the farmers in any degree. While that had been shown, it had been also clearly demonstrated that the adoption of such a policy would injure every other interest in the Dominion, and particularly the fishermen and those engaged in a seafaring life in the Province of Nova Scotia. He, therefore, intended to record his vote against the motion, and he sincerely trusted the good sense of the House would vote it down.

MR. GOUDGE.

Mr. POPE (Queen's, P.E.I.) said it was desirable the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Goudge) should be a little more accurate in the statistics which he submitted. If the hon. member would refer to the Trade Returns, he would find that the quantity of oats shipped from Prince Edward Island to the United States represented a value of $47,000, instead of $1,500,000 stated by him. It would be supposed from the arguments of hon. members on the Ministerial side of the House, that the present motion emanated from the Opposition, whereas it came from the supporters of the present Free-trade Government. Two or three days valuable time had been occupied in debating a motion which it was scarcely worth discussing, for it would scarcely receive the support of twenty-five members. The representatives of farming constituencies in Ontario would deem it to be their interests to vote for it, for it embraced what they wanted; but there was scarcely a member from any of the Maritime Provinces or from Quebec who would support it, and, therefore, its discussion was wasting the time of the House uselessly, and the Government should not have allowed the discussion to go on day after day. He had been called to account by the hon. member for King's, P.E.I., (Mr. Davies) in regard to the vote he gave on the amendment proposed by the right hon. member for Kingston, on the ground that it was not consistent with his vote last year. He maintained he was consistent in the course pursued by him last year. He opposed the proposal of the hon. the Finance Minister to impose certain additional duties, and the resolution submitted by the Opposition, which he supported, was not a Protection resolution beyond that it declared that the country was prepared to adopt a general policy with a view to obtaining reciprocity with the United States. They were all in favour of Free trade, but what they wanted was reciprocal Free-trade. The Maritime Provinces of the Dominion were prepared to adopt any course which would lead to reciprocity with the United States. The American people fully understood their own interests, and so long as they were allowed to send in freely their produce and manufactures, they had almost all the advantages we could give them. He was not satisfied that even if this country were to adopt a retaliatory policy, so far as it was in our power to do so, it would be sufficient to lead the United States to grant us reciprocity, but at all events it was the only possible means we had of obtaining it. He further would say that, although they might not obtain it now with what they had to offer, still, when the Washington Treaty lapsed, he had no doubt that the people of the United States would reciprocate with us, and, in the meantime, he supposed, the five and a-half millions would be paid; and they might have to adopt a policy with the view of making the American people feel it was to their interest to reciprocate with us. He hoped that the five and a-half millions would be paid, and that the Maritime Provinces would receive a fair share of it as partial compensation for what they might have to pay to secure reciprocity. He was not a Protectionist. He was a Free-trader, but he wanted to obtain reciprocal Free-trade, which would more promote the interests of the people of Prince Edward Island, than anything else that possibly could be done. He stated last year that he opposed the imposition of additional duties because the Free-trade policy of this Government, as it seemed to him, appeared to lie in the direction of levying objectionable duties from year to year, and of increasing the tariff. Call it Protection, or Free-trade, or what they chose, he believed there was no necessity, with proper economy and management, for increasing the duties at all. The present revenue was sufficient, and they should so govern the expenditure as to keep it properly within our income. The duties that had been put on were very objectionable. Supporters of the Government now proposed a duty on wheat and flour. Why was this done? Did the Government think it was going to make political capital out of this proposition, with regard to its opponents in the House. If it did, he thought that it would be vastly mistaken. The conduct of the Government in this respect was as consistent as its conduct in other matters. While the Government introduced a Bill with the view of prohibiting the use of intoxicating liquors throughout the country, as far as it was in its power to do, it was allowing corn to come in free from the United States to be used especially for the manufacture of spirits. Again, in answer to a question the other day, the leader of the Government, or the hon. the Minister of Finance had announced that the Government had authorized the Wine Growers' Association to manufacture 80,000 gallons of brandy provided they also manufactured 240,000 gallons of wine, which was to be free of Excise duty, thus encouraging the manufacture of alcohol, for it was nothing else, to poison and perhaps to demoralize the people to a very great extent, and to confer protection on this association. Was this Free-trade? If it was, he was no supporter of it, and he could only repeat that he believed the action of the Government in this particular was thoroughly inconsistent. While calling themselves Free-traders, the members of the Government were creating monopolies to make alcohol, and this association was not allowed to make brandy unless it manufactured three times the quantity of wine. He thought that this quantity of brandy would be necessary for use, after the drinking of this quantity of wine, in order to equalize the results. This discussion, in his opinion, had been altogether unnecessary and uncalled for. The whole subject had been fully discussed. This motion had been brought forward by Government supporters, and simply, he supposed, to ascertain the feeling and sense of the House regarding it, in the hope that it might injure some members of the Opposition. They wanted no duty such as that proposed. This would be the most objectionable duty, so far as they were concerned, that could be imposed. The people of Prince Edward Island were not prepared to accept a duty on these articles, but they were prepared to adopt a general system with a view of bringing about a reciprocity treaty, and this could never be secured unless they made the Americans feel that it would be their interest to so reciprocate. It would then be secured and not before.

MR. GOUDGE said he had stated in his remarks that Prince Edward Island had exported 1,55,191 bushels of potatoes. By reference to the trade returns, he found that these figures were perfectly correct. He also had said that this Island exported 1,718,707 bushels of oats. If he had said that these oats were exported to the United States, such was not his intention. They included the entire export to Great Britain, Newfoundland, the United States and other places. He had only intended to say, with reference to exports to the United States, that 155,191 bushels of potatoes were shipped there; and this statement was borne out by the facts.

MR. POULIOT said that, in view of the discussion which had taken place upon the motion submitted to the House, as well as upon all the other questions which had been brought before the House, he saw that each hon. member sought to look after his own interests. He found no fault with this disposition, and he did not blame hon. gentlemen for doing so; but as he also had constituents, who counted on him to protect them and work in their interests, hon members would not be offended, he hoped, if he spoke and voted in the sense he proposed, after what he had seen. Several of the hon. gentlemen opposite who had participated in the debate were, he believed, in the same position as himself; that was to say, that, if this motion were carried, it would serve their personal interests, as it would serve his own, as well as those of a small number of his constituents, for he followed farming a little, and he could, with a few of his constituents and of the farmers of the Province of Quebec,—above all during the present year, when Providence had avoured them so particularly—with the surplus of wheat that they had, assist those who had none, viz., their neighbours in the Maritime Provinces. But, if this were in the interests of himself and of a small number of his constituents, it would certainly be contrary to the interests of the greater number even of the farmers in his Province, who were obliged to buy their wheat and flour, for this motion would impose upon them a tax; consequently, he could not support it. But, if the motion of his hon friend from Iberville (Mr. Béchard) was proposed, he would assuredly support it; for, although the greater number of the inhabitants of Quebec, even including the farmers, bought their wheat and flour, they always had a considerable surplus of oats and rye, which they could not dispose of at such reasonable rates as would enable them to pay the cost of cultivation, and this was due to the importation of Indian corn, which was obtainable at such a low price that the merchants in the Dominion purchased a great deal of it. This fact, combined with the unfortunate system of credit, which was so extensive and ruinous to the Province of Quebec, where corn was sold to any one who wanted it, although often at a dearer rate than was necessary to obtain the rye and the oats which the farmers raised, caused the latter to be thus left with their produce on their hands, and they either could not sell it or else they were obliged to sell it to these same dealers for a nominal price. The hon. member for Centre Wellington, who, he believed, was chosen among the hon. members opposite to conduct the battle and fire the big guns, had included this matter in the famous National Policy, this old and superannuated ragout of the hon. member for Kingston. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Orton) was a doctor, he should know that the best ragouts were always very indigestible; and hence, how could the hon. gentleman hope that the old sour ragout which he offered the House could be accepted; and, from what he could see, there were even many of the hon. gentleman's friends who did not even taste it. As for himself, he could not accept the motion then before the House, and, consequently, he would vote against it.

MR. ROCHESTER said that it had not been his intention to say anything on this subject this Session, as he had spoken a great deal respecting it last Session; but, as the debate on the motion before the House had taken a very wide range, and as hon. gentlemen on both sides had entered into the question very fully, he would not be discharging his duties properly to his constituents if he did not say a few words upon it, having the honour to represent one of the best farming constituencies in Canada. The hon. the mover of the motion ought to have gone a little further, and included coarse grains with wheat and flour; but half a loaf was better than no bread, and, consequently, he had decided to support the motion, because he thought that it was a move in the right direction. Hon. gentlemen opposite appeared to have taken a great deal of trouble and spared no pains in getting up all the statistics possible to prove that their course was right and that the course of the Opposition was wrong. He did not think that members of the Opposition had taken so much trouble in this respect. For his part, he had not looked up any statistics in this regard, and, as the matter had been so thoroughly discussed, he merely intended to refer to one or two matters that he thought had been overlooked. The hon. member for South Wentworth had stated that he could purchase American corn in Hamilton at 50c. a bushel, and that if a duty of 5c. a bushel were levied, this would raise the price of corn in this country to 55c. a bushel. This was the strangest theory he had ever heard advanced—that if they flooded a country with any material, this would increase the price. He did not think that any commercial man in the House or country would endorse any such statement. The hon. gentleman said that the farmers in the West could make a profitable operation by selling their barley and buying Indian corn, as they could sell the former for more than the latter would cost; while the corn was a great deal better than barley for cattle-feeding purposes. He was not prepared to contradict this statement. He would not say that corn was not better for such food than barley, but, was it not absurd to pretend that because a few farmers in Western Ontario could be so accommodated, the balance of the Dominion should suffer for that accommodation? American corn should be admitted free of duty, while 15c. a bushel was charged on all the barley which we sent across the line? Was the whole country to suffer for the benefit of a few farmers? He thought that his hon. friend was certainly very far astray in making use of an argument of this kind. He believed that corn was a great article of exchange between the United States and Canada; this must be the case, from the simple fact, as the hon. member for North Wentworth had stated, if he remembered aright, that we exported about 6,000,000 pounds of malt. He was not prepared to say that these figures were correct, but the quantity mentioned appeared to him to be large. If this were so, it only showed that a good deal of malt and barley was exported from Canada. Here came in another question regarding the point: whether the consumers paid the duty or not? He believed that in some instances they did, while, on the other hand, in other cases, the producers paid the duty. This matter was illustrated by the right hon. member for Kingston, with reference to two farms situated side by side. He thought that no one could contradict this. There was no way he knew of to make a farmer or any other person, whether manufacturer, mechanic, or whatever he might be, understand a question better than by touching his pocket; and no man could take 85c. for a dollar but he would know the difference. If he was not mistaken, the duty on barley exported from the United States was 15c. a bushel. The hon. the Finance Minister brought in a Bill to change the duty on malt from 2½c. to 2c. per pound, and that the duty should be collected by the Inland Revenue instead of the Customs Department. Every year we were importing into Canada from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000 worth of Indian corn, and for what purpose? Simply to make Canada the consumer of the United States productions. While we sent barley and malt out of Canada, on which the Americans charged a duty, we are actually importing Indian corn from the United States free of duty, to take the place of the barley our farmers grow. The Americans charged 15c. a bushel on barley sent across the lines. It would be seen, therefore, that the consumption of barley in the Dominion did not affect the price; the price was fixed on the other side of the lines. If matters stood in the same position as they did from ten to twenty years ago, when our distillers were supplied with coarse grain grown in our own country, we would save between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 every year. Last Session, several hon. gentlemen expressed themselves as being favourable to Protection, but the hon. member for Grenville, if he was not mistaken, said it was wrong that a duty on corn should be levied, from the fact that, by putting a duty on corn, the starch manufacturer in his constituency might be affected by that duty, and hence the policy proposed contradicted itself. He (Mr. Rochester) was of opinion that a fair duty should be put on Indian corn, as it takes the place of the coarse grains raised in this country, thereby robbing our agriculturists of their home market, and necessitating the exportation of our grains to foreign countries. And this was plainly shown by the fact that there was only one bushel of rye grown in the Dominion of Canada where there were a thousand fifteen years ago, for the simple reason that farmers could never get any market for it in this country. He predicted that a few years ago, when there were about 77 distillers in the country. The hon. member for Grenville stated that he had written to certain gentlemen who carried on that business, and had received replies from one at Prescott and another at Toronto, saying that they could not make anything if a duty was placed on corn. If such was the case, it was certainly very strange that they should become so wealthy. The hon. gentleman said: "It is true they feed a great many cattle, and make money out of them." He (Mr. Rochester) considered that it was out of the business of a distiller to feed cattle from the produce of his distillery. A large portion of this country was suitable for the production of coarse grains, rather than wheat; in fact, from the one end of Ontario to the other, our granaries were full of coarse grain. When it was very wrongly, as he thought, proposed last year, to put an additional duty of 36c. per bushel on barley, he pointed out that it would greatly injure the brewers and farmers of this country. What he had predicted was fulfilled, for many brewers had done nothing since. The Government robbed the brewers of 36c. on every bushel of barley they used, and the brewers robbed the farmers out of the same amount. This was very evident from the fact that the highest price obtained for barley, during the present year, was 50c., while, as everyone knew, it used to bring from 80c. to $1.05 or $1.10. The decrease in the consumption of ales, and the increase in the consumption of whiskey, amounted to something like $150,000 in one year. Now, that could not be beneficial to the country. In the United States a different condition of things existed; there was nearly 100 per cent. difference between the amount paid for protection by the American and the Canadian brewer.

MR. ROCHESTER.

MR. MILLS: Might I ask the hon. gentleman what he would consider a fair tax on corn?

MR. ROCHESTER: If he were a Minister, he would be able to say. It was my business to point out where they were wrong; that was quite enough. He did not think there was a country in the world where the duty on beer was so high as in the Dominion of Canada. In England, if he was correctly informed, the duty was something like 60c. or 61c. a bushel of 40lb.; in Germany it was 29c. or 30c.; in Scotland 53c., and in Ireland 50c. He spoke merely from memory, but he believed he was not mistaken as to figures. One great difference between the system in the United States and that followed here, was this: when a brewer in the United States made a certain quantity of beer, he put it in his vaults till he required to sell it; and when he sent it out he put a Government stamp upon it. Now, in Canada the case was very different; for just so soon as a kiln of malt was made, the duty had to be paid forthwith. Again, the difference in favour of the American brewer over the Canadian was this: he might have 1,000 or 2,000 gallons of sour beer in vaults, on which he would pay no duty, while the Canadian brewer would have previously paid the duty on the malt, before its manufacture into beer. This showed the disadvantages under which the Canadian brewer labours, for he not only loses all the sour beer he may happen to have on hand, but the duty as well. Now, as everyone was aware, the changing seasons in this country was apt to spoil beer or ale, and by paying the duty on malt liquors thus destroyed, a brewer was likely to suffer great loss. He did not intend to say much more on the subject. He admitted that his remarks had taken a rather wide range as far as flour and wheat were concerned, and he would not have trespassed so much on the time of the House had he not noticed that from the commencement of this debate, a carte blanche was given to every member to take whatever line suited him. What he had just referred to was, he believed, a matter of vital importance to the whole country—more especially to the farming community, because they had been robbed by the course the Government had pursued with regard to the Inland Revenue taxes. He strongly urged, last Session, that the increased taxation should not be imposed, and he might inform the Finance Minister that it would be found from the returns that the revenue received under the tariff of 72c. a bushel did not exceed what had been obtained when the rate was only 36c. He had not seen the returns for the last six months; he based his remarks on the returns of the previous six months. Surely no candid man could say that that change was a beneficial one. He had himself bought hundreds of bushels of barley to feed his horses at from 42c. to 43c. a bushel. He represented an agricultural district, and felt he should be wanting in the discharge of his duty towards his constituents if he did not express their views upon this matter. In the first place, he might say that the large quantity of Indian corn brought into competition with the products of Canada was simply robbing the farmer of a home market for what he had to dispose of, and those mammoth distilleries were kept up by bringing in this Indian corn free of duty. If the hon. the Finance Minister had only been advised, and when levying an additional 36c. on malt, had placed 5c. or 10c. per bushel on corn, he would have been doing something like justice to the agriculturists of our country. But the hon. gentleman could not see this. He (Mr. Rochester) did not believe that this 72c. per bushel on malt had produced more revenue than when the duty stood at 36c.; at any rate, he had not received the amount of money he intended to realize by the imposition of this extra duty. Canada had supplied all her own wants until this American corn was brought in, and it was very hard indeed that hon. gentlemen would try to make people believe it was actually necessary that Canada should pay the duty on her exports, while anything that was brought into the country should pay no duty. If the Americans had a duty on corn, oats, cattle, horses, and everything of that kind, and found it good for the United States, certainly it should be good for Canada. He could not see how the difference arose. He had been told by, perhaps, one of the most prominent men in the city of New York that, so long as Canada continued to follow the course she did, so long would the United States keep up her duties; but so soon as Canada changed her policy and assimilated it to that of the United States, would the American tariff be changed. The hon. member for North Oxford seemed afraid that by altering our tariff we might offend our neighbours. He was not one of those who thought we were living under the protection of the people or Government at Washington. He thought we were able to protect ourselves, and that we should also try to protect the manufacturers and agriculturists of this country. The hon. gentlemen opposite had spent any amount of trouble and time in their endeavours to get all the statistics they possibly could to bolster up their miserable platform, and in order to prove that the farming interests of this country needed no protection; but hon. gentlemen would find, at the next election, that farmers thoroughly understood their tactics and knew what was best for their own interests as well as other classes.

MR. ROCHESTER.

MR. SINCLAIR said the motion before the House was of such an important character that he could not let it pass without making a few remarks upon it. If he understood it aright the national policy brought down by the leader of the Opposition (Sir John A. Macdonald) was that a retaliatory duty should be levied on all articles from the United States for hastening a reciprocity of trade. If such was the case, the two articles before them, wheat and flour, would have to be taxed 20c. per bushel on wheat and from $1 to $1.20 per barrel on flour, if this policy was attempted. He believed that he could show it would be the most injurious policy that could be carried out for the Eastern Provinces, and also that even Ontario would not be benefited by it. Let them look at last year's returns. Last year we had over three million dollars' worth of breadstuffs imported more than we exported, and the greater amount of that was for the Maritime Provinces. If we had had that policy at the time, and had a duty of 20c. on wheat and from a $1 to $1.20 per barrel on flour, that would certainly be against the Eastern Provinces, and what benefit would it be to Ontario? Ontario had not the flour or wheat to supply them, and consequently, could reap no benefit from it. The Opposition said they supported the resolution because they wished to get a retaliatory policy, in order to bringing the United States to her bearings, when they would impose a discriminating duty. He believed that a discriminating duty against the United States would not be granted. If a retaliatory policy was attempted, it must be a general one against all countries alike. The result would be that all manufactured articles imported would be subject to an enormous duty, ranging from 33 to 50 per cent., and this would make Canada a hard country to live in.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The hon. gentleman never heard me agree to that.

MR. SINCLAIR said it was mentioned in the discussion upon the subject, and was not dissented from. They were to have 20c. levied on wheat, and everything else in proportion. This was what they called a national policy, but what he considered the most destructive and injurious policy a new country could engage in, making the necessaries of life dear to the working classes; and, consequently, he would vote against it.

MR. McCRAVEY said if it were shown that the proposed duty on wheat and flour would at all benefit the farmer, he would vote for the motion, but he did not think that it had been shown. He was opposed to any further protection than that afforded by a revenue tariff; but he was not a Free-trader. He was in favour of such incidental Protection as would provide a sufficient revenue, and, at the same time, moderately foster the various industries of the country, which Protection we had now; and he believed it was the best system this country could adopt. He contended that the controversy was not between Free-trade and Protection, but between a revenue tariff and prohibition, which, carried to its legitimate results, meant direct taxation. Situated as we were, commercially, it was not possible to carry out Free-trade in this country. Many were misled by this word Protection; it was a misnomer applied to the tariff in this sense. It meant increased taxation, the luxury of paying $120 for every $100 worth of goods coming into this country. By the present tariff, 17½ per cent., and 2½ per cent. freight and commission, say, ten per cent. profit for the wholesale man, and 20 per cent., probably, for the retail man, made about 50 per cent. for the consumer to pay. Surely this ought to satisfy the most rabid Protectionist, and it became a heavy tax on the consumer, and the reasonable producer should not exact any more. The hon. member for South Victoria (Mr. McQuade) had said that we lost $1,958,000 on wheat we imported from the United States, and a very large amount on what we exported there. In other words, that we lost both ways. This was strange logic, which could not be proved. If we paid the duty on our exports to the United States, he would like to know what difference it made to them what duty the United States charged on their exports to Canada. It surely could not make any difference. And then, how could they lose thirty million dollars annually, as had been stated by the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton)? If the Canadian people paid the duty on their own exports, how could they pay the duty on what the Americans exported into Canada, if Canada paid the duty on what they exported to the United States. It seemed to him to be a most absurd doctrine. Again, the hon. member for North Huron (Mr. Farrow) had spoken in the same strain. He understood the hon. member to say that the United States paid the duty on what they exported to Canada. If that were true, he did not see why we should encourage manufacturing at all in this country. Why not close up the manufactories at once, and import everything we require, thus increasing the revenue very largely, so that the Government would soon have plenty of money in the Treasury for all the public expenditures. But it was clear to him, and to every observer who thought this matter over candidly, that the consumer paid the duty. If the consumer did not pay the duty, and the duty did not increase prices, why did those hon. members in Opposition cry "Protect home manufactures." If the consumer did not pay the duty, why did the United States fight Great Britain and declare their independence because Great Britain attempted to tax their tea? Were they mistaken, and did the Chinese pay the duty? It was not possible for the United States to tax us in any way, and it was not possible for us to tax the United States, nor was it possible for one nation to tax another in time of peace. If it were possible, it would create endless wars among nations and we would be taxed to death by the United States. The Canadian Granger, the exponent of the farmers of this country, stated that the price for our produce was regulated by the countries which consumed it. In 1866, Canada exported 16,168,719 bushels of grain more than it imported; and in 1877, an exceptionally bad year, the surplus of exports amounted to 4,512,231 bushels. As long as they exported more of these various kinds of grain than they imported, more than was required for the necessities of the country, he could not see how Protection would assist the farmer in the least. The barley question had been referred to by the hon. member for North Wentworth (Mr. Rymal), and had been so ably discussed that he did not think any more could be said on it. He had proposed referring to some ideas in reference to that question, but it had been fully cleared up by the hon. member for North Wentworth, whose arguments were unanswerable. The hon. member for Peel had also given utterance to some of the facts which he had intended expressing relative to the values of the various kinds of grain. He had shown the House that at present, in Toronto, 100lb. of corn were worth 83c.; 100lb. of oats $1.05, a difference of 22c.; 100lb. peas were worth $1.15, a difference of 32c.; and that 100lb. barley were worth $1.20, a difference of 37c. as compared with corn. This was a significant argument, and none would deny that 100lb. of corn were worth at least as much for feeding purposes as the other grains mentioned, unless perhaps, peas. He might say with regard to this that his own observations had led him to the conclusion that corn was about equal to any other grain for feed. He knew it from his own experience of many years, and in the experience of those around him in the community in which he lived, where for a number of years they had sold their barley, peas and oats to buy corn. He had known farmers sell their barley at from 96c. to $1 per bushel, and buy corn by the car load from 50c. to 55c. per bushel, thereby saving 40c. to 45c. cents per bushel on the transaction; and who was hurt by this? Surely not the farmer. As he had before remarked, it had never been proved that a country which produced more than it could consume would be benefitted by a protective duty placed on those products. He found by the Trade Returns of 1877, that this country imported 8,260,077 bushels of corn, for which it paid $4,259,496 or 51c. per bushel, and it exported 4,083,174 bushels, for which it received $2,583,173 or 64c. per bushel, leaving 4,176,895 bushels, at a cost of 40c. per bushel. The profit on the export was 13c., or $530,812, this sum going to the importers and the carrying trade. They had imported 1,697,968 bushels of oats at a cost of $610,681 or 35c. per bushel, and they had exported 3,996,156 bushels, for which they received $1,658,079 or 41½c. per bushel, leaving 2,298,188 bushels surplus that we would have exported, had we imported no oats, so that there could be no loss to the farmer in this transaction, but a profit to the importer and carrying trade. They exported barley to the amount of 6,587,180 bushels, for which they received $4,721,455, or equal to 72c. per bushel. Had they not imported corn, they would have had to feed their stock at a difference between the price of corn and barley of 21c. per bushel. They exported peas to the amount of 1,753,439 bushels, but imported none, and realized thereby $1,509,214 or equal to 85c. per bushel, leaving a difference between the corn they imported and the peas they exported, of 34½c. per bushel. He did not see why the Government should step in and prevent them from making this advantageous exchange. The same might be said of wheat and flour. In 1876 we imported 5,838,156 bushels, at a cost of $6,070,174, or $1.04 per bushel, and we exported 9,248,390 bushels, receiving therefor $10,416,636, or $1.07 per bushel. Of flour of wheat we imported 376,114 barrels at a cost of $1,906,298, and exported 419,936 barrels, for which we received $2,205,467; showing in this case of wheat and flour a large amount of export over import. And if the import had exceeded the export, would it be fair in these depressed times to increase the price of bread to the consumers by putting on an import duty? It was extraordinary that in these times of depression, when it was difficult for the poor man to get along, that men should be found advocating, as the cure, the putting on of more taxes by increasing the price of food and fuel to the consumer. Reference had been made by nearly every hon. gentleman opposite to the United States. They hold them up as an example of what a protective policy had done there, but the less they said about that the better. With the permission of the House he would read a short article from the St. Louis Republican:

MR. McCRAVEY.

"It is well-known that manufacturers have multiplied enormously in the United States during the last fifteen years, and the reason of it is plain. The census report of 1870 told part of the story, and the profound stagnation we have had since 1873 told the rest. The advent of the Republican party brought the New England policy of protecting home manufactures into full effect, and the result has been an overgrowth of that interest and the sacrifice of nearly all others. In 1860, the whole number of manufacturing establishments in the country was 140,423; in 1870, it had increased to 252,148, an increase of 79 per cent. In the same decade the number of hands employed in manufacturing establishments increased from 1,311,246 to 2,053,996; the capital employed, from $1,000,856,715 to $2,118,298,769; the annual wages paid from $379,878,965 to $775,584,343; the value of material used, from $1,031,605,092 to $2,488,427,242; and the value of manufactured products, from $1,885,861,676 to $4,232,325,442. In 1870, this looked like prosperity, but viewed through the dismal pallor which the collapse of 1873 has thrown over the country, however, it is seen not to be prosperity; it is an artificially stimulated overgrowth, that has produced widespread disaster. It is an enormous development of the manufacturing interests, produced at an enormous cost. What that cost has been the census report reveals. While manufactures have multiplied, our commerce and agriculture have declined. In 1860, American ships carried three-fourths of our exports and imports; now, foreign ships carry three-fourths of these exports and imports, leaving only one-fourth to our vessels. The proud exhibit of American shipping that was our boast sixteen years ago, is a thing of the past. It has been swept away by the unwise policy which sacrificed nearly everything to manufactures and manufacturers. Agriculture has been made to contribute its share to this hypertrophy of the favoured interest. From 1860 to 1870 the cotton crop fell off 2,366,056 bales; the sugar crop, 143,936 hogsheads; the rice crop, 113,532,011 pounds; the tobacco crop, 191,474,120 pounds; the crop of clover seed, 316,531 bushels; the crop of grass seed, 316,882 bushels; the corn crop, 67,848,202 bushels; the rye crop, 4,182,595 bushels; the buckwheat crop, 7,750,097 bushels; the hemp crop, 51,747 tons; the hog crop 8,378,298 head; cheese crop, 50,171,774 pounds; and even those farm products that show an increase during the decade, fall far short of the increase they made in the preceding decade from 1850 to 1860. The decay of agriculture under the malign policy that oppressed it to secure to eastern manufacturers dividends of 25 per cent. on their capital is not limited to one section of the country; it is universal. In the South, miles of plantations are waste, in New England hundreds of farms have been abandoned to grow up into forests, and, in the west, farmers find it difficult, even with the severest labour, to pay their taxes and support their families. And even manufacturing has been broken down under the influences that broke down other interests on which it depends. The high prices that protection begot multiplied manufactures beyond the capital of the country to consume them, and even the favoured interest now languished with its mills and furnaces closed, with its products unsold and with thousands of its employes out of work."

That is not the evidence of a Canadian, but a citizen of that country for which his hon. friend opposite would make him believe Protection had done so much. On that point he could agree with the hon. member for Centre Wellington, that it was a grievance and hardship to our exporters and importers of produce, and especially to our millers, to think that grain and flour was carried from Chicago and Detroit to Montreal for a trifle more than from Hamilton and Toronto to Montreal; and especially were the local rates unfair. He had talked to several intelligent millers of late, and all admit if it were not for the discriminating rates of the railroads, they would have little to complain of. But this was only another name for Protection; it was the legitimate offspring of monopoly, with all its attendant evils, and if anything could be done to remove this difficulty, it should be done at once; but if it cannot be removed, the Government should not be held responsible for it. He was not in favour of class legislation. There were other reasons to be considered against the imposition of a duty on grain. There were the fishing, the coal, the milling, the manufacturing, the mining, and last, though not least, the lumber interest. We had no data as to the whole production of the forests annually, for export and home consumption, but it was something enormous, and only second to the productions of the soil. He found, from 1868 to 1875, the whole production of the forests for export was $185,265,471. The whole production of the forests of this country, he had no doubt, amounted to from thirty-five to forty million dollars annually, if not more, including home consumption; and the amount of money invested in saw mills, timber limits, plant and machinery of various kinds, was very large. It was well known that this interest was, perhaps, suffering more than any other, and had suffered for the past four or five years. He would like to know what would become of the lumbering interests if a duty were put upon agricultural products. Unless the Government would see fit to grant a bonus to lumbermen, on the manufacture of their lumber, which he would be very sorry to see the Government do, and he would consider it his duty to vote against them if they did any such insane thing, he did not think the Government could in any way legislate to benefit the lumbering interests. So long as there was more lumber manufactured than was required for home consumption, and so long as the stagnation existed in the United States, brought on by the unwise prohibitory policy of Protection, the lumbering interests would remain in a depressed condition. As he formerly remarked, if he thought the farmers of this country required Protection, that they would be benefitted in the least by a duty on wheat and flour, he would vote for this motion. If the farmers wanted Protection, where were the thousands of petitions we might have expected from them? The hon. member for South Huron had stated that at some agricultural meeting in his constituency they had moved a resolution in favour of Protection. This was the first time he had ever heard of farmers asking for Protection. If he knew anything about the opinions of the farmers he represented, they did not desire Protection as long as there was not a general increase in the tariff all round. They were well off as compared with other occupations; they were not sick, and needed no political doctoring. Farm lands were higher than for some years, and in good demand; while in the United States, so says the Railway Age, all real estate had shrunk in value in the past five years 39 per cent. The cry of Protection to farmers is not because hon. gentlemen opposite felt any very deep interest in their welfare, but for another purpose; to drag the farmers in to help to secure Protection to manufacturers. And, in the squabble over it, these hon. gentlemen expect to scramble into power again. What the farmers wanted was less haranguing and talking here, and more work. They required the public expenditure to be reduced to the lowest point consistent with the requirements of the Government, and the carrying on of our public works. They wanted retrenchment exercised in all branches of the public service, and to be left alone by political demagogues to attend to their own business. When those men went round the country and endeavoured to induce the farmers to adopt certain views which they understood fully, those hon. gentlemen would find it to no purpose, for the agriculturists fully understood what they required, and were much more intelligent than those

hon. gentlemen gave them credit for. It had been said by hon. gentlemen opposite that Canada had nothing to give the United States in return for reciprocity, while some of them had expressed themselves as being opposed to reciprocity. If they would only tell the House what they do want, we might understand, but they did not appear to know themselves; for some of them are in favour of one policy and some of another, and it was difficult to find out what the Opposition desired. A reciprocity of tariffs, a retaliatory tariff, and a scientific tariff, were respectively advocated. If this country had nothing to give the United States in return for reciprocity, it was due to the fact that every advantage having been given them by the Washington Treaty capitulation of the hon. the leader of the Opposition, it did not lie in the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite to refer to the fact. He could not support the motion of the hon. member for East Hastings, but would record his vote against it.

MR. McINTYRE said, at this, the last stage of the debate on the trade question, he did not propose attempting to throw any additional light on a question already so thoroughly debated. However, as the representative of a Free-trade constituency in a Free trade Province, he felt compelled to enter his protest against the amendment of the hon. member for East Hastings. Anything more odious to the people of Prince Edward Island than a duty on flour could not possibly be conceived. A large portion of the flour consumed in the Island came from the United States, in exchange for the products of the soil and the fisheries, a large portion of which was shipped annually to the States of the Union. Some years it was impossible to obtain good prices for their fish on the Island, or obtain cash for it, and then they shipped it to the United States and obtained flour in return. Under those circumstances, he failed to understand how they would obtain any benefit from the imposition of a duty on flour. It was thought by some parties that it would not benefit Ontario farmers, and certainly the people of the Maritime Provinces, who consumed the flour, would not be benefitted. The people of Prince Edward Island, equally with those of the other Provinces of the Dominion, were not inclined to be taxed in order that a few manufacturers might be benefitted by it. His people were already sufficiently taxed, and he was not inclined to follow in the steps of a party which advocated a policy to tax them still further. They were not only opposed to any increase of duties, but held that, as soon as the finances of the country would permit, a reduction should take place on the whole list.

MR. PERRY said that, as he came from a Province that would be very seriously affected by the motion of the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Brown), if it were carried out, his constituents would expect that he would not give a silent vote on that important question. He had hoped that, when the resolution introduced by the right hon. member for Kingston, which embraced the farming as well as manufacturing interests, had been so ably discussed and voted down by a large majority, no sectional resolution would have been submitted to the House, in order, perhaps, to entrap some hon. member. He was prepared not to be entrapped by such a motion. He was prepared to sustain the Free-trade party of the Dominion. From the remarks of some hon. members it would be imagined that the Province of Ontario constituted the whole Dominion, and other hon. members appeared to hold the same view in regard to Quebec. The representatives of the Maritime Provinces, whose people numbered nearly one-third of the whole population of the Dominion, should protect their interests. When he looked the question of the imposition of a duty on flour fairly in the face, he saw that the effect would be ruinous to those Provinces. He failed to be able to reconcile the position taken by the hon. member for Queen's on that question. The farming question was included in the motion submitted by the right hon. member for Kingston, and yet the hon. member for Queen's voted for it. Now, a partial resolution was brought forward, asking Parliament to impose duties on wheat and flour, but the hon. member declined to support it. If the motion proposed by the right hon. member for Kingston, which included farming as well as manufacturing interests, was good, as a whole, the present resolution must be good in the abstract. It was urged by some hon. members that what Canada required was a reciprocal or retaliatory tariff. The revenue now realized by the Dominion from importations was $3,658,969. If the American tariff were applied to the present scale of duties, the sum would be increased to $18,517,436, and, if the amount now paid were deducted, there would remain $14,858,467, equal to $3.70 per capita for the whole population. If that were applied to the poor people of Prince Edward Island, they would be called upon to pay into the revenue of the Dominion about $370,000 more than at present, which was about equal to the whole income of the Island at the time it entered Confederation. If the Islanders were satisfied to bear such taxes, they would have to send some other person to represent their interests than himself. If they were prepared to allow themselves to be saddled with increased taxation, they were not the people he considered they were, because they were Free-traders; and he could not understand how we could drive the Americans to give us reciprocity by calling on our people to pay $18,000,000 increased taxation. He failed also to see how Ontario farmers would be largely benefitted. We imported last year 1,967,706 bushels of oats, for which $6,310,491 was paid, or equal to 26½c. per bushel. In one year we exported to England 2,696,703 bushels of oats, for which we received $1,130,712, equal to 41c. per bushel. That showed that we had a market for more oats than were actually grown in the country, and that we made 15c. per bushel upon the whole transaction. If a duty were levied of 15c. per bushel on oats imported from the United States, no profit would remain, and the trade would be destroyed. We imported corn from the United States to feed our stock, at very low prices, and exported large quantities of barley to England, for which we obtained larger prices than we paid for the corn, the difference being equal to 24c. per bushel. If a duty of 15c. were levied, the balance would be reduced to 9c. They were constantly referred to the general trade policy of the United States, and it was alleged that the people were prosperous, although every branch of industry was protected. But there were two parties on the tariff question, and one party held very different views from those so frequently mentioned in the House. Mr. Marshall, of Illinois, delivered a speech at Washington, wherein he showed the farmer of the United States was ground down by taxation and it was almost impossible for him to live. If the American farmer could scarcely live under such a system, he was satisfied that the farmers in the Dominion would not be able to live under it. If the people of Canada were prepared to submit to such a tyrannical system of taxation as was proposed, the people of Prince Edward Island were not; and he would be surprised if one member for that Province supported the resolution before the House; at all events, he would not do so.

MR. PERRY.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he did not propose to occupy the time of the House more than a very few minutes. He thought the hon. member who had introduced the motion should, by this time, have regretted that he had done so. The hon. gentleman had already defined his position; he had voted on the resolution which he (Sir John A. Macdonald) proposed, in favour of a revision of the tariff in such a way as would afford proper encouragement to all the interests of this country. The greater included the less, and the proposition now before the House was contained in the resolution which had been voted on. The hon. member for West Hastings had been used to take the chestnuts out of the fire, and his resolution was calculated to obtain the minimum of support. It called for protection for one interest, the wheat growing interest, and offered no compensation in any way to the other parts of the country which did not grow wheat or produce flour, and, therefore, the hon. gentleman, in fact, invited opposition from the Province of Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. Even if he had suggested compensation to the Province of Nova Scotia, in the way of a duty on coal, thereby encouraging inter-provincial trade and the interchange of commodities, he might have hoped for support from that Province; but this simple proposition, as it was made, was certainly calculated to get the smallest amount of support possible. The resolution which he (Sir John A. Macdonald) had had the honour to propose, had received a most respectable support in the House. True, they were in a minority, but the vote was larger than it had yet been upon this subject, and it showed the growing feeling in the country in favour of the principle contained in his resolution. The hon. gentleman would find that he would get a very small vote indeed, and he had, besides, had the honour of being told, with scant parliamentary courtesy by one of the hon. gentleman on the same side of the House, that he (Mr. Brown) was a madman for having proposed this motion, and that the hon. member for the West Riding of Durham was a fool for supporting it. This was the speech of the hon. member for South Wentworth, who said that all those who supported this proposition were either madmen or fools.

MR. RYMAL: Did I apply that to you or your National Policy?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: The hon. gentleman was arguing the agricultural question. He was speaking of the farmers of South Wentworth.

MR. RYMAL: That remark applied to the National Policy.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that the hon. member for West Hastings had voted for the National Policy contained in his resolution; and he (Mr. Brown) was a mad man and fool, according to the statement of the hon. member, as also of two hon. members from the Province of Quebec—Messrs. Coupal and Robillard—who both voted for his resolution. His hon. friend, by the way, in speaking of the proposition contained in the National Policy, and this resolution was a portion of the National Policy, said that it would not go down with the country, that the country was opposed to it; that, at the meeting of the grangers, the body which was supposed to represent the agricultural interest especially, the members opposed to it were seven or eight to one; and yet, although the hon. gentleman said this policy was nonsense and bosh, to use the hon. gentleman's own expression, he implored the Opposition to take a different course, and not to attempt to delude the innocent farmers, and not to attempt to divide the Reform ranks by introducing this question. But the hon. gentleman was free to admit that those who were opposed to this policy were either madmen or fools, or both; that some of his constituents came within the category and were in favour of the policy called the National Policy, as indicated in his (Sir John A. Macdonald's) resolution. So when the hon. gentleman went home to his constituency—for his speech he (Sir John A. Macdonald) had no doubt would be reported, and all the hon. gentleman's speeches deserved to be reported—he would be met by those of his own political friends and old supporters who conscientiously happened to differ from the hon. gentleman on this great question of the National Policy, and he would find them asking him whether he included them in his category of knaves, madmen or fools. This would be the position of the hon. gentleman.

MR. RYMAL: What do you suppose I would answer?

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Your answer would be, perhaps, that there might be a difference of opinion as to who was the madman. The hon. gentleman had pooh-poohed, or rather attempted to indicate the several meetings and assemblages which took place, and which he (Sir John A. Macdonald) had had the honour to attend in Western Canada, and had stated that although at Hamilton there was a large body of people, fully one-half of them at least were the opponents of his (Sir John A. Macdonald's) principles. This was true, and he (Sir John A. Macdonald) was exceedingly glad to have them there. His hon. friend had given instances of private conversations where, as he said old Tory friends of himself (Sir John A.

Macdonald) stated the National Policy was all bosh, but that they were going to vote the Tory ticket; but if it was all bosh and they did vote the Tory ticket, it was because they thought that it was the popular ticket, and that the thing was going to delude the public as the hon. gentleman said, and to take away these madmen and fools who were old political friends from the hon. gentleman. If it was not a popular cry, and if the hon. gentleman did not know that it was a popular cry, and was going to grow with the country as a popular cry he would not have denounced it with such fierceness in one breath, though the moment before the hon. gentleman had declared that it was all nonsense and that seven to one of the people were against this policy. The hon. gentleman, while sneering at those meetings and their effect, and saying that they did neither good nor harm, and such statements, described with his usual cleverness and facetiousness the efforts made to get them up. He said that the meeting at Hamilton resembled one by Barnum with band and gilded carriage and a five mile drive. It was true that they had had a very pleasant procession, and a large number of the yeomanry of the country in carriages and of the young men of the country on their horses, with the bone and sinew of Wentworth there to greet them; and all those people had looked very well. If it were a show, it was a very creditable, a very large, a very numerous and a very respectable show; but there was one thing in which Barnum excelled, that they had not—they had had no merryman there, or a single clown, or buffoon. His hon. friend (Mr. Rymal) had engagements elsewhere, and therefore, they certainly were very unlike Barnum in that respect. He would not have spoken in this way, had it not been for the very coarse and unparliamentary language used by the hon. gentleman with regard to himself. The hon. gentleman attempted to do two things, when like the famous Paganini, he should remember that his skill was on one string. As long as the hon. gentleman confined himself to jokes and jests, though some of them might be old, and some stale, and some of them they had heard before, not once but many times. The joke about his Satanic Majesty going to the top of a high mountain for instance, was as old as Joe Miller, and a little older. They had heard it in and out of the House; but he (Sir John A. Macdonald) had always liked this story, and coming from the hon. gentleman they could stand it again; but though the hon. gentleman might play on one string, he should not attempt to play on the other string, and make the serious speeches which that evening he had attempted. As long as the hon. gentleman said his little pleasantries, provided they were not more, his friends were really all very glad to hear them; but he was afraid that the hon. gentleman sometimes overstepped the bounds of propriety and mistook rudeness and personal attacks for wit and humour. Boswell told a story of Dr. Johnson as follows. He and Dr. Johnson went to a theatre. There was a good deal of dissatisfaction with the play, and a great many noises were made. Boswell, or Bozzy, as he was generally called, imitated the cow in her lowering, and so well that the audience called out encore, encore, and Boswell lowed again two or three times, and in the pride of his heart, as he said, he attempted to imitate some other animals; but no cheers came then, and Dr. Johnson, turning to him, said: "My dear Boswell, confine yourself to the cow." He would say to his hon. friend from South Wentworth that, in his speeches, he should confine himself to his jokes, while, if the hon. gentleman tried serious things, neither in the House nor anywhere else would he make many converts. He greatly regretted the fact that his hon. friend (Mr. Brown) was not satisfied in supporting the resolution he (Sir John A. Macdonald) had introduced, and that he had made this proposition, because it was quite certain to get very feeble support, as its purely sectional character, and its selfish character, as his hon. friend from Charlevoix had said, had arrayed of necessity against it all the other parts of the country which were not wheat growing sections. For himself, he should do as he did with respect to the motion made by his hon. friend from Hamilton

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

when he moved a resolution in amendment to his, which was a general resolution in favour of manufactures; and he had always limited it to manufactories that were going on in Hamilton. He had voted for this motion as a step in the right direction. In the same spirit, he should vote for the resolution of his hon. friend (Mr. Brown), and he would also vote for the motion of which notice had been given by his hon. friend from Iberville, because they were all portions of the National Policy. They would get this policy piece-meal, by-and-bye—by degrees. His hon. friend from Hamilton had gone a little way in the direction of manufactures, and they now had this hon. gentleman moving in favour of wheat and flour, and a great number of the hon. gentlemen, he dared say, were in favour, in this regard, of duties on corn, rye, coarse grains, potatoes, etc., and hence, by slow degrees, they would come to his policy. They were going to have it, though, if they did not, they would have the proud distinction of being put in the category of both madmen and fools by his hon. friend from South Wentworth.

MR. BUNSTER said that, while an out-and-out Protectionist, he could not support this motion as it stood, because it did not go far enough. If it covered the whole ground of Protection, he would be more than pleased to give it his hearty support. He was sorry to hear some hon. members allude to the advantage attending the importation of American corn into this country. The hon. member for South Wentworth had said that with respect to every bushel of such corn, an Excise tax of $2.62½ was paid on the liquor manufactured from it. He would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether, if a bushel of American barley or Canadian wheat were manufactured into spirits, these would not equally pay the same amount of Excise duty. All the other arguments were of the same character. The hon. gentleman that evening had stated that there were in the House only fifteen farmers who represented the farming interests of the Dominion. This was shameful; and the sooner the farmers of the country awakened to their own interest and sent more farmers and less professional men to Parliament the better their interests would be protected, and the sooner would they obtain that Protection which would drive this country ahead. It had been well said that the interest of the lawyer and the merchant, and of every profession, including even the coal oil refiner, were protected, while the farmer had no protection at all. If they had the National Policy in operation, the farmer would then be protected. He would reserve his vote in favour of the motion of the hon. member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard), but he would vote against this motion, as it did not go far enough.

MR. RYMAL said that, as to a bushel of Canadian or American barley making as much spirit as a bushel of corn, he had taken the statement of his hon. friend from Centre Wellington, who had the other night told them that 24lb. of corn contained as much spirits, or essence, as 36lb. of malt, and 36lb. of malt represented more than 48lb. of barley.

MR. WOOD said he did not know that he would have attempted to address the House on this question had it not been for a few remarks made during the afternoon by the hon. member for South Ontario (Mr. Gibbs). He must say that when he heard these remarks coming from that intelligent and shrewd business man they almost upset him. He thought that his experience of thirty years in business had been all lost, and that he really did not know what true business principles were. The hon. gentleman had laid down a proposition which was something new to him (Mr. Wood), and if it were correct he could only say that, in his time, he had lost a large amount of money. The hon. gentleman had fairly and squarely laid down this proposition—that the exporter, instead of the importer of goods, in all cases, paid the duty.

MR. GIBBS (South Ontario): I made no such statement.

MR. WOOD said that, if the hon. gentleman could take barley and make it quite different to any other class of goods, he was right; and if the export of barley was different to the export of iron, or wheat, or anything else, then he (Mr. Gibbs) was right and he (Mr. Wood) was wrong. He had always been taught that the importer always paid the duty. If a merchant bought a ton of iron in Liverpool, the seller in Liverpool did not ask about the duties levied on it here; he had nothing to do with this matter, and he did not care a single farthing about it. If a merchant imported the articles into this country, he had to pay the duty on the invoice price. If it was a fact that we paid the duty levied on all the barley we exported, then, as had been already stated, did not the States pay the duties on all the goods which we imported from them? Was it a fact that only in Canada the duty on exports and also on imports, were paid by Canadians, or did the people of the United States pay the duties on the goods they exported to us, as the hon. gentleman said we did on what we exported to them? This was a fallacy from beginning to end. The hon. gentleman instanced an imaginary or, perhaps, real friend of the hon. member for Kingston who lived down in the Eastern Townships, and whom the hon. gentleman went to see during his summer peregrinations, when he was making his picnic speeches, at the time the heather was on fire and the country ablaze. This friend lived immediately on the line, having farms on both sides. Both of these farms were equally well tilled, barley sown on both and an equal crop was raised. The same showers that fell on the American side watered the barley on the Canadian side, and the same dew, he presumed, was distilled on both, and also that the same quality of grain was raised on both farms. When this friend of the hon. gentleman had stored his barley in his barns, a produce speculator came along and was shown the barley raised on the American part of the farm, and was asked how much he would give for it. "Seventy-five cents a bushel," was the reply. "All right," said the farmer, and taking the purchaser to the Canadian barley, he asked, "What will you give for this?" "Sixty cents," was the answer, showing a difference of fifteen cents between the two prices. What was the reason of this? Why did not the farmer get as much for his Canadian barley, of exactly the same quality, as for the American barley, both having been raised almost side by side, the one under the Union Jack and the other under the Stars and Stripes? The purchaser said he could not give seventy-five cents for the Canadian grain because he had to pay fifteen cents per bushel into the Treasury of the United States, and therefore he could only pay sixty cents for it. The farmer said that this was all wrong; he would send for the leader of the Opposition who would come down and put a duty of fifteen cents a bushel on the American barley, which would make it all right. But this would not be the case, because we were not importing any American barley. The farmer said "Why should I pay that? I do not get the same for the Canadian barley simply because a duty is imposed by the United States." He (Mr. Wood) was prepared to admit that in consequence of the American duty, the American farmer obtained seventy-five cents a bushel for his barley, but he denied in toto that, because of the American duty, only sixty cents a bushel was received for the Canadian barley. If the American duty of fifteen cents a bushel was taken off, would the American grain secure the same price? He said "no." It would, then, simply command exactly the same price as the Canadian barley was sold for, and for the Canadian barley not one cent less would be secured. It was a self-evident fact that the consumer must pay the duty on any article which he purchased; so the American purchaser who paid sixty cents a bushel for the Canadian barley he used, also paid the fifteen cents which was included in the price.

Mr. WOOD.

AN HON. MEMBER: The Americans grew five times as much as we did, but there was one class of grain which we beat them in, and that was our Canadian barley.

MR. WOOD: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gibbs) said we will not raise the duty a single penny above what it is now; we are going to collect the same amount of duty and not increase the tariff. This showed that there was direct collision between the leader of the Opposition and one of his followers. The hon. gentleman himself admitted that we paid the duty on the barley we imported from the United States. But the hon. gentleman who followed him instanced the case of a Canadian cattle drover going to the United States. He (Mr. Wood) would ask if that drover paid the duty out of his own pocket? No, he charged the consumer so much more in consequence of what he had to pay. For the information of hon. gentlemen he would read the following article which appeared in the Hamilton Times, and which expressed the views he wished to convey:—

“The wise men of Canada, who have begotten the National Policy, have contributed to economic science one startling discovery. It is that in trade between two countries it is the seller, not the consumer, who pays the duties. For this reason they are never tired telling our people that the States fifty or sixty per cent. tariff is a tax which Canadian exporters have to pay, and that we ought to retaliate by compelling the Yankees to pay an equal tax on what they export to us. Thus Sir John has repeated about a score of times the statement that our farmers have to pay the 15c. States duty on barley in order to get that article into our neighbour's market. And the Mail recently laid it down, with the gravity of an owl, that ‘we continue to pay toll into Uncle Sam's Treasury, towards the payment of the American war debt, so much on every bushel of grain and every thousand feet of lumber that we sell to our neighbours.’

“The unlimited National Policy asses who thus lay down the idiotic proposition that it is the seller who pays the duties levied at the Customs-house on his productions, have not even common sense enough to see that their proposition is fatal to their own policy—that of decreasing imports and increasing exports. If what they contend be true, then in the interest of the taxpayer we should increase our imports to the largest possible extent and do away with exports altogether.

“The amount that came into the Canadian Treasury from Customs duties last year was $12,500,000. If the National Policy theory be true, this sum was paid by the unhappy foreigners who produced and sold to us the goods on which those duties were levied and collected. And it follows, as a matter of course, that the more we import the more we compel foreigners to pay into our Treasury. Therefore, if we were to cease production altogether and import everything we use, we would proportionately increase the tax levied on foreigners. By importing sufficiently, we could make them not only pay the whole cost of our Government and supply the money for the construction of our public works, but obtain from them a handsome surplus for distribution among the Provinces of the Dominion. This sounds frightfully absurd, and is so. Yet if the new Tory theory be true, that the seller pays the duties, it also is true; and it is the foreigners from whom we buy goods who are paying our taxes, not we ourselves. In accordance with the National Policy platform, it is, then, the duty of the Government to encourage importation in every possible way, so as to make the people of the States, China and Great Britain, continue to pay the Canadian taxes.

“On the same ground, it is an act of folly for us to export goods to any foreign country that has a Customs tariff. If we pay 15c. to the States for the privilege of exporting barley, we should cease to export and—save the 15c. If we pay the States duty on our lumber, we of course should keep it at home and save the amount of the tax. If we pay the tax levied on our exports to the United States, then we should protect ourselves from the outrage by utterly refusing to export. The true National Policy (according to the Tory theory), then, is to continue to tax foreigners by buying their goods, and refuse to be taxed for the benefit of foreign countries by absolutely refusing to sell them any of our products.

“This is such absolute nonsense that a child can see the folly of it. When the States impose a tax of 15c. a bushel on barley, it is they who pay that 15c. tax. When they tax Canadian lumber, they pay the price of the lumber, plus the tax. When they tax woollen goods 50 per cent., they pay the seller's price of the goods and the 50 per cent. tax over and above that price. When they tax pig iron $7 a ton, and still import annually from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 worth of it, they pay the seller the market value of that pig iron and $7 a ton tax on it, over and above that price. So that those Tory journals that are exhibiting the Yankee 50 or 60 per cent. tariff in comparison with our lower one, are simply proving that the States consumers are paying twice or three times as much taxes on their imported goods as the Canadian consumers are.”

At that late hour he would not take up the time of the House by making a long speech. He would not attempt to go into the question of Protection for farmers, because that had been well discussed by hon. gentlemen who had already spoken—gentlemen, who as practical farmers, knew better than lawyers, doctors and merchants, what they themselves required. These gentlemen declared, with no uncertain sound, that they did not want Protection. He (Mr. Wood) had repeatedly said there was no argument for Protection to anything but manufactures. When he first came to the House, in 1874, there was a duty of 15 per cent. for the Protection of manufactures; but in consequence of the discount on American money which existed, we were actually a Free-trade country. Since then matters had changed immensely; we had now greenbacks at par, and goods bought for $100 at New York could be laid down at Toronto, duty and all expences paid, for $100 in Canadian money. Now, the same articles could not be laid down in either of those places for less than $120, showing an apparent difference of about 20 per cent., but, in consequence of the fall in the value of some classes of goods, the real difference was from 10 to 12½ per cent. better than they were in 1874. For example:—

1874.		1878.
Goods.....	$100 00	Goods.....	$100 00
Discount .....	15 00	Duty, 17½ .....	17 50
	<hr/>	Freight Charge	2 50
	$85 00		<hr/>
Duty, 15 p. c....	12 75		$120 00
Freight Charge	2 50
	<hr/>
	$100 25
20 p. c. ....	20 05
	<hr/>
	$120 30

From his place in the House last Session, he had said that, with greenbacks at par and a 20 per cent. tariff, an industry that could not exist had better step down and out, and he was still of the same opinion. The hon. gentleman proposed a reciprocity of tariffs, not only against the United States, but against all the world beside. The average tariff of the United States was equal to a tariff of 45 per cent., and he (Mr. Wood) asked the people of this country how they would like to be taxed from 45 to 50 per cent. upon all the goods they had to import. The leader of the Opposition stated that a reciprocity of tariffs would force the United States to give a reciprocity of trade. He (Mr. Wood) was opposed to Free-trade with that country, because Canadian manufacturers could not then compete with those of the United States. The leader of the Opposition said that we would have to have a 45 per cent. tariff in order to save our industries; and, if that statement was correct, how could we compete on Free-trade principles? If they could not compete with the manufacturers of the United States with a 17½ per cent. tariff, besides 2½ per cent. for carriage, how could they hope to hold their own when that tariff is wiped out? If the cotton mills of Dundas, Thorold, Cornwall, Valleyfield, and Hechelaga could now only pay a dividend of 10 per cent. with a 17½ per cent. tariff in their favour, how could they stand to compete on equal footing when our present tariff was wiped out? He was prepared to admit that, in the manufacture of some articles, such as stoves and sewing machines, we might compete with the Americans under a Free-trade policy; but, on the whole, the manufacturing industries of this country would be seriously injured. Yet this was the doctrine which certain hon. gentlemen were promulgating throughout the country. The right hon. member for Kingston did not state whether he wished for reciprocity to apply to all classes of trade, but, if he wished to adopt the reciprocity of 1854, he (Mr. Wood) could understand his resolution; but he took it for granted that the hon. gentleman's motion applied alike to manufactures as well as to cereals, a proposition to which he (Mr. Wood) could not assent. We all knew the position which the hon. gentleman took in relation to this affair some years ago, when the Hon. Mr. Brown went to Washington to negotiate, not a Washington, but a Reciprocity Treaty. Some articles of manufacture were included in the draft which was published, whereupon the whole Conservative Press and party, from Prince Edward Island to Vancouver, alleged that the manufactures of this country could not stand against those of the United States. We all remember the now famous circular issued by the hon. member for Centre Toronto, in which he pointed out to the manufacturers of the Dominion their inability to compete with those of the United States; and yet these gentlemen came there to-day and declared as their national policy that which they condemned some three or four years ago. Was there any consistency in this? Then, what was their object? It was transparent to everyone, namely, that by persuading the farmer, the manufacturer and others that they would be benefitted by Protection, they might be able to catch a few stray votes. He thought the farmer understood this question quite as well as the leader of the Opposition. All this talk about Protection on wheat, rye, barley and coal was got up for electioneering purposes. To propose a duty on coal was certainly a monstrous proposition. Coal is the basis of our manufacturing industries, and to put a tax of \$1 per ton on coal would take out of the pockets of the people of Hamilton, alone, \$60,000 per annum. Last year, when the subject was under discussion, he telegraphed to some of his friends in Hamilton and asked, "How much are you willing to pay on coal?" He received in reply several telegrams and letters, which, with one exception, protested against any duty at all. The one exception was willing to pay fifty cents per ton additional providing he received  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. increase in the tariff, and he (Mr. Wood) still hoped the Government would see their way clear to raise the present tariff to twenty per cent., which he thought would give general satisfaction—

Mr. Wood.

Mr. ROCHESTER: I would like to know what coal has to do with wheat or flour?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is speaking on matters which are kindred to the whole question of Protection.

Mr. WOOD said it might be all very well for the people of Montreal to pay a duty of 50c. per ton on American coal, but it would take from $1 to $1.50 to displace a single ton of American coal at Hamilton by Nova Scotia coal, and this would handicap the manufacturers in that city to that extent in favour of eastern manufacturers. These political economists said they gave every poor man a free breakfast table; they said they had taken the duty off tea.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am afraid the hon. member has travelled out of order.

Mr. WOOD said that, not being a farmer, he was not able to discuss the question of the duty on flour and wheat so intelligently as he might wish, and, therefore, he was shut out in a measure from the discussion. The remarks he had made should have been made when the hon. member for Kingston moved his amendment, but he had not then an opportunity. When the hon. gentleman moved his resolution, last year, similar to the one he had moved this Session, he (Mr. Wood) not only voted against it, but moved an amendment to it, which although voted down, received a much larger support in the House than that of the hon. gentleman. And he would this year have moved the same amendment had not the hon. gentleman been too wily and moved his resolution at a time when no amendment could be made to it.

Mr. KERR said he would not protract this debate one moment, but for the extraordinary declaration with which the right hon. member for Kingston had thought fit to conclude his brief speech. He (Mr. Kerr) rose to call the attention of this House, and the attention of the people of this Dominion to what was involved in that declaration. The right hon. gentleman had declared that he intended to vote for the resolution; at the same time the six representatives of Prince Edward Island said they did not want a tax put on flour and wheat imported into this country. The right hon. gentleman knew this, but he said: "I do not care what you want; flour and wheat shall be taxed." New Brunswick sent to this House some sixteen, Nova Scotia, twenty-one, and Quebec sixty-five representatives to this House, all of whom said their constituents did not need this tax. The hon. gentleman said: "You don't know what you want; you don't know what is good for you; or, if you do, I don't care; wheat and flour shall be taxed." He (Mr. Kerr) had listened patiently, for four consecutive Sessions, to the debates upon this question, without any bias or prejudice one way or the other, and he considered that the weight of argument was overwhelmingly in favour of the tariff as it now stood. Sometimes he had thought that we had far too much talking upon this question of a modified Protection and a high protective tariff, but he did not know that all this talking had been in vain; he believed it had brought people's knowledge up to the proper standard, and they were now able to judge for themselves; and he was greatly mistaken if the tone of public opinion was in favour of the present Administration, and in favour of the present policy being adhered to. They were told this tax should be imposed on wheat and flour in the interests of the farmers. Certainly, from all the arguments they had heard it was not in the real interests of Ontario; and, even if it gave a slight advantage to that great Province, and was, at the same time, a great disadvantage and injustice to the other Provinces, he was not a man to stand up for such a measure. If wheat came into this country from the United States it gave employment in its transport, and in being made into flour, and, therefore, really benefitted the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite said they were not to be held responsible for this proposition. He did not hold them directly responsible, but he did hold them indirectly responsible. It was the offspring, as the hon. member for South Simcoe said the other evening, the first-fruits of the series of resolutions which were moved from that side of the House. Well, it was a miserable bantling, this fruit of their magnificent National Policy; he hoped they would be spared from witnessing the introduction of any more bantlings bred of this policy. Some time ago they had a policy for fostering the manufacturing and agricultural interests. Subsequently, this was enlarged by adding another interest—the mining—and this Session this magnificent National Policy had been further enlarged by adding “other industries.” No one knew what these other industries were. The expression was similar to what Coke said about Littlyton. He said that Littlyton's writings were full of meaning, even his et ceteras. He had no doubt “other industries” had a great deal of meaning. It devolved upon those bringing forward that policy to show the desirability of such a change. Since that policy had been brought forward, not one of the hon. gentleman's followers had clearly explained what it all meant; there was a condition attached to it. Before they had this policy fully unfolded to their admiring gaze, the right hon. member must be returned to power. He, for one, was not going to accept this condition. His constituents said: “Do not accept any National Policy, unless you know something more about it than they have told you.” He could not, consistently with his duty to his constituents, vote for the resolution, and he would have pleasure in aiding Mr. Speaker to announce that the resolution had been carried in the negative. The hon. member for North Huron had said there were too many lawyers on the floor of this House. He granted that, and he would be very glad to make way, at any time, for an intelligent farmer to represent the agricultural interests on the floor of this House; and, in his own Riding, he was happy to say, that the farmers were so intelligent that they were abundantly able to represent the agricultural interests in this House. There were some thirty agriculturists in this House, and they had shown themselves a credit to the country, for they had shown those gentlemen who had tried to force upon this country protection to agriculture, that they did not want anything of the kind. Farmer after farmer had, without exception, risen in his place and declared in the most unequivocal terms that what the right hon. member for Kingston said the farmers wanted and must have, they did not want, and would not have, so far as they could prevent it. He would yield to no man in his desire to see every industry in the country flourish, and especially did he desire to see that great interest which was the backbone of Ontario, the agricultural interest, flourish, and he believed the vote he would give to-night, would be one endorsed by every intelligent agriculturist in every Riding throughout the Dominion. He thanked the House for the attention they had given to his views, which he would not have enunciated had it not been for the extraordinary declaration which the right hon. member for Kingston had made in his brief speech. No doubt the hon. members for West Hastings and East Durham had honestly, and with the best motives, moved and seconded that resolution. His own county happened to lie between their counties, and he might be behind the age, but whatever the object of that resolution, it was a sorry burlesque on the series of resolutions which had been moved on the other side of the House, and which, he had no hesitation in saying, had been characterized as the veriest piece of claptrap and humbug with which the country had been misled.

MR. KERR.

MR. CAMPBELL said he could not make out what policy the Government were going to pursue on this subject, as they had remained silent during the whole debate; yet he could not imagine the mover and seconder of these resolutions, both supporters of the Government, would undertake to divide this House on the subject without previously having had the confidence of the Government. He took it for granted the Government would not support the motion, but it was strange they should not signify their course previously. He could see no other object in the motion than to put him and others in a false position. It would not be popular in the Maritime Provinces to pay a duty on flour when their own productions were not protected. It was right that the farming industry should be protected as well as any other industry; they should all stand on the same footing. He would not ask the farmers to protect his industry unless he was prepared to protect theirs, and, therefore, he would vote for this resolution. He did not think it would increase the price of breadstuffs in the Lower Provinces because Canada was exporting a large quantity of flour and wheat over her consumption. It would only result in excluding American productions, and in bringing the channel of trade through Canada, and the sooner this was done the better. When he heard hon. gentlemen talking about coal, saying they would never listen to a duty being put on coal, he could not help characterizing their policy as absurd. Why had not Hamilton grown as large as New York or Boston? Simply owing to our Canadian policy. He remembered when the finger of scorn was pointed at the United States for the policy they pursued, but time had proved that theirs was the wisest course. The United States had forty million inhabitants while Canada had simply the same number as she started with. He held this Government would have changed their policy and passed laws to benefit the whole people. Hon. gentleman quoted the Free-trade policy of Great Britain. That policy might have been successful and it might not; it was doubtful whether it had added to the prosperity of that country, and if it had, the interests of Great Britain were altogether different from those of Canada. The manner in which the United States had grown was sufficient proof of the wisdom of their policy. The present condition of Canada was due to the foolish legislation of this country dividing it into sections, each section acting for itself. He wanted to have the opinion of the Government on this motion.

MR. BROWN said he wished to disclaim any intention in moving this resolution, of making a privileged section, as the hon. member for Charlevoix had stated, of any section of the Dominion. He had seen a notice in the papers by an hon. gentleman from Quebec putting a duty on coarse grains, and he thought as an hon. member for Ontario, he had a right to put a duty on grain and flour. When our National Policy was introduced in 1873, he voted for a duty on flour as well as coal. He saw no objection to a duty being placed on bitumen coal of 50c. per ton, which would enable Nova Scotia coal to be delivered as cheaply in Ontario as coal from the other side, but anthracite coal, which was not a product of the country, should be admitted free. He believed Ontario could supply the Lower Provinces with all the flour they required, and receive in exchange, their coal, and fish, and whatever they produced. He regretted very much the manner in which the right hon. member for Kingston had taken him up on this question. He had always voted in the direction of bringing round a sort of reciprocity treaty. He had voted for the amendment of the right hon. member for Kingston, and regretted that amendment had not been carried; but when this had failed, he considered his separate motion should be carried. He regretted that the hon. member for West Northumberland (Mr. Kerr), who as a lawyer, should have used more courteous expressions, should have characterized as a bungling one the most important motion which could be submitted during the debate; but before the hon. gentleman got through with his next electoral contest he would find that the question would have to be met with something more than by the statement that it was a dangerous and disreputable motion.

MR. STEPHENSON said he congratulated the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Brown) and the hon. member for East Durham (Mr. Ross) on having submitted the motion to the House. It was, however, a matter for regret, that one of the hon. members opposed the motion proposed by the right hon. member for Kingston on the question of Protection, which motion covered the whole subject. As the present motion had been brought forward, he, as a representative of a Western Canada constituency, would vote for it as a small instalment in the right direction. The farmers of Western Ontario were in favour of the proposal contained in the present motion, notwithstanding the statement of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Kerr) to the contrary; indeed, if a vote were taken in the hon. gentleman's constituency, the opinion would be expressed that the constituency was not in favour of the opinion expressed by their representative. The hon. member for Hamilton had used an expression that might sound very well in Hamilton, but would not be deemed to have the true ring by the country. He (Mr. Stephenson) knew that the farmers and manufacturers in his part of the country were prepared to pay a tax on coal, as they had paid their share towards the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, in order to bring coal from the east to the west, and to send flour down to the Maritime Provinces. He regretted to notice that some hon. members, claiming to be members of the ruling political party, advocated the adoption of a sectional policy. He hoped such a policy would be abandoned, and that our young men would be brought up to support a national policy, as not only suitable to Ontario, but to all the other Provinces of the Confederation. They must rise superior to the little parish politics which we had been talking about for many years, and a degree of liberality must be shown that had not yet been displayed by certain parties. Ontario, as the premier Province of the Dominion, possessed a degree of liberality that had not been shown by other sections. Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and part of Quebec, were naturally manufacturing Provinces, while Ontario and Manitoba formed the great agricultural Provinces; and under those circumstances, it behoved them to adopt the fiscal policy of the United States. He had seen our markets demoralized by corn brought in from the United States, causing a fall in the price of from 65c. to 40c. per bushel. It was argued that the fall in price benefitted the consumer. He believed such was not the case, for it demoralized the market. The same state of things occurred with respect to wheat. Our wheat which one day was sold at $1.10, was perhaps on the following day reduced in price to 95c. by the arrival of wheat from Chicago or Milwaukee. A fiscal policy should be adopted that would assist farmers and mechanics alike. He was prepared to vote for the amendment as an instalment of a National Policy.

MR. BROWN.

Amendment (Mr. Brown) negatived on the following division:

YEAS:

Messieurs

Bowell,	McCallum,
Brown,	McGregor,
Cameron,	McQuade,
Campbell,	Monteith,
Farrow,	Orton,
Fraser,	Platt,
Gibbs (North Ontario),	Robinson,
Gibbs (South Ontario),	Rocheester,
Haggart,	Ross (East Durham),
Jones (South Leeds),	Ryan,
Kirkpatrick,	Stephenson,
Little,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Macdonald (Kingston),	Wallace (S. Norfolk),
Macmillan,	White (Renfrew).—26.

NAYS:

Messieurs

Appleby,	Irving,
Archibald,	Jetté,

Aylmer,
 Baby,
 Bain,
 Barthe,
 Bécharde,
 Benoit,
 Bernier,
 Bertram,
 Biggar,
 Blackburn,
 Blain,
 Blake,
 Blanchet,
 Bolduc,
 Bordon,
 Borron,
 Bourassa,
 Bourbeau,
 Bowman,
 Boyer,
 Brooks,
 Brouse,
 Buell,
 Bunster,
 Burk,
 Burpee (St. John),
 Burpee (Sunbury),
 Carmichael,
 Cartwright,
 Casey,
 Casgrain,
 Charlton,
 Cheval,
 Christie,
 Church,
 Cimon,
 Coffin,
 Colby,
 Cook,
 Coupal,
 Currier,
 Cuthbert,
 Daoust,
 Davies,
 Dawson,
 Delorme,
 Desjardins,
 De St. Georges,
 DeVeber,
 Devlin,
 Domville,
 Dugas,
 Dymond,
 Ferris,
 Fiset,
 Fleming,
 Flynn,
 Forbes,
 Frechette,
 Galbraith,
 Geoffrion,
 Gibson,
 Gillies,
 Gillmor,
 Goudge,
 Greenway,
 Guthrie,
 Haddow,
 Hagar,
 Hall,
 Holton,
 Horton,
 Huntington.
 Hurteau,

Jones (Halifax),
 Kerr,
 Killam,
 Kirk,
 Laflamme,
 Lajoie,
 Lande, kin,
 Langevin,
 Langlois,
 Lanthier,
 Laurier,
 McDonald (Cape Breton),
 MacDonnell (Inverness)
 Macdougall (East
 Elgin).
 McDougall (S. Renfrew)
 MacKay (Cape Breton),
 McKay (Colchester),
 Mackenzie,
 McCraney,
 McGreevy,
 McIntyre,
 McIsaac,
 McNab,
 Malouin,
 Masson,
 Metcalfe,
 Méthot,
 Mills,
 Mitchell,
 Montplaisir,
 Norris,
 Oliver,
 Ouimet,
 Palmer,
 Paterson,
 Perry,
 Pettes,
 Pickard,
 Pinsonneault,
 Pope (Compton),
 Pope (Queen's, P. E. I.),
 Pouliot,
 Power,
 Ray,
 Richard,
 Robitaille,
 Roscoe,
 Ross (Prince Edward),
 Rouleau,
 Roy,
 Rymal,
 Scatcherd,
 Scriver,
 Sibley,
 Short,
 Sinclair.
 Skinner,
 Smith (Peel),
 Smith (Selkirk),
 Smith (Westmoreland),
 Snider,
 Taschereau,
 Thompson, (Haldimand),
 Trow,
 Wade,
 Wallace (Albert),
 Wood,
 Wright (Ottawa Co.),
 Yeo,
 Young.—148.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

VI.—PENITENTIARIES.

36.—Halifax Penitentiary (balances to be transferred to Dorchester Penitentiary, if required)..... $24,966.35

In answer to Mr. LANGEVIN,

MR. LAFLAMME said that the reduction related to cost of maintenance. The number of convicts had been the same, 90 this year and 90 last year. A large sum was last year wanted to manufacture brooms and pails. The market had been overstocked this year, and the quantity supplied for manufacturing being sufficient, exempted them from demanding any appropriation in this respect.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: What description of industry is now carried on in the Halifax Penitentiary, and is it done by contract?

MR. LAFLAMME said the work was not contracted for, and the prisoners made pails, tubs, etc.

Vote agreed to.

37. St. John Penitentiary (balances to be transferred to Dorchester Penitentiary, if required)..... $41,806.00

MR. DOMVILLE asked what was the nature of the complaints with reference to that establishment, as to the taking away money from prisoners?

MR. LAFLAMME said no irregularities had come under his knowledge.

MR. DOMVILLE said it had been stated that the money of the prisoners was not forthcoming.

MR. LAFLAMME said that, if an opportunity were afforded, he would look into the matter.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said no further public funds should be voted to a public institution until such a charge as that was cleared up.

MR. DOMVILLE said the charge was that one of the officers had been superannuated, and that the man who had been put in his place was older, which was a reflection upon the Government idea of superannuation.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said that he had heard of the matters which the hon. member for King's had mentioned. He had heard that the convicts had, in fact, been robbed. These were serious statements. If true, it showed a very grave irregularity.

MR. LAFLAMME: I would be much obliged to the hon. member for King's if he would inform me whether he alludes to the Warden or some other officer.

MR. BURPEE said that the man who was superannuated was not younger than the one this person replaced. The present Warden was a good many years younger than the late Warden. This irregularity had been thoroughly investigated by the Inspector of Penitentiaries, who had made a full and exhaustive report to the Department, though he did not remember the particulars.

In answer to Mr. LANGEVIN,

MR. LAFLAMME said that no occupations other than those followed during previous years had been found for the convicts at Halifax. An attempt at broom and pail making had been made last year, and a certain quantity of material for that purpose had been purchased. This year the convicts would be similarly employed, and the material purchased last, would suffice for this year.

MR. MACKENZIE said that a good deal of labour had been done at the Kingston Penitentiary in connection with the new building in the Maritime Provinces. The whole of the iron work for the new penitentiary had been executed in Kingston. The frogs for the Pacific Railway were also made at Kingston, and these were somewhat expensive articles.

MR. JONES (South Leeds) said the occupants of the penitentiaries were altogether too well fed and well looked after, and it was, under those circumstances, too bad that their labour should be brought into competition with the honest labour of the country.

Vote agreed to.

38. St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary.....$84,278 09

MR. LAFLAMME said the increased vote had its origin in the necessity for making the penitentiary complete as regarded the outer walls, and other matters of that kind.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

MR. CAMERON called attention to a great discrepancy in the maintenance account of this penitentiary as compared with that of the Kingston Penitentiary. While the expense of maintaining 264 convicts in the former was $34,130, the expense of maintaining 765 in the latter was only $63,736. These were entirely disproportionate.

MR. LAFLAMME said the rate per capita was just the same as it was last year. In the item of maintenance were included the cost of removing convicts from the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary and several other items. Moreover, the farm of Kingston Penitentiary was very productive, while there is scarcely any revenue in this respect in the other. He promised to lay before the Committee a detailed statement of the maintenance accounts of the two institutions.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said the comparison between the expenditures at the Kingston and St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiaries, spoke very favourably of frugality and good management on the part of the Warden of the Kingston institution.

MR. MACKENZIE said it was the only complete penitentiary we have, and a comparison of the other penitentiaries with it would be manifestly unfair to the former. He pointed out that the item of maintenance included heating, provision, clothing, etc.

MR. HAGGART said the proposition of expenditure for the guards in the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary should be the same as for those at Kingston, whereas it was a great deal more. There were more keepers in the former institution than there were at the latter, while the number of prisoners was considerably less.

MR. LAFLAMME said the keepers were trade instructors.

MR. LANGEVIN pointed out that under that arrangement there would be more instructors at St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary than at Kingston.

MR. LAFLAMME stated that the large number of guards at the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary was necessitated by the state of the buildings, and no more were employed than were absolutely necessary.

MR. MACKENZIE said a detailed statement of the work on which the prisoners had been engaged could be found in the report. The convicts, for instance, had done $12,630 worth of masonry, carpentry and blacksmith's work for the Public Works Department, and $21,507 worth for the penitentiary.

Vote agreed to.

30. Manitoba Penitentiary.....$19,468
40. British Columbia Penitentiary... 20,950

Votes agreed to.

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolutions reported.

House adjourned at
Fifty-five minutes past
One o'clock

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 9th April, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

EXAMINING WITNESSES ON OATH.

RESOLUTION PROPOSED.

MR. YOUNG moved:

"That it is desirable that any witness to be examined by the Standing Committee of Public Accounts in connection with the expenditure of public money by the purveyors of the Government in the North-West should be examined on oath."

Motion agreed to.

IMPRISONMENT IN DEFAULT OF SURETIES BILL.—[BILL No. 73.]

(Mr. Laflamme.)

FIRST READING.

MR. LAFLAMME introduced Bill (No. 73) Respecting persons imprisoned in default of giving sureties to keep the peace. He said that it was intended to avoid the delay now incurred in bringing up such parties as were condemned to give such surety. They were now obliged to await the general gaol delivery or the Quarter Sessions, in which way they were often punished more severely by length of detention than if tried and convicted of the offence, and there was no occasion for them to be brought before a Judge to give such security.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he had no doubt the Bill was a very good one, but it was very late in the Session to introduce it.

MR. LAFLAMME said the Bill was a very simple one in its character and ought to have been passed many years ago. He had received representations from the Attorneys-General of the different Provinces showing the great injustice done to these parties under the present system.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he did not mean to dispute the Bill until he had seen it, at all events, but the Government must take the responsibility of introducing new measures at such a late period of the Session. If prorogation was delayed, the fault would not lie with the Opposition. It was not fair to take away private members' days in order to bring down new measures.

Bill read the first time.

MONTREAL INVESTMENT AND BUILDING COMPANY BILL.—[BILL No. 71.]

(Mr. Holton.)

FIRST READING.

MR. HOLTON moved the first reading of Bill (No. 71) (from the Senate) To confer certain powers on the Montreal Building Association by the name of the Montreal Investment and Building Company.

Bill read the first time.

THE QUEBEC CRISIS.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to state to the House and to the hon. gentleman at the head of the Government—as I have already done to him privately—that it is my intention to move, on going into Supply, at an early day, a motion, in order to bring under the attention of the House the late occurrence in Quebec. The resolution which I intend to move I shall, in the course of the afternoon, communicate to the hon. gentleman at the head of the Government. I would like a day fixed for the purpose of discussing this very important question. I would suppose that the hon. gentleman would allow it, by general consent, to be brought up on going into Supply on Thursday, and I shall then move my resolution on the motion that the Speaker do now leave the Chair. I intend to bring up the constitutional question, as much as possible, on its own merits, and try to raise the question out of the slough of Party.

MR. MACKENZIE: I shall have great pleasure in facilitating the purpose which the hon. gentleman has, and I am glad to see he proposes to discuss this matter upon its own merits, entirely apart from the slough of party politics. If that be the case, I think that the proper course for the hon. gentleman would be to bring it up as a substantive motion, and I shall afford every facility for doing so on Thursday. If it is intended, however, to move an amendment, of course the hon. gentleman will see that he is confining it in such a position that it is quite impossible to avoid the conclusion that there is something political in it. But if the hon. gentleman chooses to take what I offer, I think that it will dignify the discussion, and facilitate the object which the hon. gentleman has in view. It is a very important object, I admit, and one which it is desirable in the interests of the whole confederacy, perhaps, to discuss fairly on its merits, and this can only be done, I venture to say, in the way I have suggested.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I would have no objection to this proposition, but for this fact: I desire to make a certain proposition to the House, and to have it discussed on its own merits; but, if I make a separate and independent motion, it can always be avoided by a motion for the previous question, or a motion in amendment, giving the go-by to the principle laid down in the resolution, and pass to the Orders of the Day. Anything of this kind can be done; and, therefore, as it is a well-known principle that a motion which in no way affects the Government of the day in its terms, as it is not a vote of want of confidence or censure from any point of view, it is a grievance that should be made on going into Supply, which is the proper constitutional period for making such a motion. I shall then be obliged to move it. I will communicate this resolution to the hon. gentleman, and, if he makes any suggestion to alter and amend it, on which we can agree, I shall be most happy to settle the resolution, so that we can have it discussed on its own merits; but the hon. gentleman cannot engage for the House that no amendment will be made, even if he and I agree upon a proposition. He cannot control the House, and any member can make a motion which will prevent or intercept the consideration of the constitutional proposition which I desire to make. I, therefore, feel myself bound to move it on going into Supply; but I shall be glad to communicate with the hon. gentleman, and settle, if possible, on the question to be discussed.

MR. MACKENZIE: I am not sure that I could control myself more than the House, as to the moving of an amendment, because I do not know what the hon. gentleman's motion may be. It is quite possible that it is—and I think it is—one with which I could not agree. The hon. gentleman has not discussed the matter with me at all personally, and I, therefore, cannot tell what his motion may be; but, if it goes in a certain direction, I should feel bound, if an opportunity offered, to move an amendment. I tell him that frankly. The object of moving a motion on going into Committee of Supply, respecting a question of this kind, is not very apparent.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: That is the constitutional line.

MR. MACKENZIE: I think not. I think that another opportunity would be the best, though not for mere discussion, I quite admit; but, if the hon. gentleman wants to vote on any principle, he ought not to confine his motion to an occasion when there can be no amendment of his motion, because he is simply asking the House in that case to conform to his own view of a particular transaction, or else vote it down. While the House might concur with a certain portion of the motion, but not with the rest, we are obliged, on a motion in amendment on going into Supply, to accept whatever the hon. gentleman chooses to offer us, or to neglect it. The proposition is—take this or nothing. It is not reasonable that a matter of this sort, which has so largely engaged the public attention, and about which manifest difference of opinion as shown in the public Press, controlled, or influenced, I should perhaps rather say, by hon. gentlemen opposite, and in another portion of the Press, should be brought up in this way. It is quite clear that there is, and most probably will be, a difference of opinion. I do not desire at all to conceal from myself that, possibly, there may be a difference of opinion and, therefore, I should like my own opinions to prevail in any motion that is to be made, if I could induce the House to do so. The hon. gentleman will place his motion in such a way that it will be impossible for the House to give any opinion at all on it, except either to accept it or to vote it down.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Exactly.

MR. MACKENZIE: And for that reason, I think that the other course would be preferable; but, of course, I cannot control the hon. gentleman, who must form his own policy.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I want, Mr. Speaker, to have a vote in this House on the constitutional principle which I intend to submit to it. If that proposition is not acceptable to the House, then it will vote it down, and there is an end of it; but if it is acceptable, I want a vote on it; but neither I nor those who act with me and who wish to have a vote on the constitutional question, desire to have that proposition laid aside and another and a different constitutional question discussed by way of amendment. It is quite clear that if we have a distinct idea as to what the constitutional question is, I ought to have the right to bring it up in such a way as to have the opinion of the House on it, and I will submit, of course, if the House is not of the same opinion as myself; but I do not want the discussion to go off on another and a different proposition from that on which I desire to obtain the opinion of the House. The hon. gentleman, of course, cannot control the House; and, otherwise, any hon. gentleman who thinks with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie) can bring up the question in accordance with his view, in another and a distinct motion if he pleases.

MR. HOLTON said it must be quite obvious that if the right hon. gentleman desired to obtain the deliberate judgment of Parliament on this important matter, he could only get it by bringing up his motion in accordance with the suggestion of the hon. the First Minister, in a form in which it could be amended. The right hon. gentleman intended to adopt a form of words or submit it to the House in a connection in which it was not susceptible of amendment; and whatever shades of opinion there might be, and whatever choice there might be as to the form of expression, the hon. gentleman practically said to the House—"take this or nothing." That was not the usage in respect to matters of this kind. He happened to remember the course taken when the celebrated Government resolutions were proposed at Kingston, in 1841, by the late Mr. Baldwin, who brought them up as substantive propositions. They were amended on the motion of the Government of the day by the then Secretary, Mr. Harrison. The deliberate judgment of Parliament was, therefore, obtained, not merely upon the essence of the resolution, but on the form of words to be adopted; and these resolutions stood to this day as in some sort the charter of our liberties, as having established the principle of responsible government which had been in existence ever since. The right hon. gentleman, in introducing this resolution, having reference to the effect upon a system of responsible Government of certain proceedings recently at Quebec intended, it might be presumed, that there should be but one view in reference to this matter. He made no allowance for the existence of diverse opinions in the House, and seemingly wished to prevent the placing on record of any resolution which differed even in its form of words from that with which he clothed the opinion of the House, as stated by him. Nothing could be more unfair to the House. The right hon. gentleman had been afforded every facility by the First Minister to bring forward his motion at this stage of the Session, and if he was compelled to place it on the notice paper in the usual way, it would practically amount to telling him that the question could not be discussed this Session. When, therefore, he was offered the option of a Government day in order to bring forward his motion, fair discussion should be permitted upon it, in order that it might be set forth in a form which would represent correctly the deliberate judgment of Parliament on the matter. He must say that the right hon. gentleman was not doing even himself justice when he rejected the proposal of his hon. friend the First Minister.

MR. MASSON: I think my hon. friend from Chateauguay is greatly mistaken. I think he will remember that the resolutions passed in 1841 were introduced by the Government themselves.

MR. HOLTON: No; they were introduced by Mr. Baldwin.

MR. MASSON: Yes; and amended by Mr. Harrison.

MR. HOLTON: Mr. Baldwin was not a member of the Administration at the time.

MR. MASSON: They were produced as the wish of a majority of the people who protested against an act of the Government of the day.

MR. HOLTON: My hon. friend is mistaken. These resolutions were proposed in 1841, before the crisis of 1843, which he is evidently thinking of. They were proposed and introduced in the usual way, and were amended on the motion of Mr. Secretary Harrison, on behalf of the Government, Mr. Baldwin, at that time, not being a member of the Government.

MR. HOLTON.

MR. MASSON: The Government had, at that time, the whole responsibility of the motion. That is the difference between it and the present motion. I think, in a crisis like this, the Government should, themselves, be the parties to move in this question. I am sure my hon. friend from Kingston is ready, at this moment, to hand the whole question over to the Government if they will move themselves.

MR. HOLTON: Mr. Baldwin was not a member of the Government. He moved the resolution, and Mr. Harrison, on behalf of the Government, moved the amendment.

MR. MASSON: With the approval of Mr. Baldwin, because it passed unanimously. Every motion was moved by Mr. Baldwin, and every one was amended by Mr. Harrison, with the consent and approval of Mr. Baldwin. The Government, in that case, took the question into their own hands, with the consent of the party who moved the motions. My hon. friend from Kingston is ready to do the same thing at the present moment, and we will be glad to see the resolution which they in vindication of what they believe, as Liberals, to be right.

MR. DEVLIN: You will get that on the 1st of May next from those who have a right to render judgment on that question.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I think the hon. gentleman's remark shows how absolutely necessary it is to have this question brought up as a grievance. The time to move it is when we go into Supply.

MR. BLAIN said, before this matter was disposed of, he wished to express the opinion that the proposition of the hon. member for Kingston was one that the House ought not to accede to. He held that any member of the House had as good a right to move an amendment to a motion which might be brought before the House as the leader of the Opposition, or to bring before the House a proposition such as he proposed to bring. They were told, however, that they must either accept the proposition or reject it. Now, he would appeal to hon. members to say whether that principle had not been carried to a length which had interfered with the proceedings of the House and the interests of the people of this country. He could point to a resolution which was brought up and disposed of the previous evening by the hon. member for Northumberland. Many men in the House took a different view, and were prepared to move amendments to the form in which it was put before the House, but were unable to bring their amendments forward. He was sure the members from the Maritime Provinces and Quebec would only have been too glad to have taken another course.

MR. MITCHELL rose to a point of order. His hon. friend was evidently mistaken when he spoke of this motion having been moved by the hon. member for Northumberland.

MR. BLAIN said he had merely made a mistake as to the name, but not as to the principle. What he contended was, that, if the hon. gentleman desired fair discussion on his proposition, he would accept the offer which had been made by the leader of the Government. He (Mr. Blain) was prepared to say, knowing precisely the course the right hon. gentleman would take, that the resolution did not express the opinion of members of the House. He would, however, urge upon him the desirability of accepting the proposition of the leader of the Government, as otherwise he would be liable to the charge of having brought this resolution before the House for political purposes.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD said he was sorry he could not propose a resolution which would meet with the support of hon. gentlemen. One hon. gentleman who had spoken reminded him of the man spoken of by Shakespeare, who would not tell the truth because the devil bade him. For the same reason, that hon. gentleman would not vote for his resolution; and, because he was opposed to him in politics, he would vote either for black or white.

MR. BLAKE said he understood this motion was, in the first instance, introduced with the view of arriving at the opinion of the House upon this grave constitutional question. To that his hon. friend the Prime Minister said it would be better to permit a substantive motion, in order that the opinion of Parliament might be more correctly ascertained. The hon. gentleman, however, evidently wished to express the opinion of Parliament in his own way, and called upon them to vote either for or against the motion.

MR. MASSON: Then submit a motion yourselves.

MR. BLAKE said, in the meantime, they were discussing the proposition of the right hon. member for Kingston; they might move or they might not. The right hon. gentleman, as he had said, called the attention of the House to the subject, which he represented as one of great gravity, and he dignified and ennobled his motion by the contention that he was speaking above party politics. They felt delighted to know that it was possible this grave constitutional question might be discussed in that broad sense, but the hon. gentleman said, "No; we are afraid of Parliament; we fear that you may move an amendment; that you may express some opinion which we do not concur in;" and, therefore, the right hon. gentleman stood before the House and the country with reference to this subject, saying, "Such and such are principles of constitutional government, which the majority of the House believe in." But that appeared not to be the opinion of the majority, and yet they were not allowed to amend the resolution, thus being placed in the false position of being forced to vote it down. Though the hon. gentleman had assured them that he had brought his motion forward without partizanship, yet he refused to hear the opinion of the House on the matter.

RECEIVER-GENERAL AND ATTORNEY GENERAL OFFICES BILL —

[BILL No. 51.]

(Mr. Laflamme.)

THIRD READING.

Order for third reading read.

MR. LAFLAMME moved "That the Bill be not read a third time, but that it be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to] amend the same by substituting the following in lieu of section 5 :”

‘The Governor in Council may, from time to time, make regulations providing for such control of the Attorney-General over any person on the staff of the Department of Justice as shall seem requisite for the execution of the duties of the Attorney-General’s office.’ ”

Motion agreed to.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

Bill, as amended, ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Bill reported.

MR. LAFLAMME moved the third reading of the Bill.

MR. MITCHELL said that, as he intimated when the Bill was under discussion, he had expressed his serious objections to it, and his intention to move an amendment upon its third reading. One objection was that the Bill involved the creation of an office which he believed to be quite unnecessary. He had no objection to the second part of the Bill, which extinguished the office of Receiver-General, or rather amalgamated it with that of the Finance Minister. At the time when the Receiver-General was appointed, the time of federation, they could scarcely know what a country, extending as it did thousands of miles, would require for carrying on its Government. It had been found that the office of Receiver-General could be dispensed with, and he was sure there was scarcely a gentleman in this House who would not give his cordial support to the abolition of that office. So much for the two first clauses of the Bill. The other portion of the Bill gave the Governor in Council power to create a new officer, to be appointed Attorney-General, who should have a position as Privy Councillor. He was under the impression that when this economic Government came into power they would have reduced the number of these officers. They said, when in Opposition, that five or six members of the Cabinet were quite sufficient to carry on the Government of the country. They spoke of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, of which he was then the head, with sneers. They had stated their views in respect to the unnecessary large number of members of the Cabinet broadcast, and had said there were too many officers, and the Government might dispense with some of them. What did these gentlemen do when they came into Administration? One of their very earliest acts was to establish a fourteenth officer, which was continued until it suited the convenience of the member for South Bruce (Mr. Blake) to give it up. Now they wished for political influence to get a piece of patronage. For what other reason was this new appointment proposed? There had been no complaint that the work was too much for the head of the Department, and even if it were, would he ask for a partner, a Minister who would divide the responsibility with him? No; that would not be the course a gentleman who understood his business would adopt. He might come down and ask for a subordinate officer to assist, but he should not shirk his responsibility. For three or four Sessions the Finance Minister had intimated to this House that there was a deficit.

MR. LAFLAMME.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: No; twice.

MR. MITCHELL said the hon. gentleman came down the first Session he held the office, and told the House that the statement of his predecessor was an incorrect statement, not one based on facts, and that the amount of money required would, therefore, be far in excess of what was anticipated, and he asked for an additional taxation of three million dollars to be put on to meet the deficiency. Then, in the two following years, he intimated that there would be a deficit, and, in the present Session, he distinctly informed the House that, as far as he could judge from the returns, the probability was that there would be a considerable deficiency.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: No; I did not.

MR. MITCHELL: Did not the hon. gentleman say that he would resort to direct taxation if he had the means.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: You put words in my mouth that I did not use. I stated distinctly and repeatedly that if the revenue continued as good for the ensuing five months, there would not be a deficiency.

Mr. MITCHELL said he would accept that statement, as it clearly showed that his hon. friend knew the state of trade was in such a condition that he was not warranted in stating there would be no deficiency. This made four deficiencies, for he might accept the latter as an accomplished fact, and yet this Government came down and asked the House to create a new office. He would ask if the House was prepared, blindly, to adopt this Bill, saddling the country with a cost of $10,000 to $20,000 a year. He was surprised that, taking into consideration the distressed state of the country, and the fact that there had been four deficits, the Government dared to ask the House and the country to accept such a Bill. He would like to ask the hon. member for South Bruce how he could support such a measure. He recollected the hon. member's able speech at Teeswater, in which he took great credit to himself for having performed all the duties with a less staff, and at less expense than the right hon. member for Kingston had done. Had the Government not taken credit, since the opening of Parliament, for having reduced the expense of that Department. If it was desirable to reduce the staff and to lessen the cost, where was the reason to come down now and bring in a Bill, after having taken the credit of abolishing one office, to create another office and tack it on the Department of Justice. The two statements did not dovetail together. Either the predecessors of these gentlemen had discharged the duties well, or they had not. It had never been stated that they had not, and, therefore, it could not be justified to the country now to create a new office, taxing the people some $20,000 or $30,000 per annum, for the purpose of giving public patronage and enabling hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to retain power. He would simply move the amendment which he felt it his duty to move, and leave the responsibility to the House. He moved, therefore, in amendment:

"That the Bill be now read the third time, but that it be resolved that this House, while approving of the abolition of the office of Receiver-General as a step in the direction of retrenchment, is of opinion that the creation of an additional office in the Department of Justice entails upon the country an unnecessary charge and expense, not justifiable by the requirements of the Public Service, and therefore, that this Bill be referred back to a Committee of the Whole, with instructions that they have power to strike out all the clauses relating to the Department of Justice."

Amendment negatived on the following division:

YEAS:

Messieurs

Baby,	McDougall (Three Rivers),
Benoit,	McKay (Colchester),
Blanchet,	McCallum,
Bolduc,	McGreevy,
Bourassa,	McQuade,
Bourbeau,	Masson,
Bowell,	Method,
Brooks,	Mitchell,
Cameron,	Monteith,
Campbell,	Montplaisir,
Caron,	Orton,
Cimou,	Quimet,
Costigan,	Palmer,
Coupal,	Pinsonneault,
Cuthbert,	Platt,
Desjardins,	Plumb,
Domville,	Pope (Compton),
Dugas,	Pope (Queen's, P.E.I.)
Farrow,	Robinson,
Flesher,	Gibbs (Ontario, North)
Gibbs (Ontario, South)	Robitaille,
Haggart,	Rochester,
Harwood,	Roscoe,
Hurteau,	Rouleau,
Jones (Leeds),	Roy,
Kirkpatrick,	Ryan,
Langevin,	Schultz,
Lanthier,	Short,
Little,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Macdonald (Kingston),	Tupper,
McDonald (Cape Breton),	Wade,
	Wallace (S. Norfolk),
	White (North Renfrew)—64.

NAYS

Messieurs

Appleby,	Horton,
Archibald,	Huntington,
Aylmer,	Jetté,
Bain,	Jones Halifax),
Barthe,	Kerr,
Bécharé,	Killam,
Bernier,	Kirk,
Bertram,	Lafamme,
Biggar,	Landerkin,
Blackburn,	Langlois,
Blain,	Laurier,
Blake,	Macdonald (Centre Toronto),
Borden,

Borron,	McDonnell (Inverness),	Burpee (St. John),	McIsaac,
Bowman,	Macdougall (Elgin),	Burpee (Sunbury),	McNab,
Boyer,	McDougall (S. Renfrew)	Carmichael,	Metcalfe,
Brouse,	MacKay (Cape Breton),	Cartwright,	Malouin,
Brown,	Mackenzie,	Casey,	Mills,
Buell,	McCranev,	Casgrain,	Norris,
Burk,	McGregor,	Charlton,	Oliver,
Burpee (St. John),	McIntyre,	Cheval,	Paterson,
Burpee (Sunbury),	McNab,	Church,	Perry,
Carmichael,	Malouin,	Coffin,	Pettes,
Cartwright,	Metcalfe,	Cook,	Picard,
Casey,	Mills,	Davies,	Pouliot,
Casgrain,	Norris,	Dawson,	Power,
Charlton,	Oliver,	Delorme,	Ray,
Cheval,	Paterson,	De. St. Georges,	Richard,
Church,	Perry,	De Veber,	Ross (Durham),
Coffin,	Pettes,	Devlin,	Ross (Prince Edward),
Cook,	Pickard,	Dymond,	Rymal,
Davies,	Pouliot,	Ferris,	Scatcherd,
Dawson,	Power,	Fleming,	Scriver,
Delorme,	Ray,	Flynn,	Shibley,
De St. Georges,	Richard,	Forbes,	Sinclair,
De Veber,	Ross (East Durham),	Galbraith,	Skinner,
Devlin,	Ross (Prince Edward)	Geoffrion,	Smith (Peel),
Dymond,	Rymal,	Gibson,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Ferris,	Scatcherd,	Gillies,	Snider,
Fleming,	Scriver,	Gillmor,	Taschereau,
Flynn,	Shibley,	Goudge,	Thompson (Haldimand),
Forbes,	Sinclair,	Greenway,	Trow,
Galbraith,	Skinner,	Guthrie,	Wallace (Albert),
Geoffrion,	Smith (Peel),	Hagar,	Wood,
Gibson,	Smith (Westmoreland),	Hall,	Wright (Ottawa),
Gillies,	Snider,	Holton,	Yeo,
Gillmor,	Taschereau,	Horton,	Young.—108.
Goudge,	Thompson (Haldimand),	Huntington,
Greenway,	Trow,
Guthrie,	Wallace (Albert),
Hagar,	Wood,
Hall,	Yeo,
Holton,	Young.—105.

Bill read the third time.

MR. LAFLAMME moved that the Bill do now pass.

Motion agreed to on the following division:

YEAS:

Messieurs

Appleby,	Irving,
Archibald,	Jetté,
Aylmer,	Jones (Halifax),
Bain,	Kerr,
Barthe,	Killam,
Bécharde,	Kirk,
Bernier,	Laflamme,
Bertram,	Landerkin,
Biggar,	Langlois,
Blackburn,	Laurier,
Blain,	Macdonald (Centre Toronto),
Blake,	MacDonnell (Inverness),
Borden,	Macdougall (Elgin E.),
Borron,	McDougall (Renfrew),
Bowman,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Boyer,	Mackenzie,
Brouse,	McCranev,
Brown,	McGregor,
Buell,	McIntyre,
Burk,

MR. MITCHELL.

Daby,	McDougall (Three Rivers),
Benoit,	McKay (Colchester),
Blanchet,	McCullum,
Bolduc,	McGreevy,
Burassa,	McQuade,
Beurbeau,	Masson,
Bowell,	Méthot,
Brooks,	Mitchell,
Cameron,	Monteith,
Campbell,	Montplaisir,
Caron,	Orton,
Cimon,	Quimet,
Colby,	Palmer,
Costigan,	Pinsonneault,
Coupal,	Platt,
Cuthbert,	Plumb,
Desjardins,	Pope (Compton),
Domville,	Pope (Queen's, P.E.I.),
Dugas,	Robinson,
Farrow,	Robitaille,
Ferguson,	Rochester,
Flesher,	Gibbs (Ontario, North) Roscoe,
Gibbs (Ontario, North) Rouleau,	Gibbs (Ontario, South) Roy,
Haggart,	Ryan,
Harwood,	Schultz,
Hurteau,	Short,
Jones (Leeds),	Thompson (Cariboo),
Kirkpatrick,	Tupper,
Langevin,	Wade,
Lanthier,	Wallace (Norfolk),
Little,	White (North Renfrew).—66.
Macdonald (Kingston),
McDonald (Cape Breton),

NAYS.

Messieurs

Bill passed.

SUPPLY—THE TARIFF.

MR. CARTWRIGHT moved:

"That Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair for the House to go again into Committee of Supply."

Mr. Béchard and Mr. MacKay (Cape Breton) rose together.

MR. MACKAY (Cape Breton) said he had the floor before the hon. member for Iberville, and he was entitled to take precedence of him.

MR. SPEAKER said the hon. member for Iberville had had a motion on the paper for some time.

MR. MACKAY asked if the fact of having a notice on the paper entitled an hon. member to precedence over any other hon. member who saw fit to make a motion on going into Committee of Supply?

MR. SPEAKER: It gives him a claim to my attention as Speaker of the House, to which an hon. member who has not given such notice is not entitled. Under the English system, notice of motion is placed on the paper in all cases where an hon. gentleman wishes to move any motion on going into Committee of Supply. The Committee has so many notices on the paper that a ballot is had, and in that way it is determined who shall have precedence; but where a notice is placed on the paper it is intended for the eye of the Speaker, as well as for the eyes of hon. members, and he is, to a very great extent, directed by it.

MR. MACKAY: Mr. Speaker—

MR. SPEAKER: I must call the hon. member to order. The hon. member for Iberville has the floor.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I rise to a question of order. You, Mr. Speaker, have announced a certain ruling. The hon. member, if he dissented from your ruling, ought to have appealed to the House, and that can only be done without debate.

MR. MACKAY: I can say this—

MR. SPEAKER: The hon. member is called to order. I have no objection to discuss the matter—

MR. MACKAY: I do not wish to discuss the matter. All I desire to say is that you, Mr. Speaker, expressed an opinion before you allowed me to read authorities.

MR. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member please take his seat.

MR. MACKAY: What I desire to do is to read my authorities.

MR. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Iberville has the floor. If the hon. member (Mr. MacKay) thought he was entitled to the floor, and his question was entitled to precedence, he had the right to appeal to the House, without debate, and the House would determine whether he had the right to address the chair and make the motion, or not; but not having chosen to do that at the proper time, he has no right now to address the chair, the hon. member for Iberville having the floor.

MR. MACKAY: I wish to cite my authorities.

MR. BÉCHARD moved in amendment—

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the chair, but that it be resolved "That a large quantity of corn and oats having been imported into Canada within the last few years, this House is of opinion that the interests of Canadian farmers would be promoted by the imposition of a duty upon the importation of those products."

He said that, in 1875, we imported 3,679,686 bushels of corn, and in 1877, 8,260,039 bushels. It was true that a large portion of that quantity was re-exported; but, at the same time, there was about one-half of it left in the country. The trade in importing oats commenced in 1876, in which year 628,366 bushels were imported, and did not appear to have been re-exported. That trade, indeed, seemed to have been regularly developed, for in 1877 we imported 1,697,706 bushels, of which 1,025,872 were re-exported, leaving in the country 672,834 bushels. Our exportation of oats to the United States had decreased since that year very rapidly. In 1875, we still exported to the United States 1,315,692 bushels, while, in 1876, we exported to the same country only 88,372 bushels, and in 1877 only 7,378 bushels. Our exportation of oats would go on decreasing from the fact that the farmers of the Western States, during the last few years, had been growing that product very extensively. Already they produced a sufficient quantity to supply the United States market and had a surplus to ship to foreign markets. He was in favour of placing a duty on those kinds of grain, without committing himself to any Protection scheme. The manufacturers of the Dominion were already protected by a 17½ per cent. tariff, and while the farmer paid that duty on every manufactured article he used, he received no compensation in return. Prior to 1876, the manufacturers were protected by a duty of only 15 per cent., and yet they were prosperous. At the present time they were sufficiently protected, and did not call for more protection. He admitted that manufacturers had suffered during the depression, but they had not suffered more than the other classes. All classes of the people had suffered, and it would be manifestly unfair to tax the people for the purpose of alleviating the distress to a particular class. He referred hon. members to the tariff of 1866, in which a duty of 10c. per bushel was imposed on all imported grains, with the exception of wheat, and yet that tariff was not considered as part of any general protection scheme. In regard to the question of reciprocity with the United States, he had hoped last year that, with the changes that had taken place at the White House and in Congress, and the settlement of the fisheries question, an opportunity would have been offered to reopen commercial relations with the United States on a more liberal basis; and, he must confess, his expectations were not well founded. He was convinced in that opinion by the answer he had received from the Government to a question which he asked the Ministry at the opening of the Session. In his humble opinion—he might be mistaken, and he wished this was the case—they would not secure reciprocity of trade with the United States as long as that portion of the Washington Treaty remained in force which gave to the Americans the right of navigating our canals, and taking advantage of our fisheries on an equal footing with ourselves. With these remarks, he would leave the question in the hands of the House.

Mr. POPE (Compton) said that seven years ago he had spoken on this subject, and it had since been thrown up to him that he had then spoken and voted against the policy of laying a duty on flour. This was true, and to-day he would vote in exactly the same way, for the same reasons. He would vote against the motion of his hon. friend from Iberville, because it was a partial measure. He would no more support a partial measure in the interest of the Province of Quebec than in the interest of Ontario, as was seen the day previous. If they were to have a policy which would protect our industries, our manufacturers and our farmers, it must be a general policy, which would benefit all sections of the country. This result could not possibly be obtained by a partial policy such as the hon. gentleman proposed, and which would be unfair to the other Provinces. He could not by any possibility support such a motion. He was prepared, as he always had been, to consider any general policy of Protection intended to place the people of this country in a fair position in order to compete with the Americans. Some hon. gentlemen said that no Lower Canadian who would vote for a duty on wheat or flour could be found; but there was at least one that would be willing to do so, if it were in the interests of the whole community. If it were part of a general protective policy, he, for one, would vote for it. Nothing could induce him to vote for a sectional policy. He had and still advocated a protective policy which would enable us to compete fairly with our neighbours. He could point to a man in his own neighbourhood who had come there and commenced manufacturing, and, after having continued it a couple of years, he met this man one day, and what did the latter say? "I am going to leave this country; I cannot stop here; I am going back to New Hampshire." He asked the reason why, and the answer was: "These people on the other side of the line have got our market. They come here and compete with me, while I cannot send a single thing over there; but, if I move to New Hampshire, I will not only have that market but this one also, and so I am going to leave." This was not an isolated instance. Such things occurred every day. Not only so, but, while we were paying large sums for immigrants and immigration, to bring people to this country, its very best blood, the young men of the country, were leaving by hundreds and thousands. In his own neighbourhood, not a week before he left home, he saw a dozen young men leaving the country, where they had no employment, and going to the United States, where they could find employment and secure better pay. Such were the facts; and for this reason, it did not matter very much what was the price of flour, if we had Protection, and so long as they placed in the hands of the people the means of purchasing it and living. They preferred to pay a higher price for their flour than to be idle and get nothing. He would not vote for any motion affecting simply Upper Canada or any of the Lower Provinces, as he did not believe that it would be for the interest of the country to do so; nor would he vote for any measure that was not general in its nature and in the interest of the whole population and for the great good of the country. Such a scheme he was prepared to support. He would tell his hon. friend from North York that he had not altered his mind a single jot or gone back a single bit from the doctrine the hon. gentleman had accused him of having held a few years ago. He still stood on the same ground, and he would not support a partial policy.

MR. DYMOND: I congratulate the hon. gentleman on being as perfectly consistent in his speeches as he is in his votes.

MR. POPE (Compton): I shall vote this year.

MR. MASSON said that, if he rightly understood the motion which was first proposed by his hon. friend from Iberville, it was far more extended in its character than the motion now before the House, which he believed only included two articles. The motion, even as it was originally, excited grave objection. He had drawn the attention of the House, on the evening preceding, to a grave objection to it, which made him believe that the hon. gentleman was not really at all in favour of Protection, and that this was only dictated by motives of policy; and the fact of the hon. gentleman having narrowed his motion still further, proved to the House that he (Mr. Béchard) had no hope of its being carried. The hon. gentleman could not entertain such a hope. He would not say that the hon. gentleman did not desire to see it carried, for this would be unparliamentary, but the hon. gentleman could have no such expectation. If the hon. gentleman had moved for agricultural protection, as a whole, there might have been some reason for bringing this motion before the House; and, in that case, he would probably have done as he did last year, and vote for it, though he heartily agreed with Mr. Joly—and on this point he accepted Mr. Joly as his leader—who had told the people that it was absurd to believe that they could separate agricultural from industrial protection. Mr. Joly had declared most distinctly that protection to both agriculture and manufactures formed a good, strong team, powerful when they worked together, but almost useless when they were separated. Agreeing with Mr. Joly on this point, he thought he should be received into the good graces of the hon. gentleman opposite. He had worked with Mr. Joly at the time, and he was still ready to do so in this connection. He did not understand how these hon. gentleman who wished to plead in favour of agricultural protection, should so forget the principles of their party as to now come and take away almost the whole of this policy, and only leave these two articles in the list. What had these hon. gentlemen done with the question of animals? Did they propose to put us, in this respect, on the same footing as the Americans? Did the hon. gentleman propose to give reciprocity of tariffs, which was demanded in Lower Canada, with respect to animals, if we could not have Free-trade in the United States? No; but he left this matter out of the question. Again, did the hon. gentleman include in his motion pease, barley and other grains? No; but he only proposed duties on corn, which Lower Canada did not and could not produce, and on oats; consequently, he should vote against the motion.

Amendment (Mr. Béchard) negatived on the following division:—

YEAS :

Messieurs

Baby,	Macdonald (Kingston),
Barthe,	McDonald (Cape Breton),
Béchard,	Breton,
Benoit,	McDougall (Three Rivers),
Bourassa,	McCallum,
Bowell,	McGregor,
Bunster,	McQuade,
Cameron,	Méthot,
Campbell,	Monteith,
Caron,	Montplaisir,
Cimon,	Norris,
Costigan,	Orton,
Coupal,	Quimet,
Cuthbert,	Pinsonneault,
DeCosmos,	Platt,
Dugas,	Plumb,
Farrow,	Pouliot,
Ferguson,	Robitaille
Flesher,	Rochester,
Gibbs (Ontario North),	Rouleau,
Gibbs (Ontario South),	Ryan,
Harwood,	Thompson (Cariboo),
Hurteau,	Tupper,
Jones (South Leeds),	Wade,
Kirkpatrick,	Wallace, (S. Norfolk),
Langevin,	White (Renfrew),
Lanthier,	Wright (Ottawa).—54
Little,

NAYS :

Messieurs

Appleby,	Kerr,
Archibald,	Kilam,
Aylmer,	Kirk,
Bain,	Laflamme,
Bernier,	Lajoie,
Biggar,	Landerkin,
Blain,	Langlois,
Blake,	Laurier,
Blanchet,	Macdonald (Centre Toronto),
Bolduc,	Macdonald (Inverness)
Borden,	Macdougall (East Elgin),
Borron,	McDougall (Renfrew)
Bourbeau,	MacKay (Cape Breton),
Bowman,	McKay (Colchester)
Boyer,	Maekenzie,
Brouse,	McCraney,
Brown,	McGreery,
Buell,	McIntyre,
Burk,	McIsaac,
Burpee (St. John),	McNab,
Burpee (Sunbury)	Malouin,
Carmichael,	Masson,
Cartwright,	Metcalfe,
Casey,
Casegrain,
Charlton,

MR. MASSON.

Cheval,	Mills,
Church,	Mitchell,
Coffin,	Oliver,
Cook,	Palmer,
Davies,	Paterson,
Dawson,	Pettes,
Delorme,	Pope (Compton),
Desjardins,	Pope (Queen's, P.E.I.)
De St. Georges,	Ray,
Devlin,	Richard,
Domville,	Roscoe,
Dymond,	Ross (East Durham),
Ferris,	Ross (Prince Edward)
Fleming,	Roy,
Flynn,	Rymal,
Forbes,	Scatcherd,
Galbraith,	Seriver,
Geoffrion,	Shibley,
Gibson,	Short,
Gillies,	Sinclair,
Gillmor,	Skinner,
Goudge,	Smith (Peel)
Greenway,	Smith (Westmoreland),
Guthrie,	Snider,
Hagar,	St. Jean,
Hall,	Taschereau,
Holton,	Thompson (Haldimand)
Horton,	Trow,
Huntington,	Wallace (Albert),
Irving,	Wood,
Jetté,	Yeo,
Jones (Halifax),	Young.—144.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

VII.—LEGISLATION.

41. Salaries and contingent expenses of the Senate..... $51,518

MR. MITCHELL said he was strongly in favour of the Senate, of the action of which he had good reason to be proud during the past few years; but he, nevertheless, would like to know why an increase of $600 was proposed in this item?

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that the Senate had applied, through the Committee on Contingencies, for one additional page, at a cost of $150, and one additional messenger, at a cost of $250, while the item concerning unforeseen expenditure was increased from $4,600 to $4,800. The appointment of a house carpenter was also asked for, but this would not increase the expenditure in any way.

MR. TUPPER: There was a considerable increase from the year before.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I think not considerable; but there was some increase. We have very little power of controlling this item, for obvious reasons.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Is the house carpenter under the charge of the Board of Works?

MR. MACKENZIE: No.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Then he ought to be.

MR. MACKENZIE: He never has been. The Public Works Department takes charge of any alterations or any extensive repairs to the buildings proper; but everything connected with the desks, the upholstering of seats, and the mending of furniture is done by the house carpenter, who also has charge of the laying down of the matting and the oil cloths, and all kinds of work of that kind. Mr. Sinclair, the house carpenter, has been here since the beginning, and he is very efficient. These matters are now much better attended to than could possibly be the case if it were necessary to send requisitions to the Public Works Department.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I am aware of the irregular practice which has prevailed respecting the charge of these buildings; but, as I urged last Session, or the Session before, the Government should assume the whole charge of these buildings, and the house carpenter ought to be an officer responsible to the Government and the Department, and the Department to Parliament. This is the English and correct principle, as I think the hon. gentleman will admit.

MR. MACKENZIE: I quite admit it.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: Because it is the duty of the Government to furnish a fit place for Parliament to meet the Sovereign in; but in the Parliament House in England the very slightest change is made under the responsibility of the Government.

MR. MACKENZIE: I think that we hold the Sergeant-at-Arms responsible for the furniture and the charge of these buildings and the house carpenter, who is under his orders. I believe this work is done as well as it could be possibly done under the direct supervision of the Department of Public Works. I admit that it is better to concentrate everything of that kind, but it is found in practice really convenient to have the house carpenter at the command of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

MR. MITCHELL said he quite agreed with the views of the right hon. member for Kingston on this point.

Vote agreed to.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

42. Salaries, per Clerk's Estimate ..... $60,100

MR. CARTWRIGHT said there was an increase of $250, which was accounted for on page 31. In the first place, the office of Assistant Accountant had been abolished, but, on the other hand, it had been found necessary to appoint an additional French translator, in order to expedite the translation of documents. Of three junior clerks included in the last item, it would be found that one had been promoted to be a bookkeeper, with a salary of $1,000, and the salaries of the two others had also been increased. It was proposed also to raise the salary of the assistant French Journal clerk from $800 to $1,000, and an increase of $150 was granted to the assistant clerk of Votes and Proceedings. These were the only alterations, except a small increase to the clerk of the Public Accounts Committee, whose salary was raised from $1,100 to $1,200.

MR. LANGEVIN asked if the bookkeeper's appointment referred to was a new office.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said it was not exactly a new office, as no increase had been made in the staff. The only addition was the appointment of an assistant French translator, who was required under any circumstances.

MR. LANGEVIN said he admitted there was a necessity for an additional French translator. The work in that Department, he said, had been more satisfactorily performed this year than he ever remembered it to have been before, and he thought that in comparison with other employes, the officials in this Department were not sufficiently well paid considering the superior attainments which it was necessary they should possess.

Mr. SPEAKER said there had been a slight increase in the salaries last year; but, on the whole, the salaries had been very much reduced during the last few years. The gentleman who was appointed book-keeper was doing the work which was divided amongst three different officers, and his predecessor in that position had been superannuated for very substantial reasons. On making enquiry, he found that the expenditure for the staff of the House of Commons to-day was very little greater than the expenditure under the old Legislative Assembly of Canada twenty years ago, when there were but 82 members in the House.

Mr. MITCHELL: There was a great deal of corruption in those days.

Mr. SPEAKER said he would refrain from instituting comparisons in that respect at present. He believed there was no corruption in the House now, whatever there might have been then. It was considered desirable to keep this branch of the service within very narrow limits. On taking charge of the Department he found that the salaries of some of the superior officers were very low, having previously been reduced on the recommendation of the Committee on Contingencies. A motion was passed in the House after he became Speaker directing the Commissioners to enquire into the amount of remuneration paid to the permanent staff of the House, and expressing the opinion that their salaries should be increased. That enquiry was accordingly made and the salary of the Clerk of the House, which had for a time been reduced, was placed at the same figure as it had been at for twenty years. The salaries of other officers were increased, but notwithstanding that, the expenditure was less than it had at one time been, because offices which it was not deemed necessary to fill up were left vacant. Amongst these were two offices worth respectively $2,000 and

Mr. LANGEVIN.

$1,100, and by increasing the salaries of efficient officers, the work was done much better. He was glad to learn from the hon. member for Charlevoix that the French translating department was in so satisfactory a condition, as that was a point of which he had long been anxious to be assured, not having so much practical acquaintance with the subject personally as he could wish. He agreed with the hon. gentleman in thinking that the French translators were not sufficiently paid, considering their acquirements. The staff of sessional clerks in that department had been somewhat increased in consequence of a resolution come to two years ago, requiring that the translation of Private Bills should be made in the department officially, not as formerly by paying fees, but by the officers of the House, and that any fees paid therefor should go into the general fund. It would be found that a somewhat larger number of general sessional clerks had been employed last year because four of the permanent staff were unable to attend to their duties in consequence of sickness, and also because it was deemed advisable to copy returns coming down to the House to prevent their going astray, and leading to those recriminations which were so common formerly. In the department presided over by the Sergeant-at-Arms, the staff of messengers and pages, there was one less employé than in 1873, while the expenditure was about $1,550 or $1,580 less than 1875. On the most careful scrutiny of this department it would be found that while encouragement was given to deserving officers, the number was kept within due limits.

Mr. BLANCHET said it would be well to place before the House a list of the officers employed in the beginning of each Session.

Mr. SPEAKER: There can be no objection, if it is the wish of the House. Nothing of the kind was done in the past.

Mr. BLANCHET: It was asked for last year.

Mr. SPEAKER: Not till it was too late. A number of sessional clerks and others are not employed till a few weeks have elapsed, and very rightly so, because the Parliamentary business is light till then and it is difficult to furnish a list early. I might refer again to the point raised by the hon. member for Charlevoix, as to the salaries of sessional clerks in the French translating Department, I may state that I do not consider $5. a day sufficient, while other sessional clerks get $4. We have, however, engaged some young men to whom we pay $4 a day, so that there is gradation in remuneration as well as in quality of work.

MR. TUPPER enquired why there was such a large increase in the expenses for extra sessional writers, clerks to select Committees, witnesses and shorthand writers. There was an increase from $8,500 to $10,000, and as far as his observations went, there was not likely to be anything like the demand for these extra servants and shorthand writers as there was during last Session.

MR. SPEAKER said these estimates were made up by the Clerk of the House before the commencement of the Session. Last year a very large number of Committees were held, and a very large number of witnesses and shorthand writers had to be paid, and the clerk assumed that this being the last Session of the Parliament there would again be a large number of Committees.

MR. LANGEVIN said Mr. Speaker did not say that the $8,500 proved insufficient, and yet $1,500 more was asked for. If the last year's vote had not been sufficient the deficiency should have appeared in the Supplementary Estimates.

MR. SPEAKER said he had already explained this. More had been asked for because the Clerk thought more would be necessary. The estimate was mere guess work; it was based on the expenditure of last year, and the Clerk having found himself run close last year, had, he supposed, decided to ask for a larger sum in consequence. His own impression was that $8,500 would be quite enough, but before the commencement of the Session, there was no means of arriving at a conclusion with regard to it.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said there was no objection to make it $8,500. He might remark that he had already cut this item down.

MR. MITCHELL said he did not desire to find fault with the Clerk, but he would say in relation to these Committees, that there was a great deal of useless expenditure on witnesses, and special clerks and shorthand writers. There were too many of these investigations, and a great many of them resulted in nothing. Some had resulted in something, but there was, no doubt, too much of it, and the Government should take the matter into its special consideration, with a view to a reduction of this expenditure.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said he coincided with the remarks of the hon. member for Bellechasse who said it was desirable that a statement of the number of clerks, and especially of the extra or sessional clerks, should be laid on the table of the House in the early part of every Session, so that, when discussing this item, the House might know something of the requirements of the service. He would like to ask if the hon. the Speaker could state the number of extra writers employed this Session.

MR. SPEAKER: I really cannot tell the exact number. There are more than last year, for the reasons I have stated.

MR. KIRKPATRICK said he had before him the report of a Committee appointed in 1868, to consider the requirements of the House, and they appeared to have gone very fully into the matter. They reported that the number of extra or sessional writers should not exceed ten. At that time a large amount of business arose out of the great number of Election Committees. All this now was transferred to the Courts of Justice, and that ought to represent a great saving in the number of extra clerks required, instead of which the number had increased, and last year it was 30. He thought there would be difficulty in finding work for so many. He hoped this vote of $10,000 would be reduced.

MR. BLANCHET said he noticed that some of the French translators were paid $5 and others only $4 a day. He should like to know why such a difference was made.

MR. SPEAKER said the translators were appointed at $4 a day, the salary of ordinary sessional clerks, and if they were found thoroughly well qualified for the work of translators, the salary was increased to $5.

MR. DELORME said the French translator only received $1,000 a year, while his predecessor received $1,200.

MR. SPEAKER said it was customary to pay a junior official a less amount than a senior.

MR. BOWELL said he thought it was a good suggestion that a return of the number of clerks employed in the House should be laid before the House early in the Session, and he would suggest that there should be added to it a return of the parties by whom these appointments were recommended. The hon. the Speaker had certainly done this Session what had not been done before; he had certainly kept these clerks employed and out of the lobbies. He thought, if the hon. the Speaker could lay before the House all the names of persons who had recommended appointments and almost forced servants upon him, there would be a less number of such appointments made. The amount had increased from $208,913, asked in the Estimates for 1873-'4, to $296,768 asked in the present Estimates. He was aware that the principal items in which an increase had taken place were printing paper and bookbinding, which had run up from $35,000 to $70,000. The item under consideration at the present time for salaries per Clerk's estimate was $60,000. For the same item in 1873-'74 the sum asked was $77,000, which appeared to be $17,000 more than was now asked for; but in the estimate for 1873-4, were included present votes 42, 43, and 44, namely: salaries, per Clerk's estimate $60,100; expenses of Committees, extra sessional clerks, etc., $14,500; and contingencies, $19,600, making the sum this year $94,000, an increase of $16,000 or $17,000 over the amount asked for the same service in 1873-4. These estimates, at least, did not show the great decrease referred to by Mr. Speaker, had taken place. It was not his province to discuss the capabilities of the French translators. He agreed that a good servant ought to be well paid; but he thought it a bad principle to put three or four men into one place to do the work of one or two men. The translation of the debates of the House had been thrown upon the permanent translators, and it was well known that if a man worked after hours to do special work, he was likely to slight his regular work. He thought it was a mistake to put that work on the official translators. A great deal had been said in the different pic-nic speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, in reference to hon. members of this House, and some of them, Ministerialists, had gone so far as to charge hon. members on the Opposition side with occupying positions similar to those occupied by the gentlemen who had to resign their seats and go back to their constituents. So far as one hon. gentleman was concerned, that was not correct, and when the Premier stated that a certain hon. member on the Opposition benches occupied the same position as those to whom he had referred in reference to the disqualification which arose out of the infringement of the Independence of Parliament Act, he stated that which was not borne out by the facts, nor by any documents he had in his possession.

MR. BLANCHET.

MR. SPEAKER said he believed it was true that the French translation had, for some years past, been almost always in arrear; but he had to depend, to a great extent, upon the report of the head of that Department in reference to that matter. To make the work efficient, they had to employ additional translators, as it rarely happened now that a paper was printed in French in the first instance. It had not been by the action of the Commissioners that the translation of the Hansard had been imposed upon the translators, but upon the recommendation of the Printing Committee, and with the approval of the House. In regard to the question of the permanent staff, the reduction in the Accountant's office had been carried out in other Departments. Instead of bestowing some very desirable patronage, they had kept the same officers, gradually increasing their salaries and grade, so that they might feel that, as they deserved an increase of salary, they would be likely to receive it. In 1868 the members from the Lower Provinces were astonished at the amounts paid for salaries here, and demanded retrenchment. The result was that the members from the older Provinces carried the thing so far that the reduction in the expenditure could be maintained but for a very short time. The reduction was brought about to a great extent by a want of knowledge and experience. In the Department of the Sergeant-at-Arms, a large portion of the expenditure was for carpeting and repairs to furniture and oil-cloth and matters of that kind. This year there had been an increase in the number of sessional clerks, because four of the permanent officers had been disabled and their places had to be taken by sessional clerks. In addition to that the Clerk had thought proper, very rightly, that the originals of all papers should be left in his custody, and that hon. members desiring to have copies should be provided with them. However, the whole expenditure on account of these clerks was comparatively trifling. It was true that none should be employed for whom there was no work; but the work of the House was of a very uncertain character. Sometimes the clerks could hardly do the work that was required of them, and at other times they were comparatively idle. It was necessary to have them there in order to prevent loss of time to Parliament itself.

MR. BOWELL said the Speaker could scarcely have known who composed the Committee to whom was referred the settlement of the number of employes. The Hon. H. L. Langevin was the Chairman of that Committee, and certainly no inexperience could be attributed to him.

MR. SPEAKER: But he knew very little of the people of the Lower Provinces then.

MR. BOWELL said there was, therefore, no foundation in the argument advanced by the Speaker, for he had known the feelings of the people of the Lower Provinces, he supposed he would have cut down the number still more. But, as an old parliamentarian, he must have had good reason for moving the adoption of the report of that Committee. He (Mr. Bowell) was not aware that it was necessary to have a larger staff to keep this building clean now, than there was three years ago.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he would move in the 43rd resolution to reduce the sum to $12,800. He could not say whether that would prove sufficient, but it was clear it would be very easy for the next House to supplement it in good time, in case it was not enough.

MR. LANGEVIN asked, before this was carried, that the hon. the Speaker be requested to lay before this House a statement of the number of clerks employed last year, and those employed this year.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he would bring it down on Concurrence.

MR. MITCHELL said he saw in the list $1,100 for superannuations. He would like to have a list of these officers, and he would like to see who were going to be superannuated during the coming month or two. He had heard the names of officers bandied about as gentlemen likely to be superannuated, who were well qualified to retain their places, and who would be replaced by others not possessing the peculiar abilities and requisite experience to fill those offices.

MR. SPEAKER said, with regard to his Department, no superannuation had been made from political motives. There had been only three superannuations since his time.

MR. BOWELL said he did not see why the employes of this House should have their superannuation fees paid by the country, instead of being deducted from their salaries, as was done with the Civil Service employes.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said this had been introduced many years ago, and had, by lapse of time, become, to a certain extent, a part of the salaries of those officials.

Mr. WALLACE said the whole system of superannuation was wrong. He saw no reason why civil servants, like other people, should not be called upon to make provision for their old age, especially as they obtained regular salaries, and were as well, and perhaps better, paid than the same class outside the service.

Mr. McDUGALL (Renfrew) said there were two points involved, first, the policy of superannuation, and second, the anomalous position of the amount voted for the officers of the House. He would not say the amount should not be allowed the employes of the House, but if it were necessary it should be done by increasing the salaries and should not appear in its present shape in the Estimates.

Mr. BABY said it must be remembered that employes of the Civil Service occupied a different position from persons in different walks of life. No doubt they were frequently very anxious to obtain the positions to which they were appointed, but in those positions they were compelled to give their whole time to the work and could not engage in other pursuits. He held it was but fair that a public officer after 40 years' service should receive a pension, which was the practice followed in every country. In order to obtain efficient civil servants they must be properly paid, and provision made for their old age; and the country would not grudge the few thousand dollars expended for that purpose. What the people did not like was, that certain officers should be superannuated for political purposes. Very often, in order to make a place for a political favourite and so meet the pressing demands of a partizan, a good servant was removed and another appointment made. That was done by means of the superannuation fund.

Mr. PLUMB said he could not see any possible objection to the superannuation fund, but the question to be discussed was whether the superannuation fund of the clerks and employes of the House should be placed on a different basis from the fund provided by other employes of the Civil Service. He differed from the argument advanced by the hon. members for North Hastings and South Norfolk. He thought it was very desirable to keep up the tone of the Civil Service and to draw the best men into it; and in order to do that, the prospect should be held out that they would, in some degree, be provided for after they had ceased to be able to fulfil their duties. The great evil which they had to complain of was in the administration of the superannuation fund. He knew cases in which great hardships had occurred—he did not say they had been inflicted intentionally by the Government—which should not have taken place in the administration of the fund. That fund was a sacred trust, it was one supported by the civil servants themselves, and never should be administered to their disadvantage, or in an unjust manner, as he knew it had been. He was able to cite cases which would fully bear out that statement. It was exceedingly desirable that the civil servants should be kept pure, that they should have no temptation to embark in other pursuits secretly, or to attempt in any way to make money out of their offices; and the manner in which the superannuation fund had been distributed had tended to demoralize the service in the same way that the American system of the rotation of officers at the end of every election had tended to demoralize the service there. The Canadian Civil Service had been, so far as he knew, an exemplary one. The officers had been, as a rule, men of very high character and above reproach; but if they felt that they held their positions at the whim, caprice, or something worse, of the Government of the day, one of the great bonds which held the men together, and kept them as they were, would be broken. No officer in the public service should be superannuated except from incapacity through old age, or from incapacity through illness; and, in either case, there should be ample evidence adduced before that step was taken. It was perfectly certain there had been superannuations when no investigations had been made. He knew a case where a man who was perfectly competent to do his work and against whom no shadow of a complaint rested, was superannuated a short time ago on 40 per cent. of his pay. Another appointment was made, and, therefore, the Government, not only did the officer a great injustice, but added 40 per cent. to the expense. There was no examination in that case. He was not charged with having done anything wrong, because, if such were the case, the Government had no right to put him on a retiring allowance, but must dismiss him. That was one case out of a hundred, perhaps, of the same character. He believed the superannuation fund was a salutary institution, one which tended to keep up the esprit-de-corps in the Civil Service, and gave them some hope that they would not be thrown on charity when they were unfit for service; but the moment it was improperly administered it lost all its beneficial effect. And there were cases which might be brought to the cognizance of the Government, particularly in the Customs Department. The case to which he had referred had occurred in that Department, but he did not think it was ever brought under the notice of the hon. the Minister of Customs, because he did not believe the Minister would sanction the hardship imposed. He could give the hon. gentleman the names and particulars. The members of the Civil Service were not too liberally paid, and Parliament should do all that was possible, not only to make the service respectable, but to enable the Government to secure the most efficient men of the best character with the highest qualifications.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. SMITH (Selkirk) said it would be very much better for the Civil Servants themselves, that they should be liberally paid while in office, and not be superannuated. It would materially tend to develop habits of economy if the officers knew they must depend on their savings, while they held their positions, to make provision for old age. If they were prudent they would be able to provide for themselves equally as advantageously as under a superannuation system. While occupying positions, they should be liberally paid; but, at the same time, none should be kept in office who were not efficient.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John) said that any superannuation in the Customs Department that had taken place last year, was made in the public interest. If names were given, he would furnish particulars in the cases.

Mr. PLUMB said he would give the hon. gentleman the information in due time.

Mr. DESJARDINS said he could not agree with the view taken by his hon. friend from Selkirk on this question. The superannuation policy was in the interest of public service as well as in that of the public officers themselves. By providing for a fond de retraite in their favour, the Government was obtaining, as it were, a guarantee that these officers would attach themselves to their positions, and give to the country the benefit of the experience of long years passed in public service. As to these public officers, their salaries, whatever might be said to the contrary, were not at present so high as to render the economies suggested by the hon. member for Selkirk at all easy. It was well known, in fact, that the exigencies of their positions, and all the obligations which they were forced to meet, to place themselves in a proper position with regard to the social status which their employment called for, rendered it very difficult for them to even make the restricted remuneration which most of them received, meet their unavoidable expenses. He, therefore, believed that the Government did a paternal act in providing for these officials, and in providing for them a retiring fund which would be given them when age and infirmities prevented them from performing for the country the services which their present employment required.

Mr. BÉCHARD said that the salaries given to these officials were high enough to enable them to economise, with a view to old age. These persons were not pressed into the public service; on the contrary, on each occasion when such a position became vacant, there was a swarm of applicants for it. If a pensioning system existed, the officers themselves should take the initiative with regard to it.

Mr. PLUMB said he would name John Hall and Mr. Yarwood in this relation. Both were cases of extreme hardship.

MR. BURPEE said that Mr. Yarwood, of Chippawa, during the last six years, if he took this man's own letters for it, had not been in good health. During the last four years he thought that Mr. Yarwood had, on four or five occasions, obtained leave of absence, some for a long time, on account of ill health. The Inspector had several times reported in favour of his superannuation. At this port the Collector had a great deal of outside service, which this man could never have attended to during the last ten years. It was in the interest of the public service that this officer should be superannuated. A new officer had not been appointed in his place, but an officer from a port on Lake Erie, where he had nothing to do and a salary of $550, had been removed to this place, with the same salary. Mr. Yarwood had obtained $875. He thought that what had been done was clearly in the interest of the public service. Mr. Hall, of Niagara, was over 60 years of age, and there was no necessity in the world for two officers at this place. When Mr. Kirby was appointed, he considered that the two officers were not required. In both cases it was in the interests of the public service that changes should be made.

MR. PLUMB said that, if Mr. Yarwood did not attend to his work, the Government should not have given him a pension. The Superannuation Fund should not be charged with the support of an incompetent person. This was what he complained of. Mr. Hall was now as able to do the work as ever he was. He knew Mr. Hall perfectly well. Mr. Thomson was also employed at this place. Mr. Kirby had never undertaken to do the work of both the office and landing at Niagara. Because a man obtained leave of absence, this was no fault of the officer, and no ground for superannuation. The action of the Government in this particular had been very unjust. Mr. Yarwood's case was one of extreme hardship. He was acquainted with the facts. Mr. Thomson was put in Mr. Hall's place; and there were one or two applicants who expected to get Mr. Hall's office. A little delay had occurred in this respect, because it was impossible to fill the appointment without offending certain persons on the eve of the election.

MR. PLUMB.

MR. BURPEE said that the principal object they had in view was the abolition of both offices. Again, Mr. Yarwood was in ill-health, and both Mr. Hall and Mr. Yarwood were fit objects for superannuation. Mr. Harvey was employed after this Government had come into power, and he had been kept there ever since. Mr. Thomson worked in the summer on the boats, and in the winter his services were utilized, if necessary, by the Government.

MR. PLUMB said that he knew the facts; and both were cases of very great hardship, as he could show.

MR. MITCHELL said that the House was paying for the superannuation of its servants, while the principle was not adopted with regard to other public servants. This was wrong; all the employes should be treated alike. The principle to which he objected had not been adopted seven or eight years ago, but in 1873-4. This anomaly should be removed. He desired to see fair play.

Vote agreed to.

45. Publishing Debates.....$15,000.

MR. MASSON said that, as this subject was to come up in a few days, the consideration of this item had better be postponed.

MR. TUPPER said it had now better pass and be dealt with on concurrence, when it could either be retained or omitted.

MR. MITCHELL said he had heard that the abolition of Hansard was mooted. He was strongly opposed to such a proposition.

Vote agreed to.

45. Salaries and Contingencies per Sergeant-at-Arms Estimates.... $28,050

MR. CARTWRIGHT: A reduction of $800 on this item has been effected by the removal of one permanent messenger.

MR. MITCHELL: Is it the intention of the Ministry to take up and deal with the superannuation question? All the officers of the country should be placed on the same footing.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I do not think that we shall propose to extend this privilege to the other officers of the country. It is perfectly in the power of the House to deal with its own servants as it sees fit.

MR. MITCHELL said that they all knew this. If the Government would take no action, the onus of it would fall on the Opposition, or on independent members of the House. He would endeavour to take the constitutional course of dealing with it.

MR. MACKENZIE said that this matter had never been discussed until that evening.

MR. BOWELL said it had been mentioned almost every year.

MR. MACKENZIE said he did not recollect it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Mitchell) was a member of the Government which began this system, and he ought not to be very pronounced in his determination as to what ought to be done the very first evening of the discussion. His attention had not been directed to this matter until this evening. The hon. the Finance Minister had meant that this was more a domestic matter than almost anything else, as the House exercised a close surveillance over its own affairs. The Committee which the hon. member for Charlevoix presided over in 1868, was a Committee appointed by the House to supervise and correct the salaries as they then existed.

MR. BOWELL: It was a Standing Committee of the House.

MR. MACKENZIE said it was a Government Committee, which was specially instructed to go on with this business, and it presented a special report, which was discussed, and the recommendation adopted. The hon. member for Northumberland had raised a point which would no doubt be important to every one in the House as well as the Government; but he could hardly expect that the Finance Minister would be prepared at once to adopt his views, or give a decided opinion as to what ought to be done in the matter. Unquestionably, they had a right to reduce the salaries if they pleased; but would it be fair or just to do so? Some degree of consideration for them should be exercised, and an impartial enquiry should be made into the matter. No doubt the same rule which applied to one branch should apply to all the other branches of the public service; still, there were some officers, including the engineers for public works, who were not included in this superannuation fund, because they were not considered permanent, though, to all practical purposes, they were as permanent as other officers. These anomalies might almost be called the curiosities of the service, and they should be seriously considered with the view of introducing a general reorganization at a future date, when all the officers might be placed as nearly as possible on an equal footing.

MR. MITCHELL said the hon. the Premier was mistaken in saying that the subject was introduced by him (Mr. Mitchell). He certainly, however, had spoken with regard to it after it had been introduced by another gentleman. He accepted the statements made by the Premier frankly, as they were put forward, and hoped the grievance complained of would be rectified.

MR. BLANCHET said he did not think there would be much opposition to this item; at the same time he was glad the Government had assumed the responsibility of the vote. He would not discuss the law of superannuation, which was a very beneficial one, and must commend itself to all. The public certainly could not complain of a man receiving superannuation after, perhaps, thirty years' service, when he had regularly contributed to that fund out of his own salary for many years.

MR. BOWELL said the hon. gentleman's whole argument referred to those from whose salaries deductions were made for superannuation, but that had nothing to do with the class of cases under consideration, which, to all intents and purposes, was one of pensions. The system which prevailed at present of placing the management of the House in the hands of the Speaker and four members of the Privy Council was the same as that in England; but, if an hon. member, at any period of the Session, desired a Committee to investigate the affairs of the House and see whether some reduction or advance which the Commission had not taken into consideration should not be made, his request was generally granted.

MR. BLANCHET said he understood the difference between the cases, and he was glad the Premier had undertaken the responsibility of this special matter, because this was not a case in which superannuation was to be maintained out of the salaries of officers generally.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that, on the 18th June, 1872, the then authorities resolved "that all the salaries shall be paid to the officers and servants respectively without any deduction for the Superannuation Fund, and that the charges of 4 per cent. per annum required for that fund, shall be paid by the accountant extra the pay." That resolution was carried into effect, though it only appeared in the Estimates for 1873-4, and continued in force up to the present time.

MR. LANGEVIN said that concession was made because the officials of the House did not participate in the bonus given in the form of increase to other public servants.

MR. MACKENZIE: No bonus was given.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: No; not in 1872.

MR. LANGEVIN said he meant 1873-4. The salaries of the officers of the House were, in 1870 or 1871, reduced by the Committee of Contingencies, of which he was Chairman, and, in some cases, these salaries were reduced by 25 per cent. It was subsequently resolved that, in their case, this remission of 4 per cent. should be allowed; afterwards that was reduced to 2 per cent., the Government taking the responsibility of the measure. He was in favour of a superannuation allowance being given to all public servants, because it was an incentive to them to perform their duties faithfully. If Judges, after holding office for twelve or fifteen years, received two-thirds of their salaries—in some cases as much as $4,000—surely a person who had been in the service of the Dominion for thirty years, was entitled to some small superannuation.

MR. BOWELL.

Vote agreed to.

47. Grant to Parliamentary Library, including $3,000 for Law Books ..$10,000

In reply to Mr. LANGEVIN,

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he could not tell for how many years this grant of $3,000 for law books would be required; that would be a question for the legal members of the House to decide. He understood that a considerable number of law books was wanting to make the library as complete as it ought to be for general convenience. He thought that vote would have to be in perpetuo, or at least for many years to come.

MR. BABY said the vote of $3,000 should be continued for some years on account of a deficiency which still existed in the legal part of the library. For a number of years that portion had been completely neglected, and a Joint Committee of the House and the Senate came to the conclusion that means should be found to purchase certain books necessary to complete the library. Of course, that could not be done in a single Session, and the vote would have to be spread over a certain number of years.

MR. LANGEVIN said the library was very deficient in certain books—the statutes of the Dominion for example—which, although sought for repeatedly, could but rarely be obtained. Another point in which the library was deficient, was in legal text-books. He thought that for the purpose, of reference two copies of these text-books should be provided.

MR. BABY said it very often happened that members obtained books from the library and neglected to return them, so that it might happen that, although in some instances there were five or six copies of the same work, not one of those copies could be found in the library.

MR. JONES (South Leeds) said that he thought other interests, as well as those of law, should be well represented in the library. He had occasion to refer to an agricultural work which had been published for a great number of years, but found that the work had not been purchased since 1873, and he desired to see the volume for 1877. He thought that the library should contain more text-books with reference to agriculture.

MR. BLANCHET said he knew it was a difficult matter for the Library Committee to please all in their selection of books but, generally speaking, on all branches of literature, science and art, we had a fine library. The members of the House generally had several times been invited to offer suggestions as to what books should be purchased, and such a case as that referred to by the hon. member for Leeds could easily be remedied.

MR. MASSON said he agreed with the hon. the Finance Minister that the library should be as complete as possible, but there was one branch which was a particular feature in other large libraries that was here wanting, viz.: manuscripts, of which there were few in this library. There were a number of valuable and interesting manuscripts in the various Departments, and if room could not be found for them in the library, or if Government objected to the documents being removed, a good catalogue of the information they contained should be found in the library. As to agricultural books, he thought they had as good a collection as could be met with.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said, perhaps, it would meet the views of the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Masson) if they had a good catalogue made of these manuscripts; and, secondly, as undoubtedly some of them were of value, these might be duplicated by one of the officers of the library. He was afraid that, as matters now stood, the amount of space at their disposal was getting so limited that these manuscripts to which the hon. gentleman referred, could not be stored in the library if they amounted to any number.

MR. BABY said greater care should be taken in the purchasing of books.

The librarian seemed to leave it entirely to the printers and publishers, and his correspondents in London, Edinburgh, and elsewhere, and many of the books now in the Library were completely worthless.

MR. MITCHELL said he would like to know whether this estimate of $3,000 for law books was to be put upon the country year after year; whether it was put in by the Library Committee, and on what authority, and whose advice they expended that sum.

MR. MACKENZIE said it was not the Committee, it was the Librarian, and of course he had immediate means of becoming aware of the views of the Committee during the present Session, and was also made aware of the deficiencies by the Judges connected with the Supreme Court, and other legal authorities. In that way he was enabled to make an estimate of the proper amount required to find the books that were still required to complete a good legal library. It was a matter of the utmost importance, that in a country where there were few other large libraries, there should be a good library in the Parliament Buildings. In Toronto there was an exceptionally fine law library at Osgoode Hall, superior, as yet, to the one here. It was important that they should have in the Parliamentary Library all the text books, law reports, and other legal books which were constantly required in reference to cases which were to be tried before the Courts. That large amount would not be required after next year, and the law library, with the exception of the current law literature, would be complete.

MR. PLUMB said it was complained that the library did not supply sufficient accommodation, and yet ephemeral works of fiction, by authors who had never been heard of, were allowed to accumulate. He thought greater discrimination should be exercised in the choice of books.

MR. LANGEVIN said that, in the days of the late Administration, they had the whole French archives from 1871, and these might be collected with the manuscripts to which the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Masson) had referred. And if they could not be placed in the library, "perhaps a large room might be found for their reception in the western block. He might add that it had been suggested to him that the library was deficient in medical works.

Vote agreed to.

48. Salaries of officers (additional) and contingencies of library 1878-9.....	$5,000
--	---------

Mr. CARTWRIGHT said this increase of $1,500 was required to provide two additional messengers, who were paid a somewhat larger salary than ordinary messengers, as they were employed to some extent in a literary capacity, having occasionally to discharge the duties of the other officers when absent.

Mr. LANGEVIN said he had frequent occasion to refer to the officers of the library, and found that they performed their duties with great care, and it would be difficult to find a better staff.

Vote agreed to.

49. Printing and binding and distributing the laws.....	$12,000
50. To meet the estimated expenses in connection with consolidation of the laws.....	$8,000

Mr. LAFLAMME said the gentleman who had been connected with the consolidation of the Statutes of Ontario had been selected by the Department to prepare the work of consolidation of the Statutes of all the Provinces.

Mr. LANGEVIN: Who is he and what is his salary?

Mr. LAFLAMME: Mr. Lancton, Toronto.

Mr. BLAKE said he had made the arrangements. Mr. Lancton would be paid at the same scale for the same services which he had performed for Ontario. He was paid, if his memory served him right, at the rate of $4 per day; six hours work to constitute a day. His salary for continuous service would amount to about $1,200 per year.

Mr. LANGEVIN.

51. Printing, Printing Paper, and Book-binding.....	$70,000
52. Contingencies of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.....	$1,200
53. Miscellaneous Printing.....	$2,000

VIII.—ARTS, AGRICULTURE AND STATISTICS.

54. To meet expenses in connection with the care of the Archives.	$3,000
---	---------

Mr. BABY said there were in the British Museum and in the Marine Department in Paris large and interesting collections of manuscripts with respect to the early history of this country. In the State Libraries of Boston, New York and other cities, copies of some of those manuscripts were found. The Canadian Government had sent two officers—one to England and the other to France—to ascertain what would be necessary to be copied, and they had made very valuable and interesting reports, which had been laid before Parliament. At his (Mr. Baby's) suggestion, the hon. the Minister of Finance had promised that a certain sum should be set apart and gentlemen appointed to visit the British Museum and the Marine Department at Paris to obtain copies of those manuscripts. The most valuable collections were the "Dorchester papers" and another batch of papers which related to the early constitutional history of English rule in this country. He hoped the hon. Minister would be able to promise that an officer would be sent out during next summer to make such selections as were necessary.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: I understand from the hon. Minister of Agricultural and Statistics that a very considerable quantity of documents is expected to arrive within a few days. I understand him to say they have been prepared in Paris by one of the gentlemen to whom the hon. member had referred. I also understand that copies are at this moment being made both in London and in Paris, I presume, of some of the documents the hon. member has just alluded to. There can be no doubt, as I have more than once stated, that it is very desirable that we should have these manuscripts in our own custody. I know myself, having had occasion to make research of documents from the period of the Treaty of Paris down to 1792, there is great difficulty in obtaining any reliable information, and that anything that will throw light on that period cannot fail to be, not only interesting but important, with a view to any future history of this country that may be compiled. The matter is in hands at this instant.

MR. LANGEVIN said that in addition to the valuable manuscripts mentioned by the hon. member for Joliette as being in the British Museum and at Paris, he understood that at Halifax there were very important documents relating to the early history of Canada under the French régime, and that if an officer were employed there during a few months, he would be able to prepare a valuable collection of manuscripts for the Parliamentary Library. If there was a special library for manuscripts, many persons in the different Provinces who possessed manuscripts would be willing to deposit them and hand them over to the Dominion. He (Mr. Langevin) had a valuable manuscript of the early history of this country under English rule, which he would be prepared to deposit, if such an arrangement were made.

Vote agreed to.

55. To meet expenses in connection with the organization of the Patent Record..... $7,200

In reply to Mr. POPE (Compton),

MR. MACKENZIE said that $8,000 was expended on the Patent Record last year. It had been found that the grant must be increased or the publication cease, which was not desirable.

In reply to Mr. LANGEVIN,

MR. CARTWRIGHT said the number of patents issued was 1,382 for the calendar year 1876, and 1,353 for the calendar year 1877.

MR. MACKENZIE: That simply means whether we will raise the price of patents or not. We cannot charge more than the law provides for.

MR. POPE (Compton) said that the price was fixed by law, and in accordance with a sort of reciprocity between this country and the United States and other countries; and the prices had been regulated accordingly. If they met people in the spirit they desired, they could not very well fix the price much above the price settled upon in these other countries.

MR. TUPPER said he did not understand that the object of this publication was to advertise patents for patentees.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: No.

MR. TUPPER said that its only object was to give information to the whole country, and to make inventors acquainted with existing patents in order that they might not uselessly waste their energies. He thought that it was also valuable in stimulating the inventive disposition which tended in a great measure to the production of labour-saving machines which were valuable to the whole country. He did not regard it as of service to inventors simply.

MR. POPE (Compton) said that a large amount of this expenditure was paid by fees. Last year 757 patents were taken out in the United States and 533 in Canada. In fact, the revenue derived from patents defrayed all the expenses of the Patent Record, and almost all the expenses connected with the Department of Agriculture.

Vote agreed to.

56. To meet expenses in connection with the preparation of Criminal Statistics..... $5,000

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that this was provided for by the Act of 1875 or 1876. He fancied that very little of the vote had been expended in 1876-7.

MR. BLAKE said that the organization of this system took place in October before last. He thought that the expenditure would appear in the statement for this financial year. He believed that this money was not expended last year. October last would complete the first year. He thought that the Act provided for the return being laid before Parliament annually. He had been responsible for recommending the passage of the Act, and he confessed he did not anticipate any great results for the first year. Such returns were very incomplete at the outset. Their plan was to arrange with such other Provinces as either had inaugurated or would inaugurate a system of statistics, and supply information as far as it went. A very satisfactory system existed in Ontario, and a tolerably satisfactory one, he believed, in the Province of Quebec. He could not say how this system had turned out.

MR. MACKENZIE said that the results had not been very complete; but it was hoped that, before Parliament rose, the Department would be able to place before the House the results up to a very late period. A good deal of difficulty had been experienced in getting the Act into operation, and it became impossible to obtain the information in such a shape that it could be presented to Parliament early in the Session; and it was not yet completed, though nearly so.

MR. LANGEVIN: What arrangements were made?

MR. MACKENZIE said that, in the first year, an elaborate table, giving the form the statistics should assume, was prepared, and communication was then had with the members of the Local Governments, and means were thus taken to secure the statistics required. All this had taken a great deal of time. Blanks had to be printed and distributed, and the returns, of course, for the first year, necessarily came in slowly. Many had to be returned, and more correct information obtained.

MR. LANGEVIN: Has a portion of this money to be paid to the Local Governments?

MR. MACKENZIE: Yes; certain fees are paid to parties who collect this information.

MR. BLAKE said that the Act provided for a scale of fees which might be paid to the officers with which the Government communicated directly. The Government could also pay a lump sum by arrangement to the Local Governments, to be expended in the same manner.

MR. TUPPER said he thought that this was the proper opportunity to draw the attention of the hon. the

MR. BLAKE.

First Minister to the great importance of extending this statistical system to other branches. He could not see why it was not equally important to have vital statistics relative to the proper registration of births, marriages and deaths, and the collection of other vital statistics bearing on the condition of the country. This was a matter of very great moment. He believed that a system of vital statistics, showing as it would the great salubrity of our climate, would be attended with great benefit, and be valuable in inducing people in other countries to take up their residence here. He also wished to draw the attention of the hon. the Minister to what he regarded as a distinct breach of faith on the part of the Government with the Province of Nova Scotia. This Province had provided by law for a system of birth, marriage and death registration, which was tolerably efficient at the time of Confederation. The collection of statistics, under the Confederation Act, was made the sole duty of the general Government, and in conformity with this provision, the Department of Statistics for Nova Scotia was transferred to the Dominion Government. This service was carried on under the late and the present Government. The latter, moreover, had superannuated the officer in charge of the Department and appointed a successor, who, a few years ago, was also superannuated, with two clerks. A heavy charge was thus made to devolve upon the country, and the work itself was abandoned and allowed to fall into desuetude. He thought that this was just ground of complaint, because he held that it was not within the right of the Government to dispense with a service provided for by law in any of the Provinces of the Dominion, and which, under the Confederation Act, devolved upon the general Government. The consequence was, that in the whole Province of Nova Scotia, at this moment, there were no means of collecting the registrations of births, marriages and deaths; and its people could not have recourse to records which were at that time connected with matters of the most serious import. He felt that he would not be discharging his duty if he did not, on behalf of the Province of Nova Scotia, enter this complaint, and, as a member of the House, draw the attention of the Government to the importance of having some better system devised in order to deal with the very important question of vital statistics.

MR. MACKENZIE said that no one disputed the general proposition that it was extremely desirable to have a general statistical system. On the other hand, they had in Ontario a system of vital statistics carried on by the Local Government, and the Constitutional Act did not prohibit the Local Governments from doing this. In the Province of Quebec there was a parochial system of statistics under local authority. The system in Ontario was very expensive and complete. It took advantage of the municipal organization. In Nova Scotia such a system had been carried on to a certain extent, but it was of no use as it was. It had no counterpart in any other Province; and, while it was desirable to have a general system, it became quite clear that a general system of vital statistics could not be inaugurated without organizing the entire Dominion in such a way as would, certainly, cost a very large sum per annum; and the Government had felt that, at a time when the revenue was deficient, it would be improper to undertake a work which would cost, no doubt, not less than $200,000 a year, to do it effectually, and probably a good deal more—probably a quarter of a million. In Ontario the system cost a very large sum. His impression was that the expenditure under this head was $50,000 or $60,000, but he did not know the exact figures.

MR. POPE (Compton): This system is very incomplete.

MR. MACKENZIE said that it was apparently complete, but in practical results, no doubt, it was very incomplete. It would require a largely increased expenditure to make the system as complete as was required. The chief difficulty was found in regard to enforcing it in the rural districts. Two years ago, the Local Government had taken larger powers in this relation, and, since then, the system had been very considerably improved. In many districts it was now considered tolerably complete in its practical results. He had no doubt at all that the time had not yet come when they could venture upon organizing the whole country in this direction. It was a difficult country to so organize, though some districts were provided with the parochial system, or small municipal divisions, but a large portion of the country was not divided into anything smaller than counties, and had none other save municipal organization, and this in a very imperfect condition. Such a system would require a very careful system of subdivision, and a very large army of officers to secure complete returns.

MR. LANGEVIN said that the system of registering births, marriages, and deaths in the Province of Quebec, was quite perfect, and it had continued for many years.

MR. BLANCHET: We can never have anything better.

MR. LANGEVIN said he regretted very much that Ontario, which had organized a very unsatisfactory system, had not adopted that of the Province of Quebec, which was both excellent and economical. It required a very slight expenditure. The registration of births, marriages and deaths was made in Toronto, and the large towns of Ontario, in accordance with the law and the facts. If the Government would examine the Quebec system they would find that it was a good one, It would cost nothing like quarter of a million. He would certainly advise their friends in future to adopt the Quebec system, which worked admirably. It could, moreover, be inaugurated at a slight expense in the larger Provinces, as a beginning, and then extended to other portions of the Dominion.

MR. MACKENZIE: The Provincial Legislatures have control over matters relating to property and civil rights. Under that, they arrange their municipal system, and require statistics referring to municipal affairs, agricultural products, and everything connected with property. They have a right to make a registration of births, because that affects the rights of the people. They are also, by the same rule, entitled to provide a system of vital statistics.

Mr. TUPPER: I have no desire to question the right of Provincies to have any system of statistics they may desire, but I maintain that the Confederation Act imposes the duty of dealing with the question of statistics in this Dominion exclusively on this Parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No.

Mr. TUPPER: The 91st Section of the Act of Confederation, which deals with the distribution of legislative power, says, among other matters:

“Notwithstanding anything in this Act, the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to all matters coming within the classes of subjects enumerated—the Public Debt and Property, the Postal Service, the Census and Statistics.”

Everybody who knows what is embraced in the Census, must know that it covers the whole ground of vital statistics.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Does the hon. gentleman say we are acting illegally in Ontario?

Mr. TUPPER: Whatever the Province of Ontario or Quebec may do, the duty of dealing with the question of vital statistics for this Dominion devolves on this Parliament under the Confederation Act. We have three classes of subjects for legislation. One class is exclusively placed within the power of this Parliament; another class is distinctly and exclusively placed within the power of the Local Legislatures; and a third class comprises a class of subjects regarding which both may legislate. Take, for instance, the question of immigration. We can deal with that, but the Local Legislatures, under the Union Act, have also power to deal with the subject. I will not raise the question as to the legality of the Province of Ontario dealing with vital statistics; it is a delicate one to raise. But I say that, in any case, the duty is imposed on this Parliament. I differ from the statement that the system inaugurated in Nova Scotia in 1864 was a useless one; it was improved year by year, and finally commended itself to the country. It was not carried out so perfectly, perhaps, as might have been desired; but, as far as the registration of births, marriages, and deaths was concerned, it was very efficiently and thoroughly carried out. This Government, therefore, having assumed the responsibility of the Department, had no right to abolish it. The question came up in the Supreme Court of the Province, and a very strong and clear decision was given to the effect that the duty of dealing with this Department devolved upon the Dominion Government; and I say that, under these circumstances, we are doing a wrong to the Province so long as we refuse to provide what we are bound to supply under the Union Act. I do not think the expenditure for the carrying out of a very efficient system would involve anything like what the hon. the First Minister seems to contemplate. The subject occupied the attention of the late Government, and an estimate, which was submitted, showed that a very judicious and efficient system could be inaugurated at an expenditure of $150,000. It is obviously necessary that some such system should be adopted, because these questions might at any day become questions of the most vital importance.

Mr. BLAKE said though, as pointed out by the hon. member for Cumberland, this Parliament might have the power to deal with the question of vital statistics, yet it was not bound to do so. Provincial Legislatures, for instance, had the power given them to amend their own constitutions, but they did not require to do so if they did not choose. The record which the hon. gentleman spoke of as being of high consequence to the people of Nova Scotia was one established, not for general results, but for details of dates and names in births, deaths and marriages.

Mr. CAMERON said the argument of the hon. member for South Bruce was scarcely appropriate, namely, that Local Legislatures had the power to amend their constitutions, yet were not bound to do so, and that the Dominion Government were not therefore bound to collect the statistics in question. However, he would allow that to pass at present. His hon. friend from Cumberland argued that it was the duty of the Dominion Government to provide a system of vital statistics. Now, the fact that Local Legislatures might have chosen to assume the responsibility in their own Provinces was no reason why the Dominion Legislature should be exonerated from all responsibility for the collection of statistics throughout the whole Dominion. Suppose Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia assumed the responsibility themselves, and the Provinces of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, British Columbia and Manitoba refused, the Dominion Government would be wrong in not providing for the collection of these statistics which the Confederation Act had conferred upon them.

Mr. MACKENZIE.

MR. TUPPER: In reference to what has fallen from the hon. member for South Bruce, I may state that, not only did the Union Act give the exclusive power of legislating with regard to these statistics to this Parliament, but in 1868 we passed an Act, organizing a Department of Agriculture, and by sub-section 6 of section 5, the census and registration statistics were placed under the control of that Department. In section 68, cap. 8 of the Dominion Act, it is stated: "It is enacted that all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with said Act, in so far as they are inconsistent herewith, are hereby repealed." In 1867 and again in 1868, after the passage of the British North America Act, the Legislature of Nova Scotia amended the Act of 1866; but since the Dominion Legislature has exercised this control over the statistics, I am not aware that the Local Legislature has ever interfered.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said it was quite clear we were not in a position at the present moment to incur an expenditure of $150,000, and, however the hon. gentleman's conscience might prick him now, it did not do so in 1874.

MR. TUPPER said the hon. gentleman was mistaken, as a vast amount of information had then been obtained with the view of establishing or organizing a general system of vital statistics for the whole country.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: We cannot undertake it now.

Vote agreed to.

57. Expenses in connection with the Paris Exhibition..... $25,000

MR. CARTWRIGHT said it would be necessary to supplement that vote, and an amount would be placed in the Supplementary Estimates.

MR. MITCHELL: How much more is required?

MR. CARTWRIGHT said that from $75,000 to $100,000 would be needed.

MR. MITCHELL: It is a dear morsel.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said if pages 10 and 11 of the report of the Minister of Agriculture were referred to, it would be found that a considerable quantity of goods had been sent from Canada, and that a trophy had been erected in a very conspicuous place at the exhibition. Commissioners had been appointed, and they were now actively engaged in the discharge of their duties.

MR. CAMERON said when the Commission was sent out to Australia very great injustice was done to the Province of Ontario. If he recollected aright, there were 113 exhibitors from Ontario and 13 from Quebec; yet the Commissioners were sent from the latter Province, incapable as they were of explaining anything about the wants or the products of Ontario. He wished, therefore, to know who were to compose the Paris Commission?

MR. CARTWRIGHT said the commission appointed consisted of Sir John Rose, Mr. J. Gordon Brown, Mr. T. C. Keefer and Mr. Drolet. Mr. Keefer acted as executive officer and he believed was the only one of the number who received any emolument. As for the other matter, the hon. gentleman who spoke was probably aware that Hon. John Young, who acted as Commissioner in Australia, was a gentleman who was, perhaps, as well qualified as any man in the Dominion to do justice to every interest in the Dominion. He doubted if a man could be found more energetic and more earnestly desirous of promoting the prosperity of the country than the Hon. John Young. Everyone knew that he was not only enthusiastic in relation to everything connected with the general development of this country, but he was a man possessed of special qualifications for pushing our manufactures in foreign countries, as he had a most extensive acquaintance with the mercantile matters of the Dominion. He was perfectly certain that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cameron) stood alone in thinking that there was any foundation for the suspicion that Mr. Young could do anything against the interests of Ontario, or any other portion of the Dominion.

Mr. DYMOND said there had not been a single manufacturer of Ontario who had complained of Mr. Young, and it was rather unfortunate, knowing Mr. Young's position at the present time, that the hon. gentleman should endeavour to cast a slur upon his name.

Mr. CAMERON said that the state of health in which Mr. Young now was, rendered him unwilling to pursue the discussion. He did not say that the gentleman did not possess the eloquence, the ability and a large amount of general knowledge necessary to enable him to discharge the duties of Commissioner at the Australian Exhibition, but he did complain that there were not more representatives from Ontario, in proportion to the large preponderance of exhibitors from that Province. He asked with regard to the Commission to the Paris exhibition, whether justice would be done to the exhibitors from Ontario, in proportion with other Provinces. He thought they should have a Commissioner specially representing the manufacturing interests of Ontario.

Mr. JONES (South Leeds) said he thought the appointment of the Hon. John Young to the Sydney Exhibition was a good and proper one, and he did not think any sectional feeling should be shown with regard to it. It was of no importance where the man came from, if he discharged his duty efficiently.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. MITCHELL said he had nothing whatever to say against the appointment of Mr. Young; he thought he was a very proper and fit man to represent the trade and commerce of the Dominion, and the remarks of the member for North York (Mr. Dymond) were quite unnecessary. Referring to the Commission to the Paris Exhibition, they found that there was Sir John Rose, forsooth; he had always been in everything connected with Canada. It was said he never got any pay, but the pay was there all the same. It appeared there were two from the Province of Ontario, Mr. Keefer and Mr. Gordon Brown; Sir John Rose was from London, he represented nobody except himself; and the Minister of Agriculture the Province of Quebec. Now they were going to spend $100,000 in this matter. Mr. Gordon Brown happened to be going over on his own business.

Mr. MACKENZIE: And at his own expense.

Mr. MITCHELL said he knew nothing about that. Mr. George Brown went down to Washington at his own expense, and they found out afterwards what that meant. He had no objection to Mr Drolet; he had some acquaintance with the French; but why Mr. Keefer. And why should the whole Eastern Provinces be ignored. The sum likely to be expended was entirely out of proportion with what we ought to pay, and not one of the men proposed had the confidence of the country.

Mr. BERTRAM asked the nature of the arrangements made with regard to the Paris Exhibition, and whether the Government held themselves liable to any damage or loss of the goods exhibited.

Mr. MACKENZIE said they took the goods to Paris, but did not undertake to bring them back. Where the Government found an unwillingness to send exhibits, articles which they thought ought to be exhibited had been purchased, rather than that there should be a deficiency in their exhibits. This was not done to a large extent, as they found people ready to exhibit.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said $25,000 was all that was required for immediate expenditure. The House had been told that $25,000 would probably not suffice, as was apparent to anyone acquainted with exhibitions of that kind. They had nearly spent the $25,000 up to date, and in the ensuing three months would probably require $30,000 more.

MR. CAMERON: Is there any salary to be paid to Commissioners?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Mr. Keefer is paid a salary.

MR. MITCHELL: What salary does he get?

MR. MACKENZIE: $500 per month. Mr. Keefer had been selected for various reasons. He was well known as an eminent engineer, and had a fair acquaintance with both the German and French languages, and was suited in every way to meet the requirements of the position.

MR. ORTON said steps should be taken to make the Paris Exhibition much more satisfactory to Canadian exhibitors than the Sydney Exhibition had been. The information with regard to the latter, and to the prospects of trade between the two countries had been of a very meagre character.

MR. WOOD said, to his knowledge, very many orders had been received for farming implements and machinery of various kinds in Canada, for shipment to that colony. The results had been most satisfactory, and an interchange of trade had sprung up which would develop beyond expectations.

MR. ORTON said an exhibitor in his county had sent a plough and had never since been able to hear what had become of it, although he had written to the Department. Other exhibitors had also complained of lack of information.

MR. PLUMB said he had reliable information that exhibitors had no hope of opening up a trade with Australia. Many of them had not received 50c. in the dollar on the value of their goods. Canada could not compete in that market with that over-protected country the United States. The Sydney Exhibition had proved a disastrous one to Canadian exhibitors, and unless steps were taken to make the Paris Exhibition more advantageous, it would also prove very unfortunate in its results, as far as they were concerned.

MR. POPE (Compton) said he hoped matters would be better managed at Paris than at Philadelphia. At the latter exhibition, a friend of his had been awarded the first prize for a very handsome horse, as a trotting horse, against all other horses exhibited. Although he had been awarded the prize, he never received it. On application to Mr. Perreault, he was told that the prizes had all been given before the horse had been examined at all.

MR. MACKENZIE said one large expenditure had been incurred, which, although intended primarily for the exhibition, would prove of great service afterwards. A large map of Canada had been prepared, at a cost of several thousand dollars, which was, in fact, the first complete map they ever had of the British possessions in America. It showed not merely the geography but the topography of the country, and had various lines traced upon it to show the different kinds of wood, and of mineral and agricultural lands.

MR. CAMERON asked whether any complaints had been received concerning Mr. Perreault's administration of affairs at Philadelphia, and, if any were received, whether the Government were satisfied they were unfounded. They were all aware that, at the time of the Philadelphia Exhibition, the newspapers were full of complaints, couched in the strongest possible language, against Mr. Perreault, charging him with every kind of impropriety in his administration of the affairs of the Canadian Department. No doubt those complaints found their way to the Government in some official form. If they did, he wished to know whether the Government investigated them, and were satisfied, on investigation, that they were unfounded; because, otherwise, he could not understand how they would appoint a gentleman against whom such a host of complaints were levied as were made against Mr. Perreault, to the position of Secretary to the Canadian Department of the Paris Exhibition. He had not the pleasure of Mr. Perreault's personal acquaintance, but, judging from the statements in the newspapers, he was the most unqualified secretary that could possibly have been appointed.

MR. MACKENZIE said that if Mr. Perreault had been accused, as the hon. member for Victoria had stated, with every kind of impropriety, he was entirely ignorant of it. There were some complaints made, notably by one newspaper, which made charges which were grossly false and calumnious against Mr. Perreault and everyone else connected with the Exhibition. An attempt was made by some newspapers to break down the Canadian exhibit at Philadelphia. Those charges proved to be totally unfounded. Mr. Perreault was a gentleman possessed of very eminent qualifications. He might have a little brusqueness of manner that might be troublesome to himself and others at some times, but it would be very difficult to find a man with better qualifications than Mr. Perreault possessed to discharge the duties which he had to perform at Philadelphia. As Senator Penny had said to him (Mr. Mackenzie), Mr. Perreault was a miracle of adaptiveness to the duties of his office. The hon. member for Victoria should not take the statements of newspapers in such matters, especially the kind of newspapers he was accustomed to read.

MR. CAMERON said the hon. the First Minister had not answered his question, which was whether any complaints had been made against Mr. Perreault; and, if so, whether they had been investigated?

MR. MACKENZIE said he was not aware of any formal complaint. There were some letters received from parties having goods there, complaining they had not received their goods in time, or something of that sort, and that they could not get the attention they asked, and so on; but he had no recollection of any specific charge of impropriety having been made against Mr. Perreault by any person.

MR. CARON said that, outside of the complaints contained in the papers which were usually read by hon. members on the Opposition side of the House, there were several complaints made against Mr. Perreault by gentlemen who attended the Philadelphia Exhibition. Having been selected for the Paris Exhibition, he must be a very proficient man to perform the duties which would be incumbent upon him as the representative of Canada in Paris; but, in view of the complaints which had been made against that gentleman, it must have been only after mature deliberation and investigation of the charges, that the Government decided to appoint him to represent Canada.

MR. CAMERON.

MR. MACKENZIE said Mr. Perreault did not represent Canada at Paris, which was done solely by the Executive Commission.

MR. CARON said he believed the selection of Mr. Keefer was a very good one, and he had had some means of judging of that gentleman's qualifications. He was a gentleman possessing large engineering knowledge, and other qualifications, which would enable him to make a good representative of Canada. Moreover, he was a gentleman who could speak English and French equally well. But, in regard to Mr. Perreault, he could only have been selected by the Government after they had investigated the charges made against him—not only by newspapers, but by gentlemen who visited Philadelphia, and had opportunities of judging of Mr. Perreault's merits as Secretary and representative of Canada at that Exhibition.

MR. PLUMB said it was scarcely necessary to point out that the Secretary of the Commission possessed large powers; and although Mr. Perreault did not represent Canada, yet, as Secretary, if he were an active and pertinacious man, he possessed certain powers which might make the Commission a very inharmonious one. That gentleman might be able to do what he was credibly informed he had done at Philadelphia to Canadian exhibitors. He believed the opinion of the Philadelphia exhibitors was that Mr. Perreault's action there was not such as would justify a renewal of his commission by the Government on the occasion of the Paris Exhibition. There were universal complaints in regard to the manner in which that gentleman had discharged the duties of his office. The hon. the First Minister had told the House that Mr. Perrault was brusque in manner, which meant that he was somewhat curt and a little more. That was what an officer in his position should not be. As the representative active man in the Commission, who must come in contact with almost everyone, he was bound to have a very courteous demeanour, and if he were a man of temper or of irritable disposition, he was the last man who should be entrusted with the delicate position he held. His position was an important one for a short time, and it was one where a man could abuse his power; he was amenable to no one, and when the exhibition was over the matter was closed. He could be a tyrant for the time, and if there were any chance that he would exercise his power, he was the wrong man for the position. Although no formal complaints had been submitted to the Government, as the hon. the First Minister had said, nevertheless they had received complaints. It was singular that the Government, should have appointed a man against whom there were complaints, a great many of which the hon. the First Minister could verify, and some of which could be verified without leaving the Chamber. However, with the Government rested the responsibility of the appointment; they had a majority in the House and they would use it.

MR. HOLTON said that Mr. Perreault's name having been mentioned in very opprobrious terms by hon. members who had not had an opportunity of knowing that gentleman as he had, he felt bound to say a few words in regard to what had been stated. Mr. Perreault he had known for many years, and had had the pleasure of sitting in Parliament with him for several years. He was a man of very great ability, of irreproachable character, and possessed a thorough knowledge of the Province of Quebec. For the special work Mr. Perreault had to do at Philadelphia, and would have to do in Paris, he questioned very much if his equal could be found in the Dominion. He was particularly adapted for the work; he had great organizing talent, great activity, great industry, perfect command of the English and French languages, and was an able man in every respect; and he (Mr. Holton) felt some indignation to hear that gentleman's name bandied about in the manner it had been by hon. members who knew nothing about him. It was absurd to say that charges of any gravity had been made against Mr. Perreault. It was quite possible he might have peculiarities of manner. These peculiarities were very far from being disagreeable to those who knew him; but that any charges were made against him, was quite untrue. No charges were made against him, none could be made against him, except the often unreliable complaints of exhibitors, who, no doubt, expected a great deal more attention than could be given to individual exhibitors, and those complaints were, no doubt, exaggerated in the Press. But, on the whole, knowing Mr. Perreault as he did, and knowing the diligence with which he had performed his very onerous duties at Philadelphia, and in preparing for the exhibition there throughout the country, he would repeat that he doubted very much whether the Government would have found, in the whole length and breadth of the country, another man as well adapted for the work as this much-abused Mr. Perreault.

MR. PALMER enquired as to how late a period goods could be forwarded to the Paris Exhibition?

MR. MACKENZIE said the time had expired.

MR. PALMER asked for a statement of the number of exhibitors who had sent goods.

MR. MACKENZIE said he would be able to state the number at a later sitting of the Committee.

MR. MITCHELL said he had not the honour of personal acquaintance with Mr. Perreault, but he had the faculty of ascertaining what public opinion was; and from the statements which had appeared in the public Press, and the communications of exhibitors, that feeling of distrust in Mr. Perreault existed. He (Mr. Mitchell) was present at the Philadelphia Exhibition, and from the opinions expressed there respecting Mr. Perreault, all he had to say was: "God help Canada if that is the only perfect man to represent us." Mr. Perreault was a man thoroughly unfit for the position, and unfit, especially, in manner.

MR. MACKENZIE: That is not so.

MR. MITCHELL said his information had been derived from people who visited Philadelphia. He had been repeatedly informed in regard to Mr. Perreault by exhibitors, and complaint after complaint and question after question had been sent to him. He disagreed with the conclusion at which the hon. member for Chateauguay (Mr. Holton) had arrived in respect to the manner in which Mr. Perreault had represented Canada at the Philadelphia Exhibition.

MR. MCGREGOR said he had visited the Philadelphia Exhibition during several days and came frequently in contact with Mr. Perreault, who he believed was the right man in the right place; indeed, he found him to be a gentleman both in his position at the Exhibition and at his own home. He felt proud of Mr. Perreault as a Canadian, and did so to-day.

MR. MITCHELL: Mr. Perreault's courtesy must have been confined to gentlemen of the Grit persuasion.

MR. PALMER said he was an exhibitor at Philadelphia, and his agent who manufactured for him, complained that Mr. Perreault was exceedingly difficult to approach, and exhibitors were almost afraid of him.

MR. MACKENZIE said that; in order to give the House an idea of the kind of complaints sometimes made of an individual in Mr. Perreault's position, he might say that one of the leading newspapers in the Province of Ontario, supporting hon. gentleman opposite, characterized Mr. Penny as "a vulgar, illiterate, ignorant fellow," whilst he was one of the most cultivated, best educated and best informed gentlemen in Canada, a man who was utterly incapable of any impropriety of conduct. Yet such was the attempt made by newspapers in Ontario to make political capital by any attacks on the Government or on those associated with the Government, that they were willing to characterize the Chief Commissioner in that low, abominable manner, and a very great deal of that same spirit was exhibited towards Mr. Perreault; not because there was any fault to find with him as a general rule—though he (Mr. Mackenzie) did not say there might not have been cause for complaint—but because they thought they could accomplish their object by abusing the servants of the Government there.

MR. MITCHELL.

MR. PLUMB said he objected to the term used by the hon. member for Chateauguay, who had defended Mr. Perreault. The hon. gentleman said opprobrium had been cast upon this official. He had not, up to this time, heard anything save the courteous enquiry of the hon. member for Victoria, who always addressed the House within the strictest bounds of parliamentary courtesy and decorum. He (Mr. Plumb) need not have gone twenty feet from where he was to prove conclusively the point he had made. He had said nothing against this man, whom he did not know. No personal consideration entered into his discussion of the subject. It was claimed that Mr. Perreault was unfit for the delicate and very responsible position which he had held, and it was a mere question of Mr. Perreault's fitness for this position.

MR. BOWELL said that the question with reference to the appointment of Commissioners and the Secretary was he thought, a very fair subject for discussion under this item. With regard to the conduct at the Philadelphia Exhibition of this gentleman now under consideration, he could say that, so far as he was personally concerned, his experience of this gentleman was precisely of the same character as that of the hon. member for Essex. He was now speaking of his personal intercourse with Mr. Perreault, who had, at least, treated him with the utmost courtesy; but he would do him an injustice if he did not say that almost every Canadian exhibitor with whom he came in contact at Philadelphia had some complaint to make with regard to their treatment by Mr. Perreault, and when they desired to obtain any favour from the Commissioners, they took the trouble to ask certain gentlemen who were there to go and intercede for them, in order that they might secure for their stock what was absolutely necessary. He could understand, and he was quite satisfied, that this treatment of certain people, perhaps, arose from want of knowledge as to what breeders in particular required to feed and maintain their stock while they were exhibiting in Philadelphia. Being connected with the Agricultural and Art Association of Ontario, those gentlemen who knew him (Mr. Bowell) and also Mr. Morgan, who was there on behalf of this Association, on many occasions came to them and they had gone personally to ask that these breeders should receive that which they could not otherwise have obtained,—at least these gentlemen had stated that it had been refused them. He was merely telling what had come under his own observation. Mr. Perreault might be all that the hon. member for Chateauguy represented; he might be cultivated and one of the cleverest of men, and fitted for almost any situation in Canada.

Mr. HOLTON: I said for that situation.

Mr. BOWELL said that, if so qualified, Mr. Perreault had been singularly unfortunate in leaving the impression mentioned on the exhibitors, particularly from the Province of Ontario, for he had not known of a single exhibitor with whom he had come in contact in connection with this exhibition, but who had more or less fault to find with the treatment he had received from Mr. Perreault in different ways. The hon. member for Chateauguy said that no serious charges were or could be made against this official, and the hon. the First Minister stated that false statements were published and attempts made to break down the Canadian exhibition. He thought that he had watched the newspapers pretty nearly as attentively as most people, but he had never found an article in any paper, no matter on which side of politics, that could lead one to the conclusion that it desired to injure the Canadian exhibition. All the articles which commented on the conduct of the Commissioners, and the Secretary of the Commission, had, to his mind, only one object in view, and that was to make the exhibition as great a success as possible; and he had yet to learn that the Press or individuals were bound to eulogize officers who were conducting work of this kind; and that, in order to make it a success, they must therefore indulge either in platitudes or in flattery. He did not think that this was at all necessary. It was true that charges were made, but they were made in the public Press by responsible publishers, and these were, moreover, of the most grave character. It might be true, as the hon. member for Chateauguy stated, that these serious charges were not made to the Government. Of this, they had no knowledge; but, that serious charges were preferred, everyone who read the journals, of Ontario in particular, knew to be a fact. They knew more: that this gentleman entered, or threatened to enter, and did enter a suit for libel, laying claims for heavy damages for slander. This might be a favourite mode of trying to silence the Press on public questions, and to prevent it commenting on the acts of public men. Mr. Perreault might be like some others whom they knew, who had been attacked with regard to their reputation, public and otherwise, through the journals of the country, and had entered an action against them; although, when pleas of justification were put in, they allowed them to remain there for years, notwithstanding the fact that these pleas were of the most damaging character, if true. If these charges were not true, Mr. Perreault should have done what others should have done—defended his reputation in the courts of law, and punished those men who had had the audacity to charge him with the crimes that the papers of Ontario had laid at this official's door. He used the word "crimes," because some of these charges were of a very serious character, and he fancied that the hon. member for Chateauguy knew this as well as himself. They were, indeed, of so serious a character as to attribute to Mr. Perreault the taking of certain commissions—something which he would be extremely sorry to believe him capable of doing—in addition to the manner in which he (Mr. Perreault) had treated those who had had articles there on exhibition. He did not say that he had any personal knowledge of any of these acts, and he did not know that he would have risen at all had it not been for the remarks made, and the high eulogium passed on that gentleman by those who knew him better than he did. He would repeat that, in his personal intercourse with Mr. Perreault, the latter had been, not only at Philadelphia, but also here, not friendly, but most courteous. Whether this was because he happened to occupy the position of the hon. member for Essex he did not know, but he did not attribute it to this fact. He had not heard, however, of a single exhibitor from the Province of Ontario, who had not some fault to find; some of a serious character, some less so, with Mr. Perreault, and general grumbling, in this relation, had gone on amongst those gentlemen who had taken their articles to that city for exhibition. He should regret exceedingly, on the part of Canada, if such treatment were extended to exhibitors who went to Paris. He did not think that this would redound much to our own credit, as certainly it would not to that gentleman we sent there to manage our affairs, whether as Secretary or Commissioner.

Vote agreed to.

58. To meet expenses in connection with Entomological Commission. $2,000

Mr. CARTWRIGHT said the American Government had asked Canada to assist them to collect information touching the habits and mode of breeding of those insects which had done so much harm in the North-West territory, and as the United States Government had devoted a considerable sum for that purpose, it was not desirable that we, who were jointly interested, should appear shabby.

Mr. MITCHELL: I want to know something about this entomological business.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. MACKENZIE said it was proposed to send a commission of enquiry, accompanied by a scientific man, or one of our professors, to co-operate with the American Commissioner.

Vote agreed to.

59. To meet expenses in connection with Australian Exhibition . . . . $5,000.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT: This is an extra sum; $25,000 was previously voted. I do not think the whole will be expended or even required; but it may be in the recollection of the hon. gentleman that, by a heavy thunder storm, a large quantity of goods at the Sydney Exhibition were destroyed or seriously damaged, and claims for compensation have been made to the Department of Agriculture. It was deemed necessary, on that account, to ask for this vote, though only a small part of it is likely to be required.

Vote agreed to.

Resolutions ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Resolutions reported.

House adjourned at
Thirty minutes past
One o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 10th April, 1878.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MACKAY (Cape Breton) said that before the business of the day began, he was desirous of making a few remarks in connection with what he considered a privilege that he possessed as a member of the House. He had particular reference to a matter which took place yesterday, when he made application intending to bring before the House a matter in which his constituency was, to a certain extent, interested. He understood, from his limited knowledge of parliamentary law, that when a motion was made to go into Committee of Supply, it was fully competent for any hon. member to bring forward any notice he saw fit to make, which was a matter of interest, either to himself or the country at large, or his constituency. With this object in view, it was his intention the day previous to have made a few remarks regarding a matter in which some of his constituents were interested. He held that the hon. member for Iberville, who subsequently got the ear and floor of the House, was not entitled to the precedence accorded him. He had looked into the authorities which he was very desirous of bringing under the notice of the Speaker, yesterday, which laid it down, he thought, pretty clearly, and in a way which, it seemed to him, admitted of no doubt that, when the House was going into Committee of Supply, it was not necessary that any notice should be given of any amendment which might be moved. It seemed to him that, in the decision of the Speaker yesterday, there was confounded the rules with respect to notices of motion and those also respecting amendments. He was free to admit that, in so far as notices of motion were concerned, it was necessary to give a certain notice in the way prescribed; but, where amendments were made on going into Committee of Supply, it was laid down that the ordinary rules were not followed in any way. In May, it was stated that :

“The time for moving an amendment, is after the question has been proposed by the Speaker, and before it has been put. It is customary and more convenient, but it is competent for any member to propose an amendment without notice; nor is any other member who may have given notice of an amendment, entitled to precedence on that account.”

It was this quotation which he was desirous of reading yesterday when he rose to claim what he considered was his right. He contended that, under this authority, he had the right, being first on the floor, to the ear of the House, and to a decision from the Speaker to that effect, and that he was entitled to be heard. When he brought this matter before the notice of the Speaker, the reply was, that, “having placed a notice on the paper, the hon. member from Iberville had a claim on the attention of the Speaker to which an hon. member who had not given such notice, was not entitled.” In order to decide this matter, and in order that other hon. gentlemen might understand the exact position of affairs when such an amendment was moved, he thought it a duty he owed to himself and also to the interests of the several other members who had spoken to him about this matter, to bring it before the House. There was a difference in the practice, and the rules and regulations laid down for the guidance of Parliament in moving motions and in putting amendments. He was free to admit that sometimes, according to one of the rules of the House of Commons in England, it was found necessary to decide as to who should take precedence in connection with notices of motion by ballot; but he took it that the Speaker's reference to this fact did not in any way apply, inasmuch as it was not a notice of motion that he was bringing before the House, but an amendment and an amendment only. When he rose yesterday to obtain a decision from the Speaker in reference to this matter, he wished to read certain authorities that he then had under his hand, because he had thought that it might be looked upon that the hon. member for Iberville would claim that, having given notice, he was entitled to precedence; but he regretted to say that, in a way which seemed to him to imply a certain lack of courtesy towards himself, he was prevented from saying anything at all, and from quoting his authorities; in fact, Mr. Speaker decided the matter without giving him the opportunity of placing himself right before the House, a privilege to which he considered he was entitled.

MR. HOLTON said he thought there could be no doubt that his hon. friend was right as to the practice of the House—that notice was not required here as it was in England; but he had understood Mr. Speaker to say that notice having been given by the hon. member for Iberville, he, naturally, looked in his direction, rather than in any other direction, when the Order was called; and this hon. gentleman, therefore, caught Mr. Speaker's eye first. If his hon. friend from Cape Breton had caught Mr. Speaker's eye first, he would, undoubtedly, have been in order in moving whatever he proposed to move in advance of the hon. member for Iberville, notwithstanding the fact that the latter had given notice.

MR. MASSON said his impression as to what had taken place was not in accordance with what the hon. member for Chateauguay stated. He distinctly understood that, at that moment, Mr. Speaker believed that notice having been given, the hon. member for Iberville was entitled to some regard on this point.

MR. ROCHESTER said his understanding of the matter agreed with that of the hon. member for Chateauguay. He thought that the hon. member for Cape Breton did not have a great deal to complain of.

MR. SPEAKER: The hon. member from Cape Breton has chosen to make a statement, and, of course, I did not see any objection to it, although I do not know that he was strictly in his right. The whole circumstance was precisely as the hon. member for Chateauguay has just described it. I did not say that the fact of the hon. member for Iberville having a notice of motion on the paper gave him, in my opinion, a certain claim on my attention, not that it gave him a right of precedence per se, but a claim on my attention that no hon. member would have who had not given notice of motion. When two members are on their feet, these members' rights are equal. It is absolutely necessary to choose between the two, and if any hon. member, when such selection is made, thinks that any wrong or injustice is done if he is not chosen, he will find that almost everybody will have something to complain of on that score. My own desire is to do simple justice to every hon. member of the House. I always regard every hon. member of the House, on one side as well as on the other, as having absolutely equal rights.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.—[BILL No. 20 ]

(Mr. Laflamme.)

FIRST READING.

MR. LAFLAMME introduced a Bill (No. 20) To amend the Act respecting the election of members of the House of Commons. He said its provisions were intended to do away with the envelope system, which existed under the Dominion law, and to introduce the practice which prevailed under the Quebec Act respecting annexes, and the identification of the ballot, in order that after a party came to vote it might be seen that the ballot cast was the same with the ballot which had been handed him, and to avoid the possibility of discovering who had voted. The third provision would oblige the voter, when this was necessary, to declare on oath that he could not read, or use his ballot without assistance. The voter would have to declare that he could not read or make his cross alone. It had been found from experience that the liberty given to the voter in this respect was availed of for the purpose of detecting the voter, and of forcing on him this declaration. The party selected to act as agent for a candidate was sometimes one of the most influential men in the place, and this fact constrained the voter somewhat in regard to declaring that he could not make his cross. The voter had then to go before this man, who might be his creditor, and make his cross in this man's presence. In other words, this Bill was intended to make the ballot system as efficacious as possible.

MR. HOLTON.

MR. BLANCHET: Is any provision introduced to do away with the deposit of $50 placed in the hands of the Returning Officer by candidates, or to increase it?

MR. LAFLAMME: No.

MR. LANGEVIN said he was pleased to see that the hon. the Minister of Justice submitted this Bill. The Quebec Act was a very fair one, and prevented a great deal of fraud at elections. There was one thing which occurred to him in connection with this measure, and that was: that the oath imposed would have to be a short one, because there would otherwise be a danger of all the electors not being able to record their votes on the particular day specified for that purpose.

MR. LAFLAMME said it consisted of only two lines, so that no delay need be apprehended on that ground.

MR. PLUMB wished to know what was meant by the numbering of the ballot papers.

MR. LAFLAMME said the ballot papers would not be numbered, but only the annexes, which would be torn up in the presence of two agents.

MR. PLUMB said if that was the case, the secrecy of the ballot would not be violated.

Bill read the first time.

ADDRESS TO THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

MR. MACKENZIE: I beg to give notice that, to-morrow, as soon as the routine proceedings are over, I will move an Address to His Excellency the Governor-General, expressing the regret this House feels on the occasion of his terminating his connection with the Government of Canada.

DRILL SHEDS IN MANITOBA.

QUESTION.

MR. SCHULTZ enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to erect drill sheds in the Province of Manitoba?

MR. JONES (Halifax): Some communications are likely to be addressed to the Department on the subject shortly and the question may then be considered.

CARTRIDGES FOR THE NORTH-WEST SUPERINTENDENCY.

QUESTION.

MR. SCHULTZ enquired, For what purpose were the 20,000 Winchester Rifle Cartridges required, which were asked for by Thomas Nixon, Purveyor for the North-West Superintendency, in an advertisement for tenders dated 26th March, 1878, and printed in the Manitoba Free Press of that date?

MR. MILLS: During the past season the Indian Chiefs and headmen in that district, to the number of 46, have been presented with Winchester rifles, and the ammunition is for their use.

ORDNANCE LANDS IN SOULANGES.

QUESTION.

MR. LANTHIER enquired, Whether the Government have disposed of the Ordnance Lands in the county of Soulanges; and if so, to whom?

MR. MILLS: I may state that no Ordnance Lands have been disposed of in that district.

ACQUISITION OF UNCEDED TERRITORY IN THE NORTH-WEST.

QUESTION.

MR. SCHULTZ enquired, Whether the Government have taken any steps to acquire from the Imperial Government the unceded territory east of the territory of Keewatin and north of the Province of Ontario and Quebec?

MR. MILLS: The Government had communicated with the Imperial Government on this subject, but no actual steps beyond this have yet been taken.

WILLIAM WALLACE'S ACCOUNTS.

QUESTION.

MR. ARCHIBALD enquired, Whether the accounts of William Wallace, late Commissariat Officer, Paymaster or Accountant on the Canadian Pacific Survey have been finally closed; if so, have the money, cheques, etc., which were entrusted to him been satisfactorily accounted for; and if not, what amount has been fully accounted for, what amount partially accounted for and what amount remains wholly unaccounted for?

MR. MACKENZIE: The accounts have been cleared so far as they can be cleared in the absence of vouchers. With regard to the remaining part of the question, I feel that it would, perhaps, be scarcely fair to the hon. member for Norfolk to make a statement as to the accountant's conclusions, because, at present, no debate can take place upon it. I think, therefore, it would be well for the hon. gentleman to give notice of motion so that a return may be brought down embodying the statement by the accountant, Mr. Taylor.

PROVISION FOR DREDGING.

QUESTION.

MR. MAC KAY (Cape Breton) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to purchase or construct a dredge so as to provide for the necessary dredging beyond the working capabilities of those now in use?

MR. MACKENZIE: The dredge power at the command of the Government of the kind known as the small or spoon dredges, together with two large sea-going dredges, is quite sufficient for the work we have to perform. We are endeavouring, at present, to get an arrangement made for leasing another dredge with the option of purchasing it if we find it answer our purpose. With that addition, I hope we will be able to overtake the very difficult operations in connection with harbours which will have to be attended to this coming season.

ACCUSATIONS AGAINST BRITISH COLUMBIA AGENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES.

MOTION FOR CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. THOMPSON (Cariboo), for Mr. DEWDNEY, moved for correspondence, from whatever source, which led to an investigation before Mr. Justice Gray, into accusations made against the agent of Marine and Fisheries in British Columbia; also for the report of Mr. Justice Gray, with the evidence taken at the enquiry.

MR. SMITH (Westmoreland): There is no objection to producing all the papers asked for, but if the evidence taken at the enquiry, which is very voluminous, is copied, it will take some considerable time and involve some expense. I have no objection to furnish it, however, if the hon. gentleman desires it.

Motion agreed to.

SEIZURE OF MR. BOSWELL'S BREWERY.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

MR. ROCHESTER moved for all Orders in Council relating to the recent seizure of Mr. J. K. Boswell's brewery, in the city of Quebec, and to the imposition of certain fines and penalties in connection therewith; also copies of all correspondence between the Department and others relating to said matter; and also a copy of all Reports made by officers of the Department sent down from Ottawa to Quebec to investigate the same. He said his object in making the motion was that satisfactory information might be obtained as to the seizure of Mr. Boswell's brewery in 1875. It appeared that owing to some information in connection with the working of the brewery, it was seized, and a fine of $807 imposed. This fine, Mr. Boswell at first refused to pay, and, as he was prevented in consequence from obtaining a license, he was debarred from carrying on his business. At last, he agreed to pay the fine on condition that, after an investigation should be made, it was found he was not to blame, the money should be refunded. Two officers, Messrs. Miall and Davis, were accordingly sent from Ottawa to Quebec, and they found that there had been no attempt at fraud, but that some errors had been made as to the quantities of grain used. After they made their report at Ottawa, Mr. Boswell received a communication from the Department, in which he was informed that he would be fined $500. He (Mr. Rochester) would read the information which had been given to him by Mr. Boswell:—

MR. MACKENZIE,

“Messrs. Miall and Davis were sent down by the Department, and, after three days investigation, they found the complaint referred to a clerical error on the part of my brewer, who is an Englishman; and who, as English malt weighs 40 lbs. to the bushel, made the error of charging himself with 40 lbs. instead of 36 lbs., which one of our bushels weighs. This was proved by weighing in the brewery by Collector Fortin and officer Roulleau, and was given in evidence at the investigation. This overcharge of four lbs. of malt against me, and three Sundays charged to me as having brewed on them when I did not account for the irregularity, and my being fined $807.”

It appeared these quantities were entered in Mr. Boswell's book every day, and checked by the officer in charge as correct. Here was what Mr. Boswell said in reference to the report made:—

“To my surprise, a report came down signed by Mr. Brunel, saying I should be fined $500 for my more than passive resistance to the law, and offering to return me

$307 if I remained quiet and obedient. If Messrs. Miall and Davis are examined on oath before a Committee, all I say will be proved. I refused to accept the $307, thinking that if I did so I would be guilty of fraud."

This was one of those acts of intolerance to which he had so frequently alluded in this House as occurring in that Department, and although it was far in the Session, he hoped that a Committee would be appointed to investigate the affair. Here was a letter which was sent to Mr. Boswell from the Department:—

"DEAR SIR,—I am directed by the Commissioner of Inland Revenue to inform you that upon the recommendation of the hon. the Treasury Board, his Excellency the Governor in Council has been pleased to order that, upon the payment of a mitigated penalty of $500, no further proceedings will be taken. This order is made without prejudice to the rights of the Crown. I am desired further to state that, in the event of your objecting to comply with the order, proceedings will be taken for the recovery of the full penalty to which you have rendered yourself liable."

He had also two telegrams which had been received by Mr. Boswell that he would read to the House. The first was from Mr. F. Geoffrion, and read as follows:—

"Hon. Mr. Fournier has come to me for your license. My decision is that you have to pay duties as asked by Department. Do it under protest and take your license if you like, and if you cannot be justified, as you told me, duties shall be refunded."

The next telegram was from Mr. Brunel, and read:—

"Payment of money will not prejudice your case. Full investigation will be granted, and if the result shows that the quantity of malt retained by you for duty was correct, and if the excess used in your brewery is satisfactorily accounted for, whatever amount of duty you over-pay will be refunded."

Those were the Commissioners which had been sent to Mr. Boswell respecting this affair. Probably the Minister of Inland Revenue knew nothing of the imposition of this fine. He was not prepared to say that such was the case, but he had no hesitation in expressing his confidence that, if the hon. gentleman looked into the case, he would do what was just and fair. He was not asking for a favour from the Government, he was asking for simple justice.

MR. LAURIER said there could be no objection to what was asked for, but he thought that, when the papers were brought down, the hon. gentleman would find such investigation unnecessary. He believed that in some particulars, at least, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rochester) had not been correctly informed. The facts, as far as he could see by looking through the papers, were that Mr. Boswell was not only a brewer but a maltster as well, and it was found that his sworn statements as maltster did not concur with his statements as brewer, and there must be an error somewhere. On the investigation made by the Department it was found out that, in fact, the statement made by Mr. Boswell as a maltster was incorrect. The Committee did not think there was any fraudulent intention, but the opinion of the officer was that the discrepancies arose from the negligence of Mr. Boswell. It was found that this had resulted in a loss of revenue to the Department; and, moreover, that he had been sending beer to foreign countries on which no duty had been paid. Upon this an Order-in-Council was passed, based on the report of the Commissioners, that, as Mr. Boswell had been found guilty of misstatements, not, perhaps, intentional, in his return to the Department, it was decided to impose upon him the mitigated penalty of $500, leaving him the option, if he thought himself innocent, to have the case brought before the ordinary tribunal.

MR. ROCHESTER said he was not surprised at this penalty. He had stated again and again that there was not a brewer in Canada who did not stand in the same position. The Inland Revenue Law was perfectly inoperative, and no brewer in the Dominion was able to work within its provisions. There was no brewer in the Dominion to-day who was not shaking in his shoes. The Revenue Law was so mystified that no man could understand it; and under it, any brewery in the Dominion might be seized at any moment. Orders-in-Council were written in that man's office, and became law, and were issued forth. What occasion was there for any legislation in this House? Mr. Brunel could legislate for the whole Dominion, and had, in fact, done so. The hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue had not been long enough in the Office to understand the law; it would take a Philadelphia lawyer twelve months to understand, and then he would not be up in all the legal quibbles which the Commissioner had managed to embrace in it. Mr. Boswell was a man well known in this country, especially in the Province of Quebec, and he would refer to any hon. member from that Province to bear him out in saying that Mr. Boswell was a gentleman by birth and education—one who would not think, for a moment, of defrauding the revenue. Why, then, had he been placed in this position? Simply because he was a man fair and square, who spoke his mind freely about matters which did not suit Mr. Brunel. As he (Mr. Rochester) had again and again stated, there was not a brewer in the Dominion who dared speak his mind about this man. People might say that was nonsense; that there were brewers who were not afraid of him. But he knew differently. When it came to a question of bread and butter, after a lifetime spent in earning a little something of this world's goods, which could be all swept away by one dash of the pen of this honourable Commissioner, a man would pause before speaking his mind. He had heard one gentleman's story in regard to this man, and had asked leave to use it here. He received for reply: "If you do not want me to be driven out of the country, do not use it." The English and American Excise laws were quite plain, but this man had got the Canadian Excise law so mystified and mixed up with Orders-in-Council, that it was impossible to understand it. Had Mr. Boswell been a Conservative, hon. gentlemen opposite would not have been surprised that he should take his part and endeavour to get his $800 returned to him. But Mr. Boswell was a good Reformer, and he thought he could name five or six gentlemen opposite who would not have had their seats had it not been for Mr. Boswell's influence, who was, therefore, entitled to some consideration from the Government. It had been stated there was a proper tribunal before which to bring this matter. But no man in business would think for a moment of going to law with the Revenue Department and having Mr. Brunel for a Judge. The Government had said they were not responsible for the acts of their agents; if so, there was no other tribunal to which this gentleman could appeal but to the House, and, under the circumstances, this House had a right to take cognizance of these facts and act accordingly. If the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue would investigate this matter, and take evidence on oath before himself, he (Mr. Rochester) would be satisfied with the result, and so would Mr. Boswell, whatever it might be.

MR. ROCHESTER.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA CENTRAL AND GEORGIAN BAY BRANCH RAILWAYS.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

MR. MCDUGALL (South Renfrew) moved for all Orders-in-Council not yet brought down fixing the route: 1st. Of the extension of the Canada Central Railway; 2nd. Of the Georgian Bay Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He said it had been announced some two or three years ago that the extension of the Canada Central Railway, which was to be a link in the Pacific Railway, was to have been made by the valley of the Bonnechère. That announcement had been received with much satisfaction by his constituents. It had been reported lately that this extension would not take place by the valley of the Bonnechère, but that it would be made from the town of Pembroke, the present terminus of the Pacific Railway. This latter report had caused his constituents great uneasiness. He did not intend to discuss the merits of the two routes. It would, probably, be unfitting to enter into such discussion, at present, in the absence of information which ought to be in the possession of this House; but he would not be doing his duty to the people of the Riding he had the honour to represent, if he did not press upon the Government the necessity of giving information respecting a change of route, if any change had been determined on, so detrimental to their interests. His present purpose would be gained if he learned from the hon. the Minister of Public Works that he would bring down the desired information before the close of the Session, and, in that case, would withdraw his motion, subject to the consent of the House.

MR. MACKENZIE said, in a few days, he expected to lay before the House an Order-in-Council with reference to the extension of the Canada Central Railway, and would then give the reasons which existed for the adoption of a different route from the one assigned. It would not be advisable, at present, to enter into any discussion on the subject.

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew) said it would not be advisable to discuss the relative merits of the two routes, one of which had only been indicated by the Government when the extension of the Canada Central was first mooted. He had, on previous occasions, endeavoured to obtain some statement as to whether it was the intention of the Government to go on with this work, as hon. members and people throughout the country had had serious reasons to believe the project had been abandoned. While it was apparent the Government, two or three years ago, were very anxious to prosecute this work, and had, in fact, contracted for its completion by 1st January, 1877, since that time nothing had been done, and no amount had been placed in the Estimates of this year or last year to meet its cost. He was not aware whether the hon. member for South Renfrew had been in the receipt of information which induced him to put his motion on the notice paper. Rumours had been prevalent in the county which he had the honour to represent, that a change of route was contemplated in the direction stated by the hon. member for South Renfrew, and the friends of the Government in the North Riding of Renfrew were endeavouring to obtain support for their candidate on that ground. He had no intention to advocate the adoption of any particular route; that was a matter which rested with the Government to determine in the public interest. He hoped the hon. the Minister of Public Works would indicate at as early a date as possible the policy the Government intended to adopt.

MR. McDUGALL (South Renfrew) said his hon. friend seemed rather surprised that he (Mr. McDougall) should have information which would cause him to put this motion on the notice paper. If the hon. member, with his usual diligence, had read the report of the hon. the Minister of Public Works, he would have observed that the location of the Georgian Bay Branch had been changed to such a point at the eastern end as would lead to the belief that the Canada Central extension had been changed, because the Canada Central extension, if taken by the valley of the Bonnechère, would have gone to a point supposed to be about the centre of four particular townships, about twenty-five miles from the present eastern terminus of the Georgian Bay Branch as located. It was easier for the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) to be pleasant over the matter when he supposed that the extension of the Canada Central would take place from the chief town in his constituency, than for an hon. member representing a constituency, that was supposed to have been deprived of its right, so far as having had a promise of the extension when the information was not complete,

MR. WHITE (North Renfrew) said that last Session, and the previous Session, he had taken the same ground as he did to-day, that on the Government alone rested the responsibility of selecting a route which would be best in the interests of the country.

MR. McDUGALL said that, although he seldom coincided with the hon. member for North Renfrew on political matters, he agreed with him in regard to this particular matter. Even if South Renfrew was not to be the favoured place, and if the Government did not always think merely of their friends, but were prepared to do what was right in the public interest, the road would be for the benefit of the people generally, and not merely for those living in the valley of the Ottawa. He was glad to know that the railway would be pushed rapidly to completion.

MR. WHITE: We do not know that.

MR. TUPPER said it was very evident that, whatever discussion should take place on this question, and it was obvious that there must be a somewhat full discussion on the policy of the Government in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, it would be most convenient that it should take place after hearing a full exposition from the hon. the Minister of Public Works as to what was the present position of the question, and what was proposed to be done by the Government. He desired to call the attention of the hon. the First Minister to the fact that, at this advanced period of the Session, it was very desirable that whatever information the Government had to lay before the House, it should be submitted at as early a period as possible. This was a question of very great import, and they were not in a position to discuss it. The House had been informed by the hon. the First Minister that it was the intention of the Government to submit to Parliament the question of the adoption of a route.

MR. MACKENZIE said that such was not the case. He had stated that it was the duty of the Government, under the Act, to adopt the line which would, of course, be announced to Parliament, which would have to decide whether to place the whole or any part under contract. But the question of the adoption of the route was not to be submitted to Parliament, except in respect to the Estimates in the usual way.

MR. TUPPER said he had entirely misunderstood the hon. the First Minister, whose memory had not served him as to what had taken place. He had asked the hon. the Premier if it was his intention to submit to Parliament the adoption of the route when decided on by the Government, and he understood the hon. Minister to say that such was his intention. He thought that if reference were made to what had taken place in the early portion of the Session, it would bear out that construction. After what had taken place, he (Mr. Tupper) assumed that the Government would not propose to establish the Canadian Pacific Railway route without taking Parliament into their confidence and consulting it. Assuming that to be so, that before anything respecting the route was finally determined Parliament would have an opportunity to express its opinion, it was desirable that all the information possessed by the Government should be imparted to the House as soon as possible. He presumed that the report of the acting Chief Engineer on that important question would be submitted to the House, in order that hon. members might give it due consideration before being asked to commit themselves to anything, or even tacitly sanction the course that might be announced by the Government. He hoped the hon. the First Minister would endeavour to have the report, which he (Mr. Tupper) understood was in his hands, with the map which he understood had also been prepared, covering the whole question, and giving much information, laid before the House on an early day, in order to be able to give the subject due consideration before they were asked to pass any item in the Estimates for the Canadian Pacific Railway, on which occasion the House would expect to receive a full and detailed statement from the hon. the First Minister as to the course the Government intended to pursue, not only with respect to that particular item, but as to the whole legislation, which was one of the greatest importance.

MR. McDUGALL.

MR. MACKENZIE said he inferred from the remarks of the hon. gentleman that he was already in possession of information from his (Mr. Mackenzie's) office.

MR. TUPPER said that if the hon. Minister had not had a map prepared, and it was not a matter of secrecy, the rumour he had heard was, of course, unfounded.

MR. MACKENZIE: It is not the first time during the Session I have found papers moved for, copies of which were in the hands of the mover before the motion was submitted.

MR. TUPPER: If the hon. gentleman intends that remark as an attack upon his own Department and upon any officers in the public service, I can only say that, as far as I am concerned, I am not aware of having ever moved for papers, copies of which I had already in my possession.

Motion, with leave of the House, withdrawn.

THE LOAN OF 1876.

MOTION FOR STATEMENT.

MR. TUPPER, for Mr. McCARTHY, moved for a statement showing:

"1. The amount of the loan of 1876, and the amount actually received therefor;

"2. The names of the persons, co-partnerships and corporations who tendered for the said loan, or any part thereof, with the amount tendered for respectively;

"3. The names of those whose tenders were accepted, and the amount for which they were so accepted;

"4. A statement showing when and how the amount of said loan was received, and whether allottees or any of them, and if any of them, which of them, availed themselves of the privilege of pre-payment, and if so, whether they were allowed interest or discount thereon, and the total amount of such discount;

"5. The amount of interest accrued or accruing on said stock allowed to the said allottees respectively, as against the amount payable to them respectively;

"6. The item of commission on charges of and incident to the said loan in detail, and to whom paid;

"7. The rates of interest payable by the Dominion on the said loan, regard being had to the amount actually received and the period it has to run."

He said it was clearly established by the evidence adduced last Session, that it was a great misfortune to Canada that the loan had been placed upon the London money market at a fixed price. All the efforts which were made by the hon. the Finance Minister to sustain the credit of the course he had taken were met and fully answered by subsequent events. The fact that the credit of Canada had been raised to such a high position by the late Government, and that the condition of the money market was favourable to the floating of loans, rendered it exceedingly inadvisable that the hon.

Minister of Finance should have placed the loan on the market at a fixed price. Abundant evidence of the want of wisdom, to say the least of it, displayed, was afforded by the fact that the Government of South Australia, requiring half a million sterling, placed a 4 per cent. loan on the market, not at a fixed price, but open to competition, and the result was that, instead of obtaining half a million, three millions were offered. The rate obtained was higher than that for which single debentures were selling, such being quoted at 96½. The South Australian loan was placed on the market shortly after the last loan of the present Minister of Finance—a loan which he had informed the House, had it not been floated at that opportune moment no such terms could have been obtained, on account of the disturbed condition of Europe. Notwithstanding the state of the continent, South Australia, with a credit somewhat superior to that of the Dominion, but which was not entitled to any better position on the money market of Great Britain or the world than Canada occupied, experienced no difficulty in floating a loan a short time after the hon. the Minister of Finance. The Colonies of February 17th, 1877, stated that tenders for the South Australia Government, 4 per cent. loan, for £500,000 sterling, were opened at the National Bank of Australia, London, on 13th inst. There were 200 tenders, the total amount offered being £2,967,000, at prices ranging from £96 10s. to £100. The average price for the £500,000 sterling was £97 1s. per £100. It, therefore, appeared that at the time the hon. the Finance Minister believed he had rendered great service to Canada by negotiating a forced loan at practically below 90, though our debentures were being quoted from 94½ to 93½, the South Australia Government obtained offers for three times the sum required, varying from £96 10s. to par. And the whole loan was allotted at the average rate of £97 10s. per 100. He thought that the controversy was closed as to the great misfortune which it was to this country to have had our loan put on the London money market at a fixed rate of discount, instead of adopting the South Australian method; and the result was as he had shown. South Australia had not only received a larger amount for every pound of the half million sterling, but a larger rate than single debentures were quoted for at that date. As this subject had attracted a great deal of attention in the House before, and had been fully discussed, he was only now induced to refer to it in consequence of the persistent efforts made to claim as a service to Canada what he thought was one of its greatest misfortunes; that when our debentures, at a time of great repletion in the money market, were selling from 93½ to 94—he was quoting from Westenhall's list—business was done on the 3rd of November (when the loan was floated) at 94½ and 94½. The London Economist, of November 4th, stated that business was then done at 94½ and 93½, and, after our loan was put on the market, and closed—the loan was closed on the 8th—they were quoted at 91½ to 92½. Under these circumstances it was obvious that the country must have lost something like three per cent. on the amount it would have realized. Notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman said as to the disturbed condition of Europe and the misfortune it would have been if the loan had been delayed, they found that on the 21st of February, after the loan was taken, business was done in our four per cents, at 94½; and, deducting the interest then accrued the quotation was about 93 nett, so that with the fullest opportunity on the part of the financial world for examining into the whole question and their value, although the hon. gentleman had offered these debentures at something like 3¼ per cent. less than the actual quotation at the time, they immediately recovered to the extent of from 1½ to 2½ per cent., and as late as the 21st of February, they were sold at 94½ or 93 nett. This showed a loss on the two and a-half millions sterling of something like three per cent., or £75,000 sterling, nearly $400,000, which he contended was lost to the country in consequence of the unfortunate course that the hon. gentleman had adopted in floating this loan. He might say that he had, on a former occasion, stated that he held the Finance Minister of

MR. TUPPER.

Canada responsible, to the fullest extent, in relation to this matter, and that, notwithstanding the fact that the hon. gentleman had the advice of financial agents of the highest standing and character, whose honour and integrity no person pretended to impugn for a single moment. This advice ought to have been taken with a great deal of caution, from the fact that these very gentlemen were large purchasers of the loan at the price which they recommended the hon. the Minister of Finance to take; and he might say further, without violating the seal of official secrecy and obligation, that it had not been the uniform practice of the Finance Ministers of Canada to take the unqualified advice offered him by financial agents, and that the very parties who were now giving a certain amount of maintenance—for reasons best known to themselves—to the mode in which this loan was put on the market, had resisted the same policy on former occasions, the agents' advice had been resisted and their advice not followed, and the result had been the avoidance of a very considerable loss to the country. This matter was now so thoroughly understood that he did not intend to deal with it further than to say that, on an occasion of this kind, instead of maintaining the secrecy which the hon. the Minister of Finance had maintained with relation to this matter, where there had obviously been a loss to the people of this country, owing to the mode in which this loan had been floated, of something like $400,000 or thereabouts, which was, he thought, fully established—

MR. CARTWRIGHT: It was $400,000 just now. Which sum am I to understand?

MR. TUPPER: I say that the hon. gentleman, judging from experience of South Australia, may fairly state the loss at $400,000.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I only wish to know. The matter is of very small consequence to me.

MR. TUPPER said that the hon. gentleman had stated, on a former occasion, that the same price could not be obtained in the London money market for a large loan as for single debentures, and that the quotation for single debentures was not a safe criterion, although they had Wortenball's list and the London Economist, and the most reliable financial authorities to be found in London, establishing their position by the evidence they gave as to what business was done at. And they had the additional fact that, in a time such as that when the hon. gentleman had the good fortune to negotiate this loan when the banks were filled to repletion with millions of capital, and the parties owning it were afraid to invest, and when such investments as Canada, with the high character which its credit had attained, offered in Government securities, it was most desirable for parties to seek such investments. Millions could be obtained at a higher rate than would be offered for single debentures, because it then became an object to those great capitalists, who had their millions lying in the banks in London, drawing absolutely less than one per cent. per annum on the money they possessed, and they were only too ready, if they had the good security to invest in these large amounts, to give a higher price than the quotations for single debentures. This was established by the case of South Australia; £96 10s. was, he thought, a higher rate than that at which single 4 per cent. debentures of South Australia were quoted on the money market. What did they do? They wanted half a million sterling, and they asked the public to compete for it by open tender, and instead of getting a smaller amount than single debentures were sold for on the market, they obtained an average rate at the very highest quotation—the amounts ranged from £96 10s. to £98 10s., the average being nearly £97 10s., for the whole amount. The effect of these quotations, notwithstanding the fact that the hon. the Minister of Finance said to the financial world that our 4 per cent. debentures were only worth about 90, because, when the hon. gentleman offered the 2½ millions sterling, he fixed the rate below 90, which he practically did by the allowances made in connection with it, and the country received a net sum of actually below 90 for 4 per cent. debentures, which were sold at a larger discount than 10 per cent.—was that the market rebounded immediately, and the quotations advanced from 1¼ to 2¼ per cent. a comparatively few days after this loan was placed on the market. That some person had made that enormous sum of money, owing to this sacrifice of Canadian interests, was now a matter of history, unfortunately. This was a matter of fact that no statement and no special pleading, or the advocacy of friends could alter. He was only induced to draw attention to it specially at the present time because he felt that it was a matter in which the interests of this country had been sacrificed, and that unless there was an out-spoken public sentiment in the country with relation to this question, it was likely that our interests would be so sacrificed in the future as had been the case in the past. He now came to a claim which, he thought, the hon. gentleman had very unfairly made in connection with this subject. The hon. gentleman alleged that he had reduced the rate of interest, and this he (Mr. Tupper) maintained was very unfair. The hon. gentleman knew that if he was able to put a loan on the money market of the world on extremely favourable terms, he owed this to the high position to which the administration of the public affairs by the late Government had raised the character and the credit of Canada.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Hear, hear.

MR. TUPPER said he had no difficulty in stating this, if not out of the hon. gentleman's own mouth, at least by his own hand. The statement and the true statement which the hon. gentleman published in London and offered to the financial public as to the condition in which Canada had attained step by step during the seven years of the late Government's administration, gave the hon. gentleman a position on the money market that no other Finance Minister of Canada had ever before enjoyed, because he was able to give them, from the public records of the country, the increased value of its trade, which, together with the declaration which he made as to the wisdom of the expenditures of public money by the late Government and the effect which these expenditures had had on the trade, business, revenue, character and credit of this country, was all stated in such clear and unmistakable characters by the hon. gentleman's own right hand and signed by his own name, that down to the end of time he would never be able to controvert the position which he (Mr. Tupper) took; and this was, that the hon. gentleman owed the financial position in which he found this country, not to any act of the present Administration, but to the record that he was able to present to the people of England and to the financiers of the Mother Country as to the character and position that Canada's credit had attained, and justly attained, under the administration of the late Government. Certainly, when they remembered that the very first step of the hon. gentleman, after Parliament opened, with regard to his financial administration, was to make the astounding declaration, and a declaration made for the first time, that the revenue of Canada would not meet its expenditure, and that a deficit must be provided for by additional taxation, was one which the hon. gentleman would not say was calculated to increase the credit of this country; and, therefore, the hon. gentleman owed his position entirely to the steps that he was able, under these circumstances, and under these exceptional circumstances, to point to; and to the high position in which the credit of Canada had been placed, and to the remarkable position which the money market had then assumed, and which had not presented itself during the ten previous years in Great Britain. Under these circumstances, if the hon. gentleman had succeeded, as he maintained, the hon. gentleman would have succeeded if he had adopted the same course, the wise, the obvious, and the politic course of the Government of South Australia, and offered the debentures of Canada to open competition, he had no doubt that the hon. gentleman would have received a sum of money which would have enabled him to claim, and justly claim, the credit of having reduced the rate of interest; but he controverted the hon. gentleman's claim in toto. He held that when the matter came to be examined in the light of the facts, it would be found that the hon. gentleman had no foundation on which to rest any such claim. What had been one of the hon. gentleman's charges, from year to year, from the very first hour that he was entrusted with the financial management of this country? Every person knew that one was: "Look at the enormous accumulation of accruing obligations that have been thrown upon my shoulders, and which I have been compelled to meet." He must confess that he had felt that the hon. gentleman was trifling with the intelligence of Parliament and the intelligence of this country, when he ventured to put forward such a statement, and to say that the debt of Canada was increased, because 6 per cent. or 7 per cent. debentures were falling due when the credit of the country was such that he had but to ask for the money to obtain it to any extent, not to incur fresh indebtedness, but to meet past obligations accruing which did not touch the credit of the country in the slightest degree. If the hon. gentleman had required fifty millions to meet accrued debentures falling due, he knew right well that it would not have touched our credit in the slightest degree, or increased his embarrassment, or affected, in the slightest degree, any floated loan; because, all he would have had to say to the holders of these loans would be that Canada was in such a position to-day that she could obtain money on infinitely better terms than these debentures were sold for; and therefore, all the hon. gentleman had to do was to substitute one for the other. The hon. gentleman, therefore, knew that, if he had reduced the rate of interest, he owed it not to his own financial skill, but entirely to the fact that these six per cent. debentures, as they fell due, could be replaced by debentures obtained on more favourable terms than was the case when these other debentures were issued; and, therefore, the larger the amount of 6 per cent. debentures which matured, and which the hon. gentleman was called to meet, so much the better for him, and by so much more could he reduce the rate of interest, and, instead of having been a disadvantage, this was the greatest possible advantage. It was putting the financial position of the country in a better state, because, with this increased credit, the hon. gentleman was able to obtain any money he required, not to increase the indebtedness, but to meet indebtedness already incurred, at a lower rate of interest. Therefore, that which the hon. gentleman had again and again made the subject of complaint, was the only thing that gave him the slightest claim or the shadow of a ground for a claim for having reduced the rate of interest; and, if the hon. gentleman was addressing financial men, he would not venture to advance a claim of that character. They found by looking at the Public Accounts that the 6 per cent. debt, in 1873, was $46,445,371, and in 1877, it had fallen to $36,436,146, showing a decrease of no less than $10,909,225, all of which was the greatest boon that could happen to the hon. gentleman, because he was enabled to obtain money on better terms for the purpose of meeting these debentures as they fell due. In 1873, our 4 per cent. debt amounted to $12,182,436, and in 1877, the Public Accounts showed that this 4 per cent debt had risen to $66,045,861, showing an increase in 4 per cents. of $53,866,435. Of this, there were $16,060,000 of the Imperial Guaranteed Loan, which the hon. gentleman had at his disposal.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: Every penny of which was borrowed before I came to office.

MR. TUPPER said the hon. gentleman would find that he was now dealing with the Public Accounts in which he had the advantage of $16,060,000 of the Imperial Guaranteed Loan.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: The hon. gentleman has got entirely astray. He ought to know that his own colleague, Mr. Tilley, borrowed the last half of that in 1873, and that Sir John Rose borrowed the other half in 1868 or 1869.

MR. TUPPER said the hon. gentleman had, as he stated before, a guaranteed loan to the extent of $16,060,000.

He (Mr. Tupper) took the figures from the Public Accounts, and the hon. gentleman would find them there.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: If the hon. gentleman wishes to persevere in his statement, there is no harm, but, I presume, he wants to be corrected on a simple mistake of fact. Mr. Tilley borrowed $16,000,000 in 1873, and that was the only loan made, so that there cannot, by any possibility, have been more money loaned in 1873-4 than $1,800,000.

MR. TUPPER: The hon. gentleman knows we left a large guaranteed loan, of which he made use after he came into power.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: That was for the Intercolonial.

MR. TUPPER said he would treat the question from another standpoint. In 1874, the hon. gentleman negotiated a loan of \$19,466,666; in 1875, a loan of \$4,866,666; and in 1876, of \$12,166,606, making altogether about \$36,500,000. There were also minor items to the extent of \$1,306,435, which brought the amount up to about \$37,806,455. All these loans were floated at a discount of from say 9 per cent, with 1 per cent commission and  $\frac{1}{4}$  per cent. brokerage. He wished to refer to the Public Accounts in order to show the hon. gentleman where his fallacy lay. He found that the discount on the loan of 1874 was \$2,211,796, the discount on the loan for 1874-5 was \$305,508, and the discount on the loan of 1875-6 was \$1,168,803, making in all \$3,686,107, which must, of course be charged against the country in the public debt which we would have to pay, and for which we had not received a single dollar. Now, what was the effect of that in the calculation of the rate of interest? A little over 10 per cent. on the \$36,500,000 loan which the hon. gentleman floated. The result was, taking these discounts of \$3,686,107 to which he had referred into consideration, that the net debt of 1877 was \$133,208,699. That net debt was subject to a reduction for the calculation of the rate of interest on \$3,686,107, so that the hon. gentleman based his claim of having reduced the rate of interest by computing 4 per cent. on an amount of money which the country never had and never would receive. The actual amount of interest paid, making allowance for the \$200,000 obtained by substituting the 4 for the 6 per cents. was \$6,683,912, which would give 5.16 on the net debt, instead of 4.82 as claimed by the hon. gentleman. By thus omitting to calculate the interest paid on an amount of money which the hon. gentleman sunk in the transaction, which the country never received, but which would have to be paid when it became due, the hon. gentleman was able to show a reduced rate of interest. If, therefore, there was any alteration at all, that could not be placed to the credit of the hon. gentleman, but to his debt. Let him illustrate this in order to show the House what he meant. Suppose the hon. gentleman instead of putting a 4 per cent. loan on the market at a discount of 10, thus obtaining 90 per cent. and making the discount on \$3,686,000 in these transactions, he put a 3 per cent. loan on the market, and only got 50 or 60 instead of 90 per cent. for his debentures, he would have been able to make a much stronger case for the credit of reducing the rate of interest. He would then have calculated his three per cent. as against the total amount of debentures he would have to redeem in the end, instead of calculating it on the amount of money he received. In this lay the fallacy on the part of the hon. gentleman. He (Mr. Tupper) would not say it was anything more than a fallacy; but a most unfair comparison was drawn as to the rate of interest paid by the hon. gentleman. As he (Mr. Tupper) had said, it was only by calculating the interest upon the amount of money which had not been received, but which, unfortunately, would have to be paid, that the apparent reduction and the rate of interest was shown; but that apparent reduction would be much greater if the hon. gentlemen, instead of effecting a 4 per cent. loan at 90 per cent. deducting the discount, had floated one at 3 per cent. debentures at 60 per cent. He would not occupy the time of the House further with this matter; he had undertaken to move this motion in the place of Mr. McCarthy, and had given this brief statement of fact as they presented themselves to his mind.

MR. TUPPER.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he doubted if any course which the Government had seen fit to pursue in circumstances of very considerable difficulty, could have been more amply and abundantly justified than was the course pursued by them in the autumn of 1876, when they authorized the contraction of a loan in London. He must say, therefore, that nothing could have astonished him more than the remarks made by the hon. member for Cumberland, after the spectacle which every stock exchange in Europe presented during the last eighteen months. If the hon. gentleman had been pleased to inform himself as to the real state of things there, recollecting also the trying period through which this country had lately passed, and the advantages of the transaction then made, he would not now have got up and assailed either the Government or the Finance Minister for having contracted that loan. He might refer the hon. gentleman to an ancient colleague of his own—from whom, as it was well known, he (Mr. Cartwright) had no reason to look for favours. The gentleman to whom he alluded came forward in the interests of common truth and justice, in the interests of the country, which he knew might be seriously affected if the House were to commit itself to the absurd propositions of the hon. member for Cumberland, and pointed out to his quondam colleagues the grievous errors they made in treating of this question.

MR. MITCHELL: There have been many eccentric things lately.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: The hon. gentleman has spoken too truly. The gentleman to whom I allude is able to form, perhaps, a more honest and impartial judgment, with regard to constitutional questions, than any other man now living in Canada.

MR. MITCHELL: He is in his second childhood, I think.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I am not going to be diverted from my present purpose; but I can say to the hon. gentleman opposite that, though the gentleman be in his second childhood, yet he is a master for him on any question.

MR. MITCHELL : I am ready either for him or you or both together.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said the first charge which the hon. gentleman levelled against him was, that he had introduced this loan in the market at a fixed price. Then he proceeded to assert very strongly that the late Government had raised the credit of Canada. This, let it be remembered, was in reference to the transaction of 1876, three years after the hon. gentleman had gone out of power, so that he (Mr. Cartwright), by reason of this high credit which Canada obtained under the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, should have been able in 1874 to get more favourable terms than he obtained. Then the hon. gentleman pointed out very truly that a short time after he (Mr. Cartwright) effected this loan, the Government of South Australia negotiated a loan for £500,000 sterling on more favourable terms than he obtained. But had the hon. gentleman known the high position which the Australian colonies occupied in London; had he known the resources which these colonies had at their command, and the way in which their securities were looked upon in the Stock Exchange, he would have been aware that it was no wonder the Australian colonies had been able to command 5, 6 or 7 per cent. more for their securities in the London market than we could. As the hon. gentleman had laid so much stress on this, he (Mr. Cartwright) would devote a few minutes for the purpose of enlightening him as to the position of the Australian colonies. If a comparison was drawn between these colonies and Canada, it would be enormously to the advantage of the former. In the first place, nearly all the Australian colonies had managed their public works in such a fashion that a very considerable net revenue was derived therefrom—a state of things which, he regretted to say, was very different from that which prevailed in Canada, where, with the exception of the Welland Canal, we had not a single public work from which we derived any profit, but rather the reverse. These Australian colonies, as he presumed nearly every member of the House knew, were colonized exclusively from England. Not only were they well known, therefore, in England, but they had in the Mother Country numerous representatives—men of great wealth and high position. In order to give the hon. member for Cumberland some idea of the enormous advantages which Australian financiers had in negotiating their loans, he would just mention one little circumstance which came under his own notice with respect to one of these colonies, and that not the wealthiest. At a meeting (by no means a large one) held in a room there were no less than nine gentlemen coming from that colony, each possessing incomes of from £30,000 to £50,000 sterling. When, therefore, there were in England numerous gentlemen possessed of so much wealth ready and willing to invest in Australian securities, he need not say there was extremely little difficulty in floating Australian loans. He was credibly informed that at this moment nearly two-thirds of the Australian loans lately floated were held by Australians, or persons who had been residents and still had large interests there. He did not think that at the present time two persons, or even one person, could be found in our colonies who held any of our 4 per cents. He need not point out to business men the enormous advantage it would give any Canadian Minister if he were able to command such a large number of subscribers in Canada, or amongst persons who had been residents in this country. Any one of the nine gentlemen to whom he had referred could have made the loan of £500,000 out of his own pocket without any material inconvenience. But the hon. gentleman said that the advice of our agents ought to have been taken cum grano salis, because they were large subscribers. Now, the hon. gentleman must have known when he made that statement, because he (Mr. Cartwright) had expressly mentioned it before, that the price of this loan was fixed before the agents were asked to subscribe.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD : When did the hon. gentleman state that ?

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I stated it, to the best of my recollection, in my reply to the motion moved by the hon. member for South Ontario last year.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD: I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken; this is the first time I have heard of it.

MR. CARTWRIGHT: I may be mistaken as to the occasion when I made this statement, but I recollect telling the agents that for good and sufficient reasons I should require them to make our firm subscription, as it is technically called, themselves. I think I mentioned that in my Budget speech.

MR. GIBBS (South Ontario): The hon. gentleman stated, in reply to myself, that the agents did not buy the securities on their own responsibility, but at his direct request.

MR. CARTWRIGHT said he stated the other matter as well, and to the best of his recollection, he believed it was in reply to the hon. member for South Ontario. It was just possible, however, as he had touched on this matter in several different places, that he may have made this statement elsewhere. In any case it was but fair that he should repeat it now. As he had stated over and over again, the sum total which these gentlemen could possibly have received from the subscription of £250,000 sterling was not such as men who had a good connection could consider an inducement for them to play false with him. He did not wish to shield himself behind the agents, nor did he pretend that it was the duty of himself or any other Finance Minister to act blindly at their dictation. He had good reason to know that the advice which these gentlemen gave was honourable and straight forward, that they had given him the best advice in their power, and that they had assisted him, on all occasions, as far as they possibly could. Now, as a matter of fact, he knew that many months after this loan had been issued the agents held—because they were unable to sell the entire amount of their subscriptions—he believed the whole of them, all through the months from January to June; after that period, the agents continued to hold these subscriptions and were unable to dispose of them. This explanation, he hoped, would put an end to any question of their having made an outrageous profit out of their own clients. It was not their business, as a rule, to hold these securities; they were like other great capitalists in London, in the habit of buying such securities for the purpose of selling again. He might add that it would certainly be to the advantage of Canada that those who purchased her securities should make not a large profit, but some profit on the transaction, because, having so many loans to negotiate, it was to her interest that her loans in the past had not involved loss to the original purchasers. But the hon. gentleman went on to say that, at the time he (Mr. Cartwright) went to London, he had an extraordinary chance, because the banks were choked with money. He might ask the hon. gentleman why he supposed the banks were so choked, and if it was not because credit was almost paralysed in England, and because, at that particular moment, such had been the losses by English investors in foreign stocks, and such were the affairs of Europe, that men preferred to hold their money, even at small rates of interest, than lock it up in investments of any kind. The hon. gentleman had told them it was easy to obtain more for a loan of millions than for a single debenture, but the experience of every man who had negotiated loans of considerable amount in London was to the contrary; and the apparent inconsistency as to the Australian loans arose from the fact that the transactions in these securities were so small that they offered no indication of the real state of the market. Now, at the moment that he was floating that loan in London, another country, a favourite in the London market, a country of high standing, and as little likely to be involved in the European troubles as any country might be—he referred to Norway—was endeavouring to float a loan. It offered better terms than he did, but because they were a little later in the market they were unable to dispose of their securities until several weeks afterwards. Although his time was limited, he must take this opportunity of calling attention to the simple fact, which he thought all hon. gentlemen must now understand, that it was rarely, if ever, the case that any Finance Minister had such a combination of adverse circumstances to meet as there was in 1876. When he prepared to float that loan, it was asserted that we should have a heavy deficit; it was also known that the harvest of 1876 had been, to some extent, a failure, although the full extent of the calamity was not known even to ourselves until the succeeding spring. It was known, also, that the whole continent of Europe was disturbed, and that if the loan was not made at that particular time, it was a matter of considerable doubt whether it could be made for a long period afterwards. He repeated again that, but for the armistice between Turkey and Servia, it would not have been possible to have placed his loan with any chance of success in the English market; and, so closely were they run, that even less than 48 hours after the completion of the loan, the relations between England and Russia had become strained to such a degree that it would have been a matter of difficulty for him to secure subscriptions had he attempted it at a later day. He called attention to the significant fact, that, although the English banks might have been overflowing with money, there was, during the year 1877, almost an entire cessation of loans or borrowing in London. Such was the discredit of all securities, that even the metropolitan securities of London, the richest city of the world, were unable to be disposed of when they were offered by public tender in the manner the hon. gentleman said we should have adopted. The same occurred with regard to the Corporation of Birmingham, another wealthy corporation, both being securities in which trustees and others could invest, an advantage which was not permitted, unhappily, in the case of Canada. In connection with the remarks of the hon. gentleman as to the inexpediency of floating loans at discount, he had made a rough calculation of the advantages which would accrue to this country from borrowing as he (Mr. Cartwright) did at 4 per cent., at a discount of 10 or thereabouts. It had been said that he would have done more wisely to have borrowed at a premium of 105, or 5 per cent. Supposing it was necessary, as the House knew it was or would be necessary, to borrow a sum of not less than $100,000,000. At a discount of 10 per cent. or thereabouts, he would have incurred a nominal debt of $111,000,000, on which we should have to pay year by year $4,440; if he had borrowed at 5 per cent., on a premium of 105, he would have required to borrow $95,200,000, on which, year by year, we should have to pay $4,760; that was to say, he would require to pay annually a sum of nearly $320, during the next thirty years, more than under the present arrangement. It was not in the nature of things that we could float a loan at a premium on such advantageous terms as a loan at discount. There was always a greater proportionate loss in attempting to float a loan under a premium. In 1873, when Mr. Tilley negotiated his loan for $1,800,000,000 he only obtained 103½; that was a 4 per cent. loan, guaranteed by the English Government as well as by our own, and, therefore, the highest kind of security ever offered to the English market; nevertheless, Mr. Tilley was not able to sell that loan within 5 or 6 per cent. as good prices as Sir John Rose obtained for his loan in 1868. He did not impute blame to Mr. Tilley. He pointed it out as a curious illustration of the difficulties which would always attend Finance Ministers in dealing with these securities in the London market. Sir John Rose obtained 110, while Mr. Tilley could only get 103½. He simply quoted this, as it was a very favourite line of argument pursued by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Tupper), who had explained to the House that the moment he had been withdrawn from the Government of this country, then came storm and desolation upon us, commercially and otherwise, in an unprecedented degree, and all because he had been withdrawn. He (Mr. Cartwright) had now pointed out that it was the other way, that when the hon.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

gentleman was in the Government, loans were negotiated at 6 per cent.—worse terms than before.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were read the third time and passed :

Bill (No. 29) To authorize and provide for the winding up of the Canada Agricultural Insurance Company.—(Mr. Kerr).

Bill (No. 54) To incorporate the Fishwick's Express and Merchants' Forwarding Company (Limited)—(from the Senate).—(Mr. Tupper.)

ONTARIO EXPRESS AND TRANSPORTATION CO. BILL.—[BILL No. 7.]

(Mr. Oliver.)

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.

House resolved itself into Committee on said Bill.

Progress ordered to be reported.

House resumed.

Progress reported.

SECOND READINGS.

The following Bills were read the second time :—

Bill (No. 72) (from the Senate) To incorporate the Missionary Society of "The Bible Christian Church in Canada."

Bill (No. 71) (from the Senate) To confer certain powers on the Montreal Building Association, under the name of the "Montreal Investment and Building Company."

VICTORIA ELIZABETH LYON DIVORCE BILL.—[BILL No. 74.]

(Mr. Cameron.)

FIRST READING.

MR. CAMERON moved the first reading of the Bill (from the Senate) For the relief of Victoria Elizabeth Lyon.

Motion agreed to, on the following division :—

MR. CARTWRIGHT.

Archibald,
Bain,
Bertram,
Biggar,
Blackburn,
Blake,
Bowell,
Bowman,
Buell,
Bunster,
Burk,
Burpee (St. John),
Burpee (Sunbury),
Cameron,
Campbell,
Carmichael,
Cartwright,
Charlton,
Christie,
Church,
Davies,
Dawson,
Dymond,
Farrow,
Ferris,
Fleming,
Fleisher,
Fraser,
Galbraith,
Gibbs (North Ontario),
Gibbs (South Ontario),
Gillies,
Goudge,
Greenway,
Guthrie,
Haggart,
Higinbotham,
Horton,
Kerr,
Kirkpatrick,

Baby,
Barthe,
Béchar, d,
Benoit,
Bernier,
Blanchet,
Bolduc,
Bourassa,
Boyer,
Brooks,
Brown,
Caron,
Casgrain,
Cheval,
Cimon,
Costigan,
Coupal,
Cuthbert,
Daoust,
Delorme,
Desjardins,
De St. Georges,
Devlin,
Domville,
Dugas,
Fiset,
Geoffrion,
Gibson,
Gill,
Holton,
Hurteau,

YEAS :

Messieurs

Little,
Macdonald (Centre Toronto),
Macdougall (Elgin),
McDougall (Renfrew),
MacKay (Cape Breton),
McKay (Colchester),
Mackenzie,
Macmillan,
McCallum,
McCraney,
McGregor,
McNab,
Mills,
Mitchell,
Monteith,
Norris,
Oliver,
Orton,
Paterson,
Pickard,
Plumb,
Ray,
Robinson,
Ross (East Durham),
Ross (West Middlesex),
Ross (Prince Edward),
Scatcherd,
Schultz,
Scriver,
Shibley,
Thompson (Haldimand),
Trow,
Wade,
Wallace (Albert),
White (Hastings),
White (Renfrew),
Wood,
Wright (Pontiac),
Young—79.

NAYS :

Messieurs

Irving,
Jetté,
Killam,
Lafamme,
Lajoie,
Langevin,
Langlois,
Lanthier,
Laurier,
Macdonald (Cernwal),
McDonald (Cape Breton),
McGreavy,
McIntyre,
McIsaac,
Malouin,
Methot,
Montplaisir,
Ouimet,
Pinsonneault,
Pope (Compton),
Pouliot,
Richard,
Robitaille,
Roy,
Short,
Smith (Peel),
Smith (Westmoreland),
Stephenson,
Taschereau.—80.

Bill read the first time.

RATE OF INTEREST BILL.—[BILL No. 5.]

(Mr. Barthe.)

SECOND READING.

Order for second reading read.

MR. BARTHÉ said that there were two plagues which affected society, bankruptcy and usury. He had previously introduced a Bill to abolish one of these evils, and he now proposed a Bill with the view of removing the other; consequently his object was a very practical one. This Bill had no other meaning than being a protest against usury. This was the reason why he had fixed the interest at 8 per cent., this being a fair price for money lenders and the interest that a borrower could afford to pay. The provisions of this Bill provided that the legal rate of interest should be 8 per cent., but he desired it to be clearly and distinctly understood that if the second reading of this Bill was voted, it was his intention and object to ask the House to refer it to a Committee in order to have the legal rate of interest fixed at six per cent. and at eight or nine per cent. for the intérêt conventionnel, according to the discretion and wisdom of the Committee, for this last part viz: conventional interest. He wished this to be clearly understood in order that there might be no misunderstanding on the subject. He thus acted in accordance with the opinion and desire of a number of hon. members who had given him this advice. His personal opinion was that the value of money ought to be established and determined, and its price settled. Money was not merchandize. This was his individual opinion, but he did not desire to discuss this theory in so enlightened a House. His object was practical. It was provided in the Bill that the rate of interest should be 8 per cent.; but he understood that the general opinion in the country, and above all, in the Province which he had the honour to represent, as well as of a great number of hon. members, was that the legal rate of interest should be 6 per cent., and that the rate should be fixed in order to destroy usury. He would repeat that the object of this Bill was directed against usurers who were ruining the country. A penalty was provided in it against those who charged a higher rate of interest than it allowed. Another clause provided that persons so offending could be effectively compelled to reimburse the money so obtained. A third clause provided that such persons should be obliged to answer on oath, and another, that this law applied to all loans or monetary contracts, whatever. With these observations, he would submit this Bill to the House, and he would conclude by saying that, undoubtedly, public opinion in, as well as out of, the Province of Quebec was favourable to this measure which he had the honour of proposing; and he hoped that, even in this House, the majority of the members would be in favour of the Bill, which was so proper and just in its nature, and so greatly in the interest of the counties which they had the honour of representing.

MR. LANGEVIN said that the Bill fixed the rate of interest at 8 per cent. He did not know whether it could be changed in Committee, for the present legal rate was 6 per cent. He consequently could not vote for this measure as it stood. If the rate had been stated at 6 per cent., the Bill would probably have been read a second time without opposition.

MR. MACKENZIE said he was not able to understand why the hon. gentleman had fixed the rate at 8 per cent., because if they could establish the rate of interest, it ought to be made very low. It would be of great benefit to the people, if they could thus get money at 3 or 4 per cent.; and, if it merely required an Act of Parliament to accomplish this, they ought to do it by all means. Speaking seriously, he was quite certain that any interference with free-trade in money would only be disastrous to borrowers in the general way, for while the old restrictive laws were in full operation, the price of money was very much higher than since their abrogation.

MR. BOWELL: No.

MR. BLANCHET: The contrary has been the case.

MR. MACKENZIE said he could only say that such was not his experience. He recollected very well when in the western part of this country, the ordinary rate paid for money, except on very remarkable occasions, was from 15 to 20 per cent. This was undoubtedly the fact; but, since the usury laws were abolished and free-trade in money was established, money had been brought into the country in sufficient quantities to serve the wants of the people, and it could now be obtained on any reasonable security for 7 or 8 per cent.; and a large amount could be secured at a less rate. Any interference with these laws, he was sure from their own experience, apart from the general question of a general operation of a law of this kind, was sure to be prejudicial to those who most required money. For this reason he felt compelled to vote against the Bill, and to use every effort in his power to prevent a return to the old system of things which gave, practically, to a few men the monopoly of the money market.

MR. OUIMET said that, although he was not of opinion that the price of money could be fixed by the Legislature, he considered himself bound to vote for this measure. He did not understand that it fixed the price of money; it would merely limit the rate at which it might be legally loaned, intending to have it amended in that direction before the Committee.

MR. MACKENZIE: You establish a maximum rate.

MR. OUIMET said it was proposed to bring the maximum of the rate to six per cent., but he would not be ready to vote for this proposition. He thought that the highest price of money in Canada was 8 per cent., at which figure they could limit it without any danger.

MR. BLAKE: If that is the highest price, what is the use of the law?

MR. OUIMET said that this was the highest value of money. He understood that this Bill was to prevent usury. It was not intended to protect those who had very large means, but the whole public against the usurer, and what was called "shaving." The moment the large amount of money which was at present in his part of the country, and especially in Montreal, employed in shaving notes, and gambling in stock, was withdrawn from these operations, it would find its way through the country and go to aid industries and agriculture. They had been told by the hon. the Minister of Finance that the great pursuit of this country must be agriculture, and that too many of our people were devoted to trade and industrial occupations. Now, the way in which agriculture could be advanced, was by bringing capital to be invested in it. The moment that money was withdrawn from note shaving and stock gambling, it would go to the agricultural districts and find there profitable employment in promoting this great interest. It might be said that this would withdraw capital from industrial pursuits which he wished to see protected; but on the other hand, he thought he was quite safe now in following the lead of the hon. the Minister of Finance, who with the hon. the Prime Minister and all his followers, had been pleased to tell the House that this Government would be in power for the next twenty years, until which time we would not have Protection. If so, he thought it would be a good thing for this country to direct capital towards the development of our agricultural pursuits.

MR. MACMILLAN said it might appear singular that he, as a Protectionist, should vote against this Bill; but he was merely returning the compliment which the Government had paid him on a previous occasion. He well remembered, as a Protectionist, that he had succeeded, through the assistance of the Government, in having a strong Protectionist measure carried, and as the hon. the Premier had announced that he would support the principles of Free-trade in connection with money, he (Mr. Macmillan) was very happy in being able to assist the hon. gentleman. It was the most dangerous thing that could possibly be done in any country, to try to interfere with its monetary affairs. Like most of the people who had lived for any considerable time in Ontario, he had seen the rates of interest, when the usury laws were in force, as high as from 24 to 30 per cent. and in very many instances as high as 48 per cent. Hon. gentlemen opposite might ask how this could be possibly done; nothing could be easier. It was as easy as it was under the old election laws to purchase a voter. All one had to do was to borrow $500 and pay $150 for a horse worth about $60, and thus the laws were thoroughly evaded. Just so was it with the election laws as he had understood. He thought it would be equally reasonable for hon. gentlemen to say that a bushel of wheat under any circumstances should not be sold for more than $1, as to say that money should not be loaned for more than 6 per cent. per annum. As we were Free-traders to a certain extent, in that way everything should have its value. If a man was willing to pay 10 per cent. per annum, let him do so; and if it was worth 12 per cent. to him he could do so. As the hon. the Premier stated, money could now be obtained, by those who gave ample and good security, for 8 per cent. Every dollar that was required could be so secured on real estate or personal or other security; and, where it was invested in legitimate business through the banks, any amount on reasonable security could now be secured at seven per cent. To place the rate at 8 per cent.—he now spoke for the whole Dominion—was simply absurd. They might as well put it at 24 or 30 per cent., because then it might come down to the proper rate. If the rate was fixed at six per cent., they might rest assured that the law would be evaded in every case where persons saw fit to do so. Under these circumstances, he would vote against this measure.

MR. BLANCHET.

Mr. CHARLTON said he believed that a usury law would work to the detriment of the borrowing class in all cases. A great many States on this continent had tried usury laws, and a great many still had them on their Statute-books; but he believed that, in every instance, their effect had been to render it more difficult for borrowers to get money. In all cases where any risk was incurred, the borrower was invariably called upon to pay the lender's risk. In the State of New York, the greatest of American States, where enormous monetary transactions were carried on, they had a law on the Statute-book which provided that, in case of usury contrary to the law, the principal and interest should be both forfeited. No law could be more stringent, and yet it was uniformly violated, and yet it was a dead letter. Lenders were in the habit of charging from 14 to 24 per cent. in the face of it, and where one transaction took place at the legal rate, 7 per cent. 100 were made at rates varying from 14 to 24 per cent. In the interest of the borrowing class in Canada, they wanted a law of this kind. If rates of interest were found unrestricted, capital would flow into the country to be invested; but if, on the contrary, by law, rates were placed at a sum less than lenders were willing to lend, money would shun Canada; and, in consequence, rates would be higher than they were now. In the interest of borrowers, all Bills of a similar character to this one should be rejected by the House.

MR. BOWELL: What States in the American Union have Free-trade in money?

MR. CHARLTON: The State of New York modified its usury law, permitting banks to charge such rates as they chose; and immediately upon that modification, rates of interest fell in the State very materially.

MR. BOWELL: When was this?

MR. CHARLTON: I am not prepared to give the exact date, but this happened some three or four years ago.

MR. METHOT said that the question of usury, which was now before the House, was certainly one of the most important matters that could possibly come before them. This was not a new question. Usury had always existed in all countries—in all countries of antiquity, and among the Jews and Romans as well as among the people of all modern countries. Usury had only been considered in one light. Everywhere it was looked upon as a public calamity, and the law which protected the usurer was a law in favour of the strong against the feeble, and in favour of the smaller number against the greater number. They were here to protect and render equal justice to all. They were here to protect the feeble against the strong; and also to promote as much as possible the interests of the people—not of a few individuals, but of the people in general. Hence, between the interests of a few capitalists and the interests of the greater number, there was no ground for hesitation. Was a law which had for its object the fixing of the rate of interest, a law that would be for the well-being of this country? For his part, he did not hesitate to say that this was the case. We had in this country too much capital invested in monetary institutions, owing to the rate of interest and the large dividends afforded and declared by these institutions. This system as its results proved dazzled the eyes of capitalists, and prevented them from placing their money in industrial institutions, which would promote the prosperity of this country. On the other hand, why should capitalists invest their funds in real estate when they saw that even in the most favoured places, such for instance as Montreal, these investments did not produce more than 5 or 6 per cent. as a return, per annum. While in other towns, such as Quebec—and he unfortunately knew this from experience—many properties did not yield an annual return of more than 3 or 4 per cent. and in the country, this state of things was even worse. What did capitalists then do? They would place their money in banks, and thus without any trouble secure a return of from 8 to 10 per cent. per annum; and this was so much money and capital that would be useless, as far as the well-being of this country was concerned. If not prevented by their conscience, they would loan money on mortgage or otherwise to private individuals, dividing their means up into small sums, and by this means, such high rates of interest were obtained that he was really ashamed to mention them in this House. What did they see in the country as well as in the towns? Hardly had a man succeeded in scraping together a few hundred dollars, before he hastened to lend his money,

